having possession of his papers. Hugo Schmidt was not a political propaganda agent, but I think it is fair to him to state that he acted as commercial propaganda agent. However, his main purpose in this country was financial. It is revealed by his papers that he had two principal purposes, first to endeavor to replace with American banking credit the British credits that had been lost in consequence of the European war, and second, to devise a ways and means of financing exportations to Germany and smuggling them by the British blockade. In this mission Hugo Schmidt was very largely assisted by certain American banking institutions. It was while we were neutral, but they acted to the detriment of the British interests, and I have considerable data on the activity of the Guaranty Trust Co. in that respect, and would like to know whether the committee wishes me to go into it.

Senator NELSON. That is a branch of the City Bank, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator OVERMAN. If it was inimical to British interests it was unneutral, and I think you had better let it come out.

Senator KING. Was it an ordinary banking transaction?

Mr. BECKER. That would be a matter of opinion. It has to do with camouflaging exchange so as to make it appear to be neutral exchange, when it was really German exchange on London. As a result of those operations in which the Guaranty Trust Co. mainly participated between August 1, 1914, and the time America entered the war, the Deutsche Bank in its branches in South America succeeded in negotiating £4,670,000 of London exchange in war time.

Senator OVERMAN. I think that is competent.

Mr. BECKER. For some time, and during the war, the major part of the Deutsche Bank and Deutsche Ueberseeische bank business was carried on with the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, and the principal individual in the bank who cooperated with Hugo Schmidt in facilitating operations was Max May. One of the first things done was to assist the Deutsche Bank in acquiring the credits that had been confiscated by the British in London, Max May going to the extent of cabling to the London office representing that the balance to the credit of the Deutsche Bank in London was the property of the Guaranty Trust Co., to be used as an offset. I shall read in evidence Hugo Schmidt's letter to the Deutsche Bank, followed by the direct cable of the Guaranty Trust Co.:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 24.

GERMAN BANK, Berlin.

NEW YORK, January 16, 1915.

I am in receipt of cable communication from B. A. T.—

That is the Banco Aleman Transatlantico—

I am in receipt communication from B. A. T. in Rio containing information from the Guaranty Trust Company in London, according to which the English Government has confiscated the account of the B. A. T., Rio, which they had with the Guaranty Trust Company in London.

I immediately called at the Guaranty Trust Company and ascertained to my great surprise that the various branches of the B. A. T. still had accounts or deposits at the Guaranty Trust Company, London, and that the English Government has suddenly seized these accounts. I called Mr. May down for it, and told him that the German Bank was already very much put out over the accident of the 100,000 pounds when they paid out the money on prima drafts without having the endorsed second drafts, and that now after this occurrence he may be assured that the German bank will sever their connections with the Guaranty Trust Company.

He tried to explain to me that the branch in Rio had at the time expressed the wish to have the account placed with the London bank, of course, under the assurance that no risk was attached thereto. They submitted this matter to their branch in London, and received the reply that the English Government has no objections to such accounts. I then told him that the least he should have done was to inform me of this, before he transmitted this account to the London bank, to which I would never have given my consent. He has now promised me to do everything in his power to save the B. A. T.

He has immediately sent the cables, as per copies attached, to the Guaranty Trust Company, London, and, according to information received in the meantime, the matter seems to be in order again.

The occurrence is significant, however, and shows that one cannot rely upon any information and explanation given by the English government.

I shall inform you further in the matter, and would ask you kindly to acquaint Mr. Krusche with the contents of this letter.

With best regards, cordially.

I now read the cable of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, to the Guaranty Trust Co., of London:

All Sterling balances Rio Sao Paulo Lima Santos and others your books have been and are ours in pursuance arrangement between banks and ourselves to cover their overdrafts here you must transfer our credit immediately wire us amounts and return to us all their remittances now in transmission advise Treasury Officials stop the opening those accounts with you was for our convenience and concerns us alone.

The Guaranty Trust Co. also made it possible for Hugo Schmidt to carry on foreign exchange business on London for account of the several South American banks by agreeing to collect exchange for Hugo Schmidt and the Deutsche Bank on London with dummy indorsement, Hugo Schmidt filing with the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, a private letter of guaranty. The dummies used in New York were John H. McClement and the Standard Mercantile Agency.

In that connection I will call attention to a letter of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, dated May 17, 1915, addressed to Mr. Hugo Schmidt, care of John H. McClement, Esq., New York [reading]:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 25.

DEAR SIR: It appears that all your offices throughout South America and elsewhere are in the habit, in order to avoid the effects of the English proclamation prohibiting dealings with the enemy, of having nominees of theirs make remittances to our London office for our credit. Unfortunately, our London office, by reason of previous large experience with similar items, has gained wide knowledge of such practices, and as they deem a compliance on their part with the law absolutely essential for the good standing and the continued welfare of this Company in London, they have requested us earnestly to take such steps as we deem necessary for their relief from future operations of this kind until after the War. We, ourselves, are always glad to assist you, and, neutrals, of course, are perfectly willing to handle your business so long as it can be done without detriment to this company in relation to our London office. We would, therefore, suggest that all remittances of any kind, whether by mail or telegraphic transfer, be made to the London City & Midland Bank Ltd., for our credit. It is most essential that the fact that such remittances emanate from you or concern you is not disclosed, nor must it appear in any manner on the items or on the advices that accompany remittances that the enemy of England is in any manner implicated. So long as due caution is observed in the handling of this business, we have every reason to believe that London City & Midland Bank will accept business for our account.

Yours truly,

mm/m

JAMES MINOTTO,
Division Manager

Now, further, with reference to this matter of London exchange. At the breaking out of the European war the branches of German banks in South America, and particularly the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, a subsidiary of the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, found themselves at a great disadvantage, since most of the business in South America is transacted in exchange on London. The inability to transact business in London exchange would have put them completely out of business. The British naturally shut down all connections with German institutions. Here, again, the resourcefulness of Hugo Schmidt and the branch managers of the several branches of the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank in South America succeeded in hoodwinking the British and in meeting the wants of the South American clients by continuing to purchase bills of exchange drawn by South American shippers on London at the ordinary market rate and, in a good many instances, at a better rate than the British and branch banks, and the proceeding to collect these bills on London under the noses of the British, by the following process: Hugo Schmidt, of New York, created what was known as the Standard Mercantile Agency. That was a registered trade name, in the name of one of Schmidt's clerks. He instructed his branch managers in South America to purchase bills from the customers; however, not to indorse the name of the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank or any other German sounding name, but rather have the bills drawn by Spanish dummies, organized for that purpose, and to remit the bills to Hugo Schmidt in New York. As soon as the bills were received in New York by Hugo Schmidt he would proceed to indorse them in the name of the "Standard Mercantile Agency," and then sell them in the New York market to prominent banking institutions, such as the Guaranty Trust Co., the Bankers' Trust Co., the Equitable Trust Co., and the National Park Bank—principally the Guaranty Trust Co. In case the American bankers required the indorsement of the Deutsche Bank, Hugo Schmidt would guarantee them by a private letter of guaranty; and by this process the bills reached London and were collected from London bankers. One of the men associated with Hugo Schmidt in this scheme was John H. McClement, of 165 Broadway, who had been a representative of the Deutsche Bank for a good many years. Thus the Deutsche Bank received credit for the same in New York, instead of in London; and, where it was desirable to credit the account in London, the account was so credited in the name of the "Standard Mercantile Agency," or other dummies used for that purpose by the Deutsche Bank. By this method, notwithstanding the vigilance of the British Government and of the British bankers, the Deutsche Bank and its branches in South America, succeeding in negotiating, between August 1, 1914, and the date that America entered the war, £4,676,607 of London exchange.

Senator OVERMAN. That amounts to nearly $20,000,000.

Senator REED. That was what date?

Mr. BECKER. That covers the period of our neutrality.

Senator REED. The whole period?

Mr. BECKER. The entire period; yes.

Senator REED. There were other banks, including these banks, that were doing business constantly with England and France?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and following the same principle of "bankers' neutrality."

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. I have several other letters here relating to the matter which will further support the statements I have made.

In the matter of financing, Hugo Schmidt also devised a scheme whereby he sent American gold to the branches of the Deutsche Bank in Barcelona and Madrid through the British blockade by entering into an agreement with the National Bank of Spain whereby they would act as the dummy receivers of shipments of gold made by Muller, Schall & Co., of New York, and, in turn, would deliver it to the Deutsche Bank interests. The resourcefulness of Hugo Schmidt made it possible for the Deutsche Bank and its subsidiaries and branches to continue an uninterrupted banking business on London and Paris by utilizing American dummies and dummies in all the neutral countries where the Deutsche Bank had branches.

Now, something with reference to exports to Germany. With the tightening of the British blockade, and especially with the threat of the Orders in Council, I think, of April, 1915, which Germany foresaw, the German Government perceived the difficulties that it would have in getting merchandise into Germany, and the necessity for an organization for that purpose. I have here a letter from the Deutsche Bank to Hugo Schmidt, which relates to the method that they proposed to use. This is a letter dated the 28th of December, 1914, addressed to Director Schmidt, New York:

Upon the suggestion of the War Ministry and of the Central Imperial Council, there have been created a series of bureaus of accounts which are in combination with a part of the great banking institutions. There have been assigned to us the provisions for the caoutchouc industry, the oil mills, the soap and stearine factories, the varnish and paint factories, and more lately, the resin manufacturing industries. For the latter, the raw materials must be purchased in North America. Savannah is the principal point of export for resin. The purchases over there are to be undertaken by Mr. Robert Rauh, in connection with yourself, to whom the accompanying letter of his brother is addressed and who will get into communication with you regarding the further details.

There are other matters of considerable interest in that letter, but I will not take the time to read it. It shows how the bank and the industries got into touch, each bank having a certain class or kind of imports and industries to look after and to attend to the financing of in foreign countries.

Senator OVERMAN. The whole letter should go into the record. should it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think it is of interest enough to warrant it.

(The remainder of the said letter of Dec. 28, 1914, reads as follows:)

We beg leave to request that you transmit the enclosed open letter to Mr. Robert Rauh and make him acquainted with your address. (In the margin, opposite the last sentence, the following: As regards the question of financing, it is to be done through acceptances of a bank over here.) As regards the dealings in resin, it is highly important that this matter must be attended to at once. The supplies at hand in the Empire are at present for the most part exhausted. While this article is not without uses for war purposes, it also plays a not unimportant role in the paper industry and in the supply of lubricating oil, so that a lack of it would be deplorable. In this connection, it happens that at the present, resin is not on the contraband list, and that in neutral lands, we do not as yet know of any embargo on this product. Since, however, these export restrictions are increasing and also the contraband list is being enlarged, it is not unlikely that we may soon have to reckon with difficulties in the importation of resin. The more that can be put on its way here immediately, so much the better for the interests of our people.

Furthermore, we furnish herewith for your personal information a copy of the letter to Mr. Rauh, in which is more plainly set forth the place which the resin producing industries occupy in our commerce. The provision mentioned on page 3 of one per cent. for the services of Mr. Rauh, as also clearly appears by the text of the letter, is not yet finally decided upon. In other respects, there are no changes to make in the matters stated in the letter. Regarding the personality of Mr. Rauh, we must reserve judgment, and should be glad to hear from you regarding that matter.

Cordially yours,

DEUTSCHE BANK.

Mr. BECKER. To the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, and the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank was allotted the major part of cotton, wool, jute, rubber, and sundry food products. Hugo Schmidt, with the cooperation of his main office in Berlin, and Dr. H. F. Albert devised the following scheme of getting imports into Germany through the allied blockade. Arrangements were made in Scandinavian countries, in Switzerland, in Holland, and in Italy, with merchants and banks of some prominence, to receive shipments made ostensibly for a neutral country to which it was consigned, and immediately upon arrival it was re-marked and forwarded into Germany. At the same time, in order to deceive American shippers who were not in sympathy with the German cause, whose suspicions would have readily been aroused if payment was offered to them through the Deutsche Bank or any of its branches, Hugo Schmidt devised means to furnish letters of credit on the Guaranty Trust Co., the Equitable Trust Co., and Bankers' Trust Co., by giving a private letter of the Deutsche Bank guaranteeing said credits. Thus, an American cotton shipper in Montgomery, Ala., would receive an order for a shipment of cotton from, say, Merkel & Co., of Basle, Switzerland, accompanied with instructions to draw against a certain letter of credit that Merkel & Co. had opened with the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York. The transaction, on its face, was a bona fide order by a Swiss merchant, and payment by a perfectly good American bank, while Hugo Schmidt stood behind the scene, with his private letter of guarantee to the American banking institution, smiling at the joy of hoodwinking the British blockade. The neutral merchants and institutions involved in this scheme to assist Germany in obtaining imports from the United States were Merkel & Co., of Basle; Baseler Handelsbank, of Basle; Rotterdamsche Bankvereiniger, of Rotterdam; Lindelof & Co., of Guttenberg. Sweden; Paul Rinehart & Co., of Winterthur, Switzerland; Scandinavian Kredit Aktiebolgat, of Guttenberg. In this way, between August 1, 1914, and the time we entered the war, the Germans succeeded in getting into Germany, through the Deutsche Bank alone, as disclosed by the Hugo Schmidt-Deutsche Bank papers, $3,272,276 of wool, $287,250 of jute, 419,759 bales of cotton, $443,000 of canned salmon, $497,500 of rubber, $566,100 of dried apples, $255,000 of lard, $650,000 of copper, $86,000 of wax, 18,700 bales of tobacco, 218,174 bags of coffee.

It might be said, however, that some of those transactions were not absolutely secret transactions, and to a certain extent, on account of the interest of the United States in obtaining certain things, such as dyestuffs, that Germany could furnish the United States, the State Department assisted in arranging with the British Government for the passage of shipments into Germany, it being understood that a like amount of dyestuffs would be allowed to come to the United States out of Germany. Later on, the British Government, however, took a much more stringent attitude on that.

Senator REED. Does not that cover the main part of the items you have just read?

Mr. BECKER. Not the main part; no. A large part of them were disguised transactions, which not even the British knew were not for neutrals, but for Germany. Besides, at this time the so-called principle of the "through voyage" to destination was not so firmly established as it was later, or so firmly enforced by the British Government.

Senator REED. Goods were being sent over here all the time? This was during the period of neutrality?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And goods to the value of many millions of dollars were being sent to other countries all over the world?

Mr. BECKER. The ultimate result was to raise the presumption on the part of England that many of the goods ostensibly destined to neutral countries were really intended for Germany, and England began to jump to that conclusion upon very slight evidence.

Senator REED. And our Government took the opposite conclusion. I suppose?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; there was a long argument about that.

Senator OVERMAN. And out of that situation, I suppose, grew our embargo act?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; in part. I might refer very briefly to what has sometimes been called the "Wool Plot." That was the subject of an extended investigation, with many hearings.

Senator WOLCOTT. The wool plot?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and it came down to this—

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, these things are all exceedingly and intensely interesting, but the question has arisen in my mind whether under our resolution we are concerned about them?

Senator OVERMAN. I think it does not do any harm. It is all interesting.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; it is very interesting, I will admit that; but I would like to see the committee begin to get somewhere near the end of its investigation. I do not, however, raise any objection. I simply suggest that.

Mr. BECKER. I will file that record with the committee without making any reference to it, except to say that the United States Government acceded to a plan for the control of wool imports, in the joint interests of the British Government and the American consumers of wool. The idea was that the British Government did not wish wool to reach Germans. I do not mean Germans in this country; they had no objection to that; but the British Government did not want wool to reach Germany; so the British Government wished to control the imports into the United States of British wool. Of course, the British Government could have put an absolute embargo upon it, but it did not choose to do that; it chose rather to control it. So there was a joint agency formed, which represented both the American manufacturers of woollen goods and the British Government, known as the "Textile Alliance."

The purpose and function of the Textile Alliance was to develop full information in regard to American imports of British wool, and to see to it that they were used in American mills, and distributed to American consumers. The German agents were, nevertheless, very anxious to accumulate stocks of wool, for various uses and reasons. One was that they expected the war would soon be over, and then—and perhaps before that—they would be able to get the wool into Germany, and obtain a raw material which was, even then, almost exhausted in Germany, as the evidence shows. So they devised the scheme of using dummy American purchasers, who were certified to be the real purchasers, and then, by the same Hugo Schmidt system of concealed guarantees, the actual purchasers in Germany were the guarantors of the credits; but they appeared to be credits established by American firms, so that by that scheme, the regulation by the Textile Alliance was defeated, and British subjects were, without their knowledge, actually put in the position of selling wool to German subjects; and that continued to the extent of millions of dollars worth of wool.

I want to emphasize that there was always something in the nature of a propagandist purpose connected with commercial expansion and commercial schemes of the Germans. The idea of propaganda for world expansion, advertising Germany everywhere, was constantly running in the typical German mind. For instance, on September 14, 1915, Hugo Schmidt wrote to the home office of the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, at Berlin, advising the opening of a new branch in Brazil, at Curitybas. He says in that letter:

Extensive sums are not necessary to accomplish this, and we could, through the establishment of such a branch, show the other nations that we are progressive and have lost none of our elasticity and vigor.

It appears by a letter of Hugo Schmidt's and by letters of various correspondents in South America that they were constantly trying to make loans, even during the war, when they had none too much credit themselves, to South American Governments. They were negotiating a large loan with the Peruvian Government and another with Chile. That was going on even late in 1916.

Senator NELSON. That is, they proposed to make loans to those Governments?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; the German banking institutions, to hold them in line. It was a species of war propaganda, to hold them in line.

Now, the remainder of what I have to present is more or less of a miscellany, and the matters are rather disconnected, but I think they may be of some interest to the committee.

The Banco Aleman Transatlantico, or the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, at Rio Janeiro, under date of August 19, 1918, sent a reply to a proposition that Hugo Schmidt had made that the Banco Aleman Transatlantico should engage in importing coal from the United States. The manager of the Banco Aleman Transatlantico, at Rio Janeiro, stated that after consultation, the scheme was impracticable, since exports from England had been interfered with in consequence of the war and that he had also communicated with a secret agent of the German Government who was charged with supplying coal to the cruisers and raiders, and that he had several tons of English coal purchased for that purpose, and was unable to dispose of the same.

I thought it would interest you to know that the German raiders that were operating off the coast of South America were coaled with English coal that had been purchased by a secret agent of Germany.

It appears that the Deutsche Bank, through the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, held 1,180,000 marks of stock in the Banco Mexicana de Comercio Industrial; in other words, the Mexican Bank of Industrial Commerce. It appears by his papers how that bank was used in financing propaganda and intrigue in America.

Mr. Bielaski has given you a very full account, and so has Capt. Lester, as I understand, of the activities of William Bayard Hale. Hale returned to the United States from Germany in the early part of 1917. You will recall the mayoralty campaign in New York that fall, of Morris Hillquit, the candidate of the Socialist Party, and his antiwar platform. I have here a clipping from the New York Call. Has this been referred to already?

Capt. LESTER. No.

Mr. BECKER. I have here a clipping from the New York Call of Saturday, October 6, 1917, headed "Victory." The finance committee of the Greater New York campaign has been organized with the following members: A. W. Ricker, chairman, and the name of William Bayard Hale is the next name that appears on the list.

Here is another clipping from the New York Call of Monday, October 8, 1917:

William Bayard Hale, long-time friend and official biographer of President Wilson, and editorial assistant to Wilson in compiling "The New Freedom," has applied for membership in the Socialist Party, and will vote for Morris Hillquit and the rest of the city ticket. Hale's progenitors were among the early English colonists. He has long been a prominent member of the Sons of the American Revolution—

Senator REED. I would like to inquire here if it is the purpose now to reflect upon the President of the United States by bringing in the fact that a man once connected with him afterwards joined the Socialist Party, and to do that under the pretext that that is proving German propaganda?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely not.

Senator REED. That is absolutely and solely the only purpose which could result from the testimony given; and, as a Member of the Senate and not of this committee, and begging the indulgence of the committee, I protest against that course of conduct.

Mr. BECKER. If the Senator had been present and had followed the course of the hearings here, he would know that on the date when William Bayard Hale appeared as a member of the Socialist Party and the champion of Morris Hillquit, it appears by the testimony which has been offered here by Mr. Bielaski that his contract with the German Government had not run out.

Senator REED. That does not make any difference. That does not form any excuse for dragging the President's name in here.

Mr. BECKER. Nothing that Hale could say could damage the President's reputation a particle.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not see how it could damage the President. It is a well-known fact that the President employed this man, but he did not know that he was a German agent.

Senator REED. Nothing that Hale could say could damage the President, and it might be also true that nothing you could say would damage the President.

Mr. BECKER. I would never make the attempt.

Senator REED. But you are occupying a position here in which you are trying to couple intimately the name of a discredited man with that of the President of the United States, and reading into this record that Mr. Hale collaborated with the President in writing his "New Freedom." What has that to do with German propaganda? It is up to the committee. I have said all I want to say about it.

Senator OVERMAN. I think the article shows that that was spoken of incidentally. It shows that while he was a German agent here he joined and became a member of the Socialist party. What do you think about it, Senator Nelson?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I have been running this over in my mind.

Hale is shown, by pretty conclusive proof, to have been in the pay of the German Government. He was a German propagandist prior to our entry into the war. He was in Germany. He came back to this country and took part in the New York mayoralty campaign when Morris Hillquit was nominated for mayor. This man, who had been in Germany and was a German propagandist, joined the Socialist party and advocated the election of that man for mayor, according to the newspaper advertisement.

What does that prove? It proves that Hale supported Hillquit for mayor.

How does it bear on propaganda—unless you are going to infer from that slender and for evidential purposes worthless fact that the Socialists were expressing the propaganda that Hale was interested in?

I say if you infer that, you infer it upon a slender, and, for evidential purposes, a worthless fact.

The only thing that justifies the statement that the Socialists were interested in German propaganda is the fact that Hale, a German propagandist, was going to vote for their candidate. I say that is not, in fact, a justification for any conclusion.

Senator NELSON. The platform of the Socialist party in that campaign—

Senator WOLCOTT. The Socialists may have been, as far as I know—I do not know anything about it—pro-German; but I say it is not proved by the fact that some pro-German voted for their candidate.

Senator REED. But the point I am making is clear beyond that, Senator. Even if the facts that you have discussed were competent to prove—and I am making no question about it—in order to prove it, it is necessary to bring in a statement here that a discredited man once worked for the President of the United States.

The chairman of the committee says that comes in incidentally. The trouble is that all this scandal comes in incidentally.

Senator OVERMAN. We will let it go in.

Senator REED. I protest against it; and I am going to protest on the floor of the Senate against that sort of thing.

Senator OVERMAN. You have the right to do it. It is known that Mr. Wilson had William Bayard Hale employed on the Mexican proposition, but after that time he became a German agent.

Mr. BECKER. I can add a little more to that. I have the sworn statement made before me by Matthew B. Claussen, that it had been stated in the conferences of the Germans that they believed that Hale would be able to exercise influence on President Wilson for the German cause; and that they had been grievously disappointed because he had been able to exercise absolutely none.

Senator REED. I again protest, Mr. Chairman. This witness now undertakes to say that the Germans expected to influence President Wilson, and that they were counselling to that end. I protest that it is not a proper use of the committee.

Senator WOLCOTT. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this does bear on the question of propaganda, showing to what extent they were prepared to go, and trying to go; that they were even hoping to be able to get somebody to influence the President; but that the fact is, of course, as just stated by Mr. Becker, that they failed, absolutely and completely.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. There is no reflection on the President in that; but there is the trail of this propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Yes. I think it is a very good thing to show that they even attempted to influence the President.

Senator WOLCOTT. It shows how far and to what extent they were hoping to reach.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think that is material.

Senator REED. Well, it may be.

Mr. BECKER. I regret that anybody should infer that anything that Hale said or that any German said could possibly cast the slightest imputation or stain upon President Wilson.

Now, Hale issued this statement—to continue reading from the New York Call. I was interrupted in the middle of a paragraph. (Reading:)

Hale's progenitors were among the early English colonists. He has long been a prominent member of the Sons of the American Revolution. He has been a lecturer at Oxford University.

Hale issued this statement:

"I know no way in which a citizen of New York who treasures its sacred traditions of liberty and who desires to make our land again safe for democracy can do his bit more effectively than by voting for Morris Hillquist for mayor. Both the old parties have become subservient, body and soul, to the overweening assumptions of the capitalistic classes.

A vote for the Socialist ticket in New York on November 6th will serve notice on the group which is today assuming to administer our affairs that the people of the United States are citizens, not subjects; that freedom of opinion, of speech and of the press for which our forefathers fought still is to us a precious heritage, and that the sound common sense of loyal patriots will not endure a delirious persecution of freemen such as had not been ventured upon by any chesty oligarchy, political or religious, since the days of the witchcraft delusion.

The indignation of old-time Americans over these measures is unspeakable. The silent vote that will be thrown for the Socialist candidates in November will astonish those temporarily in office. Some of us, of old American stock, are not concerned that our votes be silent. I, for one, am willing to shout mine through the biggest megaphone I can handle.

Mr. Hillquist is, at the moment, the most striking figure in American politics, a representative of opposition to the capitalistic system which has engulfed our beloved land in war.

Every vote for the Socialist ticket in New York this November will ring the bell which registers the demand of Americans for faithfulness to our ancient ideals; will hasten the dawn of the peace which all the world desires, and will ring out a joyful peal of hope for the splendid American boys who are about to be thrown into the mad cauldron of European politics.

To go back to a somewhat earlier date, before we entered the war, I have the evidence of Earnest Bohn, secretary of the Central Federated Union of Greater New York and vicinity, to the effect that early in 1915, as I understand it, William Bayard Hale furnished $400 for a meeting of the union at Carnegie Hall.

Senator OVERMAN. What union is that?

Mr. BECKER. The one that I referred to—the Central Federated Union of Greater New York.

Senator REED. That is all the unions, is it not?

Senator OVERMAN. What was this Federated Union engaged in, that you are talking about?

Mr. BECKER. I want to gather together the dates, and give you the connected story, Senator, as well as I can. With your permission, inasmuch as I find that this is not in very good order, I will save it until the afternoon.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. BECKER. Some reference has been made here to the trip to Roumania of Hale and Louis Edwards, his secretary; and it has been stated that it was on business of the German Foreign Office.

I have here Edwards's passport, and it bears the visé of the Royal or Imperial Consul at Bucharest. There is one place requiring the entry, under the heading "Deutsches Firmen," or the German firm, and entered under it is, in German, "The German Foreign Office."

Senator OVERMAN. That shows that he was indorsed by the German Government, and got passports accordingly?

Mr. BECKER. It shows that when they arrived in Bucharest and had their passports viséed at the German consulate there, and were asked—or possibly were not asked, but at any rate when the consul came to insert—the German firm that they were connected with, he wrote in there "German Foreign Office," being, as the Germans often are, the victims of too much—

Senator NELSON. That is, instead of being the representative of a commercial firm he was a representative of the German Foreign Office?

Mr. BECKER. Hale and Edwards—of course, this is only Edwards; Hale's passport is not here; he has not condescended to show it to us; but Edwards's passport—and doubtless Hale's also—I should say, bears the notation that they were on a mission for the German Foreign Office, in that form. That was explained by Mr. Bielaski.

It appears by the deposition of Louis Durant Edwards, which I have here, that in 1916 there was sent a so-called Fourth of July message, signed by Chancellor von Bethmann Holweg, which was published in the Hearst papers a few days later—it did not reach America quite in time—and was spread all over the first page of the Hearst papers, a Fourth of July message to the American people, so-called.

Senator WOLCOTT. What year was that?

Mr. BECKER. 1916.

That was a message of peace and good feeling between Germany and the United States; and Edwards testifies that the entire thing was written by Hale, from start to finish, and taken to the German Imperial Chancellor, and that he obtained the chancellor's consent to have his name appended to it, as a message from the German people to the American people.

There is to be found a singular proof of that statement, or a corroboration of it, in a pamphlet entitled "American rights and British Pretensions on the Seas," which was prepared by William Bayard Hale, as appears by the title page.

One of his chapters is entitled "The Summit of Arrogance," referring to Great Britain's conduct; and on page 15 there is the expression, in effect, that Great Britain is "exercising the most tyrannous police functions."

A little later there is a reference to "an island's municipal statutes"—rather unusual phrases; and both of those will be found in the Fourth of July message to the American people.

Now, a few references as to the activities of Dr. Dernburg. I have here his engagement calendar during the period of his stay in the United States.

Senator STERLING. Before you go into that, have you any evidence relative to the pay received by Dr. Hale on account of his mission to Roumania, or the pay received by Mr. Edwards?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Edwards received no pay. He went over for experience and his expenses, and never received compensation.

I have no information about Mr. Hale's arrangement with the German Government after he left the propaganda bureau here in New York. I have the proof that before that he was compensated at the rate of $15,000 a year. Mr. Bielaski has the information in regard to the contract with the German Government.

Senator NELSON. And he said it ran on for four years—until this year, some time?

Mr. BECKER. Until June, 1918.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Of course, as a matter of law, it would be terminated, he being an American citizen, by the declaration of war.

Senator NELSON. Yes; probably that canceled it.

Mr. BECKER. The question is whether it was terminated in fact.

Senator STERLING. Have you any evidence of the pay he received on account of his work for the Hearst papers?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Bielaski has given evidence with reference to that, Senator. I do not recall the figures, exactly, but it was substantially equal to the German Government pay, or more.

Senator NELSON. His expenses were so enormous there that with his pay and expenses over there it amounted to more than what he got from the German Government, or was to get from the German Government. I forget how it was. It seems to me that $15,000 was mentioned.

Senator STERLING. Yes; $15,000.

Senator NELSON. Was that a year or a week or what?

Senator WOLCOTT. A year.

Senator OVERMAN. $15,000 a year and expenses, I think.

Senator NELSON. $15,000 for the trip, I supposed.

Senator OVERMAN. What was that? Was it annual, or was it for the trip?

Senator NELSON. What was he to get from Hearst? What does the testimony show that he was to get from Hearst—I am speaking of Hale?

Maj. HUMES. $500 a month, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. It was much more than that.

Senator WOLCOTT. Where did the item of $15,000 come in?

Maj. HUMES. He got $15,000 from Dr. Fuehr's bureau over here. That is what he was getting from the German Government—$1,250 a month.

Capt. LESTER. That was before he went to Europe for the Hearst papers. I do not recall any evidence as to what he was receiving—

Senator NELSON. What was he getting from the Hearst papers when he was a correspondent for them?

Maj. HUMES. I do not remember that we have any evidence on that. It seems to me there was mention made of it in some statement from either Mr. Hearst or Mr. Merrill published in the papers, after the testimony was adduced here; but there is no evidence, I think, on the record here as to what he was getting.

Capt. LESTER. There is a telegram here showing the new arrangement.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me see that, please.

Capt. LESTER. Here it is.

Senator OVERMAN. He was getting a salary from both sides, anyway. That seems to be evident. I do not know what the amount was.

Mr. BECKER. I think I have already a full statement of the activities of Dr. Dernburg, as far as I wish to mention them.

I have his engagement calendar here, and I want to state, as there has been so much talk about scandalizing, that if the list of names there were given it would be pure scandalizing; because he had engagements with a lot of people about whom inferences would be drawn that would be wholly unwarranted from the facts.

Senator OVERMAN. We will not put in those names, then.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think they should be put in, by any means. There are 15 or 20 or 25 names of perfectly loyal Americans in there, and perhaps more.

I would like to call attention to an instance of film propaganda—German war films; and personally I am interested because, on account of some publicity that I gave to this matter, I have been sued for $50,000 for libel, by them; but I am willing to repeat it.

There was a gentleman named Benjamin Blumenthal, who reached Berlin, and in 1916, according to his own statement, which was taken at the time, he went to the German Foreign Office—no, to some branch of some other department, it is not quite clear which, and bought what was called the Official German Film; and he states that he is not clear what department he got it from, but that he purchased it from a Capt. Schraeder in a Government office in the military department.

The question was asked:

They were for sale by some department of the German Government?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the name of that department?—A. I do not know. Something—military department or something; I don't know.

Q. What was the name of the particular person that you dealt with?—A. I think Capt. Schraeder.

Q. How much money did you pay for them?—A. I paid 2½ marks a meter.

I am informed by persons skilled in such matters that that is away below the ordinary charge; in other words, these German official films were sold cheap.

Q. How many meters were there in it?—A. Let us see. There were about 4,000 to 5,000 meters, or something like 11,000 feet. I think it cost me somewhere around 12,000 marks, or something like that; 10,000 to 12,000 marks.

I am informed that those films were brought to this country in the submarine Deutschland, and Blumenthal states that he retained the New York rights, and that he showed them in the Strand Theater, and that he sold some State rights—Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and some western territory—but whether they were shown there or not he does not know.

I have here a synopsis of this official war film, which was prepared for circulation, and I will read it so that you can conclude as to whether it is German propaganda or not; that is, whether the film was German propaganda:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 26.

"Germanic" Official War Films (Inc.), 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

SYNOPSIS OF GERMANY AND ITS ARMIES OF TO-DAY.

1. The Kaiser at the west front.—This depicts the German Emperor with his armies on the Somme front, reviewing his troops and decorating valorous officers and soldiers. We see him in his human side, first recognizing an old acquaintance in the ranks, who happens to be only a private, and shaking hands with soldiers and officers. Note the astonishment on the ordinary soldier's face when this is done, the soldier forgetting to salute at the honor accorded.

Length approximately 625 feet.

2. Lille during the third year of the war.—These pictures, taken toward the end of 1916, show the life going on in this big industrial center, only 4 miles from the foremost English trenches, as though no war existed. The only way in which one notices the close proximity of the war is by the numerous soldiers walking through the streets and parks. We see in the parks the French civilians mixing with the German soldiers in an amicable manner. We see the State Theater standing unhurt, with ruined buildings on all sides, as though it were either Providence or the good German marksmanship which had protected it. Note the manner in which the cattle are killed, all parts being used for different purposes to feed the army. It seems quaint to read one sign in French and in the next house to see a sign in the German language. These are most interesting records of the invasion of one country by another, and gives one the most vivid description of what war really is and what would happen if New York should fall into the hands of an enemy.

Length approximately 1,000 feet.

And so it continues:

4. Artillery works in back of the trenches.—The main reason for the German success is here vividly seen by their wonderful power and ingenuity in adapting themselves to conditions, transforming a French railway station within a few miles of the foremost English trenches into an artillery workshop, with all modern appliances and improvements, ready at a moment's notice to repair any damage done and without loss of time to send same back to the trenches to do their deadly duties. Here we see hundreds of different guns of all calibers and sizes in all conditions, used for all different purposes, anti-aircraft guns, large motors, bomb throwers, etc. This is the first authentic record of German guns and the first time the description of these was ever allowed to leave the country.

Length approximately 460 feet.

Then there is a description of how certain Mohammedan prisoners of war were allowed to carry out their special faiths, a special mosque being built to allow this worship in Germany.

It shows Berlin—everything going on as usual. Notice this as to St. Quentin and the west front:

7. St. Quentin and the west front.—We show here the life in these quiet French villages, now under German martial law, the horrors of the refugees being forced to leave their homes owing to the attacks of their own armies, all of these towns being lifeless.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say you have been sued for libel in connection with that?

Mr. BECKER. For intimating that this was a propaganda film, and that this man was engaged in German propaganda.

Senator WOLCOTT. It does sound very suspicious, I must say.

Mr. BECKER. On January 3, 1917, Dr. Fuehr wired the central section for foreign service, Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst to indicate whether Blumenthal and Fisher had the exclusive rights on the films imported for them.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any more in connection with that?

Mr. BECKER. That is all on that.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take a recess until half-past 2.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.).

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Mr. BECKER. I shall now give the substance of the statement of Ernest Bohm, relating to his contacts with William Bayard Hale. He states that the Central Federated Union of Greater New York and vicinity, with which he was connected as an officer, was on record in 1915 as being opposed to the United States becoming involved in the war; that he received a call from a representative of William Bayard Hale about June, 1915, in the course of which Mr. Hale's representative stated to him that Hale was interested in this peace propaganda and wanted to support it if the occasion should arise. Later on a meeting was planned which was to take place on August 22, 1915, for the purpose of a protest against war, etc. The meeting was to be held at Carnegie Hall, and a lady in New York, whom I think I need not mention, as a member of the committee, had promised to pay the bonus for the hall, amounting to $500. She had deposited $100, and when she found out that William Jennings Bryan was to be one of the speakers she refused to have anything more to do with it. That happened on a Friday afternoon. The meeting was to be on Saturday night. Every labor organization had received an invitation to elect 25 delegates to attend, and if the meeting had not been held it would be a great fiasco for the Central Federated Union. Bohm says:

I thought of the offer made by William Bayard Hale and got in touch as to whether I could see him on Saturday evening. I went to see him on Saturday morning and told him the situation we were up against, and he furnished us $400 as the balance to pay for that meeting. Then he offered to write a resolution to be adopted by the meeting. That resolution was submitted to a committee of the Central Federated Union. As drafted by Mr. Hale, it contained a paragraph about stopping the shipment of munitions to the allies. The committee voted to strike out the clause advocating the embargo on arms, and with that amendment it was presented and adopted at the meeting.

Senator REED. Mr. Becker, for my own information, I want to ask you when it is claimed that Mr. Hale went into the employ of the German Government—what date?

Mr. BECKER. I know nothing about the contract or the date of it. It was testified to by Mr. Bielaski.

Senator REED. You do not have any information as to how early it was; I do not mean the exact date, but how far back it is that he was in the employ of the German Government?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. If it will interrupt your testimony I will not bother you at this time.

Mr. BECKER. If you will allow me to reflect for a moment I think I can give it to you.

Senator OVERMAN. When was it, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. It was either in December, 1914, or January, 1915, that he went to work for the Fuehr bureau and took charge of the the German information service—late in 1914 or in January, 1915. He was with it for a year or a little more. A telegram of Count Bernstorff to his Government said it was a four-year contract—that it would expire in June, 1918, as I remember it. I am not sure that that telegram stated how long the contract ran, but it said it terminated in June, 1918.

Senator REED. So that at this very time that Hale put up the $400, it is presumed that he was in the employ of the German Government?

Maj. HUMES. That is the assumption.

Mr. BECKER. There is no doubt whatever that he was at that time a member of the German propaganda bureau. That is absolutely established.

Maj. HUMES. He has admitted that fact?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I wish to devote a very little discussion to the Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments. That was the so-called Babies' Milk Committee.

Senator REED. By the way, Mr. Becker, you do not mean to leave the impression, do you, that Mr. Bryan was in any way in the employ of the Germans, because he was going to speak at this meeting that was going to be financed by Mr. Hale?

Mr. BECKER. No. I hope I am not going to be held responsible for every wild inference that might possibly be drawn by a diseased mind from anything that I have testified to.

Senator REED. Do you mean my mind is diseased?

Mr. BECKER. No. That is another wild inference. Not at all.

Senator REED. A man who has been drawing as many as you have might suspect others.

Mr. BECKER. The Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments had headquarters in the Woolworth Building. It had a long list of members, some of whom were known pro-German propagandists, and others benevolent persons. It would be mere scandalizing to read them all into the record.

Senator KING. There is no contention that all of the members of that organization were pro-German?

Mr. BECKER. I am not contending anything. I am not here to make contentions. The executive chairman was Dr. Edmund von Mach, the treasurer was Carl L. Schurz, and there was a sort of secretary, really a stenographer, named Miss Elizabeth M. Rosenberg, who has since changed her name to Ross. The transcript of the bank account of that organization shows there was raised between November 15, 1915 and March 28, 1916, and deposited in the German-American Bank of New York to the credit of this organization, $33,763.95. Miss Elizabeth Ross, or Rosenberg, states that only two shipments of milk were made, and her estimate of the total value of these shipments is that it was not over $500, and she states that the postage cost one-half the sum of $500. Miss Ross, or Rosenberg, states that von Mach was maintained at the Holland House at the expense of the committee. Von Mach was connected in a way with Otto Merkel and the German University League. I gave to the public some account of this committee, and Prof. von Mach stated that he had been accused of having embezzled the funds of the committee. I do not think so. I presume that whatever he received was given to him by due resolution and according to due form of law. However, the facts speak for themselves. I examined, at his request, Carl L. Schurz, and his statement is that, as he recalls, there were two shipments of milk, but he says that he believes Miss Ross is sadly mistaken as to the amount of it. Carl L. Schurz's statement reads in part as follows:

As a matter of fact, are you in position to state as treasurer just how much money was utilized in the purchase and shipment of milk?

A. I cannot say from memory.

Q. Approximately?

A. I could not even say approximately. Two shipments were made, and how much was used for that purpose I really do not remember.

Q. No more than two shipments were made? You are certain of that.

A. No more than two shipments were made. I am certain of that. That is as I remember it.

Then he testified that the books of the committee which would show were placed in the office of the German University League. The Department of Justice subsequently raided the offices of the German University League, but I am informed by the Department of Justice that the books were not found among the papers there taken possession of. We attempted to examine Carl L. Schurz further in regard to his legal connection with Capt. von Papen and Capt. Boy-Ed, and his statement as to that was as follows:

Do you care to make any statement in connection with her statement—that is, the statement of Miss Rosenberg that she learned you were the attorney for von Papen and Boy-Ed. Is that true?

A. No.

Q. You were, however, the attorney for H. F. Albert in some cases?

A. Why, Mr. Albert—

Q. I do not know how far you care to go into that.

A. I do not care to go into that, Mr. Johnson.

Then his attention was called to a number of payments made to him by the German Embassy through G. Amsinck & Co., and he replied:

I do not remember what those funds were now, but let me assure you that if the $12,500 was a fee I would remember it, because I never received as a fee half as large an amount as that.

Q. You prefer not to go into those transactions?

A. Yes, I would.

Senator KING. Is that the only light you got from him on the milk matter?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. He referred to the books and we have never been able to get the books.

Senator KING. Did you learn in any way whether a transfer was made of those funds, $33,000 and odd, to any German account or to any of these accounts that were kept by the German Embassy?

Mr. BECKER. There is no evidence of that. The bank account shows total credits, as I stated, of $33,763.95, and a balance still remaining on deposit on October 29, 1918, of $255.87. So $33,500 was spent in some way.

Senator KING. Does the bank account indicate how it was expended?

Mr. BECKER. No; it was drawn out by checks, and the check vouchers are gone.

Senator KING. In large or small amounts?

Mr. BECKER. The largest withdrawal was on November 27, 1916, $14,400, and the next largest on January 4, 1917, $2,500; February 8, 1917, $1,600.

Senator KING. Did you find on the date or the following date of the withdrawal of the $14,000, a credit to any of these German accounts? Of course, unless you were looking especially for that you would not.

Mr. BECKER. It never occurred to us, because I do not think there had been any indication in the record that that was what became of the money. It would be an interesting inquiry to look into. Miss Rosenberg's statement I treated rather mildly, because she has been so flatly denied by von Mach in some particulars, but she tells quite a story of expenditures for all sorts of fancy purposes.

Senator NELSON. She claims only $500 was spent in two milk shipments.

Mr. BECKER. That is what she claims, that the milk that was sent did not cost over $500.

Senator OVERMAN. And part of that was for postage, she said.

Mr. BECKER. No; the postage was additional. That was her estimate of the value of the milk, or the cost of it. Unless the books can be found, perhaps we will never have positive proof of what happened.

Maj. HUMES. Were there withdrawals of that account during the first five or six days of April, 1917, just prior to the declaration of war? The evidence shows that von Mach was down in Washington to prevent a declaration of war, and there has been some correspondence introduced respecting that.

Mr. BECKER. On February 8, $1,600 was withdrawn, and that is the only large withdrawal after the break of diplomatic relations with Germany.

Dr. Hugo Schweitzer was at one time connected with the Bayer Co., a large chemical company located at Rensselaer, opposite Albany, N. Y. Toward the end of the stay of Dr. Albert in this country Schweitzer became a sort of depository of German embassy moneys, and we can trace payments from Dr. Schweitzer's account for account of the German embassy. Such records as we have show that he received a total of $1,478,882.08 from moneys of the German embassy, either temporarily or permanently. Many of these funds, though not all of them, were deposited to the joint credit of himself and wife, Adele Schweitzer, in the German-American Bank of New York. On February 5, 1917, $150,000 of this money was paid over to Hayes, Kauffman, & Lindheim, who in turn handed it over to Edward A.

Rumely, as part of the money to obtain the Evening Mail. The evidence warrants the conclusion that Dr. Schweitzer was the man who was left in charge of a considerable sum of German money after Bernstorff and Albert left this country, for the purpose of carrying on the good work. He is now dead.

I call attention now to the case of William Wilke, of Buffalo, and the stoneware plot. Between May, 1915, and the middle of 1916, Mr. Wilke received from the German Government in smaller payments the sum of $65,500. His address is Buffalo, N. Y. It was not until after he entered the transaction, according to his statement, that he became aware that Dr. Albert was interested in it, but then there was a meeting of Dr. Albert, Wolfe von Igel, and Capt. von Papen, which he attended, at which the proposition was discussed. The purpose was to buy a large quantity of stoneware, that being a material essential to the manufacture of munitions, and except for Mr. Wilke's commissions, which were liberal, he did expend the money for that purpose. In making munitions it is necessary to use stoneware for mixing the components. Also stoneware requires the use of picric acid, and so do munitions, so that the effect of buying the stoneware was intended to impair by so much the ability of this country to make munitions. That stoneware was taken to a town in New Jersey and dumped in a vacant lot. I think it has rotted; at least it has become practically worthless. It is still there.

Senator OVERMAN. They got this stoneware not to send abroad, but just to dump it. That was the idea?

Mr. BECKER. That was the idea—to cripple the manufacture of munitions.

Aleister Crowley brings us into touch with an entirely different sort of enterprise. He was a moving spirit in an organization known as the Hermetic Brotherhood of Light, and in Latin, above that name, on one of the circulars are the words "Ordo Templi Orientis." I have examined Mr. Crowley and he produced a circular dated January 22, 1917, from Switzerland, emanating from the secretary of the organization. The president or grand master of the organization is a German. Mr. Crowley has characterized the circular of January 22, 1917, as issued from Switzerland as being German propaganda. It is rather vague and consists in phrases such as this:

The Hermetic Brotherhood of Light, known as the O. T. O., * * * sends the following message to all its members, and to all men and women who have peace and the advancement of humanity at heart.

More powerful than anything that ever has happened within the memory of mankind this war has revealed the underlying deeply rooted antagonisms which divide mankind in its aims and aspirations.

The Hermetic Brotherhood of Light, known as the O. T. O., stands for practical, brotherly cooperation between All, men and women alike, without distinction of creed, race or nation, for the advancement of humanity.

It is in a way a diatribe against war.

Millions of brotherly ties have been rudely and cruelly severed.

This terrible war has destroyed in one year what it had taken centuries to build up.

Mr. Crowley produced, in the high-flown language that seems to be affected by the Ordo Templi Orientis, a reply dated at Johannesburg, the 2d of July, 1917. It begins:

Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law.

Mr. Crowley asserts, being a British subject, that this was an answer in veiled language to the insidious German propaganda of the first circular.

In vain have the Prophet and Reformer striven to stem the growing tide of these abuses which have threatened to destroy this Civilization. The Prophet and the Reformer have failed. Shall we say "Nay" to the God who hath opened His Eye?

Modern commercialism and plutocracy have contributed largely to the present state of strife.

It ends with the following:

And now may the Blessing of our Father the Sun be upon you and remain with you for ever. Love is the Law, Love under Will.

This is done in the Valley of Johannesburg, this 2d day of July, 1917.

Senator KING. That sounds like the effusion of some crank.

Mr. BECKER. Maybe; but they have a good many members. Curiously enough, in the Continental Times of October 11, 1915, there is a letter from Aleister Crowley to this notorious German propaganda, "a journal for Americans in Europe," which reads as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 27.

ALEISTER CROWLEY EXPLAINS.

To the Editor: I notice in your brief introduction to my article "End of England"—(July 26th) a reference to a "ridiculous proposal" of mine to take down Cologne Cathedral and rebuild it at Rhelms. You wrong me!

This was only one of a series of letters which I wrote to the London Press in order to find out if there was anything too idiotic for them to print.

There was not!

I am, your obedient servant.

ALEISTER CROWLEY.

The literary editor appends this note:

I am sorry to have misinterpreted Mr. Crowley's somewhat over-subtle irony. But considering what was written in London at that time, there was really no way of telling the sheep from the goats. Lit. Ed.

Aleister Crowley and his organization may be classified as a dubious proposition.

Senator KING. Is there any evidence to show that they were financed by Germans?

Mr. BECKER. No. I have several articles by Mr. Crowley. In general, it is a pacifist affair.

Senator KING. Do you claim—and I do not use the word "claim" in an improper sense—do you think there is anything to show that it was connected in any way with von Bernstorff or any of the accredited and known German representatives here?

Mr. BECKER. No. It is not an American affair, except as it is an American branch. It is supposed to have its headquarters in England, with branches in Switzerland and in the United States.

Mr. Bielaski has treated of George Sylvester Viereck at considerable length, and very adequately. I wish to call attention, however, to an intercepted letter of Mr. Viereck's to his father, as bearing upon the continuation of the plan of diverting labor by a labor bureau from occupations that would be harmful to the countries of central Europe, to which these individuals might owe allegiance.

I do not bring this out with an idea of criticizing the thing, but because it is interesting, as showing the continuation of that movement. There might be perfectly defensible grounds for undertaking the matter.

In a letter addressed by Viereck to "Dear Papa and Mamma," dated New York, May 2, 1917, after we entered the war, and intercepted by the British Government, addressed to an individual in Stockholm, Sweden, the following passage occurs:

I have established a bureau of legal information for Americans of German descent and for Germans who are uncertain as to their legal status, and wish to know their duties and their rights. A number of eminent lawyers are acting on my advisory board. I have also organized an agricultural employment bureau. This bureau aims to divert the energy of Germans and Austrians who are out of work, into agricultural channels. In this way they are of the greatest aid to the United States, without undertaking any work which, from the point of view of their Fatherland, can be construed as lending aid to the enemy. The Central Powers, if I am not mistaken, are even employing prisoners of war for agricultural work. This bureau has the full endorsement of those in charge of the Department of Agriculture.

Some other points in this letter are rather interesting. [Continuing reading.]

We have changed the name of the magazine to "Viereck's—The American Weekly." We have also established a number of new features. We give a weekly survey of the speeches in Congress. Strange to say, the United States seems to be the only country in the world with a parliamentary government which disregards the often excellent speeches of its representatives.

That is enough of the letter to read, but I think it is of sufficient moment to be put into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in.

(The letter above referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 28.

NEW YORK, May 2, 1917.

MY DEAR PAPA AND MAMA: In a few days the Austrian staff will leave for their home. I shall give Dr. von Nuber, the Austrian Consul-General in New York, a number of oral messages for you. He is a dear friend of ours and I hope that he will not forget to deliver the messages. I have also spoken to one or two other members of the Austrian party and I hope that you will hear from them.

I have had no news from you since the war began. The only message I received was papa's wireless in which he asked me what he should do in case of war. I also received recently a message of Uncle Edward's death, which touched me deeply. The announcement came by way of Norway. I do not know whether it was accompanied by a letter. I received none.

We are well. Baby weighs almost twenty pounds and can say "Mama" and "Papa." Business has suffered some owing to the war, but our business has suffered no more in proportion than other people's. We have adopted the slogan "America first and America only." This means that we are for America, but not for the Allies.

I have established a Bureau of Legal Information for Americans of German descent and for Germans who are uncertain as to their legal status and wish to know their duties and their rights. A number of eminent lawyers are acting on my advisory board.

I have also organized an Agricultural Employment Bureau. This bureau aims to divert the energy of Germans and Austrians who are out of work into agricultural channels. In this way they are of the greatest aid to the United States without undertaking any work which, from the point of view of their Fatherland, can be construed as lending aid to the enemy. The Central Powers, if I am not mistaken, are even employing prisoners of war for agricultural work. This bureau has the full indorsement of those in charge of the Department of Agriculture.

We have changed the name of the magazine to "Viereck's—The American Weekly." We have also established a number of new features. We give a weekly survey of the speeches in Congress. Strange to say, the United States seems to be the only country in the world with a parliamentary government which disregards the often excellent speeches of its representatives.

In addition to that we have adopted something of the system of the Literary Digest. We print and digest the opinions of many others, emphasizing, however, the point of view of the enlightened minority.

War or peace we stand for fair play and for justice. We hope that the war between the United States and Germany will remain platonic,

I have written you repeatedly that you are to draw against my stocks at the Deutsche Bank for money, since it is impossible to transmit any money to Berlin. I could of course transmit money for you personally to any neutral country. In fact I wonder whether it would not be advisable for you to transfer your residence to a neutral country.

Do not fail to call upon Dr. Albert and Dr. Fuehr if you need advice or aid. Both men have been often in our house and are socially under obligations to me. Discuss all your troubles with them frankly, especially if the official routine should make life uncomfortable for you.

I also hope that you write me regularly, even if these letters do never reach me. I suggest that you keep copies of them as a sort of diary for me to read after the war. No one can tell how long the war may last. I do not know whether we shall see each other again, and I would like to have at least some token as to your thoughts of me in all these troubled days.

I have asked the State Department to make it possible for me to communicate with you through the Spanish Embassy, and I have some hope that they will transmit a message for me. In the same way it should be possible for you to transmit an answer through the Swiss Minister or through the Spanish Embassy in Berlin. Try, at any rate, to send me some kind of message by way of a neutral country. I am sure that either our Austrian friends or Dr. F. or Dr. A. can show you the way. It is intolerable not to know whether you are well and whether you are in need or in any trouble.

Did Mr. Plage ever bring mama the two hundred marks which he owes me and which he promised to take to her? I had made a bet with him that America would not enter the war. I gave him fifty dollars to take along. Our bet, however, was for ten dollars only and he was to bring the difference to mama as a little present.

The British Censor is busy now and we get no inkling of what is really taking place behind the screen of censorship.

With many good wishes from us all, including, especially Gretchen and Peter, I am, as ever,

Lovingly yours,

SYLVESTER.

P. S.—It might be advisable to address any cable message not to me but to my father-in-law.

Mr. BECKER. I have a great number of letters here which have been intercepted which are all interesting, but possibly they are not of sufficient importance to go into the record, unless the committee think so. In these letters there are, however, certain matters that, perhaps, at Maj. Humes' suggestion, I might properly refer to. Perhaps the excerpts that I will now read will be sufficient.

This is a translation of a letter on the letterhead of George Sylvester Viereck, 1123 Broadway, New York, 26th of May, 1916:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 29.

Dear Papa—

That means Louis Viereck, in Berlin—

Some days ago I received a news item from you in which you write concerning the decision of the High Court, according to which beer is not a luxury but an important food product. A certain restaurant keeper is to be punished because he charged too high a price for beer. Such person had set up as his defense that beer was not a food product but a luxury, and the court made the opposite decision. Would it be possible for you to obtain the text of this opinion of the High Court? I suppose that the brewers would have it or at least be able to obtain it. I will gladly assure you for attending to this a little extra compensation.

That beer article was furnished, and was circulated as beer propaganda all through this country.

Now, this is a similar letter, on Viereck's letterhead, signed by him, and dated June 2, 1916, addressed to "Dear Papa." It contains, among other matter, this paragraph:

The changes in your alcohol article were taken up here by my friends, the brewers, in order to work in this way more to the purpose.

The postscript of that letter I will read also, as follows:

Dr. William Bayard Hale has sailed to-day on the Friederich VIII for Germany. He is the representative of Hearst, and is one of our good friends with whom we have many social relations and who also is of great use to us politically. Hearst is perhaps the most prominent American publicist who has ranged himself on the side of Germany. He telephoned me this morning, but could not reach me. I have sent Hale a telegram to look you up, if possible. He understands some German. His wife was born a Muschenheim. He is the same Dr. Hale who once had the famous interview with the Kaiser. He is further the one-time biographer of Wilson, whom he now, on the other hand, attacks sharply, and he is the publisher of many other books.

Senator REED. What is the date of that letter, please?

Mr. BECKER. June 2, 1916.

I wish to refer to the "Two Thousand Questions and Answers" book, published by the Review of Reviews Co. There has been a controversy between the National Security League, which printed a violent attack on that book and the publishers with regard to it. There was an examination of the book made by Prof. Claude Vantine, and he selected a number of objectionable passages.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that the book that has Mr. Creel's indorsement?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Mr. Creel states, as I understand it, that he saw the proof sheets, and that it appeared to be, as indeed it is, a very carefully prepared and very valuable book, and he felt that it should be indorsed. His introduction concludes with the words "'Two Thousand Questions and Answers,' in my opinion, constitutes a vital part of the national defense."

Now, this book is one of the most subtle pieces of German propaganda, and, at the same time, as far as I can see, the most absolutely ineffectual and useless, that I have ever seen. I want to call attention to the letter from the treasurer of the Review of Reviews Co., Mr. C. D. Lanier, of September 9, 1918, which is the rejoinder of the publisher to the National Security League. In this letter he calls attention to the fact that there was a similar catechism of the war published in Australia by the son of W. T. Stead, and there is this statement:

On investigation of the objectionable passages, of which there were a number, it was found that practically all of them were from the pen of the British journalist who had constructed the Catechism of the War, they having been passed by the censor and published in Australia, and that it was this knowledge of the origin of the paragraphs and the consequent assumption of their propriety that had led to laxity in the subediting of those portions of our volume.

I do not wish to have it thought that I accuse Mr. Lanier of a falsehood; but I had commenced investigation of this book before the National Security League's publication, which I continued afterwards. I took the statements of Henry and Charles T. Lanier, and of Julius Muller. Julius Muller is an American citizen; he has been an associate editor, or, at any rate, in some manner connected with the staff of the Stars and Stripes, which, as you know, is a magazine for the boys in the trenches. Muller was the subeditor who had charge of the details of preparing the work, and on examination, in going over the paragraphs that appeared to me to be possibly objectionable or on the shady side of pro-Germanism, and the paragraphs that had been objected to by Prof. Vantine, with a single exception, and a very doubtful one, they were all the work of Julius Muller, and could not be found in Stead's book, and had not been passed by any British censor or published in any British colony.

Senator REED. Is Muller still the editor of the Stars and Stripes?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know.

Senator REED. How long since was he, to your knowledge?

Mr. BECKER. He was up to the time of that statement, which was about three months ago.

Senator REED. Who are the publishers of the Stars and Stripes?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know.

Senator REED. You said that it was an official paper for the boys in the trenches. I thought you would know.

Mr. BECKER. I have seen a copy now and then. It is a patriotic affair that was distributed over in France, as a sort of paper for the soldiers. I think it was a daily, was it not?

Senator REED. Do you know by whom it was financed? Was it by the Government?

Capt. LESTER. I do not know.

Senator REED. Do you know whether Muller is still connected with it?

Capt. LESTER. I do not know.

Senator REED. But you never heard of his being removed?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir.

Mr. BECKER. I have here a schedule of objections to the book. Rather than to take the time to go all through it, inasmuch as it seems to have been conceded by the Review of Reviews Co. that there were objectionable paragraphs, I will just call attention to one set, and tell you what happened when I examined Muller with reference to them.

Senator KING. Is Muller an American citizen, do you know?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. Born in this country?

Mr. BECKER. I think so. At pages 157 and 158 of the book there are a number of paragraphs, under the heading "Ravaged Belgium." This book is an arrangement of questions and answers. The first question is: "Did Gladstone ever uphold disregard of treaties?"

Mr. Muller said that was to be found in Stead's work. I have not been able to find it there; maybe I have not been careful enough.

"Did Gladstone ever uphold disregard of treaties?"

Then there is a quotation from a speech by Mr. Gladstone in parliament in 1870. Then the next question is:

"What are the Hague Conventions?" and those are very accurately described. The next question is:

"Is the Hague Tribunal elected annually?" And the answer is that it is a permanent tribunal. The next question is:

"What is meant by a 'scrap of paper'?" Then the story of the interview between Sir Edwin Goschen and von Bethman Hollweg is given. The next question is:

“Was the ‘scrap of paper’ story ever denied?” and it shows that it was. The next question is:

“Did Great Britain destroy the Danish Navy in time of peace?” Then the answer is that it was partially destroyed by the British fleet under Nelson at some ancient time.

Now, that seemed to be a very strange juxtaposition of paragraphs under “Ravaged Belgium.” It seemed to me that the intent was to convey the impression that the English had done equally ill in the past, and that the offense of Germany was condoned. I asked Julius Muller about that, and he threw up his hands, literally. He said, “I throw up my hands.” He said, “I admit that seems very peculiar, but it was a pure accident in editing.” He said those paragraphs had been prepared, and that one day they ran short of material in making up some pages of the book, and it was done hastily; that they happened by a pure chance to get into that order, and into that arrangement. Here is the exact answer:

I had probably three thousand questions and answers scattered around me in different piles, and one day when there was an urgent need for some proof to go to the printer, this particular bundle was gathered up hastily, and this was most all from Stead; I think it was all from Stead.

It afterwards turned out that it was all from Muller; it could not be found in the Stead book. The book distinctly characterizes the French desire to regain Alsace-Lorraine as a piece of French Chauvinism. There is a reference to the terrible immorality to which American soldiers would be subjected if allowed to go to Paris, and the point is made that they should not be allowed to go to Paris, for that reason.

“Where do the American boys spend their days off? In Paris?” The headings sometimes indicate the trend of the book, in places:

Q. Where do the American boys spend their days off? In Paris?—A. No. Paris has been found to be demoralizing to the men and a dangerous focus of infection and contagion through the loathsome disease which menaces every Army when its men mingle with the women of big cities. Therefore, the American Government has arranged with the French Government to get a very large control of certain places behind the American lines, and these have been turned into recreation cities for our men. They are in the beautiful Department of Savoy, which abuts on the Swiss border, and is wedged in between Switzerland and Italy. It adjoins the most magnificent mountain scenery in the world, Mont Blanc being on its eastern border. The healthful and noted resort of Aix-les-Bains is one of the recreation cities in this region. The big casino there has been turned over to the American Y. M. C. A., and playhouses and other amusements have been established. Another town is Chambery, where three casinos and a theater have been leased for the use of the Americans. Still another place is Challes-les-Eaux. Professional performers and volunteer workers arrange for every possible sort of amusement. In addition, there are mountain-climbing, boating, automobiling, and so forth.

Do you think that looks as though it were written to alarm the parents of American boys?

Mr. BECKER. No; that was not the purpose. It, however, greatly incensed the French High Commission. I know they were very angry about it, because I talked with them. They regarded it as a gratuitous insult with respect to the conditions in Paris.

Senator REED. A moment ago you said you offered it for the purpose of showing that it was intended to discourage American soldiers, by showing that they were subjected to great dangers of immorality; whereas the article seems to conclusively show that it was intended to demonstrate that the morals of our soldiers were guarded with the greatest care; that they had the influence of the Y. M. C. A.; and that they had been shut off from evil resorts and were kept in a pure and decent atmosphere.

Mr. BECKER. I will ask the stenographer to turn back and see what I did say, because if I made that statement it was a slip of the tongue. I remember I used the expression "terrible immorality." Perhaps that will enable the stenographer to identify the passage easily.

(The following was thereupon read aloud by the reporter from the record:)

There is a reference to the terrible immorality to which American soldiers would be subjected if allowed to go to Paris, and the point is made that they should not be allowed to go to Paris, for that reason.

Mr. BECKER. I do not desire to change that. I think that is a reasonably accurate comment.

Senator WOLCOTT. I gathered the impression, Mr. Becker, from the way you read it, that the question was worded this way: "Where do our boys spend their recreation?" or whatever the wording was, and that the answer was: "In Paris." I supposed that was all the answer.

Mr. BECKER. No; that is a part of the question. The question whether there were objectionable paragraphs in the book is not debatable, because that has been admitted by the publisher, and he has prepared a new edition, of which I have here the proof sheets. I understand it is approved by the War Department this time and is certainly entirely unobjectionable.

Senator REED. Do not misunderstand me. I am not defending that book nor Mr. Creel.

Senator KING. Did Mr. Muller state who employed him, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. The Review of Reviews Co.

I have here a memorandum on the subject of the means of communication used by the Germans, which is largely the result of a study of the Hugo Schmidt papers which I have made. It discloses how keenly the Germans were beginning to feel the strong hand of the British censor. I think Hugo Schmidt was probably the most resourceful of any of the Germans of this country at working that out. The papers show that clerks of the Deutsche Bank were sent from Germany to correspondents of the Deutsche Bank located in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Holland, and Spain, for the sole purpose apparently of having mail intended for the Deutsche Bank of Berlin and its subsidiaries addressed to them in these neutral countries, from whence it could be reforwarded to Berlin.

At the same time merchants in neutral countries who were under obligations for their financial arrangements to the Deutsche Bank of Berlin and the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank were utilized and all means of communication for mail and telegraphic address. These same means of communication were occasionally used by the German Embassy. Hugo Schmidt quite often sent deposits, using his code as means of communication for the ambassador.

Senator KING. Direct to the bank?

Mr. BECKER. To the intermediary, and thence to the German Government. In this the German banks were assisted sometimes by prominent Scandinavians, Dutch and Swiss banks. Once these communications had been established, a list was compiled and transmitted to New York by confidential messenger, and furnished to the several correspondents of the Deutsche Bank, and thereafter letters to the Deutsche Bank were addressed in the names of these several lummies that were created throughout neutral countries, at the same time maintaining correspondence in matters that were not of any import, so far as secrecy was concerned, by direct mail to the Deutsche Bank, so as to make it appear that all the ordinary commercial transactions were being carried on through the usual channels, and divert suspicion from the others.

I have a list here, which if the committee desires can be put into the record—it is too long to read—of nearly 100 persons in neutral countries who acted as intermediaries for this mail.

(The list referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 30.

AT COPENHAGEN.

John Birchenough.	Edgar Chantrey.
Danskellandsmansbank.	R. J. Henriques.
Carl Hessenberg.	Paul Ilmer.
M. J. Mogensen.	Vekselbank.
Alexander Witherspoon.	D. B. Adler.
Erils Anderson.	Sophus Anderson.
Peter Hansen.	Phillip Rolff.
Vernadus Snoew.	Charles Stiggins.
Jens Svendsen.	Alphonse Lockavanne.

IN FRANCE.

Adolph La Croix & Cie, Havre.

IN HOLLAND.

James Bishop, Amsterdam.	Edwin Booth, Asterdam.
Lippmann, Rosenthal & Co., Amsterdam.	Rotterdamschebank, Amsterdam.
Paul Sauvage, Rotterdam.	Roel Vermerr, Amsterdam.
Wiegsmansbank, Amsterdam.	Teixteria De Mattos, Amsterdam.
Amsterdamschebank, Rotterdam.	Disconto Maatschaapj, Amsterdam.
Thomas Nevins, Rotterdam.	Lober Gerard, Amsterdam.
Felix Aschert, Rotterdam.

IN ITALY.

Liugi Fungi, Rome.	Maison Debosis, Rome.
Monaca Gregoriana, Rome.	Rudolfo Rossi, Rome.
Filippo Carmagnani, Venice.	Maison Damiani, Venice.
Giovanni Carmagnani, Milan.

IN LIMA, PERU.

Ledgard La Funte.	Pastor Matienzo.
Manuel Monclava.	Julio Romero.

IN NORWAY.

McMogensen, Christiana.

IN RIO DE JANEIRO.

Joao Siomoesfriere.	Paulo Da Roche.
Jose Jaquin Lopez.	Louis Mercier.
Georgiana Waghorne.

IN SANTIAGO, CHILE.

Arturo Gallo, y Garcia.	Claro Lesteria.
Ricardo Puvonka.

IN SWITZERLAND.

Banque Martin, Geneva.
 Arthur Melvin, Zurich.
 Merkel & Co., Basle.
 Cartier Bank, Geneva.
 Bernier Handelsbank, Geneva.

John Lachat, Geneva.
 Credit Suisse, Zurich.
 Schweiz Credit Anstalt, Zurich.
 Lachat Banque, Geneva.
 Willy Gassman, Geneva.

IN SPAIN.

Garcia Calamarte y Hio, Madrid.
 Francisco Frada, Madrid.
 Albert Galapin, Madrid.
 Francisco Motto, Madrid.
 Gabiello Romano, Madrid.
 Ricardo Welsch, Barcelona.
 Baldwin Effington & Co., Madrid.

William Coleman, Madrid.
 Albert Gaillard, Madrid.
 Albert Hedegaard, Barcelona.
 Antonio F. Nonidez, Madrid.
 Helen Sprigg, Madrid.
 Albert Effington, Madrid.
 Roveira Rambla, Barcelona.

IN SWEDEN.

Burman & Company, Lulea.
 H. Schultz, Stockholm.
 Goteburg Handelsbank, Guttenburg.
 Sydenbanken, Malmoe.

Skandinaxiska Credit Aktiebolaget.
 Stockholm.
 Lindelof & Co., Sweden.

IN VALPARAISO, CHILE.

Angelo Calvo, Valparaiso.
 Carlos Plaza.
 Albert Acuna.

Eulogia Gallardo.
 Savadra Bernard & Cia.
 Claro Lastaria.

Mr. BECKER. The rigor of the British censor made it impossible for Hugo Schmidt to receive mail addressed in his name. After a while the German's mail was confiscated by the British or at the very least they used to take long enough to take a photostat copy, and then it would be sent out. He had mail addressed in New York intended for him to various persons, George A. Brewster, 165 Broadway; John H. McClement, 165 Broadway, an American, who was a representative for many years of the Deutsche Bank; and a German with a French name, A. de Chapeaurouge, room 601, 31 Nassau Street; a clerk named Roy Woollen, 176 Congress Street, Brooklyn; the Kerbaugh Empire Co., 6 Church Street, which was a concern that was largely financed by capital brought into America by the German bank. Later he organized the Standard Mercantile Agency, for the purpose of foreign exchange, and also as an occasional address for mail. Schmidt himself assumed a fictitious name for correspondence with the Latin countries, the name of Valerien Jourdain, giving the address as 165 Congress Street. In his wireless messages he signed various other names, and used the name of Sidney Pickford among them. Thus little by little the names of the Deutsche Bank and Hugo Schmidt and the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank began to disappear from the mail sacks, and the censors were confronted with these neutral sounding names, which so far as a superficial investigation showed, were receiving ordinary commercial letters relating to persons of such names as Charles Wendall, William Foxley, and John Franklin, there being nothing to indicate that Charles Wendall was Bernstorff, that Franklin was the German Foreign Minister, or Foxley the German Foreign Office.

That concludes the statement of what I have brought here for the attention of the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Major Humes, do you have any questions that you desire to ask?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Becker, I would like to have you please put in, if you can, a statement of the activity of the German-American Alliance of New York State—the New York State branch.

Mr. BECKER. I know very little about it. There was an act passed by the Legislature of New York State, with whose execution I had to do, which dissolved it, at the last session, and the act provided for the appointment of a receiver. When we called in the office there was not enough in sight to be worth receiving. I should think the net assets were about $45.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any knowledge as to the number of organizations that were affiliated with the German-American Alliance?

Mr. BECKER. No; that has been a Department of Justice and Military Intelligence matter, and I have paid very little attention to it.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I gave Mr. Becker Mr. Bielaski's testimony, and asked him to supplement that in any of the details in which Mr. Bielaski had not completely covered the subject, so far as he could. If he has covered that ground as thoroughly as he feels that he can, I have nothing further to ask him.

Senator OVERMAN. You are through, you say?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Any one else?

Senator REED. I would like to ask a few questions if the committee is through.

You are, Mr. Becker, the deputy attorney general of New York?

Mr. BECKER. A deputy attorney general.

Senator REED. Who is the present attorney general?

Mr. BECKER. Merton Lewis.

Senator REED. How long has Mr. Lewis occupied that position?

Mr. BECKER. I can not give you the exact time. He was elected by the legislature to succeed his predecessor, who resigned early in 1917, and in the fall of 1917 he was elected for the one year of the unexpired term of his predecessor by the people, and his term will expire the 31st of December next.

Senator REED. You were appointed by Mr. Lewis at what time as his deputy?

Mr. BECKER. I was appointed by his predecessor on the 1st of January, 1915.

Senator REED. And when Mr. Lewis was elected or appointed, you remained with him?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And you have been with him ever since?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. In the fall of 1917 did you have an election in the State of New York for State officers?

Mr. BECKER. Well, for members of the assembly, and owing to the vacancy, for attorney general.

Senator REED. Was there also in the fall of 1917 an election for mayor of New York?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Were these two elections held at the same time?

Mr. BECKER. The same date.

Senator REED. Were there primary elections held under the law of the State of New York for the purpose of nominating candidates that were to run at these elections that were to be held in the fall of 1917?

Mr. BECKER. It may seem strange, but I can not get it straight in my mind whether Mr. Lewis was nominated by petition or by a primary. It was unimportant, because there was no opposition at all. As for the rest of the ticket, there were primaries, certainly, and I think very likely for Mr. Lewis.

Senator REED. Were you a candidate at that primary in 1917?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Were you ever a candidate at any primary election for any nomination in the State of New York?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, I was a candidate at the primary held on the 3d day of September, 1918, for the nomination for attorney general.

Senator REED. On the Republican ticket?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Was Mr. Lewis a candidate at the same time of your nomination for governor? Who were the leading candidates for the nomination for governor at this time?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis and Governor Whitman.

Senator REED. Governor Whitman was Mr. Lewis's opponent?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who was your opponent?

Mr. BECKER. Charles D. Newton.

Senator REED. In this primary election were slates or groups of candidates gotten together and run on tickets?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir.

Senator REED. So that we will not misunderstand each other, was there any group of candidates so that you and Mr. Lewis were upon one slate, speaking generally, and Gov. Whitman and Mr. Newton upon another slate?

Mr. BECKER. Well, to be frank——

Senator REED. That is what I want you to be.

Mr. BECKER (continuing). I do not know, this is a little delicate, but I will say that in the campaign committee it was composed of about half of men who were supporting Mr. Whitman and about half supporting Mr. Lewis. Of course I was very loyal and friendly with my chief, Senator Lewis, and I do not think there has been any ill-feeling on his part, as you know some of his supporters were somewhat incensed because I tried to have a mixed committee, a committee of mixed men, of Whitman men and Lewis men.

Senator REED. I was not speaking about the committee. I am not intimating that you were not absolutely loyal to your chief.

Mr. BECKER. I was not on the ticket with Mr. Lewis, that is the answer.

Senator REED. But as a matter of fact, was there or was there not a friendly concert of action between yourself and Mr. Lewis?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; absolutely.

Senator REED. And in that sense we might say there was a slate, and when I use the term slate I do not use it in any offensive sense at all, and I recognize—I am making this long explanation in order that you may understand—I recognize that in primary committees there is likely to be a grouping of candidates against each other, and I assume that you and Mr. Lewis, you having been in his office, had been in one group, whereas Gov. Whitman and his supporters were in another group.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Newton certainly was on the Whitman ticket.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. No doubt about that. Therefore, I suppose to that extent by opposing him I was on an anti-Whitman ticket, roughly speaking, but we have no such thing in New York State as a ticket.

Senator REED. Yes, I understand you do not absolutely print the ticket?

Mr. BECKER. And there was no slate.

Senator REED. In a broad way you and Mr. Lewis were both opposing Whitman.

Mr. BECKER. I was not.

Senator REED. And in a broad way each of you was supporting the other? Is that true?

Mr. BECKER. Oh yes; that is certainly true.

Senator REED. And if each of you was supporting the other as you were supporting Lewis, and as he was not supporting Whitman, you were against Whitman?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I thought we would get there after a while if we talked long enough. Now, when was it—you have stated in your testimony that there was a statute of New York which became a law on the 21st day of May, 1917. You have produced here, or referred to certain affidavits which you have taken of numerous people, bellboys, and elevator men, and hack drivers and chauffeurs—did you take those affidavits under and by virtue of the authority of that statute of New York?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did you take them for the purposes named in that statute?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. The purposes of the statute were:

Whenever in his judgment the public interest requires it, the attorney general may, with the approval of the governor, and when directed by the governor, shall inquire into matters concerning the public peace, public safety, and public justice.

Did you understand that to mean the public peace of the State of New York where the statute was passed?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is, the public peace—well, yes, that is accurate enough. However, I am not the judge, you know, of what matters shall be gone into.

Senator REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. BECKER. That is determined by the governor.

Senator REED. Did the governor in this instance determine what should be gone into?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Well, that is interesting. I understand then that Gov. Whitman is the man who directed the investigation to be made which you conducted and directed you what matters and things to examine into? Is that your statement?

Mr. BECKER. I will put it accurately so that it will be understood. We were directed by Gov. Whitman to execute the commission on the letters rogatory received from the French Government in the Humbert case, which in substance required us to investigate all matters relating to the Paris Journal.

Senator REED. Will you kindly produce the letters rogatory?

Mr. BECKER. I have not them here.

Senator REED. Have you a translation of them?

Mr. BECKER. No; I did not bring them, but I can give you the exact substance, because it is on the cover of these cases. This is another one that was taken in the same matter. It is a deposition relating to Mr. Hearst. I had not referred to it before.

Senator REED. I simply want the date of the letters rogatory.

Mr. BECKER. They are dated February 26, 1918. In reply to your question as to what they contain, they request an examination into the charges against Pierre Lenoir, Guillaume Desouches, and Charles Humbert, which shows intelligence and commerce with the enemy, and against Charles Humbert of complicity in commerce with the enemy of the Republic of France. The rogatory commission was issued by Capt. Bouchardon in charge of reports to the third permanent Council of War in the military government of Paris. I want to be perfectly clear about it. At the time that certain affidavits were given out to the press, being Mr. Lewis's rejoinder to a challenge that emanated from Mr. Hearst, to which I made reference on my direct testimony, these same men were examined and their affidavits were taken in straight affidavit form, not entitled in the Humbert case. The substance was identical. Those were taken and were presented to the public through the medium of the press.

Senator REED. They were taken under and by virtue of the authority of this law, were they not?

Mr. BECKER. No, not at all.

Senator REED. I want to ask you if these witnesses were not summoned before you, and if their statements were not taken in writing, and if they were not sworn?

Mr. BECKER. Here was the way that was done, under and by virtue of the law I summoned the witnesses.

Senator REED. What law?

Mr. BECKER. Chapter 595 of the laws of 1917. Let me tell you the whole story. Are you willing?

Senator REED. No, I want to ask a few questions.

Mr. BECKER. I will just answer the questions that you ask. Early in the spring of 1918, practically all these witnesses were——

Senator REED. I do not want to be short with you. I did not ask you that. I asked you whether it is not a fact that these affidavits which you took were taken from witnesses that you caused to be summoned before you?

Mr. BECKER. They were taken as follows——

Senator REED. Just answer, can you, whether you summoned these witnesses to come before you?

Mr. BECKER. I am going to answer in my own way unless the committee prevents. The witnesses were summoned by virtue of chapter 595 of the laws of 1917. They were examined and a regular deposition taken for use by the French Government bearing upon the issue that has been discussed. At the same time I prepared an affidavit for them to sign that contained the substance of the depositions. They went before a notary public, and without any use of the powers of the act, they swore to that affidavit, and those affidavits, sworn to before a notary public, were the ones that were used for what I will frankly say was a political purpose.

Senator REED. Exactly. Now let us see. This law provided that you could appoint, or the attorney general could "appoint and employ and at pleasure remove such deputies, officers, and other persons as he deems necessary, determine their duties, and, with the approval of the governor, fix their compensation." Were there such appointments made?

Mr. BECKER. No. One has been made lately.

Senator REED. I do not speak about lately. Were they made at any time under and by virtue of this act?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that at the time these affidavits were taken no such appointment had ever been made, but I may be wrong about that.

Senator REED. None had been made before that?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. All right. How did you get these witnesses in before your office? How did you get them in there?

Mr. BECKER. I think one of the clerks in the New York bureau of the attorney general went and summoned them, but I am not sure. I know two of them came in without a summons.

Senator REED. You summoned them by virtue of this act?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. When they were present you swore them?

Mr. BECKER. I personally swore them and took their deposition.

Senator REED. And took their depositions, and while they were there in the room you wrote out the affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Same date, same room?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And then you swore them yourself to the affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. You had sworn them to the deposition yourself personally?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, I have that power.

Senator REED. Now why did you not swear them to the affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. Because it was not going to be for an official purpose. Consequently they went over to the Belmont Hotel and swore to them before a notary.

Senator REED. At the very moment when you took that deposition and that you swore these affidavits, and at the time you wrote out the affidavits, on the same date, same hour, at the same room, you had in mind that you were going to use the affidavits for a political purpose?

Mr. BECKER. Unquestionably.

Senator REED. And therefore because you were going to use them for a political purpose in your own campaign, and in the campaign of your superior, you had them make affidavit before some other notary public than yourself?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I have not followed that. It is rather long. Will the stenographer read it.

Senator REED. It is not half as long as some of your statements.

Mr. BECKER. I was delivering a lecture.

Senator REED. I was delivering a question.

(The question was read by the stenographer as follows:)

Senator REED. And therefore because you were going to use them for a political purpose in your own campaign, and in the campaign of your superior, you had them make affidavit before some other notary public than yourself?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir.

Senator REED. Why did you not take the affidavits yourself? You just a moment ago said you were going to use them for political purposes, and so you had the affidavits made before somebody else. Did you not just say that?

Mr. BECKER. I thought to use the powers of the act for a political purpose would have been grossly improper.

Senator REED. Did you not use the powers of the act to get these witnesses in and get this statement?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. And did you not take advantage of that to get the affidavit which you now say it would have been highly improper to use for a political purpose?

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that.

Senator REED. You said that it was improper to use the powers of the act for a political purpose?

Mr. BECKER. No, I did not.

Senator REED. Well, we will leave it to inference whether you did or not. Now let me ask you whether the last thing you did with these witnesses when you left the room was to serve them with a written notice that they must absolutely keep secret everything that had transpired?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir.

Senator REED. What kind of a notice did you give them. You have a printed notice. Will you please produce one of them?

Mr. BECKER. I never saw any such notice?

Senator REED. You never saw any such notice?

Mr. BECKER. Did you ever see any such notice? I have always told witnesses to keep quiet. I think in this case I did not.

Senator REED. Did you not give them a typewritten or printed notice or warning that they must keep it secret?

Mr. BECKER. I have not the slightest recollection of any such thing. and I am pretty sure I did not.

Senator REED. You are not positive?

Mr. BECKER. My memory at three months, even, is very often at fault. Can you produce a notice—one of those copies?

Senator REED. That is a question that will be answered later on.

Mr. BECKER. That might refresh my recollection. I have no recollection. I am not positive. I know positively that there never had been any printed notices prepared for any such purpose.

Senator REED. Do you understand that this statute was intended to be secret—for the purpose of keeping the facts that the witnesses gave secret? Was that the object of it—a secrecy statute?

Mr. BECKER. The secrecy is designed to prevent circumventing the success of investigations by improper and premature publicity.

Senator REED. Yes. You took this testimony for the French Government in the form of these depositions. You notified the witnesses that they must keep it secret, and you also at the same time took affidavits. You notified the witnesses that they must keep still, and then, while it is true that this secrecy was for the purpose of preventing premature publication, you and your superior, Mr. Lewis, gave all of these affidavits to the press, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. That is partly true.

Senator REED. Now just what part of it is not true?

Mr. BECKER. Well, to be strictly accurate, that I gave them to the press.

Senator REED. That you gave them? You gave them yourself?

Mr. BECKER. No, I say that part would be inaccurate.

Senator REED. Did you give some of them to the press?

Mr. BECKER. I did not give any of them.

Senator REED. Did you give some interviews to the press? Who did give them to the press?

Mr. BECKER. Why, it was done by Mr. Lewis in some form or other, whether individually or through somebody else, I do not know.

Senator REED. It was done through his political headquarters, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. I was not there, and I could not really tell you. At least, I do not think I was.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, you gave out some of these interviews, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not recall any now. It is possible. I would not hesitate to say.

Senator REED. No, I do not think you would. Have you depositions of these witnesses as well as affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. I have produced here only the depositions.

Senator REED. You have not produced the affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir. By "affidavits" I mean it in the literal sense, those that were taken before a notary public. All that I brought here, as I recollect, are the depositions taken in question and answer form, which are much more extensive than the affidavits.

Senator REED. You have not produced the affidavits. Did you not make reference to the affidavits here and read from them?

Mr. BECKER. No, I produced depositions in the Humbert case.

Senator REED. Are the affidavits in some form literal copies of the depositions? I have followed your testimony from these affidavits and I am surprised at your statement.

Mr. BECKER. I will see if I can find it. Things have gotten so mixed up now that it is a slow process to find things. I think the stenographer must have those. No, here they are. I think those are the ones that I used. Sometimes I took these depositions in narrative form, and sometimes in question and answer form. These are in question and answer form. I think the second set was taken in narrative form.

Senator REED. What do you mean by the narrative set?

Mr. BECKER. The ones that were taken and were never made public until I brought them here.

Senator STERLING. Just let me ask a question there. You do not mean by that the affidavit. You referred to depositions taken in two different forms.

Mr. BECKER. Let us be clear about that. There are four different sorts of things—well, I guess there are only three. In the first place there is a set of depositions taken for the French Government. Then we took in affidavit form before a notary public a set embodying the same matter

Senator WOLCOTT. But not in question and answer form.

Senator REED. Narrative form of the same matter?

Mr. BECKER. Very short.

Senator STERLING. Those are the affidavits you gave, or a part of which you gave, to the public.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and subsequently, long after that publication, we took some more testimony in the Humbert case, and my recollection is that was taken in narrative form.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were depositions, nevertheless.

Mr. BECKER. Depositions taken before me. I have power to swear witnesses, but not for any purpose except under the act.

Senator REED. I want to get the chronology of this thing. You say you took some depositions and then you took affidavits which embodied the substance, almost identical with the depositions except they were not in question and answer form, and then subsequent to that you took some more testimony in the Humbert case. When was it you took this last deposition in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. Let me see if I can not find it. It was at least, I should say, a couple of months after that previous affair, but I may be entirely wrong about that. It was afterward, anyway.

Senator REED. I was asking a question when I was interrupted. and I just want to close that incident. I asked you if it was not a fact that you yourself had given out statements containing the substance of a part of the matter contained in these affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember that I did. I think it was Mr. Lewis that did that, but it is entirely immaterial. I would have done it.

Senator REED. You gave them out and made charges, did you not, against Mr. Hearst, and you did that in the month of July, 1918. Do you remember that?

Mr. BECKER. If you will refresh my recollection perhaps, but I do not think so.

Senator REED. I will ask you if you did not stand for an interview in the New York Tribune, printed on the 31st day of July, 1918?

Mr. BECKER. What is the subject of it?

Senator REED. The headlines are "Bolo's letter named Hearst as 'my friend.' Becker Gives Out Note Written by Traitor Who Was Shot in France."

Mr. BECKER. Yes, I made that. I remember that now.

Senator REED. "Missive Sent to Madame Barrientos. Assistant Attorney General Tells How Trail of 'Pacha' Was Traced."

Mr. BECKER. I remember that.

Senator REED. I have read you the headlines. So that you remember that on July 31, 1918, you did give out this statement and did make this attack on Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. No. I gave out the Barrientos story at that time. That was part of it.

Senator REED. You gave it out. That was part of it. Did you make any attack on Hearst at that time?

Mr. BECKER. You can construe that as you like. That is a matter of inference.

Senator REED. Is it a matter of inference or is it a matter of plain fact?

Mr. BECKER. I gave out the Barrientos story and all there was to it, and the odds and ends. It is written up pretty hot by the Tribune, I remember.

Senator REED. You never repudiated it in any way, did you?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, if I went around repudiating interviews I would be pretty busy.

Senator REED. You took advantage of it, and you were active in it. You and your chief followed it up, and afterwards you took the affidavits and renewed the attack. Is not that the truth?

Mr. BECKER. These affidavits were taken on the 9th of August.

Senator REED. And this interview was July 31. Now I will read it to you to see whether it needs much deduction [reading]:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 31.

Alfred L. Becker, assistant to Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, who investigated Bolo Pasha's activities in this country for the French Government, and while so doing ran across the trail of William Randolph Hearst, yesterday made public the following statement:

"A side light on the activities of Bolo Pasha in America is revealed in his social attentions to Mme. Maria Barrientos, the famous Spanish soprano of the Metropolitan Opera.

"When Attorney General Lewis undertook the investigation of Bolo Pasha, at the request of the French Government, he sought to retrace every step taken by the French adventurer while in this country. It was soon discovered that Bolo met Mme. Barrientos in New York and had shown her various attentions.

"Accordingly, when Mme. Barrientos arrived on the steamship Antonio Lopez, on her return from Spain, January 18, last, she was greeted at quarantine by representatives of Attorney General Lewis. They requested the privilege of examining her private papers for the purpose of obtaining evidence of Bolo's activities. She cheerfully granted the permission sought and appeared later for examination before Deputy Attorney General Alfred L. Becker.

ATTENTIVE TO DIVA.

"When Bolo came to America, in February, 1916, he brought with him a letter of introduction to Mme. Barrientos from a mutual friend in Barcelona. On the day of his arrival, February 22, he at once forwarded the letter of introduction, accompanied by a magnificent bouquet of flowers, to the Metropolitan Opera House. In response Mme. Barrientos invited him to tea, where he met the wife of an American diplomat. One or two other meetings followed.

"Bolo's purpose in seeking the acquaintance of Mme. Barrientos appears to have been purely social. His attentions to her, consisting of flowers, professions of 'homage to the illustrious artist,' and invitations to dine, were not very well received. According to her testimony, her woman's intuition soon began to tell her he was not quite what he pretended to be. She says she found no reason to suspect he was guilty of any disloyalty to France. Knowing her to be warm-heartedly proally, he always professed like sentiments. She disliked him, however, and after the first few meetings she refused to see him.

HIS FRIEND HEARST.

"Bolo wrote Mme. Barrientos on the stationery of the Plaza Hotel an interesting letter, which, translated, reads as follows:

"THE PLAZA, NEW YORK,
"Thursday morning.

"DEAR MADAME: The address of the wife of my friend is Mrs. Millicent Hearst, 137 Riverside Drive. Do not fail to look me up after your voyage to Paris.

"I shall arrange for you the appearance of certain articles for your behalf, which will precede your arrival at Buenos Aires. While you would have no need of them, your immense talents placing you above all other voices heard to-day, still, being unable to do anything else that would be agreeable to you, I can only offer what is in my power, and I do so with all my heart.

"Permit me to place at your feet the homage of a great admiration.

BOLO PASHA.

"The irony of Bolo's offer to procure publicity for Mme. Barrientos in Buenos Aires lies in the fact that it was proved at the trial of Bolo that he married there a French singer named Mme. Soumaillies, and after a few weeks or months deserted her.

"At Bolo's trial she appeared to confront him and proved him a bigamist. Bolo's only answer was 'Ah, but it was such a small matter—and it was so long ago.'"

Mr. BECKER. May I interrupt there?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Down to that point it is word for word as I dictated it to my own stenographer, except the headlines and except the sub-heads. From that point it is the work of the Tribune.

Senator REED. From that point on it is the work of the newspaper man?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You seem to be pretty familiar with it, and yet you could not remember it.

Mr. BECKER. Well, it has brought it back to my recollection. Besides, I thought you were asking me a little while ago about these chauffeur affidavits. It seems that you refer to this Barrientos story. I would remember that at any time, and I may say that I think that is really a very accurate statement of the evidence in regard to the Hearst-Bolo-Barrientos incident.

Senator REED. What was your purpose in giving this out at this time? Was it to reflect on Madam Barrientos?

Mr. BECKER. It does not reflect on her in the least.

Senator REED. That was not your purpose, was it?

Mr. BECKER. I was giving it out because I thought it was an interesting item of news that the public would be glad to read.

Senator REED. You had no motive or incentive or thought that you were able by this means to couple the name of Hearst up with a man who had just been convicted or executed for treason? That was not in your innocent mind?

Mr. BECKER. I have regarded anything that tended to establish the facts in regard to Mr. Hearst's relations with the Germans as of much greater public interest than anything that merely concerns Madam Barrientos.

Senator REED. And your purpose in giving this publicity was for the purpose of establishing the fact, was it?

Mr. BECKER. It was not for any purpose of establishing any fact. It was because I deemed it an interesting news story, and I really think the most interesting feature in it is the reference to Mr. Hearst; and the reference to Madam Barrientos interests a good many people, too.

Senator REED. Let us see. You only gave it out as a news story. You did not have any political interest in it at all?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I have not been averse to a little publicity now and then for my own benefit—also Mr. Lewis's benefit.

Senator REED. You had a hot political campaign on at that time?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I was a candidate on that date, or had decided to be.

Senator REED. Were you not a candidate for the nomination on this date, running just as fast as you can run?

Mr. BECKER. I will not argue about it, but my recollection is that it was the 1st of August or the 2d of August, but I may be wrong.

Senator REED. If you were running on the 1st of August, did you have it in contemplation on the 31st of July?

Mr. BECKER. I could not tell you for sure. The publicity that was given out started a long time before that, and it kept running on through the campaign and has been going on since.

Senator REED. Let us be perfectly frank and maybe I can save reading you a very large amount of material. Is it not a fact that this issue had been made before this date, and that a square-toed issue had been made by which your chief, Mr. Lewis, was trying to defeat Gov. Whitman upon the claim that Gov. Whitman was backed by Hearst and that Hearst was so bad and so wicked a man that Gov. Whitman ought to be defeated, because of his association with Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. Subject to error of recollection, my recollection is that that interview between Hearst and Whitman at the St. Regis occurred after the 31st of July, but I may be wrong about that.

Senator REED. Let me see if I can refresh your recollection.

Senator KING. Let him complete his answer.

Mr. BECKER. I had completed it. There was a lot of what is now obsolescent political history, about that time.

Senator KING. Is it a fact that you attempted to prejudice—and I do not use the word improperly—the public in favor of Mr. Lewis and against Mr. Whitman by trying to associate Mr. Whitman's name with Mr. Hearst, and then Hearst with Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. I did not do that, but it was done.

Senator REED. It was done by your chief?

Mr. BECKER. It was done by the Lewis campaign committee, unquestionably. The political strategy was to tie Whitman up to Hearst on the theory that Hearst had been discredited with a large body of Republicans in the State. Let us talk frankly about politics as they are.

Senator REED. And as a part of that, you as the deputy attorney general of the State of New York, acting under the powers of the drastic statute which you say was intended only as a war-time measure, brought witnesses before you, compelled their testimony in these secret proceedings, and immediately gave the substance of their testimony to the public.

Mr. BECKER. No, that is not true at all. That is not a fair statement of the situation.

Senator REED. I am going to prove that it is true, and I am going to make you admit that it is true.

Mr. BECKER. Well, you will be a long time doing that.

Senator OVERMAN. Oh, prove it, Senator Reed, if you can, and do not argue with the witness.

Senator REED. Oh, I know how to run this thing, Senator. Just be patient with me.

Mr. BECKER. I have perfectly clear ideas about what I was doing at the time, ideas about governmental ethics and political ethics; and political ethics in New York, Senator, are just as good as they are in Missouri.

Senator REED. That is entirely possible. I am not challenging the political ethics of New York. I am just questioning your individual practices.

Mr. BECKER. All right. The great trouble with my individual practices is that I have been concerned in showing up Mr. Hearst. That is the serious part about what I have done.

Senator REED. The serious part about what you have done, my friend, lies far beyond that. We need not discuss that. The New York Tribune on October 4 carried a statement, and I want to ask you if it was not given out from Lewis's office. This is October 4, 1917, nearly a year before the incident we were just discussing. I read the headlines: "Bolo Pasha gives big dinner for Hearst, Results of investigation. Germany's master spy and publisher entertain each other in New York." Now, going on with the article:

"The records compiled by Lewis show that at the dinner given to William Randolph Hearst by Bolo Pasha there were also present Adolph Pavenstedt, a friend of Count von Bernstorff, and his directors of bomb plots, Capt. Boy Ed and Von Papen, Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Owen Johnson, and Jules Bois."

That was given out from your office?

Mr. BECKER. No; it was not.

Senator REED. How did this paper know what the records were in Lewis's office?

Mr. BECKER. I will tell you all about that, if you want to know, and it is a good chance to clear up that old story. Will you turn me loose on that? I dare you to, and I will be absolutely truthful about it.

Senator REED. I am glad to know that you are assuring us that you are going to be truthful.

Mr. BECKER. I mean that I am going to be safely truthful. I do not fear even making a mistake.

When the Bolo case was made public, as it was very fully, there was a prepared statement. It was done at the Murrayhill Hotel in New York, from a room of Mr. Lewis there, as I recall it. A lot of men who are present were there, I think, or some of them.

Senator REED. That was his political headquarters, was it?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no.

Senator REED. He did have political headquarters there?

Mr. BECKER. He had no political headquarters whatever. He had no contest at that time. He was not engaged in any political fight.

Senator REED. He was a candidate, was he not, on October 4, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. I think he was a nominee for attorney general, but there was no political headquarters, and these were not his political headquarters.

Senator REED. Very well; he was running for office, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. Sure.

Senator REED. At that time?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. All right. What were these rooms that these several men met in that were not political headquarters?

Mr. BECKER. A private bed room.

Senator REED. Who were these men? Were they politicians, or philanthropists, or what?

Mr. BECKER. Representatives of the press, and therefore they were both.

Senator REED. What was their business there, to be getting an interview at that time? Did it have anything to do with politics?

Mr. BECKER. No; they had been told to come in and get the Bolo story.

Senator REED. Exactly. So that Mr. Lewis called the representatives of the press, who are both politicians and philanthropists, into his room?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did he call them in their capacity as politicians, or in their capacity as philanthropists; do you know?

Mr. BECKER. As reporters.

Senator REED. All right. And Mr. Lewis, at that time, gave to the press a statement?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. That was rather brief.

Senator REED. You have the statement that he gave to them?

Mr. BECKER. I have not a copy of it.

Senator REED. I just read it to you, did I not?

Mr. BECKER. I have not the slightest recollection of it, except that it was a brief statement, that gave a very broad analysis of the situation.

Many of the papers at that time printed it in quotation marks, as being the official statement, and then went on with what, in music, we call a free fantasia, which means that it is not held to the strict form of musical construction, but——

Senator REED. Let us not get into music. Let us stick to the subject.

Mr. BECKER. This is all music to me.

Senator REED. It may be very amusing to you.

Mr. BECKER. "Music," I said, not "amusing."

Senator REED. I have no doubt that it is a very sweet morsel, and has been for some time, under your tongue.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, find the statement that was given out.

Mr. BECKER. I have not got that, as I say. If you want it you can find it in some of the papers——

Senator REED. I have read you one of them. I will read it again——

Mr. BECKER. Do not read it again, please. It is disgusting.

Senator REED. It is disgusting?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; because it is the result of such a bit of foolishness.

Senator REED. I do not understand either your answer or your manner. Do you mean to say that the statement I read you, and which professes to be a quotation, is foolish?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; it was never given out, and I am going to tell you, if you will let me, just how it happened.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. I have been looking for the report. I started to say that all the depositions that had been taken up to that time, and these two reports of Perley Morse & Co. that I hold in my hand, were at that time submitted to the inspection of the press.

Senator REED. All the depositions that had been taken in the Bolo case?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. One reporter, whose name I do not recall——

Senator REED. One moment. May I ask you, there: Had Bolo Pasha been tried at this time?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. This was evidence that you had taken in the Bolo Pasha case?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And before it had been heard in the case of Bolo Pasha you had given it out to the press of this country?

Mr. BECKER. Certainly; and I think it was a great public service, as opening the eyes of the people.

Senator REED. Although you have just said that the purpose of secrecy was in order that the evidence might not be disclosed until it was used at the trial.

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that at all.

Senator REED. Did you not say that in substance?

Mr. BECKER. Not in the slightest.

Senator REED. What was the object of secrecy?

Mr. BECKER. I think I can repeat my former statement, almost word for word: To prevent premature publicity, which might interfere with the success of an investigation.

Senator REED. Yes. Premature publicity in this country could not possibly occur, I suppose, the trial not having taken place over in France?

Mr. BECKER. The publicity was not premature. It was the publicity which was delayed, that should have been brought out many, many months before; but the facts were not known. It would have been very good for the country if they had been known.

Senator REED. You brought it out as quickly as you had it, so that your skirts are perfectly clear?

Mr. BECKER. I do not have to apologize for anything that was done in that respect.

Senator REED. I am not asking you to apologize; but I am asking you for the fact. Did you bring it out as soon as you got it, practically?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. All right.

Mr. BECKER. It was kept secret for about—after the first information was obtained it was kept secret about a month. During that time the French Ambassador was consulted, and the question of publicity discussed, and in the end the statement went over to France and Bolo Pasha was immediately arrested.

After he had been arrested and put away, then there was still a little delay, to gather in some additional essential testimony. I can not give you the exact time, but I do not think it was quite so long as a month. It may have been two weeks. Then, when everything was practically complete, it was made public.

Senator REED. So that you did take depositions, then, under this law, prior to October, 1917, and you have those depositions there, have you?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I have not told the entire story, but I am willing to pass it, if you wish.

Senator REED. I am not passing it. I am talking about the first depositions and I am asking you——

Mr. BECKER. The first deposition was taken October 3, 1917.

Senator REED. Yes; and it was given to the press, the substance of it, on October 4, 1917, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. That is the length of time you kept the depositions secret?

Mr. BECKER. No; not at all. Here is the date—September 21, and——

Senator REED. You just stated——

Mr. BECKER. September 21, 1917, is the date.

Senator REED. You just stated the first deposition was taken October 4, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. October 3, 1917.

Senator REED. October 3, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Let me get that clear before we pass it. Whose deposition was it?

Mr. BECKER. The cover will show, there. I think it was Pavenstedt's.

Senator REED. It was a deposition of Adolph Pavenstedt?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. No; the basis on which the arrest of Bolo was made was the accountant's report, the first report, of September 21, 1917.

Senator REED. I did not ask you about the basis——

Mr. BECKER. And that is the delay to which I referred, between September 21 and October 5—two weeks.

Senator REED. That is less than two weeks—12 days. All right; we do not care about that. That is immaterial.

Mr. BECKER. I think it is two weeks.

Senator REED. The very first deposition that you took was of the date of September 25. Whose deposition was that?

Mr. BECKER. No. The depositions were all closed up very suddenly. It was all done in one day, except some one that was taken a month or two later.

The important matter upon which Bolo was arrested, which was the conclusive evidence in the case, is contained in the accountant's report. It is the work of Perley Morse, and he deserves very great credit for it.

Senator REED. That is the document you hold in your hand, is it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Let us take this chronologically. I am sure it will be very interesting. You state, now, that Mr. Perley Morse examined the accounts of Bolo Pasha, and on the 25th day of September made a report?

Mr. BECKER. The 21st day of September.

Senator REED. On the 21st day of September he made a report?

Mr. BECKER. I would like, some time, to tell that story, that I have in mind——

Senator REED. You will get it.

Mr. BECKER. But it is getting delayed, and you might forget it.

Senator REED. And it was upon this testimony, secured by Perley Morse, chiefly, that Bolo Pasha was convicted?

Mr. BECKER. Arrested.

Senator REED. That he was arrested?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. It was also upon that he was chiefly convicted, was it not, as far as the evidence in this country is concerned?

Mr. BECKER. That is a matter of opinion.

Senator REED. All right, I will not ask you that, then.

Mr. BECKER. You can not estimate the varying effects of different elements of evidence. I think, myself, that the testimony of the witness Doyen, who was a very skillful and able French accountant, who took these banking records and put them into intelligible form in the form of testimony and spread them out before the court, was really the big evidence in the Bolo case; and then the Pavenstedt deposition, which I myself took, was characterized by some of the French newspapers as a crushing deposition. It had great effect, unquestionably, on the result.

Senator REED. So that, in your opinion now, three things were the chief matters in bringing about the conviction. One was the work of this American in running down the accounts; the second was the work of the French expert in arranging them; and the third was the Pavenstedt deposition which you took?

Mr. BECKER. The whole mass of depositions. They were not taken by me alone. They were taken by Robert C. Morris, Merton E. Lewis, and myself. We collaborated on them, and deserve almost equal credit, I should say.

Senator REED. I am not questioning anybody's personal credit; but it was the Pavenstedt deposition that was the principal thing that you mentioned, as in addition to the accounts, is that correct?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think that would be a fair statement.

Senator REED. Now, just a moment; so that we may get these dates fixed. We are beginning, now, with October 3, 1917, and it appears that that deposition of Pavenstedt was taken, according to the outside of these documents, October 3, 4, and 6, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And that he was recalled on October 11, 1917. Also that he was afterwards recalled on November 22, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Then you took, on October 3, the deposition of Ernest Charles Pignatelli?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And of Noureddin Vlora on November 8; of Hugo Schmidt on October 4; of Marie Louise Beraud on October 6; of Frederick W. Baumann on November 23; of John A. Darnell on January 12; of Howard R. Carlson on January 12; and of James R. Fallon on January 12, in 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. On October 3 you got the deposition of Pavenstedt. I want to ask you, now, if it is not a fact that there was given out on October 4, from your office, either by yourself or the attorney general or somebody acting for them, this statement—

Mr. BECKER. You mean about Boy-Ed?

Senator REED. About William Randolph Hearst.

Mr. BECKER. About Boy-Ed and von Papen being at the dinner? That is what I wanted to explain, and I can, if you wish.

Senator REED. All right, sir.

Mr. BECKER. In the accountant's report, as originally submitted—I must admit that I had not noticed, until this day, that it had been modified, but it appears to have been—there was a paragraph that merely represented rumor, I take it, which stated that a very notable dinner was given at Sherry's, one time, at which William Randolph Hearst, Bolo Pasha, and others were present; and in the original form—this may be given in some other place in the report, but I have missed it; but I remember distinctly that in the original form—of the accountant's report the names of von Papen and Boy-Ed were mentioned as being there; which, of course, was impossible.

Now, the statement that was given out contained no reference to Mr. Hearst whatever. He was not mentioned in it.

Senator REED. Did you give it out?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Did you hear it given out?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who gave it out?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis. I think I drafted it myself. In fact, I know I did. It was a typewritten statement of a couple of pages or something like that. Then the reporters began to ask questions, as they always do, and one of them, whose identity I do not recall, said, "What about Mr. Hearst in this matter?" or something of that sort; "What were his relations to Bolo?" Mr. Lewis said. "So far as I know, his relations were purely social. There is no proof of anything else." That is substantially the statement. At any rate, that is the substance of it. Then——

Senator REED. Now, had——

Mr. BECKER. Please do not interrupt me. I am not through.

Senator REED. I want to get that conversation complete. Are you going to pass from it?

Mr. BECKER. That was all that was said with reference to Mr. Hearst at that meeting with those reporters, in any way, shape, or manner. Then——

Senator REED. After that conversation——

Mr. BECKER. Then, lo and behold, in the morning papers, some of them, appeared the statement which some keen-eyed reporter had gotten out of this accountant's report, which was entirely erroneous, that Boy-Ed and von Papen were present.

I did not see the thing, did not know it was in the morning paper, at all; and a reporter came in to see me about noon, at the Murrayhill Hotel, where I was stopping, and he said, "How was my report this morning?" I think, or something of that sort. He may have been from the Tribune, or some other paper.

I wanted to jolly him along, and I said: "Fine! Fine work," or something of that sort.

The matter was not brought to my attention that the report contained the statement about Boy-Ed and von Papen being present, which could not be true. But that, apparently, was treated by somebody else as a warrant for the assumption that this statement, that had appeared in one of the papers to the effect that Boy-Ed and von Papen were there, was correct.

News of this reached Mr. Hearst—it had been played up to by his papers as a great anti-Hearst line—reached Mr. Hearst in California; and he gave out a statement to the effect that he never met Bolo but once, and that was at this dinner, and that it was purely a social affair; and he gave a list of the guests present, showing who was there.

That appeared in the Hearst papers. Then there ensued a long wrangle and controversy, and Mr. Hearst sought to bring down the Capitol at Albany and the Capitol at Washington on the head of poor Mr. Lewis. I got out from under, apparently, because I was not attacked, but Mr. Lewis was the man that got it. And, of course, when it comes to the use of billingsgate and balderdash there is nobody that can compare with the Hearst writers—it simply came down about Mr. Lewis's ears.

Finally there was a call upon Mr. Lewis by representatives of Mr. Hearst, at the Murrayhill Hotel. I think that the persons were Mr. O'Reilly, and, possibly, Mr. DeFord; but it is over a year ago, and my memory is a little at fault.

They demanded that Mr. Lewis should retract what he had stated; and he denied that he had ever said it. Then I forget just what did happen.

There was some misrepresentation, I remember distinctly, of what he said, that appeared in the Hearst papers. It was made to appear that he crawled. But as a precaution, fearing something of that sort, he called up one of the other papers that same evening and gave to it—I think it was the New York World—an accurate statement of just what had occurred between him and the Hearst representatives. So that the Hearst story the next morning as to this interview was given the lie by the World story as to what happened.

Senator REED. Now, let us see——

Mr. BECKER. If I had known that this was coming up, I could have refreshed my mind as to all these details.

Senator REED. The fact is——

Mr. BECKER. But what I have given you is correct as far as I can remember it.

Senator REED. The statement contained in the paper, that Mr. Hearst had a dinner and that Boy-Ed and von Papen were there, was a mistake, and was not correct. That is true?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. There is a story in newspaper row that it was due to the misplacing of a semicolon. Some of the reporters here can tell you about that.

I will say this, that one of the reporters, the man who started the story which incensed Mr. Hearst so much, and fortunately led him to putting himself on record that he met Bolo only once, that reporter came to us afterward and apologized to Mr. Lewis and to me for having got him into so much trouble in the matter.

Senator REED. That is, for having said wrongfully or untruthfully that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at the dinner.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. So that it is a fact, now, that this statement that was given to the press that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at the dinner, was incorrect?

Mr. BECKER. No such statement was given to the press.

Senator REED. The statement that the press printed?

Mr. BECKER. That was absolutely incorrect, and ridiculous on the face of it.

Senator REED. And the representatives of Mr. Hearst came and asked Mr. Lewis to correct that statement and say that these two men were not there. That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. No. They wanted more than that. They wanted considerably more than that. They wanted, practically, as I recall, an apology.

Senator REED. No; they wanted a statement, did they not?

Mr. BECKER. If you will look in the Morning World after the date when that interview occurred, you will see——

Senator REED. I will look at something else——

Mr. BECKER. It will give a precise statement as to what did occur, in the exact language that Mr. Lewis gave over the telephone, in my presence.

If you will look in the morning American of that same date, you will find nothing but a pack of lies about what occurred on that date.

Senator REED. Oh, yes——

Mr. BECKER. It is absolutely untruthful as to Mr. Lewis's position, from start to finish.

Senator REED. The point I am trying to get from you, while you are bandying with such familiar and easy grace the word "lie," is this, whether these representatives of Mr. Hearst asked Mr. Lewis to make a statement to the effect that it was not true that he had given out the charge that von Papen and Boy-Ed were there?

Mr. BECKER. That brings to mind what occurred. Mr. Lewis prepared——

Senator REED. Can you not answer that question "yes" or "no."

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis prepared such a statement and gave it to them. They never printed it in the American, because it stated the fact that Mr. Lewis was not responsible; but Mr. Lewis gave that statement to the World, and you will find that statement that he gave to the Hearst representative, which merely stated the truth; printed in the World the next morning. I am glad you spoke of it, because it brings it to mind.

Senator REED. Yes. But a moment ago you said that he refused to give them a statement, and that he called up another paper and cautioned the other paper that he had refused to give a statement, and in that way he had headed off the lie that was to be printed in the Hearst paper. Now, which of your two statements was correct?

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that. You will not find any such statement in the record, and——

Senator REED. We will let the record speak for itself.

Mr. BECKER. Now that my recollection is refreshed, you will find the statement that he did give printed in full in the World the next morning. I think there are some men here who can corroborate it right now, if you care to ask them. The trouble was, he would not give Mr. Hearst's representatives the kind of a statement that they wanted, which was something that would not be true.

Senator REED. If they asked him to do anything more than merely say that he had not given out a statement to the effect that Boy Ed and Von Papen were at this dinner?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, I can tell you just what they asked, now.

Senator REED. All right. What did they ask?

Mr. BECKER. They wanted a certificate of loyalty and 100 per cent Americanism for Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. And he refused to give that?

Mr. BECKER. He did. They wanted the privilege of writing it.

Senator REED. Did they have something written when they came there?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember that.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Reed, do you wish to go on further with your examination this afternoon? It is now 5 o'clock. Can you not resume in the morning?

Senator REED. It will be agreeable to me to suspend here until to-morrow morning.

Senator OVERMAN. Then, the committee will stand adjourned now until half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BECKER. Are there any papers you want me to produce, Senator?

Senator REED. Yes; I want you to produce your vouchers and accounts showing moneys that have been expended in procuring the evidence.

Mr. BECKER. They will not be produced, and I want to say now that I will not produce any of the confidential papers of our so-called Secret Service Department, nor will I produce or give any information in regard to the personnel of the investigators who have been working for the department.

Senator REED. I thought there would be some reluctance about producing those documents.

Mr. BECKER. There will be.

Senator REED. Perhaps the committee will have something to say about that.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and I think I know what the ruling of the committee on that point will be.

(Whereupon, at 5.05 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 21, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m. in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Present also: Senator Reed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I have the following letter from Mr. Samuel Untermyer, which I will read:

December 20, 1918.

Maj. E. LOWRY HUMES,

Subcommittee of Senate Judiciary Committee, Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the request contained in my letter of the 18th inst. to Senator Overman, will you be good enough to have instructions given Mr. Griffith L. Johnson, the official stenographer for the Committee, to have the minutes of my testimony, when transcribed, sent me for revision and correction before they are embodied in the record? This follows the ordinary method of these investigations and I have written to Mr. Johnson to confer with you on the subject and secure your permission.

Thanking you for your attention to this matter, believe me

Very truly yours,

SAM'L UNTERMYER.

Senator OVERMAN. I think there is no objection to that.

Maj. HUMES. Very well.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Reed, you may proceed.

Senator REED. Mr. Becker, did you find the letters rogatory that you referred to yesterday and could not lay your hand on at the time?

Mr. BECKER. I did not bring them to Washington from New York. I think a copy could be obtained, however, from the French Embassy, if you care to apply there.

Senator REED. Would you try to get that so that we could have them before the day is over? You seem to be in touch with the situation.

Mr. BECKER. It really is quite unnecessary, because I know just what it says.

Senator REED. Yes; but I would like to see it and see the dates.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, probably if you would phone to the Embassy and ask them to send them down, if they have a copy of them, they would do so, and that would save time.

Mr. BECKER. There have been several in the Humbert case.

Senator REED. And in the Bolo Pacha case also.

Maj. HUMES. I assume they would not want to send the originals.

Senator REED. If they send a copy, that is satisfactory.

Mr. BECKER. The Senator wants to see whether I have given the dates correctly. I will give you the dates so that you can ask for them intelligently. There have been several in the Bolo Pacha case, and the first one, under which the greater part of the testimony was taken——

Senator REED. Let us have the first one.

Mr. BECKER. June 15, 1917. There was a subsequent one which broadened the inquiry.

Senator REED. When was that?

Mr. BECKER. The 5th of October, 1917. In the Humbert case there have been two or three, but I think the one in question is dated February 26, 1918.

Senator REED. Will you not please give me the first in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. I am under the impression that is the first, but I could not be positive.

Senator REED. What is the date?

Mr. BECKER. February 26, 1918.

Senator REED. Is there another one in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. I think so, but I have no reference to it here. We have taken a great many depositions in the Humbert case at different times, but that is the one under which the matters relating to Mr. Hearst were taken.

Senator REED. You have no copies of those letters?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I did not bring any letters rogatory here.

Senator REED. We will wait and see if they can be produced. Did you have a considerable organization looking up the testimony in these matters relating to Bolo Pasha and Humbert?

Mr. BECKER. No, we have never had any organization whatever.

Senator REED. Did you have any individuals employed?

Mr. BECKER. From time to time, different individuals, yes.

Senator REED. Any detective agencies?

Mr. BECKER. I think not, on any action connected with the Bolo or Humbert cases. We have employed detective agencies at times, but I do not recall that they were ever employed on either of those cases.

Senator REED. When you speak of being employed on those cases, do you mean to cover the gathering of all of this evidence that you have produced here which you say you took pursuant to the New York statute and in the investigation of the Humbert and Bolo Pasha cases?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. You mean the matters relating to your client, Mr. Hearst?

Senator REED. You do not mean to say that Mr. Hearst is my client?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I beg your pardon.

Senator REED. And you do not need to beg my pardon. You meant to be merely insolent. You meant to be merely what you have been throughout this testimony.

Mr. BECKER. That was a mere slip of the tongue.

Senator REED. It was not a slip of the tongue. It was a deliberate statement, and your attempt to develop it in that way does not reflect credit on your veracity.

Senator OVERMAN. Oh well, Senator Reed——

Senator REED. I will not allow any man to say that to me when I am sitting here engaged in an official inquiry.

Senator OVERMAN. He says it was a slip of the tongue.

Senator REED. I do not take this kind of slip, and it is nothing to me if——

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I do not expect to be arrested.

Senator REED. If you want to know who my client is, I am interested in trying to develop some truth through a maze of statements that have been so manifestly unfair and distorted that it is hard to characterize them in parliamentary language.

Mr. BECKER. As to these particular depositions that affect Mr. Hearst, to which I assume you have reference——

Senator REED. I have not asked you a question.

Mr. BECKER. There was no intervention of any detective agency, I am positive.

Senator REED. Where are the vouchers that show the moneys that were paid out in these investigations?

Mr. BECKER. Do you mean by "these investigations," the ones that affected Mr. Hearst? Are you confining yourself to that?

Senator REED. Investigations in regard to Bolo Pasha and Humbert.

Mr. BECKER. I think they are all in Albany, without exception.

Senator REED. In whose custody?

Mr. BECKER. They have been filed with the governor.

Senator REED. Have you copies of them in your office?

Mr. BECKER. I imagine so. I have never paid much attention to the financial end.

Senator REED. Did you keep any books in regard to them?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who was it you sent out to find who had been visiting at Mr. Hearst's house?

Mr. BECKER. I decline to give any information in regard to the names of investigators who have been employed from time to time.

Senator REED. I submit to the committee that here are a lot of statements produced, from which this witness testified—statements of bell boys, statements of elevator boys and of hackmen, and the statement of an ex-convict. I submit that it is material to know who it was went to see these people, in order that it may be ascertained what influences were used to put words in their mouths.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I think Senator Reed is hardly justified in the statement that he has made in regard to putting words "in their mouths."

Senator REED. What I mean is whether there was any effort of that kind made. You have the right to know, and you ought to know, what influences, if any, were brought to bear upon witnesses by anybody.

Senator STERLING. Your question distinctly assumes that they put words into the mouths of witnesses.

Senator REED. I do not mean to assume that.

Senator STERLING. I do not think that is fair.

Senator REED. I do not mean to assume that. Whether or not any such thing was done is a question that is material, and I submit that the name of the man who was sent to get these people and talk with them and to bring them as witnesses ought to be produced.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, that examination is in the form of question and answer, and it has been produced here by the witness. The nature of the inquiry will determine whether or not the words were put in the mouth of the witness or whether the questions were fair questions propounded to the witness and resulted in that way—

Senator REED. Let me ask you for whom you appear here?

Maj. HUMES. I appear here by order of the Secretary of War to report to Senator Overman for duty.

Senator OVERMAN. At my request.

Senator REED. To represent whom?

Maj. HUMES. I represent no one except this committee, and I am here to obey the orders that I receive from this committee.

Senator REED. I wanted to know whether you represented the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. I hope we will get on without any irritation here.

Senator REED. If you do represent this committee, I want to know what kind of representation it is that would hesitate for a minute to consent to produce the name of the man who was sent out to get witnesses and to talk with witnesses. Are you interested in anything but the truth of this matter?

Maj. HUMES. I decline to dignify that inquiry with a reply. I am here to perform the duty that has been delegated to me by this committee, and I propose to perform it to the best of my ability. If my services are not satisfactory to the committee, I presume that the Secretary of War, at the request of the committee, will change the detail and relieve me from the detail. Personally, I can assure you that I would be very glad to be relieved of the duty. I am not here for pleasure, but I am here because it is my duty to obey orders.

Senator REED. I want to ask you, since you take this position, if you care to say that it is not perfectly proper—

Senator STERLING. Mr. Chairman—

Senator REED. Wait a minute—

Senator STERLING. Mr. Chairman, for one member of the committee I want to say that I think this is out of order. It is consuming time unnecessarily, and I do not think Senator Reed has any right to put Maj. Humes under cross-examination.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes is here at the request of the committee, and I hope you will desist from that, Senator. I do not think that is proper.

Senator REED. I undertake to say that as far as I am concerned here—and I have stated my position very clearly—I am a member of the Judiciary Committee that has to pass on the report that this subcommittee will make. I asked of the committee the privilege of cross-examining this witness. I have not any interest in this matter except to develop the truth of it, whatever it may be. As a part of that I wanted to ascertain who it was that was sent to hunt up these witnesses, whose testimony I intend a little later to analyze. That is a fact that I do not see how any man can object to producing. What is there about it that should not be done?

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that I have stated that Maj. Humes is a man who has been sent here at the request of the committee by the Secretary of War.

Senator REED. He rose to object to that question.

Senator OVERMAN. If he rises to object, then the committee would like to hear why there is any objection, because he represents the committee, and if there is any reasonable objection, we would like to hear it, because we are going to take this under consideration. If there is any reason why it should not be done, I do not see why you should cross-examine him.

Senator REED. The witness had not stated the reason. He was stating that there were certain things contained in depositions. I do not care to press this matter. I have nothing against Maj. Humes. I never saw him in my life until I came into this room, but it seemed to me a peculiar position to take.

Now, Mr. Becker, I want to ask, if I may go on, if you stand on your refusal to tell this committee and the Senate the name of the man or the names of the men that you sent out to gather up the witnesses whose affidavits and depositions you took, and that have been produced here, to which you referred, I think, as those that mention Mr. Heart's name?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You refuse that?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Why do you refuse it? What is there about this man that makes him——

Mr. BECKER. There is nothing about the man. Here is the point about it. This is a secret service work; and the whole idea of our act is that the names of the persons who operate shall not be known. That is a condition of successful secret service work everywhere. I was looking for a copy of the act. There is a specific reference to it.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it the policy of your administration in New York not to disclose these names?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely. It is the policy of the statute itself. It is read right into it.

Senator REED. Would you find it for me in the statute? I would be pleased to hand you a copy of the statute. Let me see the part of it that makes it your duty not to disclose the name of the man who goes out to get the names of the witnesses [handing paper to the witness].

Senator NELSON. That is the rule of the secret service here, I know. I tried to get information and they would not give it to me, even in an ordinary pardon case. They would not let me see the report of the United States attorney.

Senator REED. I have handed you a copy of the statute. Point out to me the matter to which you refer.

Mr. BECKER. I read from the statute, as follows:

All appointments made pursuant to this subdivision shall be immediately reported to the governor, and shall not be reported to any other State officer or department.

Of course that is merely a matter of state policy, but I think that holds in Washington the same as there.

Senator REED. Let us see whether there is not something else that is in that statute besides that. Let me read it to you [reading]:

Whenever in his judgment the public interest requires it, the attorney general may, with the approval of the governor, and when directed by the governor shall, inquire into matters concerning the public peace, public safety, and public justice. For such purpose he may, in his discretion, and without civil service examination, appoint and employ, and at pleasure remove, such deputies, officers, and other persons as he deems necessary, determine their duties, and with the approval of the governor, fix their compensation. All appointments made pursuant to this subdivision shall be immediately reported to the governor, and shall not be reported to any other State officer or department.

Then follows this:

Payments of salaries and compensation of officers and employees and the expenses of the inquiry shall be made out of funds provided by the legislature for such purposes, which shall be deposited in a bank or trust company in the names of the governor and the attorney general, payable only on the draft or check of the attorney general, countersigned by the governor, and such disbursements shall be subject to no audit except by the governor and the attorney general. The attorney general, his deputy, or other officer designated by him, is empowered to subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, examine them under oath before himself or a magistrate, and require the production of books which he deems relevant or material to the inquiry.

Then follows the language which states what shall be done with these reports:

Any officer participating in such inquiry and any person examined as a witness upon such inquiry who shall disclose to any person other than the governor or the attorney general the name of any witness examined or any information obtained upon such inquiry, except as directed by the governor or the attorney general, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Do you mean to say that the names of the men employed are any more sacred or confidential under this statute than the information gathered under the statute itself is confidential?

Mr. BECKER. That is a question of opinion. I think it is a little more, because there is a general public policy and a quasi privilege that attaches to investigations of that character. If the names of investigators could be wrested from those in charge, every such investigation could be defeated in a minute. Imagine how far you would get with a secret service investigation if somebody could get one of the investigators in before an investigating committee who happened to have an interest in defeating the purposes of the investigation, and compel such investigator to disclose the name of every man who was working for the secret service department. Immediately every such man would be a marked man. That is absurd. Just as soon as I was compelled to disclose the names of my investigators I would have to discharge them all and get a new set.

Senator REED. I do not care to argue that question with you. We will let it stand on the statute; but this much I say, that any honest man making an honest investigation, making an honest report after his report is made, does not need the protection of secrecy.

Mr. BECKER. That is all nonsense.

Senator REED. Particularly after the evidence has been given to the world, and given to the world in advance of the trial of the man in whose case it was gathered.

Mr. BECKER. I notice that the Hearst forces have been trying, for six months, to find out the name of the man who made that investigation; and they have not succeeded yet, which shows that we have a pretty good secret service.

Senator REED. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee direct the witness to answer the questions..

Senator OVERMAN. We shall have to have an executive session to determine that.

Senator STERLING. What is the question?

Senator REED. The question is who it was that was sent out to get these witnesses and to bring them in.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you repeat the question exactly, Senator Reed, so that we can have it before us, to pass upon?

Senator REED. I want the name or names of the person or persons who were sent out to secure the witnesses and to talk with the witnesses who were afterwards used in making the affidavits and the depositions which have been referred to here by the witness; and especially the name or names of the person or persons who were sent out to get the elevator men and employees, hack men and chauffeurs, whose testimony has been referred to.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask, for my information, if Mr. Becker has said that these various deponents have been talked with by some one from the Attorney General's office prior to the taking of the depositions.

Senator REED. He has not said. He has said that he will not talk about it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let him answer that question.

Mr. BECKER. How is that?

Senator WOLCOTT. Prior to the taking of the depositions, do you know whether or not these various deponents and affiants had been seen and talked with by some one on behalf of the Attorney General's office?

Mr. BECKER. I will have to answer that in two ways. As to the first lot whose depositions were taken, and to which particular reference has been made, I think that three of them—it may be four or it may be two, but I think it is three—made affidavits four or five months before they were called as witnesses, and those affidavits were in my possession.

The other two, I think, had not been talked to by anybody. They were simply subpoenaed. We got their names from the other three, you see; and they were subpoenaed, and came to the office and I examined them. Those that were subsequently called in had, in one or two cases of the three, been talked with before by, I think, officers of the Military Intelligence; because they were, as I recall, men in the service—in the Army.

Senator WOLCOTT. But not representatives of the Attorney General's office, of New York?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think so, at all. We simply got their names. If they were the same ones, and I think they were, they were in camps. One of them was brought from Atlanta, I think, or in that vicinity. My mind really is vague about it.

Senator WOLCOTT. With respect to some of these men whose affidavits you secured, they were interviewed by some one in the Attorney General's office prior to their making the affidavits—using “affidavits” in the technical term?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I had maybe two or three of them of the first lot, that I had had in my possession for three or four months—affidavits in the technical sense, signed by these men—which were in the handwriting of one of my investigators; so that it is quite clear that he must have interviewed them.

Senator REED. Just so that we may fix it; those affidavits that you had, in the handwriting of one of your investigators, were what affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. I cannot tell you now.

Senator REED. If I called the names to you, could you remember?

Mr. BECKER. I do not believe so. Maybe I could in one or two cases.

Senator REED. Were they these employees around the apartment that Mr. Hearst occupied?

Mr. BECKER. No; I think they were chauffeurs.

Senator REED. Chauffeurs?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and possibly, come to think of it, one by Gazzola. I am not sure of it. I really do not carry the details in mind very well.

Senator REED. Let me see if I can refresh your recollection on the name.

Mr. BECKER. If Gazzola was the man who first told us about the Duke de la Caw and the Duke de la Brew, then he was the one.

Senator WOLCOTT. The testimony is, however, that the affidavits and depositions were taken by you, or in your presence, and were entirely different papers from those affidavits that had been made at this period of two or three months before and gathered in by investigators?

Mr. BECKER. Those were merely rough affairs that formed the basis for my examination; that was all. I went into the matter in some detail, by question and answer, all of which was taken by a stenographer. Then I made up what I considered a proper digest of their actual testimony, which formed the so-called political affidavits.

Senator REED. So, now, we will take the case of Gazzola, whose affidavit, bearing date of the 10th of August, 1918, was printed. That affidavit bears the same date as his deposition, does it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is one I dictated myself.

Senator REED. Before you took his deposition or wrote the affidavit which I have just referred to, on August 10th, there had been taken an affidavit of Gazzola by somebody in your office?

Mr. BECKER. It was in the handwriting of one of my investigators, if Gazzola is the man I think he is.

Senator REED. Yes. Was it sworn to?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Do you know where it was taken?

Mr. BECKER. I would prefer to mention one of the others, of which I am much surer than I am of Gazzola.

Senator REED. Just let us take the other in a moment, and clear up this as we can.

I think I will not attempt to state as to Gazzola, because I do not carry it in mind.

Senator REED. You do not know?

Mr. BECKER. I have a much more distinct recollection as to one of the others.

Senator REED. What is the other?

Mr. BECKER. Have you got the list of names there?

Senator REED. I can call some of them. Here is Mr. Gazzola, who made an affidavit. I think I can hand you a paper here, that has got all of these.

Mr. BECKER. That does not give the order. Here it is. Here was a man named Morris Berkowitz. I believe I had an affidavit in the handwriting of one of my investigators that was sworn to before a notary public in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. Berkowitz was a chauffeur and his stand was around the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. I remember distinctly that I was informed that the notary or commissioner, whichever it was, before whom those affidavits were sworn to, was the notary of the Ritz-Carlton.

Senator REED. Morris Berkowitz was a chauffeur or a taxicab driver and he swore to his deposition before Bernard M. Berkowitz.

Mr. BECKER. Then I am wrong about that, you see, because Bernard M. Barkowitz was a notary public in the Murrayhill Hotel. Oh, that is the later one?

Senator REED. That is the one of the 9th of August.

Mr. BECKER. I am talking about an earlier affidavit.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. An earlier affidavit was sworn to before a notary public, whose name I have no recollection of, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

Senator REED. That affidavit was taken in the handwriting of one of your investigators?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And then turned over to you?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Was this an investigator employed under this law of New York?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Was he in the employ of the Federal Government?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. By whom was he employed?

Mr. BECKER. Let me explain what I mean by that. We have been a little in doubt about just what our act means. I think, myself, and have acted on the assumption, that the act means that there may be regular appointments of persons who are permanently in that bureau. There was no such appointment made until quite recently, three or four months ago. Nobody had a permanent job working under it, but we simply employed people from time to time, temporarily, who were not appointed in that sense. They were merely employed sometimes for a day or two.

Senator REED. Was this man who took this statement of Berkowitz employed under and by virtue of this act, either temporarily or—

Mr. BECKER. Temporarily; yes.

Senator REED. Temporarily?

Mr. BECKER. That was the point I was making.

Senator REED. Exactly. He went forth as your representative under this act to secure this affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely.

Senator REED. And in that capacity did secure it?

Mr. BECKER. He did a great deal of other work on the Bolo and Humbert cases, too.

Senator REED. In that capacity he secured this affidavit of Berkowitz?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. What other affidavits did he secure?

Mr. BECKER. That is the only one I care to be sure of. I think there were three—two others were chauffeurs, and possibly Gazzola.

Senator REED. You think Gazzola was the other one?

Mr. BECKER. I think Gazzola's was not taken. I think he merely interviewed Gazzola and reported to me what Gazzola had to say.

If you will wait until I find out when Gazzola went into the Army, I think I can tell you more definitely.

Yes; I do not think I had any affidavit of his. He was drafted on April 29, 1918.

Senator REED. You do not think you had any affidavit from him?

Mr. BECKER. From Gazzola.

Senator REED. But there is an affidavit of Gazzola's?

Mr. BECKER. I mean, taken at an earlier date; one of these preliminary affidavits or statements.

Senator REED. Did you get an affidavit from him after he went into the Army?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; apparently that is the only one that ever was taken.

Senator REED. I do not want to dwell on the thing unnecessarily, but I do not quite get the——

Mr. BECKER. The question in my mind was whether I had an affidavit taken or prepared by my investigator early in the spring. I have reached the conclusion that I probably did not. I can not be sure about any of these things, except that I remember that there were three affidavits in the handwriting of the investigator, taken some time early in the spring.

Senator REED. Let us go through them and see if we can not get this in just as brief a space as possible; Morris Berkowitz made an affidavit and gave a deposition on the 9th of August, 1918. It is your opinion that several months before that, five or six months. I believe you said, an affidavit had been taken by your investigator and brought to you from Mr. Berkowitz?

Mr. BECKER. That is the best of my recollection, but I am not positive.

Senator REED. Now we will go to the next one. Here is a man, Vittorio Franco, who said he was a chauffeur, who also made an affidavit on August 9th. Had he made a previous affidavit to your investigator?

Mr. BECKER. Perhaps. I am not sure.

Senator REED. Here is one named Bernard Schomaker, who says that he was the doorman at the apartment in which Mr. Hearst lived, and he made an affidavit before you on the 9th of August?

Mr. BECKER. No—yes, yes.

Senator REED. Did you have a previous affidavit from him, that had been secured by your investigator?

Mr. BECKER. No. We went up and grabbed him and brought him down without any warning. He was one of Hearst's employees at the time.

Senator REED. You grabbed him and brought him down without any warning?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And took his deposition on August 9th?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And gave it to the newspapers on August 11th?

Mr. BECKER. If that was the date.

Senator REED. Or the 12th; which was it?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember.

Senator REED. There was a political campaign going on then?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; also a challenge from Mr. Hearst to Mr. Lewis to show anything tending to connect him with Bolo Pasha.

Senator REED. Yes. And so, under the powers conferred upon you by the State of New York to investigate matters affecting the public peace and the public interests, and pretending to act or claiming to act in that capacity as an investigator for France, under letters rogatory that they had sent you——

Mr. BECKER. I hope the Hearst reporter is getting all of this very carefully.

Senator REED. Mr. Chairman, are you going to permit that sort of intolerable conduct from a witness?

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the questions, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. I apologize to the committee.

Senator REED (continuing). You proceeded to go up and grab the man, as you say, and take him down and take his testimony by force——

Mr. BECKER. Not by force.

Senator REED. That is, under the force of this statute—and then to give it to the newspapers, in a political campaign?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir.

Senator REED. Is not that exactly what you did?

Mr. BECKER. Not in the least.

Senator REED. Now, what did you not do of those things that I have said?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, well, I can not sort them out.

Senator REED. Oh.

Mr. BECKER. I did not do about 75 per cent, and I did do about 25 per cent.

Senator REED. Now, let us see what you did do. You were acting under the law of New York, were you not? That was the authority under which you grabbed this man?

Mr. BECKER. He was given a subpoena to appear forthwith.

Senator REED. You said you "grabbed him," did you not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, that is the way we get results in investigations of this kind.

Senator REED. Yes, certainly. That is the way you go about it to get results?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is the way Mr. Hearst's employee happened to tell the truth before he had been warned to tell something different.

Senator REED. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that comment is highly improper.

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the questions, Mr. Becker.

Senator REED. Of course, if we are going to have a controversy back and forth, I will take care of myself in my own way.

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the questions.

Senator REED. Under the law of New York you proceeded, when you went up and grabbed this witness—that is what you said, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I guess I should not have said “grabbed.” We served a subpoena upon him to appear forthwith.

Senator REED. And who went along and brought him down forthwith?

Mr. BECKER. I decline to state. As a matter of fact, I do not remember.

Senator REED. One of your investigators, acting under this law, served a subpoena upon him to come forthwith, and had a hack there and brought him down forthwith?

Mr. BECKER. I should not wonder. That is the way I like to have these things done.

Senator REED. Exactly. You do not really like to have a man have any chance to see a lawyer or to protect himself?

Mr. BECKER. Not a Hearst employee.

Senator REED. You just want to grab him and get him in there and do business with him quickly?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir. That is the way to get them, when you are dealing with that kind of a bunch.

Senator REED. Was this man one of a bad bunch—this witness?

Mr. BECKER. He was working for a bad bunch.

Senator REED. You think so?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You think that if a man happened to be working running an elevator in a great apartment house in which William Randolph Hearst happened to live—you think that such a man working for him would necessarily be a villain and a bad one so that you would have to handle him differently from any other witness?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, not the man. I am not casting any reflection on Mr. Hearst's employees, but rather the persons who would influence them as to what they should say and what they should not say.

Senator REED. Was this the kind of a man whose testimony would be accepted by you?

Mr. BECKER. Hearst's employees I do not care to characterize.

Senator REED. Was he the kind of a man you did not care to let anybody see or talk to and whose testimony you had to get instantly?

Mr. BECKER. I thought it was a very good measure to take, under the circumstances—a measure of precaution, let us call it.

Senator REED. All right. You said that about seventy-five per cent of my question was incorrect and about twenty-five per cent of it was correct. It is correct that when you got him down there you took his testimony and then immediately wrote out an affidavit and took that affidavit and swore him to it; that is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Well, yes; except that the affidavit was sworn to before some notary either in the Murrayhill Hotel or in an adjacent hotel.

Senator REED. You went into another room so as to break the chain? You call a witness in under the law and take his deposition under the law and make a transcript of it under the law, and then take him into another room and swear him to that deposition, and that is not under the law; that is your distinction, is it?

Mr. BECKER. No; the notary public happened to be downstairs.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. And after awhile he went out for his supper and then we had to go over to the Belmont Hotel to find one.

Senator REED. So that is the reason why you did not have it sworn to in your own room, because the notary public had gone home to his dinner?

Mr. BECKER. I don't know.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were not a notary public, yourself?

Mr. BECKER. I explained that yesterday.

Senator REED. You had power to administer an oath?

Mr. BECKER. Not to an affidavit.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were not a notary public, yourself?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. But you could administer oaths in these investigations?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. On that day you took this affidavit; and then you gave it to the newspapers along with a lot of other affidavits, either on the same day or within three days thereafter, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. Well, if that is right. I do not remember the time. It was within a short time thereafter.

Senator REED. Now, those were the points that were in my question, 75 per cent of which you said was inaccurate; and now you have testified that each item of that question is accurate.

Mr. BECKER. I do not agree with that. I think if the question is read, it will be shown——

Senator REED. I will not waste any time on that. Did you have the affidavit of Bernard Schomaker before the 9th of August?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is the one you just asked me about.

Senator REED. Yes; I beg your pardon. Did you have the affidavit of Charles J. Jerome?

Mr. BECKER. No; he was a convict.

Senator REED. He was a convict?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did you have his affidavit before August 9?

Mr. BECKER. I am trying to remember. I really can not tell you. I do not recall.

Senator REED. If you did have it, was it obtained by this same investigator from your office?

Mr. BECKER. I think there were two men who worked on this investigation. I would not be sure of that.

Senator REED. Who was the other one?

Mr. BECKER. I won't tell.

Senator REED. Samuel Cornfield, who says that he was a taxicab driver; did you have his affidavit before the 9th of August?

Mr. BECKER. I will just state that my best recollection is that he was one of the taxi drivers whose affidavits were taken by the notary in the Ritz-Carlton; but that is only an impression.

Senator REED. Did you have a previous affidavit—one previous to August 9?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is what I am talking about.

Senator REED. That is what you mean when you say “taken at the Ritz-Carlton”?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who was the notary in the Ritz-Carlton that swore these people?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember.

Senator REED. Could you not refresh your recollection or find out, so that you could tell the committee who the notary public in the Ritz-Carlton was who took the affidavits of these men?

Mr. BECKER. I think very likely; yes.

Senator REED. That would not be a secret, would it?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no. I have not anything here to refresh my recollection. I did not bring those things.

Senator REED. Was it Berkowitz?

Mr. BECKER. No. Bernard M. Berkowitz is a notary public and stenographer in the Murrayhill Hotel. He was no relation to Morris Berkowitz; they had never met before.

Senator REED. Here is an affidavit by Harry Block, dated August 9, 1918, in which he says that he is employed in the Brooklyn Navy Yard; that is, at the time this affidavit was given; that he was formerly employed by the Mason-Seaman Transportation Co. as a taxicab driver. Was his affidavit taken prior to August 9?

Mr. BECKER. Let me cover it in this way, if I may: My recollection is that there were four such affidavits; there was Berkowitz, Cornfield, Block, and Fredricksen, and I am pretty sure that the three that I had were three of those four, but just which three of those four it was I can not tell you.

Senator REED. Is it your best recollection that Block was one of them?

Mr. BECKER. Well, possibly. He is one of the four from which you can take the three.

Senator WOLCOTT. He is one of the possibilities?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; there are four candidates.

Senator REED. All of these affidavits which were taken prior to August 9 were taken by your investigator or your investigators in their capacity as investigators under this law of New York that has so often been referred to?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and they were paid for their services from the State's funds for having taken them.

Senator REED. Yes; and you had that done yourself, acting under your powers granted by this statute of New York?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, I want to ask you, first, to tell us the name of the notary public before whom these affidavits that were taken prior to August 9, were sworn to?

Mr. BECKER. I can not tell you any more than I have said.

Senator REED. Will you secure the name of that notary public and send it to this committee?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; I will be very glad to.

Senator REED. Is that notary public in the employ of your office?

Mr. BECKER. No; he was a notary public and cashier—as I understand; and this is hearsay; just what I was told; but I understand he was a notary public or cashier—or something of that sort, in the employ of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Co.

Senator REED. Now, I ask you to tell the committee the name of this investigator, or of either of the investigators, who secured these affidavits which you say were secured prior to August 9, and who you say talked with the witnesses.

Mr. BECKER. That I decline to state, on the ground of privilege.

Senator REED. I now ask for the ruling of the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Gentlemen, we will retire to the other room.

Senator REED. If the committee wishes to reserve the ruling on that, I will let it go until later, because I want to hasten this examination. Just let that stand in reserve.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Senator REED. Will you state to the committee the aggregate amount of money that was expended in securing these affidavits and these depositions which have been referred to here?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know, and never did, because I do not audit the accounts.

Senator REED. Do you sign the vouchers or O. K. them?

Mr. BECKER. No. I think I may possibly have signed a check to pay out some lump sum; but those are all signed up at Albany, and audited by the attorney general. I do not recall one thing; I recall that Vittorio Franco and I had quite an argument about that, and I can tell you about that, if you are interested.

Senator REED. I do not care anything about the details.

Mr. BECKER. I think he got as much as thirty or thirty-five dollars, and I can explain why. He sent me a bill for one day's services of a truck, and he opened my eyes. He was not a very intelligent man, apparently, but he had become the owner of a motor truck, and we undoubtedly prevented him from going out for the American Express Co. for one day with his motor truck, by having him up to make his deposition, which was very short and rather unimportant. He sent in a bill, I think it was for $35, and I think I paid him $30, because I verified from the American Express Co. that that was what he was actually earning with that truck each day.

Senator REED. Of course, a witness called before you was not entitled to anything more than the statutory fees, as a matter of law, was he?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know. I have always treated witnesses as being entitled to be made financially whole for what they actually lost.

Senator REED. Do you do that in court, or only when you summon them into your office?

Mr. BECKER. I do that in court, too.

Senator REED. In court?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; it is a very common practice in New York. Not in criminal cases. I do not mean that.

Senator REED. Oh! This was a criminal proceeding, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. In criminal cases a man receives fees, but they are not payable by me; they are payable, under our practice, by the county treasurer on a certificate. That is a different thing.

Senator REED. The fees paid a witness called into court are fixed by law, are they not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. And what are the fees in criminal cases, per day?

Mr. BECKER. The same as the legal fees fixed for civil cases.

Senator REED. Well, what are they?

Mr. BECKER. I forget what they are in New York. I am not really a New York practitioner. I know it is different from what it is up State. Up in the country I think they get 50 cents for a subpoena fee, and 50 cents for each day. Down in New York it is more.

Senator REED. It is not more than a couple of dollars, anyway, is it?

Mr. BECKER. It is something like that.

Senator REED. You say you made it a custom and a practice to pay witnesses you brought before you, for their loss of time, and that you did pay Vittorio Franco $30 for his one day?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; for his actual financial loss.

Senator REED. Did you pay the other witnesses that were brought in before you for their time, in this proceeding that we are discussing now?

Mr. BECKER. Some of them. Not the military ones. There were three of them, I think, in the service.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. And they were detailed by order of the Secretary of War to attend and give their testimony. Of course, I did not pay them anything, although I do think I did pay their traveling expenses.

Senator REED. But when they came in the first time and gave their depositions to your clerk or your representative, did they get paid for that?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know of any such time.

Senator REED. You said there were some depositions taken about five or six months before August 9?

Mr. BECKER. No. Affidavits that were written out and sworn to up at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, where the men were stationed.

Senator REED. Was that where Vittorio Franco got his $30 for attendance?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no. That was when we brought him down and kept him around pretty nearly all day.

Senator REED. My inquiry was, did you pay him for attending up at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel?

Mr. BECKER. I can say pretty surely that there was not a cent paid up there.

Senator REED. Are you sure of that?

Mr. BECKER. It certainly never came to my notice, and I do not believe any such sum was paid; but that is hearsay, necessarily.

Senator REED. Was anybody else paid besides Vittorio Franco?

Mr. BECKER. I can not pick them out.

Senator REED. Were there others paid?

Mr. BECKER. Nobody was paid anything.

Senator REED. You said he was paid.

Mr. BECKER. Not as compensation.

Senator REED. I am not talking about that. I am talking about whether they were paid money; not compensation. Were any of the rest of them paid?

Mr. BECKER. Undoubtedly.

Senator REED. How much?

Mr. BECKER. I can not tell you.

Senator REED. About how much?

Mr. BECKER. Well, we paid the traveling expenses of one of these soldiers. I can not tell you which one. He came from away down south somewhere, I think; but I may be all wrong about that.

Senator REED. The vouchers would show, would they not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I have no doubt there are signed vouchers for every cent.

Senator REED. You could find out by looking at the vouchers, could you not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think they are in the possession of the governor, though—the originals.

Senator REED. Well, you have copies, you say?

Mr. BECKER. Probably; I do not know. What I would consult would be my own check stubs, to see if I did not draw checks.

Senator REED. Will you tell this committee how much money you paid in the aggregate to all of these witnesses that have been referred to in this hearing, and how much you paid to each one of them?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think it would be proper for me to do that. I am willing to talk about it in a general way.

Senator REED. Why is it not proper to let the public know, and to let this committee know, and the Senate of the United States know, how much money passed between you or your representatives and these witnesses who testified?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know. I would be willing to trust to the judgment of the committee on that. If the committee thinks it is proper, I will go to Albany and hunt it up.

Senator REED. I ask for a ruling.

Senator OVERMAN. That will be reserved with the others.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. It would be a lot of trouble. If you asked me, I would probably state it much larger than it is, from memory.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you pay out any money more than was necessary to compensate them for their loss of time?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir. The only other money we paid was 25 cents, I think it was, to the notary public for each oath he took; and then, of course, we had to pay a stenographer for reporting the depositions; and I think we had to pay a taxi driver for bringing some witnesses down.

Senator REED. The only one you remember having compensated, as you stated to Senator Overman, was the gentleman who wanted $35 and who got $30 for the one day that he lost?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did he state to you that he had been promised that he would be made whole?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. He just shoved in a bill for $35, and you paid him $30?

Mr. BECKER. I can not remember the details, but I am under the impression that I told all the witnesses, after they had made depositions, that I would honor a bill that would make them financially whole, so that they would not lose any money by reason of having attended to give their testimony, which practice the State of New York has approved in many other cases.

Senator REED. The State of New York paid this $30 to Vittorio Franco for the time he lost in making this deposition?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Which you gave out immediately in a political campaign—

Mr. BECKER. No; that is not true.

Senator REED (continuing). To a newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is not true.

Senator REED. That is not true?

Mr. BECKER. No. These depositions were taken in perfectly good faith, along with a great many others concerning Mr. Hearst, which I have not made public, in connection with the Humbert case, for a perfectly good purpose. The original investigation back in March, when there was no controversy pending with Mr. Hearst, and no political campaign, and no prospect of any, was for a perfectly legitimate purpose. That was back about in March.

Senator REED. March of what year?

Mr. BECKER. March, 1918.

Senator REED. There was no political controversy with Hearst in March, 1918?

Mr. BECKER. None whatever.

Senator REED. Let us see if there was not. In 1917 Mr. Lewis was running in an election, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Mr. Mitchel was running also in that election?

Mr. BECKER. Well, Mr. Lewis had nothing to do with that, whatever. He was a resident of Rochester; and if you knew the truth as to what his real attitude was about the Mitchel campaign, you would be surprised.

Senator REED. Never mind that. I do not care anything about your comments. Just answer the question.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Hearst charged at the time that Mr. Lewis was trying to help Mitchel, which, if you know the truth, was perfectly absurd. Mr. Lewis took no part in the New York City campaign and had no interest in it.

Senator REED. And you did not take any, did you?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely none.

Senator REED. Not a bit?

Mr. BECKER. I vote in Buffalo.

Senator REED. There was a campaign for Mitchel in 1917, was there not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And in that same campaign Mr. Lewis was running, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. Not in the same campaign; the same election.

Senator REED. Well, do not let us stop to haggle about that.

Mr. BECKER. One campaign was Mitchel's and the other Lewis's.

Senator REED. The campaign Mr. Mitchel was making was a campaign in which he had sought the Republican nomination, and then ran as a coalition candidate?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Mitchel?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. He was the anti-Hylan candidate?

Mr. BECKER. He ran as an independent; not the nominee of any party.

Senator REED. Exactly; and he was backed by the Republican organization of practically all of Greater New York, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Well, I would not say that; no. There was a great division of opinion.

Senator REED. He was backed by everything except Brooklyn, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Let me see if I can not give it to you accurately.

Mr. BECKER. I admire your knowledge of New York politics.

Senator REED. You may admire my knowledge about a good many things before you get through.

Mr. BECKER. As a gentleman from Missouri, it shows that you did hold somebody's brief.

Senator REED. Do you mean, sir, to insinuate that I hold somebody's brief?

Mr. BECKER. Not for Mr. Hearst, but from Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. I submit to the committee that if this witness persists in such outrageous insinuations, I will take my own way to stop it.

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the question, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. I apologize to the committee. Being under attack, one can not help that, occasionally.

Senator REED. I am going to ask you about this campaign now, because I want to get it straight.

Senator WOLCOTT. While you are looking among your papers, Senator Reed, I want to ask Mr. Becker a question. Referring to these affidavits that were taken, I want to ask a question which I think will cover ground that is really material, and I want you, Mr. Becker, to understand that in asking this question, no unfavorable comment upon you is implied by it. Was anything paid to anybody by way of inducement to get them to make these affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely nothing. You know, Senator, when I was asked the question as to the original set taken up at the Ritz-Carlton, I necessarily had to state that I relied only on information and belief. I do not personally know what happened up there, but I have the utmost confidence in the man who made the investigation; and I know there were no funds paid out at that time that I had anything to do with.

Senator WOLCOTT. And with regard to the affidavits with the taking of which you did have to do, you speak of your own personal knowledge?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; as to them I know personally that the only funds paid out were simply to make those people financially whole. I want to be perfectly frank about it, although I think it would be better policy to maintain the privilege of silence with reference to secret-service activities; but I have taken the chance of discussing it frankly, and I hope I shall not be criticized when I get back home.

Senator REED. We were talking a moment ago about the backing that Mr. Mitchel had. He was running as an independent, was he not, with the support of the Republican organization in New York County? Did he have that support?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And with its support in Kings and in Richmond County; is that right?

Mr. BECKER. Well, you evidently know more about it than I do. I do not wish to discuss the Mitchel campaign. I took no interest in it. I am not a resident of New York City. I had very little sympathy with it, and I could not state accurately to-day just what the political line-up was. I know, of course, that Mr. Bennet received a very large support in Brooklyn. I know there were dissensions everywhere, and that a good many people who were nominally for Mr. Mitchel proceeded to cut his throat afterward, so to speak.

Senator REED. I did not ask you that. I just asked whether these organizations were supporting him. If you know, say so; and if not, we will pass on.

Mr. BECKER. I guess you had better pass on.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, the issue was being made in that campaign that Hylan was pro-German; that Hearst was pro-German, and the battlecry in that campaign was "Hylan, Hearst, and Hohenzollern."

Mr. BECKER. Oh, they pulled some stuff like that; yes.

Senator REED. That was the regular battlecry of the Mitchel people in that campaign; is not that true?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I do not like to speak about a man who is dead, but I thought at the time that Mr. Mitchel, or rather his campaign managers, had conducted a most unwise and unskillful campaign.

Senator REED. I am just asking you whether that was the cry that was being made. You remember that, do you not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; I remember something about it.

Senator REED. As far west as I live, I remember it.

Mr. BECKER. What was it?

Senator REED. "Hylan, Hearst, and Hohenzollern."

Mr. BECKER. Yes, and I remember "Bolo, Bernstorff, and Booze." too.

Senator REED. And in which campaign was that raised?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I do not know.

Senator REED. I wish you would please give me those documents that you had the other day, in which there were a large number of depositions, including Pavenstedt's.

Mr. BECKER. It is right here [handing papers to Senator Reed].

Senator REED. Bearing in mind, now, that the Mitchel campaign was on, that Mitchel was backed by nearly all of the Republican organization, and that he was supposed to be strongly anti-Hylan, who was supported by Hearst, and that the cry was, "Hylan, Hearst, and Hohenzollern," I want to ask you if you did not take this deposition of Mr. Pavenstedt's on October 3, 1917, when that campaign was in full blast?

Mr. BECKER. I know this——

Senator REED. Just answer my question: Did you take it when this campaign was in full blast, on October 3, 1917? I will put it another way——

Mr. BECKER. I imagine so, although I was so busy on the Bolo case, I forgot there was a political campaign, and almost lost my vote in Buffalo.

Senator REED. And was the substance, or a part, of that deposition, given out to the newspapers on the next day?

Mr. BECKER. The whole deposition was turned over to the newspapers, and they did with it whatever their sweet will wished.

Senator REED. Exactly.

Mr. BECKER. But I do know this, that the Bolo case excited an interest that entirely eclipsed the political campaign for a couple of days and, in my judgment, that revelation in the Bolo case did more to stir up the American people against German propaganda, and to make them understand what it was, than any other one exposé that had been made up to that time, and that was the reason why it was given out, because the American people wanted to know. And I can tell you this, too——

Senator REED. I wish you would answer some of my questions.

Mr. BECKER. I am going to make a speech now.

Senator REED. All right; make it.

Mr. BECKER. Before Bolo's arrest and after it, the papers were full of rumors about the Bolo case; it was exciting great interest, and the true facts were not known. The publicity of that case was something that grew like flowers in the spring.

Senator REED. Yes, and it had such a tremendous effect in New York that Hylan was elected, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. If it was put out as a political measure to defeat Hylan, that shows simply the inability to grasp the situation and real interests of the country at that time.

Senator REED. Was it put out for that purpose?

Mr. BECKER. It was not put out for any political purpose.

Senator REED. Let us see. Who gave it out? Did you?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis and I together.

Senator REED. Yes, and the New York Tribune the next morning contained this statement, did it not?——

Mr. BECKER. I do not know.

Senator REED (reading): "Bolo Pasha gives big dinner for Hearst. Results of investigation. Germany's master spy and publisher entertain each other in New York. The records compiled by Mr. Lewis show that at the dinner given to William Randolph Hearst by Bolo Pasha there were also present Adolph Pavenstedt, a friend of Count von Bernstorff, and his directors of bomb plots, Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen, Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Owen Johnson, and Jules Bois." Did your office ever correct that statement to the papers?

Mr. BECKER. We gave Mr. Hearst a statement correcting it, which he refused to print. Mr. Hearst threatened to sue Mr. Lewis for libel, and said he was going to do it, but he has never done it.

Senator REED. Oh, well, there is time enough for that. I do not know what he is going to do to Mr. Lewis, or anything about it. It makes no difference to me.

Mr. BECKER. That threat has been standing and has been challenged now for over a year, and no libel suit is yet forthcoming.

Senator REED. I asked you the question whether or not Mr. Lewis, or yourself, ever corrected that statement?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis corrected it.

Senator REED. Did he give a statement to the papers that Boy-E was not there?

Mr. BECKER. I think so.

Senator REED. When did he give it to them?

Mr. BECKER. I can not tell you.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, now, there were at this dinner some other people who are not named in this article at all, were there not?

Senator NELSON. Mr. Reed, I would like to ask a question, for my own satisfaction. I understood you last night to say, Mr. Becker, that a corrected statement was made which was published in The World, and that Hearst got a copy of it, or his paper did, but did not publish it. Did you not say that last night?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, the statement was given to Mr. Hearst's representatives, and they carried it away with them.

Senator NELSON. And did you not further say last night that that statement was published in The World?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis took the precaution to give it to The World, so that it would appear in The World the next morning, but it did not appear in the Hearst papers.

Senator REED. Why did he take that precaution?

Mr. BECKER. Because he felt pretty sure that the Hearst papers would not publish it; and I will tell you precisely why, if you care to hear it.

Senator REED. Well, we will get the article: I will send for the New York World. Was there another distinguished newspaper man at this dinner, whose name was not mentioned in this article?

Mr. BECKER. I think it would be too bad to name the persons who were there. Inferences might be drawn from that. It might be assumed that I was accusing them of German propaganda. We do not like to mention people here.

Senator REED. Nobody would accuse them, except some very suspicious gentleman.

Senator WOLCOTT. The list of attendants at that dinner is in the record. Some other witness gave it to us.

Senator REED. I want to get it myself, with your kind permission.

Senator WOLCOTT. I say that for Mr. Becker's information.

Senator NELSON. I have a distinct recollection of a list of those who attended that dinner being given in evidence here.

Senator REED. I think so; and so far as I am concerned, I say that no man with a normal mind, it seems to me, would cast any aspersion upon this distinguished newspaper man—whose name has left me for a moment—because he happened to be at that dinner.

Mr. BECKER. I think it would be a wild inference.

Senator REED. I think so, but I wanted to know why his name was left out.

Mr. BECKER. I think I read it in the record myself day before yesterday, through the Bertelli deposition. It was Mr. Van Anda you refer to.

Senator REED. Of what newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. Of the New York Times, and he was invited there by Bertelli; and another man who was there was Mr. Julian Gerard, and Mrs. Gerard and Mrs. Van Anda were there, and several other ladies and gentlemen of eminent respectability. I am inclined to think Mr. Gary was there. At any rate, he did attend a theater party later with Mr. Hearst and Bolo. There is no significance in that dinner whatever, except camouflage.

Senator REED. I did not ask you for your opinion about it, I am just asking you who were there.

Mr. BECKER. Well, at the time this was given out, I had only very slight information about who were present.

Senator REED. But the information was given out, and you said yesterday that when it was given out, it contained the names of Boy-Ed and von Papen.

Mr. BECKER. I found that out afterwards. I did not know it then. If it had been drawn to my attention then, I should have very readily said that it was not correct.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that a correct statement of your testimony of yesterday?

Mr. BECKER. It made no reference to the dinner whatever.

Senator WOLCOTT (continuing). That it did not contain the names of these two Germans?

Mr. BECKER. It made no reference to Mr. Hearst.

Senator WOLCOTT (continuing). But that some newspaper reporter stuck them in on the information he got?

Senator REED. Oh, no; you are wrong about that.

Mr. BECKER. The accountant's report contained a collection of bits of information which he had gathered. It did contain somewhere there a suggestion that tended to connect Boy-Ed and von Papen with that dinner. That had not reached our attention at that time, and we turned over all our papers—the depositions, reports, and everything else—to a reporter; and some reporter spotted that and proceeded to play up to it in his article. That is what happened. It was unlucky. I am very sorry it happened.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was that statement which appeared in the New York Tribune the next morning written by you or by Mr. Lewis?

Mr. BECKER. It was not written by us or ever submitted to either of us, and we were never consulted about it.

Senator WOLCOTT. So this statement in the New York Tribune was not given out then?

Mr. BECKER. Not in any way.

Senator REED. You gave out a statement of a witness, and that statement of that witness did contain the names of Boy-Ed and of von Papen; that is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think so.

Senator REED. What did you mean by saying that it was very unfortunate? Just explain that again.

Mr. BECKER. The matter is perfectly plain. We had a mass of documents. We had those depositions that you see there, except they were all in separate pieces, and we had this accountant's report [exhibiting paper].

Senator STERLING. And it was in the accountant's report, if I understood you correctly awhile ago, that some reference was made to Boy-Ed and von Papen?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And you handed all of those to the reporter?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Exactly.

Mr. BECKER. And we also gave the reporters a typewritten statement which did not mention Mr. Hearst.

Senator STERLING. Had you noticed this reference to von Papen and Boy-Ed in the report?

Mr. BECKER. I had not.

Senator REED. It was published in certain of the New York newspapers under glaring headlines?

Mr. BECKER. Undoubtedly.

Senator REED. And the reporter for the Tribune, I believe, came to you and asked you how you liked his report?

Mr. BECKER. It must have been. I do not know. I did not know the reporter. I did not know what paper he was on.

Senator REED. And you said "First rate," and jollied him along as you said yesterday?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And there were some representatives of Mr. Hearst who called on you and asked you or Mr. Lewis to sign a statement. Were you present when they called on Mr. Lewis?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; all throughout the interview.

Senator REED. You were there throughout that interview?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did Mr. Lewis at that time say that he was willing to make a statement that von Papen and this other man, Boy-Ed, had not been there.

Mr. BECKER. He said that he was willing to make the statement that he did make.

Senator REED. But that is the only statement he did make, and you say that is printed in The World.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. There was a long discussion about it. The Boy-Ed and von Papen matter was discussed, and Mr. Lewis, as I distinctly recall, denied that he had had anything to do with that being given to the press, although they charged him with it. Then they wanted him to give a certificate of Mr. Hearst's hundred per cent Americanism. In other words, they wanted him to put himself on record practically that there was no evidence and never could be any evidence of Mr. Hearst's disloyalty, and to practically certify that Mr. Hearst was loyal. He said, "I will not do that, but I will give you this statement," which he then dictated. That statement was printed in The World the next morning, and if it had not been for the fact that Hearst had taken in advance the position that he had been slandered for political purposes by Mr. Lewis, I think he would have been entirely satisfied with that statement; but the trouble was that that statement put the article in the attitude of an accident, and not a deliberate act, and that did not satisfy him; so he printed a garbled account of the interview the next morning, the substance of which was that Mr. Lewis had crawled and withdrawn his unjustificharges, which was an absolute fabrication, because it did not represent in the least fairly what had occurred.

Senator REED. Suppose you just answer a few questions. You do not now claim that it was any reflection upon any of these people who went to this dinner; that they happened to be there with Bolo Pasha, do you?

Mr. BECKER. The only persons upon whom it was a reflection were Pavenstedt and, possibly, Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. Possibly?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Of course, with your feeling toward Mr. Hearst, you are not willing to exonerate him of any blame in that case, although you are willing to exonerate the editor of another great paper and Mr. and Mrs. Gerard and these other people who were there.

Mr. BECKER. The indignation that Mr. Hearst showed after that was so all out of proportion to anything that the facts seemed to warrant, that it, for the first time, suggested to my mind that maybe there was something wrong there.

Senator REED. Right then and there was born in your mind, because a man got mad when he had been attacked, and it was intimated that he was consorting with German agents, and the cry was raised that he was in allegiance to the Hohenzollerns—the fact that he got mad, under those circumstances, aroused in your virtuous soul—the suspicion that there must be something wrong about it?

Senator STERLING. Mr. Chairman —

Mr. BECKER. I admit that I have a virtuous soul that does not cause me any ills at all.

Senator REED. Certainly. That is a modesty that quite becomes you.

Mr. BECKER. Let me answer the question, if I may. I think it calls for an explanation: That, coupled with the fact that Mr. Hearst lied about the number of times he had met Bolo Pasha, and said he had only met him once, when the record of the testimony of his own employee, Bertelli, showed there were at least three meetings.

Senator REED. You have no hesitancy in saying that Mr. Hearst deliberately lied about that?

Mr. BECKER. Well, let us say that he said something that was untrue; because to characterize it as a lie has the effect of characterizing the intent, and it will be entirely sufficient to say that he gave out a statement that was untrue.

Senator REED. Even in this short examination you have found it necessary to refresh your recollection from books and papers. Where was Mr. Hearst when he made this “lying” statement?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think Mr. Hearst needed to refresh his recollection about Bolo Pasha very much.

Senator REED. Where was Mr. Hearst when he gave out this “lying” statement? Where was he at that time?

Mr. BECKER. The untrue statement?

Senator REED. Where was he?

Mr. BECKER. Out in California.

Senator REED. And there was a telegram sent out in which he said that he had seen Bolo Pasha but once, to his recollection?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember anything about "to his recollection," at any time. I think it was pretty positive.

Senator REED. Well, we will see about that. That statement was printed, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; and Mr. Lewis was threatened with a libel suit, too.

Senator REED. I want to proceed to the next step, to see whether you were using these documents for political purposes or not.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me interject a question there, will you, Senator Reed?

Senator REED. Certainly.

Senator WOLCOTT. You said a moment ago, Mr. Becker, that Mr. Hearst's violent indignation at this discovery or this disclosure was what caused your suspicion against him?

Mr. BECKER. That was one thing.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you not think that he had a right to be indignant, not at the mere fact of his discovery at a dinner with Bolo Pasha, but that the thing had been so published as to make it appear that he was in league with the Germans; and that, of course if untrue, would have very justly excited his indignation?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think a certain amount of indignation was justified. I think that if he had brought out a 6-inch gun, it would have been not very significant; but to bring out a Big Bertha and fire it at Mr. Lewis and everybody concerned, as he did, seemed to me to indicate an excess that perhaps had some significance; but that is merely a revelation—a suggestion of the impression that was made; that is all. I do not mean to say that it is anything safe to go upon, at all. I am just giving you the impression that I had at the time.

Senator REED. We have been all over the question——

Senator NELSON. I suppose we are entitled to a recess on Saturday afternoon, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. I was thinking I wanted to take that up with the committee. We dislike to make Mr. Becker come back.

Senator REED. I hope you will run on.

Mr. BECKER. Can we not finish up by 1 o'clock, so that I can get home? I have many pressing things to do.

Senator REED. We can get along a great distance in an hour, if you will just kindly answer questions, without comments.

Mr. BECKER. All right. I will promise.

Senator REED. I will try to do that.

Mr. BECKER. If you will abstain from comments in the questions. I will abstain from comments in the answers.

Senator REED. I think so much of you by this time that I am willing even to conform to your suggestions in asking my questions.

Mr. BECKER. I knew we would be friends before we got through.

Senator REED. After having had these affidavits once, of these witnesses, taken five or six months before August, 1918, what was the object in taking them the second time—on the 9th day of August, 1918? Did they need any revision?

Mr. BECKER. They were not in shape to send to the French Government.

Senator REED. I am speaking of affidavits, now—not depositions. Why did you take the affidavits the second time, when you already had them once?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I wanted my own kind, drafted in my language, to put the matter with absolute accuracy, just as the depositions warranted. I have the depositions here, and you can compare them with the affidavits, and see how accurate they are.

Senator REED. You followed the depositions absolutely?

Mr. BECKER. As accurately as I knew how.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, these depositions were taken on the 9th, 10th and 11th of August?

Mr. BECKER. Possibly.

Senator REED. I want to read you a statement in an interview by Mr. Lewis, which was printed in the New York Tribune, and see if you agree with this.

Mr. BECKER. What is the date of it?

Senator REED. On the 4th day of August, 1918. [Reading:]

Concerning reports that he would complete the anti-Whitman ticket, the attorney general said: "I am not making any ticket. So far as I know, the only man who is to run on my anti-Whitman ticket is Alfred L. Becker, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for attorney general."

I am reading that to you, and I ask you, now, if you and Mr. Lewis were not running together, on substantially the same ticket? You said, yesterday, that there were no real tickets; but I mean on the same slate, the same arrangement, the same organization?

Mr. BECKER. We were such good friends, that we had to be together.

Senator REED. Yes. In the same statement, which was given out by Mr. Lewis, he made this statement, did he not? I am going to read this, with the permission of the committee, because I think it will absolutely unfold this whole situation. [Reading:]

Lewis Tells About Hearst in Bolo Exposé.

Senator NELSON. In what paper is that?

Senator REED. It is from an article in the New York Tribune, August 4, 1918.

Refused to Sign 'Clean Bill of Health' for the Publisher. Agent of Editor Offensive, he says. Attorney General Asserts Whitman Had No Part in Spy Inquiry.

Senator STERLING. Those are the headlines.

Senator REED. Yes.

By the way, Mr. Becker, on yesterday you said the man who was responsible for these inquiries was the governor, because he had signed papers; but, as a matter of fact, did he know anything about what was in the papers?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think that is quite a fair question.

Senator REED. Do you undertake to say that the governor is in any way responsible for the character of the investigation you made?

Mr. BECKER. No. That is entirely up to the attorney general, All that he did was to direct that the French Government's request be complied with.

Senator REED. I want to read the rest of the article. [Reading:]

Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, candidate against Governor Whitman in the Republican primaries, in an interview yesterday, denied that the governor is entitled to any credit for exposing the activities of Bolo Pasha, the traitor executed as a German spy by the French Government following his operations in this city.

He also declared that after the investigation disclosed that William R. Hearst had had a conference with Bolo Pasha, two of Mr. Hearst's agents, Lawrence J. O'Reilly, now a commissioner in the board of water supply, and William A. DeFord, of counsel for Mr. Hearst, called on him at the Murray Hill Hotel, and tried to obtain a signed statement from him exonerating Hearst from any blame in connection with the German spy. Afterwards he said he received a telegram from Mr. Hearst again attempting to obtain from him a 'clean bill of health,' as the attorney general put it, all without avail.

I call attention to this, that the language of Mr. Lewis is not that he was asked to certify, by Mr. DeFord and Mr. O'Reilly, to 100 per cent loyalty on the part of Mr. Hearst, but that he was asked to sign a statement exonerating Mr. Hearst from any blame in connection with the German spy.

I continue to read:

The visit of Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. DeFord took place after the New York newspapers had printed the doings of Bolo Pasha, taken from sworn testimony, said Mr. Lewis: "We had had an exhaustive investigation, of material witnesses, including Pavenstedt, Schmidt, and others, and the testimony was spread before the newspaper men, with the result that great publicity was given to the matter.

"It was on the day following this expose that I received a visit from Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. DeFord who said they represented Mr. Hearst. They called at my room in the Murrayhill Hotel, and brought a statement which they had prepared, exonerating Mr. Hearst, and assuring the public that there had been nothing in the investigation that in any manner reflected upon Mr. Hearst. They were offensive in their manner. I refused to sign their statement, and they wanted to know the reason. I told them that the record spoke for itself. I told them I had drawn no inference whatsoever concerning Mr. Hearst's meeting with Bolo Pasha; and that, as I had not charged Hearst with any offense, I was not called upon to give Mr. Hearst an exoneration."

That is a very different thing from having a thing given out by mistake, and then attention being called to it and regret expressed; but it is standing upon the statement given out, which it is admitted contains the names of Boy-Ed and von Papen as being guests at this dinner.

What did Mr. Hearst want?

They wanted a clean bill of health for Mr. Hearst. [Continues reading:]

The morning following my refusal of the request from Messrs. O'Reilly and DeFord," continued Mr. Lewis, "an attack was made on me in the New York American, in a signed article in which Hearst said he would have me indicted for criminal libel, and that he would sue me, personally, for damages. He has never had me indicted, nor has he sued me.

"I made out a preliminary report of the investigation of Bolo, and sent it to the French Government, a week in advance of the preparation of the full report. It was on the strength of this preliminary report that Bolo was arrested by the French Government.

"I noticed in some of the papers to-day a suggestion that the governor had been asked by interested parties to call me off in the investigation of Bolo. The governor knew nothing about the findings of the investigations until they were published. It is only fair to say that the governor never interfered, at all. I don't think he was ever asked to call me off."

"Was there more than one instance of an attempt on the part of Mr. Hearst or his agents to get you to exonerate Mr. Hearst?"

"Yes; a few days after the first incident, while I was at home in Rochester, I received a telegram purporting to be from Mr. Hearst, in which I was requested to wire the New York American; and then followed a prepared statement which, in general terms, exonerated Mr. Hearst from blame in connection with Bolo Pacha.

"I wired Hearst that unless he withdrew the charges he had made against me, and the threat that he would proceed against me for criminal libel, I would have no further communication with any representative of a Hearst paper.

"Concerning reports that he would complete the anti-Whitman ticket, the attorney general said:

"'I am not making any tickets. So far as I know, the only man who is to run on my anti-Whitman ticket is Alfred L. Becker, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for attorney general. I had nothing to do with Mr. Becker's decision to be a candidate, but I am glad to be associated with him. I have no quarrel with anyone but Whitman. I believe his reelection would be disastrous to the Republican party and to the State. There is no reason, so far as I know, why I should oppose the renomination of Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck, Secretary of State Hugo, Comptroller Travis, Treasurer Wells or State Engineer Williams. I shall not advise anyone to get out or stay out of the race for any office he wants to fill.'

"Reverting to his own responsibility for the Bolo Pacha investigation, the Attorney General said:

"'The Governor didn't know anything about the investigation of Bolo until after it was completed.'

"The papers came from the French Consul General to the Governor, who turned them over to Frank Lord. Lord had a habit of 'passing the buck' to me, and he passed the Bolo Pacha papers to me. I found that I could act under the State secret service and went ahead. There was no occasion for consulting the Governor about the matter. I prepared an authorization for me to go ahead with the investigation and presented it to the Governor, and he signed it without reading it.

"From time to time after I was nominated for Attorney-General I heard stories to the effect that William Orr, George Glynn or George Graves, of the Governor's staff, had said that I had made a great mistake in antagonizing Hearst and that I would have a hard time in being elected.

"In the fall of 1917, while I was a candidate, the Governor told me he would be making speeches right along and that it would afford him pleasure to commend my record as Attorney-General. So far as I know, he never said anything about me. My friends, a week or two before the election last year, gave a dinner for me at the Republican Club. The Governor was invited but he sent regrets.

"Did you conclude that he held aloof because of the result of the investigation of Bolo Pacha?

"Now, this is the Governor we are talking about:

"'That is exactly the conclusion I reached,' said Mr. Lewis.

"When I announced my candidacy in May, I stated that I was opposed to Governor Whitman's methods. Yesterday the secretary to the Governor called the superintendent of the Capitol into his office and gave him a list of eight names of district leaders in the employ of the state in the Capitol with instructions to direct such eight men to apply at once to the Governor for appointment as notaries public for the purpose of circulating the Governor's nominating petitions among enrolled Republican voters in Albany County.

"The superintendent took the list, called in the men and submitted the proposition to them. Without exception the eight men declined to comply with the demand made upon them and stated that the reason for their declination was that, as independent American citizens, they intended to exercise their rights at the primary and vote for the man of their choice for the Republican nomination for Governor; that they were unwilling to ask for their own appointment as notaries for the purpose of circulating Whitman's petitions.

"This action on the part of the secretary to the Governor is a violation of the spirit, if not the exact letter, of the civil service law.

"Coercion of employees by a public officer is strictly forbidden by that law.

"It is not within the function, however, of the Attorney-General to act but of the local district attorney, if a crime has been committed."

Now, I have read that, Mr. Becker, and it speaks for itself. I want to read another.

Here is an article published in the New York Tribune of August 2, which I want to read to show the animus of this alleged investigation that has been carried on. [Reading:]

Lewis to Pin Hearst Down on Bolo Facts.

Senator OVERMAN. From what paper is that?

Senator REED. The New York Tribune of August 3, 1918.

Senator STERLING. You said August 2, before, did you not, Senator Reed?

Senator REED. I should have said August 3. If I said August 2, it is an error. There is "Exhibit 2," right above it, and perhaps I saw that "2." [Continuing reading:]

Lewis to Pin Hearst Down on Bolo Facts.

Challenges Statement of Publisher About Relations with German Spy.

Attorney General Again Leading Fight, Issues Statement; Charging Alliance Exists Between Hearst and Whitman.

Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, Disabled and on Crutches, Resumed Personal Direction of His Campaign for the Republican Nomination for Governor Yesterday, at the Murray Hill Hotel.

He charged there is an alliance between Gov. Whitman and William P. Hearst and asserted that when Hearst said, in his formal statement, that his only conversation with Bolo Pacha, the German spy, executed by the French Government, was with reference to the cost of paper, he knew he was making a false statement. He demanded of Governor Whitman that he tell the public what it was that Arthur Brisbane, chief editorial writer for Mr. Hearst, said to him at the St. Regis Hotel, when he called on the governor last week.

Mr. BECKER. I said yesterday that it was Hearst that called. That was a slip in my recollection. It was Mr. Brisbane.

Senator REED. Yes. This refreshes your recollection?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I continue reading:

Mr. Lewis' Statement: The attorney general's statement follows:

I have been confined in the Saratoga hospital as a result of an automobile accident. As a necessary consequence my campaign for the Republican nomination for Governor has lagged somewhat. In other words, the punch has been missing. The reason, of course is the man with the punch has not been on the job. He will be on the job from today until primary day. There will be a punch every day.

I expect to win and shall exert every effort to accomplish that result.

The alliance between Governor Whitman and his oldtime supporter, William P. Hearst will be dissected and exposed. I shall show between now and primary day the real purpose of the combination between Hearst and Whitman.

The antagonism of Mr. Hearst toward me became apparent for the first time when I investigated the activities of Bolo Pacha. At that time Mr. Hearst said in a statement which he signed and which was published in his papers: "I met Bolo Pasha merely as a French newspaper man, a reputed representative of the Paris Journal. He came to me and said, 'You use more print paper than any other man in the United States. Will you tell me where to get the best and cheapest. Print paper is almost obtainable in Paris.' I told him where we got our print paper and how we paid for it, and gave him all the information about the paper market that I could, and that any newspaper man with any courtesy would naturally give to a visiting French journalist.

The conversation was general and trivial, as it is at all such social dinners. That is all that I have ever known or seen or heard of Bolo Pacha. I demand of the Attorney General to disprove any word in this statement of mine or to substantiate any one of his own unwarranted implications. Should he fail to do so I shall proceed against the small Attorney General of the great State of New York for petty and premeditated slander.

Senator STERLING. That is what Lewis says Hearst said?

Senator REED. Yes. [Continuing reading:]

Mr. Hearst knew, when he made this statement, that it was false. He knows it now. I know it, and during the next thirty days I shall prove to the satisfaction of everyone that Mr. Hearst deliberately told an untruth when he said "That is all I have ever known or seen or heard of Bolo Pacha."

I shall show many other facts in connection with the relations between Hearst and Governor Whitman and expect to convince the public that these men have long had close personal relations and they are leagued together. The purpose of this combination between Hearst and Whitman will be made clearly apparent to the public before primary day.

I now call upon Governor Whitman to answer this question: What did Brisbane say to Whitman at the time he called upon him at the St. Regis Hotel a few days ago?

"Wait till Mr. Lewis says something specific about relations between Whitman and Hearst and then the governor will reply to him," said one of the Governor's lieutenants at the Manhattan Hotel Headquarters last night.

That is the newspaper man's statement, now. I have been reading quotations.

Continuing, the Governor's representative said:

"The Attorney-General, in his exposure of the relations between Hearst and Bolo Pacha, whatever these relations were, is acting as the Governor's subordinate. The request to investigate Bolo Pacha came from the French Government."

That is the other side of it. That is the Whitman controversy. I will read it if the committee wants it. If not, let it go in as a part of the argument.

Just one thing further on this. I want to introduce the affidavit of Louis J. Lang, because I want now to impress upon this committee the deliberate threat of Mr. Lewis to use this material in a campaign, to expose Mr. Hearst in a campaign where the issue was made that Mr. Hearst and Mr. Whitman were one and the same, and to demonstrate, at one and the same time, that Mr. Whitman was a traitor while they were trying to demonstrate that Mr. Hearst was.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that an affidavit that you want to introduce?

Senator REED. I want to read this affidavit.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want to introduce it in evidence?

Senator REED. Yes.

Senator STERLING. When was this affidavit made, and under what conditions, Senator Reed? Does it show?

Senator REED. It is an affidavit which was made touching this controversy. I am introducing it just as a plain, simple affidavit.

Senator STERLING. It has not been produced before in these proceedings?

Senator REED. No; it has not.

Senator OVERMAN. It has not been offered in evidence, and you are reading it, and wish to offer it in evidence?

Senator REED. I am reading it to show the animus of this proceeding, and then I am going to ask some questions, later on. [Reading:]

Louis J. Lang, being duly sworn, deposes and says—

Senator OVERMAN. This is a part of your question, as I understand, that you are leading up to?

Senator REED. I do not know that I will call it a question. I am putting it in as preliminary to a question.

Senator STERLING. In regard to that procedure, Mr. Chairman. I have some question, at first blush. I am not sure.

Senator REED. Let us see. This witness has sat here for two days, not proceeding under the rules of any court or any law, but reading parts of statements, and detailing them, and giving his impressions and opinions from testimony that took days to go over. Am I to understand that, as a member of the Senate, I must now proceed in accordance with the strict rules of law? I simply want to get this before this committee.

Senator OVERMAN. You are reading it as preliminary to a question that you are going to ask, as I understand.

Senator REED. I am going to ask some questions with relation to it. [Reading:]

I reside in the city of New York and am a reporter for the New York American, and was acting as a reporter for that newspaper during all the times hereinafter referred to.

I have read the exhibits hereto annexed, marked "B-2" "B-4" and "B-13"—

Senator NELSON. Those exhibits are newspaper quotations?

Senator REED. The exhibits that I refer to here?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator REED. B-2, B-4, and B-13 are the newspaper prints of the affidavits of these witnesses that have been referred to, the boys and the chauffeurs, as also in Exhibit 6.

I continue to read:

and know the contents thereof. Such parts of said exhibits as purport to be quoted statements of Hon. Merton E. Lewis, attorney general of the State of New York, are in substance identical with certain parts of various typewritten statements handed to me for publication by said Merton E. Lewis at his political headquarters in the Murrayhill Hotel, New York City, on the day immediately preceding the day of their respective publications in New York newspapers—

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the man who is making the statement there?

Senator REED. This is a reporter for the New York American. [Continuing reading:]

the dates of publication being indicated upon each of the annexed exhibits.

The point I want to show you is that these things were given out from the political headquarters of these gentlemen. [Continuing reading:]

I have read Exhibit B-11, hereto annexed, and know the contents thereof. Such parts of said exhibit B-11 as purport to be quoted statements of Senator Theodore Douglas Robinson are in substance identical with certain parts of a typewritten statement handed to me for publication by said Theodore Douglas Robinson, personally, at the political headquarters of Attorney General Merton E. Lewis in the Murrayhill Hotel, New York City, on the 31st of July, 1918. I know the said Theodore Douglas Robinson, above referred to, to be the campaign manager of the said Attorney General Lewis.

I have read Exhibit B-6, hereto annexed, and know the contents thereof.

Now, Exhibit B-6 I will call attention to with the permission of the committee.

Exhibit B-6 is an article printed in the New York Tribune of August 12 and which I desire to read because it is given out from these political headquarters. The headlines are:

Bolo and Bernstorff Visited Hearst Home, 8 Witnesses Swear.—They Went There Sometimes Together, Sometimes Separately, and Were Nicknamed by Help.—Handy Iron Bridge From Roof to Roof.—Affidavits of Chauffeurs and Employes in Editor's House Given out by Lewis.

From his political headquarters, by his political campaign manager, on August 12; and these affidavits bear date the 9th, 10th, and 11th that have been heard here, and the depositions that have been heard here bear the same dates.

The Attorney General of this State, Merton E. Lewis, who last year at the request of the French Government developed the proofs on which the notorious Bolo Pacha was recently shot in Vincennes for the crime of treason to the allied cause, yesterday made public a lot of unexpected evidence on the relations of Bolo Pacha, Count von Bernstorff, and William Randolph Hearst.

This evidence is in the form of affidavits and is prefaced by the following statement from the Attorney General:

"In the statement issued by William Randolph Hearst on October 5, 1917, he said:

" 'I met Bolo Pacha merely as a French newspaper man, the reputed representative of the Paris Journal. He came to me and said, "You use more print paper than any other man in the United States. Will you tell me where I can get the best and cheapest?" I told him where we get our print paper, what we paid for it, and gave him all the information about the paper market that I could and what any newspaper man with courtesy would naturally give to a visiting French journalist. The conversation was general and trivial, as it is at all such social dinners. That is all that I have ever known, seen or heard of Bolo Pacha. I defy the Attorney General to disprove any word in this statement of mine or to substantiate any one of his own unwarranted implications. Should he fail to do so I shall proceed against the small Attorney General of the great State of New York for petty and premeditated slander.' "

That is quoted, of course, from what Hearst said. The interview or statement continues:

"I showed by the testimony of Hearst's Paris correspondent, Bertelli, given at the trial of Bolo for treason, that, instead of Hearst meeting Bolo only once, he met him three times:

"First—Hearst entertained Bolo at luncheon.

"Second—Bolo entertained Hearst at a dinner at Sherry's.

"Third—Hearst entertained Bolo at a theater party and supper.

"I am now prepared to show by six affidavits that Hearst received Bolo at the Hearst home on Riverside Drive.

"I am now prepared to show by six"—

Then there is a "three" which is evidently a misprint; it says "six" and also says "three"—

"affidavits that Hearst received Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and Bolo at the Hearst home at one and the same time and that this happened on two or more occasions.

"I am prepared to show by many affidavits that Count von Bernstorff was a frequent visitor at the Hearst home at about the time of Bolo's visit to New York in the spring of 1916, when Bolo obtained $1,683,000 from Von Bernstorff with which to carry on in France the same German peace propaganda that Hearst was then conducting in America."

"The affidavits now published are eight in number.

"Perhaps the most interesting is that of Charles H. Jerome, who was superintendent of the Clarendon apartment house, at 137 Riverside Drive, which is said to be owned by Hearst, and three floors of which are occupied by him as a private residence. Jerome swears:

"(1) That Count von Bernstorff was a frequent visitor at the Hearst apartment and expected to be taken up unannounced.

"(2) That Bolo Pacha was also a visitor at the Hearst apartment.' "

Mr. BECKER. May I interrupt to say that from this point on, that is, beginning with the analysis, and where it says: "Perhaps the most interesting is that of Charles H. Jerome" and so forth, is the reporters' work. Prior to that it is a statement that we got up.

Senator REED. You seem to be quite familiar with this?

Mr. BECKER. I think I wrote what goes down to that point.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Down to where it says: "Perhaps the most interesting is that of Charles H. Jerome" and so forth. I think so. I am not positive.

Senator REED. Then we will not bother with the reporter's statements. You are evidently more familiar with that than I am.

Mr. BECKER. The rest is the reporter's analysis of the affidavits.

Senator REED. This man Jerome, that is referred to as the most interesting of these gentlemen——

Mr. BECKER. Not by me; and I do not think he was. However, he turned out to have a criminal record, which has been played up to by Hearst, as if that damned him from forever taking a breath again. He has tried to live an honest life for about four or five years, if I remember correctly, and has been in Hearst's employ.

Senator REED. Mr. Hearst found out that he had been an ex-convict and let him out. And you found him, and took his statement: and that is his picture, and his Bertillon record there, is it not? [Indicating.]

Mr. BECKER. I think that is correct. I never have been able to understand the philosophy of bouncing a man just because he is an ex-convict.

Senator REED. No. "Charity for all," is a good maxim.

Mr. BECKER. When it makes it possible to display beautiful cartoons in the paper of persons with balls around their legs in company with Mr. Lewis, why, of course, it is good stuff.

Senator REED. Of course, it is very unkind to use it; but it is not unkind to tell the truth about a convict as it might be to tell an untruth about men who are not convicts.

Mr. BECKER. The law is no respecter of persons, and if Mr. Hearst will come here and make his denial under oath, it will receive due consideration.

Senator REED. No, the law is no respecter of persons, but most human beings are. However, you and I do not need to get into any controversy. I want to continue reading this affidavit of Lang's.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask a question there, please; in regard to this man spoken of as an ex-convict; what was he convicted of?

Senator REED. It shows on there—larceny.

Senator OVERMAN. What was his punishment?

Senator REED. I do not know. There is no importance to it except that it simply shows that he is one of the links, important links, in this testimony to show the meeting of Bolo Pasha and Bernsdorf at Mr. Hearst's house, and he is one of the witnesses. That is all. I have nothing against the poor fellow and have no desire to pursue it.

Maj. HUMES. May I ask Mr. Becker a question? Did you or did you not, Mr. Becker, present the affidavit of this man Jerome in this testimony yesterday?

Mr. BECKER. I did not, out of excessive caution.

Maj. HUMES. It has not been presented before this committee at all?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. But it was presented to the newspapers?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Of course, we did not know then that he was an ex-convict. I do know but what I would have, even if I had known it.

Senator REED. Certainly you might have done it.

I am reading, again, from this deposition or affidavit of Mr. Lang, further:

I have read Exhibit B-6 hereto annexed and know the contents thereof. Such parts of said exhibit as purported to be quoted statements of Hon. Merton E. Lewis, attorney-general of the State of New York, are in substance identical with certain parts of a typewritten statement handed to me for publication by Louis Getts whom I know to be the secretary of said Merton E. Lewis, at the political headquarters of the said Lewis, in the Murrayhill Hotel, New York City, on the 11th day of August, 1918.

The typewritten statement of which said Exhibit B forms a part was handed to me as a preliminary statement to accompany the affidavits hereto annexed and marked respectively "Exhibit A-1 to Exhibit A-8" inclusive.

Those are this list of affidavits, I will say, for the benefit of the committee; printed copies of them. I continue reading:

I have read the exhibits hereto annexed, marked "Exhibits A-1 to A-8" inclusive and note the contents thereof. Said exhibits are in substance identical with certain parts of a typewritten statement handed to me for publication by Louis Getts whom I know to be the secretary of Merton E. Lewis, at the political headquarters of the said Lewis, in the Murrayhill Hotel, New York City, on the 11th day of August, 1918.

"At the various times when the several typewritten statements were handed to me as aforesaid by Mr. Lewis, Mr. Getts or Mr. Robinson, excepting Exhibits A-1 to A-8 inclusive and Exhibit B-6, there were usually present on each occasion representatives of the New York World, New York Times, New York Tribune, New York Sun, and New York Herald, to each of whom were given typewritten statements which I believe to be similar in all respects to the statements handed to me by the persons above named."

Now, I want the committee to notice this. [Reading:]

On August 2, 1918, I was told by the said Attorney General Lewis at his political headquarters above named that he would issue a "punch" every day, and that most of his "punches" would be directed at Mr. Hearst who he said was the big issue of the primary campaign."

That is subscribed on the 16th day of August, 1918. Now these threats were made on the 2d, 3d, and 4th of August. You secured these affidavits on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of August, and you gave them out to the newspapers with these statements which I have read. Some of the statements you say you wrote. Do you mean to say to me, sir, that your purpose in preparing those affidavits was not for political use?

Mr. BECKER. I have explained myself on that. I do not care to enlarge on it.

Senator REED. Nothing further to add?

Mr. BECKER. No, I have been perfectly definite and frank about it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Becker, this affiant here swears to some threats that you made.

Mr. BECKER. Not that I made. I know nothing about that.

Senator WOLCOTT. It was Lewis.

Mr. BECKER. As a matter of fact, Mr. Lewis had personally nothing to do with that branch of the investigation. I started it without his knowledge in the beginning, and tried to get some evidence to use, under the theory that Hearst was the intermediary. That is the way it struck me.

Senator REED. By the way, when you made your campaign for the nomination, your friends put forth as one of the chief reasons for your nomination, that you had accomplished very great results in the investigation of the Bolo Pasha case, did they not?

Mr. BECKER. Well, there was a campaign circular that does violence to the feelings of a modest man, I must admit.

Senator REED. Yes; that was one of your issues.

Mr. BECKER. It was not an issue, it was an argument.

Senator REED. One of your reasons. Now I want to take up an entirely different subject, and I want to be as hasty with it as I possibly can, if the committee will indulge me; and you have been very kind.

Mr. Becker, in 1916, our country was occupying a position of absolute neutrality, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. As a nation, yes.

Senator REED. As a nation, it was. It was the request of the President of the United States that we should be neutral not only in act but even in thought?

Mr. BECKER. He requested that, right after the beginning of the war. That was not generally obeyed.

Senator REED. You did not obey it?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir.

Senator REED. Did you belong to any societies or organizations during 1916 that had to do with getting the United States to take sides in this war?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Did you belong to any society that had anything to do with it?

Mr. BECKER. You mean the National Security League and leagues of that sort?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. I had nothing to do with any of those societies.

Senator REED. Did you belong to any society of that character?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Did you belong to any political society except the Republican Party?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. All right. In 1916 Count von Bernstorff was the accredited representative of a neutral nation to the United States?

Mr. BECKER. He was a good deal more than that.

Senator REED. He was that, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. He was that at least.

Senator REED. Yes. He called on the President of the United States and on the Secretary of State repeatedly, and was received there on the same terms and conditions as other ambassadors?

Mr. BECKER. In the latter part of 1916?

Senator REED. In 1916.

Mr. BECKER. I think not.

Senator REED. Well, I am going to say in February, 1916?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I do not carry the dates of the various controversies as they developed, but I think it is safe to say that from the time of the seizure of Dr. Albert's papers and their publication——

Senator REED. When were these seized?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know when they were seized, but I believe they came out in the latter part of July, 1915.

Senator REED. 1915?

Mr. BECKER. And especially after the seizure of Von Igel's papers by the Department of Justice.

Senator REED. When were these seized?

Mr. BECKER. That date I can not give you, but from that time on I do not believe Count von Bernstorff was received on the same footing as other representatives, actually. Technically, of course, he was.

Senator REED. Yes, technically. In February, 1916, is it not a fact that Count von Bernstorff was generally received socially and politically as a distinguished foreign diplomat?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think so.

Senator REED. Is it not a fact that long after that he was entertained at a dinner by the Vice President of the United States?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know anything about it.

Senator REED. Is it not a fact that he attended the diplomatic dinners of the United States and was duly received there long after February, 1916?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; of course no social distinction could be made against him at official dinners.

Senator REED. And was he not received, and do not the records of the investigation that you made show that he was received, in many families of undoubted loyalty in this country?

Mr. BECKER. I have not made any investigation of Bernstorff's social career, except his relation with certain ladies of very unpleasant reputation, because that had to do with the discovery of certain intrigues of a political nature, in which he was engaged. Apart from that I am not an expert on Bernstorff's social relations, except that I had very general knowledge that the social sphere in which he moved grew gradually narrower and narrower, and after the Lusitania, in May, 1915, it got just about as big as this (indicating).

Senator REED. Just about as big as a circle you drew with your finger?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. When was it that he was given his passports?

Mr. BECKER. February 3, 1917, was it not?

Senator REED. Yes. That was a full year after the date I am speaking of.

Bolo Pacha you described here. Is it not a fact that Bolo Pacha was born in France?

Mr. BECKER. Born at Marseilles; Levantine ancestry.

Senator REED. Bolo Pacha had risen to a position of great distinction with the French Government?

Mr. BECKER. Never.

Senator REED. Never?

Mr. BECKER. No, but with the Turkish Government, with the ex-Khedive of Egypt, and when he was Khedive.

Senator REED. Had Senator Humbert acquired some distinction in connection with the French Government?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. He was the man, was he not, that raised the outcry that France was not prepared for war, and he had a great deal to do with getting the French in a state of preparedness? That was his public claim.

Mr. BECKER. "Cannon and munitions" was his cry, which he spread all over.

Senator REED. And he had been raising that cry for how long?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know; quite a while.

Senator REED. That was of course distinctly in the interest of France's preparedness.

Mr. BECKER. Well, that is not entirely admitted by the French. I do not know just what there was to it.

Senator REED. Very well, the ordinary person would ordinarily believe, would he not, that a man who was advocating cannon and munitions for a country that was menaced by Germany, and crying out to be ready, was a friend of the country.

Mr. BECKER. Senator Humbert had the reputation of being a very great patriot; much greater than anybody else in the country, almost.

Senator REED. He was the proprietor of the French Journal?

Mr. BECKER. The Paris Journal.

Senator REED. And that Paris Journal, as you stated on your direct examination, had been openly and violently pro-French and anti-German?

Mr. BECKER. It had been a medium in this campaign for cannon and munitions.

Senator REED. And that had been a persistent and determined campaign carried on from day to day, and it was well-known throughout the world among people who were connected with the French newspapers? That is so, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I presume so.

Senator REED. Bolo Pacha, whether he was a part of the French Government or not, was received in the loyal circles of Paris up to the time or shortly before the time of this exposure which finally led to his execution? That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Well, he moved in a circle headed by the Socialist Caillaux, the former premier of France, and in addition to that he had a very interesting and very gorgeous career. He maintained very elegant equipages and cut a great figure. He was a dashing sort of chap. But if you ask if he moved in the best circles of French society, I should say not.

Senator REED. I do not mean his society standing, but whether, in Paris in February, 1916, at the time he came to this country, his loyalty had been publicly challenged, or whether it was generally conceded that he was a loyal Frenchman.

Mr. BECKER. I do not know that there was any general opinion about it. He was a pretty obscure individual.

Senator REED. He was not so obscure that he did not come into relations with Senator Humbert, and it was understood that he was to be a part owner of the Journal. That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. That is not quite it, but it is accurate enough for our purposes.

Senator REED. It is accurate enough for our purposes.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And at the time we are speaking of, there was a great shortage of paper, news print paper, throughout the world, was there not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now as to Bolo, are you prepared to say that nobody had challenged the loyalty of Bolo Pasha before he came to the United States in February, 1916?

Mr. BECKER. I can not name anybody who had.

Senator REED. Of course you are not prepared to say to the committee that no one had any reason for believing at that time that he was not a loyal citizen?

Mr. BECKER. He imposed on almost everybody in this country.

Senator REED. He came here and he brought a letter of introduction, or he was introduced by Mr. ————what is that Italian's name?

Mr. BECKER. Bertelli introduced him to Hearst.

Senator REED. He was introduced to Hearst by Mr. Bertelli?

Mr. BECKER. At least, Bertelli says so.

Senator REED. Yes, Bertelli says so. As far as you know, that is the first acquaintance that Mr. Hearst had with Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. A personal meeting.

Senator REED. Yes. So far as you know it is the first time he ever communicated with him in any way?

Mr. BECKER. I can not prove anything else.

Senator REED. Do you know anything else?

Mr. BECKER. I can not prove anything.

Senator REED. Do you mean to insinuate anything before that?

Mr. BECKER. Not a thing.

Senator REED. Then you might have said yes.

Mr. BECKER. That is a clean bill of health proposition.

Senator REED. I am not asking you to give a clean bill of health. I am asking you whether you know of any fact showing that Mr. Hearst knew Bolo Pasha before he was introduced to him by Bertelli, and you had said no. That is all I asked.

Mr. BECKER. I could draw some inferences which are fairly well based on things that are known. For instance, how would Bertelli come over here without the Hearst people knowing it? He was their correspondent. He had to get leave; had to explain in some manner why he came. So I think he communicated with Hearst or the Hearst papers before he crossed. If they would produce the correspondence and telegrams we would know all these things.

Senator REED. If there is no correspondence and there are no witnesses, would you have a right to sit here under the protection of the law and throw out insinuations?

Mr. BECKER. I was not.

Senator NELSON. I want to know for my information what was the name of this man.

Mr. BECKER. Bertelli.

Senator NELSON. He was the representative at Paris of the Hearst newspapers, was he?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Their correspondent—their Paris correspondent?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And he was the man that came over with Bolo!

Mr. BECKER. He came over for the purpose—he has sworn. I think, for the purpose—of introducing Bolo to Hearst.

Senator REED. Has he so sworn? Produce that evidence.

Mr. BECKER. I may say that I may be mistaken about that. I read it in.

Senator NELSON. I asked these questions to refresh my memory. I got the impression that he was the correspondent of the Hearst papers in Paris.

Mr. BECKER. I read the whole, or that part, of the deposition in evidence, and it will speak for itself. If I remember rightly—I will not take the time now.

Senator NELSON (continuing). And that Bolo came in company with him on the same ship.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. He came on the same ship, I think, Senator: but the point is I do not think there is anything to show that he came in company with him at all, and that is why I asked for the deposition.

Mr. BECKER. Bolo gave him 11,000 francs, which Bertelli afterwards claimed was a loan, and paid back.

Senator REED. Will you get the statement of Mr. Bertelli? You can find it.

Mr. BECKER. If it is here. Ask me another question and I will find it.

Senator REED. No, let us have it now. [A paper was here handed to Senator Reed.] Let me read the deposition, part of it. This deposition shows, according to the witness, that Bertelli brought Mr. Bolo Pasha over here.

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that at all.

Senator REED. Well, go back to that question that I asked, and let us see.

Mr. BECKER. I stated that he came with him and introduced him to Hearst.

Senator REED. You said more than that.

Mr. BECKER. If I did, it will speak for itself. Let us save all this trouble. So far as Bertelli's deposition is concerned, he referred to him there as "my traveling companion."

Senator REED. Let me read it. [Reading:]

Deposition of Bertelli, Charles, 35 years of age, nationality: Italian. 2 Rue de la Faix, heretofore sworn.

Q. In two pneumatics which you addressed to us and which we annex to the present deposition, you have requested to be heard anew; we are ready to receive your declarations.

A. I have been pained to see the name of Bolo coupled with that of Mr. Hearst whom I continue to consider as a sincere friend of France.

Why did I introduce Bolo to Hearst? Because Mr. Jean Finot, director of La Revue, whom I had known since 1912, the period when I was correspondent of the New York Times, had sent Bolo a letter of introduction to Mr. Hearst and had requested me to vouch for him with Hearst. He said to me, "Interest yourself in the matter, Bolo has very great political power, he is the proprietor of Le Journal and it would be well for Hearst to know him." As I have already told you, I made the voyage with Bolo in 1916. On my arrival in New York my traveling companion introduced me to Jules Bois, who was already there and was charged with giving lectures and with propaganda for the French government.

Now, did you say that Mr. Finot, the director of the La Revue, had been a correspondent of the New York Times?

Mr. BECKER. No, it was Bertelli who was the correspondent of the New York Times.

Senator REED (reading):

Because Mr. Jean Finot, director of "La Revue," whom I know since 1912, the period when I was correspondent of the New York Times, had sent Bolo a letter of introduction.

Now do you challenge the loyalty of Mr. Finot?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know the gentleman.

Senator REED. You do not know anything about it, but you challenge the truth of the statement that he had sent this letter of introduction?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know anything about it.

Senator REED. Did you ever find the letter of introduction?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I suppose Mr. Hearst has it with his other documents. He might produce it.

Senator REED. As long as your witness swears to it, and nobody denies it—

Mr. BECKER. Bertelli is not my witness, and I believe his statement is partially untruthful. He is Mr. Hearst's witness.

Senator REED (reading):

I spoke of Bolo to Hearst, and the latter said to me, "If he is the proprietor of great French newspapers, I certainly shall be very glad to receive him," and he invited him to lunch the next day. During the meal, there was only discussion of superficial matters. Over the coffee, Bolo insisted that Hearst declare himself on the subject of France. His host replied to him that every American loved France and that that country needed no advocate; he added that he considered France as his second fatherland.

Nothing about that to indicate any disloyalty or pro-Germanism, is there?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Bartelli's object was to show——

Senator REED. I am not asking you his object. I am asking about this testimony. You are always putting in objects and purposes that you get out of your head. I am asking if there is anything in this language to indicate it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. This language indicates that Hearst was pro-German and against the French?

Mr. BECKER. I must admit that Bertelli made out a good case for his master.

Senator REED. Was he in Hearst's employ at the time he made this statement?

Mr. BECKER. I think he still is.

Senator REED. Is he not in the Italian Army and has he not been for months?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not think so. He appeared at the trial of Bolo. I doubt it very much.

Senator REED. Well, that is my information, but I may be in error. [Reading:]

In compliment to Mr. Hearst, Bolo gave a grand dinner at Sherry's. He consulted me on the choice of the guests, and thus it was that he had, besides Mr. and Mrs. Hearst and me, Mr. Balanda (Van Anda) editor-in-chief of the New York Times——

Mr. BECKER. I have read all this in evidence once.

Senator REED. Yes, you read it, but where did you get the authority for the statement that you made a little bit ago that Mr. Bertell brought over Bolo Pasha to this country, and that he did it at the instigation of Hearst? Where did you get the information for that? Out of this paper that I am reading?

Mr. BECKER. Just a little common sense. Let me tell you——

Senator REED. Did you get it out of this paper?

Mr. BECKER. Let me tell you, if you please.

Senator REED. I am not asking you to argue the case.

Mr. BECKER. He came over with Bolo on the same steamer.

Senator REED. Wait a minute.

Mr. BECKER. He introduced him to Hearst. He borrowed 11,000 francs from Bolo, and he went back to France on the same steamer.

Senator REED. Your idea is that he got 11,000 francs for introducing Bolo to Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know what it was for. I got his statement that it was a friendly loan.

Senator REED. If it took 11,000 francs to introduce him to Hearst, it does not look as though Hearst had already arranged in advance for the introduction, does it? Did you ever hear of such an absurd proposition, that a man would have an individual coming to Hearst by some prearrangement, and then have to give 11,000 francs for the man to introduce him?

Mr. BECKER. It sounds a little ridiculous.

Senator REED. Yes; it certainly does. I want all of this deposition to go in.

Senator OVERMAN. It is already in. Did you not put it all in?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think it has all been put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want it to go in again, Senator Reed, here?

Senator REED. I do not want it to go in twice. I may be in error, and I am not going to stand on that at all.

Coming back to Bolo Pasha, now. Was Bolo Pasha received in many families in New York? Did he visit around a good deal? You have traced him.

Mr. BECKER. Very little.

Senator REED. What families did he visit there?

Mr. BECKER. That would be just scandal mongering to tell that. I know some of the people he came in contact with.

Senator REED. Tell us some of the people he came in contact with.

Mr. BECKER. There was a millinery shop on Fifth Avenue, Maison Buzenet, and there was a Capt. Piret, or something like that, of the French Army, who has gotten into trouble on account of this in France to some extent. It appears that he and Bolo and Pavenstedt used to foregather with some of the cloak models in the Maison Buzenet, and one of these girls afterwards became very closely allied with Mr. Pavenstedt. I examined her as a witness.

Senator REED. When I said scandal I did not mean that kind of scandal. I used the word "scandal" in the sense as you used the word the other day when you said it was scandalous to say that people had been associated with pro-Germans.

That particular kind of scandal I did not suppose even your office would investigate.

Mr. BECKER. It was important to investigate, because you sometimes get important information from that sort of people.

Senator REED. But were there not responsible people in New York that he met? Was he not invited out to dinner and places?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think so. All I have been able to trace is a friendly visit to Madame Barrientos, and then I have traced his telephone calls from the Plaza, etc., and it does not indicate a very wide social acceptance.

Senator REED. I do not mean that he became a social lion.

Mr. BECKER. He used to stay around in the Plaza Hotel with a group in the bar—a group of Orientals. I do not think it is necessary to name them; they are pretty well known men from Armenia, and such people; in the rug business, and that sort of thing; one art dealer on Fifth Avenue. They would stay around there and have drinks. At least it has been reported to me to that effect by the waiters.

Senator REED. These people that he was with were strongly anti-German, were they not—these Armenians? They hated Austria?

Mr. BECKER. I guess I will not discuss that now, if you will excuse me, because it is a subject that we have been very much interested in. It is under investigation.

Senator REED. The veil of mystery will be drawn there. All right.

Now, I want merely to take up a few dates. Bolo arrived in New York on February 23 and sent his card to Madame Barrientos the same day.

Mr. BECKER. He arrived on the 22d.

Senator REED. I thank you. He sent his card over to the Metropolitan Opera House, and a messenger was sent up to 62 Riverside Drive.

On February 23d he got in touch with Pavenstedt?

Mr. BECKER. Either the 22d or the 23d, but they had a long conference on the 23d.

Senator REED. And on the same date he wrote a letter to Mr. Grace, and in that letter which he wrote to Mr. Grace, Bolo Pasha, this alleged French spy, asked Mr. Grace to furnish the money to enable him to buy into the Journal?

Mr. BECKER. Well, that will do. It is not quite right. That is what it ultimately came to.

Senator REED. On February 24th Pavenstedt got over to Washington and registered at the Shoreham Hotel. That is correct?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, on February 26—by the way, I want to ask, now, when was the dinner at Sherry's?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know.

Senator REED. Could you not fix it?

Mr. BECKER. It was unquestionably toward the end of Bolo's stay, because the intention was, as explained by Pavenstedt, to pay off the social debts; that is, to pay off social debts to the Hearsts, because the Hearsts were the only people who had entertained Bolo while he was here.

Senator REED. Do you say that?

Mr. BECKER. As far as I have any proof; and that is correct. I think outside of Madame Barrientos, and the group that he hung around with in the Plaza. Outside of them I do not think he had met any of those people.

Senator REED. I am referring to the first dinner, and you say that was in the latter part——

Mr. BECKER. Of Bolo's stay.

Senator REED. Of Bolo's stay? All right. Thank you for that, sir. Anyway, that put the dinner out of this case as a conspiracy to get this German money.

Mr. BECKER. There was no conspiracy at that dinner.

Senator REED. On February 26, which was only four days after he arrived, Bernstorff wired to Berlin suggesting that the money be turned over.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That the payment be made?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is February 26th. On that same date Bolo wrote Grace a second letter asking for an interview with him. did he not?

Mr. BECKER. I think you probably have it right there.

Senator REED. On February 28th, not having heard from Mr. Grace, Bolo telegraphed Grace and asked for an answer to his letters. That is right, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I hope so.

Senator REED. Now, on February 29th Jagow wired Bernstorff to make the loan, so that within seven days after he had arrived in this country, the authority had been received from Germany to loan this large sum of money, $1,600,000, to Bolo Pasha. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. That authority was, you remember, somewhat qualified, and they had a little more correspondence after that.

Senator REED. It was qualified to some extent by saying that if it was to be used in Russia, then thus and so, and if this was to be used in Italy, then thus and so.

On the same day Bolo received a telegram from Grace fixing the 2d day of March as the time of meeting between him and Grace, and on March 2 Grace did meet Polo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And at that meeting Bolo Pasha renewed the request for money from Mr. Grace, and Mr. Grace thought so well of the proposition of offering this man money that he took it under advisement with Mr. Schwab.

Mr. BECKER. No; you are wrong there.

Senator REED. On March 2 Bolo and Grace met at 111 Broadway, and arrangements were made to get in touch with Mr. Schwab. That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is not quite the idea. Grace said that he felt pretty sure that nothing could be done. I have his deposition here, but I think I can state it from memory pretty well. Grace said he felt pretty sure that nothing could be done, but he would take it up with Mr. Schwab. The proposition was practically turned down on the 2d of March.

Senator REED. I take it that a letter was written in which he expressed regret that he could not do it. It is in the record. Those letters disclose the fact that there had been previous transactions between——

Mr. BECKER. Humbert.

Senator REED (continuing). Humbert, Bolo Pasha, and Mr. Grace. Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Or the company that Mr. Grace represented; and yet you do not for a moment challenge the loyalty of Mr. Grace or Mr. Schwab, do you?

Mr. BECKER. I am not interested in the subject at all.

Senator REED. You do not challenge it, do you?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. All right. On March 3 or 4 Bernstorff conferred with Hugo Schmidt, of the Deutsche Bank, and on March 5 Bernstorff wired the Deutsche Bank to place 9,000,000 marks at the disposal of Schmidt, and on March 6 Schmidt wired the Deutsche Bank a cipher message to wire whether money had been placed, and Bolo wrote Amsinck & Co. that they would receive money and place the same to his account in the Royal Canadian Bank, so that this Bolo Pasha did get his money handled through the Royal Bank of Canada. He stood well enough to do that; he deceived people well enough to do that. That is true?

Mr. BECKER. I suppose so.

Senator REED. Do you challenge the loyalty of the Royal Bank of Canada?

Mr. BECKER. There is some ground for challenging the discretion of one individual in that bank.

Senator REED. We all may have a lack of discretion at times.

Mr. BECKER. If it will save time, I do not challenge the loyalty of the Royal Bank, or J. P. Morgan & Co. That carries it all the way through.

Senator REED. And the man who was actually agent for the handling of this money, which it was alleged was paid and accepted as a corruption fund, as the price of treason, which was to go to Bolo Pasha, and that was handled through the Royal Bank of Canada, could you give them a clean bill of health?

Mr. BECKER. All right, go ahead.

Senator REED. Then they transferred the money to Morgan & Co.

Mr. BECKER. The money was not stamped with anything that showed it was German, except in passing through Schmidt to G. Amsinck & Co. Then it bore the stamp, but after that it came off.

Senator REED. It was stamped Bolo Pasha all over it, was it not? That is to say, the account was in the name of Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And if Bolo Pasha was a known traitor, and a known scoundrel, then these banks had notice. If on the other hand he was not known as a traitor or a scoundrel, but imposed upon them, he was likely to impose upon anybody? That is true is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Very well. Now, after that Morgan & Co. became the depository of this money.

Mr. BECKER. They also became the target of Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. Very well. You were not asked that question.

Mr. BECKER. All right.

Senator REED. Could you resolve yourself into a witness for just a few minutes? I have not made them any target. Did Morgan & Co. become the recipient of this deposit, the fiscal agent in this transaction; and not only that, but Morgan & Co. received this sort of a letter from Bolo Pasha, did they not, and is the letter not in the handwriting of Bolo Pasha? [Reading:]

Messrs. MORGAN & Co., New York.

Please find enclosed a letter from my friend, Senator Ch. Humbert, of Paris I shall be obliged to you if you will kindly inform me of what the amount is in dollars of this deposit that I am to make.

That letter was written from the Plaza Hotel to J. Pierpont Morgan's bank, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. On the Plaza Hotel stationery.

Senator REED. On the Plaza Hotel stationery, by Bolo Pasha to the Morgan bank. Did you run across that in your investigations?

Mr. BECKER. It is in the report.

Senator REED. And Morgan & Co. wrote back as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 32.

M. BOLO PASHA,

The Plaza Hotel, New York.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your favor of the 4th instant enclosing letter from Senator Ch. Humbert, of Paris, contents of which we duly note.

The rate for Paris cheques on January 31 was about 5.88, at which the equivalent of Fcs. 1,000,000 is $170,068.03.

These transactions continued, and this bank of Morgan—I do not care to put in all of this correspondence—acted as the agent, and finally we find this is true, do we not, that there was deposited to Bolo Pasha's account $1,000,000 in a check with the Morgan bank. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. You have the data before you. I do not carry it in my mind.

Senator REED. It conforms to your recollection, does it not?

Mr. BECKER. In a general way.

Senator REED. When did Pasha go back?

Mr. BECKER. The 17th of March. He came on Washington's Birthday and went away on St. Patrick's day. That is an easy way to remember it.

Senator REED. Thank you. On April 19 Morgan & Co. wrote Pasha care of Messrs. Morgan, Harjes & Co., and Morgan, Harjes & Co. is the Paris correspondent—

Mr. BECKER. The Paris house of Morgan & Co.

Senator REED. Of Morgan & Co.?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Located right in Paris, where they had a chance to find out about Bolo Pasha.

Mr. BECKER. No; they did not.

Senator REED. They had a better chance than a man living over in this country, did they not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know. I think I found out before they did.

Senator REED. They wrote him as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 33.

PAUL BOLO PASHA,

APRIL 19, 1916.

Care of Messrs. Morgan, Harjes & Company.

DEAR SIR: We beg to advise you that on April 14, 1916, we received for the agency of the Royal Bank of Canada $1,000,000 for your account.

In accordance with instructions received by cable from Messrs. Morgan, Harjes & Company, we have placed this to your credit in a special deposit account, and it will be payable to you six months from the day of its receipt, namely, October 14, 1916, and will bear interest at 2½ per cent per annum.

Very truly yours,

Per Pro, MORGAN & COMPANY.

I call your attention now to another cablegram under date of June 19, and I want to ask you if this cablegram was not found in the files, and was not initialed "J. P. M." in the handwriting of J. Pierpont Morgan, after a notation of interest on Bolo's account, which cable reads:

1942.

Bolo Pasha says: "Remit us cable his balance.

Although the original agreement was not kept, would be very pleased if you would allow some interest, possibly even two per cent, in view of connections of this client which are of great importance to us."

I want to ask you if that does not indicate that there had been previous relations between Bolo Pasha and the Morgan Bank?

Mr. BECKER. No; the previous relations were between Charles Humbert and the Morgan Co.

Senator REED. Very well; the man who is now accused of being the partner in treason of Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. We may have to acquit him, however, after your cross-examination.

Senator REED. Oh, I am not trying to acquit him unless he is innocent; but if he is innocent, I hope he will not suffer through any false testimony, and then I would like to see him acquitted.

Mr. BECKER. All right.

Senator REED. I suppose you meant to insinuate that I was trying to defend him?

Mr. BECKER. I never insinuate anything.

Senator REED. Oh, you do not? You haven't done anything since you—you are a born insinuation; a walking, breathing, living insinuation.

Senator OVERMAN. Oh, well, Senator Reed——

Senator REED. I would not make these remarks if you kept your witness inside the traces, but if he gets out he will take his medicine.

Mr. BECKER. It does not hurt me a bit. I feel just as happy as a ark.

Senator REED. If you had a letter like that written by Mr. Hearst in which he said, "Although original agreement was not kept, would be pleased if you would allow some interest, possibly even 2 per cent, in view of connections of this client which of great importance to us," you would have regarded it as very conclusive evidence against Mr. Hearst, would you not?

Mr. BECKER. The association of Pavenstedt with Bolo ought to have excited the suspicion of Americans. The association of Bernstorff with Bolo must have excited suspicion; and if you knew French politics at that time, an association of Bolo with Caillaux, which existed and was very close, should have been enough to arouse some suspicion.

Senator REED. Then why did not the branch of the Morgan house in Paris discover that fact, and why were they sitting there in Paris with the knowledge of that fact before them, continuing these relations?

Mr. BECKER. I think the important connection referred to there was none other than Caillaux. It may have been Humbert, but I think it probably was Caillaux, who was in power at that time very largely. He had great political power at that time.

Senator REED. If that was entirely innocent on the part of Morgan & Co., how would you have regarded it if it had happened that Mr. Hearst had sent a cablegram like that?

Mr. BECKER. I should be suspicious of almost anything that Mr. Hearst did, and that does not apply to Mr. Morgan.

Senator REED. That is what I thought. You would be suspicious of almost anything he did, and so comes your testimony to be read in that light.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I am very suspicious of Hearst. I admit it. I think his record justifies it.

Senator REED. And he probably entertains an equally exalted opinion of you.

Mr. BECKER. Well, God bless him, he is welcome to it, and he will probably express it in his paper, and this is my only chance.

Senator REED. And you would not hesitate at all to get back at him in the newspaper, or to prepare against it when you were testifying under oath in an investigation?

Mr. BECKER. If anybody presents anything that in any way reflects on Hearst he must expect that the penalty is going to be some sort of an avalanche that is going to be deposited upon him. It is a case of what the French call saute qui peut,—let him save himself who can.

Senator REED. And you are now trying to enforce that maxim in your own behalf?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I have not any use for Hearst, and I make no bones of that.

Senator REED. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to come to the question, if the committee will indulge me, of what these affidavits amount to, if the committee will let me go into it now. If not, I shall have to reserve it, because it will take me an hour.

Senator OVERMAN. It is now half past one and after. Could the members of the committee be back here at half past two?

Senator WOLCOTT. I shall want to be in the Senate this afternoon.

Senator NELSON. I should like to be there.

Senator REED. It is all right if you bring the witness back here after the holidays.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I can do that very comfortably. I love being cross examined. I do not see why the committee does not ask Mr. Hearst's own attorney to do it—he is here and he is a very skillful cross examiner—instead of this being done indirectly.

Senator REED. I think Mr. Hearst's attorney may possibly have a chance to investigate you some day.

Mr. BECKER. He has been at it now for over a year.

Senator REED. With a reasonable degree of skill; and I want to say now, before you rap this down, Mr. Chairman, that this gentleman has made these insinuations a good many times. I want to state now my reason for being here. I know Mr. Hearst merely as a newspaper man. I have no social relations with him, I have no personal relations with him, and I have no political relations with him except that generally speaking he has been supporting the party to which I belong. I have followed with a good deal of interest the line of investigation that has been pursued here, and I became convinced that there was a deliberate and fixed purpose to try and fasten something akin to treason upon a man by what I believed to be scraps of testimony pieced together in a dishonest manner. That was my impression, whether right or wrong. I came in here and asked to cross-examine this gentleman, who I happened to know had put his information, this information, to political uses. I would do the same thing for the editor of the New York World, for the editor of the New York Times, or for a street shoveler. That is my interest, and any man who insinuates it goes further than that is a common scoundrel.

Senator OVERMAN. Oh, we will strike that out.

Senator REED. If the insinuation should hurt him, it goes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not think that ought to go out. This witness has undertaken to brand Senator Reed's purpose here as being actuated by something ulterior.

Senator OVERMAN. Strike that out of the record.

Senator REED. It will go in some record.

Mr. BECKER. I shall consent to have it go in the record. I am used to being blackguarded by anything that emanates from Hearst.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well, let it stay in.

Senator REED. I am saying that any man who makes that insinuation is a common scoundrel.

Mr. BECKER. So far as I am concerned, I am proud of any sort of abuse that emanates in any way from the Hearst crowd.

Senator REED. The Hearst crowd! All right. Here are your documents.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you insist on this question, Senator Reed?

Senator REED. Yes; I think I am entitled to it.

Senator OVERMAN. It is not competent, and we will rule it out.

Mr. BECKER. That is the question in respect to the disclosure of the names of the investigators?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. The committee will stand adjourned subject to the call of the chairman, and I want to say that I shall call it together at some time after the holidays. Mr. Becker, I understand you will come back and subject yourself to the cross-examination of Senator Reed?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and anybody else.

(Thereupon, at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., the subcommittee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

(The following statistics from the Census Office are here printed in the record, by direction of the chairman:)

STATISTICS CONCERNING THE REGISTRATION OF MALE GERMANS IN THE UNITED STATES. (EXCEPT IN ALASKA, HAWAII, AND PORTO RICO)

Registration of German Alien Enemies May 26, 1917.

The table below shows the total number of German male registrants in the United States, in the several States (arranged alphabetically), with corresponding percentages. In addition, it also shows the German-born male population of the United States in 1910 (arranged by States alphabetically) with corresponding percentages.

No figures for the German-born male population are given for Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico because the Census did not give the data. The German registration figures were obtained from the Department of Justice and are complete except for Alaska.

States.	Military department.	German male registrants.	German-born male population in 1910.	Per cent German male registrants.	Per cent German-born population in 1910.
United States.....		254,058	1,337,775	100.0
Alabama.....	S. E.	447	2,183	.2
Alaska (incomplete).....	W.	294		.1
Arizona.....	S.	459	1,343	.2
Arkansas.....	S. E.	932	3,491	.3
California.....	W.	12,205	46,136	4.9
Colorado.....	C.	1,277	10,071	.5
Connecticut.....	N. E.	3,178	15,994	1.2
Delaware.....	E.	256	1,349	.1
District of Columbia.....	E.	89	2,743	.04
Florida.....	S. E.	648	1,553	.2
Georgia.....	S. E.	355	1,948	.1
Hawaii.....	H.	207		.08
Idaho.....	W.	594	3,271	.2
Illinois.....	C.	20,811	167,083	8.3
Indiana.....	C.	10,849	33,264	4.3
Iowa.....	C.	5,964	54,633	2.4
Kansas.....	C.	3,225	19,662	1.3
Kentucky.....	C.	1,029	9,984	.4
Louisiana.....	S. E.	1,021	4,697	.4
Maine.....	N. E.	324	751	.1
Maryland.....	E.	3,325	18,119	1.4
Massachusetts.....	N. E.	3,836	15,714	1.5
Michigan.....	C.	16,875	68,399	6.7
Minnesota.....	C.	7,859	60,009	3.2
Mississippi.....	S. E.	160	1,051	.07
Missouri.....	C.	5,890	48,282	2.3
Montana.....	W.	1,493	5,736	.0
Nebraska.....	C.	7,167	32,239	2.8
Nevada.....	W.	326	1,322	.1
New Hampshire.....	N. E.	238	1,103	.09
New Jersey.....	E.	16,226	63,969	6.4
New Mexico.....	S.	233	1,134	.09
New York.....	E.	50,467	225,175	19.8
North Carolina.....	S. E.	139	664	.06
North Dakota.....	C.	1,141	9,880	.4
Ohio.....	C.	9,259	90,730	3.6
Oklahoma.....	S.	778	6,180	.3
Oregon.....	W.	2,227	11,258	.9
Pennsylvania.....	E.	14,620	101,206	5.7
Porto Rico.....	E.	75		.03
Rhode Island.....	N. E.	412	2,289	.2
South Carolina.....	S. E.	221	972	.09
South Dakota.....	C.	1,814	12,621	.7
Tennessee.....	S. E.	385	2,322	.1
Texas.....	S.	6,290	24,964	2.5
Utah.....	W.	725	2,198	.3
Vermont.....	N. E.	122	444	.05
Virginia.....	S. E.	473	2,586	.2
Washington.....	W.	3,441	18,599	1.4
West Virginia.....	C.	386	3,534	.1
Wisconsin.....	C.	32,899	122,927	12.9
Wyoming.....	W.	392	1,853	.1

The following table is a rearrangement of the data in the preceding table. In this table the states are arranged in numerical sequence, according to percentage rank of the states in respect to German registrants and in respect to the German-born male population in 1910. One of the striking facts disclosed by this table is that New York State has nearly 20% of the total number of registrants and over 15% of the German-born males. Other states that have 1% percentages of registrants are Wisconsin, with 12.9%; Illinois, with 8.3%; Michigan with 6.7%; New Jersey, with 6.4%; and Pennsylvania, with 5.7%. The table also shows a close correlation between the percentage ranks of German registrants and German-born male population. A study of the table indicates, too, that only 19 of the states have more than 1% of the German registrants and German-born male population, and also, that only one Southern State—Texas—is included in this group.

Numerical order of States in respect to German registrants.			Numerical order of States in respect to German-born male population in 1910.
	Military department.
1. New York.....	E.....	19.8	1. New York.....	E.....	16.9
2. Wisconsin.....	C.....	12.9	2. Illinois.....	C.....	12.6
3. Illinois.....	C.....	8.3	3. Wisconsin.....	C.....	9.2
4. Michigan.....	C.....	6.7	4. Pennsylvania.....	E.....	7.6
5. New Jersey.....	E.....	6.4	5. Ohio.....	C.....	6.8
6. Pennsylvania.....	E.....	5.7	6. Michigan.....	C.....	5.1
7. California.....	W.....	4.9	7. New Jersey.....	E.....	4.8
8. Indiana.....	C.....	4.3	8. Minnesota.....	C.....	4.5
9. Ohio.....	C.....	3.6	9. Iowa.....	C.....	4.0
10. Minnesota.....	C.....	3.2	10. Missouri.....	C.....	3.6
11. Nebraska.....	C.....	2.8	11. California.....	W.....	3.4
12. Texas.....	S.....	2.5	12. Indiana.....	C.....	2.5
13. Iowa.....	C.....	2.4	13. Nebraska.....	C.....	2.4
14. Missouri.....	C.....	2.3	14. Texas.....	S.....	1.9
15. Massachusetts.....	N. E.....	1.5	15. Kansas.....	C.....	1.5
16. Washington.....	W.....	1.4	16. Washington.....	W.....	1.4
17. Maryland.....	E.....	1.4	17. Maryland.....	E.....	1.3
18. Kansas.....	C.....	1.3	18. Connecticut.....	N. E.....	1.2
19. Connecticut.....	N. E.....	1.2	19. Massachusetts.....	N. E.....	1.2
20. Oregon.....	W.....	0.9	20. South Dakota.....	C.....	0.9
21. South Dakota.....	C.....	0.7	21. Oregon.....	W.....	0.8
22. Montana.....	W.....	0.6	22. Colorado.....	C.....	0.7
23. Colorado.....	C.....	0.5	23. Kentucky.....	C.....	0.7
24. North Dakota.....	C.....	0.4	24. North Dakota.....	C.....	0.7
25. Kentucky.....	C.....	0.4	25. Oklahoma.....	S.....	0.5
26. Louisiana.....	S. E.....	0.4	26. Montana.....	W.....	0.4
27. Arkansas.....	S. E.....	0.3	27. Louisiana.....	S. E.....	0.3
28. Oklahoma.....	S.....	0.3	28. West Virginia.....	C.....	0.3
29. Utah.....	W.....	0.3	29. Arkansas.....	S. E.....	0.3
30. Florida.....	S. E.....	0.2	30. Idaho.....	W.....	0.2
31. Idaho.....	W.....	0.2	31. Dist. of Columbia.....	E.....	0.2
32. Virginia.....	S. E.....	0.2	32. Virginia.....	S. E.....	0.2
33. Arizona.....	S.....	0.2	33. Tennessee.....	S. E.....	0.2
34. Alabama.....	S. E.....	0.2	34. Rhode Island.....	N. E.....	0.2
35. Rhode Island.....	N. E.....	0.2	35. Utah.....	W.....	0.2
36. West Virginia.....	C.....	0.1	36. Alabama.....	S. E.....	0.2
37. Tennessee.....	S. E.....	0.1	37. Georgia.....	S. E.....	0.1
38. Georgia.....	S. E.....	0.1	38. Wyoming.....	W.....	0.1
39. Wyoming.....	W.....	0.1	39. Florida.....	S. E.....	0.1
40. Nevada.....	W.....	0.1	40. Delaware.....	E.....	0.1
41. Maine.....	N. E.....	0.1	41. Arizona.....	S.....	0.1
42. Alaska.....	W.....	0.1	42. Nevada.....	W.....	0.1
43. Delaware.....	E.....	0.1	43. New Mexico.....	S.....	0.08
44. New Hampshire.....	N. E.....	0.09	44. New Hampshire.....	N. E.....	0.07
45. New Mexico.....	S.....	0.09	45. Mississippi.....	S. E.....	0.07
46. South Carolina.....	S. E.....	0.09	46. South Carolina.....	S. E.....	0.06
47. Hawaii.....	H.....	0.08	47. Maine.....	N. E.....	0.05
48. Mississippi.....	S. E.....	0.07	48. North Carolina.....	S. E.....	0.04
49. North Carolina.....	S. E.....	0.06	49. Vermont.....	N. E.....	0.03
50. Vermont.....	N. E.....	0.05	50.
51. District of Columbia.....	E.....	0.04	51.
52. Porto Rico.....	E.....	0.03	52.

(The following statement and letters were ordered inserted in the record:)

STATEMENT.

An Illustration of the Methods of the German-American Alliance in Trying to Control Public Opinion.

The German-American Alliance of Cincinnati organized in 1914 a Campaign Committee whose business it was to direct public opinion in the interest of Germany. The papers herewith illustrate one phase of its activity in Cincinnati. The University of Cincinnati is a public institution, similar to a state university, supported, however, by the city. When the President of the University, Dr. Charles William Dabney, made an address at Columbus, Ohio, on December 28, 1914, in which he denounced German imperialism and charged Germany with beginning the Great War, the German-American Alliance at its regular meeting on February 5, 1915, adopted resolutions demanding the removal of President Dabney and sent them, through its Campaign Committee, to the Mayor of the city and the Board of Directors of the University. See Exhibit A. 1. In these resolutions, the Alliance charged that President Dabney had made "false and misleading statements about a country whose descendants support the University of Cincinnati in a financial way, and also furnish a large percentage of the students."

The President of the University continued to be an object of interest to the German-American Alliance, whose members attacked him at every opportunity. Such an opportunity was furnished again, when, in March, 1916, President Dabney wrote a letter to his personal friend, Honorable J. Campbell Cantrill, of the House of Representatives, urging him "to stand by the President" in maintaining the American position in opposition to Germany. When Mr. Cantrill published this letter in an interview, the Alliance was so much offended that it addressed the Board of Directors again, demanding that the President of the University be made to "desist in the future from all similar agitatory acts or that, in case of non-compliance, he be compelled to do so by the proper authorities."—a typical German utterance. See Exhibit No. 2.

No action was taken on either of these communications.

Highly typical, too, of the German methods of thinking are the letters of Dr. K. L. Stoll of December 30, 1914, and Mr. Colon Schott of December 29, 1914 addressed to President Dabney. See Exhibits Nos. 3 and 4. It is to be noted that both of these gentlemen are American citizens.

Mr. Schott describes President Dabney's addresses of this period correctly when he says, "According to your speech you decide that Germany is the aggressor, the robber, the chief devil in this hellish war." He expresses a peculiar sinister German philosophy when he says that "this is undoubtedly a consummation of an age, a time, that the evils have become so great that a great war must be given in order that a new start can be made."

To one expression in these curious letters all loyal Americans might have agreed. Dr. Stoll concludes his communication with these words, "May God Almighty smite those who caused the untold suffering of this war, may he punish them and their offspring, may he cause to be ashamed all those who twist and distort truth for no other reasons but hatred or hope of personal advantage. Let us fight for 'right and honor!'" The Americans and their Allies did. And God has smitten the Germans.

CINCINNATI, O., February 27, 1915.

COPY OF RESOLUTIONS, Adapted at the regular meeting, February 5th, 1915

The German-American Alliance believes in liberty of speech; it believes that a man in public life as an individual may use his own judgment in all matters but it disapproves of an official who, as the head of one of our most important institutions, makes false and misleading statements about a country whose descendants support the University of Cincinnati in a financial way, and who furnish a large percentage of the students.

Dr. Dabney, as head of the University of Cincinnati, sent a letter abroad, in which the facts concerning the present war are not stated correctly, and which are misleading.

In consideration thereof the following resolutions were passed at a meeting of the German-American Alliance, held February 5th, 1915.

BE IT RESOLVED, That the Board of Trustees of the University of Cincinnati be requested to dispense with the services of Dr. Dabney as President of the University of Cincinnati at the expiration of his present term; be it further

RESOLVED, That these Resolutions be sent to the Mayor of the City of Cincinnati, and to Dr. Dabney, as well as to the Hon. Board of Trustees, so that they be spread upon our minutes.

Most respectfully,

CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE

Dr. CHAS. W. DABNEY, Pres.,
University of Cincinnati.

Dear Sir: The "German-American Alliance of Cincinnati" does not desire to anyone the right of personal opinions and convictions and it is far from the desire to curtail the liberty of expressing such opinions and convictions either in speech or in writing, provided the dictates of propriety are not violated, nor public morals, and the welfare of the community jeopardized.

This latter occurs when a civic employee attempts to smuggle into public notice, under cover of private conversation or correspondence, opinions and convictions calculated to mislead the general public and to exert undue and pernicious pressure upon the common judgment.

It is to be deplored that the President of the University of Cincinnati, Dr. Chas. W. Dabney, has seen fit to express repeatedly and uncalled-for, his own views in pretendedly private letters, in attempts to foist his dangerous notions, personal fallacies and national antipathies upon the community and to turn the tide of opinion to his own liking.

The "German-American Alliance of Cincinnati" considers such procedure a presumption, deserving of signal and severest condemnation, being attempted by one who is merely a public servant and as such subject and subservient to public control.

Hence, the "German-American Alliance of Cincinnati" demands most energetically at either Dr. Chas. W. Dabney desist in the future from similar agitatory acts, or that, in case of non-compliance, he be compelled to do so by the proper authorities.

Respectfully,

JOHN SCHWAAB,
President.

EMIL KRAMER,
H. G. BURGER,
Committee.

[Dr. K. L. Stoll, Vintonissa Building, W. Seventh St. Tel. Canal 986. Office hours 9 to 1; Sundays and afternoons by appointment.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, December 30-14.

Dr. CHAS W. DABNEY,
President University of Cincinnati,
Cincinnati, O.

DEAR DOCTOR DABNEY: In your address "On higher Patriotism," delivered at the session of the Cosmopolitan Club in Columbus you ventilated your ideas with inference to the European war. Among other things you say:

- (1) The young Servian is fighting for the independence of his country
- (2) the Austrian for the extension of his land
- (3) the Russian hastening to the aid of his brother Slav.
- (4) the German battling to advance the fatherland,
- (5) the Englishman fighting for right and honor,
- (6) the Frenchman resisting the robber of his home,
- (7) the bravest of all, the Belgian, fighting the Teutonic colossus for his country's life.

I hope that you do not make these statements with the intention to discredit, slur and vilify the name of Germany and of her people. You know better than the average American what the Germans are, you know their love of peace. Your position has given you ample opportunity to get acquainted with German traits and the German character. You must have had many occasions to learn what aims and purposes prompt the Germans in their dealings at home and abroad. There is no atom of an inclination to conquest in their character or endeavors. They have used the decades of peace to build up their homes, develop their industry, their trade, arts and sciences. These factors were intended to be and actually constitute === the weapon of German "advance." Germany might have performed and accomplished still more had not jealous neighbors forced the Germans to have one hand on the hilt of their sword, ready to ward off foreign perfidy and insolence. These are facts acknowledged by everybody but a blindfolded minority.

How is it possible that you may give vent to such chaotic remarks? Why do you not take the time to study history and gain information which will raise you above the level of the man who repeats what he hears without first using his gray matter? Do you not teach your pupils to avoid "juarare a verba magistri"?

You know there are two kinds of knowledge: the one that can be acquired only by hard study = it has not obtained the grace of the average mortal. The other kind "falls from heaven into the lap of the shepherd and the old women," it is commonly cherished by the populace. The former kind is modest, the latter obtrusive. There lie the reasons for the negative success of the one and the positive success of the other. Ignorance and arrogance seem to be close cousins and are inmates of the human with a sluggish brain.

As for yourself: take the first chance offering itself for a correction of our statements mentioned above. Try to get familiar with the real causes of this terrible war and join me in this wish: may God Almighty smite those who caused the untold suffering of this war, may he punish them and their offspring, may he cause to be ashamed all those who twist and distort for no other reasons but hatred or hope of personal advantage. Let us fight for "right and honor"!

Yours, very respectfully,

K. L. STOLL, M. D.

P. S.—I have given a copy of this letter to Mr. Otto J. Renner member of the Board of Directors of the University.

[Colon Schott, Attorney at Law, 809-816 Provident Bank Bldg., S. E. corner Seventh and Vine Sts. Telephone Canal 663.]

CINCINNATI, O., December 29, 1914.

CHAS. W. DABNEY, Esq.,

President Cincinnati University, City.

MY DEAR SIR: If the Commercial Tribune correctly reports your speech at Columbus, Ohio, on Monday evening last, I am not much surprised that you have encountered much opposition in Cincinnati, as the head of its University for the maintenance of which all the people of our city are heavily taxed. I respect fearlessness wherever it is properly tempered with truth, but it seems to me that one who stands at the head of the educational institutions of a community as you do, owes a special duty to his fellowman, in discussing a momentous question as the European War, to be scrupulously careful that his discussion shall be free from venom, and thoroughly dispassionate.

You offend grievously in your speech in this regard, you decide in your own way the purposes and motives actuating the various nations involved, and it does not matter, if in doing so you run counter to much of the best thought in this country. According to your speech you decide that Germany is the aggressor, the robber, the chief devil in this hellish war.

It is my belief that in a certain sense it is a special privilege to live in this world at this time. This is undoubtedly the consummation of an age, a time that the evils have become so great that a great war must be given in order that a new start can be made. This war is not an accident. It is an unavoidable consequence of the tremendous growth of the love of the world, the love of power and of self, and it seems to me that the President of a University should be busy in pointing these things out to the student mind, and not permit himself to be madly misled, just like common mortals.

Your tirade against the Germans and German sympathizers will not have the effect of changing their minds as to the responsibility for this war, but it will have the natural effect of somewhat lowering you in their esteem and make them feel that the best interests of our University would be subserved by permitting you to publicly advocate the claims of dear Albion as the defender of the right and honor of the universe, and relieve you from your present duties which must seem onerous and circumscribed to you.

Yours sincerely,

COLON SCHOTT,
A Taxpayer.

P. S.—I have this day transmitted a copy of this letter to the Board of Directors of the Cincinnati University.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Mr. Means, will you come to the stand? I believe that I will examine you this morning; I will let you make a statement.

Let it appear in the record that Mr. J. A. Arnold appeared according to summons and requested that his examination be postponed until Monday next. The same is true of I. M. Darden.

TESTIMONY OF MR. GASTON B. MEANS.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. You have indicated to me that you desired to make a statement, your name having been mentioned in these proceedings, that you had some matters that you could state about German propaganda, and we will be glad if you will make any statement that you desire.

Mr. MEANS. If you will allow me, I will start out, in the beginning, with my first experience with the Germans, and how I happened to be associated with them.

When I left college—the University of North Carolina—in 1901, I became superintendent of the cotton mill graded schools at Albemarle, N. C., with Mr. J. W. Cannon, president of the mills, and a great many other cotton mills located in the South. I was superintendent of those schools for two years.

Then Mr. J. W. Cannon opened his own selling office; that is, selling the products of his own mills instead of selling through a commission house. He sent Mr. J. C. Leslie, one of his right-hand men in New York, in the South, and myself. That was in 1903.

Shortly, after being there 18 months or possibly 2 years, I started to writing for textile papers because of my experience in the cotton-mill industry and my knowledge of the growing of cotton. Some of these articles attracted the attention of Germans.

Senator NELSON. Of whom?

Mr. MEANS. Of Germans. A German came to me and made arrangements, in 1905—I was traveling then in all the large cities east of the Rocky Mountains—to report the trade conditions as I found them. I was coming constantly in contact with the buyers who went to Europe twice a year. They wanted definite information as to what these buyers had to say as to manufacturing conditions in England, Scotland, and Germany, particularly of hosiery and bleached goods. I interviewed these buyers, because I was coming directly in contact with them myself on domestic lines, that is, lines of merchandise manufactured in this country, and I would interview these buyers on conditions as they found them in Europe, whether deliveries could be made, construction of merchandise, requirements in the opinion of the buyers in this country—what consumers wanted.

Shortly after that, or some time after that, we opened an office in Chicago. I was made manager of that office and covered the Middle West cities. I continued these reports for the Germans. They wanted very accurate, definite information, when these buyers would come back, to find out from them——

Senator NELSON. They paid you for it, I suppose?

Mr. MEANS. Oh, yes; they were paying me for it.

Senator NELSON. Who paid you?

Mr. MEANS. A man named Swarz.

Senator STERLING. Was he the man who spoke to you first about the matter of making these reports?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; he was the man who spoke to me first.

Senator NELSON. Was he connected with the legation here?

Mr. MEANS. No. Well, the way I always understand it was that the German Government took enormous interest in the commercial welfare of its manufacturing plants; that is, the manufacturing plants located in Germany.

Now, these reports that I made may have been used for other purposes or they may not have been. They may have been reported to the German manufacturing plants.

I got married in 1913 and I wanted to stop traveling. In May or June, 1914——

Senator STERLING. Did you keep up this work all the time?

Mr. MEANS. Oh, yes; I kept it up continually. I made a report never less than once a week.

Senator NELSON. You made a report once a week?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; and sometimes more often than that, of conditions as I would find them. For instance, during the panic of 1907 and 1908 they were interested in that. They wanted to know about the financial standing of the firms that the large domestic manufacturers were selling—that is, their rating—whether they were willing to sell them or not, and what would be their limit of credit.

In the early part of 1903 they had an enormous fight on manufactured hosiery. Later the United States Government took that up in the tariff bill.

The Germans were squeezing out all other foreign lines of hosiery. There was no question about that. They were gradually pushing out every other line. They virtually had the business monopolized.

Senator NELSON. Pushing it out in this country?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; not the domestic manufactures, because they were making very little full-fashion stuff at that time; but they were pushing ing out the English and Scotch and Irish; particularly the English and the Scotch.

Senator STERLING. With their own manufactured goods?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. They were finding out from the buyers about reinforced heels and the tops of hosiery and the technical terms of that kind. They were very much interested in that. There was a big fight on through the country in connection with mercerized damask; that is, cotton mercerized damask. The Germans had managed by a process to virtually make, I think generally conceded, the best line of mercerized damask there was in the country. They had devoted an enormous amount of time to developing this process of mercerization, and they would go further than that. They were perfectly willing, always, to have their line of merchandise subjected to any laundry test to show that they had not only the finish but also that the quality was there.

With the English line of damask, the English had a tendency to stick to the same old patterns. For instance, they would get a pattern of mistletoe or holly and they would continue on those old patterns for years and years, but the Germans would change around every 12 months and give the American woman—that is, the consumer—a different pattern. They catered to the American consumer, the women buyers, the mothers of homes, because they believed that they could be sold merchandise when they would see the patterns, even when they really did not need the piece of goods. They figured that if the women of America saw a new pattern coming out and the salesman could show it, even if the woman had linen in her home, she would make another purchase, especially on the high-priced stuff. I made those reports, as I say, straight along. At the same time I was writing for some American textile papers, and in 1914, or May or June, Mr. Swarz came to me and asked me whether I could devote all of my time to their interests. By way of parenthesis I might say that the Cannon line of mills are the largest in the South—one of the largest in the South—and now ranks right up at the top in the United States. Mr. Swarz, representing the Germans, came to me and asked me to devote all of my time to the work I was doing for them, or work of some nature, he did not say. I assumed at that time that that was what he meant. In January I had had an interview with Mr. J. W. Cannon, and I wanted to stop traveling so much, because I had been married in 1913. I made no effort to renew my contract. I had made a contract with Mr. Cannon, and I never worked for anybody except Mr. Cannon up to 1914. That is, my main work was with him. I did not make any effort to renew my contract with Mr. Cannon, and the three-year contract expired July 1, because I had made up my mind that if I could prevent traveling so much I would associate myself with that interest. I had no idea at that time what they had in mind. My services were discontinued with the Cannon mills on July 1, 1914. I was to go down to New York City with Mr. Swarz. They wrote me from the main office of the Cannon Mills and asked me to remain in the Chicago office until I could break in a young man named Reed. I did that. In August, 1914, I came to New York City. I was taken to the German Club and I met Capt. Boy-Ed for the first time.

Senator NELSON. What time was that?

Mr. MEANS. In August, I think, or the early part of September. I had been there some days.

Senator NELSON. After the war had begun?

Mr. MEANS. After the war had begun.

Senator STERLING. Who introduced you to Capt. Boy-Ed?

Mr. MEANS. Mr. Swarz. He had a great many other men, as it developed, at work in New York with him—that is, commercial men—who had been reporting in respect to different lines.

Senator NELSON. Do you speak German?

Mr. MEANS. No. They had a great many of these other men in New York City that had been associated with Mr. Swarz reporting on steel and every other commodity in the country, I suppose, men whom I met casually, and they would tell me the different things that they had been reporting on, covering the commercial end of the country.

Senator NELSON. What was the result of your interview? Did you enter into any agreement with them?

Mr. MEANS. No; I found out what he wanted. They were going to supply vessels—to put provisions, coal, etc., on vessels—to supply the German raiders. I listened very attentively to what they had to say.

Senator NELSON. They wanted you to help them in that?

Mr. MEANS. To help them in that. I listened attentively to what they had to say.

Senator STERLING. When you say “they” had to say, whom do you mean?

Mr. MEANS. Capt. Boy-Ed and Mr. Swarz, and four or five Germans up there in the German Club. Four or five interviewed me at different times, I listened to their proposition, and then I advised them that I was not interested.

Senator NELSON. State specifically what they wanted you to do.

Mr. MEANS. They wanted me to attend or help to attend to securing and getting of these supplies, supplies of every kind, the purchasing of them, and to furnishing the vessels that went out to the different German raiders. That was the prime object, that is what it was—supply of every nature that pertained to that, oil, food, coal, and I was to attend to the particular part that was assigned to me.

Senator NELSON. You did not enter into the employment?

Mr. MEANS. No; I listened very attentively in three or four different interviews on the subject, and advised them that I was not interested. I measured it very carefully. I saw that it was a breach of the United States Government laws, and I advised them that I was not interested in a proposition of that kind, and they wanted to know why and I told them very frankly, simply because it was a breach of the United States Government laws. Then they discussed the ethical side of it, whether it was wrong for Boy-Ed or the Germans to do it, and cited the instance to me about what Dewey did in China, that his vessels were supplied from there, etc., and the conversation ended up on that proposition by my saying that if the German Government ordered Boy-Ed to do it, he was a subordinate officer and he should do it, if he wanted to, but I would not have anything to do with that.

Senator STERLING. What particular commodity did they want you to supply?

Mr. MEANS. They did not go into details. They would have assigned me to some particular commodity later.

Senator OVERMAN. Just come down to what you did do when you were employed, and what you were employed to do.

Mr. MEANS. That was the last I saw of the Germans. I wanted to show you this consecutively, and how it was when I did go with the Germans finally. Then I went to Hyde & Sons, a big dry goods converting firm, because I was familiar with that kind of business, and I started to make connections with them, but I did not, but I had already had something in my mind. In my experience I found out that with firms that had gone into bankruptcy, in a great many instances there were hidden assets, that the bankrupt firm did not disclose. With that idea in view, in November, I think it was, I went to Mr. W. J. Burns and outlined this plan to him. For instance, I was not coming in contact with the Germans at all, except casually with some of them I would meet on the street, and they would say how do you do and I would say how do you do to them, but I did not come in contact with any of them for quite a while, and I put this proposition up to Mr. Burns, and we spent quite a good deal of money outlining it.

Senator NELSON. What proposition?

Mr. MEANS. Organizing a department to look after hidden assets of firms that had gone into bankruptcy.

Senator NELSON. To buy the bankrupt goods?

Mr. MEANS. No; firms that had gone into bankruptcy, where they owed cotton mills, where they would go into bankruptcy intentionally and have hidden assets.

Senator NELSON. What was the outcome of that?

Mr. MEANS. The outcome of that was that the plan is still being worked out now. We organized what we called a commercial department in Mr. Burns's office. I was made manager. In the late fall of 1914, or the early spring of 1915, in coming in contact with some of these Germans I had learned they were organized—that was purely in a friendly way, some of these men I had met with Mr. Swarz—and they were constantly bragging about how they were going to win the war, every time one of them would come in contact with you, and one of them told me about their plan to go up into Canada and blow up some of the railroads and destroy the canals.

Senator STERLING. You say one of them told you. Who?

Mr. MEANS. I think that was Swarz himself. That was just a casual conversation. You would pass them on the street and they would stop and talk to you.

I went at once with this piece of information to the Dodsworths.

Senator NELSON. To whom?

Mr. MEANS. To Dodsworth Bros., editors of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, whom I knew, and advised them what I understood the Germans were going to do.

Senator WOLCOTT. Where were they located?

Mr. MEANS. On Broadway; 42 Broadway. They are the editors or owners of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

Senator OVERMAN. Give their names.

Mr. MEANS. The Dodsworths.

Senator OVERMAN. Which Dodsworths?

Mr. MEANS. The two brothers there. There are three or four others. I talked to the man who attends to the commercial end of it and the editorial writers.

Senator NELSON. What further use did they make of the information?

Mr. MEANS. They reported that.

Senator NELSON. To whom?

Mr. MEANS. They reported that to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, I think. I then told Mr. W. J. Burns the details of what——

Senator NELSON. Was he the detective?

Mr. MEANS. He is the detective. He immediately called up the head detective of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. I was present there when he called him up, and got into communication with him. What happened afterwards I do not know, with the detective of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, but I heard him when he called him up right after I reported it to Mr. Burns.

I saw nothing further of the Germans, heard nothing definite about them at all, or anybody connected with the Germans, until later in the spring of 1915, when Dr. Rumely came into Mr. Burns's office and had an interview with him. Mr. Burns sent for me, and just as they were going out of the door, out of Mr. Burns's private office, he introduced me to Dr. Rumely, and he told me that Dr. Rumely had heard or believed that at the Fore River Shipbuilding Yards submarines were being made for one of the belligerent nations, and that certain German-Americans had raised funds for the purpose of investigating and ascertaining whether that was a fact.

Senator NELSON. That is what Dr. Rumely told you?

Mr. MEANS. No; that is what Mr. Burns told me.

Senator NELSON. That is what Mr. Burns told you?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Did he tell you that in Dr. Rumely's presence?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; he told me that in Dr. Rumely's presence. He said: "Now, I have explained to Dr. Rumely that I am strongly proally; that I am guarding some plants now that are making munitions," and explained to me further that this fund was raised by German-Americans. He said: "Even knowing my feelings about it, he wants me to make this investigation."

Senator NELSON. He wanted you to do it?

Mr. MEANS. No; he wanted Mr. Burns to do it. And he said. "We will make the investigation."

Senator NELSON. Who wanted Burns to make the investigation?

Mr. MEANS. Dr. Rumely.

Senator NELSON. Dr. Rumely?

Mr. MEANS. Dr. Rumely. That is the first time I met Dr. Rumely. Mr. Burns explained that to him very carefully. So we started out to make this investigation.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Burns employ you to make it?

Mr. MEANS. I was with Mr. Burns—employed by him—then.

Senator STERLING. How long were you associated with him?

Mr. MEANS. In the fall of 1914 I had begun with him in this commercial department and had been doing other commercial work for him. attending to collections, and so forth, in his own private business, investigating firms that people would send inquiries in about, as to their financial standing, and so on.

Senator NELSON. You were an employee then of the Burns bureau?

Mr. MEANS. Of the Burns Detective Agency, yes; and manager of the commercial bureau.

So Mr. Burns said that he would make that investigation. In the meantime——

Senator NELSON. What was Dr. Rumely's interest in it? Could you make out what Dr. Rumely's interest in it was?

Mr. MEANS. I will come to that shortly, Senator.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Mr. MEANS. Dr. Rumely said very carefully there in my presence that this fund was German-American money that was raised by German-American citizens. That was his statement on that end of the business.

Previous to this Mr. Burns had been offered work by the German Government and had promptly declined it and said he would have nothing to do with it, nor would he have anything to do with any of the work for any of the nations at war, because he was going to follow the President's instructions in spirit and letter and complete detail; that he was going to observe absolute neutrality, when this proposition was offered to him for some direct German Government work.

Mr. Bielaski, when he was on the stand the other day, was mistaken when he said that Dr. Rumely had given $3,000 for the investigation as to the supplying of English cruisers. Dr. Rumely had nothing to do with that investigation at all.

Senator NELSON. How do you know?

Mr. MEANS. Because I saw Dr. Rumely every day, and I know all about the supplying of English cruisers. I investigated that, too. I was at the head of it and handled it. I know who he was reporting to.

Well, we completed this investigation of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. and we ascertained that they were not building any submarines there to be sent to any of the belligerent nations. That was our final and definite report on that matter.

In the meantime the Hamburg-American Line, old and regular clients of the W. J. Burns Detective Agency, had employed Mr. Burns to ascertain whether the English cruisers hovering off of the Atlantic coast—that is, along Jersey and Massachusetts and all up and down the Atlantic coast—were getting supplied from the United States.

The Hamburg-American Line had learned that a tugboat, in attempting to supply these English cruisers, had had these what they call in shipping circles green groceries flooded; a wave had dashed up and flooded them in the low-cut boat. Some report had reached the Germans to that effect.

From that they formed the opinion that the English cruisers were being supplied from the United States.

To ascertain whether that was a fact, we opened headquarters at the Eastland Hotel. I was living at the Manhattan Hotel, at that time, and we opened these headquarters at the Eastland Hotel, to interview tugboat captains, and to ascertain whether the English cruisers were being supplied from the United States.

Senator STERLING. The Burns Detective Agency, then, were employed for that purpose by the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. MEANS. By the Hamburg-American Line; Mr. Meyer employed them. The Hamburg-American Line did the employing.

Senator NELSON. They were really at work, then, for the Germans—the Burns agency—and furnishing them information?

Mr. MEANS. No; the Burns agency was not at work for the German Government.

Senator NELSON. You men who were looking into this matter were?

Mr. MEANS. No; the employees were not; because Mr. Burns had declined to accept any work from the German Government.

Senator NELSON. But the Hamburg-American Line is a quasi-Government institution?

Mr. MEANS. The Hamburg-American Line had been clients of Mr. Burns——

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MEANS. For years.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. And guarding their different piers, and so forth.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but that did not alter the situation. The Hamburg-American Line is a quasi-Government institution.

Mr. MEANS. I do not know the details of that end of it; but I do know that the Hamburg-American Line had been clients of the Burns agency. Mr. Bielaski is mistaken, again, when he says that I posed then as a Canadian. I was registered at the Manhattan Hotel under my own name, G. B. Means, from Chicago. The register will show that. And not at any time did I pose as a Canadian—a rich Canadian, or any other kind of a Canadian.

We made this investigation——

Senator NELSON. Did you not know that you were operating for Germans in that matter?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. You had no idea of that?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. You did not have a suspicion that the Hamburg-American Line was a German line?

Mr. MEANS. Did I have a suspicion that the Hamburg-American Line was a German line?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. I knew that it was running backward and forward to Germany, but I knew that the New York office there was an American crowd.

Senator NELSON. And it did not dawn upon you that that information that they sought was really in the interest of the German Government; that they wanted to know whether English ships were supplied from this country? That did not dawn upon you that that work for the German Government, did it?

Mr. MEANS. No; not that particular feature. What did dawn upon me was that Germans in this country wanted to know whether that was true.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but did you not know that that information was what the German Government wanted?

Mr. MEANS. I suppose the German Government was very much interested in it.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. They were interested in a great many things——

Senator NELSON. So that you really could not help knowing that you were working for the German Government indirectly?

Mr. MEANS. Oh, yes; because I knew that Mr. Burns had declined to work for the German Government.

Senator NELSON. Oh, well, do not get behind Burns' coat tails.

Mr. MEANS. I knew that Mr. Burns would continue to work for one of his old clients, like the Hamburg-American Line.

Senator NELSON. Do not get behind his coat tails. Go on.

Mr. MEANS. All right, sir.

We made this investigation, and we got some captains of tugboats who made affidavit that they had supplied the English cruisers. With these affidavits in my hands I went out and proved, at once, that this was not true; that they could not have supplied the English cruisers on the days that they stated, because they were located at different places around the water front of New York City. We discovered positively that that was not a fact; that none of the tugboat captains with whom we could come in contact had supplied any of the English cruisers.

Senator OVERMAN. Were you ever in the employment of the German Government?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; later.

Senator NELSON. Were you acquainted with Paul Koenig?

Mr. MEANS. I met him one time. I saw him one time.

Senator NELSON. When and where?

Mr. MEANS. I saw him on Broadway.

Senator NELSON. When?

Mr. MEANS. In the spring or summer of 1915.

Senator NELSON. What took place between you?

Mr. MEANS. I was introduced to him, and passed on. I talked to him for probably a moment.

Senator NELSON. And that was all?

Mr. MEANS. That was all.

Senator NELSON. That is the whole extent of your acquaintance with him?

Mr. MEANS. That is the whole extent of my acquaintance with Paul Koenig.

Senator NELSON. Or your dealings with him?

Mr. MEANS. Absolutely. That was the only conversation I had with him. I may have seen him one time after that. He was connected with the Hamburg-American Line.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. I reported to him, or he was there one time when I made a report to him. I wrote him a letter, or something, one time. I remember that. I am very sure that is correct.

Senator NELSON. Was he not the go-between between you and the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir; that was Mr. Meyer, if there was any go-between. There was not any go-between at all. I just walked down to his office——

Senator NELSON. To Koenig's office?

Mr. MEANS. No; Mr. Meyer's office.

Senator NELSON. To Mr. Meyer's office?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Who is Meyer?

Mr. MEANS. He is one of the officials of the Hamburg-American Line.

Senator STERLING. As to those affidavits which you say were made, were they made by captains of tugboats?

Mr. MEANS. They were made by captains of tugboats.

Senator STERLING. And they were to the effect that they had supplied the British cruisers?

Senator NELSON. No.

Mr. MEANS. Yes; that they had supplied the British cruisers.

Senator NELSON. Did your investigation show that those affidavits were false?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Now, what did you find out in regard to who had procured the making of those affidavits?

Mr. MEANS. Some of our own men. These captains made these affidavits themselves, to some of our own men—to some of Mr. Burns's own men.

Senator NELSON. Burns's men had procured those fraudulent affidavits?

Mr. MEANS. Not intentionally at all, Senator, but——

Senator NELSON. I am not talking about their intention; never mind about that. But some of Burns's men had procured those affidavits?

Mr. MEANS. These captains had come in, into the Eastland Hotel, and made these affidavits that they had supplied.

Senator NELSON. And they had made them at the instance of some of Burns's employees?

Mr. MEANS. Not at their instance at all. We let the report generally go out on the water front.

Senator NELSON. The Burns's men were casually there, then, and——

Mr. MEANS. Oh, no.

Senator NELSON. And saw them make those affidavits? Was that all there was to it?

Mr. MEANS. No; they were there conducting the investigation, just like we would conduct any other investigation.

Senator NELSON. Were they not there to get those affidavits?

Mr. MEANS. They were not there to get those affidavits. They were there to get the facts. If a man made a statement, we would continue to make the investigation as to whether the man's statement was the truth.

Senator NELSON. And write out the affidavits?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; and write out the affidavits, and then we did not know when the captain came in whether he was telling the truth or not, and so we would investigate to ascertain whether or not the captain had told the truth or not.

Senator NELSON. Yes; afterwards.

Mr. MEANS. Immediately afterwards.

Senator NELSON. You would first get the poor fellows to swear to affidavits, and then afterwards look them up to see whether they were true or not? Was that the modus operandi?

Mr. MEANS. We got nobody—forced nobody to do it. The captains came in voluntarily. We had another captain of a tugboat that brought these men in. We first met him and he said that he thought such and such captains had taken supplies out there.

As a matter of fact, some of the captains that did make affidavits had thrown over to some of these cruisers newspapers or something of that kind—to an English cruiser—when they were passing.

Senator STERLING. Who or what prompted these captains to make these false affidavits, to begin with?

Mr. MEANS. Because they were under the impression that they were going to get an opportunity to supply these English cruisers. What we were trying to do was to ascertain the facts; and we discovered that they had not supplied the English cruisers, nor could we discover any instance where any tugboat had.

Senator STERLING. Do you mean to say that they thought that by making the affidavit that they had supplied, they would get the business of supplying them again; was that the idea?

Mr. MEANS. That was the idea; that they were going to be——

Senator NELSON. Was that held out to him by the Burns representatives—that encouragement—that if they would make those affidavits they might get more business?

Mr. MEANS. Oh, no; not in that sense at all.

Senator NELSON. In what sense, then?

Mr. MEANS. In this sense. We let it be generally known——

Senator NELSON. Who do you mean by “we”? Who are “we”?

Mr. MEANS. The complete force that was working for Mr. Burns.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MEANS. At the Eastland Hotel. We had eight or ten men there, and put one on for one day and one on for another day.

Senator NELSON. What did you let them know before the poor fellows swore?

Mr. MEANS. That what we wanted to do was to supply these vessels, and if anybody had supplied them, we wanted to ascertain the facts.

Senator NELSON. Who did you want to supply the affidavits for?

Mr. MEANS. Who did we want to supply the affidavits for?

Senator NELSON. Yes. You were trying to get affidavits. You intended to give those affidavits to somebody, did you not?

Mr. MEANS. If the affidavits were true, we would give them to the Hamburg-American line.

Senator NELSON. Then your modus operandi was, first, to get these affidavits to give to the Hamburg-American line, and then to follow it up and prove that the affidavits, as shown by your investigation, were false, and give that information to the Hamburg-American line?

Mr. MEANS. First to get the affidavits, and find out whether anybody had supplied the vessels, or there were rumors to that effect, and investigate and ascertain whether that was a true fact.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. That they had. We would get in touch with one captain who would come in and say that he understood that Capt.

Blank—Capt. John, or Capt. Jones—had carried supplies out there. Then we would ask Jones whether he had, and he would say that he had, in some instances. Some of them would say that they had not. He would make an affidavit to that effect. We would then go out and ascertain whether that affidavit was true. We ascertained that every affidavit that those captains made was not true, and we so reported it. And Mr. W. J. Burns advised the Hamburg-American line that he believed that they were liars; that there was no such condition prevailing.

Senator WOLCOTT. That the captains were liars.

Mr. MEANS. That he believed that the German crowd were lying.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me understand this. Let me see if I have caught this story correctly.

The primary thing you were after was to ascertain whether or not tug boats were supplying the British cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly; to ascertain the exact facts.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; and you approached the investigation of that question in this manner: You opened up a force with headquarters at the Eastland Hotel—along the water front I take that to be?

Mr. MEANS. That is correct; right down at the Battery, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your problem was to get at the people who probably were supplying the British cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that you threw out the news that you people were interested in supplying British cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you wanted to get in touch with tugboat captains who had supplied the British cruisers in order that you might do business with them to supply them for you?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was a ruse, in other words, to draw them in?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly; and it was——

Senator WOLCOTT. Wait a minute and let me see if I have this correctly. That was a ruse that you threw out to bait these fellows in?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then some of them came in and said they had supplied the cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Yes, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. For the purpose of getting this business from your people to supply cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you asked them to make affidavits that they had supplied the cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; we asked them to make affidavit as to what they had done.

Senator WOLCOTT. And then you proceeded to investigate as to whether they actually had supplied the cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly.

Senator WOLCOTT. And your further investigation showed that none of them had supplied the cruisers?

Mr. MEANS. That is it.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you reported those facts to the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. MEANS. We reported those facts to the Hamburg-American Line, and then Mr. W. J. Burns notified them that he believed that whoever was furnishing them with that information was deliberately lying.

Senator STERLING. Did you suspect that these affidavits were false at the time they were being made?

Mr. MEANS. Not at all, Senator; not until we had investigated and ascertained the facts.

Senator STERLING. How did you ascertain the facts, in brief?

Mr. MEANS. By finding out—by tracing these tugboats. The captain would not only make the affidavit that he himself was in charge, but he would further name his tugboat.

Now, then, we would get in touch with the different crews and ascertain by investigation where this particular tugboat was on such and such a day, and what it was doing. It might have been hauling something else. We would find them away up at the Bronx River sometimes, in an entirely different locality. And we would get other reports following right behind those with the Hamburg-American Line showing that the captains had made false affidavits and that it was not true; and Mr. Burns himself then got in touch with the Hamburg-American Line officials and told some of them that they were deliberately being lied to, and that there was no foundation in fact for the statement that the English cruisers were being supplied from here, because, in addition to that, we found out that the English cruisers were being supplied from Nova Scotia and the Bermuda Islands.

We went further than that to show where they were being supplied from, and Mr. Burns so stated to them. Now, after this investigation was complete, or just before it was complete, Mr. Lamb, of the legal department of the neutrality squad of the customhouse in New York City—wait a minute. This ruse, etc., that we were working down there blew up on April 1. We ascertained the fact that there was no such condition prevailing. There was lots in the papers about it at that time. Mr.—what is his name, the collector of the port at that time—Senator O'Gorman's son-in-law?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Malone?

Mr. MEANS. Malone. Mr. Malone really thought that we were going to supply these English cruisers, that that was our intention, so he was really watching this place, what we call a blind, and he kept his eye on it constantly. On April 1 the whole thing came out, what we were driving at. Mr. Lamb, of the legal department of the customhouse, and who really, I understood, was in charge of the neutrality squad down there, came to Mr. Burns's office and asked for the details of it. We promptly turned over to Mr. Lamb all of the details. I went to the files and got them out myself, the complete files of the entire report covering the entire investigation, giving him every detail of it. That was available for Mr. Bielaski. The United States Government had it. Dr. Rumely did not pay for that investigation. The Hamburg-American Line paid for the investigation. Not at that time was any of that work done for the German Government, because Mr. Burns had said and let them understand that he would not work for any Government, and he did not, so far as I know, until I left him.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are not with him now?

Mr. MEANS. No.

Senator OVERMAN. When did you leave him?

Mr. MEANS. I will come to that in a minute; when I went with the Germans, then. I understood from the Germans after that, from Capt. Boy-Ed, that the French prime minister, they believed, and understood, was having these submarines built at the Fore River Shipbuilding Yards. Of course that was in 1915, before we got into the war. While I was working with Mr. Burns in the spring of 1915 I had leave of absence at one time, maybe oftener than that. Dr. Rumely saw me and asked me to attend to a personal matter for Capt. Boy-Ed, which I did. That was in connection with a fight they had up there, two Germans, about a woman. Part of the details were in the newspaper at the time. I attended to that for him personally, and interviewed one or two people, and I will give you the name of the lawyer that I employed if you desire it. He is an absolutely loyal American. I employed him for Capt. Boy-Ed, and there is no use of giving his name to the public unless it is necessary, but I will give it to the committee if you want it. It was purely a personal matter with Capt. Boy-Ed. After I left Mr. Burns, or during one of these leaves of absence——

Senator NELSON. Did you leave his employ?

Mr. MEANS. I got away to attend to three or four personal matters at different times, out in Chicago, etc.

Senator NELSON. Oh, on temporary leave?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. During one of these temporary leaves of absence I met some of the Germans, these men, who were more or less of a commercial crowd. I had come in contact with lots of them on the streets—the city of New York was full of them—and I learned about Gen. Blanchard and the Huerta plot. I got the entire details of this from the Germans. I told Mr. Burns at any time that I heard of anything detrimental to the United States I would report it promptly. I heard all the details of the Huerta plot, what he intended to do in this country, and about Gen Blanchard coming on here from Barcelona, Spain, and with whom Huerta was making his connections in the United States in New York City. As soon as I gave Mr. Burns a verbal report of that he asked me to write out a complete written report, with the Mexicans involved, and the Germans involved. I sat down and wrote out a five-page or a six-page report, giving the names, the addresses, the plans, the events, and every detail of what Huerta was going to do. When I handed Mr. Burns that report he called up Mr. Tumulty, the President's secretary, here in Washington, and told him to meet him in Philadelphia. Mr. Tumulty did meet Mr. Burns in Philadelphia, and Mr. Burns did read that report to him, giving him the entire details. Huerta did do exactly what I said he was going to do in that report. He did go to the Mexican border. And when Mr. Bielaski questions my loyalty I want to say I had some reason for not reporting it to him direct or furnishing him with any information, and that was part of his animosity toward me, because I did not show that to him, a man that I knew was—well, I shall come to that a little bit later. Mr. Tumulty will not deny that, nor will Mr. Burns deny it. That report was afterwards read in the open court at my trial in North Carolina. Beside gaining this information about Huerta and Blanchard, I also discovered that Capt. von Papen, through what is virtually the clearing house of the insurance companies in this country, had gotten all of the data together. The German insurance companies are the great reinsurers in the United States. The information was available to them through the clearance house of the insurance companies, of every man who has made application for insurance, every man that was carrying life insurance and every man that was carrying accident insurance. Those applications, whether they really had gotten out any insurance or not, whether they were carrying insurance or not, showed whether they were Germans, and if so, where they were educated in Germany, what their business was, whether they were chemists, whether they were machinists, and exactly what their occupation was. Capt. von Papen got all of that data together. I understood from some Germans what he was going to do with that data, that he was selecting from it certain chemists and certain expert machinists, and men of the socialistic tendency who would be prone to blow up a place or do anything of that kind. I went to A. W. Haywood, a lawyer for the Liggett tobacco people, with whom I was in college, and I told him that this was confidential information. I said that there was no question but what that was what Capt. von Papen was going to do with this—that he was going to organize these men. Haywood said, “I will tell you what to do. I would get in touch with Secretary of the Navy Daniels—he is from our State and you know him—and I would outline to him where they are getting this information and that they are organizing in the United States, and that from this data they are selecting the Germans they want.”

I got on the train and I came to Washington, and I went into the Navy Department and I saw Secretary of the Navy Mr. Joseph Daniels, and I told him exactly what they were going to do. Mr. Daniels the next day called up L. D. Hartsel, a lawyer in my town, and asked him whether he thought Means knew what he was talking about. Mr. Hartsel phoned back to him, and he said that he was pretty apt to know if he said so. In that conversation with Mr. Daniels—well, Mr. Daniels said that they would find out further, and Mr. Daniels knows what he advised me at that time. I furnished him the information. One of the questions Mr. Daniels asked me was whether I believed they were organizing to attack the United States. I said they were not organizing to attack the United States. They would not attempt to do anything of that kind, but I said that they were not organizing for any friendly purpose to the United States. In this work of this kind that I had done for the Germans I had come in contact with a great many of them, and they would see me, and they were willing to tell me—to make intimations of one kind and another, and I would talk further to another one to get up additional data as to what their intentions were, and each and every time that I found anything that was really detrimental, specifically, and definite, as on the two times I have mentioned to you, I reported it promptly and properly and to the best place in the world, instead of to Mr. Bielaski or to the Department of Justice.

Maj. HUMES. What was the date of this report—this particular matter that you are now referring to?

Mr. MEANS. Which matter?

Maj. HUMES. Reporting to the Secretary of the Navy about the insurance matter.

Mr. MEANS. If you will make Mr. Bielaski turn over to me my files which they stole out of my apartment, I will tell you by reference to my diary.

Maj. HUMES. Can you not tell me approximately the date? Was it while you were working for Boy-Ed or before?

Mr. MEANS. It may have been a little before or a little afterwards: I do not know definitely about that. I do not remember the exact date. Further down in my memoranda I may be able to recall that.

Senator NELSON. Were you not afraid of Bielaski, that he was on your track, that you were working for the Germans?

Mr. MEANS. God has not yet made the man that I am afraid of. I do not come from that stock. I am not afraid of anybody.

Senator NELSON. We are not accustomed to that kind of talk in the country that I come from. Go on and testify.

Mr. MEANS. I have a reason for saying that, because I will tell you what Mr. Bielaski did afterwards to attempt to frighten me.

Senator NELSON. We are not accustomed to that kind of talk when I come from. Go on and give your testimony.

Mr. MEANS. All right, sir. At the time—oh, now, Major. I have got that straight. I was with Capt. Boy-Ed at that time, because after Mr. Burns had made this report to Mr. Tumulty, Capt. Boy-Ed got hold of the information, or some of the Germans did in some way, that I had reported the Huerta matter, and he sent for me and told me that the Germans knew that I had furnished this data: that I had the details of it; and that I had furnished it to the Government; and that I need not consider myself in their service doing any work for them.

Senator OVERMAN. Had you been in their services before?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. I had gotten leaves of absence, as I say, two or three times from Mr. Burns.

Senator OVERMAN. When did Boy-Ed employ you, if he did employ you?

Mr. MEANS. That was in the spring of 1915 that I did this piece of personal work for him that I have reference to. I have forgotten the details. The newspaper men will remember the details.

Senator OVERMAN. It does not make any difference about the details. Were you employed by Boy-Ed at that time?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; regularly later, I will come to that.

Senator STERLING. You left the impression a while ago that you were just employed by Boy-Ed to do personal work for him.

Mr. MEANS. I was employed by Boy-Ed only, at any time. I was really not employed by other Germans.

Senator STERLING. Later you spoke of being employed by the Germans.

Mr. MEANS. I meant, by that, Boy-Ed.

Senator STERLING. You were employed by Boy-Ed in the German interests?

Mr. MEANS. I was employed by Boy-Ed, I think, for the German Government. I was released at that time. Boy-Ed said they wanted to have nothing further to do with me. The other Germans did not want to have anything further to do with me, because I had made this definite report about the Huerta matter.

Senator NELSON. Did you get any pay from Boy-Ed?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; $1,000 a week.

Senator NELSON. That could not have been limited to this scandal that you speak of.

Mr. MEANS. Oh, no; I will come to the other part of it.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that $1,000 a week was your pay? I thought it was $100 a day.

Mr. MEANS. $1,000 a week. I got $100 a day for a while, sometimes. I was to get $1,000 a week if I accomplished what Boy-Ed wanted, etc. I got $1,000 a week. I do recall the arrangement of $100 a day.

Maj. HUMES. Your regular compensation was $100 a day from Boy-Ed?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period did that last—about a year?

Mr. MEANS. No; that lasted from some time in 1915 until up to the time that he was recalled—December, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. Did not the same arrangement continue under his successor or the man who took up a part of the work that he was doing—Otto?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir; I had a different kind of an arrangement, more or less equivalent to that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not, in testifying before Mr. Becker in New York City, state that your compensation was $100 a day, or $700 a week, and that the arrangement was continued by Otto after Boy-Ed returned to Germany?

Mr. MEANS. No. I said I next reported to Rudolph H. Otto.

Maj. HUMES. What was the compensation you got from him?

Mr. MEANS. That was $100 a day.

Maj. HUMES. Then the arrangement really did continue?

Mr. MEANS. No; there was an interval of time that elapsed.

Maj. HUMES. How long?

Mr. MEANS. I do not know just how long that was. It was a short length of time.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period did you work for Otto?

Mr. MEANS. I will come to that in a moment.

Senator NELSON. Tell us what you did to earn that fee.

Mr. MEANS. All right. I will come to that in a moment.

Senator NELSON. Tell us what you did to earn that big fee from Boy-Ed and his successor?

Senator Wolcott. Just one moment. You say you got $100 a day under Boy-Ed, and then you spoke of $1,000 a week if you accomplished what they were after. Was that in addition to the $100 a day?

Mr. MEANS. No; that was a premium, a royalty.

Maj. HUMES. A $300 bonus?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator NELSON. A kind of conditional fee?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; a conditional fee to the extent that they wanted whatever you set out to do accomplished for them. As I say, I was released from the Germans on the strength of this Huerta report, and my next connection with Boy-Ed was, he phoned to me to go to the Grand Central Station and get a dress-suit case that had been checked there. I went to the German Club and got this claim check for this dress-suit case. I saw him there. When I got this check he explained that there were valuable papers and money in this dress-suit case.

I went to the German Club, got the claim check, went to the Grand Central Station and got the dress-suit case, carried it to the German Club, they opened it, and there were many, many thousands of dollars. I never did know the details of where it came from. I understood that some man came in from Chicago and they were pushing him pretty close—the Department of Justice men were, or he thought they were—and he checked this dress-suit case there, and he was afraid to go back and get it.

Senator STERLING. This was after you had been dismissed from the service of Boy-Ed because of your revelations in the Huerta matter?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And he intrusted you with the matter of getting that dress-suit case?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. Boy-Ed's position was entirely different from that of any of the other Germans in this country. He was opposed every time, to their high-handed methods. Not at any time was he in favor of them. Boy-Ed understood that I would report anything I discovered detrimental to this Government to the Government. That was one reason that he was willing to send me on this mission. As he said afterwards, he wanted a man that would not do anything against his own Government; that if a man would do anything against his own Government he would do something against anybody else.

Senator STERLING. Yet he dismissed you for what you did in regard to the Huerta matter?

Mr. MEANS. It was not through him that I had to be dismissed; it was the other Germans. The other Germans did not have any regard for myself.

Maj. HUMES. Are you not of the opinion that the alleged suit case that you referred to belonged to Von Rintelen?

Mr. MEANS. I only heard that. I never did know whether that was true or not.

Maj. HUMES. It was your opinion that it was Von Rintelen's suit case?

Mr. MEANS. No; not my opinion, because I never heard it from a reliable enough source to know whether it was true or not.

Maj. HUMES. You have always thought that it was Von Rintelen's, have you not?

Mr. MEANS. I only acted upon the information I got. The only information that I have was to that effect. I heard that afterwards.

Maj. HUMES. You so expressed yourself in the hearing before Mr. Becker—that it was Von Rintelen's?

Mr. MEANS. I told him at that time what I based that upon. I heard afterwards that that was what it was.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MEANS. I never knew that from a reliable source. I never had occasion to investigate to find out whether it was true or not. I did not hear that from Capt. Boy Ed or any of the rest of them, as to whether that was true or not, that it was Von Rintelen's, but I did hear afterwards that it was Von Rintelen's.

Now, the next incident that came up there was the destruction of the Lusitania. The Germans at that time told me——

Senator OVERMAN. Before you begin that, what was your contact with Boy Ed, and what was the purpose of your employment?

Mr. MEANS. I will come to that right away. Do you want to eliminate the Lusitania business?

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead in your own way.

Mr. MEANS. The Germans advised me, when the Luistania went down, at the time—that was a long while after it had gone down I heard this piece of information as to how the Lusitania happened—how they were able to sink the Lusitania was that they had the English code and that they had wired from a submarine to the Lusitania and had her pass a definite point where the submarine was located, and that this German submarine wired that she was one of the English convoy vessels, and that was why the Lusitania was not convoyed in at that time; the German submarine had wired to them.

About that time a very severe dispute occurred with the Germans. I got in a little trouble with them up there in the German club about expressing an opinion as to the ideas of von Papen; that what the President of the United States should do was to start out and make an investigation as to who inserted those advertisements in the papers and hang the German that was responsible for that, because he would have some responsibility about the destruction of the lives of these women and babies.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever hear how the Germans succeeded in getting the English code?

Mr. MEANS. They had gotten that the fall before from a Canadian that came over on the Lusitania, and they debated for a long time to decide what vessel to first make use of this information on with the code in hand. They were convinced that they could not use it but one time, and they were waiting to select the biggest vessel there was. They had full knowledge, in the United States, what they were going to do with the Lusitania and how they were going to do it.

Senator STERLING. Boy-Ed and von Papen and the rest of them full knowledge”?

Mr. MEANS. The Germans. They knew that they had this code in their hands and that they could very easily wire to the Lusitania just which way to go.

Senator STERLING. Boy-Ed and von Papen and the rest of them had that information?

Mr. MEANS. No; I do not think Boy Ed had that information at that time; von Papen had secured that piece of information, as I heard, through a Canadian. That was a long time after the Lusitania went down that I heard this information as to how the Lusitania happened to go down; and I had a personal fight with von Papen with reference to the Lusitania going down, when I expressed my opinion about their destroying a vessel in that way and destroying women and children.

Senator NELSON. Did Boy-Ed and von Papen want you to do anything in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir. Boy Ed never asked me to do anything that pertained to the breaking of a law.

Senator NELSON. Who procured that affidavit from that man who was afterwards convicted of perjury, that the Lusitania carried arms, was an armed vessel? Do you remember his name? Can you tell me his name, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. I do not remember the name.

A BYSTANDER. Gustave Stahl.

Capt. LESTER. Stahl.

Mr. MEANS. I never came in contact, and I do not believe that the Germans believed it.

Senator NELSON. Did you know who procured that affidavit?

Mr. MEANS. I do not.

Senator NELSON. I did not know but some of the Burns people had obtained that, as they had in the other case you referred to.

Mr. MEANS. No, sir; none of the Burns people procured that affidavit. I think, if the Burns people had secured that affidavit, they would have gone out further and ascertained whether it was true.

Senator NELSON. He was afterwards convicted of perjury.

Mr. MEANS. Yes. Now, my prime work in connection with Boy Ed was the buying of materials for the Germans, the securing of materials and paying for those materials in this country for shipment to Germany. That was one of the pieces of work that I did constantly for him.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you make purchases for the German Government?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What kind of purchases?

Mr. MEANS. Purchases of rubber and copper, and stuff of that kind; handled the money for them.

Senator WOLCOTT. Rubber and what? You paid for them?

Mr. MEANS. Rubber and copper. We shipped millions of dollars worth of stuff out of the United States to the Germans, right from the United States. Now, shall I tell you about the tapping of the telephones in New York City; how the telephones were tapped, etc., and by whom?

Senator OVERMAN. By the Germans, you mean?

Mr. MEANS. No; I am not talking about the Germans. They were tapped by Mr. Bielaski, through the police commissioner, Arthur Woods, and his second deputy, Frank A. Lord.

Senator OVERMAN. No; we do not care to know about that, unless Germans had something to do with it.

Mr. MEANS. They were tapping the German wires. We knew about that.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not think we are interested in that—United States Government activities.

Mr. MEANS. They tapped all the wires——

Senator WOLCOTT. Never mind; we do not care anything about what the United States Government did in the way of tapping wires at least, I do not.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I do not see what that has got to do with it. We want to know what the Germans did.

Mr. MEANS. All right. Another method of the Germans at that time was through "phoney" buying agents to push up the prices of the requirements of the English in this country to an enormous price and make them pay as much as they could.

Another piece of German propaganda at that time. A man that had a great deal of data on the German propaganda in this country was Mr. John R. Rathom, of the Providence Journal. I met him; and first, the Germans believed that he was being paid by the English Government for exposures in this country. An investigation proved that that was not true. I went directly to Mr. Rathom and asked him if that was true, and he advised that it was not true; and investigation proved that it was not true. But I constantly gave him information as to the German propaganda in this country. One of the particular things I outlined to him—and I continued to give him information at that time, so that he could furnish it to the Government—one of the particular things I called to his attention was the fact that Von Papen was using this insurance data, and I called his attention to the fact that most of their high-handed work was taking place from the German interned vessels; and I also want to mention here that all the time during this work Boy-Ed was opposed, at any and all times, to the explosions and to secret propaganda in this country. He believed in open propaganda. That is what he advocated. He believed in open propaganda, and he got in trouble with his own Government afterwards, as I will come to, to show you.

I was advised by Mr. Boy-Ed to employ for him a newspaper man or several newspaper men who could write German propaganda, to insert and pay for in a regular way; and, particularly at that time, he wanted to write up the conditions in regard to the prices of cotton in the South, and I came to Washington here and found Mr. A. T. C. Bryan, and tried to employ him for the Germans. He was correspondent of the Charlotte Observer and he was correspondent of the New York World. I discussed with him about employing him. He asked me whether the Germans would want him to misstate any facts! I told him, "Never"; Boy-Ed would not. He would want him to give the exact facts and the truth as to the situation, and why the price of cotton was low.

Senator OVERMAN. He refused the employment, did he?

Mr. MEANS. He said that he did not know whether he wanted to be employed by them or not. Especially, he did not want to be employed by them if they wanted his sympathies that way; that his sympathies would be with the allies. He was in sympathy with the allies.

Senator OVERMAN. You did not employ him, and did not pay him anything?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir; did not employ him. He said that his sympathies were directly with the allies, and he would not write anything except that his opinion was that way, and that was the way he would have to write, except on that material subject; that anything he wrote might not be entirely in sympathy with the Germans.

One of my pieces of work there, besides attending to the purchases for the Germans, where they spent millions of dollars, was, Boy-Ed the gasoline engines which these submarine chasers used, which were in these submarine chasers, and to buy up submarine boats. Here is a typical Boy-Ed report to me, unsigned, written on his own typewriter, which shows in detail how we got them out.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is this all one report or is it several reports?

Mr. MEANS (handing papers to the committee). That is several reports there. I had hundreds of those reports. A great deal of this data that has come out here Mr. John R. Rathom published a long time ago, and he is running a column right now showing what he published before, under a certain date, and how it is coming out to-day. He is publishing that in his paper.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead, now, and tell your story.

Mr. MEANS. I was employed by Boy-Ed, located at the Hotel Belmont at that time, for the purpose of buying these boats, and made all the arrangements to purchase them—had the necessary funds. It is not necessary to go into details about that. We have a claim against the Germans on that now for the additional data in regard to that, and the arrangements and the contract with Boy-Ed for the purchase of those boats, which was perfectly legitimate. We were in no war at that time with Germany.

The English were buying and the Russians were buying a great many of these submarine chasers over here, and I would like to say here that Boy-Ed's reports, as I always understood it, were never made—he was not working in the same department with Capt. Von Papen—so his reports were sent to an entirely different bureau or department in Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. These seem to be the contracts that the English Government had.

Mr. MEANS. That is the data of the kind of boats that he wanted.

Senator OVERMAN. The data is contracts made with the English Government.

Mr. MEANS. I understand that, but what he was buying these boats for was to keep the English Government from getting hold of them.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you buy any?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; we made arrangements and then afterwards Boy-Ed made complete arrangements to buy English boats, and got hold of a contract showing the details of construction of one of those boats, this contract carrying the plans and specifications of the boats, and the German contract was to be more or less modeled after their contract, and the plans and specifications were to be modeled after it, because the particular shipyards were equipped to make that kind of a boat. They wanted to take up the complete supply in the United States. When I happened to get hold of these plans and specifications Boy-Ed said that those plans and specifications, if they were building those boats, they carried emplacements for guns, and that was a direct breach of neutrality, and that he was going to Washington to make a protest before the neutrality board, and they tried to persuade him not to go, but I understood that he did come here, and it was on the strength of part of that work that he was recalled, so he always thought and so he advised me.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed. Let us get along with this as fast as possible.

Mr. MEANS. Just before Boy-Ed was recalled—after he was recalled, but before he left here—his papers were turned over to me—his confidential papers and files, all the papers that he had—and I was instructed to hold those papers, which I did. That was in the late fall of 1915. Just before, or right after Boy-Ed left, those papers were sent to me. Mr. John R. Rathom was in my home after that and I showed him some of those papers—the Boy-Ed papers and his reports from this country, and the part he had taken in it in the spring of 1916. The same party that delivered those papers to me came to me and told me that Boy-Ed was in trouble in Germany—that they were about to try him.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who delivered the papers?

Mr. MEANS. A man named Henry Freund—that they were going to try him in Germany for disobeying instructions and orders over here, and that he wanted to get certain of those papers to send to Germany for Boy-Ed's defense. In the spring of 1916 I reported to Rudolph H. Otto, who was, so far as I know, a successor of Boy-Ed.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were you directed to report to him?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who directed you to do so?

Mr. MEANS. This man Freund told me to see him. I saw him. One of the first pieces of work we did there was Capt. Bertling's papers had been secured—gotten hold of in some way by the New York World. They wanted to ascertain just how the New York World had gotten hold of them, and prevent the publication of those papers if they could. I then met, I think it was, a German university propaganda branch of the German interests, in Madison Square—right near Madison Square, New York City, a big building there—their headquarters, and Capt. Bertling's headquarters were there. Counsel was employed to handle that matter and a number of interviews were held with this counsel and with other prominent gentlemen in New York City in reference to the attempt to stop the publication of those papers or to get hold of them for Capt. Bertling. At the time that the New York World was getting up the fund for lighting the Statue of Liberty, a crowd of Germans got together and raised a fund of $70 or $80, intending to send it up to the New York World. I call the fact to your attention that they were Germans and they wanted to show their loyalty to this country by that. They wrote a very nice note saying that they wanted to see the Statue of Liberty lighted up. I sent that note, which appeared in the New York World, this letter which was sent there unanimously with the fund. We attended also about that time to shipments of rubber from the United States. The Germans were unable to get raw rubber, and we were shipping quite a good deal of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. How was the rubber gotten from this country to Germany?

Mr. MEANS. The first problem was to get hold of the rubber. It was very difficult to get hold of the rubber because the English Government had laid down a rule whereby they would not allow raw rubber to be shipped from their possessions to the United States unless the manufacturers of finished rubber in the United States gave them detailed reports on all of the export trade, and as to what became of this raw rubber. Now, that raw rubber had to be secured in a way, in order to get it to Germany, and in that way the Germans managed to get hold of some of it, and we attended to the shipping of it. It was purely a commercial proposition. I working for the Germans in a commercial way.

Senator WOLCOTT. How was it shipped over, through some neutral country?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; this rubber was really shipped as naval stores. It was sent to Alabama and Georgia and packed in resin barrels and tar barrels.

Senator WOLCOTT. Well, where did it go to?

Mr. MEANS. To Norway and Sweden.

Senator WOLCOTT. To neutral countries.

Mr. MEANS. Yes; and a great deal of it went to Russia. Some shipments were made direct to Russia, but the Germans were thoroughly in touch with the Russians and got enormous supplies from the Russians. A great many Russian buyers were buying for the Germans. A great deal of rubber purchased by the Russians was really purchased by Germans.

Senator WOLCOTT. How did the Germans work it to get hold of the raw rubber in this country?

Mr. MEANS. They managed to get it through the stevedores, the men that handled the freight at the piers. There would be a certain amount of rubber invoiced and a certain amount would fail to turn up. They would report a lossage, and the necessary fund to replace that lossage was turned over in the handling, to transportation companies.

That is how they managed that.

Senator WOLCOTT. The whole invoiced quantity reached this country, but the Germans worked a "kitty," so to speak, on each cargo?

Mr. MEANS. They worked a "kitty" on each cargo. That is how they managed to get hold of their rubber.

In May or June, I think it was, 1916, I went to Norfolk for the Germans to arrange about some shipments there for them. Also, while I was under Rudolph Otto, I attended to the evidence, getting up the evidence and the data, and arranged to employ an attorney to defend the Germans that had been indicted in this country and whose trial was coming up in 1916.

I called on this lawyer two or three times for the Germans, directly under the directions of Mr. Otto. This was his name [exhibiting slip of paper to Senator Overman].

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. MEANS. A dispute arose in connection with the employment of this attorney, between Mr. Rudolph Otto and Mr. Heynen, another German representative that I had met before, who lived at the Hotel Plaza. Mr. Heynen did not want this lawyer furnished with all the data and the evidence in connection with that, and Mr. Rudolph Otto took the position that he should be furnished with it, and so did I; and it was finally decided that if they would not furnish him with all the data that we had put in the file, and so on, and let him see the exact circumstances, we would not arrange to employ him. So another lawyer was employed afterwards to defend those men. Mr. Heynen attended to that.

Capt. LESTER. Was that Carl Heynen?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. He was Albert's representative, was he not?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; they had him interned. He lived at the Plaza for a long time.

Now, I do not know whether this is in line here, but while I was at Norfolk, and after I came back—I do not know whether I should read a report here of what happened and what Bielaski did in connection with sending a man to my home—mark you at that time I had never broken any law, or at any time; and if I had it was the sworn duty of Mr. Bielaski to have me arrested; I was working under advice of counsel, and not at any time did I, under any circumstances, break any law. I would have been perfectly frank and willing to have said and told anything that I was doing, except that I would not have divulged how the Germans were managing to get their merchandise out of the United States, because they had a perfect right, I felt, to get all they could, and, in addition to that, because it was helping the American manufacturers, and it was a good idea, I thought, to have the Germans and the English compete.

Maj. HUMES. Was not one of the incidents of the shipping of this German merchandise the making of false manifests to the Government?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean to say that there was a truthful manifest made?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I always understood so.

Maj. HUMES. Was not this rubber packed in rosin barrels, or tar and oil barrels, and in some way disguised so that the manifest would not disclose the exact nature of the cargo?

Mr. MEANS. If you will investigate you will find that was classified as rubberoid tar; and the freight company and the boat companies passed on it that way.

Maj. HUMES. It was shipped for rubber, though, was it not?

Mr. MEANS. Was it shipped for rubber?

Maj. HUMES. That is, it was to be used as rubber, and it was used as rubber?

Mr. MEANS. It was used as rubber, unquestionably.

Maj. HUMES. Then, if the manifest showed it in some other way, it was a false manifest, was it not?

Mr. MEANS. It was rubberoid tar. That is the way they classified it, as I understood.

Maj. HUMES. Just answer the question. It was incorrect, then, was it not?

Mr. MEANS. No. On the contrary, I would say that they got up a classification that enabled it to come under a classification that would not have been a false manifest.

Maj. HUMES. Then, it was really a fraudulent classification, rather than a false manifest; is that it?

Mr. MEANS. No; exactly upon the same principle that most manufacturers in this country classify hosiery or different articles as knit goods.

Senator OVERMAN. Why was it sent to Alabama and put in tar barrels?

Mr. MEANS. Because the tar was there. The naval stores were made in Alabama and Georgia.

Senator OVERMAN. It was put in those barrels to deceive, of course?

Mr. MEANS. To keep the English from taking it off of the vessels when they searched it. They were not after doing anything against the United States Government.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand you to say that they were not doing anything against the United States Government, but it was bound to be false, because this stuff was put in tar barrels to mislead!

Mr. MEANS. It was put in tar barrels to mislead the English; to keep them from taking it; because the English were making these boats that would be carrying this material come into English ports. I think they were advised by counsel as to how to classify it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you have anything to do with that end of it?

Mr. MEANS. Not anything at all.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your business was simply to buy the stuff?

Mr. MEANS. To get the stuff. I suggested the idea to them as to how to do it. I thought of that idea of the tar; that they could send it to Alabama or to Georgia; because I was from the southern country, and I had seen this tar and naval stores packed; and as soon as I saw the raw rubber I thought that it looked very much like tar and naval stores, and I thought of that idea, and then they got in touch with their own men to attend to that detail of it.

Senator OVERMAN. But you suggested that that was a good way to ship it?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I suggested that that was a good way to ship it. I suggested that I thought that was feasible, just like I suggested ideas about making other shipments at that time. That was long before we were in the war.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Means, did you ever know of shipments of cargoes on Norwegian vessels from New York marked "horseshoes" that in fact contained copper ingots?

Mr. MEANS. No.

Maj. HUMES. You were not familiar with that?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir; I would not have——

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know of copper wire being put into the tanks of an oil vessel?

Mr. MEANS. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. You bought some copper for them, did you not?

Mr. MEANS. I attended to the paying for it, and so on.

Senator WOLCOTT. How was that shipped out?

Mr. MEANS. It was consigned—I do not know how it was shipped, but it was consigned, in some instances, to Russian interests.

I think they formed a false idea around New York, or conceived the idea or opinion that the Germans were doing all of their shipping from New York. They were making tremendous shipments from Galveston and New Orleans and other southern ports.

Maj. HUMES. How was the copper shipped that you bought?

Mr. MEANS. I did not know the details of that, as to how they shipped it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you give the address to which it should be shipped?

Mr. MEANS. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. When you bought it, what was the next thing that you did after you bought the copper?

Mr. MEANS. My prime object was the passing of this money backward and forward, for the purchase of it. The Germans had to pay cash almost entirely for stuff, because in the passing of checks the English secret service, working with some people here in the United States that you are familiar with, were tracing purchases and shipments that the Germans made, and, of course, the moment that the English Government got a tip that a certain vessel was coming over and very likely had certain stuff in it that was really intended for Germany, why, they would positively take this vessel into an English port.

Maj. HUMES. Who furnished you with the money that you used to make these purchases?

Mr. MEANS. Capt. Boy-Ed.

Maj. HUMES. Was Boy-Ed handling the money that was used in the commercial activities of the German Government?

Mr. MEANS. Some of it. A great deal of it. I do not know to what extent, as compared with what others were handling.

Maj. HUMES. Was he doing that as an independent part of his work or was he merely acting as a representative or agent of Albert when he was conducting negotiations at that time?

Mr. MEANS. Capt. Boy-Ed was acting as a direct representative of the German Government, and was not reporting, to the best of my knowledge, to Albert at any time, and Albert did not supply him with his money. Boy-Ed's money was supplied from a different source in Germany—the navy department or some other department.

Maj. HUMES. Was this money delivered to you by him in cash?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; frequently.

Maj. HUMES. Where was Boy-Ed doing his banking at that time?

Mr. MEANS. I did not ask him.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you know?

Mr. MEANS. No; I did not know. I would not have asked him, though, so I would not know. All of my work at that time was nothing in the world but commercial work. I was with the Germans from a purely commercial standpoint—for the money that I could make out of it. I was pro-American all the time. I was not pro-German nor pro-English nor pro-French. I was more in favor of France than any other country. I was not so much in favor of England at any time, because I had studied the history closely and I knew that she never explained the Boer War, and I had watched the Irish question very closely, and I had also watched her treatment of women over there when they had up the question of voting, and had seen that they had used billies and sticks on women, and I did not like that English idea. That was where I was forming my opinion of England and from my close study of the Boer War. I was more in sympathy with France than any other country. After we got into the war ourselves, of course, I was proally, and I would take any help we could get from any source at all.

I was advised in September or October that the Germans in their messages to the President of the United States on the question of submarines were only playing for time to build other submarines and great numbers of submarines.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who advised you of that—anybody representing Germany here?

Mr. MEANS. Rudolph Otto.

Senator WOLCOTT. He was the man who succeeded Boy-Ed?

Mr. MEANS. He was the man who succeeded Boy-Ed. I was advised that that was what they were really going to do. And he also spoke at that time of the naval battle that they had and what they would be able to do a little bit later.

I asked him the specific question: "Do you mean to say that you are going to have unrestricted submarine warfare?" And he said, "That is virtually what we are going to have, as soon as we are equipped for it." I said, "That means that you will attack United States vessels?" He said, "Any vessels that are supplying England, or any neutral country that we see fit to attack."

The moment he said that to me I resigned—quit the Germans. I said, "That can not mean anything in the world but war." And the last pay that I received from the Germans was through Rudolph Otto, and I had really gone to Chicago at the time and sent my brother there to get this money. And when Mr. Becker, in examining me in New York City, attempted to tell me that I had received money from the Germans after we declared war, and so on, and that he had so seen, giving dates there, that he had so seen from books, he was not stating the facts. And there is no proof of any such condition prevailing. I received no money from the Germans for a long time before we got into the war. And I quit the Germans on my own accord and from my own volition, and only for the reason that they said they were going to announce unrestricted submarine warfare.

Maj. HUMES. When did you get your last money from the Germans?

Mr. MEANS. I got my last money from the Germans in October or November. My brother went there and got it. I had gone to Chicago.

Maj. HUMES. 1916?

Mr. MEANS. 1916.

Maj. HUMES. In October or November, 1916?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. It might have been September. It was about that time. It was in the fall of 1916.

One of the reasons why I was furnishing Boy-Ed or Mr. Rathom with this feature of the German propaganda was that—not Boy-Ed had told me, because he tried his best to suppress that in his own conversations; that I heard him at different times say he was opposed to it, with every breath that he had in him, and said it would only lead to trouble. He wanted it stopped himself and tried to persuade Von Papen of the error he was making. The reason I furnished Rathom with some of this information was because Rathom had equipped himself through employment for news purposes, I suppose, to trace down, after you would give him a tip, any piece of information; and when we got these tips he did trace them down. I think he had some 12 or 15 men, probably, working for him.

In the midst of all this German work my telephone wire was tapped. All of the German wires were tapped in New York City. And when Maj. Humes stated the other day that they did not have

Mr. Untermeyer's wire tapped and smiled, he knew full well that they had Albert's wire tapped and——

Maj. HUMES. Just a minute. I understand the committee has ruled that they do not care for any discussion of that particular feature.

Senator OVERMAN. No. Whatever the Government did in tapping wires we do not care to know anything about.

Mr. MEANS. I have got the list of all the wires that were tapped long before we got into the war. Lots of these wires were tapped purely for commercial purposes and not entirely in the interest of the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, we are not investigating that. We are investigating German activities and German propaganda.

Mr. MEANS. While I was in Chicago the Germans got in touch with me again. That was before we declared war, and I think about the time we were going to declare war, and they notified me that they had in Germany $20,000,000, or $25,000,000 worth of securities that they wanted converted and changed into other securities. That was a fund that was under the control of Alvo von Alvensleben. I consulted a lawyer as to the advisability of attending to that for them.

In the meantime the Germans owed me in connection with my commissions in the buying of these boats for them, which they had never been able to settle because Boy-Ed had been recalled so unexpectedly; it was a surprise to him himself——

Maj. HUMES. Let me ask you: Do I understand you to say that they actually bought boats?

Mr. MEANS. I said they arranged, and so forth, to buy them.

Maj. HUMES. Just now you said for the boats you had bought for them——

Mr. MEANS. Arranged to buy, I should have said, Major.

Now, they brought these bonds to me at the Kaiserhoff Hotel. First I had consulted a lawyer in Chicago about attending to the converting of these bonds, and he told me that there was nothing illegal about it, to go ahead and do it; that there was no law against it.

I was primarily interested in my individual money, and I was to get my pay there.

I went to Charles C. Adsit, one of the leading brokers of Chicago, and took up with him the question of handling these bonds, and he said he would handle them, and I so reported to the Germans.

Senator OVERMAN. You say you so reported to the Germans. To whom?

Mr. MEANS. To a German named Hiller. The Germans talking to me at that time advised me that they would stand still awhile, because they were putting a hypothetical question up to the Department of Justice through some connection; that is, a hypothetical legal question pertaining to this question of converting bonds, and so on. These negotiations were going on for two or three weeks without disclosing exactly why the hypothetical question was put up. That matter was not carried out. I never knew what the result of this hypothetical question was that they put up to the Department of Justice.

Now, one of the last acts, just before we got into the war. Mr. John R. Rathom, from Providence, R. I., wired me as follows: "G. B. Means"—This telegram is dated March 13, 1917. He had been talking to me over the long-distance telephone—"G. B. Means. Chicago Beach Hotel"—I had gone to Chicago in October or November, 1916:

G. B. MEANS,

Chicago Beach Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

Evans O. K. and absolutely reliable. Tell him all you can.

JOHN R. RATHOM.

Mr. Evans was a reporter on the Chicago Herald at that time. He is now with the Chicago Tribune. As I say, Mr. Rathom had talked to me over the telephone, and was to talk to me again. But you will find that on the night of March 13 or March 12 there was a big storm, and they could not talk over the telephone wires, so that he reached me with this telegram instead.

I told him to name the man he was going to send to me, and he told me to do anything I could right then because they were unquestionably going to declare war—the United States was.

I had two interviews with Evans; one interview when he came—he seemed to be under the impression that I belonged to the United States Government Secret Service. I disabused his mind of that and told him that that was not a fact; that I had been connected with the Germans, and outlined it to him briefly. I told him I did not have anything to say to him and would not have anything to say to him until I had heard further from Mr. Rathom.

Then I got this telegram, and Mr. Evans came out—A. M. Evans is his name—came out again, and I told him then to get into communication with Mr. Rathom, or the United States Government, and tell them that Captain Boy-Ed had told me that the moment this country got into trouble with Germany, if it did, or there was any prospect of its getting into trouble, that they had already arranged, and were equipped to destroy the internal machinery of every German interned vessel; and that I had always found any statement Boy-Ed made was the truth, and they were so equipped with proper code messages to send, and so on, and they unquestionably would destroy the internal machinery, and that the Government had better quietly put some men on board the ships right away. I think Mr. Evans will confirm that. I have never seen him from that day to this.

Now, after I came from Chicago to Asheville, N. C., I have got the detailed reports of what happened there. You say you do not want to go into anything that Bielaski did at that time, or Ambrose, or anybody else——

Senator OVERMAN. If it is connected with any German business it is competent, and only in that view.

Mr. MEANS. This telephone business, etc., that I started to mention, is connected with the German business. I was going to outline there how the Germans had the Department of Justice itself under surveillance, and knew pretty well what was going on in the Department of Justice; knew every detail of what the Department of Justice was doing; if you want to go into executive session to hear that; that they knew every move that the Department of Justice was making; that they had their sources out of the Department of Justice.

Well, nevertheless, the accidental death of Mrs. King occurred in North Carolina. When I was on trial for my life Mr. Bielaski issued a statement to the reporters in Washington that I had made application to get with the Department of Justice. Mr. Tumulty made the statement in the newspapers, which was true, that I had made such report, and I think Mr. Daniels said something about my calling on him here.

But Mr. Bielaski made the statement in the papers while I was being tried, because of other reasons, because of his animosity against me, because of things which he knows that I know, which I can bring out in executive session, that I had made application to get into the Department of Justice, and that was printed all over the country. There was absolutely no such application made. I did not try to get with the Department of Justice.

There was no reason why I should have gotten with the Department of Justice. And at that time, because I had worked for the Germans, the Department of Justice opened every letter that my lawyers wrote and every telegram that I sent, and furnished it to the attorneys of the Northern Trust Co. They went to Mr. Carroll, the division superintendent. That included the telegrams and letters of men like F. I. Osborne, ex-Federal judge; Mr. Canseer, one of the leading lawyers of North Carolina; and Mr. Hartsell. They went to Mr. Carroll, superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Co. division, and Mr. Bielaski subpoenaed and took from the files of the Western Union Telegraph Co. every telegram that I sent, that my father sent, and that my lawyers sent pertaining to witnesses at that time, he working with the Northern Trust Co., and the original telegrams were turned over to the attorneys of the Northern Trust Co., which telegrams, etc., they have now; and Mr. Carroll, in Charlotte, N. C., will confirm this as a fact; and the original telegrams are in Chicago.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you mean by saying that Mr. Bielaski was working for the Northern Trust Co.? He was, as I understand it, an agent of the Department of Justice here, the head of the Investigation Division.

Mr. MEANS. I can show you the evidence and the facts that the contrary is true; that C. B. Ambrose, his right-hand man at the beginning of it when they wired to let them have Ambrose of the Department of Justice, and Olsen, of the Department of Justice; that Olsen sent a telegram to the Northern Trust Co. at the time of Mrs. King's death, and John T. Dooling, of New York City, and that he was a Department of Justice man; and I can show you that from Dooling's correspondence. Mr. Clements, of North Carolina, did not know that he was a Department of Justice man, and Mr. Clements kept on trying, in good faith, to find out who this man Olsen was, and why he was there. I can show you Mr. Clements's inquiries asking who in the world Mr. Olsen was and why he was there. Olsen and Ambrose were both Department of Justice representatives.

I can show you, in addition, how they followed me from Asheville and came to my home and asked me for papers, and I turned over the trunk to Ambrose containing the very papers that they would not let me have afterwards for my own defense.

Capt. LESTER. Who is Olsen?

Mr. MEANS. A Department of Justice representative.

Capt. LESTER. Was he a special agent in the Department of Justice?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. Was he at that time?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. What year was that?

Mr. MEANS. 1917.

Capt. LESTER. Where was he attached?

Mr. MEANS. He was attached, primarily, at that time in North Carolina, going backward and forward to New York City, following me—he and Ambrose.

Capt. LESTER. I mean, what part of the Department of Justice was he attached to?

Mr. MEANS. He was attached like Mr. Ambrose—Mr. Bielaski's man Friday; his right-hand man.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Ambrose was in Chicago, as I understand it?

Mr. MEANS. Do you want to see what Mr. Clabaugh testified to—the district superintendent of Chicago?

Capt. LESTER. I do not care about that. I just wanted to find out who Mr. Olsen was.

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a minute here. Where are we getting to in this?

Senator OVERMAN. It looks to me like we were going far afield.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not see the purpose of this. It looks like we were going into the maneuvers of the two sides in the case you were on trial in, and I do not see how that concerns us.

Mr. MEANS. They said they had me under surveillance because of German propaganda, and that I was a German spy. Here is the kind of reports that Bielaski sent out all over the United States [indicating].

Senator WOLCOTT (after examining paper). The statement is there that you have undertaken to refute by all your various activities in connection with the Germans.

Mr. MEANS. My point is that I can prove that I was much more loyal to the United States than Mr. Bielaski was; that he was loyal to another country.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Bielaski is not on trial, and it occurred to me when you said that he was in the employ of the Northern Trust Co. instead of the Department of Justice, I can not understand how that can be.

Mr. MEANS. Mr. Bruce Smith went to Mr. Clabaugh, the division superintendent in Chicago, and had him to wire Mr. Bielaski here in Washington.

There is Mr. Clabaugh's testimony, which shows they made use of the private wires backward and forward between Olsen and Dooling and the Northern Trust Co., in reference to my case. They did not even send them over the regular Western Union or Postal Telegraph wires, but used a private wire; but I had captured every one of those affidavits and all the correspondence. I have it every bit in my possession, or photographs of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Still I am at a loss to see what all of that has to do with German propaganda.

Mr. MEANS. That is what I could not understand about Mr. Bielaski and Mr. Ambrose when they were trying me for my life. What did the Department of Justice have to do with that? They sent Ambrose down to my home and demanded from Judge Osborne the papers.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not know anything about what the Department of Justice did in connection with that, and we are not concerned in it; but let us assume that Mr. Bielaski and his assistants did render some service down there at that trial. Let us assume that. I do not know whether it is true or not. What has it got to do with German propaganda? At the most it proves that the Federal authorities rendered some assistance to the State authorities in the prosecution, and that is not very unusual at all.

Mr. MEANS. They were not rendering assistance to the State authorities. Mr. Clements did not want it. They were rendering assistance to the Northern Trust Co.

Senator WOLCOTT. We are getting off into things that I believe we are not concerned about.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we ought to stick to the German propaganda; still I do not know why the Department of Justice should be helping a private corporation.

Maj. HUMES. I think the record will disclose, and I imagine Mr. Means knows it, that Ambrose, who was in the Department of Justice, was on leave from the Department of Justice for a considerable period of time and had accepted some private employment. At the time he was not in the employ of the Department of Justice.

Senator WOLCOTT. So, then, even the assumption that I was making a while ago is not founded on any fact.

Maj. HUMES. I understand not.

Mr. MEANS. That is true about Mr. Ambrose to a certain extent, but is it true about Mr. Olsen?

Senator WOLCOTT. You are asking me a question. I do not know anything about it.

Capt. LESTER. There are two Department of Justice special agents right in the room. and they never heard of Mr. Olsen. They have been long in the service, and they never heard of Mr. Olsen having any connection with the Department of Justice in any capacity.

Mr. MEANS. Does the committee want to see the figures and the letters and the data on Mr. Olsen?

Senator OVERMAN. We will have to find out whether he was employed and what he was doing.

Capt. LESTER. What is his full name?

Mr. MEANS. J. T.

Capt. LESTER. J. T. Olsen?

Mr. MEANS. Yes. You know sometimes in the Department of Justice they work under different names.

Capt. LESTER. A matter of that kind would be of record up there.

Mr. MEANS. Mr. Bielaski's letter to Senator Overman, Congressman Doughton, and Senator Wadsworth and Senator Calder and Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, does not coincide at all with the information that Mr. Clabaugh had to swear to on the stand in Chicago when we tried to get this information from Congressman Doughton as to who Ambrose, etc., was. Mr. Bielaski would not give it to us, but a Department of Justice man had reported to me—one of their confidential men—giving me full information as to the part the Northern Trust Co. and Dooling had taken. We thereupon sat down and wrote to Senator Overman and Senator Simmons. First Mr. Bielaski reported back to Mr. Doughton that it was a war measure and they wanted the information, etc. In other words, we got no definite results, but when we wrote to Senator Overman, Senator Simmons, Congressman Robinson, Senator John Sharp Williams, Senator Calder, and Senator Wadsworth—we had friends to write them—and on the strength of that information the Department of Justice had given me, when those Senators walked into Mr. Bielaski's department—when we wrote the letter we fixed it so that the Senators would demand the information at the same time. and they got it. The letters that they wrote back to these different people do not coincide at all with what Mr. Clabaugh swore to on the stand.

Senator OVERMAN. I understood from his letter to me that this man had been employed by the Department of Justice, but that he was not at that time.

Mr. MEANS. I do not know but that is correct. He suggested he would have to send to Chicago to get the information. As a matter of fact, Bielaski himself released Ambrose. Mr. Bruce Smith, of the Northern Trust Co., went into the Department of Justice and asked Mr. Clabaugh to release Mr. Ambrose for this purpose, and Mr. Clabaugh says, "Well, I do not quite understand the ethics, the principle of releasing a Department of Justice man, Mr. Smith, for you and the Northern Trust Co. If the State government was calling for it, it would be a different proposition, but you are calling for it. What have you to do with an accusation of murder?" He says, "I won't take the authority to release a man." He says, "I will wire Mr. Bielaski." So he wired Mr. Bielaski and Mr. Bielaski then released Mr. Ambrose, but the Department of Justice had been constantly reporting to the Northern Trust Co. while I was making this investigation of this will, furnishing them with the full data, opening my correspondence, and taking photostat copies of it, and giving it to the Northern Trust Co. If this committee wants to send to the Department of Justice and demand from them—it is up there, or was five or six days ago—their file on me, they will find it. what Mr. Bielaski did with all the data, every move. If they will send up and get it as quickly as they can find the papers, if the papers are not taken out, they will give you exactly every detail, and you will find out just what Mr. Bielaski did, and that correspondence from the Department of Justice's representative himself.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he not looking for you as a German agent?

Mr. MEANS. I had discontinued my services.

Senator OVERMAN. I know, but did he know that?

Mr. MEANS. He could not continue to have had me under surveillance without knowing it. He was watching me secretly.

Senator OVERMAN. He was not after you as a German agent?

Mr. MEANS. No; for the Northern Trust Co.

Senator OVERMAN. He was getting this evidence for the Northern Trust Co., and not for the interests of the Government?

Mr. MEANS. Exactly, that is whom he was getting it for.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. MEANS. Well, it shows from that correspondence that I was acquitted of the accusation they made. After I was acquitted, Judge Osborne, Judge F. I. Osborne, of North Carolina, and Mr. Cansler told me to furnish the Federal Government, that we were right in war, that it was a dangerous situation, and any additional evidence I had to help the Federal Government in any way to furnish them with the information. I told a man named Handy—Mr. Frederick C. Handy—special agent of the Department of Justice, at Greensboro, N. C., to come to Charlotte and I would give him that information, any information that I had. He did come. Judge Osborne was not there that day. Judge Osborne wrote I am coming back to these German bonds in Chicago. Judge Osborne wrote Mr. Handy as follows:

JUNE 27, 1918.

Mr. FREDERICK C. HANDY,

Special Agent, United States Department of Justice,

Post Office Building, Greensboro, N. C.

DEAR SIR: My client, Mr. Gaston B. Means, called to see me this morning, upon my return from Raleigh, with reference to a subject matter concerning which he had talked with you. After consultation with me I have advised him to go with you to Chicago and investigate the subject concerning which you conversed, and to give you all the assistance and information which he may have concerning that subject.

Judge Osborne put that in for a specific reason, not to go with any man Mr. Bielaski designated under any circumstances, because Judge Osborne had found out about Mr. Handy, that he was a pretty reliable man.

I wish him to go with you especially on account of what I know concerning yourself, and with no other agent of the Government. He will pay his own expenses, and I am confident from what he tells me that he can be of great assistance to you and the Government in your special department.

Yours very truly,

I went to Chicago.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Mr. Handy go with you?

Mr. MEANS. No. Mr. Handy was to meet me at Greensboro or Lynchburg. We had quite a few telegrams. I have sent for those telegrams. I went to Chicago and reported that I would get busy on this, and Mr. Handy wired Judge Osborne as follows in Chicago. This telegram is dated July 1, Judge F. I. Osborne. Judge Osborne went with me to Chicago. The will case was coming up before the probate court, and I told Mr. Handy that when I went out for that case as a witness at my own expense I would look up those bonds that I had spoken about.

Telegram just received from Bielaski says "Do not believe it practicable for you to make trip to Chicago at this time suggest you wire Osborne and Means to take matter up with Chicago office" stop wire me what you and Means do. If you still insist that I investigate suggest that you wire Bielaski to that effect.

HANDY.

Now, when I was on the stand, testifying in the James C. King will case, Mr. Reichman, attorney for the Northern Trust Co., turned to me and asked me something in reference to this. I do not know how he learned about it or anything else. I told him that I was then and there, with Judge Osborne, going to be of any assistance to the Government that I possibly could in looking up these bonds. Mr. Adsit, who was on the stand, had referred to these bonds, and I told Mr. Reichman that I would be of any assistance I could, regardless of the treatment I had received from him or from the Department of Justice. With these telegrams in our hands, and with telegrams from Handy and letters from Osborne, the Chicago Tribune reporter went to Mr. Bielaski, and he wired the Chicago Tribune that Means was a liar; that he had never discussed, nor any of his agents had discussed, the question of looking up any securities or bonds, and the Chicago Tribune published that dispatch from Bielaski, and then Mr. Keen, one of the attorneys of the case, says, "Just turn over to the court there that correspondence and see whether Mr. Means is telling the truth." That is only part of it, and there is much more that we have sent for in Chicago to confirm what I say.

Now, in reference to the bonds, those bonds are still there—or they can be traced to the location of them.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever confer with Mr. Mitchell Palmer about them?

Mr. MEANS. No; I never did.

Maj. HUMES. "There"; where do you mean?

Mr. MEANS. Over in Chicago. They can be traced there. They were placed in Chicago. I think they moved them after I got there, and Bielaski came out with his statement in the papers.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Bielaski or the agents ever confer with you out there about where these bonds were?

Mr. MEANS. Judge Osborne advised me not to have anything to do with Bielaski under any circumstances, after that kind of a telegram. Mr. Handy, the agent in Greensboro on the western division, and Judge Osborne have those telegrams, and when Mr. Bielaski published such a telegram in the Chicago Tribune he, Osborne, said, "Do not have anything to do with them. They will tie you up in five minutes. They will say that you are handling German funds with the war going on."

Maj. HUMES. What did the bonds amount to?

Mr. MEANS. About $20,000,000 or $25,000,000, at the time I saw them.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what sort of bonds they were?

Mr. MEANS. Railroad bonds, some Canadian Government bonds, American corporation bonds, convertible securities. The Department of Justice knows about this question and the funds that came there, they know something about it. Their records will show that.

Maj. HUMES. To whom did these bonds belong?

Mr. MEANS. They really belonged to the German Government, or very close to the kaiser himself, or that group. The Department of Justice has the data about the time that the bonds reached Chicago, etc. They have some data on that subject. All they have got to do is look at the records.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know in whose hands they were?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I think I could locate them. I know in whose hands they were for a while.

Senator OVERMAN. In whose hands were they?

Mr. MEANS. I told you, Hiller's hands. I can trace that back I will write it for you.

Senator OVERMAN. Why write, if that will make it public?

Mr. MEANS. What you want to do is to locate the bonds.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what we want.

Mr. MEANS. Making it public would not enable you to locate them.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that some six weeks or two months ago in an interview with us you declined to tell us where the bonds were—in an interview with Capt. Lester and myself you declined?

Mr. MEANS. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And you decline to state now where they are?

Mr. MEANS. I decline to state that I know where they are. I think they could be located, but I do not know where they are. I believe you could start out with the parties that handled them, and I think I could move a step at a time. I declined to make a statement on advice of counsel. My counsel told me not to make it. He says, "Do not make it, for they will use it just like they used the other statements." He said, "No, he did not come in here to make a statement." Isn't that true? That is what my counsel advised me to do.

Capt. LESTER. You told me the name.

Mr. MEANS. I told you the name of the man?

Capt. LESTER. That you were going to in New York to get the information.

Mr. MEANS. Not on that thing. Not on the securities.

Capt. LESTER. That was my understanding.

Mr. MEANS. That was an entirely different proposition.

Maj. HUMES. And you said that you knew a man in New York that could furnish the information, and declined to disclose his name, and Capt. Lester asked you if it was not a certain man, mentioning the name, and then you admitted that it was.

Mr. MEANS. I gave you that on an entirely different subject.

Capt. LESTER. Was that on the subject of German bonds?

Mr. MEANS. No; that was not on the subject of German bonds.

Maj. HUMES. What subject was that on?

Mr. MEANS. It was the subject that you could be able to get hold of a good deal of data you ought to have from that party. And Capt. Lester told me that they had interviewed that party, and so forth, and since that time the reports of the interview with that party have fallen into my hands, and that interview was made by a man that I never saw in my life, was made by the intelligence department of the Department of Justice, who questioned that man.

Maj. HUMES. You saw some interview with the Department of Justice?

Mr. MEANS. I saw a statement where the questions asked this party—I saw the interview they had with him. I made it my business to get hold of the paper, because I was investigating another matter.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. MEANS. They can mention his name if they want to. I have no objection. While you are commenting on that, I want to show you how far the Department of Justice will go. Mr. John T. Dooling knows and Mr. F. I. Osborne knows that the Department of Justice has every piece of furniture—they took every piece of furniture—my wife's clothes and my little baby's clothes out of my apartment, and they hold them now.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know that that has anything to do with this case that is now under investigation.

Mr. MEANS. Well, while I was in Chicago, after this instance happened, Mr. W. J. Burns asked me to help the War Intelligence Bureau in New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. When was this?

Mr. MEANS. Mr. W. J. Burns wrote me that he had talked to Col. Biddle.

Senator OVERMAN. When was this?

Mr. MEANS. While I was in Chicago.

Senator OVERMAN. In 1917?

Mr. MEANS. In 1918, while this trial was going on.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, for my part, I do not want to see us get very far afield.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to stick to the German propaganda.

Senator WOLCOTT. Has that anything to do with what we are investigating?

Mr. MEANS. I am coming to Capt. Boy-Ed's papers, turned over to me.

Senator WOLCOTT. Can you come directly to it?

Mr. MEANS. All right. I thought you wanted these corroborative statements.

I forgot to mention that when I was buying those boats for Capt. Boy-Ed, the Germans sent me to Mr. Burns to try to employ his agency. I had an interview with him one night in his office, and told him to name his fee. He said that he would not work for them under any circumstances for any fee.

Senator WOLCOTT. This was when? Before you left the employ of Boy-Ed?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; before I left the employ of Boy-Ed. They had tried to employ him through me, and I met him in his office one night.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Burns has been more careful not to get in the employ of the Germans than you were.

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I had worked for the Germans before. I was handling purely commercial transactions. I was reporting every bit of anything at any time that was detrimental to the United States as fast as I learned it—every piece of information that I got. Well, Mr. Burns wrote me a letter while I was in Chicago and told me that Mr. Biddle, in charge of the War Intelligence Bureau in New York, had sent for him and told him that I could furnish him, he thought, some information pertaining to some German papers, etc. And Mr. Burns wrote and asked if I could, and if so, if I would so advise him. I wrote him back and said that I would be glad to go to New York and furnish any information that I had, but that I could not come right then. This case was going on. This is the letter that I received from the War Department, Office of Military Intelligence:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF MILITARY INTELLIGENCE,
ROOM No. 806, 302 BROADWAY,
New York City, August 2, 1918.

Mr. GASTON B. MEANS,
Chicago, Illinois.

MY DEAR MR. MEANS: Mr. W. J. Burns informs me that he wrote you a letter at my request in regard to a certain subject that the Government is rather interested in. I am giving this letter to Captain Lloyd of this office who is going to Chicago on another matter, but I thought that if the opportunity arose, he had better communicate with you in order to let you know more definitely what it is we are anxious to have your assistance in.

Very sincerely yours

(Sgd)

NICHOLAS BIDDLE
Major, N. A.

When Capt. Lloyd came, he came to the Congress Hotel, and got in touch with me; and he handed me that letter of introduction and wrote his name on a piece of paper, Capt. Lloyd, 302 Broadway, New York City; and he took up with me the question of getting hold of Boy-Ed's papers, and said he understood that I had the papers, etc., and would I be willing to turn them over to the United States Government. I told him that I would be glad to turn these papers over to the United States Government. Later we came to Washington and saw Mr. Tumulty in reference to the papers, etc., and I secured the papers and turned them over, and I am advised by counsel this morning that the committee had better go into executive session to hear the rest of that, what happened, etc.

Senator OVERMAN. Between you and him?

Mr. MEANS. About the papers and the details of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. As to how they were secured; where they were; who got them?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; who got them, etc.

Senator OVERMAN. What became of them?

Mr. MEANS. I turned them over to Capt. Lloyd.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is the only material fact, that you turned them over?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Where are they now?

Mr. MEANS. I think in New York City.

Senator WOLCOTT. In the custody of the Department of Justice?

Mr. MEANS. I do not think so. They may be. The Department of Justice may have something to do with them.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know where they are?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I think I know where they are.

Maj. HUMES. How recently have you discussed where they are?

Mr. MEANS. I discussed—soon after, Mr. Becker sent for me, subpoenaed me, had Capt. Lloyd make an appointment with me to have lunch, and when I got there to the point to have the lunch Mr. Becker slipped a subpoena on me and told me to come to his office. I did so, and then he sat down and read a statute to me and told me that if I talked about the papers—read the entire statute to me—and says, "If you discuss these papers or anything that takes place in this interview here, why, we will have you indicted." And I said, "What kind of proceedings are these?" He said, "It is a kind of grand jury proceeding." And I said, "By what authority am I subpoenaed here?" And he said, "Never mind, but listen to that statute very carefully." and he read it to me again, and I said, "You mean to say that I can not say anything about being subpoenaed up here?" And he said, "No; you can not say anything about being subpoenaed up here." And I said, "Does this statute have jurisdiction in New Jersey or in Washington?" And he replied, "You have too much epartee about you." And I said, "I guess after I get down before the committee I can tell anything I please, can't I?"

Senator OVERMAN. He examined you?

Mr. MEANS. Oh, yes; a very grilling examination, and then he went on to tell me that his authority was greater than the authority of the United States Government; that his department had authority that was greater than the authority of the United States Government.

Senator WOLCOTT. Than this committee?

Mr. MEANS. Than this committee had.

Senator WOLCOTT. He had greater authority?

Mr. MEANS. His authority was greater than the authority of the United States.

Maj. HUMES. Where did this conversation take place?

Mr. MEANS. In his office.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he ask you about these papers?

Mr. MEANS. Asked me all about the papers, and then he pulled out a ledger and referred to it and said, "Ah, ha; you received money from the Germans such and such a date. The book says so." I said, "I do not care what the books say."

Senator OVERMAN. Did he ask you about these papers?

Mr. MEANS. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you tell him anything about the papers or what you did with them?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; I told him what I did. Capt. Lloyd has talked with me since about the papers.

Senator OVERMAN. What did he say about that?

Mr. MEANS. He said—you had better give me an opportunity in executive session to tell what took place there.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not see that what was said there was anything at all material to this. You mean to say that you had the papers and you turned them over to the Government?

Mr. MEANS. To Capt. Lloyd.

Senator WOLCOTT. It strikes me that that is all that is material.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make a correct statement of the facts to Mr. Becker in that testimony at that time?

Mr. MEANS. Yes; in substance, correct, as I remember it; yes. I didn't tell him anything I didn't want to tell him. He told me that. At first he reprimanded me about my not turning these papers over a long time previous to that, the moment we declared war, and asked why I didn't turn them over.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why is the story about the turning over of these papers such an important matter as to require an executive session?

Mr. MEANS. I am just advised by a lawyer that it is.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is your lawyer here?

Mr. MEANS. No; not this one that gave me this advice. This conversation just took place this morning.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not know whether it is proper for an executive session or an open session.

Senator OVERMAN. I can not understand why it should be an executive session.

Senator WOLCOTT. I would like to have some reason why it should be an executive session.

Mr. MEANS. Do you want me to tell the details of the papers?

Senator OVERMAN. We would like to find out where the papers are. It seems that no one but two or three has seen them.

Mr. MEANS. Capt. Lloyd saw them. I had the entire batch once and went to St. Mary's College at Belmont, N. C.—the Boy-Ed papers and affidavits. I can secure the affidavit to show that Capt. Lloyd met me some time after October 16; between that and the 30th.

Senator WOLCOTT. Before you proceed with that, Mr. Means, who is the lawyer that gave you this advice?

Mr. FRED J. COXE. I may say that I am the attorney, and I consider it very vital that this committee get hold of those papers, and I do not think that his publicly stating here anything about the details of those papers will help this committee to get them.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you give him that advice this morning?

Mr. COXE. I talked with him about that.

Senator WOLCOTT. There seems to be another lawyer who gave similar advice. Who is that?

Mr. MEANS. He was talking with me about this, and he said, "If the committee wants the papers, I should think the Government ought to have them."

Senator WOLCOTT. I want to know who this other lawyer is that gave you this advice.

Mr. COXE. Mr. Means may have been referring to me at all times.

Senator WOLCOTT. No; he looked around and said "the other lawyer isn't here." Who is he, Mr. Means?

Mr. MEANS. I will give you his name there.

(The witness here made a memorandum and handed it to the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think, Mr. Coxe, that it should be given to an executive session and ought not to be made public?

Mr. COXE. I do not think it ought to be made public. I have gone into it very carefully with Mr. Means. I think the testimony he would give in an executive session would enable you to get those papers. I do not think that making them public will prevent your getting them, but I think it will militate against getting them. I think you would have a much harder time.

Senator WOLCOTT. The suggestion, then, is based upon an interest in securing the papers, not because there is any desire to do things secretly.

Mr. COXE. There is no desire to keep the matter secret, but the papers will divulge a great deal of stuff that corroborates Mr. Means, and a great deal of other stuff that will be of interest to the Government. I am afraid that if it is made public, the proper authorities will not get hold of them.

Senator OVERMAN. Come with us, and we will go into another office across the way.

(Thereupon, at 1.30 p. m., the subcommittee went into executive session. The proceedings in this executive session were not stenographically reported. At 3.25 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee resumed its open session.)

Senator OVERMAN. The committee have had an executive session and have heard the evidence in question proposed to be given in this proceeding, and have ruled, as they did before, that they would confine the testimony to the German propaganda and activities of the brewing and liquor interests, and we do not think that this is competent evidence in this hearing, although it might be in another proceeding. Therefore we rule it out.

I will ask Senator Nelson now to take the chair for a time. There is another witness, and there is some other evidence that we want to have put in this afternoon.

Senator NELSON (acting chairman). Capt. Lester, will you take the stand?

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. We submit the record of the depositions showing the German loans that were made in this country.

Senator NELSON. Will you read that, or is it too long to be read?

Maj. HUMES. Each item is very short. There are a number of items, but each one is covered in a very few sentences. It is very well digested.

Senator NELSON. Proceed, Captain.

Capt. LESTER. This is the deposition of Carl Heynen, who came to this country in April, 1915, for the purpose of assisting Dr. Albert in carrying on the commercial and financial affairs of the German Government. Heynen's main work for Dr. Albert was assisting in the purchasing of shipments of goods to Germany, by way of Sweden, Switzerland, and Holland, from the United States, and to charter or buy vessels for that purpose.

The deposition also contains the testimony of Borgemeister, the bookkeeper of the Albert office, who had immediate charge of the records of all of the financial transactions, and who took care of the bank accounts and disbursing of funds under Dr. Albert's direction, his position being largely clerical.

This deposition was taken on October 6, 1918, and purports to be a computation made up by Mr. Borgemeister and Mr. Heynen of actual cash that passed out through Dr. Albert's office, and the purpose for which the money was used, and, in most cases, the source from which the money was obtained. [Reading:]

NO. 1. LOAN FROM KUHN, LOEB & Co., $400,000.00.

Q. Mr. Borgemeister, was there a loan to Dr. Albert's office of $400,000.00 from Kuhn, Loeb & Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that upon collateral?—A. It was on collateral, deposited at the office of M. M. Warburg, Hamburg.

Q. What was the collateral, and how did you raise the loan? What rate did you have to pay &c?—A. The collateral, as far as I recollect, is something like twenty or twenty-five million marks, the interest was 6 per cent, and Albert obligated himself to maintain the balance of any loss than two hundred thousand dollars at Kuhn, Loeb & Company.

Q. This was the first loan you made?—A. The first loan Dr. Albert made.

Senator NELSON. What was the date of that?

Capt. LESTER. The date of that loan, Senator, is not given here, but the testimony given by Mr. Becker, which covers this loan, placed the date, as I recall it, in either September or October of 1914, shortly after Dr. Albert had come over here. That can be verified by reference to Mr. Becker's testimony, where he had the exact date and the details of the loan. [Reading:]

Q. Why did you go to Kuhn, Loeb & Company?—A. Kuhn, Loeb & Company we considered the natural bankers of the German Government and the Reich-bank.

Q. Why?—A. On account of the affiliation of M. M. Warburg & Company, Hamburg and the Reichbank—having done considerable business prior to the war.

Q. Was that loan re-paid?—A. Yes.

Q. At its maturity?—A. Yes.

ITEM NO. 2. LOAN FROM THE SUEDEDEITSCHER DISCONTO-GESELLSCHAFT (THROUGH JOHN SIMON) $1,300,000.00.

Q. Mr. Borgemeister, did Dr. Albert's office make any such loan from the Sueddeutsche Disconto-Gesellschaft?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that one loan?—A. The loan was made in three different amounts; first $300,000.00, second, $500,000.00 and third $500,000.00.

Q. What purpose was that applied to, do you remember?—A. In order to secure funds required here for making shipments?

Q. Where was that loan negotiated? Here or abroad?—A. Negotiated through John Simon, who acted as agent of the Sueddeutsche Disconto-Gesellschaft.

Senator NELSON. Was that a company located here or in Germany?

Capt. LESTER. That was in Germany. [Reading:]

Q. Was that loan re-paid?—A. Yes, the $300,000.00 was repaid through our office. One million dollars was paid upon instructions from our office to our principals in Berlin. An arrangement to that effect had been made with Mr. Simon.

Senator STERLING. I do not quite understand yet, who made the second loan of $1,300,000.

Capt. LESTER. That was the Sueddeutsche Disconto-Gesellschaft.

Senator NELSON. "Gesellschaft" means "Company"?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. It means the South German Banking Co.; I suppose that would be a freer translation of it.

Senator STERLING. That was in Germany?

Capt. LESTER. In Germany. The loan was made to Albert through the intermediation of John Simon, the man who was afterwards mixed up with the Atlantic.

Senator STERLING. Then it was not American money that went into this loan?

Capt. LESTER. Not in that loan; no, sir. [Reading:]

ITEM NO. 3. LOANS FROM THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK, $3,000,000.00.

Q. Dr. Albert's office borrowed money from the Chase National Bank?—A. Yes.

Q. To the amount of $3,000,000.00?—A. Yes, approximately.

Q. Was that one loan or more?—A. Three or four different loans, the total aggregating about $3,000,000.00.

Q. Briefly, what are the different loans?—A. The loans were against cotton in all instances. One loan about eight hundred or nine hundred thousand, and the other a like amount, and the third was four hundred thousand dollars, and the fourth approximately seven hundred to eight hundred thousand dollars.

Q. The first two loans concerned the cotton transaction in which the Southern Products Company was in?—A. Yes.

Q. Has that sum been re-paid?—A. The entire amount has been paid.

ITEM NO. 4. LOANS FROM THE MECHANICS & METALS NATIONAL BANK, $1,000,000.00.

Q. Did you make any such loan, Mr. Borgemeister?—A. Yes; two different loans of something like five hundred thousand dollars each.

J. On collateral?—A. No, except the last one was made against moneys due us in Berlin. We had moneys at the Deutsche Bank, and requested the Deutsche Bank to deposit to the account of the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, and borrowed against such deposit.

Q. Has that loan been re-paid?—A. Yes, entirely.

The Mechanics & Metals National Bank is in New York City?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Capt. LESTER (reading):

ITEM NO. 5. LOAN FROM G. AMSUNCK & COMPANY, $400,000.00.

Q. Did you make any such loan, Mr. Borgemeister?—A. I believe I am right when I say $400,000. It may have been less—$300,000, and the amount was paid back subsequently.

Q. Was that on collateral?—A. I recollect that there were German dollar treasury bills.

Q. And that loan has been paid?—A. Yes, sir.

Item No. 6. LOANS FROM THE EQUITABLE TRUST CO.

(" KINA ") $1,800,000.00.

Q. What was this loan?—A. The loan was made in the form of a credit rendered by the Equitable Trust Company, in order to finance the cotton shipment aggregating about $1,800,000.00.

Q. Was Albert's office alone interested?—A. No, sir,

Q. Who else?—A. The parties interested in it were the Deutsche Bank, Tiedeman & Company, Fort Worth, Texas and the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft; each party assuming one third of the transaction.

Q. What was that shipment?—A. Shipment of cotton?

Q. What place was it intended for?—A. Holland.

Q. To go through Germany?—A. No, to stay in Holland and disposition to be taken later by interested parties.

Q. The ultimate destination was Germany?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it get to Germany?—A. No, sir, it went as far as an English port although it had the assurance of Mr. Richard Crawford, according to Mr. Rose of the Department of State that that cotton shipment, in view of the fact that it had been inaugurated before the British Counsel Order came out—it should be unmolested.

Q. What occurred to the cargo?—A. Great Britain forced the discharge of the cargo and the sale of same in Great Britain.

Q. With what result as to terms?—A. The money was transferred to New York and the loan was paid and expenses were covered.

Q. The return was made back to you by the British Government?—A. Yes, to Tiedeman.

Q. The shipment was made in the name of Tiedeman?—A. No, in the name of some Savannah concern.

Q. The Deutsche Bank and Albert's office did not appear?—A. No.

Q. So that transaction washed itself?—A. Yes.

ITEM NO. 7. LOAN FROM THE GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY, $450,000.00.

Q. Was there such a loan, Mr. Borgemeister?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how was that financed?—A. It was a ninety days credit to us or our nominee. In this case to Mr. Theodore R. Lemke, and after ninety days they were paid.

Q. Was that on collateral?—A. No, there was no collateral: the guarantee of the Deutsche Bank.

Q. In other words the Deutsche Bank guaranteed your account?—A. Quite correct.

Q. That sum was repaid?—A. Yes.

ITEM NO. 8. LOAN FROM THE BANKERS TRUST COMPANY. $250,000.00.

Q. Was there such a loan?—A. Yes. That is the same as the other previously explained.

Q. Passed through Lemke?—A. No, L. Wolff & Company were the beneficiaries. It was also paid.

Q. Has that been closed out?—A. Yes.

ITEM No. 9. PROCEEDS OF TREASURY NOTES PLACED APRIL 1, 1915, $7,000,000.00.

Q. How was that amount released?—A. By the sale of Imperial German treasury dollar notes.

Q. What were those notes?—A. The notes ran nine months, countersigned by the Ambassador or his attorney.

Q. Any collateral behind them?—A. No collateral; the guarantee of the German Government.

Q. With what banks was it raised or how was it raised?—A. The private banking house of—There is a mistake or misprint here in this testimony.

Senator NELSON. You might go on with the rest and supply it later.

Capt. LESTER. It is repeated further over. The right name is here. [Reading:]

The private banking house of Blank, incorporated; the notes were sold to various purchasers in the United States.

Q. Were those the notes that you sold more to Americans than Germans?—A. Quite correct. There was a better market among American people than German-Americans.

Q. Has that loan been repaid?—A. Yes, on the 1st of January, 1916.

Senator NELSON. Why do you leave the blank there?

Capt. LESTER. The name is wrong, Senator.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Capt. LESTER. They have made a name here that is not correct.

Senator NELSON. You will supply that later?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I will supply that in just a minute, when I come to it. They are the same people who handled another one. [Reading:]

ITEM No. 10: PROCEEDS OF TREASURY BILLS, PLACED JUNE 1, 1916, $3,600,000.00.

Q. Was there any such sum as that realized?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the treasury bills?—A. The treasury bills were different from the treasury notes inasmuch as they were in the form of a bill of exchange and discounted instead of the coupon bonds. In other words, the discount was immediately subtracted from the amount of the sale.

Q. Was that fund repaid?—A. Only a part of it was renewed—$2,600,000.00, approximately, and $1,000,000.00 was repaid on March 1, 1917, at maturity.

ITEM No. 11. PROCEEDS OF TREASURY BONDS, PLACED IN 1915, 1916, $1,300,000.00.

Q. Mr. Borgemeister, what are these?—A. They were treasury notes—coupon notes—due on the 1st of September, 1918. They were sold principally to insurance companies.

Q. Was that going on in 1915?—A. Well, yes. Part of 1915 and part of 1916.

Q. What were those? You say "sold to insurance companies principally"—A. Obligation of the German Government in form of a coupon note.

Q. That was issued here?—A. Yes.

Q. And no collateral behind that beyond the promise of the Government?—A. Beyond the promise of the Government.

Q. These last three transactions here (Nos. 9, 10 and 11) seven million, three million seven hundred thousand and one million three hundred thousand were on the promise of the German Government?—A. Yes.

Q. And on that alone?—A. Yes.

ITEM No. 12. REMITTANCE FROM THE REICHSBANK FOR ACCOUNT OF THE ZENTRAL-EINKAUF'S GESELLSCHAFT, $3,500,000.00.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. The Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft requested the Reichsbank at various intervals to make payments to our office, and the total aggregate about $3,500,000.00.

Q. How did you obtain these remittances? Direct from the Reichsbank?—A. They would instruct their correspondents here in New York to make the payment to us.

Q. Was that upon any obligation here made by Dr. Albert's office to repay that?—A. No; it was really an obligation made in Germany. The Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft arranged with the Reichsbank over there.

Q. So Albert's office had nothing to do with the preliminaries or the contracts by which that sum was raised?—A. No. They might have instructed or requested the Zentral Einkaufs Gesellschaft to make such claim.

ITEM No. 13. REMITTANCE FROM THE REICHSBANK FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE TREASURY NOTES OF APRIL 1, 1915, $7,000,000.00.

Q. How was that made, Mr. Borgemeister?—A. The Reichsbank made the remittance through the Guaranty Trust Company, I believe for the payment of the notes maturing the 1st of January, 1916.

Q. And this was to pay the previous item of these notes, April 1, 1915?—A. Correct.

Q. And that fund was applied toward that payment?—A. Yes, quite correct.

Senator STERLING. That refers to the $7,000,000 Treasury notes previously mentioned?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; the redemption Treasury notes they floated here. [Reading:]

ITEM No. 14. REMITTANCES FROM THE REICHSBANK FOR ACCOUNT OF THE BRIDGEPORT PROJECTILE COMPANY, $1,200,000.00.

Q. How was that fund placed, Mr. Borgemeister, so it was available?—A. The Reichsbank apparently made an arrangement with the Deutsche Bank to place the amount in monthly installments to the credit of Dr. Albert, and the funds were received to the extent of $1,200,000.00.

Q. Now, did your office here have to do with making that arrangement in any way? I mean to get it from the Reichsbank?—A. I don't recollect.

Q. Arrangement for this million two hundred thousand dollars, was that made by your office here?—A. It was suggested here.

Q. What was done with that fund of one million two hundred thousand dollars paid over to the Bridgeport Projectile Company?—A. Mr. Heynen: It was used as part of the payments which became due to the Bridgeport Projectile Company, as per our contract with them.

Q. What was that contract, Mr. Heynen?—A. For the manufacture of two million shrapnel cases.

ITEM No. 15. REMITTANCE FROM THE ZENTRAL-EINKAUF'S GESELLSCHAFT (THROUGH JOHN SIMON), $650,000.00.

Q. Was there such a remittance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how did that come to reach you through John Simon?—A. Apparently the Zentral Einkaufs Gesellschaft made a transfer in Germany through the Sueddeutsche Disconte Gesellschaft, Mr. John Simon being the agent of the Sueddeutsche Disconte Gesellschaft, we got it through him. Probably they had code arrangements.

Q. Did your office have to do with negotiating this?—A. Oh, yes, we requested the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft.

Q. Where was the arrangement made?—A. On the other side.

Q. In other words, you suggested to your principal on the other side, and they arranged it over there?—A. Yes.

Q. What you got was the remittance?—A. Yes, $650,000.00.

ITEM No. 16. REMITTANCES FROM THE DEUTSCHE BANK FOR ACCOUNT OF THE ZENTRAL-EINKAUF'S GESELLSCHAFT, $1,200,000.00.

Q. What does that refer to?—A. We received in two different amounts; one time one million dollars and another time two hundred thousand dollars from the Deutsche Bank for the account of the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft through Hugo Schmidt.

Q. That was a payment through Hugo Schmidt?—A. Yes. The Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft used that channel in order to make payment.

Q. Funds were raised on the other side?—A. Yes.

Q. That includes all of the items?—A. Yes, includes the source of money—

Q. Were any one of these loans or proceeds or remittances based upon a negotiation here with collateral pledged here for those loans?—A. Yes.

Q. Which one?—A. The Chase National Bank.

Q. Three million dollars?—A. Yes; the Mechanics and Metals partly against collateral and partly against obligation of the German Empire. G. Amsinck against collateral; the Equitable Trust Company against collateral; the Guaranty Trust Company was against the credit of the Deutsche Bank, and the Bankers Trust Company was against the credit of the Deutsche Bank.

Q. Now, this makes a total of $34,050,000.00?—A. Yes.

Q. That is the best recollection of yourself and Mr. Heynen as to the actual receipts of Dr. Albert's office?—A. Quite right.

Q. And that you have computed here with me during the day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and Mr. Heynen have, together, during the day computed the disbursements?—A. Yes.

Q. And you prepared for me a schedule of the amounts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. 1st. Repayment of loan to Kuhn Loeb & Company $400,000.00. That is the repayment of the first receipts—A. Yes.

Q. 2nd. Repayment of part of loan of the Sueddeutsche Disconto Gesellschaft, $300,000.000. That is a part of the second item of receipts, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. The remaining million being carried for the other side?—A. Carried for instructions to be paid by our principals in Europe.

Q. 3rd. Repayment of loans to the Chase National Bank three million.—A. Yes.

Q. That is repayment of receipts already mentioned?—A. Quite correct.

Q. 4th. Repayment of loans to the Mechanics and Metals National Bank $1,000,000.00. That represents repayment of the receipts of item 4?—A. Quite correct.

Q. 5th. Repayment of loan to G. Amsinck & Company, $400,000.00. That is the repayment of item 5 receipts?—A. Yes.

Q. 6th. Repayment of loan to the Equitable Trust Co., $1,800,000.00. That is repayment of receipts of item 6?—A. Yes.

Q. 7th. Repayment of loan to the Guaranty Trust $450,000.00?—A. That is repayment of receipts of item 7.

Q. 8th. Repayment of loan to Bankers Trust, $250,000.00?—A. Repayment of item 8 receipts.

Q. 9th. Redemption of treasury notes, placed April 1, 1915, $7,000,000.00?—A. That is repayment of item 9 receipts.

Q. 10th. Part redemption of treasury bills, placed June, 1916, $1,000,000.00?—A. Part of item 10.

Q. What became of the item?—A. Still owing.

Q. That leaves $2,600,000.00 still outstanding of German treasury bills?—A. Yes.

Q. 11th. Remittances for account of and to the Reichsbank in dollars and in marks $3,000,000.00. What does that represent?—A. We had at times, especially when we came towards liquidating our business, in the year 1916, quite considerable excess funds in New York. In order to assist the Reichsbank, we gave them dollars.

Q. Just what do you mean by that?—A. The Reichsbank required—the dollar exchange being the New York medium of payment at that time, and we had a desire to help the Reichsbank as much as possible to liquidate the debts—

Q. (interposing). Did that apply or was it to be applied upon any remittance that was to be made to you by way of receipts?—A. No; no particular remittance.

Q. Was it to be applied to any receipts generally?—A. Yes; to the receipts generally.

Q. In other words, it was a repayment to the Reichsbank of three million dollars on account of remittance that had been made to you by the Reichsbank?—A. Quite correct.

Q. 12th. Payments to and for account of the Embassy, Washington, $2,500,000.00. How were those payments made, and what did they represent?—A. They were paid either for account of von Bernstorff to his bankers—partly to Kuhn, Loeb and Company and a part to the Corn Exchange. From time to time the Embassy would give instructions to make payments to various attachés. The account of the Embassy would be debited with such payments.

Q. Was there any accounting back to Dr. Albert's office as to what was done with the funds?—A. No. As soon as we paid it by the instructions of the Embassy, we closed our transaction. The accounting will very likely or have taken place in Berlin.

Q. Was there anything in Albert's office to show to what the $2,000,000.00 was applied by the Embassy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was that a check upon the account by the Embassy?—A. No. We got instructions to make such payment by the Embassy, or make such a deposit, or whatever it would be.

Q. What would the books of Dr. Albert's office show?—A. Paid by instruction of Embassy such and such a date and so and so much.

Q. And would it end with that entry?—A. Yes.

Q. You can't tell us what was done with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Next item, 13th. Payments to the Bridgeport Projectile Company, $2,500,000.00?

Mr. HEYNEN. Those aggregate the payments to the Bridgeport Projectile Company, in accordance with original contract with them, and the final accounting of contract and for extra machinery which they still hold for us.

Q. Next item, 14th. Total value of shipments of merchandise to Europe during 1914, $3,600,000.00. That represents what kind of merchandise?—A. Principally grain and flour.

Q. Who were they shipped through, in a general way?—A. Through Larsen and through Peterson. They were shipped to Copenhagen.

Q. Did your office have any interest in the company or shippers in any way?—A. I believe we had once some small amount with Larsen & Company.

Q. Would you say those were confined wholly to Larsen and Peterson?—A. I think so.

Q. Item 15th. Value of cotton shipment by Steamship Eir, $800,000.00. Who was it that handled that transaction?—A. L. Wolff & Company, and he had somebody else interested in the transaction on a commission basis for himself.

Q. That was a shipment to what port?—A. To Gothenburg and Copenhagen. The ship reached Gothenburg and delivered part of the cargo in Gothenburg and on her way to Copenhagen she was captured by a German submarine and taken into Kiel.

Q. Did you get a return on that?—A. No, sir; we did not receive a return. The cotton was sold, I presume by the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft, and the proceeds were not sent back to us.

Q. But it was handled by your principals on the other side?—A. Yes.

Q. That transaction you think was wholly through L. Wolff & Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Item 16th. Value of grain shipment by Steamship Eir, $500,000.00. What was that?—A. That's approximately the value of the Eir grain shipment by John Simon or the Southern Products Trading Company.

Q. What was the grain?—A. Barley and wheat.

Q. Was that one and the same shipment with the cotton?—A. No; two different shipments. The ship came back and took another cargo.

Q. Which one went first?—A. The grain cargo went first.

Q. And she came back and went over with a cotton shipment, and then she was captured?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you get the return on this shipment of grain by the Eir?—A. No, sir. It was either sold in Scandinavia or they received the shipment in Germany. We do not know the final disposition of the cargo.

Q. 17th. Value of miscellaneous cargo by Steamship Maumee of $500,000.00. What do you mean by "miscellaneous cargo"?—A. That cargo consisted partly meat, I believe, and there was some lard and some cottonseed cake. I think those were the principal.

Q. Who were the shippers?—A. Goldsmith & Company.

Q. Did you have any transaction with Goldsmith & Company?—A. Some cotton and rubber purchasing.

Q. How did you arrange the financing of that detail through Goldsmith?—A. At that time we had in our possession some American securities—bonds. We gave Goldsmith & Company the advantage of these securities, and they borrowed money against securities and used it to pay for the merchandise and finance the transaction.

Q. Is that represented in the receipts?—A. The proceeds of the contract are represented in the expenditures.

Q. You mean by proceeds—it did not come back, there was no remittance from the other side?—A. No remittance from the other side.

Q. 18th. Value of miscellaneous cargo by Steamship Winnecoune $100,000.00. What was that cargo?—A. Bean cake and macaroni sent by the Southern Products Trading Company.

Q. Did they have all the cargo—the Southern Products Company?—A. It was a part cargo.

Q. I mean all of the shipment?—A. Yes, I think they had.

Q. In other words, the whole hundred thousand was handled through the Southern Products Trading Company?—A. Yes.

Q. 19th. Value of miscellaneous cargo by Steamship Fordney, $390,000.00.—

A. That was a miscellaneous cargo, consisting of miscellaneous types of fodder.

Q. Who was that sent from?—A. K. & E. Numond made the shipment. I don't recall who was the actual shipper.

Q. This represented the amount you had actually paid out for that cargo?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there any remittance for that cargo to your office here?—A. No.

Q. How was it handled on the other side?—A. She was taken in by the British and arrangements—either it condemned—it was not entirely condemned but was to be settled after the war. Lindheim would know as to the present status.

Q. The Prize Court took the entire cargo?—A. The Prize Court either took it and sold it and still has the proceeds over there, or they have made the remittance—that we can't tell, but not to us.

Q. Did their seizure affect the ship at all?—A. No, the ship was released immediately.

Q. So there is pending a claim against the British Government for the amount of return on the sale of this cargo?—A. To my best recollection; yes.

Q. Then that would be a claim now that would be due to Albert's office, if collectable for the amount that the British Government received upon the sale through the Prize Court?—A. Due to the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft.

Q. You told me that Dr. Albert's office had nothing to do with the ship itself?—A. Nothing in this instance.

Q. Did it in any other instance?—A. Prior to that, yes. The ship was chartered by the American Exporters Line, and its operation was more or less guaranteed by Dr. Albert or the Zentral Einkaufs Gesellschaft.

Q. What was that transaction?—A. It resulted from our desire to see as many ships ply between the United States and Scandinavian countries after the war was declared. Most of the ship owners were scared to run to Scandinavian ports, and for that reason we decided that such a line should be brought into existence. This ship was one of the few ships chartered for the purpose.

Q. By whom?—A. By Phelps Brothers and Company as the operators of the American Exporters Line.

Q. Chartered to whom?—A. Chartered to the American Exporters Line.

Q. What was the American Exporters Line?—A. A line incorporated apparently by Phelps.

Q. And he was the agent?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Albert's office have any financial value in the ship?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the value?—A. You mean the financial value?

Q. In the ship; yes.—A. No. It had committed itself to a guarantee to see that no loss should be incurred on the charter. Albert guaranteed the charter, and any profit or loss would have been made up or received by Albert.

Q. Did Albert's office pay out anything?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, did Albert's office have any invested value in the Winnecoune?—A. No.

Q. Or in the Maumee?—A. No.

Q. Or in the Eir?—A. Yes; the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft owned the ship.

Q. By a payment made here?—A. No; in Scandinavia.

Q. Was that payment made out of your funds here?—A. Yes.

Q. Next item, 20th. Balance of value of miscellaneous cargoes by Steamship Amor and Steamship Newton, first voyage, $250,000. What was this cargo on the Amor?—A. Grains.

Q. Who were the shippers?—A. The Southern Products Trading Company was one.

Q. Who was the owner of the cargo?—A. The owner of the cargo was Albert, in the name of the Southern Products Trading Company—the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft.

Q. Did you tell me what the cargo was?—A. Consisted of various grains.

Q. What was the cargo on the Newton?—A. Also a grain shipment.

Q. What was the amount that was invested, as near as you can recollect in each one?—A. About between four hundred to five hundred thousand dollars.

Q. What do you mean by "balance of value" in here?—A. The cargoes were sold in Italy and France, and the proceeds were sent partly to the United States, finding its way back to our office, and I understand partly were sent before Italy went into the war with Germany.

Q. Part of the proceeds remained on the other side?—A. Yes.

Q. You charged it here as a disbursement of $250,000.00?—A. That is the remaining balance still on our books.

Q. It represents the amount paid on account of the cargo?—A. Yes; we did not receive the tonnage.

Q. Did you receive the tonnage for any portion of this?—A. Yes; for the balance.

Q. Next item, 21. Book value of Steamship Eir, $300,000.00. What does that represent?—A. The account of the Steamship Eir was credited with the net freight the ship was earning, and the account was reduced to that extent. In other words, something like a hundred thousand dollars was credited to the book value.

Q. In other words, the ship had cost practically four hundred thousand dollars?—A. Yes.

Q. But with the return from the ship its book value had been reduced to $300,000.00?—A. Quite correct.

Q. So that's what you carry on your books as your net outlay on account of the ship?—A. Yes.

Q. Next item 22. Purchase price of sailer Manga Rera, $320,000.00.

Mr. HEYDEN. That was the original cost of the ship.

Q. And that was paid out by Albert's office?—A. (Mr. Heyden). Yes.

Q. That shipment was under the name of the Brynhilda Corporation?—A. (Mr. Heyden). Yes.

Q. Next item 23. Purchase price of the sailer Brynhilda $200,000.00. Do you know about that, Mr. Heyden?—A. Yes; we wanted to obtain possession of the company in order to incorporate. Therefore we purchased the stock at the stated price and thereby acquired the sailing vessel under the same name.

Q. And that was cash paid by Albert's office?—A. Yes.

Q. 24th. Purchase price of the Steamship Callao. Do you know about that, Mr. Heyden?—A. That was the amount we paid.

Q. That was paid by Albert's office?—A. Yes; to Numond & Company.

Q. 25th. Part purchase price of the Steamship Neptune, $100,000.00. Do you remember about that, Mr. Heyden?—A. I remember paying that much for the vessel, which was finally turned into the Brynhilda Shipping Company.

Q. And the balance of the ship was bought?—A. That I don't recall.

Q. The balance was bought by the payment of about $32,000.00?—A. I know they intended to.

Q. 26th. Loss on purchase and sale of the Steamship Zeleandia, $120,000.00. What was the purchase price of the Zeleandia?—A. She was before my time, but according to the books $300,000.

Q. And you sold it for what?—A. $100,060 we obtained as refund from the agent who acted in the original purchase for Mr. Albert.

Q. Who was that? Sulzberger Sons?—A. As far as I recall, Sulzberger & Company.

Q. Next item, 27. Loss on operation of various steamers of the American Exporters Line, partly represented by claims against the British Government for undue detention of ships, $200,000.00. Will you explain that?—A. That was before my time.

Q. Will you explain that, Mr. Borgemeister? What ships?—A. The Fordney was one of them; then there was the Biamo, and then there was the Antilla and several others, which names I do not recollect.

Q. What is the total amount that you have claimed on account of those?—A. I made claim on account of the Fordney and the Antilla.

Q. Were claims made on account of the other ships?—A. No.

Q. What part of this $200,000 is represented by claim?—A. I think it must be about one hundred to one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

Q. And who was handling that matter for Dr. Albert's office?—A. Hayes Kaufmann & Lindheim, through Phelps.

Q. Whose name was it being prosecuted in?—A. Phelps & Company.

Q. But it was really the transaction of Albert?—A. It was the transaction of Phelps, but the guarantee of H. F. Albert—the guarantee of the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft. I believe Phelps didn't really know our name.

Q. You mean by that that Phelps Brothers undertook this selling and—
(At this point one line of the transcript of this deposition is illegible.)

Albert or through someone on behalf of Albert?—A. Yes; I believe the latter is correct.

Q. But whatever proceeds might come through the prosecution of these claims would be the property of Albert?—A. Of the Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft.

Q. And that you say would represent around one hundred or one hundred and ten thousand dollars?—A. Something like that.

Q. Next item, 28. Loss on operation of Fisk Trading Company, representing loss of operation of Steamship Zealandia and Steamship Neches (claim pending against McFadden & Company) and loss on merchandise, loaded on and discharged from Atlantic, $200,000.00?

Mr. HEYNEN. That is, as far as I recollect, the total amount.

Q. What was the Neches transaction, briefly?

Mr. HEYNEN. The vessel chartered by the Fiske Trading Company in order to load meats for Scandinavia, and for some reason or other the shipment could not be made, and she accepted instead a cargo of general merchandise on rates for Rotterdam.

Q. Why couldn't she make her other trip?

Mr. HEYNEN. I wasn't there at the time.

Q. What was the loan on that transaction? How did you come by it?—A. She took a cargo of cotton shipped from McFadden, and McFadden gave a guarantee for any detention which might be caused to the vessel in consequence of this cotton. The vessel suffered detention, was held up by the British and taken to London on account of such cotton, which was unloaded in London and re-loaded again and taken to Rotterdam, and when I took over this Fiske Trading Company for liquidation, I found this claim in the hands of the lawyers, Harrington, Bigham & Englar. I thereupon endeavored to expedite the liquidation and the lawyers had some evasive replies as to whether it was the right time to receive—that they might succeed in getting this money from the British Government, in such case McFadden would not have to pay it.

Q. Was the claim directly against McFadden?—A. McFadden was originally responsible. As far as I know, they never did properly represent it to him.

Q. That claim was on behalf of the Fiske Trading Company?—A. Yes.

Q. How much did that amount to, so far as the Neches is concerned, approximately?—A. Between thirty-five and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. What was the loss on the Zealandia?—A. She was put on the Fiske Trading Company for Manchester, and accepted a general cargo at ruinous rates. She was a very poor carrying vessel, and she had very bad weather on the trip and had to effect repairs in Manchester, and finally from Manchester she took a cargo of salt, I think, to Florida at likewise ruinous rates. All of this caused a great loss in the operation of the vessel.

Q. Then the only claim there would be out of these two ships, the Zealandia and the Neches, would be a claim of thirty-five to fifty thousand dollars on account of the detention of the ship by the British?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is being handled by Harrington, Bigham & Englar, so far as you know?—A. Yes. The claim on account of the Neches was that the ship, while cleared from New York in accordance with the regulations of the British Admiralty was taken by the British to London, and was forced to discharge her cotton there. Subsequently permission was granted to have her take the cotton to Rotterdam. All of this caused very great expense, and detention to the ship, which is the item of claim.

Q. Were the facts of all that laid with Harrington, Bigham & Englar?—A. Yes, they have all the details in the matter.

Q. The creditor against detention of the Neches was McFadden & Company?—A. Yes.

Q. They are located in New York?—A. Yes.

Q. And did you direct Harrington, Bigham & Englar to proceed against them?—A. Repeatedly.

Q. And what answer did you get from them?—A. They always replied that their partner was in London endeavoring to settle the matter with the British Government.

Q. And that claim was being prosecuted in the name of the Fiske Trading Company?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Were there any other assets of the Fiske Trading Company, that you know of, in this claim of thirty-five to fifty thousand, that Harrington, Bigham & Englar are handling for you?—A. I can't recall any other assets.

Q. Next item, 29. Loss on shipments of meat by Sulzberger & Company, $260,000.00. Do you know about that, Mr. Heynen?—A. That is the final payment made on the transaction, which we discussed the other day, where Sulzberger & Company had made shipments of meats to Scandinavian ports under the guarantee of Dr. Albert through the Deutsche Bank.

Q. What was the total amount of shipments? About two million?—A. Approximately two million.

Q. This represents a loan on that?—A. This is the final loan on the captured cargoes for which Mr. Albert was responsible.

Q. And who was that paid to?—A. That was paid to Sulzberger & Company.

Q. Now, were those captures of the meat put in Prize Court?—A. They were in Prize Court.

Q. Were there any returns from them like there was from the cotton?—A. Not at the time I was interned.

Q. Who was handling that transaction?—A. The lawyers for Sulzberger & Company I don't know. By agreement, they were to force the claim to the Prize Court, and failing to obtain redress in the Prize Court, they were to take the matter to International Court after the war.

Q. I have already asked you about that?—A. Yes, and you have got the agreement.

Q. Were Strook & Strook the attorneys?—A. Strook & Strook acted as friendly intermediaries between myself and the Sulzbergers.

Q. You don't know who the Sulzbergers attorneys were?—A. No.

Q. Next item, 30. Loss of cargo by steamship Newton, 2nd voyage, $150,000.00. What was that, Mr. Heynen?—A. The steamship Newton had loaded a cargo for a European port at San Francisco. She was detained at Panama by a slide in the canal, and there was trouble in arranging with the owners of the vessel to have her proceed to Europe, and we effected an agreement with them, and the destination of the cargo was changed to New York, and here it was unloaded and finally sold, and the loss on the transaction, as far as my recollection goes to-day, was approximately $150,000.

Q. What was that cargo?—A. Cocoanut cake.

Q. That's fodder?—A. Yes.

Q. For cattle?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, No. 31 is an item of loss on cotton purchased by John Simon, $450,000.00 less profit on cotton shipments of L. Wolff & Company, $150,000.00 making $300,000.00. We have already gone into the cotton shipment of John Simon, haven't we, very fully?—A. Yes.

Q. On the cotton shipped by L. Wolff & Company, there was a profit?—A. Approximately $150,000.00.

Q. So that the net loss on the cotton was $300,000.00.

Mr. BORGEMEISTER. Really it is not as much as that. Take the cotton shipment on the Eir alone, that went over to Germany.

Q. There was evidently a profit on the cotton shipped on the Eir?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any other shipments of cotton except the Eir and Wolff's shipment?—A. The Kina shipment by Tiedeman—

Q. So as to the cotton shipment, we have the cargo of the Eir, valued at $800,000, the Kina valued at —A. (Interposing.) $1,800,000.00.

Q. And the Wolff shipment by various shipments?—A. About $1,200,000.00.

Q. Are those figures approximately correct?

Mr. BORGEMEISTER. Approximately correct.

Q. Next item, No. 32. Loss on purchase and sale of rubber, $100,000.00. What was that, Mr. Heynen?—A. We frequently purchased rubber, expecting a short duration of the war, in order to have it ready on declaration of peace to ship to Germany. Subsequently we had to sell it, and this item represents the loss between the purchase price and the selling price and the cost of storage, insurance, etc.

Q. Who was it that handled that rubber transaction for you?—A. Mostly Mr. Rosenberg.

Mr. BORGEMEISTER. Mr. Lemke at first.

Q. What Rosenberg is that? Franz?—A. Yes.

Q. Item 33. Loss on contract for purchase of material by Aaron Hecht $165,000.00. You were familiar with that, Mr. Borgemeister?

A. (BORGEMEISTER.) Yes, in order to cancel the contracts, settlement was made by Aaron Hecht, the $150,000.00 granted him being the consideration of cancelling the contract.

Mr. JONES. I have already examined Mr. Borgemeister very fully. Mr. Hecht being in Germany had made contract with the German Government, which it was quite clear that he could not perform, and in order to be relieved of the probability of his failure to do so and to avoid any trouble, this payment was made by Albert's office for release of that contract.

Q. Next item, 34. Cash deposits and expenses for account of Appam, $850,000.00.

Mr. JONES. I have fully interrogated Mr. Borgemeister and Mr. Heynen about this matter, and there has been turned over to the Alien Property Custodian $355,000 of this cash and one million two hundred Imperial bonds, which were deposited with the American Security Company as collateral.

Q. Item 35 Balance of deposit account with Chandler & Company, $75,000.00. Do you know anything about that, Mr. Heynen?—A. Yes, that is approximately the balance of moneys from our office left with Chandler & Company at the time of my being interned, from the account current.

Q. Arising out of what?—A. Arising out of deposits from Mr. Albert's office, subject to Mr. Albert's disposition.

Q. No. 36. Balance of account current with John Simon, $155,000.00.—A. You have a statement and the extract of that account.

Q. No. 37. Balance of operating account Atlantic, $17,000.00.—A. That is likewise Mr. John Simon for collections made by him for account of the operation.

Q. I have already very carefully examined you as to those two items?—A. You have.

Q. No. 38. Balance of account current of T. Lemke, $20,000.00. I have already asked you about that, but state it briefly.—A. Mr. Lemke claims this is due him as commission for the purchase made for account of Mr. Albert, while Mr. Albert stated that he is not entitled thereto.

Q. No. 39. Interests paid on loans, notes and bills, $400,000.00?

Mr. BORGEMEISTER. Paid the interest in advance for one year on the notes maturing on March 1, 1917, and extended for one year. We further paid the interest in advance on the bonds aggregating $1,300,000, up to April 1, 1918. There were numerous payments for interest on loans effected here in this market, and the total amount is about $400,000.00.

Senator STERLING. Capt. Lester, who held these particular claims now, for losses sustained in shipments and for interest paid?

Capt. LESTER. Well, this last one that I testified to has already been paid out; the $400,000 has already been paid out. These contingent claims for detention, etc., are in the hands of concerns that were working through Albert and, in so far as they are the property of German subjects, I assume that they are in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, or under his control.

There are some of these detention claims they speak of here that are being prosecuted that apparently are claims that originally belonged to American concerns or corporations that have been formed to conduct this trade, the result of whose operations has been guaranteed by Albert.

Senator STERLING. I see.

Capt. LESTER. The primary obligation would not be involved in Albert's transactions. It would be merely a guarantee on his part.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. That appears in one or two of them, at least.

Senator STERLING. Then Dr. Albert himself, in turn, might have claims on account of losses and detentions?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I think there is one here. Here is the claim of an item of $260,000, referred to as item No. 29, which was a payment by Albert to Sulzburger & Co., and that is described as being a settlement with Sulzburger & Co. on account of a guaranty that Albert made, Sulzburger undertaking to ship meats to Europe if they were guaranteed by Albert against loss by detention or any other loss; and it turns out that there was a detention and a loss amounting to $260,000 in this particular instance, which he paid them. So that transaction would be closed. Whether he would have a claim for recoupment on that is another matter. I do not know.

I continue to read from the deposition:

Q. That was principally upon treasury notes and treasury bonds.—A. Yes and loans effected here.

Q. That makes a total that you account for here of $33,777,000.00?—A. Quite correct.

Mr. JONES. I have already examined both Mr. Borgemeister and Mr. Heyer in detail about the great majority of these items that go to make up expenditures, and under respective headings will be found, to a very large extent, statement that will cover such.

Now, the name that I referred to on page 6 of this deposition, in response to the question in reference to item No. 9, $7,000,000, proceeds of Treasury notes placed the answer is: "The private banking house of Chattel & Company, Incorporated." That is a mistake. It is Chandler & Co. (Inc.). Chandler & Co. handled the first loan, $7,000,000, for Dr. Albert, Treasury notes.

I believe that is all.

Senator STERLING. That concludes the depositions?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; Senator; that concludes the depositions.

Senator NELSON. You have some evidence, Maj. Humes, that you want to put in, I believe?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF MAJ. EDWIN LOWRY HUMES.

Maj. HUMES. To refresh the recollection of the committee, I want to call your attention to the fact that Mr. Becker in his testimony referred to the fact that bank accounts had been opened in St. Louis by Dr. Albert and by Bernstorff, one with the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. and one with the St. Louis Union Bank.

For the more definite information of the committee with reference to those two accounts, I submit a copy of the ledger accounts, showing that in the St. Louis Union Bank there was deposited to the account of H. F. Albert, on April 5, 1915, $100,000; on April 12, 1915, there was $50,000 withdrawn; on April 29 the $50,000 of balance was transferred to a joint account of H. F. Albert and J. Bernstorff. This account had a withdrawal on May 6, 1915, of $30,000, and on June 1 a withdrawal of $15,000. There had been some accumulated interest, and the account was closed with the withdrawal on November 5 of $5,162.68.

Senator STERLING. Was that the joint account?

Senator NELSON. The last part of it.

Maj. HUMES. That is the joint account; yes.

Senator NELSON. It was first a deposit to the credit of Albert, and then toward the last a joint account of Albert and Bernstorff?

Senator STERLING. Part of it was made a joint account.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

I submit as an explanation of this account the following letter from Chandler & Co. to the St. Louis Union Bank, dated April 3, 1915, in connection with the opening of this account, as follows:

[Chandler & Company, 34 Pine Street, New York.]

APRIL 3, 1915.

ST. LOUIS UNION BANK,
St. Louis, Missouri.

GENTLEMEN: We are in receipt of your letter of April 1st, including the signature cards. The account will be opened in the name of Mr. H. F. Albert, and therefore the cards will be executed by him and forwarded to you promptly.

We would like to point out to you confidentially that Mr. Albert, immediately after the outbreak of the war, had been sent by the German Imperial Government to this country, and has his office at the Hamburg-American Line. Mr. Albert is working in the interest of the German Government in connection with the Ambassador. He is privy councillor to the Minister of the Interior in Berlin, and therefore holds one of the highest positions in the German Imperial Government.

We would ask you to keep this information strictly confidential.

It will interest you to hear that the public sale of the Notes is going very well, and we have every reason to be satisfied.

Yours very truly,

CHANDLER & COMPANY, INC.,

Senator STERLING. Who are Chandler & Co.?

Maj. HUMES. They are a private banking concern in New York.

Under date of April 1, in opening this account, Dr. Albert wrote the following letter to the St. Louis Union Bank, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR: I enclose herewith check for $100,000 (one hundred thousand dollars), to be placed to my individual credit, and will thank you to forward a check book (three checks to the page) for use. This account will be subject to withdrawal, without notice, and I would be obliged if you will inform me what rate of interest you will allow.

Messrs. Chandler & Co. have advised me that they have wired you for signature cards, which I shall be glad to return as soon as received.

Yours very truly,

H. F. ALBERT.

The signature cards were duly returned and the account was opened, carried, and closed as heretofore outlined.

Senator NELSON. Have you any information as to where the money went ultimately—what it was used for?

Maj. HUMES. Not this particular fund. I am just leading up to another fund and to the striking coincidence there seems to be as to why certain accounts were opened in St. Louis at the same time.

On the same date, April 5, an account was opened—a joint account in the name of H. F. Albert and J. Bernstorff in the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. for $100,000.

Senator STERLING. Of St. Louis?

Maj. HUMES. Of St. Louis. That account was carried until November 5, and there were only four withdrawals from that account. It was all wiped out in four withdrawals. The signature cards were filled and the account was made a joint account.

Senator STERLING. The only difference between that account and the former one is that this was a joint account of Albert and Bernstorff from the beginning, whereas the other was an individual account of Albert's to begin with?

Maj. HUMES. That is correct.

This is the significant matter: On the same day, April 5, 1915, there was an account opened in the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. of St. Louis in the name of F. A. Sommerfeld, who was an alien enemy and who is now interned as a German alien enemy; and in order that you may understand the exhibits which are attached, I ask that this whole bank account be made a part of the record, to show the amounts at various times.

(The account referred to is as follows:)

*F. A. Sommerfeld In Account Current with Mississippi Valley Trust Company.
Saint Louis.*

Deposits		Withdrawals
Date of deposit	Deposit	Date paid	Checks	Date paid	Check
April 5, 1915.....	15,000.00	Apr.....	2,858.80	Jun.....	8,421.00
Apr 20.....	5,000.00	Apr.....	904.82	Jun.....	1,750.00
Apr 21.....	10,000.00	Apr.....	1,852.62	Jun.....	4,200.00
Apr 26.....	20,000.00	Apr.....	1,768.41	Jun.....	4,200.00
Apr 29.....	20,000.00	Apr.....	2,585.25	Jun.....	1,750.00
Int.....	12.64	Apr.....	2,128.41	Jun.....	4,200.00
May 4.....	15,000.00	Apr.....	2,273.67	Jun.....	7,000.00
May 7.....	15,000.00	Apr.....	2,357.88	June.....	4,200.00
May 11.....	10,000.00	Apr.....	2,863.14	Jun.....	4,200.00
May 17.....	10,000.00	Apr.....	3,789.45	Jun.....	4,200.00
May 17.....	12,168.75	Apr.....	4,378.92	Jun.....	4,200.00
May 21.....	2,831.25	Apr.....	7,157.85	Jun.....	4,200.00
May 24.....	20,000.00	Apr.....	3,536.82	Jun.....	8,421.00
May 27.....	20,000.00	Apr.....	3,452.61	Jun.....	1,750.00
Int 28.....	21.36	Apr.....	3,199.98	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 1.....	8,000.00	May.....	5,389.44	Jun.....	1,750.00
June 4.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,873.66	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 7.....	8,000.00	May.....	3,536.82	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 9.....	8,000.00	May.....	3,873.66	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 14.....	25,000.00	May.....	2,863.14	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 15.....	12,000.00	May.....	4,547.34	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 18.....	5,000.00	May.....	1,713.18	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 21.....	5,000.00	May.....	4,294.71	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 22.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,705.24	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 23.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,536.82	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 24.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,536.82	Jun.....	4,200.00
Jun 25.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,536.82	Jun.....	4,200.00
June 28.....	5,000.00	May.....	3,115.77	Jul.....	8,421.00
Int 29.....	8.42	May.....	3,957.87	July.....	8,421.00
Jun 30.....	8,000.00	May.....	3,957.87	Jul.....	4,200.00
Jul 2.....	13,000.00	May.....	3,621.03	Jul.....	11,000.00
Jul 9.....	4,250.00	May.....	4,042.08	Jul.....	4,200.00
July 9.....	8,000.00	May.....	4,210.50	Jul.....	1,000.00
Jul 11.....	2,200.00	May.....	2,778.93	Jul.....	8,421.00
Jul 13.....	2,000.00	May.....	5,305.23	Jul.....	14,000.00
Jul 14.....	1,000.00	May.....	5,894.70	Jul.....	17,000.00
July 28.....	17,500.00	May.....	4,210.50	Jul.....	8,421.00
Jul 27.....	15,000.00	May.....	4,210.50	Aug.....	10,000.00
Int 30.....	2.49	May.....	4,210.50	Aug.....	10,000.00
Aug 20.....	21,000.00	May.....	4,210.50	Aug.....	1,000.00
Aug 25.....	5,500.00	May.....	4,210.50	Aug.....	6,100.00
Int 30.....	3.74	May.....	3,500.00	Sept.....	5,000.00
Sep 8.....	6,000.00	May.....	4,210.50	Sept.....	5,000.00
Int 29.....	3.45	May.....	4,210.50	Nov.....	5,000.00
Int Oct. 28.....	2.04			Nov. 26.....	2,000.00
Nov 12.....	6,935.95			Dec. 7.....	2,000.00
Int 29.....	6.61			Dec. 10.....	8,421.00
1915 Dec 11.....	None.			Dec. 11.....

Senator NELSON. Who deposited the money to the credit of Sommerfeld?

Maj. HUMES. I am going to show you that. This was all handled by telegraph, and this is the way the account was opened.

I offer in evidence a letter from William C. Potter, vice president of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, dated March 13, 1915, as follows:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST COMPANY,
Saint Louis, Missouri.

DEAR SIR: This will introduce to you Mr. F. A. Sommerfeld, who maintains an excellent account with us. Mr. Sommerfeld is going to St. Louis to-night and may have occasion to ask us to place funds at his disposal in your Institution by wire, and I am handing him this letter for identification, and I am sending you a copy of it direct. A specimen of Mr. Sommerfeld's signature is shown on the copy.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. POTTER
Vice President.

(Specimen of Mr. Sommerfeld's signature:)

(Sgd) "F. A. SOMMERFIELD" (in his own handwriting).

We also submit a letter from the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, dated April 3, 1915, signed by B. Burke, assistant secretary, as follows:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST COMPANY,
St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. F. A. Sommerfeld, whose address is Hotel Astor, New York City, wishes to open an account in your city, and we have arranged for him to open it in your company for $15,000, which amount we have today credited your account, and would request you to give Mr. Sommerfeld a like credit with you.

For your guidance we enclose herewith Mr. Sommerfeld's signature.

We understand Mr. Sommerfeld will deposit further sums with you from time to time, and advise you as to payments to be made.

Yours, very truly,

B. BURKE,
Assistant Secretary.

Under date of April 5, 1915, the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. wrote to the Guaranty Trust Co., advising them that the account on that date had been opened as follows:

GUARANTY TRUST CO.,
Mr. J. I. BURKE, Asst. Secty.,
New York City.

DEAR SIR: We have yours of 3d inst. and have to-day credited Mr. F. A. Sommerfeld with $15,000.00, as instructed.

We are also in receipt of specimen signature of Mr. Sommerfeld enclosed in your letter.

We are to-day advising Mr. Sommerfeld at Hotel Astor, New York City, of this credit.

Thanking you for your interest in our behalf, I am,

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) E. J. K.,
Asst. Secty.

Now, this account was maintained from that time on until it was closed in November or December of the same year, about the time that these other accounts were closed up by a telegraphic transfer of credit by the Guaranty Trust Co., and I have here the original telegrams and the acknowledgments showing the various transfers of credit to the account of Sommerfeld in this bank.

Senator NELSON. What was the aggregate amount of what Sommerfeld had in the bank? Did he ever add anything to it?

Maj. HUMES. I have added them up roughly. It was in the neighborhood of $300,000.

Senator NELSON. He added something to that?

Maj. HUMES. No; it is covered by these telegraphic transfers of credit. I will just give a summary, rather than put them all in the record.

On May 27, 1918, $20,000.

Senator NELSON. Telegraphed him?

Maj. HUMES. The credit was telegraphed: the money was not.

Senator NELSON. That is what I mean.

Maj. HUMES. The Guaranty Trust Co. transferred it to the credit of the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. as an account, and then wired to Sommerfeld credit for the item.

On May 22, 1915, there was $20,000 passed to the credit of Sommerfeld.

On May 22, 1915, there was $20,000 passed.

Senator STERLING. As per telegram from the Guaranty Trust Co.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; as per telegram from the Guaranty Trust Co.

On May 17 there was $10,000 passed to the credit of this account.

On May 11 there was $10,000 passed to the credit of Sommerfeld.

On May 7 there was $15,000 passed to the credit of Sommerfeld.

On May 4 there was $15,000 passed to the credit of Sommerfeld.

On April 29, $20,000 was passed to the credit of Sommerfeld.

On April 26, $20,000 to his credit.

On April 21, $20,000 was passed to his credit.

On April 20, $5,000 was passed to his credit.

On June 1, $8,000 was passed.

On June 4, $5,000.

On June 7, $8,000.

On June 9, $8,000.

On June 14, $10,000.

On June 12, $15,000.

On June 15, $12,000.

On June 16, $12,000.

On June 18, $5,000.

On June 21, $5,000.

On June 26, $5,000.

On June 23, $5,000.

On June 24, $5,000.

On June 25, $5,000.

On June 28, $5,000.

On June 30, $8,000.

On July 2, $13,000.

On July 9, $8,000.

On July 24, $17,500.

On July 26, $15,000.

On August 19, $21,000.

On August 25, $5,500.

On September 8, $6,000.

On September 16, $5,000.

On November 24 Sommerfeld wired the bank to wire $5,000 to his credit in the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, transferring $5,000 back to the Guaranty Trust Co.

I think that covers the item.

Senator NELSON. What is the aggregate of those amounts?

Maj. HUMES. We can tell you in just a minute. It is close to $300,000.

Capt. LESTER. Almost $400,000.

Senator NELSON. How was that money disbursed?

Maj. HUMES. That is what I have gotten to. On April 3, 1915, Sommerfeld gave these instructions to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., of St. Louis, Mo.:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST COMPANY,
St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the credit of $15,000 which is being placed with your company for me by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, I hereby authorize you to pay all drafts which may be drawn against my account with you by the Western Cartridge Company, of Alton, Ills., and charge same to my account.

Yours, very truly,

F. A. SOMMERFELD.

On April 5, 1915, the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. wrote the following letter to Sommerfeld:

Mr. F. A. SOMMERFELD,
Hotel Astor, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Referring to yours of 3d inst., under instructions of the Guaranty Trust Company, New York, we have credited your account with $15,000.00, as per acknowledgment herewith.

We note that you authorize us to pay all drafts which may be drawn against your account with us by the Western Cartridge Co. of Alton, Ill.

Will you please furnish us with authorized signatures of officers of Western Cartridge Co., who will sign these drafts.

Thanking you for the patronage, which is greatly appreciated, I am,

Yours, very truly,

E. J. K., Asst. Secty.

The following letter from the Western Cartridge Co. to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., dated April 9, 1915, is submitted:

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: At the request of Mr. F. A. Sommerfeld, of Hotel Astor, New York City, we are enclosing herewith signature card carrying signatures for eight drafts that we will make on him thru your Company.

In order that there will be no misunderstanding, please be advised that we are instructed by Mr. Sommerfeld to make sight drafts on him thru you for the value of such shipments as we make from time to time, for his account, and attached to such drafts are to be a copy of the invoice and a copy of the express receipt or bill-of-lading.

These documents will go thru our regular banking connections and will be presented to you in regular course.

Yours truly,

WESTERN CARTRIDGE COMPANY,
A. J. NORCOM, Secretary.

Senator STERLING. How is that spelled?

Maj. HUMES. I am not sure of the name, and I want to see if it is in the letterhead. I think it is N-o-r-c-o-m; is that correct?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. On April 10, 1915, the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. addressed the following letter to the Western Cartridge Co.:

WESTERN CARTRIDGE CO.,
Mr. A. J. Norcon, Secty.
Alton, Ill.

GENTLEMEN: We have yours of 9th inst. and enclosing card with signature of Mr. O. F. D. Emrich, Treasurer, and Mr. A. J. Norcon, Secretary, who are authorized to sign drafts that you will draw on Mr. F. A. Sommerfeld through this Company.

It is our understanding that both of these signatures are necessary to draw but if such is not the case, please advise us promptly, and oblige.

Yours very truly,

E. J. K.
Asst. Secy

Also the following letter from the Western Cartridge Co. to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., of April 12, 1915:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST CO.,
N. W. Cor 4th & Pine Sts.,
St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: In answer to your letter of April 10th, beg to state that signature either by the Secretary or Treasurer is sufficient to sign drafts.
Yours truly,

WESTERN CARTRIDGE COMPANY
O. F. D. EMERICH, Treasurer

On April 14 what is apparently the first draft and the first bill of lading are transmitted, and I submit the following letter from the Western Cartridge Co., dated April 14, 1915:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: Upon instructions from H. Villa, we are asking you to send original B/L's of shipments ammunition to him El Paso, to Luis Goxiola, 109 So. Santa Fe St., El Paso, Texas, as soon as they have served your purpose and draft is paid. You will receive with each set of papers from this time on, different instructions are given, addressed envelope to Mr. Goxiola for the purpose.

Yours truly,

WESTERN CARTRIDGE COMPANY
O. F. D. EMERICH, Treasurer

Under date of April 15, 1915, the Mississippi Valley Trust Co. addressed the following communication, inclosing bill of lading of April 15, 1915:

Mr. LUIS GOXIOLA,
109 S. Santa Fe Street,
El Paso, Texas.

DEAR SIR: We enclose herein Bill of Lading for ammunition, consigned H. Villa, El Paso, as instructed by the Western Cartridge Co. of Alton, Ill.
Yours very truly,

E. J. K., Asst. Secy

Senator NELSON. Is that Villa—the Mexican name Villa?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPEERS. This is Hipolito Villa, the brother of Francisco Villa.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

On June 1, 1915, the following letter was addressed by the Western Cartridge Co. to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., of St. Louis, Mo.

GENTLEMEN: You will notice the enclosed envelope is addressed to Hipolito Villa instead of Luis Goxiola, as in the past. You will send express receipt to Hipolito Villa on this and subsequent shipments until further advised. For this purpose we shall continue to send envelopes properly addressed.

Yours truly,

WESTERN CARTRIDGE COMPANY
SAM PRESSEY, Sales Dept.

A letter dated June 12, 1915, from F. A. Sommerfeld to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., written on the letterhead of the House of Astor, as follows:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST COMPANY,
St. Louis, Missouri.

GENTLEMEN: Today I received the following telegram from the Western Cartridge Company:

"Bank advises no funds to cover Thursday's shipment. Advise quick."

I am very much surprised at this information as according to your own statement from May 29th my balance in your bank, after deducting the shipment of May 29th, was $15,660.24. Since then I have paid in to the Guaranty Trust Company of New York with instructions to wire same to you, the following amounts:

June 1st, $8,000.

June 4th, $5,000.

June 7th, $8,000.

June 9th, $8,000.

This $29,000, added to my balance would give a total of $44,660.24.

The shipments of the Western Cartridge Company from May 31st to Thursday, June 10th inclusive, amount to $44,257.60, which would leave a balance of $402.60 not including the $15,000 paid by me this morning to the Guaranty Trust Company with instructions to wire same to you.

Therefore I do not see how it is possible that you can inform the Western Cartridge Company that there were no funds in the bank to cover the shipment of Thursday, June 10th, unless the Guaranty Trust Company of New York failed to notify you that one of the above mentioned amounts had been paid in. There has been a serious mistake made by somebody. I hold the original bills from May 31st to June 10th inclusive which total the amount I have mentioned above.

Awaiting your reply at the earliest possible date, I am
Very truly yours,

F. A. SOMMERFELD.

A telegram received July 9, 1915, signed F. A. Sommerfeld, to the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., St. Louis:

MISS VALLEY BANK
St Louis Mo

Shall wire you funds early in the morning in case Western Cartridge Company present bills before you receive the money please tell them to return later in the day.

F. A. SOMMERFELD.

Senator NELSON. Most of this money to Sommerfeld's credit in St. Louis came from that trust company in New York?

Maj. HUMES. All of it, except accumulated interest. There was an arrangement that 2 per cent——

Senator NELSON. What was the name of that trust company?

Maj. HUMES. The Guaranty Trust Co.

Senator NELSON. How did money come in there? Who put the money in there?

Maj. HUMES. That is something we are trying to find out definitely about, Senator, and we have nothing but indirect information, and whether it is going to be possible to establish it definitely I am not in a position to state now. We are trying to get that information definitely.

Senator STERLING. What was the relation, now, if any, between the Bernstorff and Albert deposit, and the deposit to the credit of Sommerfeld?

Maj. HUMES. The significant thing is this, that all these accounts were opened on the same day, and they were all closed at practically the same time.

Senator NELSON. They were closed at about the same time as the Sommerfeld account?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; about the same time. In November and December they were all closed out.

Senator STERLING. Is there evidence showing how the Albert and Bernstorff accounts were paid out except that you have shown, I think, that a portion was withdrawn?

Maj. HUMES. They were all withdrawn. It was all withdrawn in large amounts. In one case three withdrawals and in the other four withdrawals wiped out the entire account, and it was paid out in just three or four items; and there is no connection, I think, between the St. Louis account, the Bernstorff account, and this account, so far as the transfer of funds is concerned, but it is a peculiar coincidence that they were both interested in St. Louis banks at the same time if there was not an understanding. Possibly it was a sort of camouflage to this Sommerfeld account that they opened accounts at the same time and kept them in St. Louis banks and at the same bank during this period. We have a record here showing these various shipments. I had assumed that it would suffice the committee to make the statement that all this money, except a small item that was transferred back to Sommerfeld in the Guaranty Trust Co., when the account was closed, was paid out on direction of the Western Cartridge Co., and all of the ammunition was shipped by the Western Cartridge Co., to El Paso, either to Villa or to Goxiola.

The records of military intelligence disclose that during the months from April to August, 1915, Sommerfeld was an advisor of von Rintelen.

Senator NELSON. He was connected with von Rintelen?

Maj. HUMES. And also that he was closely associated with Frederico Stalforth, who is also interned at this time, and I think there is some testimony on the record showing that Frederico Stalforth was especially interested in Mexican propaganda and activities in Mexico.

Senator STERLING. And this evidence goes to show that about $400,000 was furnished?

Capt. LESTER. $380,000, approximately.

Senator STERLING (continuing). Was furnished to supply ammunition to Villa in Mexico?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. I think that is all we have this afternoon.

(Thereupon, at 5.15 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 8, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in Room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ELLERY C. STOWELL.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Stowell, the other day you undertook to volunteer some matter here, and you did not finish.

Mr. STOWELL. No. I volunteered to make a statement because of several incidents which I thought bore directly upon the matter under discussion, and they came in so pat that I was moved to get up and suggest, if the committee wished to hear me, that I would give them some information. I understood they did, and so I started, and now you kindly allow me to complete what I started to say under a misunderstanding.

Senator OVERMAN. You were then telling about some money you had received for some work.

Mr. STOWELL. That was following the questions that were put to me, and those questions left the inquiry upon that matter. What I got up to tell about was the insidious actions of the German propagandists, trying to get people in their clutches.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed.

Mr. STOWELL. When I was starting to write a book on the war, one of my students suggested it would be a good plan if I could have a conversation with Dr. Albert.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better, for your own sake, tell who you are and what you have been doing.

Mr. STOWELL. I was formerly associate professor of international law at Columbia University. I left the university in consequence of my activities.

Senator NELSON. Where were you before that?

Mr. STOWELL. I was at the University of Pennsylvania, and before that I was in the George Washington University.

Senator NELSON. Here?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is your home?

Mr. STOWELL. At present I am living in Washington.

Senator OVERMAN. Where were you born?

Mr. STOWELL. In Lynn, Mass.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well, proceed.

Mr. STOWELL. One of my students in my course on international relations thought it would be of interest if I could have an interview with Dr. Albert, who he said was one of the men in the group that was close to the Kaiser, and through some people whom he knew I arranged that I was to have luncheon with Dr. Albert and it was suggested that I prepare certain questions to which they would make the answers. I demurred at that method, because I wanted to get the truth and I thought that questions prepared in that way would not get at the situation as well as I could by questioning Dr. Albert face to face. That was agreed to and on December 17, 1914, I had luncheon with Dr. Albert in the Whitehall Building in company with Dr. William Bayard Hale, the German propagandist.

There were some officials of the North German Lloyd Co. present and I proceeded to direct my questions to Dr. Albert as to why Germany had begun this war. My reading of documents had convinced me that Germany was responsible, and so I wanted to hear the German case. He told me as best he could, trying to put it that the Germans were in a difficult position and had to take what he considered defensive action. He said that he did not agree with those men about him in Berlin who thought that England would not come in. He told me that, on the contrary, he was one of those who thought that England would come into the war. His answers were very direct. He did not try to dodge the questions, but with great astuteness put the very best phase that was possible upon Germany's action. Every time that he would say something Dr. Hale would break in with some blatant statement that anybody would perceive was calculated to curry favor with Dr. Albert and to show how he could out-Herod Herod. That rather interfered with my getting at the facts. At that time I supposed that the German people were not cognizant of what was going on and were not responsible, and with a feeling of true neutrality I had sympathy—— Senator NELSON. What benefit did you get out of the interview? Give us the substance of it.

Mr. STOWELL. Might I complete the substance of what I was telling you? I thought the importance of this meeting to this committee might be to show what Dr. Hale was doing at that time, as early as December 17, 1914—that he was at this luncheon at that time. I drank to the health of the German people, and I said, "I do not drink to the health of the German Government," and Dr. Albert had to sit there and take that. Then I went to see Dr. Dernberg and he made the same kind of statement that Dr. Hale had. There was not anything very profound or intelligent about it. I saw him at the Ritz-Carlton.

Senator OVERMAN. What did you go to see him for?

Mr. STOWELL. About the German case. He published some documents, the Belgian documents that he had put out here, which seemed to me very unfairly put out, and the German propaganda that he put out seemed to be more of a popular kind than scientific. I wantto talk with him and find out if he had any real justification for what Germany had done, and he could not give the slightest justification for anything. Neither could Dr. Albert.

The only other important matter was in connection with Dr. Rumely. When Mr. McClure came back from his trip in Germany he came to me and showed me something that he had written in regard to the war which seemed fairly stated, and Dr. Rumely invited me to a dinner to meet him. This dinner took place on May 31, 1916, and after Mr. McClure had recounted his interesting experiences on the German front and in Turkey, the German exchange professor, I think his name was Schmidt, who had been out in Chicago, got up and made a statement, a speech—at that time it did not look so very bright for Germany as it did a little later—in which he proceeded to make a plea for Germany, and said if Germany were beaten in fair fight that would be accepted, and an adjustment would be made to the new situation. But if she felt that there was injustice in the combination of the allies against her, that it would rankle and you would have a situation similar to what you had in Alsace-Lorraine. He did not, of course, mention Alsace-Lorraine, but that was the implication. Then he went on to say how Russia was responsible for the war, and he argued that the whole responsibility came back to Russia.

Senator STERLING. That was Dr. Rumely?

Mr. STOWELL. No; this was the German exchange professor, who spoke English very fluently. They had there a large number of very influential men. It seemed to me that this address was staged to put this propaganda before them, and I was not going to let them get away with a statement which was so unfair, so unjust, to Russia. So I got up and stated the facts as to why Russia had gone into the war, and said that Russia was not to blame, and that it was entirely Germany.

Senator NELSON. Did you refer to that round-robin letter that was signed by a large number of professors and ministers in Germany defending Germany for her conduct in Belgium?

Mr. STOWELL. I got a copy of that, but I did not refer then to that. That was absurd. That did Germany more harm than almost anything that she sent out.

Senator NELSON. Did not that admonish you how dangerous German kultur was?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Put you on your guard against it?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes. The whole treatment of the war material and propaganda put me on my guard. When Dr. Rumely invited me to dinner I did not know anything about him; I did not know he was any different from any other citizen. I did not know that he had anything to do with German propaganda. The people at that dinner were people I knew to be partly interested in Germany and some that I knew to be the contrary, but I had the feeling when the exchange professor got up and made that speech that it was staged, and I did not want him to get by with it.

Senator NELSON. Who got up the dinner?

Mr. STOWELL. Dr. Rumely sent out the invitations, and it was in connection with Mr. McClure coming to the Mail.

Senator NELSON. What impression did you get about Rumely then? That he was a pro-German or a German representative?

Mr. STOWELL. I got the impression that he was a pro-German as soon as I saw that this dinner had been staged in that way, and that he was very astute; everybody could see that—that he was a very keen man.

Senator OVERMAN. It was after this that you began to write the German stuff for which you were paid?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes. Then Mr. Merkel, the secretary of the German-American League, wanted me to investigate this book of Von Mach's—I told something about that before. That investigation showed me that that book was a very interesting and important book, but that it was got up in such a partisan spirit that it was dangerous for a person who did not know the real facts; and I so reported to Mr. Merkel.

I informed MacMillan that I was doing this work and asked them for anything that they had to say, so that I could investigate this as an unbiased judge.

Senator NELSON. What did you do then, after seeing all these gentlemen and wining and dining with them? What was the outcome of it?

Mr. STOWELL. The outcome of these interviews?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STOWELL. You see, when I saw Rumely I had already published my book.

Senator NELSON. Had you written your book then? Were you writing it while you were communicating with these men, or after or before?

Mr. STOWELL. The book appeared in July, 1915.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the title of the book?

Mr. STOWELL. The Diplomacy of the War of 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. After you wrote that book, they were inviting you around to dinner; is that it?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes. Dr. Rumely invited me to dinner, and there were a great many others at the dinner, and as I was still writing on the war, I wanted to hear all that was said.

Senator NELSON. Look here; you told us about meeting all these different men and interviewing them in 1914?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you use that information or data in composing your book, or was that after you had written your book?

Mr. STOWELL. You see, Senator, I have written one volume, and I am now writing the second volume.

Senator NELSON. But I mean that first volume. Had you written it then?

Mr. STOWELL. That had been written.

Senator NELSON. You had written the first volume before you saw these men?

Mr. STOWELL. No. I saw Albert and Dernburg before I wrote my first volume.

Senator STERLING. And Hale?

Mr. STOWELL. And Hale; yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Who paid you the money?

Mr. STOWELL. I am coming to that, if you will allow me, Senator.
 Senator OVERMAN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. STOWELL. Do you want me to repeat what I said the other day about that matter?

Senator OVERMAN. I asked you the question right here—who gave you the money?

Mr. STOWELL. Mr. Merkel, after making this arrangement as Secretary of the German University League, I believe it is—I forget the name of it.

Senator NELSON. The Neutrality League, was it not?

Mr. STOWELL. No. This was the University League.

Maj. HUMES. The German University League is correct.

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; the German University League.

Mr. von Mach was going to be their president, so he said to me that they wanted this investigation of this book, which had been withdrawn from MacMillan, to see whether he was a suitable person to be their president. That was the plea that they put it on. And I did not feel that I ought to turn down any request for an opinion on a matter of international law, because I have given, on every question of international law that I have been asked for, my opinion, no matter what the damage to me; and it has cost a great deal; because at a time when people's opinions are aroused if you say something they do not like, even if you are saying something that is true, it is very dangerous.

Senator NELSON. The first volume of your book you had gotten out, you say. Can you give us a brief outline of the points you covered in that book?

Mr. STOWELL. In that book I said that Germany was responsible for the war.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STOWELL. I said—and this was in July, 1915—that the American people would expend their whole substance, and lifeblood and treasure before they would allow the German system to conquer. That is what I said in that book.

Senator STERLING. Have you got a copy of the book here?

Mr. STOWELL. I have not it with me, Senator. I will send it to the committee, if desired.

Senator NELSON. What other questions did you cover in your book?

Mr. STOWELL. I covered the whole question of the war.

Senator OVERMAN. I can not understand why Rumely and such men would be inviting you to dinner if you made such statements as that in your book.

Mr. STOWELL. I was writing for the New York papers. The reporters came to me and asked me questions about international law, and when they asked me these questions I answered all of them, and the answers that I made showed up Germany's illegal action to such a degree that I do not think the Mail, which was a pro-German sheet, ever published any of my statements. There is a good indication that they did not find it very good copy for their readers.

Senator NELSON. Still, they invited you to dinner, did they not?

Mr. STOWELL. Certainly.

Senator NELSON. After your first volume had been published?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; they were trying certainly to get their clutches on me, or they wanted, perhaps, to get this idea of Russia's responsibility over to men who they knew were writing on the subject.

Senator STERLING. Your first dinner was in December, 1914?

Mr. STOWELL. That was a luncheon, Senator.

Senator STERLING. And that was with Hale and Dr. Albert?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes. I never heard of either of them before.

Senator STERLING. It was in May, 1916, that you had your dinner with Rumely?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes. I never heard of—Senator NELSON. What diplomatic questions did you cover in your book?

Mr. STOWELL. I covered the question of the invasion of Belgium, the question of the entry of England into the war, and the question of the obligation of neutral nations in the defense of international law.

Senator OVERMAN. What, if anything, did you say in your book that called Germany's attention to it, or the attention of the German agents here, to make them think that you rather had some things in favor of Germany?

Mr. STOWELL. They did not think that, but they knew that I was trying to be fair, and they wanted to put that idea out where it would come under my eyes.

Senator OVERMAN. As to this money you received for writing, was that before you wrote the book or afterwards?

Mr. STOWELL. Rumely was after I had written this book.

Senator OVERMAN. That was money you got for what, now?

Mr. STOWELL. The emphasizing of my getting money for this book, Senator, puts me in the position of getting money from the German propagandists, and I wish to state that I was offered a retainer by lawyers on the German side in a case which I refused to take.

Senator NELSON. But you did not get any pay for writing the book?

Mr. STOWELL. No; except the regular royalties from Houghton Mifflin.

Senator NELSON. What inspired you to write the book?

Mr. STOWELL. Why, I was asked to by Houghton Mifflin and one of the professors in Columbia, because it was in my field, in this subject.

Senator NELSON. What is the name of that professor?

Mr. STOWELL. Prof. Shotwell. He is one of the ablest men who has helped the cause.

Senator NELSON. Was he a pro-German, too?

Mr. STOWELL. Never. He was one of the ablest men on the side of the allies, and I think he is now abroad with the American delegation.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you go ahead and let us know, so that we will not ask these questions, just what this money was for that you received. Tell us about that.

Mr. STOWELL. I was just going to say, Senator, that the emphasizing of that money puts me in the position of having received money from German propagandists, and the fact is that I refused to make money out of the war, and that when it came to the point where went into the war, I spent $3,000 organizing the Patriotic Service League, and that money I have never been repaid.

Senator NELSON. But that does not answer the chairman's question.

Mr. STOWELL. I am referring to the emphasis that is being put on my receiving this money. I do not think it is fair to me.

Senator OVERMAN. But you volunteered the statement that you received money. Nobody invited you to come here. You stated here that you had received money from these people which you told us about.

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What about that? What was that for? I would like to get that in the record, so that we may understand what you were doing.

Mr. STOWELL. It was for an opinion on this book of von Mach's, as to whether it was a suitable book. As I stated, they wanted to know whether the book was of such a nature that Von Mach would be a suitable man for their president. It had been withdrawn by MacMillan. I did not have anything to do except to study the book and report, it being in my field, what it was like.

Senator NELSON. Did you make a written report?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; I made a report and sent it to the secretary of the——

Senator NELSON. What was the substance of your report?

Mr. STOWELL. The substance of my report was that the book was a valuable book, was of interest to one who knew the subject, but that it was so partisan that it would be dangerous for anybody who did not know the facts.

Senator STERLING. Was your report published?

Mr. STOWELL. No. You see, Senator, the war intervened. We went into the war, and therefore there was no opportunity for publishing it. I reserved the right to publish it, whatever the result, and he knew that, that I would publish it just as I found it.

Senator NELSON. And that was what you were paid for?

Mr. STOWELL. That was what I was paid for.

Senator NELSON. How much?

Mr. STOWELL. I was to have been paid $200, but when the war broke out and I had not completed the whole, I was paid $100. The only matter that I thought was important in this question was that Merkel, after our entry into the war, had sent out certain propaganda literature, and one of those sheets that he sent out brought up that same matter about the responsibility of Russia for the war—an effort to put the blame on Russia; and his action was so significant of this effort to have the whole blame put on Russia, to allow Germany to slide out from under, and it showed such a concerted effort, it seemed to be, on the part of the German propagandists in a most subtle form that I wanted to call it to the attention of this committee.

Senator STERLING. Did you do so in your report?

Mr. STOWELL. No; this action of Merkel happened after I made the report.

Senator STERLING. Oh!

Mr. STOWELL. But, you see, then, when I heard of Merkel's action, I informed the officials in New York, and I believe that as a result of that information he was interned.

Senator OVERMAN. Whom did you inform?

Capt. LESTER. You are mistaken about that. He was not interned. Merkel was an American citizen.

Mr. STOWELL. Mr. Merkel told me that he was not an American citizen.

Senator OVERMAN. Whom did you inform in New York?

Mr. STOWELL. I supposed he was an American citizen when I was dealing with him about the report. Whom did I inform?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STOWELL. I called up the police department and got in touch with the man who had charge of these investigations; and Mr. Coy—I think that was the name—came out and talked the matter over with me. Later he told me what they had found about Merkel, and he expressed appreciation of my letting them know and said they thought he was a very dangerous man.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that after you received the money from him or before?

Mr. STOWELL. That was after. As I explained the last time when I was speaking to the committee, I supposed that I was dealing with an American, and after I had completed the arrangement with him he came and told me that he was a German. Then he also told me that he was paying for this investigation himself, and I returned the check to him.

Then Prof. von Klenze, of Brown University, whom I have known as a teacher in the summer school at Columbia, wrote me a letter. He had succeeded Merkel as secretary of the German University League; and he wrote me that the German University League accepted all the arrangements that were made and wanted that carried out. I then accepted the check. You see, I did not take it from Merkel—and I would not have—but from von Klenze.

Senator OVERMAN. Why would you not take it from Merkel? Because he told you he was a German?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; because he told me he was a German. When he told me that this German University League was all American, and he told me that these directors were Americans. I supposed, naturally, that the executive secretary would be an American; and somebody, I think, told me that he was an American, just as Capt. Lester has just thought so. The opinion was current. He spoke English perfectly.

Senator NELSON. Have you got out the second volume of your book?

Mr. STOWELL. No. I am working on that now, Senator, but I have also published some cases on the war; two volumes of cases of the war.

Senator NELSON. What tack are you going to take in this second volume?

Mr. STOWELL. What stand?

Senator NELSON. Yes; what tack are you going to take?

Mr. STOWELL. This second volume takes up the conduct of the war.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. STOWELL. I am going to state what we did, our attitude coming into the war, and the German propaganda in this country.

Senator NELSON. Do you cover this propaganda from the beginning?

Mr. STOWELL. Partly. You see, Senator, I am concerned with the diplomacy of the war; and diplomacy is the question with which—Senator NELSON. But you know a good deal of this German propaganda was carried on through the diplomatic representatives here, Bernstorff and Boy Ed and Von Papen and others?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you embrace their activities in what you call the diplomatic arrangements?

Mr. STOWELL. I certainly do—the most extraordinary activities that the world has seen; the most extraordinary diplomatic activities. Of course, I shall embrace that as a very important part.

Senator OVERMAN. Sometimes when men volunteer to do things they put their foot in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STOWELL. That is true, but in this country we are a country of volunteers, and when you see a chance to be of service that is the time to be of use, that is the time a man needs to be courageous.

Senator OVERMAN. You rose to defend Mr. Merkel. What was the purpose of that?

Mr. STOWELL. I rose to point out the insidious German propaganda, in which they are trying to blame Russia for a matter for which Russia was not entirely responsible. That idea was carefully strewn all over the country, and appealed to a great many people in this country; it had become prevalent, and it was a great injustice to the Russian people and Government. The idea as put out was this: "The Russian Government that was responsible no longer exists," they said; "therefore let us blame this old Government and everybody be happy"—because nobody was to blame.

Senator, if you will permit me to say something and not have it put in the record, in answer to that statement of yours that is not in the record: I knew that I was risking my position in Columbia when I started in and answered these German statements in the newspapers, and it aroused a great deal of opposition among certain pro-Germans; and while they could not directly attack me because of those articles, they attacked me indirectly, and they expressed their opinion that it was not dignified for a professor to write for the newspapers.

Senator NELSON. You made a statement that you knew you were risking your position in the university.

Mr. STOWELL. I did.

Senator NELSON. Why would it risk your position? Was the university—the administration of it—pro-German?

Mr. STOWELL. No; you could not say that at all, because President Butler had taken a strong stand for the allies, and many of the most influential professors had; but by coming out in the newspapers and constantly putting out articles on these questions, it gave the pro-Germans, the men who were hostile to me, a chance to talk.

Senator NELSON. In the faculty?

Mr. STOWELL. In the faculty. It gave them an opportunity to criticize me for doing something which they said they considered was not according to strict academic standards.

Senator NELSON. How many were there in the faculty that were pro-German in spirit?

Mr. STOWELL. This is strictly among ourselves. I don't want to go into that question, but I am perfectly willing to go into any question which the committee may desire to ask me about.

Senator NELSON. If it goes to the temptation that you were subject to, I think you may answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. STOWELL. Is this matter on the record now?

Senator OVERMAN. If you do not want it to go in, no.

Mr. STOWELL. If you want it in the record it shall be in the record. I have not anything to hide. Real publicity is a great thing for the country.

Senator OVERMAN. You had better answer the Senator's question. How many in the faculty were pro-German?

Mr. STOWELL. Why, it would be difficult to tell how many. There was Prof. Burgess, who was the former dean of the graduate faculty, in political science. He was emeritus.

Senator NELSON. I think I can help you out a little on this. How many members did you have all together in the faculty?

Mr. STOWELL. I don't know. I suppose about 40.

Senator NELSON. State as nearly as you can.

Mr. STOWELL. About 40. There might have been half of that number; I never counted them.

Senator NELSON. What proportion of the 40 was pro-German in particular?

Mr. STOWELL. Oh, I do not think a very large proportion. They were more "peace-at-any-price."

Senator NELSON. Well, that is the same as pro-German.

Mr. STOWELL. I think so.

Senator NELSON. Take the peace-at-any-price and the pro-Germans, what proportion of the 40 was of that kind? Half of them?

Mr. STOWELL. Do you mean only of our faculty, or do you mean the whole university?

Senator NELSON. I mean the whole faculty of the university.

Mr. STOWELL. Oh, I do not know at all. I was only in one faculty.

Senator NELSON. I thought you said there were 40 in that faculty.

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; in that faculty.

Senator OVERMAN. In that faculty of 40, how many of them were peace-at-any-price?

Mr. STOWELL. Those that were strongly peace men?

Senator OVERMAN. Peace-at-any-price.

Mr. STOWELL. Well, that requires definition again.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what you said.

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; peace-at-any-price and the men that early in the war had been pro-German, I should say that there were from 25 to 50 per cent.

Senator OVERMAN. Who made you lose your place in that institution?

Mr. STOWELL. Would you like to have me go into that? I am perfectly willing to do so; only, if I do, I want to go into it fully.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you lose your place on account of your anti-German publications?

Mr. STOWELL. That was the indirect consequence of my anti-German activity, in my opinion. It was a combination among those who objected on that score and those who were really just as proally as I was but who did not consider that it was suitable for a professor to keep publishing articles in the newspapers.

Senator STERLING. When did you lose your place, Professor?

Mr. STOWELL. I resigned my position, but the action taken by the university was such that I felt that I ought to resign.

Senator STERLING. What was the occasion?

Mr. STOWELL. The action taken by the university was on the ground that the war required great retrenchment, and to meet that retrenchment they had, temporarily, to discontinue certain courses; and they appointed a committee to investigate what courses should be discontinued. That committee made a report; and, as I understand, the president of the university sent out letters to the men whose courses were suggested for curtailment. He sent out letters to all of those, as a matter of form. I received one of those letters, which stated that on account of the necessity of retrenchment it was considered advisable temporarily to cut down the courses and that mine was included.

Senator STERLING. Was that a course in international law, or a branch thereof?

Mr. STOWELL. That was international law; all my work was international law in that department.

Senator STERLING. Did you have the only work in international law?

Mr. STOWELL. No; Prof. Moore was the head of the department.

Senator STERLING. Prof. J. B. Moore?

Mr. STOWELL. John Bassett Moore.

Senator STERLING. Were Mr. Moore and yourself the only ones who had to do with that course, or who taught that course?

Mr. STOWELL. We taught different courses. I taught certain courses.

Senator STERLING. Both in international law?

Mr. STOWELL. All in international law. And there was another man there by the name of Henry Munro, who taught one other course.

Senator STERLING. In international law?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Was his course discontinued?

Mr. STOWELL. No. He was an instructor.

President Butler had recently, before that, expressed approval of my work. Since this matter is on the record, I wish to make the complete statement of it because a half truth is a very pernicious thing; and since it is to be on the record here I wish to state the whole matter. It concerns academic freedom.

Senator NELSON. What is the use of going into that?

Mr. STOWELL. You brought this out, Senator.

Senator NELSON. That is a debatable question; that is an academic question.

Mr. STOWELL. No; but this matter, you see, is involved and now is on the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Were you being deprived of your academic liberty?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. By Columbia University?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think you had been kicking over the traces a little in writing your book and in writing the newspaper articles? Was that part of your function as a professor?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; when Germany was violating the law of nations and I was a professor of international law, I ought to do what I could to use my influence on the side of justice.

Senator NELSON. Do you not give your instruction in lectures?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes, I did.

Senator NELSON. You were supposed to confine yourself to lectures?

Mr. STOWELL. I had gone to the president of the university and was ready to resign in the fall before I did resign; and the president of the university expressed the highest approval of my work and wanted me to continue and said that they all liked my work; he had not heard any disapproval of it and liked the course I had taken.

Senator OVERMAN. You say you believe in publicity. In a great institution like the university, did you think that Dr. Butler was guilty of tyranny in that institution, and did not want to let the truth, as he saw it, come out?

Mr. STOWELL. In what way?

Senator OVERMAN. You said the university was depriving the men of their liberty.

Mr. STOWELL. I was put in the position where I was forced out because I had made a proper use of my academic freedom.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that the policy of the university? Do I understand you to say that?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; that was done by the university.

Senator OVERMAN. That was the policy of the university, was it to deprive men of their liberty of speech?

Mr. STOWELL. That was done in this case.

Senator STERLING. Who prompted you to send in your resignation to Dr. Butler in 1914?

Mr. STOWELL. That was the matter that I suggested going into. You see, I am perfectly willing to tell the whole matter; there is no objection at all. The only reason I did not before, at the time I resigned, was because we were in a condition of war, and I did not think anything ought to be taken up to divert attention. If you would like to have me answer that question, I would be glad to go into it; but I do not want to answer it in a half way, that is all. I went to President Butler in the fall.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you mean to say it is the policy of the institution to deprive anyone of liberty of speech, in the interest of Germany?

Mr. STOWELL. No. President Butler was as proally as I was.

Senator OVERMAN. And he was against you because you—

Mr. STOWELL. No; he was for me—President Butler was; but he did not stand up for me when these other people were against me.

Senator NELSON. Was not this the trouble, Professor: That they thought you were milk and water—trying to carry water on both shoulders?

Mr. STOWELL. No; they did not think that. It would have been all right if it had been that. Nobody ever said that until it was said before this committee.

Senator NELSON. What is that?

Mr. STOWELL. This is the first time I have ever had that said of me.

Senator NELSON. No. But the description of your book and your activity and your review of von Mach's book—I may do you an injustice in saying this, but it rather leaves the impression on my mind that it was a kind of milk-and-water affair; that you were trying to be "good Lord and good devil" to both sides. Now, I may do you an injustice there, but I am just telling you the spirit that moves me.

Mr. STOWELL. I think you certainly do. Lord Bryce has published the statement that my book on the war was one of the best—he gave another one and mine as the best treatment of the war—that is to say, the best treatment of that phase of the war, the beginning.

Senator NELSON. It was not looked upon as a very pronounced pro-ally book, was it?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; it was; very.

Senator NELSON. I am sorry I have not read your book.

Senator STERLING. A strange thing about that is, that in December, 1914, you were at a dinner with Drs. Albert and Hale, and then that you had association with Dernburg, the German exchange professor, and Rumely, and all those.

Mr. STOWELL. If you were writing a book about the war, in which you wanted to get both sides, you would go to every source of information to try to get it, and that was all that I did. At the time when I lunched with Albert and Hale I did not know anything about them. I did not know what Germany was at as well as I did later. Did you wish me to answer that question about the visit to President Butler, Senator Sterling?

Senator STERLING. No; I did not ask it as a question; I did not put it in the form of a question, exactly, but rather as a suggestion.

Mr. STOWELL. The reason that I had offered to tender my resignation—I did not offer to tender my resignation—but the reason I went to see the president of the university at that time was because there was so much friction caused by my writing in the papers, and I thought if it was a cause of dissension in the university I had better get out. That was really the gist of it.

In answering the implication in Senator Nelson's statement I do not wish to allow that to stand, because that would be the most serious implication that could be made against a man, in my opinion, who had studied the facts—to be pro-German or to carry water on both shoulders about it—because I was square from the shoulder in condemning Germany.

Senator NELSON. What I meant by that, Professor, was, that you were not pronouncedly on either side.

Mr. STOWELL. I was so pronounced that a great many people said that I ceased to be academic, and that was one of the scores that was raised against me. Now, I wish to say that when the Germans executed Capt. Fryatt, that I was the first person to protest. I was at Seal Harbor and I sent a telegram to the New York Times, and you can find it in there; and it was several days after that before anybody else in the country raised any protest. I wish to state also that in an article that I wrote, that was published in the New York American, I set forth the policy, in regard to submarine warfare, that the Government afterwards adopted, and as far as I know I was the first one that set that policy forth. I wish to state further that the published correspondence of our Government shows that in an informal letter to the allied Governments, of January 18, 1916, Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, suggested that the right to arm merchantmen be abandoned, and when that letter became public, some time later, and as soon as it did become public, I wrote an article protesting against any attempt to get the allies to abandon what was their right. The quid pro quo for this abandonment was to have been that the Germans would then observe the law, and I made the statement that it was a peculiar procedure to demand that one person give up his rights so that the other person would observe the law.

Senator NELSON. I think, on that point, you are evidently on the right track.

Mr. STOWELL. Then in a lecture at Columbia I told the audience that we ought to have gone into the war after the Lusitania and a lot of Germans in the audience got up and left, and I said, "That is the trouble, when you want to discuss these questions people will not stay and hear what you have to say," and a woman in the audience, in a broken accent, replied, "Vell, den, vy don't you say something dot iss true?"

I do not consider that as carrying water on both shoulders.

Then when we were on the point of going into the war, when President Wilson had broken off relations with Germany, there was a great deal of talk about armed neutrality, and a lot of the pro-Germans, or peace-at-any-price people, were writing articles in favor of not arming our vessels, which would have been, in my opinion, cowardly behavior, and I advocated declaring war on Germany and not that half-way procedure; and I organized with a group of men—I was one of them—a pilgrimage to come on here to Washington to advocate the declaration of war against Germany, and we came on here and we saw some of the Members of Congress and we drew up resolutions which were sent to President Wilson, and received a letter of thanks to the chairman of that committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was chairman of that committee?

Mr. STOWELL. Prof. Farnum, of Yale. Prof. Janeway, of Johns Hopkins, was on the committee, and Prof. Mitchell, of Columbia. if I remember correctly, and Prof. Thayer also.

Senator OVERMAN. And you say you organized this work yourself?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; and then when that was over I went back to New York and I spent all my spare time organizing the Patriotic Service League in New York to do war work, and we have done all the war work in that part of New York City; we have done all the liberty-loan campaigns; we have done all the food matters. All of that has been done by this league that was there organized. And in the matter of getting up that organization and carrying it into another district I spent $3,000. The purpose in my making this statement is only to cover this matter of the—— Senator NELSON. Did any of your league enter the fighting ranks of our Army?

Mr. STOWELL. The present president of the league is Mr. Coudert, and the—— Senator NELSON. I mean did they enter the fighting ranks of the Army—the Infantry, Cavalry, or Artillery?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; one man, I think, who worked with me in the office volunteered, and while he was waiting to go into the Army he came there to the office at half-past 8 every day and worked until 5 as a volunteer worker—one of the finest examples of patriotism that I have ever seen; and then he went over there fighting, and has been on messenger service, which, of course, is very dangerous service; and he wrote me about that, evidently enjoying this opportunity for greater service. That was the class of people we had.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but he was not in the trenches?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; he was in the trenches, and then he was in this still more dangerous service.

Senator NELSON. You said that he was in the messenger service?

Mr. STOWELL. Oh, he was carrying messages at the front. They were out in the open, at the front, and they were being shot very rapidly carrying the messages.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Senator OVERMAN. That was your clerk?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; he was doing that work. This was all volunteer service. Later we had clerical assistance, but all this was volunteer service by the people there in the community trying to help in the war work.

Senator NELSON. There was a time, Professor, when we needed more soldiers than we needed these peace leagues.

Mr. STOWELL. This was not a peace league.

Senator NELSON. No; but I mean these leagues that there was such a multitude of in the country.

Mr. STOWELL. I told you that I never believed in this peace propaganda and I never had anything to do with it, because it was not calculated to help the country and it was on the wrong track. Patriotism was what was needed, and I realized that, and so I never had anything to do with these peace-at-any-price or peace-propaganda leagues.

Senator NELSON. No; but I mean there were so many leagues of all kinds.

Mr. STOWELL. We needed the military action first, of course.

Senator NELSON. Yes; of course.

Mr. STOWELL. I think that is all, unless there are any further questions.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your age?

Mr. STOWELL. Forty-three. I should have said that I was practicing law here.

Senator OVERMAN. You are practicing law here now?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. There is one question that I would like to ask you. You stated that you had been importuned by attorneys representing the German Government to take up the German cause and do some writing or propaganda work in their behalf. When was that?

Mr. STOWELL. No; I can not say that I was importuned; that is a misunderstanding.

Maj. HUMES. My recollection is that you made that statement early in your testimony.

Mr. STOWELL. If I did, it is erroneous. What I thought I said was that I had been offered a retainer by one of the lawyers of the Germans interested in a matter involving international law.

Maj. HUMES. A retainer?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was the issue in the litigation in which you were offered a retainer?

Mr. STOWELL. That was in the Appam case.

Maj. HUMES. That is the case of the steamship Appam?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the attorneys representing the German Government in that matter who solicited your assistance and offered you a retainer?

Mr. STOWELL. Hays, Kauffman & Lindheim. Mr. Lindheim asked me.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. STOWELL. And Mr. Coudert also asked me to prepare some material on the other side. Mr. Coudert sent me a check for $200 and asked me to prepare a report on the matter contained in the Hague conference discussion. I returned him the check, because, as I told him, I did not wish to take money in these matters. I wished to keep entirely independent, but I would prepare for him the material and would send it to both sides.

Senator NELSON. Did you prepare such a statement?

Mr. STOWELL. I did. I translated a lot of the matters in the Hague conventions that related to the Appam case, and I sent copies to both sides.

Senator NELSON. Did you come to the same conclusion as the Supreme Court of the United States did in that case?

Mr. STOWELL. In the Appam case?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STOWELL. No; I did not. I considered that it was to the American interest, as we used to be before you have a league of nations, to be able to intern its prizes in different parts of the world. I did not make any statement. I just brought out what the Hague had said and made translations. That was a matter of documents, really, bringing that material together, and that was really what Mr. Coudert wanted.

Senator NELSON. You did not draw any conclusions, then, from the authorities you quoted?

Mr. STOWELL. No. That was what Mr. Coudert really wanted me to do, because he knew I had been at The Hague and he wanted me to investigate that particular matter for him.

Senator NELSON. The Supreme Court took a different view from the authorities you cited in your brief?

Mr. STOWELL. No; they took a different view from what I thought was the law.

Senator NELSON. Well, that is what I meant.

Mr. STOWELL. And if the matter ever goes to arbitration I should expect the Supreme Court to be reversed on it, as has happened once or twice in our history.

Senator NELSON. That is, you do not think that the decision of the Supreme Court closed the matter?

Mr. STOWELL. I do not know as it will ever go to arbitration again, because so many of these questions are settled by the war; and I do not think that will ever be raised.

Senator NELSON. You think that the Supreme Court made a mistake?

Mr. STOWELL. I think they were mistaken in that case.

Senator NELSON. In that case?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What newspapers were you writing articles for, aside from the book that you wrote?

Mr. STOWELL. I wrote for every newspaper that asked me, on condition that when I was asked for an article I might also give it to any newspaper that wanted it, and that if I gave an article to the newspaper it must print it and print it exactly as it was; that was so to protect me from doing useless work for them and also to be sure that if they wanted to get what I considered was an expert and fair opinion they would get it; and when they did not know, or did not think they knew, what the answer would be, they were sometimes afraid to ask my opinion for fear they might get what they didn't want to print.

Maj. HUMES. You are getting away from the question of the newspapers. What newspapers did actually ask you to write for them and did you write for?

Mr. STOWELL. I wrote for the Times, the World, the American, the Tribune, and the Herald. What other papers are there in New York? I do not remember for the instant. I wrote for the Sun.

Senator NELSON. Did you ever write for the Mail?

Mr. STOWELL. Never.

Senator NELSON. Or the American?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Or the Journal?

Mr. STOWELL. No; I never wrote for the Journal.

Senator OVERMAN. All of these articles you wrote at the request of the papers themselves?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Or did you write them voluntarily and put them in?

Mr. STOWELL. I wrote only one or two articles voluntarily. The Fryalt case was one on which I wrote voluntarily.

Senator NELSON. Did you get paid for these articles?

Mr. STOWELL. Only in two or three instances. I wrote also for the magazines, and I got some pay from those articles in the magazines.

Senator NELSON. What magazines?

Mr. STOWELL. The Outlook and the Century and the New Republic and the Nation. I think that was all. Is that all, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. That is all, sir.

In honor of our deceased ex-President, Theodore Roosevelt, this committee will follow the action of the Senate of the United States and adjourn at this time.

(Whereupon, at 11.55 o'clock a. m., the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 9, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Mr. Bielaski, will you take the stand?

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, there has been a statement made here with reference to the activity of an agent of your department, or an alleged agent of the department, by the name of Ambrose. The statement has been made that while he was in the employ of your department he was doing work for the Northern Trust Co. in connection with some litigation that they were interested in with reference to Gaston B. Means. Will you state as to whether or not Ambrose was ever used by the Northern Trust Co. while he was on the pay roll of the Department of Justice, or in your employ?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think all those facts were fully brought out in the litigation. Mr. Ambrose was an agent of the Department of Justice—had been for a considerable period of time. He asked for and was granted leave of absence from the department and went into the employ of persons who were interested in the prosecution of Means in a State case down in North Carolina. He worked on that matter for quite a period of time, returned to the employ of the department, I think for two days, or something like that, and resigned, and, I think, continued in the employment of that Chicago company, whatever the name of that company was, which was interested in the financial side of the Means transaction.

Maj. HUMES. Was he under your control or in the service of the Federal Government during the time that he was doing this work for the Northern Trust Co.?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, in no way; except that, of course, we might have recalled him from leave of absence at any time, had we seen fit. After that he never even returned to the department, except for a period of two days or something like that; just a nominal time.

Maj. HUMES. During this time that he was on leave was he in the pay of the Department of Justice?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not recall whether any of his leave was with pay or not. I think not. I think it was without pay.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. But that is all a matter of record.

Maj. HUMES. And if there was any of it with pay, it was because of a vacation that he was entitled to?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Bielaski, did you have any correspondence with this company to release this man at his, Ambrose's, request?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was at Ambrose's request, because the compensation offered him, of course, was much larger than the Government was paying him. It was an opportunity for him.

Senator OVERMAN. You had no correspondence with the company?

Mr. BIELASKI. None that I recall. I do not think I even knew that he went with them.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Of course, we had some slight interest in anything that might be developed concerning Means, in so far as it would affect his employment by the German Government.

Senator OVERMAN. There was a man by the name of Olsen, was there not, that Mr. Means spoke about?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; he also stated that a man by the name of Olsen, a special agent of the Department of Justice, was concerned in this matter. Have you any knowledge of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. I have no knowledge of any such person or transaction, and I have been informed by my office that they have searched the records of the department and that no such employment ever existed.

Maj. HUMES. You have not any record of a special agent by the name of J. T. Olsen?

Mr. BIELASKI. I have been informed by the office that there is no record, and I have no personal knowledge of any such thing, at all. The records have been very carefully searched, as I understand, by the officials in the office, by the appointment clerk's office, and the disbursing clerk's office, and in every way by which the name might be discovered.

Maj. HUMES. Is there any other question that the committee wanted to ask concerning this particular matter?

Senator STERLING. I have none. The chairman may have some questions.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand you to say you had nothing to do with this surety company?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, no, nothing at all; except we furnished, for the information, I think it was, of Means's attorneys, a complete statement of his exact relations with the department; I think, possibly, we furnished you like information of some man, and we had produced the facts through proper witnesses in Chicago at the time of the trial.

Senator OVERMAN. The trial in Chicago?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; there was a trial in Chicago—I do not know who the parties to the action were, but Means was one of them—over the will, I think it was, of this Mrs. King who was killed in North Carolina. They desired to show in evidence there the exact relation of Ambrose to the department during the time he was working in the case, and we had the head of our Chicago office testify to the facts.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, the attention of the committee has been called to what is commonly known as the German Insurance Pool, and the committee would like to have you supply them with such information as you can as to the operation of that pool and the purpose of it and the extent of its activities.

Mr. BIELASKI. I assume you mean the German Marine Insurance Pool?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. There was a German Fire Insurance Pool, which matter is really pending in the office of the United States attorney in the southern district of New York, and I do not think it is in shape to be discussed publicly. But the Marine Insurance Pool—

Maj. HUMES. That is what I refer to.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. De Woody, who was the head of our New York office, and Special Agent S. O. Vanderpool of that office, made quite an extensive investigation into that question, because at the outset of the investigation it seemed as though there was a very great possibility—probability—that the plan had been carried into effect and was still in operation. It developed, however, that it was a plan which never was consummated. The reports are very lengthy and contain very copious extracts from the original records. But the main facts are that in 1914 the German marine insurance companies came largely into the marine insurance business in the United States, which had before that time been very largely done by English companies and to some extent by American companies.

So that when the war broke out—in August, 1914—a man named Franz Hermann, who was an alien German, was at the head of the firm known as Hermann & Co., and was the New York representative of the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. and the Mannheim Insurance Co., two German insurance companies. He was also the representative of—I think they called it—the Atlantic division of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co., of San Francisco, of which J. B. Levison was the head, and who maintained very intimate relations with Hermann.

After the war broke out the question of marine insurance became a very important one indeed for the German Government, because the English companies would not insure cargoes or vessels intended to carry goods to or for blacklisted firms, nor would they insure cargoes destined to neutral countries adjacent to Germany, anticipating that those cargoes might be sent to Germany. So that the question of marine insurance was a very important one for the German people. They could not move their goods either to South America or to neutral countries in Europe without some form of insurance.

They formed in Germany two insurance pools, for the purpose of lending additional funds and additional credit to the representatives in this country, so that they would be in a position to take care of cargoes and vessels which might appear.

While there were two funds, there does not seem to have been any particular distinction except as to one of them. They could insure sailing vessels and certain other classes of vessels. The man who handled it in this country said that their having made these two funds was due largely to their not understanding the exact situation over here rather than to any necessity for an exact division.

The German Government participated to some extent in these funds; just the exact proportion I do not know, but to such an extent that Albert was made one of the commissioners representing the pool and Herrmann the other. The arrangement was that Albert must O. K. all insurance written and that no losses could be paid without his approval. So that the whole transaction was under the control and direction of Albert as an official of the German Government. In addition, he had an arrangement whereby he was paid 2 per cent on the money that the German Government had put into the pool.

At some time, I think early in 1915, Mr. Wade Robinson, who was a member of Hermann's firm, went to Germany and had a conference with the people over there who were interested in this matter, and perfected these arrangements. He was given at that time a letter of introduction by Mr. Bernstorff, and all of his work was furthered by the German Government.

The record is full of correspondence between the German Government in Berlin and their representatives over here, discussing the details of the pool, which I do not think are worth reading except in small part. I will leave this report with the committee, so that if there is any part of it that is interesting to them it can be put in the record.

November 17, 1915—this appears on page 15 of this report, if you want to verify it at any time—Albert reported to the department of the interior in Berlin that he had opened two credits for the firm of F. Herrmann & Co. to the amount of $500,000. These credits were secured by depositing with two banks, one the Merchants' & Metals National Bank in New York City and the other the Mannheim Insurance Co., $500,000 of Imperial German Treasury 5 per cent notes as collateral for the notes or promises to pay in that amount of the company. He also put up $500,000 in an identical arrangement for the Nord-Deutsche Co. at the Chase National Bank of New York City. These additional securities were put up for the purpose of increasing the insuring capacities of the companies to handle the business. The Wagner steamship lines desired insurance to make regular trips to South America, and it was necessary, to satisfy the insurance commissioner of New York, that they have additional security. It was a rather flimsy transaction, however, because Albert had an understanding with the companies that they could make no use whatever of this collateral, in the way of disposing of it, without his consent.

Beginning about this time, Albert's office began to look forward to the possibility of severance of diplomatic relations and the possibility of this country getting into the war, and they wanted to save for the German companies and the German Government their insurance business. So that they contemplated the organization of what they called an American company.

I should say before going into that, that the German ambassador and Albert's office circularized people, confidentially, in South America and in the United States, including quite a list of people, about the desirability of patronizing these German insurance companies, so that the Government was able to throw a large amount of business to the German companies through the confidential circular and the confidential letters of Albert and Bernstorff. They also organized an insurance department in the firm of F. Stallforth & Co., for the purpose of handling some of the South and Central American insurance business which the firm of Herrmann & Co. were not so well equipped to handle, in the judgment of Albert, as expressed in a memorandum which he prepared. Stallforth & Co. had been engaged in banking and similar business in Mexico and were possibly more familiar with Spanish and Latin American conditions than were Herrmann & Co. They first considered, before they considered the possibility of organizing an absolutely new company, the use of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. which I mentioned. Mr. Herrmann, I think it was in a memorandum to Albert, after reviewing the situation as to the organization of companies here, said:

Possibly, even in case of war, there might still be a possibility for us to work out some scheme by which part of the business may be saved to those two companies, and that is by re-insuring the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, to which company all the Mannheim's and Nord Deutsche's business would be transferred, with a company of a European neutral country, which in turn could re-insure the business thus received with the Mannheim or the Nord Deutsche.

That is, the parent companies in Germany. So they would ultimately get the benefit of the insurance done over here.

While it is possible that the Fireman's Fund would not object to our making an arrangement of this kind at the beginning of a war, nobody can foretell what their attitude might be if a state of war between the United States and Germany existed for any length of time, and surely nobody can foretell what they might be forced to do by what is called public sentiment.

And then he goes on and tells about the experience they had with the English companies. Certain of them wanted to maintain their contractual relations with Hermann & Co. which they had before the war, but the pressure, of course, from the Government prevented. Herrmann & Co. represented not only the German companies but certain English companies before the war started.

Herrmann's suggestion for the formation of an American company was favored immediately and strongly by Albert and by Borge-meister, who was Albert's assistant in the office and who was specially concerned in the handling of this insurance work. He was the deputy commissioner for the insurance pool and handled the credit of the business. Robinson was the deputy for Herrmann also.

He goes on and suggests that "the company could be established at a nominal expense by securing dummy stockholders," men that they could trust to act for them, and said, "We should be able to place formal ownership in the hands of important men of affairs, men who would merit our confidence and the confidence of the business community." He believes that $25,000 would fully cover the expenses of establishment of the company, including "remuneration to certain trusted parties appearing as stockholders but holding stock for us." And he lists a number of names here, most of whom are known: Mr. Reisinger, Mr. Nagel, Mr. McHugh, Mr. Wing, Mr. Pav-enstadt, Mr. Edenborn, Mr. Horwitz and Mr. Chandler. He suggests that they should have a two million dollar capital, part of which would be supplied by the use of treasury notes, and that they would immediately take over or have the advantage of taking over all of the business that Herrmann & Co. were doing, so that it would be a profitable venture from the start. They suggested various names, and stated that many suitable names have already been appropriated, including "America," "International," "American," "United States," "National," etc., but determined upon "Republic Insurance Company" as a suitable name.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. It begins running through 1916. That was about July, 1916. This memorandum is dated July 7, 1916. Albert reported the proposition to the German Government at Berlin. I think that memorandum that you asked the date of was June 9, 1916. There is quite a lengthy memorandum here from Berlin, inquiring into the details of how this could be done. It is not of any particular interest except he says:

Could not, through the election of shareholders, the fact that the deal concerns a German foundation, be kept a secret, at least for the duration of the war, so that there need be no fear of difficulty of concessions on the part of political influential American officials? The Mannheimer Insurance Company deems the acquisition of concessions as sufficient.

And they ask whether $2,000,000 would be absolutely requisite. Showing the close participation of the Berlin people in the organization as contemplated.

This arrangement for an American company, however, never was actually carried into effect, probably because of the entry of the United States into the war before it could be. There was, however, an interesting development which I think the committee would be interested in, in which the same people were involved, showing their intention to deceive. This memorandum says:

The company must have throughout a purely American appearance. Consequently the shares must all be taken, a smaller part actually, the balance formally, by Americans. I have considered, for the actual undertaking by the American stockholders, about ten per cent.

A great deal of this report relates to the actual business that they did, which is not of any particular interest, I take it, to the committee except that it shows that in all instances anything of any consequence had to be approved by Albert's office.

July 26, 1917, Mr. O. G. Orr, who had been a member of the partnership F. Herrmann & Co., made a public statement, in which he said:

In view of misstatements which have appeared recently in the public press.

First. That on April 10, 1917, the partnership existing between F. Herrmann, O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn (being all the partners of F. Herrmann & Co.) was dissolved by mutual consent, all but Mr. Herrmann withdrawing. The five other than Mr. Herrmann formed the corporation of O. G. Orr & Co., Inc.

Second. That O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn are the sole and unconditional owners of all the stock of O. G. Orr & Co. Inc., and constitute all of the directors and officers of the corporation.

Third. That since that date O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn have had no connection, directly or indirectly, with F.

Herrmann or with F. Herrmann & Co., nor has F. Herrmann or F. Herrmann & Co. had any connection with O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., in any way whatsoever.

Fourth. That at the time of the separation above mentioned O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., continued to occupy the offices formerly occupied by F. Herrmann & Co., under a transferred lease, and that they also engaged a large number of persons formerly employed by F. Herrmann & Co., among whom was one girl, the daughter of a naturalized citizen of the United States, who was born in Germany and had never been naturalized. At present there are in the office of O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., about 160 persons (including the officers and directors of the corporation) of whom three (and three only) were born in Germany, and of whom only one, the girl above mentioned, remains unnaturalized.

Fifth. That O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., had nothing whatever to do with locating the offices of the present firm of F. Herrmann & Co. in a building adjacent to the one in which their offices are located, and that no significance attaches thereto.

Sixth. That there are no German interests whatever in the companies represented by O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., as stockholders or otherwise.

Seventh. That the only dealings O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., has had with F. Herrmann & Co. were excess reinsurances under an old treaty between one of the companies represented by O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., and one of the companies represented by F. Herrmann & Co., which reinsurance treaty was cancelled on July 13, 1917, by the terms of the President's proclamation of that date and the necessary exchange of correspondence and remittances arising out of the reinsurance transactions closed prior to April 10, 1917.

Eighth. That since July 13, 1917, there have been no dealings between the two offices except those absolutely necessary in closing old matters as described above and permitted by the President's Proclamation.

Ninth. That there exists no agreement or understanding of any nature as to any future dealings with the German companies or with F. Herrmann & Co., or with F. Herrmann.

The facts were that when this ostensible change was made, for the purpose of appearing to eliminate from Herrmann & Co. the interest of Franz Herrmann, an alien German, that it was simply a pretext, as will appear from what happened.

Senator STERLING. Is Orr's statement by affidavit, Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was a published statement, Senator.

Senator STERLING. That was just a published statement?

Mr. BIELASKI. There are a number of statements here giving the details of this matter, from Orr and Herrmann and so on, that I am going to leave with the committee. They go over all of the details of the thing. I hardly think you care to have them read, as it would take a very long time, but I am going to leave this whole matter with the committee.

When Mr. Orr was first interviewed he specifically denied that Herrmann retained any interest or had any financial relations with the new corporation of Orr & Co. Then he admitted that Herrmann had made a personal loan to Orr of $50,000.

In going over the records it was established that at the time of the dissolution of the partnership Franz Hermann's interest in the company was $50,019.27.

Mr. Orr was further questioned, and he admitted that the $50,000 transaction was a loan in theory and that it was the $50,019.27 which was Herrmann's interest in the company, which was left in the new corporation, which they had pretended to completely divorce from Herrmann, and that all the records, assets, and business of the former partnership of Herrmann & Co. continued uninterruptedly and passed as a common and undivided whole into the new corporation of Orr & Co., except that the name of Herrmann was left out; that on May 26 they determined, according to Mr. Orr's statement, that Herrmann ought to be paid out or eliminated at least in theory from the corporation of Orr & Co. That Orr proposed to give to Herrmann his personal note to cover Herrmann's interest or "loan," and that Orr then demanded of each of the other incorporators of Orr & Co. a personal note to Orr, representing the amount of liability of each, this liability being proportionate to the stockholding of each in the corporation of Orr & Co.; that Orr & Co. paid to Herrmann a check of $20,000, leaving a balance of $30,019.27. May 23 they determined to pay off the balance, or to make a pretext of doing it, and Orr delivered to Herrman in cash or its equivalent, $30,019.27. Of the latter amount Orr himself put up approximately $14,845.79. These payments aggregated exactly $50,019.27, which, if they had been made in good faith to Herrmann, would then have bought off all of his interest in Orr & Co. But on May 23 Herrmann handed back to Orr his check for $14,845, and on that day delivered to Orr bonds of approximately the value of $35,000.

Orr stated that his theory of the transaction was that they paid off Herrmann and that Herrmann then loaned them back just what they had paid him off. He admits that they turned right back into the corporation the funds.

Herrmann, in his examination, stated that the company did not have the ready cash, and had to have his money to carry on the business.

On November 3, 1917, another effort was made, apparently, to eliminate Herrmann from the firm of Orr & Co. This was considerably after this published statement of Mr. Orr.

A dividend aggregating $50,000 was declared. Each stockholder then immediately indorsed his dividend check over to Orr, adding a few dollars each to make up the $19.27, and on November 13 this aggregate amount was again paid over to Franz Herrmann.

During the time that Orr was in Herrmann & Co. he received a salary of about $1,000 or $2,000 a year, and the other men received smaller salaries.

When Orr & Co. was created, Orr's salary was fixed at $6,000 a month. The present salaries are: Orr, $6,000 per month; Osborne, $6,000 per month; Wall, $4,000 per month; and C. R. Osborne, $4,000 per month; it being the theory of our agents that these excessive salaries were the manner in which the profits from the business were paid to Herrmann.

Mr. Orr admits that, in June, 1918, he personally loaned to Herrmann $40,000, which amount he raised by subscribing it himself and his associates in proportion to the capital stock each one held in Orr & Co.

As a matter of fact, in May, 1918, the company had declared a dividend of $65 a share.

Again in September, 1918, Orr admitted that he personally delivered to Herrmann $40,000, which he also stated was a loan, but admitted that he took no note or any evidence of indebtedness of any kind from Herrmann.

Herrmann & Co. had been denied by the Treasury Department a license to engage in the insurance business, as had the Nordheim and the Norddeutsch, the companies they represented; so that this was a concealment of Herrmann's interest—an alien German's interest—in this particular business. I do not know whether he might not have openly maintained his interest in the company, so far as the law was concerned, if he had elected to do so.

Senator OVERMAN. He was refused his license to do business and then this was the method they adopted in order to continue in the insurance business?

Mr. BIELASKI. In order that it should not come to the attention of the authorities that he was connected with this other company. This other company had been granted a license. The whole proposition amounted to a concealment from the public and from the people with whom they were doing business of the interest of an alien German in it.

You can see how important that was to the business, from the fact that Orr made the statement he did publicly, denying absolutely any interest of Herrmann in this concern.

We have no doubt whatever that Herrmann continued to be the dominating influence in and the brains of the organization, largely, as he had been before.

Maj. HUMES. What was the end in view with reference to maintaining an organization; for the perpetuation of German interests after the war? Was that one of the elements of the plan?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; the original plan of the German Government, which Albert and Borgemeister were working out with Herrmann, was the organization of an American company through which they intended to carry on the insurance business in this country during the period of the war, while we were at war—under the guise of an American company—all the time we were at war; and, of course, to maintain it intact with all their connections and relations, for business after the war. They hoped to get a monopoly of the business over here and eliminate the American and English concerns.

That is, I think, substantially the story of the marine insurance pools as they were formed and of the company that was contemplated and of the actual actions of Herrmann and his associates. I will leave all of these papers with the committee, containing the details.

(The matter submitted by Mr. Bielaski is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
OFFICE OF DIVISION SUPERINTENDENT,
New York City, October 7, 1918.

GERMAN INSURANCE POOLS.

Evidence is at hand which conclusively establishes a conspiracy, beginning in 1915. * * * to maintain through the period of the war the domination by German interests of the marine insurance business in the United States, by means of secret agreements between representatives of the German Government and of the several marine insurance companies constituting the so-called German group in the United States, and their combination into a so-called "Pool," the project being supported financially, and to the extent of at least one million dollars, by the German Government pledging its bonds with several New York City banks, which latter, in turn, advanced the cash to the two insurance companies dominating the Pool.

The general supervision of the marine insurance business in the United States, through the Pool, was vested in Dr. H. F. Albert.

The principals in this conspiracy were, and are:

1. Herr Richter, Privy Imperial Councillor of the German Government at Berlin.
2. Dr. Bruders, Director of the German Insurance Bank of Berlin.
3. Count von Bernstorff, Ambassador to the United States.
4. Dr. H. F. Albert, High Privy Councillor of the German Government, accredited to the United States.
5. Franz Herrmann, of New York, Manager of the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. and Mannheim Insurance Co.
6. Wade Robinson, of New York, confidential assistant to Herrmann.
7. Orton G. Orr, of New York, also confidential assistant to Herrmann.
8. Paul Wolf, of New York, special emissary of the German Government to act as assistant to Albert and Herrmann for the German marine insurance interests.
9. F. A. Borgemeister, confidential assistant to Dr. Albert, who represented Dr. Albert in the active management of the Pool.

Of the foregoing, the first four named are at present in Germany.

The fifth, Franz Herrmann, an alien enemy, is now in the United States. He was for some years the head of Franz Herrmann & Co. of New York, the consolidated agency for the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Companies, and had, up to the time of the entrance of the United States into the war in 1917, as his two principal confidential associates, Wade Robinson and Orton G. Orr. In April, 1917, Robinson and Orr claim to have separated from Herrmann, and in November, 1917, the Nord-Deutsche, Mannheim, F. Herrmann & Co., and Herrmann himself, were, by refusal of the Treasury Department to re-license, retired from the marine insurance field.

Wade Robinson, an American citizen, is at present in New York City.

Orton G. Orr, whose citizenship is not definitely known, is likewise in New York City.

Paul Wolf, an enemy alien, now in New York City, was a comparative newcomer in the Herrmann firm. He is rumored to have been placed in the firm by officials in Berlin to check against Herrmann.

F. A. Borgemeister, an enemy alien, is now interned at Fort Oglethorpe. He was the assistant of Dr. Albert and known as the German Paymaster in the United States.

Carl Schreiner, who has not been mentioned in the foregoing list as a leading conspirator in the plans, is important nevertheless as President of the Munich Re-Insurance Co., intimately associated with the re-insurance of the Pool. Schreiner is now in the United States and is an enemy alien.

Up until about the year 1914, the British marine insurance companies dominated the business in the United States, the German and American marine business being negligible. About 1914 German interests entered the marine insurance field in the United States by the establishment here of American branches of the two great German marine insurance companies, the Nord-Deutsche and the Mannheim, the United States managership of both being vested in Herrmann & Co., and by August, 1914, at the outbreak of the war, the German companies had become a large factor in the marine insurance business in this country.

Marine insurance is dependent for its development, not only on the friendly patronage of the assured, but also upon the financial strength as represented by paid-in capital and surplus of the insuring companies, together with their interrelations in a given group, enabling re-insurance and consequent facilities for the distribution of risk and the ready absorption of large lines of insurance.

The German marine group in 1914, in the United States, consisted of the American branches of the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. and the Mannheim Insurance Co., these two re-insuring with the Russia ReInsurance Co. (technically a Russian re-insurance company), the Munich ReInsurance Co., and the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. of San Francisco.

Of the latter three reinsurance companies, the Munich was the largest, and its American branch and interests were represented by Carl Schreiner.

The Russia, although technically classified as Russian, transacted its marine business under the supervision of the Berlin branch, which had been for some time under the management of Carl Sturhahn, at that time a German subject and a German Reserve Officer. Sturhahn came to the United States from Berlin, became the American manager for the Russia Company, and obtained American citizenship at the outbreak of the war.

The Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. of San Francisco, although so far as known an all-American Company, was, and is, under the control of its President J. B. Levison, and the intimate relations and connection between Levison and his Company with the German marine group, which resulted in the transaction of an enormous re-insurance business between them, will become apparent from a perusal of the evidence hereinafter presented. The Atlantic Marine Department of the Fireman's Fund Co. was operated under the management of Franz Herrmann.

The evidence presented herein discloses in minute detail the plan, led by Albert and Herrmann, to effect a domination of the marine insurance field in this country by pro-German interests, through the Pool, and recites a remarkable history of the manner in which the Germans anticipated the elimination of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Companies following the outbreak of the war between the United States and Germany, and conspired to continue the business in German interests by the formation of new American and neutral companies with dummy stockholders secretly holding for German interests the stock of so-called American companies, and with secret agreements between the latter as to re-insurance and distribution.

The American Merchant Marine Insurance Co. was taken over by Wade Robinson coincident with the retirement of Herrmann and the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheim Companies from the field. O. G. Orr & Co. was organized by Orr, Herrmann's assistant, in April, 1917. The Scandinavian-American Assurance Co., a Swedish Company, bought entrance into the United States during the latter part of 1916, when its American interests came under the management of the newly formed corporation, O. G. Orr & Co., so that the entrance of these three Companies into the American field was generally coincident with the retiring of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche, and the latter's alien manager, Herrmann, exactly in accordance with the plans revealed by the evidence herein * * *.

The story is related quite fully by the documents at hand, and little is needed except to quote therefrom. Every quotation is from an original document now held at the New York office of the Bureau of Investigation, and being either the original letter or the original office file carbon copy of same.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

The first reference to the proposed Pool is the office file copy (Document 1) of what is believed to be a radiogram, signed "Bernstorff", to Berlin, and, although undated, from its context was probably sent after the outbreak of the war and in the latter part of 1914. It reads as follows:

"Urgently recommend to induce German Insurance Companies cooperation capable insuring and reinsuring up to not less one million dollars on hull and on cargo provided such insurance is upon interests destined for or owned by other than enemy countries. Situation here exceedingly urgent on account English insurance companies embargo against insurance on all merchandise destined to Scandinavia or other countries adjacent to Germany, Austria or Turkey. Facilities required should be placed in hands of representatives of German companies. Premiums at present obtainable are 30 to 100% higher than normal risks. Are regular in every respect. Premiums first class business at present applied for in Herrmann's office alone about $300,000. Authority should also be granted to accept war risks corresponding amounts subjects either usual New York clause, i. e. free of Allies capture or so-called Herrmann neutrality clause. Latter preferable account banking requirements and very high rates obtainable. Additional financing to secure policy holders can probably be easily arranged through me. Decline of sterling exchange greatly enhances German Companies' opportunities and arrangement suggested would guarantee greatly increasing their and German prestige generally and facilitate most necessarily shipments from this country to neutral ports."

The foregoing radiogram by Bernstorff was evidently compiled from a memorandum from Albert to Bernstorff (Document 2), undated, and reading as follows:

"On account of English pressure, numerous former clients of German insurance companies insist on placing business with American companies. German ownership of American insurance companies therefore highly desirable in order to retain business and influence. Request authorization to form American Insurance Company capital and surplus two million dollars, to operate as adjunct to insurance company 1914 and to assist insurance pool. Political and business reasons make venture highly desirable. Necessary funds are available for purpose. Vacancy created by withdrawal of English companies from office of F. Herrmann & Co. who are ready to take management of company, assure substantial and lucrative business for company. Company would prove very beneficial and important factor when business relations between United States and Germany are re-established, and would afford necessary protection against English measures in insurance market and against their blacklisting. Furthermore company would prove valuable assistance in breaking English hold on insurance in this market and strengthen our influence in insurance on American Continent. Incorporating and establishing of company would entail limited expenses only and as funds of company must be invested in liquid first-class securities, company could be liquidated without difficulty or loss when normal business conditions again prevail."

* * * Wade Robinson visited Berlin, upon his first trip in connection with the Pool organization, early in 1915, and the first record of that appears is a letter (Document 3) dated New York, January 20, 1915, from Albert to Dr. Trautmann, Wilhelmstrasse 74, Berlin, reading as follows:

"I beg with these lines to introduce to you Mr. Wade Robinson. Mr. Robinson is partner of the firm F. Herrmann & Co., who have here in New York the representation of both German insurance companies—the Nord-Deutsche and the Mannheimer insurance company. He intends to immediately take up the question of insurance with the German companies, to induce the latter to a broad policy on the American market.

"Would your Excellency make arrangements that Mr. Robinson be supported as much as possible in his undertaking, and that if possible all German insurance companies agree on a common policy.

"I beg to refer humbly to my last report of December 27."

Document 4 is a list of the original subscribers to the German Marine Insurance Pool, which subscribers were obtained by Wade Robinson on the occasion of his visit to Germany, and which subscription aggregated $1,250,000, and was later increased by a subsidy supplied by the German Government itself.

Document 5 is a letter from Herrmann & Co., which, according to the initials was dictated by Wade Robinson, to the Mannheim Insurance Co. at Mannheim, Germany, dated July 14, 1916, and transmitted via the submarine "Deutschland", from which it appears that Franz Herrmann and Dr. Albert are the Commissioners for the Pool, with Wade Robinson and F. A. Borgemeister Deputy Commissioners, representing Herrmann and Albert respectively. This letter reads in part as follows:

"By special permission we have the privilege of addressing one letter to you for mail by the Submarine 'Deutschland'.

"We cannot refrain from an expression of congratulation to Germany and all Germans, and particularly to your good selves, over the achievement of the 'Deutschland'. We sincerely hope her return voyage will be safe and short and that other vessels of her type will soon follow.

"Up to date the new reinsurance contracts have not come to hand, but Mr. Robinson has explained the arrangements to Dr. Albert, advising him of his appointment as Commissioner, and he has formally accepted the appointment. We have also furnished him with a copy of the memorandum relating to the agreement which was forwarded to Mr. Robinson in care of Mr. Herrmann at Christiania. * * *

"All of the business of this class so far written has been with the full knowledge and consent of Dr. Albert and in connection with most of it he has even gone so far as to urge us to write it, because of the advantage that will thereby accrue to German interests.

"We have exhibited this letter to Dr. Albert and have requested him to initial it so that it will serve as a documentary record to exhibit to Dr. Bruders and others who are interested. We also beg to advise you that the Deputies appointed by the Commissioners to represent them in their absence are F. A. Borgemeister, representing Dr. H. F. Albert, and Wade Robinson representing F. Herrmann."

An undated memorandum for Dr. Albert (Document 7), presumably from the German Foreign Office at Berlin, presents a tabulated description of the two German Marine Insurance Pools, known as Pool No. 1-A and Pool No. 1-B. The memorandum is headed: "Principal Items which refer to the Insurance Pools":

"The communication from the Foreign Office states that the Pool was created in accordance with your telegram relative to insurance matters, which reached the Foreign Department on September 9, 1915.

* * * * *

"The Pool assumes risks with the understanding that all details relative to risks are submitted to H. F. Albert and approved by him. Are based upon the terms and rules at present in force at the New York Agency of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies. * * *

"All losses exceeding $25,000 must be advised by cable to the managing office of the Pool, Deutschen Seeversicherungs Gesellschaft at Berlin.

"All losses must be approved by H. F. Albert.

* * * * *

"Participation Imperial German Government: The remaining percentage was assumed by the Imperial German Government. The Government only participates when insurance in excess of $948,000 (Pool No. 1-A) or $908,000 (Pool No. 1-B) is required."

Pool No. 1-B is then described as practically the same as Pool No. 1-A, except that American and neutral vessels are admitted; also merchandise on sailing vessels not more than twenty years old. Hull insurance is provided for up to $500,000, and destination ports are indicated as German, Scandinavian or Hollandish.

Document 11 is also a more detailed recital of the Pool Agreement 1-A and Pool Agreement 1-B.

A letter dated September 29, 1915, from the Mannheim Insurance Co., Mannheim, Germany, to F. Herrmann (Document 8), refers generally to Pool matters, and reads in part as follows:

"Before I tell you what has been arranged I must refer briefly to the great trouble and obstacles which have been placed against our efforts in bringing all German companies together to render the necessary aid to your efforts in New York."

Then follows a description of the difficulty to induce the Deutsche Seeversicherungs Gesellschaft to join in the American plans. Reference is made to the best assistance rendered by Dr. Bruders and to the fact that two Pools have been formed for the export of special goods, during the war, from the United States to Scandinavia. The Pools are again described generally as referred to in Document 7, Pool 1-A and Pool 1-B, and the reason set forth for the formation of two Pools instead of one as being due to lack of knowledge on the part of the German companies as to American business, and alleging that the antagonizing German interests feared that Albert might insure American steamers of inferior class unless specifically limited. The letter then refers to an Export Pool then practically consummated, and discusses the formation of an Import Pool, both to serve importing and exporting German interests, and concludes with the following paragraph:

"I have just been informed that on Saturday I am going to have an interview with one of the head gentlemen of the Government in charge of these matters, whom by the way Mr. Robinson met in Berlin, and hope that good progress will result from it."

A letter from Albert to Herrmann & Co., New York, dated November 16, 1915, (Document 9), so clearly shows one of the underlying motives of this scheme, namely, the desire of the German interests, as represented by Albert, to secure advance information as to cargoes, that it is quoted in full:

"Your letter of the 15th instant enclosing various bordereaux has been received. Inasmuch as the Pool arrangement specifies that risks shall be underwritten only with my approval, it is essential that I be acquainted with the risks to be underwritten, and that I authorize the underwriting of same before the business is concluded.

"I fully am aware of the fact that I must be guided by your office, as far as insurance technique is concerned, and naturally I have no desire to create any hardship to you in your handling of the insurance business for the pool. My approval, however, is a part of the pool arrangement, and a way should be found which will enable me to dispose of my duties in connection with the pool, satisfactory to the German interests and to myself. I would therefore suggest that when a steamer to Scandinavia starts loading, or when a steamer is advertised, a request be sent to me from your office for my authorization for an open insurance line for the steamer in question. When special business is offered, it should be an easy matter to acquaint me with its nature, and to obtain my approval. I presume that you will find a way to present to me the details for approval, before risks are actually undertaken and not after, as in the case of the bordereaux sent.

"The risks as inserted in the bordereaux have been carefully noted. I must withhold my approval, however, in this instance, inasmuch as I have not been previously acquainted with same."

The foregoing letter is peculiarly significant as it also admits Albert's unfamiliarity with insurance technique and consequent reliance upon Herrmann, which only serves to emphasize the former's real purpose in securing the information.

Document 10, dated New York, November 17, 1915, is a report to the Secretary of State for the Interior, Berlin, presumably from Albert, and reads in part as follows:

"Supplementing the memorandum concerning insurance matters sent with my report of September 21, 1915, I send your Excellency enclosed a memorandum submitted to me by my colleague, Mr. Borgemeister, from which your Excellency will be good enough to note the further development of the matter.

"In accordance therewith I have opened for the firm of F. Herrmann & Co., New York, two credits in the amount of $500,000 each in favor of the insurance companies they represent, in two different banks, in order to put them in position to assume in the name of both pools formed there in the meantime, as well as the risks required by me as the general risks arising from the Scandinavian business. So that F. Herrmann & Co. can enter these credits as assets as required by law here, I was compelled to pledge myself not to withdraw before the expiration of next year or not before maturity, the treasury notes deposited as security for the credits. On the other hand, Herrmann & Co. have pledged themselves to induce the companies represented by them to replace the treasury notes with the proper amount of German War Loan. I beg to humbly ask you Excellency to induce the insurance companies to perform this pledge. The sending of the war loan could be facilitated by having the pledge of payment made dependent on the counter signature of the German Ambassador here, or his attorney.

"It is to be hoped that the very capable and energetic representation here of the German insurance companies will succeed, on the basis of the pools formed in Germany and of the credits extended to it here, in getting control in increasing measure of the business heretofore exclusively monopolized by England. From the proposed later participation of the Insurance Company of 1914 in the business here, I note that this action thoroughly conforms to the intentions there. * * * * *

"The extension of the business, as proposed in the memorandum, to North and South America, as well as on steamers from other countries, Asia for example, I can only recommend if it seems feasible there, and indeed not only for reasons of the general strengthening of the German insurance companies in international business, but also in their own immediate interest. I am risking just at this time some shipments from South America or Dutch Indies, concerning which for important reasons speak more fully.

"According to the syndicate agreement submitted to me by the firm F. Herrmann & Co., the individual matters of business are subject to my approval. I would like to know whether through this approval there arises simply a control as to whether insurance shall be assumed for shipments that lie in German interests, or whether at the same time the responsibility for the engagements of the companies working with Government capital will thereby be borne."

Document 22 is an insurance report to the Zentral Einkeuf Gesellschaft (Central Purchasing Committee), Berlin, dated New York, October 28, 1915. This report refers to $5,000,000 of German treasury notes furnished Albert, one million of which has been used by the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Companies. This report also recites Albert's instruction to Herrmann & Co. to retain premiums due the German Government under the Pool arrangement in a "special banking depository" in view of the ruling of the New York Insurance Commissioner that premiums during the war may not be forwarded to the parent companies. The report recites the efforts of the British authorities, recognizing their power in marine insurance, to injure German interests, as a result of which English companies have been prohibited from underwriting hulls or cargoes going to German or Scandinavian ports, and alleging that the American companies follow the English lead, as a result of which few are par icipating in risks to Scandinavian ports. The report further states that English authorities, by anticipating wireless messages, have discovered that Herrmann & Co. have underwritten considerable business to Scandinavia, and that the English authorities had therefore attempted to eliminate Herrmann & Co. by refusing to re-insure for them. The report then continues:

"It was extremely fortunate that at the very moment when the reinsurance market was closed to F. Herrmann & Co. two important pool arrangements were effected in Germany by the German underwriters, which enables them, through F. Herrmann & Co., to combat in the United States English arrogance and commercial war messages in an effective manner. * * *

"This arrangement alone, however, would not be sufficient to enable the German companies to take care of the business offered. It was necessary to adjust the assets in conformity with the larger risks assumed. It was to be expected, and evidence has often been available, to the effect that the agents of Great Britain would at once notify the insurance commissioner of the State of New York of the large risks underwritten by the German Companies, and would do all in their power to discredit the insurance capacity of the German companies. If the assets should not be in conformity with the business undertaken, they would naturally find a way to combat the German insurance interests, and probably succeed in eliminating the activities of the German companies in the United States altogether. It was thus essential that a means should be found to provide additional assets. The $5,000,000 German treasury notes placed at my disposal for banking arrangements, provided the necessary means, and I have placed with two banking institutions designated by me, $550,000 Imperial German 5% Treasury Notes each for the use of the Mannheim Insurance Co. and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. The United States assets of the Companies are thereby increased by a like amount.

"The securities cannot be withdrawn, except when authorized by me. Furthermore, I have caused the firm of F. Herrmann & Co. to prevail upon both insurance companies to provide, as soon as possible, securities of their own, in order to release those which I have placed at their disposal. I have ascertained that war loan certificates are acceptable to the Insurance Commissioner as lawful securities for foreign insurance companies underwriting in this market. Hence I have requested F. Herrmann & Co. to suggest to the Mannheim Insurance Co. and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. to transfer a sufficient amount of German War Loan certificates to be substituted for the securities which I have placed at their disposal. I would suggest that you bring this matter also to their attention. In arranging the matter in this manner, the necessity of providing dollar securities in this market, at an initial loss of some considerable proportion, due to the unsatisfactory rate of exchange, has been eliminated.

"With the view of increasing further the United States assets of foreign insurance companies underwriting in this market, the Insurance Commissioner has issued instructions that representatives of foreign insurance companies shall not, during the time of war, forward earned premiums to their parent companies. I have requested F. Herrmann & Co. to retain the premiums earned on insurance written under the pool arrangement, with a special banking depository designated by me.

"I am enclosing a copy of a letter received from F. Herrmann & Co. and from their attorney, which dwell on the necessity of increasing the United States assets of the Mannheim Insurance Co. and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co.

"In view of the fact that the insurance pool has requested my approval for all risks under this pool arrangement, I have thought it advisable that such a deposit arrangement should be made. I presume that the Imperial Government has considerably assisted in the pool arrangement and is a party of same."

The report then complains that the Allianz Insurance Co. of Berlin and the Proussische Insurance Co. of Stettin, are both represented in the United States, but in a manner that does not serve the German interests, the Allianz Company having an Englishman as the United States agent and the Proussische an American, and suggesting both Companies be directed to change their American representation.

A letter attached to Document 22, from Herrmann & Co. to Albert, dated October 8, 1915, refers to one from Mr. Kneeland, Attorney, of Harison, Kneeland & Hewitt, New York City, also dated October 8, upon the subject of the necessity of deposit by the Pool. Mr. Kneeland's letter is a very clearly stated opinion of the law on insurance regulations, and refers to the necessity of additional funds or deposit for both the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche in the amount of $500,000.

A wireless message via Sayville, dated New York, September 22, 1915, (Document 6), from Wade Robinson to Richard Post, Director of the Mannheim Co. at Mannheim, reads as follows:

"Referring pool negotiations party mentioned our letter December seventeenth has made temporary deposit one million dollars half each account our companies to cover large liabilities to be assumed and for protection United States policyholders such deposit to be refunded by special arrangement to be completed without necessity your remittance. Arrangement will be explained by letter. In view this we again urgently request haste and fullest possible powers enable us take advantage present future opportunities for benefit concerned."

Document 21, being a letter from Albert to Herrmann & Co., dated New York, September 29, 1915, also refers to strengthening the assets of the German insurance companies, and adds:

"In order that the advantage of the pool arrangement may immediately become available, and that the insurance difficulties encountered on all Scandinavian shipments may be eliminated without delay, I am holding at the disposal of the Nord-Deutsche Versicherungs Gesellschaft, Hamburg, and of the Mannheimer Versicherungs Gesellschaft, Mannheim, $500,000 cash deposit for each company, subject to the terms of our banking agreement. * * *

"1. I have secured $500,000 line of credit at the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, New York, available against the six months promissory note of the Mannheimer Versicherungs Gesellschaft. The proceeds of the note will be placed at the disposal of the Mannheimer Versicherungs Gesellschaft as soon as the note is in the possession of the Mechanics & Metals National Bank.

"In order that the proceeds shall benefit the United States assets of the Mannheimer Versicherungs Gesellschaft, this company should instruct the Mechanics & Metals National Bank to place the $500,000 to the credit of F. Herrmann & Co. as United States managers of Mannheimer Versicherungs Gesellschaft.

"2. An identical arrangement has been made for the benefit of the Nord-Deutsche Versicherungs Gesellschaft at the Chase National Bank of New York.

"Both banks require collateral to secure the notes, and I am ready to provide same in the nature of 5 per cent Imperial German Treasury notes until both companies are able to replace the securities I am pledging with some of their own. I suggest that in due course they be substituted by German Imperial Loan Certificates, of which both companies no doubt have a supply on hand. The arrangement with the banks can be completed through my office."

Document 12 is from Richter, dated Berlin, November 4, 1915, to Albert, transmitting copies of two Pool agreements, probably those referred to in Document 11 above.

Document 13 is a letter from Herrmann & Co. which, by its initials, was dictated by Wade Robinson, dated New York, July 20, 1916, to Albert, referring to a conference with Mr. Kneeland, Attorney, of Harison, Kneeland & Hewitt, New York, definitely reciting the liability of the Pool in the matter of re-insurance.

Document 14 is a letter from Herrmann & Co. which, according to the initials, was dictated by Wade Robinson, dated New York, November 19, 1915, to Albert, for the attention of Mr. Borgemeister, enclosing a list in duplicate of steamers advertised to sail for Scandinavia.

Document 16 is a letter to Albert from Herrmann & Co., dictated by Robinson, transmitting a copy of a communication to the Mannheim Insurance Co., Mannheim, Germany, dated September 24, 1915, which, after referring to the $1,000,000 credit of the Mannheimer and Nord-Deutsche, states:

"We desire to draw your particular attention to the fact that it is expected that the fund of $1,000,000 is to be returned as soon as possible, and that the return is to be made out of premiums that may be accumulated and/or out of a fund or credit to be established here by means of a special arrangement this is to be made by him through special banking channels in Germany and the United States, which arrangement will avoid the necessity of the actual transfer of money, and so avoid loss through interest and exchange.

"While there is no time limit set for the reimbursement of Dr. Albert, it is expected that this reimbursement will take place as promptly as possible, and he has informed us that in a very short time he will advise us of arrangements by which reimbursing remittance can be made.

"It is expected that the funds that are to reimburse Dr. Albert will come in proper proportions from the German companies participating in the pooling arrangement, included in which, as we understand it, is the German Government.

* * * * *

"In any event it is imperative to establish such a fund in this country, as otherwise the whole business would undoubtedly fail, even if we were willing to take a chance, because we are closely watched by English agents, and if it were to become known that we are writing the large liabilities involved in many of the risks expected to mature, information would be lodged with the State Insurance Departments of probably several States, resulting in examinations and probably severe censure, if not an actual closing up of our office on the ground that we were writing liabilities entirely out of proportion to our United States assets."

This communication then concedes a commission of two per cent to be paid the German Government for the funds advanced upon consideration of the great influence of Dr. Albert's office in favor of the Pool.

"* * * not only as respects large and special items, but also as respects the general business of concerns that may be considered as having at least a tendency to be antagonistic to the British Government and its Allies, and consequently would undoubtedly be willing to give preference to well-established German companies. Dr. Albert's office has special facilities for reaching all such concerns, and we expect to be able to make some arrangement that will give us the benefit of this undoubtedly great advantage, for the good of German insurance interests generally as well as yours particularly."

Document 18, being marked "confidential," to Herrmann & Co., for the attention of Robinson, from Albert's office, initialed by Borgemeister, dated November 15, 1915, refers to the necessity of fully covering the S. S. "W," which presumably refers to the American steamer "Wilhelmina," consigned to Bremen, ostensibly by the W. L. Green Commission Company of St. Louis, and actually as a basis for an action instigated by the German Government before the British Prize Court. The letter reads as follows:

"You are fully acquainted with the fact that I have considerable interest in seeing the S. S. 'W' fully covered as regards marine and war insurance. The ship is now in American coastwise trade, and the risk, according to the terms of the pool, would not come under the pool arrangement, but due to the preponderance of the interests which the pool strives to protect, I presume that the assuming of the risk will be satisfactory to the pool.

"I herewith give you my authority to write approximately $50,000 remaining to be covered by marine insurance."

Documents 23 and 43 are confidential memoranda, dated New York, January 12, 1916, apparently prepared at Albert's office, for Mr. Henry E. Cooper, Vice-President of the Equitable Trust Company, with reference to a proposed arrangement in connection with the opening of two new loan accounts which Herrmann & Co. were seeking as managers of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche respectively, the facilities desired being advances up to $400,000 for each Company, on German treasury notes, "to be used only when the demands on the company, due to extraordinary losses, are exceptionally heavy."

Very interesting information with reference to the S. S. "Atlantic," which was to be cleared from New York to Archangel, but was to deviate and attempt to land at a German port or be captured by a German war vessel, appears in a letter from Albert to Herrmann & Co. for the attention of Mr. Robinson, dated New York, February 26, 1916, (Document 24), and which reads as follows:

"I have received your letter of the 25th instant relative to the insurance of the S. S. 'Atlantic.' I herewith confirm my approval of your accepting for the Pool, the insurance of $500,000 agreed upon and as evidenced by the memorandum signed by F. Herrmann and Otto P. Heyn, dated Jan. 6th.

"For your information I desire to state that your letter of the 25th instant reached me through the ordinary mail. Under the present circumstances I should deem it advisable that all mail matters between our offices should be delivered by messenger."

Wade Robinson's second trip to Germany in the interest of the Pool is first indicated by a personal note from Franz Herrmann to Dr. Albert, dated New York, March 9, 1916. (Document 25), reading as follows:

"Referring to Mr. Wade Robinson's visit to Germany, I would deem it a personal favor if you would be kind enough to obtain for him such letter or letters to German officials on the other side as would be likely to facilitate his journey. You will perhaps recall that you secured for him a letter from the German Ambassador at Washington, which was of great benefit to him during his last trip."

Dr. Albert apparently just prior to March 7, 1916, threatened to withdraw from the Chase National Bank and the Mechanics & Metals National Bank the deposits in behalf of the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheim Companies, for on that date Herrmann addresses a very earnest protest (Document 26) to Albert against the withdrawal of such funds, stating that it would be ruinous to the Companies and adding:

"Without doubt the Insurance Department would consider the deposits as not having been made in good faith, and would institute inquiries and examinations, all of which would furnish fertile basis for gossip and calumny, that might even ruin for all time the present splendid reputation of our two German Companies. * * *

"German companies, in common with their Government and all German interests, must not only seek ways and means to avoid the enemy attacks, they must also seek ways and means to retaliate.

"The withdrawal of the deposit referred to at this time would not be defense or retaliation, but abject surrender, and would destroy utterly the principal German element in the marine insurance business in the United States. Such a situation obviously must be avoided."

Pursuant to the plan of securing from pro-German circles marine insurance for the Pool, Albert, under date April 25, 1916, addressed a letter (Document 27) to the following persons:

Herr Pavenstedt, c/o Amsinck & Co., 6 Hanover St.

Dr. J. H. Rossbach, of J. H. Rossbach & Co.

Richard Schuster, of Speyer & Co.

Felix M. Warburg, of Kuehn, Loeb & Co.

Mr. Horwitz, of Hallgarten & Co.

Henry Goldman, of Goldman, Sachs & Co.

Rudolf Erbsloeh, of 42 West 58th St.

Muller-Schall & Co., 45 William St.

Others firms listed for similar letters were:

Fleltman & Co.

Victor & Achelis.

The Bayer Co.

Casella Color Works.

The letter reads as follows:

"With these lines I beg to introduce to you Mr. Paul Wolf, the representative of the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheimer Insurance Companies.

"As is known to you, the German Insurance Companies have formed a syndicate of great insurance power, in order to participate more strongly in marine and war insurances abroad. This syndicate is represented here by the firm of F. Herrmann & Co. and Mr. Paul Wolf is entrusted with the handling of the details.

"I scarcely need to mention how important the support of the German insurance companies by befriended firms is for general German interests, and would from this viewpoint be grateful if you too, as far as possible, would give the German insurance companies the preference."

Mr. Paul Wolf, of the Nord-Deutsche Company, also solicited the placing of marine insurance by German interests in the Pool, by a letter April 5, 1916, to Borgemeister (Document 28), in which Wolf says:

"With reference to our conversation, I should appreciate very much if you would assist us in obtaining the proper introduction to various firms whose business we should like to secure for the German companies.

"At present I have in mind Messrs. Crossman & Sietcken, who have considerable marine and fire insurances to place, and I understand from Mr. Herrmann that you have agreed some time ago on the text of such a letter of introduction. I should be glad to be favored with same and thank you in advance."

Continuing the influence of marine insurance to the German Pool, Albert, under date April 10, 1916, addressed a letter marked "confidential" to Mr. J.

Sorrenson, of the important American firm of Crossman & Sielcken, which had theretofore placed its marine insurance largely with Lloyds. This is Document 28-A, and reads as follows:

"I desire to bring to your attention the increased underwriting capacity of German insurance companies in this market. You may have learned that German underwriters have formed a Pool for taking care of Marine and War Risk Insurance on shipments from this country to Scandinavia, to Holland and to Germany. Before long this Pool will actively compete in all neutral business.

"The German Insurance Pool is represented in this market through the office of F. Herrmann & Co., and the bearer of this letter, Mr. Paul Wolf, is the confidential representative of that office. He desires to discuss with you the business facilities which they have to offer.

"It is needless to mention to you the importance of having the German underwriting capacity exert itself in a more important manner in the American market. I can assure you that I will highly appreciate it, if the result of this letter and Mr. Wolf's visit may lead to your favoring German underwriters with some of your business."

By May, 1916, the German Pool was successfully organized and existing, but at this period Albert, Herrmann and their immediate associates in the German Pool, were apparently confronted with the possibility of a break in the relations between the United States and Germany, and in Document 31, being a memorandum dated May 10, 1916, prepared for and submitted to Albert, presumably by Herman although unsigned, reference is made to the original agreement July 1, 1904, between the Mannheim, the Union Marine Insurance Co. of Liverpool, and the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. of San Francisco; cites the falling off of Mannheim business, due to the war, its transfer to the Fireman's Fund, and its receipt back in the form of re-insurance; mentions the intimate relations between the writer of the memorandum and the firm Herrmann & Co. with the head office of the Fireman's Fund (Levison); and points out the danger of depending upon this arrangement in view of the possible breaking off of diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany, or an actual state of war between these countries.

The memorandum then continues with the suggestion that even in case of war it might be possible to work out a scheme to transfer all Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche business to the Fireman's Fund "with a company of a European neutral country, which in turn could re-insure the business thus received with the Mannheim or the Nord-Deutsche."

It is here suggested, however, for the first time so far as is shown by the evidence at hand, that the method of finding a way out of increased difficulties which the future may bring, must be by the organization of a large so-called American Company, with one million dollars capital and one million dollars surplus, solely for the purpose of helping the two German Companies, and operating secretly under the management of the Pool, and also suggesting that such an American Company could enter into re-insurance treaties in neutral countries.

Document 31 above described reads as follows:

"When the Mannheim Insurance Company on the 1st July, 1904, entered into an agreement with one of the leading English Insurance Companies, the Union Marine Insurance Company of Liverpool, and one of the leading American Companies, the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company of San Francisco, by which agreement a combination was formed of the three companies doing business in the same office and under the same management, the Mannheim Insurance Company brought to this combination the largest amount of business, which fact was recognized by the Mannheim Insurance Company getting a 40% share of the pooled business, the Union Marine getting a 35% share and the Fireman's Fund a 25% share.

"The Mannheim Insurance Company by its intimate connections with a number of substantial brokerage concerns and by its well-established agencies all over the country, succeeded in keeping this position of writing the largest share of direct business until the beginning of the European war. A number of the Mannheim's clients were then forced to ask for a transfer of their policies to an American Company, since the insurance on such cargoes as were shipped to England, France, etc., and also all the English colonies, could not be taken care of in a German company any longer.

"A number of what might be called German firms here who would have preferred to leave their business with the Mannheim were forced to ask for a transfer because, while the bulk of their business was going to neutral countries, part of it went, for instance, to some of the English possessions in the West Indies, on which shipments German insurance was of course impossible.

"At the time of writing this memorandum it must be stated with regret that a substantial part of the business of the Mannheim has already been transferred to the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company. While of course as far as the net results are concerned this makes no difference to the Mannheim Insurance Company, because it gets its share of the business by the way of reinsurance, nevertheless the loss of a substantial part of its direct business is a serious matter to the Company, because, while its relations to the Fireman's Fund at the present moment are most friendly, it is impossible for anybody to predict what the future may bring, and whether conditions may not arise in the future which might be prejudicial to the intimate relations of the two companies existing to-day. In any event, it is the policy of every company—and rightly so—to try to get the bulk of its business direct and not by the way of reinsurance from other companies.

"While conditions up to now, although not satisfactory, were at least not substantially detrimental to the interests of the Mannheim Insurance Company, the breaking off of diplomatic relations between this country and Germany, or an actual state of war between these two countries, would almost surely create conditions which would mean a complete loss of all its direct business to the Mannheim Insurance Company and possibly a loss of all its business, including that at the present time obtained from the Fireman's Fund by the way of reinsurance.

"The breaking off of diplomatic relations would surely mean the discontinuing of all business at present enjoyed by the Mannheim Insurance Company, since the insuring public will feel uncertain as to the status of the company and the status of its funds in the United States; and while, as will appear from the enclosed copy of a letter from our lawyer, Mr. Lawrence Kneeland, there exists absolutely no reason for alarm on the part of the company's policyholders, still a state of war invariably creates a panicky feeling: the company's clients, or at least the majority of them, will not listen to reason, and our competitors will help all they can to fill the ears of the Mannheim's clients with statements prejudicial to the Company.

"Of course in case of war these very same conditions would exist, only in an even worse form.

"The only chance the Mannheim would then have would be to have all of its business transferred to the Fireman's Fund and receive its share from the Fireman's Fund by the way of reinsurance. It is, however, quite possible that the Fireman's Fund, and particularly in case of war, could not reinsure with a German company, so that even this last chance would be lost and the Mannheim Insurance Company would find itself face to face with the complete loss of all its business, acquired by many years of hard work, and in itself its greatest asset which the company has at present.

"The Mannheim Insurance Company, by the outbreak of the war, has lost all of its business in a very large section of Europe and all of its business in the English countries the world over. If it also lost its business in the United States it would surely mean a most serious blow to it.

"All that has been said in the foregoing applies with equal force to the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Company, except of course that the Nord-Deutsche's marine business is not so large as the Mannheim's because it has not been doing marine insurance business in this country for more than three years.

"To illustrate what this loss would mean I quote the Mannheim's net premiums for their fiscal year, July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, $1,569,134.67; and for their current fiscal year from July 1, 1915, to February 29, 1916, $1,000,797.50. In speaking of net premiums I mean gross premiums less return premiums, less reinsurance and less commissions. The gross premiums for the corresponding periods were $3,049,188.09 and $1,857,476.71. The Nord-Deutsche's figures for 1914 were $449,902.30 net and for 1915 $754,484.27 net. Gross premiums for the same periods $707,869.26 and $1,160,189.52.

"These figures should show conclusively the great importance of the American business for the two companies and the seriousness of a complete loss of these premiums to the two companies.

"Possibly, even in case of war, there might still be a possibility for us to work out some scheme by which part of the business may be saved to those two companies, and that is by reinsuring the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company to which company all the Mannheim's and Nord-Deutsche's business would be transferred, with a company of a European neutral country, which in turn could reinsure the business thus received with the Mannheim or the Nord-Deutsche.

"While it is possible that the Fireman's Fund would not object to our making an arrangement of this kind at the beginning of a war, nobody can foretell what their attitude might be if a state of war between the United States and Germany existed for any length of time, and surely nobody can foretell what they might be forced to do by what is called public sentiment.

"We had our experience in this direction with our English companies, that wanted to stay with us just as much as the Fireman's Fund would, but were finally forced, absolutely against their will and wishes, to withdraw from our office.

"In order to find a way out of the existing difficulties and the increased difficulties which the future may have in store for us, it occurred to me that nothing but the organization of an American company can bring relief and a guarantee that the two companies' business will not be lost to them forever. If an American Company was formed solely for the purpose of helping the two German companies, and if that American company was under the management of this office, we could then transfer whenever necessary the business of the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche to that company. We could on behalf of that company enter into reinsurance treaties with insurance companies in neutral countries by which the full benefit of the business written by that company would be preserved for the German companies. There would be a very big difference between such an American company newly formed and an American company like the Fireman's Fund, which is doing a large fire business and must always consider the sentiments on the part of the numerous fire agents, whereas a newly formed American company would have to show no consideration of that kind to anybody.

"What I have in mind at the present moment is solely the protection of the interests of the German Companies, and the effort of finding a way out of the difficulties confronting us now and in the future.

"It might however well be argued that in any event an American company as suggested would be of immense benefit to the German Companies even if all our fears regarding a breaking off of diplomatic relations or war should never realize.

"Surely there is now a prejudice on the part of many Americans against anything German, and this will continue for quite a while after the war. An American company would be able to attract business which would never come to the German Companies, but the results of such business would still be for the benefit of the German Companies.

"Such an American company would also after the war be the means of exchanging business with English companies, which English companies will again control a class of business which will without doubt for years to come after the war be absolutely closed to the German companies.

"I want to repeat, on this point, that of course all these ends can possibly be achieved by the German Companies' intimate relations with the Fireman's Fund. I want to emphasize also the fact that the relations of the writer of this memorandum and the firm of F. Herrmann & Co. with the head office of the Fireman's Fund are the most intimate and friendly. But these facts existing at the present time give by no means an absolute and unqualified guarantee for the future. In any event, it will always be very much easier to re-transfer to the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche such business as circumstances made it necessary to transfer to this new American company under certain conditions that may arise, than it would be to retransfer the same from the Fireman's Fund. The latter Company would surely not look with favor upon our making extreme efforts to re-transfer business to the German Companies, and any attempt on our part to go too far in that direction would most likely lead to friction between our firm and the head office of the Fireman's Fund.

"It is of course impossible to communicate with the head offices of the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche regarding this proposition, but I can see no reason in the world why they should have any cause for criticism, because what is suggested is suggested solely for their benefit. I believe that under existing circumstances they will not and cannot disapprove of our taking action without first obtaining their consent.

"There is one very important point that I have not touched upon in the foregoing, because it does not affect the Mannheim, but solely the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Company. This latter Company is doing a very substantial fire insurance business in this country, in fact started doing fire insurance business several years previous to its starting to do marine business.

"While the difficulties in regard to saving their marine business in case of war are great, they are still greater in the case of their fire business, for the simple reason that they have no company like the Fireman's Fund to take care of their business and to reinsure part or all of it again with the Nord-Deutsche: to the fire branch of the Nord-Deutsche breaking off of diplomatic relations with Germany or war would mean an absolute end to their fire business.

"If an American company was formed as suggested it could be offered for representation at once to all of the Nord-Deutsche's fire agents, and the business written by the Nord-Deutsche's fire agents could as soon as necessary be transferred to the American company. The American company could then, as suggested in regard to its marine business, re-insure its fire business with a foreign neutral company, which in turn could reinsure that business with the Nord-Deutsche, or the American company could retain the business but to the benefit of same to accrue to the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Company.

"In order to make the suggestion a success, it would of course be necessary to form a very substantial company; a company with small capital and assets would not infuse confidence into the insuring public and we could not hope to get the Mannheim's and Nord-Deutsche's consent to have their business, if necessary, transferred to a company of small means. In order to make a success of the proposition it would be necessary, in my opinion, to have a company of one million dollar capital and one million dollar surplus.

"The details as to the formation of the company should be worked out by our lawyer, Mr. Kneeland. The question as to who should appear as shareholders should be solely decided by those that furnish the money, of course after mutual consultation as to the respective merits of the shareholders and trustees suggested.

"In order to create no unnecessary difficulty or friction it would seem to me wise to have the whole scheme or suggestion come from your office. It might well be assumed that the German Companies themselves have come to the conclusion that such an arrangement would be the best for the protection of their interests; and if it was stated to have come from that source surely the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company could make no objection whatsoever and could not see in the step contemplated any effort on our part or on the part of the German Companies to prevent the Fireman's Fund from obtaining its dominant position in this office.

"Surely the Mannheim Insurance Company, that gave this office its start and which contributed to its success more than any other of the companies represented by us, deserves every possible consideration, and no means possible should be left unemployed to not only save the company its business, but its position in this office and in the insurance world in this country. Even now twelve years after the combination of the Mannheim with the American and English companies, our office is referred to by many as the 'Mannheim office'.

The foregoing plan for the creation of an American company appeared to have found immediate favor with Albert, and seven days later, under date May 11, 1916, by a very important memorandum (Document 30) for Albert over the original signature of Borgemeister, details are discussed for the organization of a strong American company to take over the business of the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche in the event of a break between the United States and Germany.

Borgemeister now suggests to Albert that there is sufficient pro-German marine insurance business to be placed in the United States to start such an "American" company from the very beginning with a lucrative business. He specifies that the necessary money can be provided out of the ten million dollar German Treasury Notes at hand, at least two millions of which should be devoted to the new company, and that an initial expense of $25,000 would be sufficient to include "remuneration to certain trusted parties appearing as stockholders but holding stock for us." Dummy stockholders are then suggested, including Messrs. Reisinger, Nagel, McHugh, Wing, Pavenstedt, Ebborn, Horwitz and Chandler.

Document 30 reads as follows:

"Mr. F. Herrmann has handed to me the attached memorandum, and I have requested your careful consideration of the questions enumerated therein. I have permitted myself an advanced study of the contents, the essence of which centre in the question of the organizing of a strong American insurance company. This company is to take over the business of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies should political events make it impossible for them to operate in this market.

"From the attached memorandum it is quite evident that the principal German marine insurance companies operating in this country (the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche) would sustain a serious loss in the event of a political break between this country and Germany. I believe that one may without exaggeration, speak of a great national loss should political events take a turn conducive to the eliminating of the German insurance interests in this one large remaining open neutral market. Especially at this time it would be exceptionally severe, and I believe therefore, that most careful consideration should be given and means should be agreed and acted upon which will strengthen our interests in this market.

"A careful survey of the situation will convince us that aside from conserving for German interests an important asset the result of years of continuous efforts, we will be in a position to provide for German interests an absolutely essential facility in the commercial relations between this continent and Germany. Certainly we would go a long way toward preparing and combating against English arrogance during the war, and especially during the reconstruction period following the war as far as it concerns marine and war insurance. We have felt how complete their control in insurance fields has been established. At this moment the English Government demands from English insurance interests, the discrimination against German firms or even against German names in neutral countries, in the most unheard-of manner. I have seen for instance, that a large Argentine firm with a German name and German connections, cannot continue its trade between Argentine and the United States on account of the difficulty it encounters in securing the necessary insurance. It must be the same in all neutral countries wherever the bulk of insurance is either directly or indirectly placed with English concerns.

"Inasmuch as American insurance facilities are seriously lacking, and as many firms would unquestionably prefer to be able to place at least a part of their insurance with other than English concerns, if a satisfactory and bankable insurance certificate can be obtained, a large American company should be in a position to start from the very beginning with quite a lucrative business. In the acquiring of business we have the great advantage of being able to place such company in the office of F. Herrmann & Company, where recently several English companies have been eliminated, and where a splendid opportunity exists for a large additional American company. In forming such a corporation we might make an advance step in favor of future activities of German companies in this market, especially on behalf of the German company recently organized by the State of Prussia or on behalf of the German Pool.

"The money necessary to form the company should be provided out of the $10,000,000 Imperial German Treasury Notes. I would consider it advisable that at least $2,000,000 should be devoted for that purpose. Inasmuch as the insurance investments must be liquid, the financial risk is practically eliminated. The funds we apply to the establishment of the insurance company are invested in such a manner that the liquidation of the company, if such a liquidation should be decided upon, could be effected without serious loss or inconvenience at any time.

"THE COMPANY COULD BE ESTABLISHED AT A NOMINAL EXPENSE. I BELIEVE THAT $25,000 WOULD FULLY COVER SAME AND WOULD INCLUDE REMUNERATION TO CERTAIN TRUSTED PARTIES APPEARING AS STOCKHOLDERS BUT HOLDING STOCK FOR US.

"WE SHOULD BE ABLE TO PLACE FORMAL OWNERSHIP IN THE HANDS OF IMPORTANT MEN OF AFFAIRS, MEN WHO WOULD MERIT OUR CONFIDENCE AND THE CONFIDENCE OF THE BUSINESS COMMUNITY. I HAVE IN MIND SUCH PARTIES AS:

MR. REISINGER
" NAGEL
" McHUGH
" WING

MR. PAVENSTADT
" EDENBORN
" HORWITZ
" CHANDLER

ET CETERA

"The $2,000,000, except for certain cash balances, would be employed in the purchase of American securities. A large part of the interest which would be incurred by the placing of $2,000,000 Treasury Notes would be recovered by the returns on the investments. A careful selection of securities should preclude losses due to depreciation on the investments. We might consider including therein, Imperial German Dollar Treasury Notes.

"The company should at once be in a position to show excellent results as there is a scarcity of American insurance. Such a company has, in entering the office of F. Herrmann & Co. and in securing at once a large business, an advantage which would immediately reflect in the earnings of the company. Especially during the time immediately after commercial relations with Germany would again become possible, would this company become an important factor and would be capable of rendering excellent services to German interests. There would be a further advantage in so far as the business would not work to the advantage of English companies.

"This office would be in a position to support such a company when large insurance facilities are necessary.

"It should be considered whether or not it would be advisable to have such a company handle besides marine insurance, fire insurance and possibly indemnity insurance. I have heard that certain indemnity insurance is practically impossible to obtain in this market by corporations or firms partly owned by German interests.

"I must repeat that I believe that the organization of an American insurance company to be a most important step for the safeguarding of our interests and as a means to be employed against British interests."

Documents 32, 33 and 34 are relatively unimportant. They are dated May 10, May 16 and June 8 respectively (1916), and are from Wolf to Albert, the first referring to a $40,000 loan from the Chase National Bank of New York on Albert's guaranty, with German Treasury Notes and bonds as security; the second and third seek from Albert, for Wolf, an introduction to the "Lewisohn interests" and to Mr. George Merck, 61 Park Place, for the purpose of influencing insurance business.

Following the foregoing suggestions as to the institution of an American company, Herrmann apparently called upon his attorney, Mr. Lawrence Kneeland of Kneeland, Harison & Hewitt, of New York, for an opinion, which is rendered under date of June 2, 1916 (Document 49) and which outlines the several steps necessary in the formation of a New York corporation to transact the business of fire and marine insurance, advising the necessity of at least $400,000 capital stock and a surplus of at least 50 per cent in addition, and stating that many suitable names have already been appropriated, including "America," "International," "American," "United States," "National," etc., but suggesting "Republic Insurance Company" as fairly indicative of the nationality, which latter clause is rather thinly veiled sarcasm in view of the concluding sentence of the letter: "It is of course possible to use 'dummies' as incorporators and have them resign later."

Document 35, dated July 5, 1916, is a letter from Albert to Herrmann, by which Albert advises that he has appointed F. A. Borgemeister as his Deputy Commissioner in the Pool. The letter reads as follows:

"I shall appreciate it if you will forward to me any additional communications received in connection with the Pool, especially in reference to the terms thereof. In the event that you have not as yet done so, I shall appreciate your notifying the Pool headquarters that the promised report has not as yet been received.

"From the information so far obtained from your office, I conclude that the operation of the Pool is subject to the guidance of a commission of which Mr. Herrmann and myself are members. I further learned that each member has the right to appoint one deputy who will represent him during his absence. I herewith beg to inform you that I have appointed Mr. F. A. Borgemeister as deputy to represent me.

"Kindly acknowledge receipt of this letter."

By a memorandum of July 7, 1916, (Document 44) to Albert, over the original signature of Borgemeister, the latter advises that an arrangement had been made with Mr. Beck of the Hamburg-American Line, to handle the book-keeping of "this office," Mr. Leonhardt, cashier of the Hamburg-American Line, having full knowledge of all accounts and book-keeping, but that:

"... at various intervals it became necessary to close all books and records, put them in safe keeping and to start new books in order to preclude the danger of some of the transactions, especially the 'Wilhelmina' matter, becoming known on the outside.

"Inasmuch as the books were kept in the offices of the Hamburg-American Line and there was a frequent danger of an examination and investigation of the Hamburg-American Line, it was essential to use every possible precaution.

"At one time a list of numbers was devised for all of the accounts for the purpose of preventing their names being shown.

"During the summer of 1915, however, business became too heavy for the parties of the Hamburg-American Line who had been entrusted with the book-keeping affairs of our office, and it was necessary to start a book-keeping department and filing system of our own."

This new book-keeping system probably covered the marine insurance business, although this is not clear.

Document 36 is a letter written by V. Thieme, then at Munich, Germany, now probably residing at Montclair, New Jersey, to Carl Schreiner, President of the Munich ReInsurance Company, which reads in part as follows:

"To the letter of June 14th, containing the very interesting communication relative to the 'Pool Agreement' of the group the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche with respect to wheat, cotton, etc., I would reply that the group of Munich men had participated in the earlier contract to the extent of 20%, but have through the recent reorganization withdrawn, because demands which they thought necessary to make in this connection were refused. * * *

"I believe that for stronger resistance to the boycott by English corporations a second pool might be of some use; therefore I am strongly in sympathy with your plan. I only fear that since the first pool includes the majority of the German corporations and are therefore in the main limited by our Munich group, which for the cover which you would deem necessary would not be available if you yourself could not provide substantial sums for the friendly American companies.

"For wares and hull together we could here cover $5/600,000, and because you speak of one and a half millions you would have to get $900,000 from those companies. If that is possible I will then await your suggestions."

Under date July 24, 1916, Albert wrote Herrmann as follows (Document 46):

"The blacklisting has made it even more essential that we should help whenever possible. We must claim for the Commissioners a certain freedom of action, for we cannot depend on communications with your home office and pool headquarters. * * *

"In the instance of the Gans Line (Charterer's profit insurance) national interest demands that we avail them full protection. Our failure to do so would force them ultimately to follow an ally-friendly attitude. * * *

"To me the situation is quite clear. We must protect, and not by half-hearted, but by full measures."

Under date of July 31, 1916, by Document 38, Borgemeister writes Wade Robinson:

"Mr. Albert returns memorandum which you kindly gave to him for his approval. He found the contents very interesting, and he appreciates the good work you have done in connection with the Pool."

Under date August 3, 1916, (Document 41), Paul Wolf addresses Borgemeister on behalf of the Nord-Deutsche Co., advising of the appointment of the Finance & Realty Company as Fire Agents in New Orleans, and asking Borgemeister for the names of friendly firms in that vicinity to solicit.

This communication was replied to by Borgemeister by Document 57, dated August 4, 1916, which, after acknowledging receipt of Wolf's letter of the 3rd, states:

"One party who would be particularly capable of helping you in your business efforts in New Orleans would be Mr. F. Dietze, Jr., who is Cashier of the Canal Bank & Trust Company of New Orleans. Mr. Dietze was in my office recently when Mr. Robinson called, and I suggested then that he should think of the German insurance companies whenever opportunities arose. Mr. Robinson thought they would be able to reciprocate and turn over to the Canal Bank & Trust Company the deposit which the Mannheim Insurance Company maintains in New Orleans. I am convinced that such a move would assist you considerably in securing desirable business in New Orleans. As far as the bank is concerned, there is none better in New Orleans."

"I am thinking over the names and I will give you a list of same in the near future."

The plans for the formation of an American Company outlined in Documents 27 and 30 above, dated May 10 and 17 respectively, apparently were transmitted by Albert to the Privy Imperial Councillor of Germany at Berlin, although this report of Albert is not discovered in the evidence at hand, but by Document 47 to Albert from the Privy Imperial Councillor, the latter acknowledges receipt of such a report.

Particular attention is invited to the definiteness of references to the impending break with Germany and the consequent necessity of the new so-called American company, and to the reference to the use of the American Scandinavian Company, which concern was just at this time purchasing entrance into the United States under the management of Orr, Herrmann's assistant. The references to the use of "dummy" stockholders, "influential pro-German Americans", with the necessity of maintaining in secret the fact that the deal concerns a German foundation in order to obtain concessions from political influential American officials, are interesting. Paragraph 7 of this document suggests that the "inner condition of the American company" should be regarded not as subsidiary of the German Marine Insurance Bank of 1914, but as a branch of the German Insurance Bank, which is a continuation of the present clearing house of the former Company.

A literal translation of Document 47, which, although of some length, in view of its importance is quoted in full, reads as follows:

"Your memorandum of June 9th, this year, has been handed us for an expression of opinion. In that a few points therein are not sufficiently clear, we would be grateful if you would favor us with an explanation relative to the following questions:

"1. Has the plan recommended by you, the founding of an American Insurance Co. under German control, been discussed in all its details with Mr. Herrmann, the representative of the Mannheimer Insurance Co. and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. there, and is the founding considered by him necessary to the interest of the German Companies represented by him?

As to the question if the founding would be necessary during the war, the Mannheimer Insurance Co. could not give precise decision. It negates, however, the question of necessity until June 30, 1917, since until that time they have legal arrangements with the Firemen's Fund Insurance Co. in San Francisco, that in view of their friendly relations (between their Vice-President and Mr. Herrmann) will without doubt be loyally observed. If, on the other hand, the founding should actually take place, solely from the prospect that the war will last beyond June 30, 1917, this would in such a case be unfavorable for the new company, and especially with consideration of the difficult and expensive concession-conditions in the single American States, which reject the unfavorable fixed rate (valuta) conditions and the firm balance rules which the company would enforce.

"2. According to your arrangement it would not be desired, in case a war or even in case relations between Germany and the United States were broken off, that the Fireman's Fund would retain its relationship with the German insurance companies. According to this one might assume that then, provided relations between Germany and the United States do not grow worse, the Fireman's Fund would desire that the connections with the German Companies be kept intact beyond June 30, 1917.

Is there not also, on the other hand, to be considered that the Fireman's Fund because of her pro-German deportment would be violently antagonized, especially by the industrial transactions, which as war-deliveries to the Entente would have to consider these, would be boycotted, so that they would strive as soon as possible to become released from relationship with the German Companies.

You mention in an addition to notices under head of #2, that after the break of the arrangement with the Fireman's Fund, business for the German Companies can only be secured through the new to-be-founded company, and in fact through inside agreements on the manner of reinsurance through neutral countries. Do you have in mind for this definite neutral countries and definite companies? Do you perhaps have in mind using in the founding, the existing American Scandinavian Co. as a fitting intermediary? In what way do you expect the cooperation of the other German insurance companies in the business to be arranged by the new insurance company? According to our knowledge only the Allianz, the Dresdener, Universal Insurance Co. in Berlin and the Prussian National Insurance Co. of Stettin are in question, as far as German Transport Insurance Companies of N. A. are concerned. You mention at the end of the next paragraph that the whole organization of the firm Herrmann & Co., with Herrmann as General Agent, shall be placed in the service of the new company. Do you think that the organization of the other companies can be drawn into this as well?

"5. If we correctly understand your motion as to the financing the shares shall be taken over by influential pro-German Americans, to whom will be given promissory quotas of two-year German Imperial Treasury Notes to cover their risk.

Could not, through the election of the shareholders, the fact that the deal concerns a German foundation, be kept a secret, at least for the duration of the war, so that there need be no fear of difficulty of concessions on the part of political influential American officials? The Mannheimer Insurance Co. deems the acquisition of concessions as sufficient.

"6. Do you think a capital $2,000,000 will be absolutely requisite?

The Directors of the M. I. Co. believe that $1,000,000 would be requisite and recommended that, because of taxation, to fix the capital at $500,000 and to take up the other $500,000 as reserve (surplus). A larger capital would immediately attract attention to it. The General Director, Mr. Kluge, the counsel for the German Insurance Bank, on the contrary, holds that a capital of $100,000 is sufficient to give the new company the necessary prestige.

"7. So far as the inner condition of the American company is concerned, it would be recommended that the Company should be regarded not as a subsidiary (branch) company of the German Marine Insurance Bank of 1914, but as a branch of the German Insurance Bank. The German Insurance Bank is a continuation of the present clearing house of the German Marine Insurance Co. of 1914, its capital is greater and the organization simpler. It would be easier, for various inside reasons, to effect consolidation of a branch company with it, than with the German Marine Insurance Co. of 1914.

"8. You mention that the necessary capital for the founding of the new company can be effected through the placing of two-year Treasury Notes with the active German Insurance Co. This is according to the view of the directors of the Manneheim Insurance Co. impossible since they do not have for this sufficient capital in America at their disposal and because that on the part of the American board of control, which definitely controls the financial entries, this would not be allowed.

That now these must remain at the disposition of the Mannheimer and the Nord-Deutsche at a designated exclusive repository, because otherwise, owing to the fact that the Pool takes over from you a large sum, which through the American promoted reserves could not be placed with them.

We submit to you at this opportunity a copy of this now legal Pool Arrangement, and note herewith respectfully, that in consequence of the radiogram recently received here, which at the bottom of page 3 mentioned the sum of M. 1,125,000 for Kasko-Insurance—further increased by the sum of $500,000.

This $500,000 does not, however, go to the account of the Pool—the other is shared by the German Insurance Bank as well as the German Insurance Co.—but for the account of the German Insurance Bank, which in turn shares the business with the Munich Reinsurance Co. We therefore beg to induce the firm Herrmann & Co. to place to a special account the sum of $500,000 and to charge regularly the individual accounts in question as soon as possible to the German Insurance Bank, so that this bank can in turn make the necessary deliveries to the Munich Reinsurance Co."

A. Schumacher & Co., Baltimore, Md., are directed by Albert, by the latter's letter of August 5, 1916. (Document 54), to Schumacher for attention of Paul Hilken, with reference to the placing of Schumacher's insurance, as follows:

"For your information I desire to state that the Pool issues its certificates through the Manneheim Insurance Co. and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. Both are represented in this market and maintain considerable United States assets. In cases where it is desirable that a policy of a strictly American concern should be obtained, the policies of the San Francisco Fireman's Fund are issued, the latter reinsuring with the German Insurance Pool. Insurance for hull and cargo up to $1,250,000 are obtainable at the Pool without further reference to the Home Office in Germany.

"It might interest you to know that the forty tons of rubber for which you were kind enough to reserve space on the next outgoing U-boat, have been insured by this Pool at the rate of 3-1/2% per annum, war and marine. It may also interest you to learn that the organization of the Pool was the result of recommendations from this office, and it is needless to say that in these days of blacklisting, is rendering considerable important services to German interests.

"This office and the office of F. Herrmann & Co. are the United States representatives of the Pool. I will take pleasure in assisting in any insurance matters you might be confronted with, and will be glad to see you using the Pool facilities."

By Document 55, Borgemeister requests Herrmann & Co. to write the Chase National Bank as follows:

"Through the office of H. F. Albert, there will be deposited with you on September 1st, $500,000 Imperial Treasury Bonds of the German Empire, maturing September 1, 1918.

"Will you please accept these securities and release against the delivery of same, the $500,000 Imperial Treasury Bonds of the German Empire, maturing September 1, 1916, now on deposit with you for our account.

"Kindly receipt acknowledge receipt of this letter."

A letter dated August 22, 1916, (Document 76) from Albert's office, initiated by Borgemeister, to Mr. A. G. Hays, of the firm of Hays, Kauffman & Lindheim, Attorneys, transmitting a clipping which apparently had reference to the insurance controversy between the alleged German-owned American steamers comprising the American Transatlantic Line (the Wagner fleet), contains the statement that "the un-American attitude of the Bureau of War Risk would receive some effective publicity", and advises that Albert, or Borgemeister, has spoken again to "Mr. M." * * * of this matter.

Document 76-A is a very important memorandum, dated New York, August 31, 1916, entitled "In relation to the Insurance Pool," submitted by Albert to Bernstorff or the German Government directly, but which document is unsigned and which testifies to the assistance rendered by Stallforth & Co. to the Pool. An interesting detail of the report is the statement by Albert that, to provide emergency funds for the German Insurance Pool, he has made a secret agreement with several large New York banks, the Corn Exchange and the Mechanics & Metals National, so that the firm of Herrmann & Co., in case of necessity would be granted short term credits. The relations with the Firemen's Fund are reviewed, and Albert in this memorandum again urges the founding of an American insurance company to be secretly controlled by German interests.

The translation from the German of Albert's file copy reads as follows:

"Even if the advertising of the English 'Black List' substantially only results in making public a really existing condition, the publicity has once more led to the discussion of various steps for protection. The most important and effective measures are possible in the insurance line. According to the rules, it is only possible to obtain war insurance on shipments after the marine insurance is covered. The American National Insurance Bureau expressly makes this a preliminary condition. Only upon the basis of the insurance documents will the banks allow the necessary credits. The blacklisted firms have experienced great difficulties already mentioned in previous reports, of covering marine insurance, because the English companies are forbidden to accept the insurance and because the American and other neutral companies in so far as they are not controlled directly by the English, mostly take the same viewpoint, in order that they are not in danger of themselves being placed upon the blacklist.

"This difficulty, the covering of marine insurance, works indirectly with the providing for shipping space for a shipment. American and other neutral shipping companies obtain from the English, marine insurance on 'hull,' that is for the ship only, when they pledge themselves to accept shipments from firms who are not on the blacklist. Thereby shipments to neutral countries, to the extent that German Insurance Companies are not in a position to get hold of them, are entirely subjected to English control. As a particularly interesting example, I might mention that the U. S. Lloyd has given notice of the cancellation and return of the premium on the insurance for the tug 'Timmins' whose services rendered to the submarine 'Deutschland' may well be known.

"Under these circumstances the founding of the Insurance Pool—this was naturally immediately assisted by the case of the tug 'Timmins'—has proved to be an especially fortunate measure, entirely leaving out of the question the possible support and extension of so important a branch of business as the insurance organization which would result from same.

"The extended arrangements (in concordance with your Excellency's information over the wire) were taken advantage of by various steamship lines—as for example the Gans Line, and the Wagner Line, who were engaged in neutral commerce as well as with Europe (Spain and South and Central America).

"The firm F. Herrmann & Co. is, with my assistance, regularly and actively engaged in calling attention to the advantages of the Pool in pro-German and neutral business circles. All the firms placed on the black list by England are visited by representatives of the firm and have given in part their in-ance business over to the Pool. In this way the Insurance Pool renders useless most of the measures taken by England at sea and in the war insurance market against pro-German firms in the United States. Steps are also being taken to make possible to firms in South and Central America to arrange insurance on their shipments with the Pool. Since the working of this territory by the firm F. Herrmann & Co. is out of the question, an insurance department for this purpose was added to the firm, F. Stallforth & Co. Inc., New York, with whom I have a certain influence. The agency F. Herrmann & Co. is, in view of the limitation of their business facilities, not in a position to take care of insurance business in South and Central America. On the other hand, the most of the agents of German insurance companies in South America represent also English insurance companies along with the German, and are thus placed in a difficult position in their representation of the German interests. So, among others, the agent of the Mannheimer Insurance Co. has given up the agency for Brazil, so as not to further excite the enmity of the English. Of further importance is the fact that the postal and telegraphic connections between South and Central America and Germany are almost entirely severed, so that news and reports from the agents, through which they might oppose the situation created by English measures, scarcely reach headquarters. Right here is where the firm F. Stallforth & Co. comes in, because they call the attention of South and Central American firms to the benefits of the Pool and take over the arrangements for the insurances, inasmuch as it is impossible for the above-mentioned firms to cover the insurance through the agent in their own locality. Together with this, efforts are being made to get in touch with the hitherto existing agents of the German insurance companies in South and Central America, and to call their attention to the insurance possibilities offered by the Insurance Pool.

"How important the extension of the Pool to South and Central America is, is shown by enclosure #1, which deals with the exportation of La Plata wool to the United States. In consequence of the restriction on trade in Australian and Cape wool against German interests, La Plata wool, if not entirely, is to the greatest part shipped to New York. This Argentine wool export is almost entirely in the hands of German or pro-German firms. In view of that, I have, by radiogram according to copy (enclosure #2), suggested the extension of insurance to the maximum amount admissible under the Pool conditions on such shipments on neutral sailers—for wares and ship. Sailers are especially adaptable for this trade, for the reason that coal supplies in Buenos Aires are very expensive ($40 per ton) and besides because of English activities it is almost impossible to procure same for pro-German navigation.

"Because of the heavy demands made on the Pool adequate financial arrangements had to be made. Necessary funds should be placed at disposal in case of any large losses. I therefore have made a secret agreement with several large New York banks, the Corn Exchange and the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, so that the firm F. Herrmann & Co. in case of necessity would be allowed short-term credits. Naturally a permanent strengthening of the financial position of the Pool is being produced by the incoming premiums, which are deposited by us in banks friendly toward us. The business has proved itself successful. Losses worthy of mention have not as yet been sustained.

"I may again call attention to the fact that the Fireman's Fund in San Francisco, an American insurance company, has realized significant profit through its connection with the Pool and the firm F. Herrmann & Co. In my report of June 6, 1916, I set forth how important, according to my opinion, the founding of an American insurance company controlled by German interests, would be. I wish hereby once more to urge (commend) the founding of such an organization. It is not out of the question that the Fireman's Fund, which displays in its personnel strong pro-Ally interests, would finally, through the English influence, be moved or forced to discontinue its business relations with the firm F. Herrmann & Co. It must also be taken into consideration that the Fireman's Fund is principally a Fire insurance company and is only secondarily interested in marine insurance, in spite of the fact that as a result of its connection with the Pool the latter was very profitable. The possibility of difficulties which might result to the German companies and to the Pool through a severance of business relations with the Fireman's Fund, could be overcome by the founding of an American company. Besides this, such a company would be able to turn to good use the depression which is prevalent in wide American circles on account of the English arbitrary measures—Black List and others of the same nature. The psychological moment would have then arrived for the founding of such a company.

"Radiogram #235 stated only indirectly the expansion of the Pool, as communicated to me by Mr. Robinson up to this time. I may therefore assume that also the further instructions by Mr. Robinson, according to which after July 1, 1916, the entire ocean business of the Mannheimer and Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies would be taken care of through the Pool, whereby these two companies take over only their part in the Pool, are applicable. Officially, the details have not been communicated to me. If the order in question has not been sent, I would suggest that in order to hasten same, it be sent by code through the Central Purchasing Co. or through Mr. Gallenbeck. I have nevertheless, upon the basis of the aforementioned communications—which have been summarized in enclosure #3 in their substantial provisions—acted upon the basis of the general confirmation of the abovementioned radiogram, reorganized my control over the insurances accordingly. During the time when from the first of July bordereaux were daily submitted, from which the particular insurances were apparent and could be tested, the business through the extension of the Pool has been so enlarged that a consideration of the particular risk on my part is no longer possible. In consequence of this, I carry out, with the firm of F. Herrmann & Co., the control in such a way that Mr. Borgemeister, who specially determines these questions and who has had an unusual experience and expert knowledge of the regulations of the insurance body, gets into touch daily with Herrmann & Co., discusses questions that arise, and, if necessary, calls in my cooperation. The financial part is entirely given over to his supervision. Enclosure #4 contains the code for the first business month of the Pool under the new conditions."

In a memorandum dated Berlin, 74 Wilhemstrasse, September 19, 1916, (Document 76-B), from the office of the State Secretary of the Interior at Berlin (II. 5714), Herr Richter reports to Albert a conference of interested parties and experts with reference to the proposed exploitation of the German marine insurance field in the United States, and that an overwhelming decision was made in favor of same. This report also contains the interesting information that the conference at Berlin was attended by Mr. Walter Kauffman of New York, member of the law firm of Hays, Kauffman & Lindheim. As a matter of fact, the record in the Rumely case discloses that Mr. Walter Kauffman was actually in Germany at this time, in connection, among other things, with the alleged conference with Sielcken regarding the pretended participation of the latter in the purchase of the NEW YORK EVENING MAIL through Rumely.

Richter's report reads as follows:

"The propositions made by you in the memorandum of June 9, 1916, and which I received on July 17th, have been analyzed here under consultation of interested parties and experts, and an overwhelming decision made in favor of same. Mr. Walter Kauffman of New York also participated in the last discussion.

"Since the cooperation of the firm F. Herrmann & Co. constitutes a substantial part of this plan, I cannot conceive of its execution without the approval of the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheim Insurance Companies. Both companies might then be agreed, if they would receive from Mr. Herrmann (with whom Director Post of the Mannheim Insurance Company has been in communication by letter) reassuring explanations, and would convince themselves that Herrmann sanctions the plan and does not intend any substantial encroachment upon the individual business of both companies. The letter from Post left here on the merchant submarine 'Bremen', and will also be discussed on the arrival of this letter. The Directors Post and Duncker have requested that they be favored with an immediate reply. By the above-mentioned opportunity the Board of Directors of the German Insurance Bank Ltd. directed a letter to your Honor, in which various inquiries are made. It is also desired that a reply to this letter be made before a final decision is made.

"To the formulated plan contained in the letter (in code 7) from the Insurance Bank, that the organization to be founded should be a branch of the bank rather than of the German Marine Insurance Co. of 1914. I wish to give my consent. Thereby it would be accomplished, that reinsurance would be procured through other enterprises (firms) than through the German Marine Insurance Co. of 1914 and the companies belonging to the present Pool."

A memorandum dated October 2, 1916, (Document 81), to Wade Robinson of Herrmann & Co., presumably from Albert, recommends that the facilities of the Pool be granted to two Spanish steamers owned by Jova Y Costas, as they would thereby be useful to the German interests.

A memorandum of November 3, 1916, (Document 73) to Albert, bearing the signature of Borgemeister, notes the fact that the Pool assets and facilities are sufficient that it is now able to take a one million dollar cargo risk on any steamer, and suggests the Pool insure specie shipments. Across the face of this memorandum, in Albert's handwriting, appears the following:

"Agreed, but with the condition that this is not a general consent, but that the matter must be taken up with me in every individual case, and that in general specie has to be insured under the facilities of the individual firms.

(Signed) Albert."

Under date of November 8, 1916, Franz Herrmann prepares still another memorandum (Document 48) as a tentative reply to a letter from Germany August 8, 1916, which latter communication is not at hand. In this communication Herrmann again strongly urges the immediate formation of a so-called American company, to be financed to the extent of $2,000,000, $750,000 of which is to be capital and $1,250,000 surplus, the new American company to take care of the business of the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche "when the necessity of circumstances makes it impossible for these Companies to continue their business." This memorandum is transmitted by Herrmann over the latter's signature, to Albert, by letter November 8, 1916, which letter follows the memorandum herein:

"Ad #1. The plan to found an American Company under German control has not only been thoroughly discussed with me and is not only approved by me, but the thought originated with me. The necessity for founding such a company can be considered from three points of view. The most obvious point of view which makes such a new company an absolute necessity in the interests of the German Companies represented in our office is the possibility of war or severance of diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany. In fact the thought of founding an American company in the way suggested came to me at the time when conditions seemed to be very critical, and when very numerous agents and assured of ours commenced to inquire what would and could be done with the Mannheim's and/ or Nord-Deutsche's business in case of actual war or serious political differences between this country and ours.

"The second point of view is that, leaving aside the question of possible war or serious political complications, at least during the duration of the war the German Companies have a very hard time to retain their old and get on their books new business even from their well-wishers, since on account of the English measures (blacklist etc.) they are debarred from using the policies and/ or certificates of German Companies on all such shipments; likewise bankers at times refuse to accept German insurance policies and certificates, and we cannot always ask our clients to re-arrange their banking arrangements.

"It was therefore necessary right along to give the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company a great deal of the business heretofore held by the Mannheim Insurance Co. and/or the Nord-Deutsche or new business which would have come to one of those companies under normal conditions.

"The third point of view is the benefit which an American company will have for our German Companies under any and all circumstances during and after the war, and that is that it will be in a position to take care of American business which would not naturally go to our German Companies, but would in fact be lost to them since there is no denying the fact that quite a number of American shippers are asking and will continue to ask for American policies, and since there is further no denying the fact that a certain number of Americans are so decidedly pro-Ally in their sentiments that they will not give business to German companies.

"From these three points of view the founding of a company as suggested does not only appear very highly desirable, but in case of war or serious friction practically a necessity, as in the case of war even the Fireman's Fund could not continue its present reinsurance arrangements with the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche.

"Ad #2. I reply to the Third paragraph of Subdivision #1 and to Subdivision #2 as under Ad #2 because these two paragraphs really belong together, dealing with the Fireman's Fund.

"The Mannheim Insurance Co. is not correct in assuming that our present deal with the Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. cannot be terminated before the 1st June, 1917. When the Union Marine Insurance Company of Liverpool withdrew from the formal agreement in the Fall of last year, the same was ipso facto to an end. It was never renewed in a formal way, but is at the present time what might be termed "a gentleman's agreement" between Mr. Levison and the writer. But whether there were a formal agreement or not would have no bearing in case of actual war because that would ipso facto terminate it.

"It is very true that the present relations between Mr. Levison, Vice-President of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, and the writer are of the most intimate and cordial personal character, but it is also true that Mr. Levison will and must look at business matters not from a personal and sentimental point of view, but from a strictly business point of view and will always take such steps as in his judgment will serve the interests of his Company best.

"Ad #6. I most decidedly claim that the total funds of the Company should be two million, not its capital but its capital and surplus. I would suggest that the capital be made $750,000 and the surplus $1,250,000. It is the surplus of companies that is particularly taken into consideration by the insuring public on this side, and the larger that surplus the more confidence the insuring public have in the company.

"The capital according to the laws of various of the States of the United States must remain unimpaired at all times, and comes only into play in case of a company being impaired and thereby losing its right to carry on business.

"In these days where the biggest fire insurance companies in the United States have gone and are going one by one into the Marine Insurance business only well founded companies have a chance of success.

"Ad #7. The proposition contained therein is entirely satisfactory to me ~~and would, as I can see it, do away with the subscribing of capital of a number of German Insurance Companies.~~

"Ad #8. There is no legal obstacle in the way of investing such funds of the German Insurance Companies as are in excess of legal requirements, that is funds which we have accumulated since the war commenced and which we would have remitted if we were not debarred by a ruling of the Insurance Department of the State of New York so to do, and these funds have now, particularly in the case of the Mannheim, reached quite considerable proportions and it would seem to me possible that between the two companies we could probably buy $700,000 to $800,000 of Schatzscheinen. We have heretofore refrained from investing more than $250,000 of our available funds in these securities because we felt that in view of the distrust largely held by American bankers and American business men of any German securities it would be unwise to show in our annual statements large amounts thus invested. But in view of the radiogram received from the Nord-Deutsche recently asking us to remit all available funds, or in case of this not being possible, to guard against confiscation, I came to the conclusion that, although we believe there is but barely the remotest kind of a chance of confiscation, we might guard against that danger by investing all funds not actually needed to meet legal requirements in those Schatzscheinen, because if they were confiscated by the United States Government in case of war they would not be much good to them. Besides, the credit of our office is now so well established, and any kind of doubt on the part of insurance brokers and the insuring public as to our ability to meet even the largest claims so completely removed, that the same danger of prejudicing the companies' standing by investing in those German securities no longer exists as it existed a year ago.

"Furthermore, there would be no necessity for investing this money in Schatzscheinen until after the first of the year, after our annual statements have been rendered to the various Insurance Departments, so that any such investments would not be shown in the next annual report of the Insurance Department anyhow.

"What the condition of affairs will be by the end of 1917 we do not know at present, and I feel we can well afford to cross that bridge when we come to it.

"From anything said under this heading it should not be inferred by anybody that we can do without the special deposit of half a million dollars arranged by your good self. The withdrawal of any funds which we have at our disposal would of course at once prejudice our position.

"Regarding the last two paragraphs of the letter, I have informed Mr. Levison of their contents and told him to take the necessary steps to have the risks in question booked and reported as requested.

"With reference to the letter dated 19th September, I find that in the last paragraph it is suggested that the business of the new company should go on.

other channels than those now comprised in the German Pool. This in my opinion would be wrong. The new American company, as I view it, is supposed to practically take care of the business of the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche when the necessity of circumstances makes it impossible for those companies to continue their business. In addition to that it is supposed to attract business which would not otherwise be likely to come to those companies during or after the war; but that would all be business perfectly fit for the Pool because if it is business which the German Companies would otherwise not get it is not likely to accumulate with such business as is constantly written by those companies and the same Pool could therefore easily take care of it. If the reinsurance was arranged as is suggested in the paragraph of the letter referred to it would mean that the benefit of business written by the new company would be entirely lost even to the Mannheim and the Nord-Deutsche, and with them to all the other members of the Pool. This is surely not the intention and my suggestion therefore is that the business of the new company should go to the same channels as the business now written on behalf of the Pool by the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche.

"In the foregoing I have given you as detailed as possible my views in regard to the points referred to in the letters under reply. The whole matter can be summed up in the few words: "We want to be prepared for any contingency".

"Ad #7. Since dictating the above I had a talk with Mr. Borgemeister in reference to the last two paragraphs of the letter dated August 8th. In the course of this conversation it became gradually clear to me that the German Insurance Bank is not, as I assumed, a financial institution pure and simple, but actually some kind of an Insurance Company. I must therefore reverse by statement, that the contents of paragraph #7 were entirely satisfactory to me, because this in effect would mean that the business written by the new Company would be lost to our German Companies in whole or in part and would of course not be in accordance with our intentions."

Letter of Transmittal.

"DEAR DR. ALBERT: In reply to your favor of the 6th inst., I beg to enclose in the form of a Memorandum my reply to the various points enumerated in a letter dated August 8, 1916.

"It goes without saying that you can use my memorandum in any way you see fit, i. e. add to it, change it, or leave out any part thereof as you please. My main object is solely to put my own views before you.

"I am writing a note to Director Post and to Mr. Duncker just telling them that I am fully in sympathy with the scheme and that I have been consulted by you in regard to it from the beginning."

A letter of November 8, 1916, from Albert's office, initialed by Borgemeister, to Director Bruders of the Deutsche Versicherungs Bank (Document 72-A), indicates the benefit of pro-German facilities for marine insurance in shipping wool from the Argentine to the United States, so that the property right of "the American owner can hardly be contested", and apparently concealing the real German ownership. The letter reads as follows:

"I am in receipt of your letter of September 20th, relative to the wool insurance on sailers. I have notified F. Herrmann & Co. of your request, and the amounts in excess of the Pool limit will be accounted for by them to the Deutsche Versicherungsbank. In the same banner the business written under the special limit of $500,000 hull insurance will be accounted for. I have requested F. Herrmann & Co. to send you a list of such risks, if possible to be forwarded by the U-boat 'Deutschland'. No excesses on sailers for wool cargo have occurred so far. I enclose herewith, for your perusal, a copy of a letter written by F. Herrmann & Co. to the Mannheim Insurance Co. which deals with the $500 000 extra hull line.

"With regard to your postscriptum relative to war risk insurance to be written 'free of capture,' I desire to state that such insurance would not be acceptable to the assured. I desire to mention, however, that the shipments of wool from Argentine to the United States are financed and consigned in such a manner that the property right of an American owner can hardly be contested. To this may be added the fact that the sailing vessels which would come under consideration for such wool shipments, would practically all sail under flag. The assured would at all times prefer a policy written by the American Bureau of War Risk, which affords them better protection. If part of the insurance is covered by a policy from F. Herrmann & Co., that firm will always require, at least for part of the risk, the American Government as co-insurer, which naturally improves the risk to a considerable extent. The facility we requested in my cablegram was principally for marine insurance.

"I note from your letter of August 8th, of which I have received a copy by the U-boat 'Deutschland,' the original having been sent by the U-boat 'Bremen,' that you had forwarded a copy of the Pool Agreement by the U-boat 'Bremen.' It is needless to say that the copy has not been received, and your kind sending of another copy will be highly appreciated.

"The principal subject of your letter of August 8th will be replied to in a separate letter.

"P. S. Correspondence in English is due to limited time."

Document 112 is a communication from the Imperial German Consul at Porto Alegre, Brazil, to the German Embassy at Washington, acknowledging Embassy letter of September 22, 1916, which was apparently a communication directing the placing of marine insurance with the German Pool, stating that the contents of the German Embassy letter have been confidentially given to local persons interested, and that the Consul has been requested by such persons "to secure information as to whether a similar arrangement exists for fire insurances with reference to the fact that several local German firms are always still forced to insure with English companies, because the German companies represented here do not wish to run the whole risk on account of the high insurance."

Document 50, being a letter from Albert, dated New York, November 10, 1916, to the German Insurance Bank, Berlin, is interesting, both as acknowledging receipt of the letter of August 8th from Berlin in reference to the Insurance Pool above referred to, and also because, so far as I know, it is the first semi-official acknowledgment of the sinking of the "Bremen." Albert's letter reads as follows:

"Your favor of August 8, 1916, with questions contained relative to the founding of an American Insurance Corporation, I have received in copy. The original, unfortunately, went down with the 'Bremen.'

"At the same time I have, by writ of the State Secretary, been requested to give an opinion in the matter. In view of the fact that I, because of the brief presence of the 'Deutschland,' am overburdened with official and business mail, I beg to be permitted to refuse and to ask you to send to the Imperial Office of the Interior for the report sent them, from which will appear in connection with its enclosures all things substantial.

"The over-burdening of my office has made it necessary for me to dictate in English my instructions in connection with the technical special questions of the agreement."

Upon the same date, November 10, 1916, Albert prepared a more elaborate report (Document 50-A) marked "II. 5714, in re Decree of September 19, 1916," to the State Secretary of the Interior at Berlin, commenting upon the misgivings of the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheim Insurance Companies with reference to the entrance into the German marine field by the proposed new American company and consequent expansion through the latter. Here again is the suggestion that the proposed American company must have "a purely American appearance," and that the stock must be taken "a smaller part actually, the balance formally by Americans," 90 per cent of the stock thus to be held by "dummy" stockholders for the benefit of German interests, to be "deposited in safe hands with a confidential man so that the control would be in German hands," and the American company to be conducted as a pretended completely independent concern.

* * * * *

The document reads as follows:

"The decree alluded to has led me to request of the firm F. Herrmann & Co. a detailed statement, which I enclose in original. Your Excellency will note therein that the misgivings of the Nord-Deutsche and the Mannheimer Insurance Co. are unfounded. Not only will the business of these Companies not be jeopardized, but will receive in the proper organization of the American company new possibilities of expansion.

"The memorandum likewise contains the answers to the questions asked by the Deutsche Versicherungsbank in its letter of August 8, 1916. The original of this letter was unfortunately lost on the hapless "Bremen."

"In the suggestion of the establishment of an American company I was naturally influenced, along with consideration of the legitimate interests of both German Insurance Companies, by a general economic viewpoint. There is involved the finding of a way that would make it possible for these Companies to expand even after a possible breach of the relations between Germany and the United States; furthermore, the opposing, through extended insurance possibilities, of the English measures for interfering with German trade, and the extension of the insurance business resulting for German account, after, as well as during the war, and likewise the cooperation in the reconstruction of our overseas trade.

"The advantages of the establishment of an American company during the war would, in view of the statements in the memorandum of the firm F. Herrmann & Co., with which I agree, require no further elaboration. As the possibility of a breach of relations between Germany and the United States is unfortunately not eliminated, but has rather come again into consideration recently through the excitement here over the torpedoing of two American ships and an English passenger ship, a speedy determination is for this reason desirable. For me, however, the possibility of the severance of German-American relations forms only the starting point for the suggestion of the establishment of an American company. The difficulty lies in the extension of the insurance business resulting for German account, after as well as during the war. In this connection I can refer in general to the statements in my memoranda of June 6 and August 31, 1916.

"The German insurance companies seem to overlook the fact that there is involved not only the business in the United States, but the extension of the business to the entire overseas trade. An American company would naturally not be bound to the previous limitation of the business, as it appears in different countries through the competency of the agencies of the German companies. In their business jurisdiction there would rather fall, in addition to the insurance undertaken firms in the United States, also those in the trade between the South and Central American countries, as well as between the east and between South America and other parts of the world. This would result in the new company being able to successfully enter into competition for this business, which according to the correct statements of the firm F. Herrmann & Co. can, for general reasons, be more easily conducted in American than in German channels. This would mean an extraordinary extension of the German business. In harmony with this substantially is the viewpoint that for a long time after the war the German business can be carried on and extended indirectly through American organizations more easily and successfully than from Germany, a viewpoint the consideration of which I can not sufficient impress also on other lines.

"II. I take the liberty of amplifying in a few details the statements in the memorandum of the firm F. Herrmann & Co.

"I, too, regard the application of a capital of $2,000,000 as imperatively necessary. If a company newly appearing on the insurance market is to work with success, it must control considerable capital. A small establishment is purposeless, because it would find no confidence. Recently even the large American fire insurance companies are turning to marine insurance business. These companies control extraordinarily large capital, so that even from the standpoint of capacity for competition, the capital of the new company proposed by us cannot be fixed high enough.

"The providing of the money I have thought out in the way of my placing the two-year treasury notes standing at my disposal, with the insurance companies and elsewhere. The opinions that are expressed by the directorate of the Mannheimer Insurance Company as to the possibility of this method of provision, find no support in the legislation here. Furthermore, my efforts have already been accompanied by success to the extent that I have already placed treasury notes in the total amount of $875,000 up to November 1st of this year. Of these $875,000 I have placed in the principal amount at the disposal of the Reichsbank, because, as a result of the delay of a decision on my suggestion, I had assumed that the plan of the establishment of a new company had been abandoned. However, I hope to be able to provide an additional two million dollars in the same way, especially if my effort—as to which I am making a special report—to get the German Insurance Companies operating in the United States to send suitable instructions to the local agencies, is successful. Consequently a remittance from Germany in only a very small amount would be involved, if it should be necessary at all. The considerations as to exchange therefore disappear. Naturally the company would be obliged to reimburse the Imperial Treasury for the interest, the discount of the treasury notes and the costs, which could not altogether exceed six per cent.

"The company must have throughout a purely American appearance. Consequently the shares must all be taken, a smaller part actually, the balance formally, by Americans. I have considered, for the actual undertaking by the American stockholders, about ten per cent. According to that, of a capital of $750,000, $75,000 would be in the hands of the American stockholders, and to the latter would accrue the right to dividends, etc. The balance or principal amount would, it is true, be formally in the name of the stockholders, but would be deposited in safe hands with a confidential man, so that the control would be in German hands. That the American stockholders would be thereby later allow ten per cent on the profits of the company coming in in the course of time—at the beginning they would receive only interest—is a not unreasonable reimbursement for the furnishing of their names under present circumstances. Under the latter consideration still further reimbursements will be involved. I may assume that a free hand will be given me in the cooperation with the firm F. Herrmann & Co. in this respect, especially in all questions as to the organization of the company, as the ultimate determination depends on the course of actual circumstances.

"The company must be established as a formally completely independent company. Especially can there be no connection as far as publicity is concerned. Therefore, special care must be taken in the selection of the founders and of the American stockholders. It necessarily follows that the actual existing connection should be treated to the utmost degree confidentially even in Germany, and that therefore the exercise of the rights arising from the possession of ninety per cent of the stock can be made only through one company. That this should take place, and in fact exclusively, through the Deutsche Versicherungsbank Ltd. and that all negotiations before and after the establishment should take place between these companies as well as myself and the firm F. Herrmann & Co., seems to me also advisable.

"The circumstance, in accordance with this, so shapes itself that a new purely American sea-insurance company appears on the local market and turns its representation over to the firm F. Herrmann & Co. The latter had, before the war, represented German, English and American Companies. After the outbreak of the war it naturally gave up the representation of English Companies. The firm will turn over all insurance business to the companies represented by it, preserving the interests of the old companies. As soon as a German or American policies become necessary—I am conceiving first the case of the continuance of friendly relations between Germany and the United States—the newly established company will issue its own policy and give the old companies a suitable share through reinsurance, or it will receive, in a policy issued by the German Companies, a proper share in the way of reinsurance. Detailed provisions as to this division are impossible under the conditions of affairs. Above all, the firm F. Herrmann & Co. must receive a free hand. There are no objections to this, because, for one thing, the head of the firm, Mr. F. Herrmann, is an especially trustworthy, right-thinking individual, and because, on the other hand, during the war a control would be exerted through me, later in another way. According to this both German Companies, namely, the Mannheimer and the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies will continue to receive their old business to the full extent. In addition to the American insurance company already standing in agreement with these companies, the Fireman's Fund, will still participate on the basis of the agreement with the German Companies. Of the new business the new company will receive a part immediately, another part mediately through reinsurance of the insurances undertaken by the three old companies, which would furthermore in many cases share with the new company the old established business now possible of further expansion through the entry of the new company.

"The agencies of the other German insurance companies already operating in the United States can, during the war, be left out of consideration for reasons submitted by Mr. Herrmann. In any case, according to the state of affairs, only one firm can assume the representation of the new company. In addition of other representatives, altogether aside from the above-mentioned viewpoint, would be an impossibility and lead to friction. It is likewise imperatively necessary that on the other hand, in Germany, only one company, namely, the Deutsche Versicherungsbank, should take part in control. How the Deutsche Versicherungsbank for its part passes the business on through reinsurance in blank, must be left to it.

"In case of war the whole business, which would be entirely lost to Germany without the establishment of the new company, would be transferred to the latter, which would in turn reinsure, indirectly through neutrals, with German companies. In that case then there must be given to the Mannheimer and to the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co. a proportionate share, to be determined over there, of the reinsurance.

"The question as to which neutral insurance companies are to be used in case of war for a reinsurance of the policies issued by the newly established American company, must be answered by the Deutsche Versicherungsbank over there. Whether the Scandinavian-American Company, against which no objections are to be raised here, is to be considered for this, I cannot tell.

"After the end of the war a final adjustment of the conditions could be undertaken."

Still another memorandum over the original signature of Borgemeister, for Albert, relative to the Insurance Pool, dated New York, November 22, 1916, is Document 84.

This memorandum refers to a meeting of the members of the firm of Herrmann & Co. and their attorney, Mr. Kneeland, to study the financial arrangements of the Pool, in view of the large lines requested for South America, and to express views as to the financing of the proposed American company "and the preparations so far made", as a result of which study it was determined that the finances of the Mannheim and Nord-Deutsche Companies, underwriting the Pool, are just about adequate for the lines of the Pool as at that time constituted, the Pool then being able to underwrite on one steamer and cargo $1,750,000.

The memorandum then agrees that the Companies are at present "skating on decidedly thin ice", recites the necessity for adequate financial strengthening, and that Borgemeister proposed to Albert to place at the disposal of the two Companies an additional security deposit of one-half million dollars each. At the same time Borgemeister promises to overcome the disadvantages of the limited market in Imperial German Treasury Notes "by arranging in the two banks the security deposit in such a manner that F. Herrmann & Co. would be in a position to call at such banks for a cash credit of 80 per cent of the security deposit, the idea being to call for the cash when a substantial loss necessitated large cash resources, and to refer the Insurance Examiner to the bank in the event he should question the liquidity of the security. Mr. Kneeland was of the opinion that a tentative credit would hardly suffice."

The memorandum states further:

"It must be expected that the entire limit will be used fairly regularly on ships and cargoes of the Wagner Line. * * *

"I wonder therefore, whether Mr. Herrmann had sufficiently considered this side of the question when he offered the assistance of between $700,000 and $800,000 for the financing of the new company. The financing and the organizing of the new company must be done on fairly broad and liberal lines to the prospective investors, and a number of the parties interested in the organization of the company, such as blacklisted firms and steamship concerns, and probably one or the other of our private bankers here, must be called upon to help us in the establishing of same."

Several interesting memoranda are attached to the foregoing, including the following:

"Members of the Firm of F. Herrmann & Co. and their Nationality:

Franz Herrmann	German	Joseph S. Wall	Canadian
Orton G. Orr	German	Wade Robinson	American
Charles E. Dean	English	Frank H. Osborn	American

"Insurance Companies having as United States Managers, F. Herrmann & Co.:

Mannheim Insurance Company.
 Nord-Deutsche Insurance Company.
 Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, Atlantic Marine Department.
 Scandinavian American Assurance Corporation, Limited, of Christiania, Norway.

A financial statement of the Nord-Deutsche and Mannheim Insurance Companies, United States branches, as of November 22, 1916, is also attached, which shows:

For the Nord-Deutsche Co.:

Total Assets, with "Securities, including Special Asset of $500,000 in German Government Bonds" $1,249,324.08---- $1,934,449.80

For the Mannheim Co.:

Total Assets, with "Securities, including Special Assets of $500,000 in German Government Bonds" $2,039,200.94----- $3, 112,648.76

Document 109 is a letter dated New York, November 25, 1916, from Albert to H. W. Letton, of the Prussian National Insurance Co. of Stettin, Chicago, Illinois, giving facts with reference to an issue of $5,000,000 German Treasury Bonds payable September 1, 1918, and stating:

"Approximately one million dollars of the issue have been sold to companies similar to yours: the Munich Re Insurance Co., the Nord-Deutsche Insurance Co., the Mannheimer Insurance Co., the Hamburg Assurance Co., and others.

"The bonds have not been offered for public subscription.

"The remainder of the bonds are in our portfolio, part of them having been used from time to time for collateral purposes to finance the local currency requirements of the Imperial German Government.

"I have instructed the Central Trust Co. to hold at your disposal up to $200,000 of these bonds."

A radiogram dated New York, November 25, 1916, (Document 86), from Albert to Dr. Bruders at Berlin, reads:

"Enlarging of present cargo insurance neutral steamers South American and United States both directions by one million dollars essential for maintenance of blacklisted concerns South America. Principal cargo in question wool and hides. Wagner contemplates inaugurating regular service. Herrmann states business very desirable and suggests underwriting and reporting of additional line in same manner as present Pool business. Notify Dr. Bruders."

Upon December 15, 1916, Albert, apparently anticipating a favorable reply to the foregoing, by radiogram of the latter date to the Secretary of the Interior at Berlin, (Document 87), advises:

"Anticipating favorable reply to Radio No. 516 have authorized companies writing additional one million dollars marine and war insurance. In interest of blacklisted firms essential that line for marine and war insurance cargoes mentioned radio 516 be increased to three million dollars with authorization to write in special cases up to four million dollars as prices of goods have immensely increased. War insurance written only if coinsurance governmental department. Business strongly recommended by Pool agent."

A radiogram from Albert to the Secretary of the Interior at Berlin, dated November 25, 1916, (Document 62), again indicates the use of the German Pool in fighting the British Blacklist:

"American Shipping concern considers inaugurating regular service between South America and United States for blacklisted firms provided insurance question satisfactorily settled. In interest of maintenance of blacklisted concerns urgently recommend enlarging of present cargo insurance neutral steamers both directions by one million dollars. Principal cargoes in question wool and hides. Herrmann states business desirable suggests underwriting and reporting additional line in same manner as present pool business. Notify Bruders."

Albert, in a letter to Herrmann & Co., dated New York, November 27, 1916, (Document 61), refers to the above wireless for an increase for cargo line to and from South America, as follows:

"I have today recommended by wireless an increase of the cargo line to and from South America of $1,000,000. I enclose a copy of the wireless.

"From our conversation of last Friday, I gained the impression that the additional $1,000,000 line will not require further financial assistance on your part. Will you please state to me that I am correct in this.

"There is a possibility of my being able to place with or through the representatives of the firm of Staudt & Company of Boston and Buenos Ayres, Mr. Richard Wagner, the President of the American Transatlantic Line, an amount of $1,000,000 Imperial German Treasury Bonds. I have intimated to them that I desire these funds in order to strengthen the insurance capacity of the Pool, in which, by the nature of their business, they are vitally interested. I intend to accept these funds without any conditions as to how they are applied to further the insurance power.

"The $1,000,000 would of course assist very much in our financing the contemplated American Corporation, in such manner as we most desire.

"Do you still feel that either parties under such an arrangement might feel entitled to special considerations in the way of insurance on account of their financial assistance? You mentioned such a possibility as an undesirable feature in interesting large shippers or steamship owners, if they would buy taken shares or helped to finance the company directly."

A letter from Herrmann & Co. to Albert, dated New York, November 29, 1916 (Document 52-A), states that current funds of the German Insurance Companies, if invested in German Treasury Notes, might necessitate calling upon Albert for financial assistance to liquidate a possible extraordinarily large loss, and welcomes the realization of an opportunity to sell to "certain firms named in your letter" German Treasury Notes "to facilitate the financing of the prospective American company."

The following memorandum for Albert from Borgemeister, dated November 29, 1916, (Document 75), relates to war risk insurance on the S. S. "Bjornsen," chartered by the Swiss Government from the Gans Steamship Line, to take a cargo of grain for the Swiss Government to the French port Cette, for trans-shipment to Switzerland * * *

"Herrmann feels that he does not want to bind the Pool for this risk, in view of the active torpedoing during recent weeks. He states that to the submarine commander, the cargo would appear as for a French destination. He realizes, however, the necessity of our protecting such shipowners who are not willing to adhere to the regulations of the British Admiralty, and that the risk might be written for political reasons. If this office considers the political reasons of sufficient importance he will write the risk, but desires such a statement from our office."

A memorandum for Albert from Borgemeister, dated November 29, 1916, (Document 71), quotes Herrmann as reporting that he is swamped with letters from Central and South America, as a result of the circular letter sent to the Embassies in connection with insurance matters; urges that the matter be carried further; and states that further business between South and Central American countries and other neutral countries in Europe and the Far East will be offered, and for this business desires a special authorization from Albert. Herrmann is reported as being "heartily in accord with our efforts and considers them absolutely essential. He has engaged Mr. Paul Wolf to attend to this business and to deal with us in connection with same."

A typewritten memorandum (Document 107), dated New York, December 4, 1916, over the original signature of Albert and bearing notes in Albert's handwriting reading:

"Mr. Heynen O. K.
Mr. Borgemeister O. K.
Agreed? 4/12."

refers to a conference with Herrmann, Carl Heynen and Borgemeister. The conference, according to this memorandum, related to the eventualities that might arise by the inadvertent torpedoing, by German submarines, of neutral vessels. The advantage of insuring neutral ships destined to neutral countries is set forth, for, in the case of the sinking of such a vessel by a German submarine and consequent claim against the German Government, if such claim were finally allowed, the reimbursement would automatically pass to the insurance company, and therefore the advantage of such reimbursement passing, not to citizens of strange countries, but to citizens of Germany, is noted:

"The authoritative viewpoint why war insurance must be accepted by us, is because it deals with ships which are on the black list, and for that reason shipper as well as the owner of the vessel cannot obtain war insurance either from the English or American corporations. * * * There exists, however, on the German side, an acute interest that no further tonnage be supplied to the Allies. * * *

"We would also lose the possibility of keeping in existence the German firms which are on the blacklist."

A letter from Herrmann & Co. to Albert, dated December 5, 1916 (Document 85), sets forth in terms "the main reasons for establishing the present large line of marine and war risk insurance for business carried on between the United States and the rest of the world:

1. The maintenance of German insurance business against British boycott measures.
2. The assistance to blacklisted firms in the United States as well as in other countries, particularly in South and Central America.
3. The preventing of neutral tonnage from being used in the service of the Allies.

"These reasons only apply to business conducted between all neutral countries. Therefore, referring to our conversation today, I herewith agree to your firm writing war risk insurance contracts for account of the Pool, for shipments which are not intended for and from the United States, but between the ports of South America and Central America and other neutral countries besides the United States."

A letter (Document 93) dated Atlantic City, December 9, 1916, from O. Bauer, of Staudt & Co., Boston, addressed to Borgemeister, reports that he has to stop shipment of 700 bales of wool and might have to stop shipment of 25,000 hides on a steamer of the Wagner fleet, because of inability to get insurance, and urges that proper action be taken to avoid similar difficulties occurring on other steamers; noting that he will desire between one and two million dollars on the next boat, and another half million on the "Manitowac" whereupon Borgemeister writes to Herrmann, by letter December 11, 1916 (Document 70-A):

"I herewith authorize the writing of an additional $1,000,000 marine insurance on cargo of S. S. 'Manitowac' of the American Transatlantic Line, and shall notify the Pool authorities by wireless to that effect."

"I decided to authorize this additional risk in view of the urgent help which is required by friendly interests in Argentine."

By telegram to Albert, c/o Imperial German Embassy at Washington, December 15, 1916, (Document 64), Borgemeister advises:

"You will be interested to hear that department has granted additional two million dollars insurance on cargo."

A memorandum, presumably prepared by Borgemeister, dated New York, December 16, 1916, for Albert, (Document 69), outlines a plan to hold the South American trade against the British interests by the use of the Gans and Wagner steamers for the benefit of blacklisted firms; indicates the importance of German marine insurance control upon German shipping; urgently repeats former request for an additional line of a million dollars from Germany; also advises that Wagner had secured for the Wagner Line boats the facilities of the American Bureau of War Risk, the Government war insurance theretofore declined, in the amount of $2,000,000, which interest on the part of the United States Government was believed to be sufficient to protect the boat from seizure by the British. The memorandum reads in part as follows:

"For some time this office has been considering measures which would effectively protect the interests of German merchants in South America, especially in Argentine. It was quite apparent to us that the English blacklisting policy would result in their being deprived of shipping facilities to European countries as well as to the United States. Furthermore, we were convinced that insurance facilities would be entirely lacking, and that the question of credits might also be a difficult one."

"Tonnage: In order to supply tonnage, we negotiated with the Gans Steamship Line for the inauguration of a service from the United States to South America, possibly in conjunction with the American Transatlantic Steamship Company (Wagner steamers). The Gans Steamship Line made efforts to secure American bottoms. We soon found it was impossible to secure satisfactory American ships; either the ship owners refused to enter into a charter agreement with the Gans Steamship Line because of their fear of being blacklisted, or they would not agree to the Gans Steamship Line accepting cargo of blacklisted firms. We were therefore confined to the steamers of the American Transatlantic Line (Wagner) and to the sailing vessels which were controlled."

"We have brought the principal parties interested together, i. e. Wagner and the principal exporters from Argentine who are represented by Staudt & Co. of Boston, and the following facts have become clear:

"That there is an urgent necessity for action."

"That there is sufficient cargo available for bi-monthly sailings from Argentine for the seven available Wagner steamers."

"That the question of sufficient freight from the United States is solved."

"That the cargoes from Argentine will principally consist of hides and wool and will therefore be extremely valuable. The cargo of the first ship 'Manitowoc,' has an estimated value of at least $5,000,000."

"As far as bunker coal is concerned, Wagner has solved the problem by making arrangements with the German Coal Depot at Buenos Aires, and by a coal concern in this country which has undertaken to supply the Wagner Line."

steamers. The coal is to be transferred as part of the cargo of the Wagner steamers. Our sailing vessels will also assist, the 'Brynhilda' for instance having been partly chartered for coal for the American concern which is supplying the Wagner steamers. We have also brought the Wagner concern in touch with the Hamburg-American Line, in order to have the latter extend the facilities of their coal depot in St. Thomas, D. W. I.

"It is contemplated that, if necessary, additional American steamers will be chartered for the purpose of enlarging the fleet of the American Transatlantic Steamship Company.

"Wagner has advertised in the Journal of Commerce for freight, and the facilities to and from South America will undoubtedly be availed of principally by blacklisted interests. The advertisement is now appearing in the Journal of Commerce, and a copy of same is hereto attached.

"Finances: Our discussion with Mr. Oscar S. Bauer of Staudt & Company, convinced us that no financial assistance is necessary at the present time. It appears that several of the large Boston bankers will place considerable credit lines at the disposal of the Argentine wool and hide shippers or their agents. Effective steps have been taken by our office to secure revolving credits sufficiently large to insure the financing of important shipments. Such credits have been offered by the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, as well as by the Central Trust Company. We might have to look for ways and means to get in touch with the small German exporting houses which have not so effectively prepared the financing of their export business to the United States as have Staudt & Company, Altgeld & Hart, etc.

"Insurance: It is well to mention that most likely the insurance difficulties which all neutral blacklisted steamship owners have encountered, would have brought about the sale of the Wagner fleet during the early part of the year, if this office had not obtained special insurance Pool facilities to take care of them. The entire Wagner fleet, outside of the three steamers held in England, is insured in the Pool. That this fleet is still available to our interests is principally due to the Insurance Pool facilities.

"English measures in the insurance markets, of course, extend further than full insurance. Outside of a portion of about $500,000 which independent American companies will be ready to take, the entire insurance will have to be carried by the German Pool, at least as far as marine insurance is concerned. Strenuous efforts have been made to secure all possible assistance in the insuring of the cargo of the S. S. 'Manitowoc' in neutral countries. The amount so covered can only be very small.

"It was absolutely essential that the Pool limits should be extended. Unless the Pool is prepared to assist, the venture will be impossible, and help can not be extended to our interests in South America. We wired as early as November 25th for an additional line of $1,000,000, but as yet have received no reply. In anticipation of a favorable reply, we authorized the cargo insurance limit to be extended from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. We received the assurance of Mr. Herrmann that even much larger lines than the above could be re-insured in Germany, and that the business as far as an insurance proposition goes, is most desirable and sought after by underwriting companies. This additional facility seemed to just cover the requirements in the instance of the S. S. 'Manitowoc.'

"Wagner has succeeded through strenuous and continuous efforts, in securing for his boats the full facilities of the American Bureau of War Risk, the Government war insurance, which had previously been declined.

"The American Bureau of War Risk at once accepted the line of $1,000,000. We requested Staudt & Co. and Wagner to telegraph to Washington, and to have their banks and the importers of the wool telegraph at the same time for an additional insurance line. Our efforts resulted in our obtaining an additional line of $1,000,000. The War Risk Department is therefore interested to the extent of $2,000,000 on the cargo.

"Previous to our receiving the information that the American Bureau of War Risk had granted an additional $1,000,000 we had authorized the Pool agents to write an additional war risk insurance of $1,000,000. We have requested F. Herrmann & Co. to reinsure as much as possible of the additional line with the Bureau of War Risk.

"Although we have received confidential information from a most important source in Argentine, that Great Britain might undertake a high-handed stroke to make the venture impossible by detaining the vessel in some English colonial port, we feel that, in view of the $2,000,000 interest on the part of the United States Government, sufficient political pressure would be brought to bear to prevent this possible detention from being sufficiently long to require the payment of the war risk policies. It would seem much more likely that the English have taken steps to frighten the shippers, the ship owners and the consignees."

A letter over the signature of Herrmann, to Albert, dated December 18, 1916 (Document 66), refers to a shipment of one million dollars gold by the "Ausable" and "Winnebago" of the Wagner Line, and after stating that the German Pool eliminates shipments of specie, adds:

"... we can write a further line of $25,000 in the Fireman's Fund and a further line of $50,000 in the Scandinavian-American Insurance Corporation." * * * * *

"As in our various interviews we have invariably agreed that everything should be done to enable Mr. Wagner to obtain all the freight possible to engage his steamers in various trades remuneratively, it goes without saying that that consideration will act as a strong argument in favor of obtaining additional facilities for our office."

Albert, by a report dated December 21, 1916, and actually sent December 28, 1916, in cipher (German file No. J-924), forwarded a brief resume of the situation as of this date, which is identified as Document 66-A. This resume, after mentioning that the British Blacklist had the advantage to German interests of classifying the firms engaged in German business, enabling the managers of the German Marine Insurance Pool in America to get in touch with them and demonstrate how the English measures should be combatted, continues:

"The more we penetrated conditions, the more clearly did it appear that practically everything turned to the question of insurance. It was made possible to place shipping space at our disposal, in that the Wagner Line, of whose steamers were on the English Blacklist, was prepared to use their steamers in South American trade, to assume the provision of coal by taking the coal from here and by purchasing coal mines in the United States, provided that the ships can be insured against war and sea danger. Again, on the other hand, the shippers could secure the necessary credits if they had insurance on their goods. It was impossible to cover these insurances without the action of the Pool, because, as has been discussed in former reports, the English Insurance Companies did not dare either to insure or reinsure, and the capacity of the American insurance market was, because of the cessation of English reinsurance, entirely apart from the direct intimidation resulting from the association with England, extremely limited.

"The Pool was here established. The result is that we anticipate, if all goes well, that a steamer of the Wagner Line will in regular periods of fourteen days, ply between the North and South American ports, exclusively in the service of such firms as are on the Blacklist. The insurance risk will be substantially covered by the Pool, which, represented by an American Pool, will be in a position to issue American policies. The risk against danger at sea is normal, so that the business from a technical insurance view is to be considered a good one. The Pool can be responsible for the assuming of the war risk because we have succeeded in not only prevailing upon the American Government office to participate in the risk at its present limit of one million dollars, but also on the strength of the conditions to induce it to raise its limit to two million dollars. Under these circumstances, the remainder of the risk which the Pool assumes must be designated as thoroughly reasonable.

"I hope that the authority repeatedly taken by me under pressure of conditions to overstep the limit, has been subsequently fully approved. I will further repeat the urgent request to accomplish the expansion of the insurance body by founding the planned American company, and to give me, together with Mr. Herrmann, a thoroughly free hand. It would be a mistake if, in the hope of a near peace, the measure were postponed. A definite appearance of the German Insurance Companies in the form of joint participation I consider essential for the further extension of the German insurance business in the United States. After peace has again been restored, the operation accomplished through urge of war conditions, could easily revert into individual efforts, which would injure German prestige, and might be injurious to an immediate strengthening expansion of German business during peace negotiations and after peace had been restored. Considered from this viewpoint, I would further urgently recommend, to allow the raising the Pool limit, suggested by me, if necessary through interesting other German insurance companies. I recognize the further extension of the German insurance business as a substantial factor for the regaining of the ground lost in overseas trade, because the covering of insurance does not remain the most important prerequisite for the execution of shipments, but that through the insurance through German companies quite naturally there would result a number of business connections for Germany, in overseas trade as well as in overseas finance."

Aside from the revelations of the conspiracy between Albert, Herrmann and their associates here, as disclosed by the foregoing documents, the facts are that Herrmann's associate, Orr, on or about July 26, 1917, made a published announcement "in view of misstatements which have appeared recently in the public press":

First: That on April 10, 1917, the partnership existing between F. Herrmann, O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn (being all the partners of F. Herrmann & Co.) was dissolved by mutual consent, all but Mr. Herrmann withdrawing. The five other than Mr. Herrmann formed the corporation of O. G. Orr & Co., Inc.

Second: That O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn are the sole and unconditional owners of all the stock of O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., and constitute all of the directors and officers of the corporation.

Third: That since that date O. G. Orr, C. E. Dean, J. S. Wall, Wade Robinson and F. H. Osborn have had no connection, directly or indirectly, with F. Herrmann or with F. Herrmann & Co., nor has F. Herrmann or F. Herrmann & Co. had any connection with O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., in any way whatsoever.

Fourth: That at the time of the separation above mentioned O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., continued to occupy the offices formerly occupied by F. Herrmann & Co., under a transferred lease, and that they also engaged a large number of persons formerly employed by F. Herrmann & Co., among whom was one girl, the daughter of a naturalized citizen of the United States, who was born in Germany and had never been naturalized. At present there are in the office of O. G. Orr & Co. Inc., about 160 persons (including the officers and directors of the corporation) of whom three (and three only) were born in Germany, and of whom only one, the girl above mentioned, remains unnaturalized.

Fifth: That O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., had nothing whatever to do with locating the offices of the present firm of F. Herrmann & Co. in a building adjacent to the one in which their offices are located, and that no significance attaches thereto.

Sixth: That there are no German interests whatever in the Companies represented by O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., as stockholders or otherwise.

Seventh: That the only dealings O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., has had with F. Herrmann & Co. were excess reinsurances under an old treaty between one of the companies represented by O. G. Orr & Co., Inc., and one of the companies represented by F. Herrmann & Co., which reinsurance treaty was cancelled on July 13, 1917, by the terms of the President's Proclamation of that date and the necessary exchange of correspondence and remittances arising out of reinsurance transactions closed prior to April 10, 1917.

Eighth: That since July 13, 1917, there have been no dealings between the two offices except those absolutely necessary in closing old matters as described above and permitted by the President's Proclamation.

Ninth: That there exists no agreement or understanding of any nature as to any future dealings with the German Companies or with F. Herrmann & Co., or with F. Herrmann.

Meantime, and under date of February 29, 1916, there had been incorporated the American Merchant Marine Company, with a capital stock of $200,000; and in August, 1917, it was announced that "stockholders had contributed" $300,000 additional to surplus account.

* * * * *
Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. DEWOODY,
Division Superintendent.

ADDENDUM.

The following, which has not been incorporated into the foregoing report on account of its volume, is taken from what appears to be a comprehensive report prepared by Albert, probably for submission by Bernstorff, on various matters of interest to Germany in this country, Chapter VI of said report being devoted to a general review and discussion of the German Marine Insurance business in the United States:

" CHAPTER VI.—Insurance.

I.

" Shipment in war time is naturally attended with special dangers. These risks were covered in the belligerent countries by insurance. The first weeks of war brought a cessation of American trade. This cessation was to be eliminated by the formation of an American office for war insurance. For this purpose the Bureau of War Risk was founded on December 2, 1914, and endowed with a fund of Five Million Dollars. The Bureau undertook the insurance of ships that flew the American flag, against general war risk, capture, mines, etc., under the following conditions:

1. The ship should not break blockade.
2. It should carry no absolute contraband on board.
3. It should carry no conditional contraband that was destined for a hostile Government.

" Gold, fuel, leather, machines, etc., were regarded for example as absolute contraband. Conditional contraband comprises goods 'destined for the armed forces or a Government Department of a belligerent state, or are consigned to the authorities of a belligerent state, or to a contractor established in a belligerent country, who, as a matter of common knowledge, supplies articles of this kind to a belligerent state, or are consigned to a fortified place belonging to a belligerent, or another place serving as a base for the armed forces of a belligerent.'

" The insurance at normal rates extended to all ports, with the exception of the North Sea ports lying between Christiania and Rotterdam, the ports of the Cattegat and of the Baltic Sea, of the Bosphorus and of the Black Sea. To these ports insurance was made only at special rates. The insurance was arranged for the ship as well as for the cargo. The insurance for the cargo ran for the duration of the voyage, that for the ship for the duration of the voyage or for a term not exceeding thirty days. The freight insurance rates were for voyages in the Western and Northern hemisphere one-half per cent; Europe south of Havre and west of Sicily one per cent, other ports one and one-half per cent, in the other European West one per cent, for other ports one and a half per cent, for ships in the neutral West one-half per cent, in the neutral Western Hemisphere for ninety days one per cent, otherwise two per cent. Insurance rates to Germany were not published. On account of the exceptional hazard in voyage, these were only determined on special inquiry. The State (Treasury) Department was free to decline such risks.

" The war insurance was arranged only after the usual marine insurance was already effected. These provisions were of little use for the trade with Germany or the ports of the German spheres of interests, especially as the Bureau of War Risk proceeded in a rather apprehensive way. When England permitted the cotton shipments to Germany, they could not at first take place. The Bureau of War Risk 'is willing to write the war risk for American steamers, but only to a limited amount, which is insufficient to cover hull and cargo, and in spite of State Department announcements the risk is at present uncoverable with the writers,' according to a statement in the Chronicle November 4, 1914. Through the pressure of the cotton interests the insurance meantime became available, especially as the Bureau raised the maximum amount from $500,000 to $1,000,000. Up to December 1, 1915, 1,250 policies were issued. The total insurance sum amounted to about $80,000,000 for ship and cargo. The premiums received amounted to about $2,000,000. The loss amounted to $720,356, including that of the lost steamer 'Evelyn' which sank with cargo, as well as of the steamer 'Greenbrier,' which, after delivery of its cargo, sank on its second voyage. These mishaps led to a temporary suspension of insurance to the belligerent ports and the war zone. From this standpoint, the Bureau of War Risk was no longer available for direct shipment to Germany. Of the policies issued, 1,000 were issued before March 1st. When England made cotton contraband, the Bureau could no longer insure its provisions for cotton shipments. America again let an opportunity escape to put through its conception of law in a practical case. A part of the ships in question was moreover neutral property. The neutral governments were ready to provide the war insurance for their ships, provided that the cargo was intended for them. For shipments to Germany they would not act. Attempts were therefore made, in the interests of cotton people, to induce the American Government to assume a war insurance even for other neutral steamers. These attempts failed. Later the war insurance, since neither the American nor any other neutral government was available, had to be undertaken by private insurance companies.

II.

"The war insurance could only be effectuated if a private marine insurance was first arranged.

A. The difficulties in private insurance were very great. Two-thirds of the marine insurance had always been covered by English companies. Almost all of the reinsurance lay in English hands. In all shipments that were in any way suspected, the marine insurance was refused. In the case of the steamer 'Eir' for example, as a result of English pressure, even the dock insurance was refused. Without marine insurance, bank credit was not to be had, and without bank credit every shipment was suspected from the very first. Through the refusal of marine insurance, for example, the ships of the Wagner Line became useless for the purposes of the office.

"The insurance companies demanded an affidavit that the goods were not intended for belligerent countries. The insurance was not valid if a condemnation in the prize court took place. At the beginning of October the rates of private insurance were 3-10 per cent. For the time the English companies were pledged to insure only English ships with cargo for England. That was later changed. The policies, however, contained the clause 'free of seizure by the Allies.' Destination to Germany was expressly excluded. A great difficulty thereby arose.

(a) The existing American companies were too weak. The thought, therefore, arose of having the office assume the war risk. The office requested one million dollars in order to be able to furnish the necessary guarantees.

(b) A number of German companies were represented in New York.

"Of these the Mannheimer and Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies were represented by the firm F. Herrmann & Co., New York. There therefore arose the possibility of getting them to cooperate from the beginning. For the other companies, such as the Preussische Insurance Company and the Alliance, Berlin, that was not feasible. In these cases the representatives were Englishmen or closely affiliated with English interests.

"None of the German companies were strong enough to undertake large risks. According to American law, the assets with which they were to fulfill their obligations had to lie in America. In no case were these sums sufficient. Furthermore, they had received instructions from home to assume only smaller risks. In addition, there was a further difficulty: the question of reinsurance. The real reinsurance business lay in English hands. A reinsurance in Germany was only possible if the companies undertaking the risk here were authorized (Muenchner?). The Mannheimer and Nord-Deutsche Insurance Companies formed, at the suggestion of the office, a Pool, founded in Germany (see D). The Preussische and the Alliance held aloof. This coalition facilitated the assumption of risks. There however still arose difficulties as to the assumption of the hull insurance.

B. For the office there was a double task to perform:

1. The Marine Insurance.

2. It had to gradually take up war insurance. That was necessary:

(a) If the shipment took place on non-American ships, so that the American Government could not undertake the war insurance;

(b) If contraband were involved, or if for any reason assumption of the war insurance by the American Government seemed undesirable.

"The office now proceeded in the following manner:

(a) In isolated cases in the beginning it guaranteed the insurance to the insurance companies. In this case the office required a payment of a commission of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent by the shippers. That took place, for example, in the wool shipment on the steamer 'Luckenbach.'

(b) Assistance of the German companies. In the case of the shipment on the 'Eir' for example, the war and marine insurance were to be covered.

Only German companies were considered. The risk was, however, too great for them. It was a long time before the local representatives received authorization to undertake it. When it eventually arrived, their means were not sufficient. The office therefore deposited $525,000 in Treasury Notes, which were delivered to the firm F. Herrmann & Co.

C. The insurance problem went through the following stages:

"At the beginning there was involved only the making of shipments of goods that were on the free list, direct or indirect to Germany. Then it was a question of insuring conditional contraband that was to go to Germany via neutral countries. This involved partly shipments of the office, partly those of private firms. Then the question arose whether it would not be expedient to undertake the insurance of shipments to neutral countries, even if forwarding to Germany was not intended. The purpose was to produce an expansion of the German insurance sphere and a damaging of England, and to facilitate the provisioning of neutral countries, which would be thereby placed in position to exchange other goods with Germany. The English insurance companies were directed to insure as little as possible to these countries. The fourth stage was reached when there was involved the maintenance of the activity of the German companies and their protection. A fifth point was to enable the firms that were on the English blacklist to continue their business.

D. On the outbreak of the war the Deutsche Insurance Company of 1914 was organized in Germany, in which all German insurance companies participated. The purpose of this undertaking was division of the risks and assumption of reinsurances. As far as the business of the office was concerned, the German Insurance Company of 1914 sufficed only incompletely for the task. The reinsurance of large risks which the American Pool had assumed, prorata among the participants, was not always possible, partly on account of lack of compliance, partly because the company of 1914 was not recognized in the United States and therefore the reinsurance with it signified no safeguard. (Has Herrmann made use of it?)

"The practical solution of the difficulty, therefore, took place in the following manner:

"The Mannheimer and the Nord-Deutsche were permitted to assume greater risks. In order to make that possible the office deposited $500,000 at the Chase National Bank for the Mannheimer Co. and $500,000 at the Mechanics & Metals National Bank for the Nord-Deutsche Co. That was done in the form of 5% Treasury Notes, which mature on December 31, 1916 (September 1, 1918). They were then to be renewed. On the basis of these Treasury Notes a credit of $500,000 was arranged for each Company against its acceptances. The costs varied with the discount rate—maximum 5%—together with a commission of one per cent. In order to proceed with absolute caution, a final credit of $500,000 was placed at the disposal of the firm F. Herrmann & Co., at a third bank, in case of greater losses, so that in case greater losses suddenly occurred it would have the necessary means available. That was done because the insurance commissioner had called attention to the fact that under some circumstances the Treasury Notes could not be immediately liquidated. The coming premiums were to be applied to covering the advance, as the deposit was considered as only a temporary measure. The companies in Germany were not satisfied with these arrangements. They protested against the commission of one per cent. They falsely assumed that the commission was to be two per cent. They claimed that the business was bad and reinsurance impossible. The liability was very great and the costs, above all the costs of telegrams, were very considerable. They attacked the temporary character of the support and demanded support for the duration of the war. Repayment of the premiums was impossible, as the premiums had to be held at the disposal of the reinsurers. These objections rested in part on misunderstandings, as the business went very well. From July 15, 1915, to January 31, 1916, premiums for marine insurance in the amount of $116,488 had been paid, for war insurance $186,080, altogether $302,568. A loss of $48,500 had occurred. Seventy-five per cent in this case was covered by the sale of the goods. The result was a net profit of $275,000.

E. Through the entire development the insurance became more and more independent of the insurance in Germany (?). Its purpose was now:

(a) Shipments to neutral countries in the war zone, in order to break England's insurance monopoly.

(b) Protection of the German firms operating abroad, which England attempted to oppose, partly by denial of insurance.

(c) Construction and protection of the German insurance business.

"On the basis of these thoughts it had been possible to establish a Pool of the German insurance companies. The firm of F. Herrmann & Co., which until then had been merely representative of both of the above named companies, was now made representative of the German Insurance Company forming the Pool. For this purpose the Pool had to be appropriately enlarged. It, however, appeared that even in this form the organization was not yet sufficient. There arose the necessity of establishing an American insurance company controlled by German interests. As things now stand, there is a certain hostility toward German policies, which is naturally fostered by England. It is, however, clear that after the danger of war developments between Germany and the United States once comes into consideration, the disinclination as to foreign policies is certainly not unfounded. The firm F. Herrmann & Co. has often experienced this itself. It has had many policies effectuated through the Fireman's Fund and limited itself in part to reinsurances. The Fireman's Fund is strictly a fire insurance company. There is no guaranty that some day the company will not announce its relationship to Herrmann & Co. and that the business brought to it by German intelligence and German capital will not be retained by it. After the war, it will be neither desirable nor available for the reconstruction of the German economic life with the help of English companies. There is, therefore, the necessity of making suitable arrangements, especially as it has appeared that boycott efforts, blacklist, etc., where insurance is lacking, can be introduced with great results."

Capt. LESTER. Is there any evidence in the statements of Herrmann or Orr of the excessive underwritings or excessive insurance of marine risks?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. There is in this correspondence, in the part which I did not read, evidence that they considered that they were skating on thin ice, and that they were apprehensive of what the State insurance commissioner of New York might do, and that Albert and Borgemeister were also concerned about that proposition; and they did make some efforts to get additional capital.

There are some things in this report as to which I have some doubt whether they should be published, but I am going to leave the entire thing with the committee. You can see that there are certain statements in there, possibly, that are not particularly relevant to this situation, that ought not to be made public in full. Statements of some of the men examined relate to other matters than this particular thing. They covered a number of subjects during the examination of some of these men.

There are one or two little things which I ran across that I thought perhaps the committee might be interested in, relating to propaganda which I did not bring to your attention when I was here. They are just small matters, but one of the members of the committee expressed some interest particularly in the Mexican situation.

In looking over our files again I found a copy of a communication from the embassy in Washington dated November 6, 1915, addressed to Albert.

Maj. HUMES. That is the German Embassy in Washington that you are referring to?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; of which this is a translation:

On delivery of a paraphrase of the following telegram of the Imperial Ambassador in Mexico of September 11, this year, I begged your highness for a statement:

"Are means to a modest amount, to be had for the embassy, here for the purpose of defense against French anti-German press agitation?"

I would recognize a belated statement with thanks.

Under order of the Imperial Ambassador

HATZFELDT.

That is Prince Hatzfeldt, of the embassy.

Under date of New York, November 18, 1915, replying to this letter of November 6, Albert said—his is addressed to the ambassador:

I have the honor to reply to the very esteemed letter of your excellency, indicated above, that the copy of the telegram in question is not in my possession.

In regard to the point I very respectfully observe that, strictly speaking, the use of the means standing at our disposal for press propaganda here for purposes lying outside the United States, would hardly be permissible. With regard, however, to the fact that in communications from Berlin it has been suggested several times that the literature of enlightenment published on our side be sent to Latin America also, a certain joint working up of the lands in question by the press bureau is accordingly to be expected: I believe I am justified in assuming that a provision of $5,000 for the ambassador of the Imperial Government in Mexico can be undertaken.

On the other hand, in view of the existing suspicion that the German officials were guilty of secret activities in Mexico, and in view of the circumstances that bank transactions emanating from me are strictly watched, the transmittance of the money by me seems somewhat objectionable.

I take the liberty, therefore, respectfully to suggest that you be willing to have the transmittance in question made, so far as there is no objection to it on your part, out of the means standing at the disposal of the imperial embassy. The sum in question could then, as opportunity offered, be refunded from the funds standing at my disposal.

Here is a copy of a paraphrase of a telegram from Berlin, which says:

Copy for privy councillor.

ALBERT.

Paraphrase of a telegram from Berlin of the 2d of May this year.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "paraphrase of a telegram"?

Mr. BIELASKI. It means the stating of the substance of a telegram in slightly different language from that in which it was received. It is a common practice of all of the Government departments when they receive a cipher message, instead of giving out the exact translation, which might serve as an indication to people interested as to just what their code means, to make what they call a paraphrase of it, so that a comparison between the exact words given out with the code message will not betray the code.

I continue to read:

Prompted by the case Igel, I request your excellency to destroy the compromising papers to be found in the embassy and in New York.

I request notification in regard to the fulfillment of the foregoing direction.

VON JAGOW.

That is just interesting as showing that they knew in Berlin exactly the activities of their representatives over here which might be called compromising, and that after von Igel was arrested and a number of his documents secured they suggested the destruction of all compromising papers.

Senator STERLING. To whom is that addressed?

Mr. BIELASKI. This is the paraphrase of a telegram from Berlin sent up to Albert from the embassy here, so that it is assumed that the original telegram was addressed to the ambassador.

I also found a copy—translation—of a communication from the embassy from Reisswitz, the acting consul of Germany at Chicago.

which shows another instance of their contemplating the purchase of an American newspaper. I think it is proper to say that so far as we know the newspaper knew nothing about it, and that nothing was done about, or nothing came about in regard to it, in order that it might not be assumed that this particular newspaper had any relations with the German Government. This is dated October 23.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator King suggests that you might leave the newspaper itself out if there is no indication that it was followed up.

Mr. BIELASKI. Suppose I hand this to you and let you look at it, because the reading of this would convey to people familiar with the newspaper business the name of the paper. It does not reflect on the paper at all. It simply shows the activity of the Germans.

Senator OVERMAN. With the statement that it does not reflect upon the newspaper, it might be proper.

Senator KING. The only point I had in mind was this, that if the name of an individual or a newspaper is mentioned as having been in the minds of the German representatives to acquire or to secure the services of, some people immediately jump to the conclusion that that paper was purchasable by the Germans or amenable to their influence.

Mr. BIELASKI. Suppose I submit it without reading it.

Senator KING. Hand the letter to the chairman. I think that would be better. We do not want to do any injustice to any newspaper or to any individual.

Mr. BIELASKI. The substance of this letter is that the consul, writing to the German ambassador, states that he has understood that there is an opportunity, because of certain differences among certain persons interested in a large Chicago daily newspaper, for them to obtain it without the newspaper knowing anything about their effort, and he suggests that it can be obtained for about $500,000 or $600,000, and he outlines some ideas by which he thinks the paper might be obtained.

Senator STERLING. The letter, on its face, indicates that the newspaper would not know who the purchaser would be?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I am going to hand the translation of the letter to the committee. It seems to me that it clearly indicates that it was to be a secret effort on the part of the consul to get control of the paper. I simply cited it as another instance of the constant effort of the German officials to get newspapers.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you anything else to say, Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I have nothing else, unless the committee has some questions to ask.

Maj. HUMES. I have some questions to ask. Are you going to put that paper in the record?

Senator OVERMAN. No; it will not be put in. You just keep it in your files, Major.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, in checking over the testimony that you gave when you were before the committee before, there have been several matters called to my attention that I think perhaps have not been covered as fully as they should be. One of them is the Pan German Union. You are familiar with that organization, are you?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that I am, offhand.

Maj. HUMES. Dr. De Grosse's organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not recall exactly what it was. I have no doubt we have a file about it.

Maj. HUMES. I left a memorandum of this down at your office.

Mr. BIELASKI. Well, I did not get it.

Maj. HUMES. And Hugo Schweitzer was active in it, I will say, if that will refresh your recollection in any way.

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not recall that organization, offhand—just what it was. I can undoubtedly get our file and give you what it was.

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with the Kriegsbund?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes; in a general way, of course. That was a German organization, and membership in it depended upon service in the German Army.

Maj. HUMES. What was the nature of the organization, and what was the extent of it in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was a semimilitary sort of a social organization that was intended to perpetuate the German ideals and to further German interests in a general way, and also to form a sort of a social organization of men of common tendencies. It was such an organization that, when it seemed likely to us that we were going to get into the war, we had our agents, in every city in which there was such an organization, list the officers and active members of it, for possible future use, as we did every organization of a similar character.

Senator OVERMAN. Was this organization prior to the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. It was in this country before the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Before the European war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes, sir; it was like a great many of the German associations.

Senator KING. It was like the National German-American Alliance?

Mr. BIELASKI. It might be, in a sense, a little like a German G. A. R. over here. We had a little trouble with them after we got into the war, because they retained possession of rifles, in a few instances, that they had used to drill with.

Senator OVERMAN. I did not catch the name of that organization.

Mr. BIELASKI. The Kriegsbund, I think it was. I do not know much about German. It never developed any serious situation.

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with any of the activities of this organization in connection with proposed military operations against Canada?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; in this way, that the Germans hoped to make use of that organization in some of their plans that they had from time to time for the invasion of Canada, and I think that during the period of neutrality certain of these organizations were engaged in actual drilling.

Maj. HUMES. To refresh your recollection—this is not from your files, but it is Department of Justice data, and it may refresh your recollection—I will hand you this paper.

Mr. BIELASKI (examining paper). This information is a report of one of our agents, but his informant here is a very unreliable man. I do not know just what there is to this.

Maj. HUMES. There are several reports there.

Mr. BIELASKI. This is the organization of it. Yes; our files contain a detailed statement not only of the membership of the organization, but of each one of these "bunds" in the different parts of the country.

Maj. HUMES. Can you furnish a memorandum as to the size and location of these organizations and the size of each one?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; you can have our files, which contain that.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it pretty extensive?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was fairly extensive. I do not know just how many organizations they had, but in most of the larger cities they had an organization.

The Germans did have several plans for invading Canada. It never amounted to anything of a serious character, because they could not get the individuals that they wanted to participate in it.

Senator KING. Did they drill?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes.

Senator KING. In this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, indeed.

Maj. HUMES. They had rifles, too?

Mr. BIELASKI. They had rifles and they drilled and paraded and all that sort of thing. It was a wholly harmless proposition so far as this country was concerned, up until the European war; and as I say, nothing of a serious character developed in connection with it at any time.

Senator OVERMAN. While you say it was harmless, were not these men united together in the German interests, even before the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I do not mean to say that it was harmless, possibly, in its influence, and in their efforts to perpetuate over here things German.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think it is a thing we would approve of; but I mean that it was not a serious menace to the Government from the standpoint of anything that they did. We simply kept a watch on them, because they were a German organization of a decidedly military character, and made up of men who had been in actual service in the German Army.

Senator KING. Did it include persons who were born in this country of German ancestry?

Mr. BIELASKI. I doubt that.

Senator KING. Did they permit those persons to join?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know if there was any class of membership of that kind or not.

Senator KING. Do you know whether or not persons who had taken out or had obtained their naturalization papers still continued their membership in this organization, and drilled?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think undoubtedly so. Not only did they do that, but men who had taken out naturalization papers in some instances even reported to the German consulates here, in the same way that alien Germans did who had never taken out any papers at all. Under their dual citizenship scheme, I think it is possible for a German who has been fully naturalized in this country to claim citizenship in Germany until he has been absent, I think, something like 10 years.

Senator KING. That is under the Delbrück law?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. There are on file in our department, and even in the Library of Congress, extensive discussions of that law from the German standpoint, and even from the American standpoint.

Senator KING. While it is not germane, I was wondering whether the Department of Justice was initiating suits for the purpose of revoking and cancelling the naturalization papers of some of these individuals, who, during the war, have been exhibiting a lack of patriotism.

Mr. BIELASKI. There have been some of those suits instituted, but I do not think more than two or three of those suits have been carried through to a successful conclusion; one in a western district, and one in New Jersey; and possibly there are some others.

Senator KING. I express the hope that they will bring proceedings to revoke or cancel the naturalization papers of such persons as have evinced no allegiance to or interest in this country, but have demonstrated that their higher allegiance was to a foreign country, and in Deutschland.

Mr. O'BRIAN. I might state to you on that, Senator, that the Attorney General some time since—many months ago—sent to all United States attorneys instructions to report to him immediately upon finding any such persons or facts, so that steps might be taken to cancel their naturalization; and there are pending throughout the country a considerable number of suits for that purpose. There are standing instructions to the agents of the Department of Justice.

Senator KING. It is my information that in the internment camps are some naturalized Americans.

Mr. O'BRIAN. I think not. There is no authority to intern naturalized Americans. There are several there that claim to be naturalized Americans.

Senator KING. I have been informed that there were some naturalized Americans interned. I hope that there will be some provisions adopted for the deportation of dangerous alien enemies.

Mr. O'BRIAN. It is hoped that the Congress may provide some authority of law for that. That ought to be adopted at as early a date as possible. That is the view of the Attorney General.

Mr. BIELASKI. In order to keep that question out of future cases, it was suggested to the Naturalization Service, or the Department of Labor, that when Germans come up for naturalization hereafter, that question of dual citizenship be inquired into and that be made clear before any individual is naturalized.

Senator STERLING. Do you not think that the naturalization law ought to be amended so as to require them to make an affidavit or to take an oath to the fact that they have not taken advantage of the Delbrück law and retained the privilege of being citizens of Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; if any legislation is required to do that, I think so. I think that the Naturalization Bureau ought to do that without waiting for legislation, if it is possible for them to do it.

Senator STERLING. Do you not think that an amendment of the law should be made so as to require that the oath made on the declaration of intention should include an oath of that kind, as well as the statement when he gets his final papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I would not, myself, place any more dependence upon the oath of a man declaring his intention than when taking out his final papers.

Senator STERLING. No; but at the same time he would be rendering himself liable to prosecution for perjury, if it ever comes out.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. O'Brien tells me that in answer to our letter to the naturalization authorities they have replied and have told us that they intend to make and are now making such a requirement in the examination of Germans at the present time.

Senator KING. May I make an inquiry? Have you anything in your files showing the extent to which German-Americans, that is, Germans who have sought naturalization, availed themselves of the Delbrück law in this country, and went before the German consuls and registered as Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not think we have anything in any comprehensive way. We have just a few isolated instances.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, there were in this country a good many so-called German shooting clubs?

Mr. BIELASKI. Rifle clubs.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; rifle clubs. Were they a part of this Kreigsbund?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know about the Kreigsbund. Yes, they did shooting, but there were other German shooting clubs, also, I think. As I said, I think it was in 1916 we made a survey of the general situation with respect to the general German situation here, taking in the rifle clubs and even the singing clubs, the Schlaraffia, and others.

Maj. HUMES. What is the extent of that organization? What is the nature of it?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Schlaraffia is an organization which the members state is intended to be entirely a semihumorous or jocular affair. It is the organization they resort to for an unrestricted, jolly, good time. I do not mean to say that every member of it should be characterized as I am characterizing it generally. The principal members in every instance, however, we found to be the bitterest pro-Germans, and the alien Germans were also members. Here, I think that Dr. Barthelme was an active member of the local organization. We had one or two of our agents who were members of the local organization and secured the data as to membership.

Senator OVERMAN. Are any of these societies secret?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; some are secret organizations. There are oaths, and so on. We never could find that the Schlaraffia was engaged in anything whatever against the United States, except that it was an organization of the bitterest of the pro-Germans, the most intelligent of their agitators or propagandists here were members, and it formed an excellent opportunity for them to discuss anything they wanted to.

Maj. HUMES. It was the bringing together of German sympathizers, in other words, in the shape of this organization?

Capt. LESTER. Did you find out that, as a part of their ritual, they travestied the royalty of Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Well, they had a ritual which was more or less of a farcical scheme. The men had different names and other things.

But I did not ever understand that that was a travesty of the German Government, because it would be entirely out of sympathy with the real sentiment of the principal members and leading people in the organization. I think most of those men would have resented nothing more than a travesty on their Kaiser.

Maj. HUMES. This was an organization which had its start in Germany and had its organizations outside of Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And the military officers and officials in Germany were the active members of the organization in the native land?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; but over here native citizens of German descent were members also.

Maj. HUMES. This was an extension of a purely German organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; and I would say that it was one of the most suspicious organizations, in keeping up interest in what it might be doing, of any of their organizations here.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make a survey to ascertain about how many members this organization had, for instance?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I do not know how complete our files are, but I recollect reading a list of their members. I know that the list of the organization here is entirely complete. I think there is a list of the officers and principal members of every one of the Schlaraffias in this country.

Maj. HUMES. I did not care for the names, but just the extent of the membership. That can be secured?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is in the files; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was your attention called at any time, or had you any information as to an organized effort to investigate thoroughly every officer in the Army of the United States by the Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I do not recall just where I had that in the files, but in two places—I think in Von Igel's office, if I am not mistaken—there is some record of a plan to look up every officer of German descent or German birth, and so on.

Maj. HUMES. When was that, with reference to the time we got into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was just before.

Maj. HUMES. That was before we were in the war at all, they were investigating the standing and character and nationality and loyalty, etc., of officers in the American Army?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What information have you as to the registration of the Germans and Austrians at the consulates, the so-called consular lists, and the extent to which that registration went?

Mr. BIELASKI. Of course, I am not prepared to state in any definite way. You understand, I am answering all your questions from my recollection of files that I have not seen in many months.

Maj. HUMES. What I am trying to get at is this: I want to get an idea of these matters that your files, I assume, cover, with a view of securing from you a summary of the extent and size of these various organizations, in order that the record may be completed as to them.

Mr. BIELASKI. As to the matter of registration, of course it was the effort of the consulates and embassy here to have every man registered at the consulate and to keep advised of his address, and some of the consulates were particularly active and efficient in getting a list of everybody in their territory and keeping advised of the addresses.

Senator OVERMAN. You mean naturalized and unnaturalized?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; primarily nationals of the German and Austrian Governments; but in some instances, as I have said, many who had naturalized did so report. I remember in Pennsylvania that one of the consular officers whose records were for a time placed at our disposal, had a very complete card index numbering some thousands of names. I think it was the St. Louis consul of the German Government who was also very active and efficient in getting everybody in his territory listed; and that was the general plan.

Maj. HUMES. Can you give an estimate as to about how many there were on these consular lists over the country?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I could not, Major. I will say this: That I do not believe that the aliens here, the Germans and the Austro-Hungarians, complied with that requirement to anything like the degree that the officials here wanted; but the proportion of men who did not register—who were within the category that should, under the German law and under the Austrian law, register, who did not register—was very much larger than those that did.

Maj. HUMES. Can you make any estimate, from your knowledge of the numbers that registered in various districts, as to the probable number of registrations? Would it be 1,000 or 100,000, just approximately, from your general knowledge of the situation?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know, Major. There were about how many German consulates here? There were eight or nine, were there not?

Capt. LESTER. There were 14, altogether.

Mr. BIELASKI. Fourteen. Some of them were large. I would not know, but I should not think that there would be so many thousands. There were 14 consuls. Of course, how many registered in New York City I have not any idea. There are partial records of those that did. It would simply be a guess on my part. It has been testified by Capt. Lester that there were about 1,200 in Boston, and the New York consulate was very much larger. I should not estimate much more than 25. I do not know how many.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this to refresh your recollection and see if we can not arrive at a reasonable estimate. Mr recollection is that there were some 250,000 to 260,000 alien Germans who registered.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Of course that did not include the Austrian aliens, and I assume that the Department of Justice made an estimate as to the probable number of Austrian alien enemies in this country. Do you feel at liberty to state what the Department of Justice's estimate was as to the probable number of Austrian alien enemies?

Mr. BIELASKI. We had that very definitely. We have those estimates over there.

Maj. HUMES. I think before that you stated that these figures on the registration of German registrants showed that we have 254,058?

Mr. BIELASKI. Men.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now, there were more Austrians than that, I assume?

Mr. BIELASKI. Quite a large number more.

Maj. HUMES. There were a larger number of Austrians than Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. Roughly estimated, about three times as many: something over 700,000. I think that is our estimate. I should think that 10 per cent of the Germans registered at the consulates.

Maj. HUMES. All the Germans or all the alien enemies?

Mr. BIELASKI. All the Germans.

Maj. HUMES. What percentage of the Austrians?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know what percentage of the Austrians, but I think probably a greater number registered because the Austrian consulates were all so particularly active in collecting claims for injuries and all that sort of thing for the Austrians, where the Germans were not.

Maj. HUMES. They were also very much more active along industrial lines?

Mr. BIELASKI. Very much more so.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any estimate of how many there were, all told, of Austrians and Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. All told?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. We just estimated the alien Austrians at about 700,000 or 750,000.

Maj. HUMES. And 250,000 Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. A million, all told. That does not include women and children, which would be multiplied by, say, 3 or 4.

Maj. HUMES. That only includes men over 18 years of age?

Senator OVERMAN. My statement on the floor of the Senate that there were 200,000 spies in this country was about true. I was criticized for that.

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with the Geneva Society?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was that, and what were their activities?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Geneva Society was a society of waiters, a European society, which grew, and was extended and organized in this country. It was regarded, I think, by the allied governments as a spy organization in Europe, and there was considerable suggestion that it might be over here. Personally, I am satisfied that as an organization it was not, and that there were in it too many of unquestioned loyalty and patriotism.

Maj. HUMES. It is a fact, however, is it not, that in many quarters its headquarters furnished a rendezvous for disloyal elements?

Mr. BIELASKI. A sort of recruiting station, from which persons might have been secured for activities for Germany, and I think it was probably so used to a considerable extent in Europe, from the reports I have read.

Maj. HUMES. What class of people did this organization include—what business?

Mr. BIELASKI. Waiters.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the active spirits of the organization were usually head waiters in the big hotels in the various cities of the country?

Mr. BIELASKI. And also that they were of Austrian and German extraction in very large proportion.

Maj. HUMES. This was, as I understand it, originally a German organization, and then afterwards they called it the Geneva Society, and it became an international organization.

Mr. BIELASKI. My recollection was a little bit the other way, though I can not be positive about it. It seemed to me it was first organized as a Geneva organization, and the Germans came in and took possession of it.

Maj. HUMES. It became a German organization, at any rate?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, you mentioned this morning, in a way, Stallforth & Co. and their banking connections. What were the activities of Stallforth & Co. in Mexico, and as between this country and Mexico, especially as connected with the Tampico oil fields?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that I know anything about that matter particularly. Stallforth & Co.—Stallforth Bros.—had to get out of Mexico, and came up here.

Maj. HUMES. One of the Stallforths is interned.

Mr. BIELASKI. Frederico is interned, and Alberto, I think, is in New York. They had, of course, Mexican interests which are presumably now controlled by an American, whose name is—Robinson is his last name.

Capt. LESTER. Col. Robinson?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. He is connected with the firm of Stallforth & Co. now, and they have Mexican interests primarily. Of course, Frederico Stallforth, I think I testified somewhat about, was intimately acquainted with Rintelen. He was probably Rintelen's man, intimately associated here, and through him money was furnished for different things by Albert. Some of the money in this German publication society passed through his hands, and there was a record of some $30,000 advanced to Stallforth at one time, and at one time a million dollars was placed at his disposal by Albert for about a day or two, but was withdrawn and paid back, a scheme which did not mature at all.

Maj. HUMES. Are you familiar with the organization, the Sons of Hermann?

Mr. BIELASKI. In a general way; yes. We had quite a large file about that.

Maj. HUMES. What was the nature of that organization, and what were their activities?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Sons of Hermann was a German organization, a pro-German organization. It is my recollection that their headquarters were in Chicago. I am not absolutely sure about it.

Maj. HUMES. Did their activities extend through the whole country?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that they extended over the whole country, but over various parts of the country.

Maj. HUMES. In spots?

Mr. BIELASKI. They were another one of these organizations which required observation to make sure that there was nothing wrong.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how many German organizations there were in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. There were a great many. I do not know.

Senator OVERMAN. A great many?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. The reference books in the library showing German societies show page after page of them. I do not know how many there were.

Senator OVERMAN. Most of them were loyal to Germany. I suppose, and many went back?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think that is a fair statement, Senator. I think the German-Americans in this country were, to a very high degree, loyal to this country, and that the alien Germans here were exceptionally well behaved, and only in a limited degree, indeed, did things antagonistic to this country. Of course, the activities of those who were disloyal, however, received attention, but the great body of the German-American people were loyal to the United States and served it faithfully. I think that the great body of the alien Germans here behaved themselves and obeyed our laws to a very commendable degree.

Maj. HUMES. You are referring now to the time after we got into the war? Their activities were very pronounced for the Fatherland up to the time we got into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. There is no question about their sympathy with Germany so long as it was a question between Germany and England and France, but I think it is remarkable, really, the extent to which the German-American people were loyal to this country.

Senator OVERMAN. After the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. After we entered the war.

Maj. HUMES. Of this million, approximately, male alien enemies, is it not a fact that the vast majority of those alien enemies were very active in behalf of Germany, and were aiding in every way the German cause up to the time we got into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think that is a fair statement, either, Major. There was nothing more disappointing to the German Government and to the Austro-Hungarian Government than the failure of their people here to respond to their demands. You see all through the files where they wanted these societies which were pro-German, the Embargo Conference, and things of that kind; where they say the Germans ought to be more loyal, and provide money themselves, and so on; but that the German Government itself had to put up money, and they were not able to get the people to respond in the way they wanted them to, by any means.

Maj. HUMES. And they were counting at that time on 20,000,000 sympathizers in this country. That was the claim of the German Government, was it not, that they had something like 20,000,000 German sympathizers in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. They made that claim, but I think they were badly informed about that, as in other things.

Maj. HUMES. You mean the enemy aliens as well?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that the greater percentage of the enemy aliens in this country did not concern themselves at all with the affair. They went on living their lives here just about the same way they did before the war was declared, except, of course, that their sympathies were with the fatherland, just the same way as American citizens sympathized with one side or the other. I do not think they were active.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you were—and when I say “you” I mean the Government agencies—because of your knowledge of German activities and German sympathies prior to our entrance into the war, expecting many more activities on the part of these Germans after the war started than actually materialized, and were you not agreeably surprised?

Mr. BIELASKI. Very agreeably surprised. We anticipated great disorders, and trouble of all kinds, and I think it has been a remarkable record, not only from the standpoint of lack of disorder on the part of the alien Germans but forbearance and patriotic respect for the law on the part of the American people throughout the country. There has not been any disorder, and there has not been a single German, I think, in this country killed because he was a German during the time we were at war. There was one man hung out in Illinois, but he would have been hung if he had been an Italian. I think it was entirely a labor trouble.

Maj. HUMES. Then, it is a fact that the activities of the German elements before we entered the war were of such a nature that you and the Government agencies expected very much more serious trouble than materialized, and there was a decided change in sentiment, was there not, within a very few weeks following the declaration of war by this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; but I think our apprehension was very largely due to the activities of what might be termed the official German representatives, and the agents here, rather than so much what the individual here had done, because we found in practically every instance of anything being done here improper or in violation of law, that it was traceable right straight back to a direct paid agent or diplomat of the German Government.

Maj. HUMES. Then, it is a fact, is it not, that because of these activities before we entered the war, in almost every locality in this country, there were home defense organizations created, and some of them armed to some extent, expecting difficulty that afterwards did not materialize? Is that not a fact?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; there were a great many of those organizations; a great many—too many—I think.

Maj. HUMES. I think perhaps that is true, but it is also a fact that the Department of Justice, fearing the possibilities because of the activities that they had experienced up until our entrance into the war, were interested in and aided in the organization of the American Protective League?

Mr. BIELASKI. They did.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). Of several hundred thousand men, in order to keep track of these German activities that subsequently did not materialize?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is true. We prepared for eventualities that did not materialize.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you stated, if I am not mistaken, that it was the policy of the department not to state the number of interned Germans. Are you still of that opinion?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is a matter peculiarly within Mr. O'Brien's province.

Mr. O'BRIAN. That was a ruling of the Attorney General that he thought ought not to be changed.

Senator OVERMAN. He thought you ought not to make public the number?

Mr. O'BRIAN. That was his view. He asked that.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not mean by my testimony to say that the American Protective League, because it did not have active service to perform, did not do a wonderful work, because it did.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I wanted to get on the record—that they did do a wonderful work, but I was pointing out the serious situation, that in the first instance it was thought necessary to form these organizations, but that the situation which they were formed to meet did not materialize as fully as expected.

Mr. BIELASKI. The American Protective League did a wonderful amount of work for the department in this, that through their members and their organization, in cooperation with our own agents, we were able to investigate every complaint. If some one got up and talked in an unseemly manner, an investigation was made immediately, and the result was to keep a feeling of security throughout the country, and in addition the American Protective League did a tremendous work in connection with the enforcement of the selective service act.

Senator OVERMAN. How many of the league members assisted you—what was the total of men, including your own men?

Mr. BIELASKI. They had a membership between 300,000 and 350,000 when they were at their height, and we had tried to bring into the organization of the Department of Justice, so far as we could, the county prosecuting attorneys, the sheriffs, the city police, and all that sort of thing, just at the time between the break of diplomatic relations and the declaration of war. The department undertook to organize as auxiliaries to the Federal Government all of the local organizations; also all of the field service of the department and things of that kind, our district attorneys, as Maj. Humes knows, with their headquarters in each district, in which the local prosecuting people of the State reported, and we kept in touch in every way.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have cooperating with you the Navy Intelligence and the Army Intelligence?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Navy Intelligence forces and the Army Intelligence forces were larger organizations that cooperated with us. They had their peculiar fields, and in addition they had a field that sort of merged with ours.

Senator OVERMAN. All cooperating along the same line?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir. We had a joint conference here which met every week in Mr. O'Brien's office, in which the heads of all the various intelligence services met to discuss matters, and we had plans of cooperation in this field and exchange of information.

Senator OVERMAN. Could you give me an estimate, including the National Protective League, and the Navy, the Department of Justice, the Army, and all of those forces, about how many men we had?

Mr. BIELASKI. I got up such an estimate for the Attorney General at one time, Senator, including the police and everything, but I do not know what it would be. It would be 600,000 or 700,000, according to my recollection, including men in the employ of the Consular Service, the Immigration Service, the Forestry Bureau of the Agricultural Department, the fire fighters of the Interior Department, and all of the field men brought in to report to the organization. A certain number of those designated as the most trustworthy and capable by their own departments used to make inquiries for us in the field.

Senator OVERMAN. That would be in the neighborhood of 700,000?

Mr. BIELASKI. I should say about that. It is, of course, an estimate. I have not the figures before me.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Bielaski, did you not attribute the situation which existed after we got into the war, the lack of German activities which you say existed, to the effective organization and the constant surveillance of the different agencies of the Government to a large extent, rather than to a change in the hearts of many of these active spirits of the German propaganda movement prior to our entrance into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that is undoubtedly true to a considerable extent. I know a great many—not a great many, but people—who said that if a German force landed here at the Potomac, men who were making liberty loan speeches would get ready to fly the German flag. There is in the German people a great love for material things and a great respect for the authority of law, and I believe there would have been a great change in a great many individual cases if there had been a German success and invasion by German forces had been imminent in this country. But I do not think that is a fair statement to apply to the entire body. Undoubtedly there would have been a great many, but the larger percentage by far of the German-Americans, those who are citizens, would have been loyal to us under any circumstances.

Maj. HUMES. The vast majority, but——

Mr. BIELASKI. The alien Germans would, I think, have switched the other way.

Maj. HUMES. But a very small percentage of the German sympathizers, as they existed prior to our entrance into the war, could have caused untold trouble if it had not been for the psychological effect of the constant vigilance of these departments and the fear that they had of action on the part of the Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. Other things contributed to the same thing, Major. The German operation is essentially one of organization. Their organization in this country, which had been developed through the period of our neutrality, was entirely broken up, or at least to a tremendously large percentage, by the arrests made at the outbreak of the war and by the surveillance which was maintained over those who were not arrested.

Maj. HUMES. Can you give us an estimate, or have you the figures available, as to the number of German and Austrian military reservists that were in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Well, practically all of the German and Austrian males between the military ages were considered reservists by the German Government. I should not think that that figure would differ materially from the figures given a while ago.

Maj. HUMES. Then, except in the instances of those who had become too old to be available for military duty, practically all of that million alien enemies were German or Austrian reservists?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; in a country of universal service, as those two countries were.

Maj. HUMES. There is one matter that has not been touched upon that strikes me as important, and that is the anticonscription and antimilitary organizations and their activities following the entrance of this country into the war. Could you give us an outline of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. I could much better had I had an opportunity to refresh my recollection from our files. You see, those organizations were active particularly from the first of 1917 on until August and September and October; I should say, in August, 1917, those things probably reached their height and were gone—ancient history shortly afterwards.

Maj. HUMES. Could you prepare a brief summary, and put it into the record, of those organizations and their activities?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; there were a number of them. The one which continued the most active and lived the longest was this organization of Roger Baldwin's, the National Civil Liberties Bureau. That organization continued right up until Baldwin's arrest and imprisonment, and, to a limited degree, still lives, though it is not in any way active.

The same people that were in that organization were in the other organizations. To a large extent it was the same bunch of pacifists, conscientious objectors, and pro-German people who made up all of these organizations, although they changed their names frequently.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have any estimate of how many there were?

Mr. BIELASKI. You mean in point of numbers?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think they were comparatively small, indeed. There were not very many. They would announce a tremendous meeting at Cleveland to organize, and they would have seven or eight people there, and they would be the same people that were in the People's Council, or something of that kind. They were almost always the same radical pro-German or pacifist type of people.

Maj. HUMES. Was the People's Council of Peace and Democracy one of these organizations?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was that organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. The People's Council for Democracy and Terms of Peace, or something of that kind, was an effort to unite into one organization all of the radical pacifist and socialistic organizations. They expected to bring into their organization the I. W. W., the Socialist Party, all the pacifist organizations, and to get support from the German-American societies. They were to be modeled after some of the people's councils in Russia. They met with practically no success, because each one of these organizations that they wanted to bring in wanted to run the thing their own way. They did not amalgamate at all.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know who inspired that organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. Who inspired it?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not know who inspired it.

Maj. HUMES. Was Roger Baldwin active in that organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was very active; yes. There was a group of, I guess, 8 or 10 who came down here. According to my recollection the first meeting was in Washington, the preliminary meeting to the organization, and some 8 or 10 people were present.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember who attended?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not, offhand. I know that they hoped to bring into that organization in some way some of our leading public men who had, they thought, shown pacifist tendencies, etc.; but I do not think they were successful in that at all.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is Baldwin from?

Mr. BIELASKI. Baldwin is a Harvard graduate, I think. That is one of the things I have always had to mention to Mr. O'Brien when the case comes up. He was a very intelligent, likeable sort of fellow. He, however, was, I think, in addition to taking the position that he was following his conscience, actively disloyal and opposed to the conduct of the war. He lived, I think, in the Middle West for a while, and then lived in New York. He was a member or sympathizer or director or an officer in from 40 to 50 of these various organizations. Some of them, I think, had little more than a letter-head and officers.

Senator OVERMAN. He was one of these "jiners"?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he was decidedly a jiner and an organizer.

Eventually he went to jail for failing to comply with the provisions of the conscription act. I do not know whether there have been indictments returned against him, but he has been involved in specific instances of trying to get other people to become conscientious objectors who had not properly come within that class under the act.

Maj. HUMES. He also arranged, did he not, for an organization over the country that would locally represent conscientious objectors in the various communities?

Mr. BIELASKI. He did. He said his associates endeavored to perfect a sort of legal aid association to conscientious objectors, also providing radical speakers, and all that sort of thing.

Our trouble with him was not that he was a conscientious objector, but that he was a man who was trying to create conscientious objectors, and to really interfere with the conduct of the war.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was Prof. Scott Nearing tied in with that organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes. Scott Nearing was one of the men who was associated with Baldwin. I think he was also deliberately opposing the successful conduct of the war.

Senator WOLCOTT. He was arrested, too, was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he is under indictment awaiting trial.

Maj. HUMES. Have you in your files a record of the officers of the various organizations?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Can you furnish us with a memorandum of who they are and their location?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. If you do not object, I will ask Mr. Allen to get that up. It is all a matter of record.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember who the officers of the People's Council for Peace and Democracy were?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not remember, offhand. I remember Theodore Lunde was the most active man from Chicago. He had been an especially active pro-German.

The same group of principals made up most of the officers in all these organizations.

Senator OVERMAN. Were they financed by the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think not; no, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you say David Starr Jordan was treasurer of this concern?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was treasurer of the organizing committee of the People's Council.

Maj. HUMES. He was treasurer of the organizing committee of the People's Council for Peace and Democracy.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he not write a letter here of some character?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. He has written a letter asking to have it put into the record. It has not gone into the record yet.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Bielaski, you have mentioned some of these organizations here, headed by very active men, the object of which was, at one time, to defeat the operation of the selective-service law, to stir up the slumbering conscience of the people so that they might think they had conscientious objections to serving in the Army. Do you know how many conscientious objectors there were throughout the whole country?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; I do not.

Senator WOLCOTT. After the work of all these organizations, do you know how many conscientious objectors turned up?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not; but the War Department undoubtedly has those records complete.

Senator WOLCOTT. Capt. Lester, have you those figures?

Capt. LESTER. I have the figures as to the number that finally refused military service of any character.

Senator WOLCOTT. On the ground that they were conscientious objectors?

Capt. LESTER. On the ground of being conscientious objectors.

You see, they were classified, by order of the Secretary of War, in February, 1918, into noncombatant military service, and those who refused combatant or noncombatant military service; those who were permitted to take noncombatant military service after the order of February 12, 1918, and those who refused noncombatant military service, or military service of any character, were segregated and taken to Fort Leavenworth; and out of, I think, over 3,600,000 men that went into the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, there were 230 men finally rounded up at Fort Leavenworth who refused military service of any character.

Senator WOLCOTT. On the ground of conscientious objection?

Capt. LESTER. On the ground of being conscientious objectors.

Mr. BIELASKI. There were a great many cases also of men who were members of organizations like the Mennonite Church, who did not follow the tenets of the church, but went into the Army. I happen to know of some personal cases where young Mennonites went into the Marines and came back with one leg and that sort of thing.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think there were some Quakers who fought also?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; there were some Quakers who went in, too. I think there were more who violated the tenets of the church than those who tried to be excused from military service.

Senator OVERMAN. There were only about 300 applicants to be excused from any kind of military service?

Senator WOLCOTT. Two hundred and thirty.

Senator OVERMAN. Two hundred and thirty who absolutely refused to do military service of any character?

Maj. HUMES. Any kind of service; yes. Then there was the other class that entered the noncombatant service.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know how many there were?

Capt. LESTER. I have not the figures here, but there was a comparatively small number. It was less than 2,000 men who refused combatant service but who accepted noncombatant service.

Mr. O'BRIAN. I might say that Judge Mack, who was a member of the commission which heard these cases, told me, within a week, that there were only 1,800, all together, that came before the committee for classification, and of that number 230 refused to do anything at all, would not put on a uniform and refused to do any kind of labor, and went to Leavenworth. The balance accepted some form of noncombatant service.

Senator WOLCOTT. The balance of the 1,800?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. That is correct; and the 230 that went to Leavenworth were given service on farms in the neighborhood. They had the alternative of imprisonment or going on the farms to work, and most of them accepted the farm work. There were only 230 of them altogether out of any military service.

Senator OVERMAN. Any other questions, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all.

Senator OVERMAN. We can go on for about 10 minutes if you have anybody else, Major.

Maj. HUMES. No; I think that is all at this time.

Senator OVERMAN. Then we will take a recess until 2.30.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of the recess.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not believe we will wait any longer for the other members of the committee to come. I think we will just go on.

Maj. HUMES. Maj. Keehn desires to make a statement.

TESTIMONY OF MAJ. ROY D. KEEHN.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. KEEHN. I would like to state that I have been connected with the Eastern Department, Governor's Island, N. Y., and did not expect to be in Washington and had prepared a statement covering a few points that were brought out in this hearing that are within my particular knowledge, in Chicago.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is your home, Major?

Maj. KEEHN. Chicago. And if I may be permitted to read this statement, it will answer the purpose.

Maj. HUMES. Where do you reside, Maj. Keehn?

Maj. KEEHN. My home?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Maj. KEEHN. I live in Chicago, Ill.

Maj. HUMES. What is your business?

Maj. KEEHN. Lawyer; that is, lawyer and newspaper man. I start right out by stating who I am.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you now a major in the Army?

Maj. KEEHN. In the Judge Advocate General's department.

I am a member of the law firm of Dickinson, Wetten & Keehn of Chicago, and before entering the Army was for 10 years general counsel and attorney for the Chicago Examiner—which became the Chicago Herald and Examiner when the two newspaper properties were merged—the Chicago American and all of Mr. Hearst's interests in Chicago, as well as general manager for Mr. Hearst's Chicago papers for the past four years.

Senator OVERMAN. I should not think a lawyer would have much time to do that sort of work.

Maj. KEEHN. Maybe I was not much of a lawyer.

Senator OVERMAN. I have no doubt you were a good lawyer.

Maj. KEEHN. During the time specified I have been in constant touch with Mr. Hearst and have received from him his general directions and instructions to managers and editors, formulating the editorial policies of his newspaper publications. It was my duty to see that these directions and instructions were carried out in his Chicago newspapers. The effect of these policies can best be illustrated by the subjoined statement from Mr. Samuel Insull, of Chicago, chairman of the Illinois State Council of Defense, appointed by Gov. Frank O. Lowden. Mr. Insull is a large stockholder in and general manager of most of the public utility corporations of Illinois, and these corporations have frequently been under the fire of the Hearst Chicago papers in line with these papers' policies advocating public ownership and control of public utilities. Comment from Mr. Insull therefore could not be expected to be more favorable to these publications than from any other fair-minded man. [Reading:]

If I were called to testify I would have to say that I had something to do in a semiofficial capacity, in directing the work of the British Government in this country prior to the entry of the United States into the war. At that time I believed Mr. Hearst's newspapers to be anti-British—not pro-German, but anti-British.

After America's entry into the war, as chairman of the State Council of Defense, I had occasion to watch the Hearst papers and I know that they gave my committee full and complete support, and I know them to have been truly American and very patriotic.

I may add that is a statement which was given to the editor of the Herald and Examiner last week and repeated to me in Chicago last week.

In carrying into effect Mr. Hearst's instructions which came to me, his two Chicago newspapers devoted more space to the stimulation of war activities as desired by the different departments of the Government, and to the needs of such great charitable enterprises as the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association.

he Young Women's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish War Relief, and the Salvation Army, than any of the other newspapers of that city. You understand I am talking about Chicago all the time.

To illustrate specifically this statement the following is a report of such space devoted by the Chicago dailies to the fourth Liberty loan, compiled and given out for publication by the Chicago Liberty loan committee:

	Lines.
Chicago American	120, 770
Chicago Herald and Examiner	118, 181
Chicago Tribune	93, 805
Chicago Daily News	78, 394
Chicago Post	75, 897
Chicago Journal	70, 807

The Chicago American and Herald and Examiner run 280 agate lines to the column. The Tribune has 300 agate lines to the column, the News, Post, and Journal 305 agate lines to the column.

Mr. Hearst's Chicago papers, conducted directly under his personal instructions and supervision, have received many letters and telegram of thanks and commendation from high public officials and leaders in war activities of the Nation and city. The following telegram from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, sent during the campaign for the second Liberty loan, is typical:

CLEAR LAKE, IOWA, October 1, 1918.

ROY D. KEEHN,

Manager, Hearst Chicago Newspapers,

Examiner, Chicago, Ill.

Extremely sorry I did not have the pleasure of seeing you in Chicago. Many thanks for the kind support the Examiner is giving the Liberty Loan and for its generous treatment of me. You are rendering a genuine service to the country and I want you to know how deeply I appreciate it. Warm regards.

(Signed) W. G. McADOO.

It has been intimated or insinuated that Mr. Hearst was not generally friendly to assisting our Government agencies in support of war activities. I would like to cite one instance in which I personally participated. The following letter to Hon. Joseph Tumulty, secretary to the President, is self-explanatory:

SEPTEMBER TWELFTH, NINETEEN EIGHTEEN.

Hon. JOSEPH TUMULTY,

Secretary to the President,

White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TUMULTY: Confirming my suggestion made to you in Washington the 8th and 11th insts.: I said I believed that I was in a position to get into your hands the confidential files of Count von Bernstorff and Captain Boy-Ed, through the use of Gaston B. Means, who, prior to our entering the war, was the confidential aide to Captain Boy-Ed.

I base this opinion on information given to me by Means in the course of the last two months while he has been a witness in the King case in Chicago, which I tried in the Probate court.

While Means has been tried for murder, accused of forging this will and of being a German agent, I have found him to be truthful, accurate and absolutely dependable.

He brought these matters to my attention suggesting that documents which he could secure would be valuable for publication in the Hearst newspapers, and would constitute the greatest news beat of the war. Means told me that he thought he could put me in touch with official German documents which would not only show that all of the reflections on Mr. Hearst by rival newspapers were untrue, but that the very papers making them had been involved with the German propaganda.

Naturally, I was interested in securing these documents which he claimed were in these files. I later told Mr. Hearst about it and he said if it were possible for Means to secure such documents it was his duty to turn them over to the President at once instead of using them for newspaper purposes, and later, if it was determined that there was anything in the documents that should or could be published, he would naturally be glad to have his papers publish such matters.

Having confidence in Means' integrity, and feeling that he is sincere in believing that he can locate these documents, I have decided to remain with him and work on the matter with him so long as there is a chance to find them. Believing as I do, I feel it is my duty, and my patriotic one, to do this, and am sure he does.

I do feel that our search ought to be permitted to proceed with cooperation but without unnecessary interference from Government agents, however, so that we should have any protection to make legitimate search for these documents successful.

Respectfully yours,

(Signed) ROY D. KEENE

P. S. Please acknowledge to Biltmore..

In line with his attitude as defined in this letter, Mr. Hearst directed me to obtain Government sanction and cooperation in making search for the papers, and if found, to turn them over directly to the President. The search was conducted and several weeks of my time and the time of others was used, and Mr. Hearst personally paid the expenses. Gen. Churchill, Chief of the United States Army Intelligence Bureau, thanked us for the service rendered the Government and his department in this work.

Soon after the Alien Enemy Property Custodian made public his report on the purchase of the Washington Times, showing that a number of brewers had made a loan to aid in such purchase, it was stated in the public prints that money of the Washington Times had been used in the purchase of the Chicago Herald on behalf of Mr. Hearst. As soon as this misstatement was called to my attention I directed the head of our Washington news service to trace it to its source and make authoritative denial. In spite of this effort in the cause of fair play the statement has been repeated and has made its appearance in the record of the hearings now being conducted by your committee.

I desire, therefore, to state here the full facts about the purchase of the Chicago Herald and to clear the record of any statement of intimation that any brewers' money, or Washington Times money, was used in any way in connection with the purchase.

The Chicago Herald was purchased by the Illinois Publishing & Printing Co., an Illinois corporation, which was then publishing the Chicago Examiner, now the Herald and Examiner, from the Herald Co. The price paid was $450,000, payable in equal annual deferred payments, and not a cent of the purchase price was paid in cash, but all was secured by a general mortgage which set forth the terms of the contract and which was recorded in the recorder's office of Cook County, Ill., in May of last year, and was a matter of public record long before this hearing was even suggested and for that reason was available to any one who cared to ascertain the facts and state the truth.

I might add that I negotiated the deal; I represented Mr. Hearst in the negotiations, and as an officer of the company signed the contract and speak of personal knowledge.

This purchase included the Chicago Daily and Sunday Herald, the Associated Press franchise, and other news franchises, several presses and press equipment.

All of the capital stock of the Illinois Publishing & Printing Co. was then and is now owned by Mr. Hearst.

My purpose in making this statement is to shed a true light on the editorial policies as reflected by the Hearst newspapers under the guidance of Mr. Hearst, because my position with the Hearst publications has given me an intimate knowledge of his attitude and work possessed by but few men in the country.

I believe it possible to choose with design scraps of news and fragments of editorials from any aggressive newspaper in the country and to sift and arrange them with a prosecutor's cunning and make the same sort of a showing against that publication as had been made before the country by the reports of this hearing. In fair and open hearing, where it is desired to obtain all of the facts and the truth revealed by the facts, the whole attitude of the paper and the tone of all its publications should be taken into account and weighed as this committee is sure to do when it begins its deliberations.

I know from personal knowledge and association with him for years and especially during the period of the war that there is no aggressive citizen more truly American than is Mr. Hearst.

I would like also to read a telegram received last night from the managing editor of the Herald, which he has asked me to read:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 8, 1919.

Major ROY KEEHN,

Poichatan Hotel, Washington, D. C.

May I suggest that you put the following in the record of the Senatorial Committee, viz. the war service of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

1. Petitioned Congress with a million of names calling for Universal Service training act.
2. Opened at own expense twenty seven recruiting stations including central camp at Grant Park, the day after the United States entered the war.
3. Helped seventy-eight thousand Chicago men to fill out their questionnaires.
4. Helped sixty-three thousand Chicagoans to fill out their war time income tax reports at its branch office.
5. Operated only free government bureau for women in war time in the United States. Placed 6,400 women in war work.
6. Gave more free space to every drive of the Red Cross, the Liberty Loan and sales, War Savings Stamps sales, etc. etc., than any other newspaper in America,
7. Is one of the Hearst string of papers which bought more than $1,500,000 in Liberty Bonds, more than any other paper or group of newspapers in the United States.
8. Sent the living, smiling, moving pictures of the families of Chicago's Fighting Boys' over there in 48 reels of Smile Film for Christmas.
9. Conducts the Soldiers Friend Bureau, headed by a retired Major USA, and a competent staff. It will try to get for a soldier, sailor, or his family, anything they want.
10. Established a free employment bureau for soldiers and sailors and gives free want ads. to soldiers and sailors seeking employment.

WALTER HOWEY,

Managing Editor Chicago Herald and Examiner.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you desire to ask him some questions?

Maj. HUMES. No; I think not, Senator.

Maj. KEEHN. I wanted to state that I have appeared simply because I felt there were some things in the record that personally were in my knowledge that I should speak about, particularly the purchase of the Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Senator OVERMAN. I invited everybody here who desired to be heard. I understood you to say there was no money paid by the Washington Times at all?

Maj. KEEHN. No; there was no money paid at all. There was a promise on behalf of the Illinois Publishing & Printing Co. to pay that sum.

If you care to have me do so, I can wait, if you do not want to proceed now.

Senator OVERMAN. If you will, wait until Senator Sterling comes, please.

Maj. KEEHN. I can retire to the back end of the room if you want to go ahead with something else.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; you may retire to the rear of the room.

Mr. VON MACH. May I be heard now, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; we will hear you now.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDMUND VON MACH.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. State your name, residence, and your occupation.

Mr. VON MACH. My residence is Little Gaffert, West Brooksville, Me. I do not know about my occupation. I have been very successfully gagged as an author, just at present, and so I suppose I had better call myself a farmer.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you been connected with any institution as a professor?

Mr. VON MACH. No.

Senator OVERMAN. Your name is von Mach?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. How do you spell it?

Mr. VON MACH. V-o-n M-a-c-h.

Senator OVERMAN. As I understand, you want to make a statement to the committee?

Mr. VON MACH. I should like to, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed.

Mr. VON MACH. Is it quite fair, sir, for me to make my introductory statement without the other Senators being present, when they have heard all these outrageous attacks that have been made on my honor?

Senator OVERMAN. If you desire to have them, possibly not.

Mr. VON MACH. If it is possible, sir. If it is not asking too much, I should like very much to have some of the other Senators present.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Sterling and Senator Wolcott will be here in a few minutes. We will wait a few minutes for them. Mr. Humes, have you anything else you can proceed with until they come?

Maj. HUMES. Nothing else.

(At this point Senator Sterling came into the room, and the statement of Maj. Keehn was handed to him.)

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Keehn, Senator Sterling would like to have time to read this statement of yours. You may come down in the morning, if you want to go now.

Senator STERLING. Will that be convenient for you?

Maj. KEEHN. I will wait here. I would just as soon do so. I think it would be better for me to wait.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not come down in the morning?

Maj. KEEHN. I think I can, but I am not at all certain. I may have to go to New York. Gen. Bell died, I understand, yesterday, and I was at Governor's Island this week, and I have not been at the War Department, and I do not know what may develop from that. I may be requested to go there for the funeral.

Senator STERLING. I will see if I can go over your statement now.

Maj. KEEHN. I will wait here.

Senator OVERMAN. Where were you born, Mr. von Mach?

Mr. VON MACH. In Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. How long have you been in this country?

Mr. VON MACH. Twenty-seven years.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you been naturalized?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your age?

Mr. VON MACH. Forty-nine.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better proceed. The other members of the committee will read what you have to say. Senator Wolcott is coming in now.

Mr. VON MACH. My purpose in requesting you, sir, to grant me a hearing, was a double one.

In the first place, I desire to enable your committee, so far as I am able to do so, to ascertain the whole truth; and, in the second place, I wish to defend myself against the accusations which have been made here against me. So far as I have been able to gather from the news accounts, these accusations have practically amounted to this: That I had stolen or misapplied funds collected for the purpose of sending milk abroad; that I had been a member of the vicious German propaganda; that I had received and disbursed German Government money; and that my actions since we entered the war have been very suspicious, to the extent, practically, of disloyalty.

In order to conserve your time as much as possible, I have prepared a brief statement. After finishing that statement I desire to submit to you some documents, and first give you an outline of what these papers contain, and then put myself entirely at your disposal for the asking of questions. In my letter to you, sir, I requested that Mr. Bielaski and Mr. Becker, who, I understand, have made most of these charges, be present, because it is my intention to prove to you that the charges have been willfully false, either in toto or in the inferences which you gentlemen were expected to draw from them.

If, after reading this statement, you desire to have me make any supplementary statements on any subject whatsoever, I am entirely at your disposal.

I was born in Germany in 1870, came to America in 1891, declared my intention to become an American citizen in 1912, being sponsored by the late governor and Secretary of the Navy under McKinley, John D. Long—to whom I was related by marriage—and Mr. Ewing Hamlin, a naturalized American citizen of Scotch birth. I renounced my allegiance to my former sovereign, the German Emperor, in May, 1914, and, after the lapse of the legally demanded six months, was granted my papers as a sovereign American citizen, in November, 1914, the two men mentioned above again vouching for my character.

For the reasons inducing me to become an American citizen, I wish to refer to a public statement which I have made. It was made in reply to the New York Staats Zeitung, which, during the summer of 1918, announced a prize for the best essay on "Why I became an American citizen." The essays were submitted anonymously to the two judges, Messrs. Ludwig Nissen and William Foster, of New York, who awarded to my essay the first prize.

Senator OVERMAN. What did you say about the New York Times?

Mr. VON MACH. The New York Times once happened to get hold of a paper of this kind to which the Times had no right whatever. The Times had had a reporter at the speech. Instead of quoting what I had said, the Times printed what I had roughly put down as a note for myself, but not intending to say or publish.

The reasons "why I became an American citizen," in translation, read as follows:

The German longing to see the world was mine by inheritance. On my father's side my relatives had seen the great East beckoning to them, while on my mother's side America had been their ideal. As a young man my grandfather had settled in Louisiana. Later when he had returned to Germany and was suffering from the effects of his Russian captivity—as a Saxon he had been in Russia with Napoleon—he never tired speaking of his beloved America and singing the praises of the heroes of the War of Independence. When I was a little boy I read much of Washington and Franklin and the other great men of the American Revolution, and was given detailed instruction in American history with its many epochs of achievements in the struggle for the rights of the individual.

As soon as I was old enough to live my own life after my own fashion I came to America, finished my education in one of the oldest universities here, and have lived here steadily since then, with the exception of a trip around the world and visits in my old home.

I am married here, and my wife is descended, both on her father's and her mother's side, from the first immigrants on the Mayflower.

I became an American citizen, not because I did not love Germany and my people there, but because the Constitution of the United States appealed to me as the very best of any State, and because I believe that a man who wishes to live permanently in a country has the duty to take an active part in its affairs as a citizen.

Moreover, I saw to my amazement and sorrow that ever more people in this country are turning a cold shoulder to many of the principles contained in the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, and I felt proud in the thought that as an American citizen I might do something toward winning greater respect and honor for these two great documents of the freedom of man.

True Americanism is founded, according to my views, on the love of mankind. Pride at being a free man and no one's subject characterizes the real American.

On November 27, 1917, Mr. William Roscoe Thayer, the propagandist of the Italian cause in this country, reverted in a letter in the Boston Herald to the charge having been made on me of being and having been a paid German agent. I replied in the Boston Herald as follows: "I have lived in America 26 years"—that was a year ago—"and during all this time I have had neither directly nor indirectly any connection with the German Government, nor received one penny from it or any of its representatives. Nor have I had any official or unofficial position with it or them."

To this I may add that beginning with 1899 I have written books, delivered paid lectures, and received pay for newspaper articles, like other men in my position, and that I have, of course, never traced the source of the moneys paid me back beyond their immediate and natural source. From October, 1914, to May, 1915, for instance, I wrote weekly articles, called "The German viewpoint," for the Boston Transcript, at the invitation of its managing editor, Mr. Mandell, who claimed, because of poverty, that he was unable to pay value. He paid me $25 for each article. I have no means of knowing whether he was reimbursed for these amounts by the German Government or any of its agents. At the time I believed that this was not the case. Since then I have heard rumors that he accepted allied money. If this should be true, and I urge this committee to investigate this rumor, he may, of course, have earlier accepted German money.

But so far as I am concerned, my above statement that during the 26 years I have been in America I have received not one penny from the German Government remains true.

Many years before the outbreak of the European war, and as the result of impressions which had gradually grown upon me, I came to the conclusion that America as a whole had a very inaccurate conception of European conditions, and that especially Germany was little understood, and that the problems facing her on the theater of European politics had not entered into American thought. When, therefore, in 1911 I came across a book by Paul Rohrbach which seemed to me to express these problems in clear terms, I translated the book. The manuscript was first offered to the MacMillan Co. whose president, Mr. Brett, wrote that he was deeply interested in the book, but that unfortunately the American public had no interest whatsoever in world politics and problems, and that even this excellent book would find no readers. He was therefore obliged to refuse to publish it. My literary agent thereupon—a man, by the way, of British birth—submitted the manuscript to 14 other publishers, all of whom declined it, and in most instances it went to the head man, and most of them declined it for the same reason as Mr. Brett. My agent then hit upon the idea that the book should receive, if possible, a preface by a big American who might be supposed to be beyond the limitations mentioned by Mr. Brett as characteristic of all America. We asked first Mr. Roosevelt and then Mr. Taft to read the book and write the preface. Neither man was willing to read the book. With the tenacity for which the English bull dog is known my agent then suggested that I should endeavor to have the German Emperor write the preface, or accept the dedication of the book in a statement which could be announced as a preface by him, and thus make the publication of the book possible here. I may add also that in England he was in connection with another publishing firm, and I shall submit to you afterwards the letter written in 1912—perhaps I might submit that letter right now because it throws a very interesting light upon conditions there.

Senator WOLCOTT. What year was it that you made this translation?

Mr. VON MACH. In the summer of 1912.

I suppose it is not necessary, if I show you the name of the publishing firm, to mention the name, but I should like to read this sentence about it. This publisher in Great Britain was willing to publish the book there if by any chance the German Emperor could write a preface or accept the dedication. He says:

I think the average Briton has come to the conclusion that, if there is to be war, "let us have it and get done with it," rather than this interminable talking and writing about it.

That was written on October 15, 1912.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the title of that book?

Mr. VON MACH. It has appeared since the outbreak of the European war. At the outbreak of the war the Macmillan Co. inquired whether the book was still for publication, and they published it under the title of "German World Policy." The German title, which I considered erroneous, was "The German Idea of the World." A great deal of misunderstanding has been due to the fact that we have literally translated one word from one language to another language. In one language it has one connotation that it does not have in the other.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the German title?

Mr. VON MACH. "Der Deutsche Gedanke in der Welt." The word "Gedanke" has a different idea in the German than it does in translation.

At the suggestion of my literary agent I wrote to the Emperor and asked Count von Bernstorff to second my request. With his usual courtesy he did as I asked, at the same time telling me that the request was so unusual that he felt sure it would be declined. It was declined by one of the secretaries of the Emperor, and I doubt whether he himself was ever informed of it. The manuscript remained unpublished until after the outbreak of the European war, when the Macmillan Co. published it under the title "German World Policy." It was then, of course, too late to do any good.

I have mentioned this incident at length because my entire literary activity since the outbreak of the European war has been nothing but the continuance of my efforts begun in 1912, when I translated Rohrbach's book in the hope of letting America see the problems of Europe as they appeared to Europeans.

Senator NELSON. Whose book? Bernhardt's book?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; I did not even know anything about Bernhardt's book; it was a book by Rohrbach, which has been published by the MacMillan Co.

Senator NELSON. I misunderstood you. I thought it was Bernhardt's book.

Mr. VON MACH. I would not have given myself to propagate Bernhardt's views.

Then, in the stress of life, an individual or a nation is forced to take a stand, rare good luck may help either to choose rightly or ignorantly. Nine times out of ten, however, the correct choice will depend on an accurate knowledge of all the facts. America is fortunate in having among her sons descendants from all the nations of Europe, who, therefore, may be expected to understand intuitively the hearts of the people of their old homes. America, therefore, of all nations need never be without a full comprehension of all the facts, unless in times of stress and fearing to espouse the unpopular part at the moment her immigrated sons turn cowards. If I am charged with having refused thus to turn coward, I plead guilty. But in so pleading I proclaim myself a true American, for America wants her sons to be brave, not only physically but also spiritually, and despises cowards.

But it has been claimed my attitude since Congress declared war against Germany has been open to suspicion. I deny this. I have made my attitude perfectly clear on two occasions, once in a letter to the Attorney General and once in an article written for and published in the Mitteilungen, the official organ of the German-American National Alliance. To the Attorney General I wrote, on March 17, 1918:

When Congress declared war our beliefs could not alter over night, although our obligations prescribed a new course.

Senator NELSON. We had not declared war March 17. We did not declare war until April.

Mr. VON MACH. This is March 17, 1918 [reading]:

Love for the country of one's birth, for one's parents, relatives, and boyhood friends is an involuntary emotion. The man who has been blessed with it can no more eradicate it from his heart than a living man can stop breathing. Obedience to the Constitution and the laws made under it, and active thoughts for the welfare of one's new country, are subject to the will of the individual. So far as these voluntary acts are concerned, I am not conscious of having deviated in the slightest from the oath I swore when I became an American citizen.

In the Mitteilungen I said, in June, 1917 (in translation):

An honest man keeps his oath. We have sworn allegiance to the Constitution, and this means that we can not help the enemies of our country. "You dear ones in the old homeland," many a German heart says here, "I have hoped and prayed and have failed. Now we are at war. We may not help you. Surely, you understand that; for you too are German, and know that a German man does his duty, though his heart should break in so doing."

In the terrible crisis of the past years the American citizens of German descent have done their duty. They have done it in spite of the persecution and unjust accusations brought against them by the temporal powers, in spite of the attempt made by men in authority to have them forswear their race and character—in spite, I say, of the greatest provocation on the part of the authorities, because their allegiance does not lie to these men in authority or to any men at all, but to the Constitution.

One of the hardest things to bear has been the fact that most of the charges brought against us men and women of German descent are based on accusations laid against us, not by the proper agencies of our own Government but by the agents of a foreign government, by the British secret service, and that the criterion of our loyalty in consequence has not been our fidelity to our own Constitution but our hostility to the form of government represented, and the methods employed, by Great Britain.

Long before Congress voted to enter the war, the British secret service, I have been informed, had compiled a blacklist of American citizens distasteful to them, and when we declared war this blacklist, compiled contrary to every American principle of right and international comity, was taken over, I understand, as the nucleus of a list of so-called disloyal citizens. If you really desire to get at the truth, your committee should scrutinize the workings of the British secret service in this country since 1914, and possibly earlier.

I can submit to you what purports to be the statement by a paid secret service man of Great Britain, stationed months before the outbreak of the European war at one of our great eastern ports, merely a cog in the wheel of an enormously big machine, taking his orders and going where he was sent by the head of the British secret service stationed in Canada.

My own activities since the outbreak of the European war in 1914 fall into well-defined groups: First, from the fall of 1914 to December, 1915, when with pen and voice I was actively endeavoring to present to my new fellow citizens the point of view of my old home and the truth, as I saw it.

Secondly, from December, 1915, when I accepted the position of executive chairman of the citizens' committee for food shipments, with offices in New York, to December, 1916, when we discontinued the active work of the committee.

Third, from January, 1917, to our declaration of war on Good Friday of 1917, when, having become convinced that we were drifting into war, I worked solely on my own responsibility in an effort to arouse the country and their Representatives in Congress to a realization of the true condition of affairs.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you a question. Did you, during those years, 1915 and 1916, ever denounce or criticize the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. VON MACH. I have said publicly a great many times——

Senator NELSON. Did you then, during those years?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe I did, sir; but I did not—your question refers now just merely to the Lusitania. Supposing we say in not only the Lusitania but other incidents of the war where we felt criticism was necessary.

Senator NELSON. Confine yourself to that. It was a case of its own kind.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, there were so many people to condemn that it was not necessary for me to raise my voice here in condemnation; but, if you desire——

Senator NELSON. Did you or did you not?

Mr. VON MACH. If you desire, I will tender you a letter, which I wrote to my brother in Germany, in which I very severely condemned the sinking of the Lusitania, not on grounds of international law, because I believe on grounds of international law you might find excuses, but I said: "You can not ever expect to have a country be friends with you if you hurt the feelings of the country, as the sinking of the Lusitania has done, and there is no worse thing that can be done if you want to keep friends with a country." I maintained at the moment——

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not condemn the act, you condemned it from the German point of view.

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, I have condemned the war and all acts of war so frequently in books, I am going to come to it in a moment here, that it was hardly necessary. I have been attacked by people who have had the chance of investigating, of reading what I have said. I have condemned from A to Z all cruelty, all spilling of blood. I have never——

Senator NELSON. Did you ever condemn the operations of the German Army in Belgium in 1914?

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, I had endeavored to ascertain the actual data of this.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. VON MACH. But I have been——

Senator NELSON. You have not been able to discover it?

Mr. VON MACH. I could not, sir, nor have you, sir, because the report that Ambassador Page sent to the State Department in January, 1915, has never been published yet, and if you, Senator, will call upon the State Department to submit to you the Page report of January, 1915, you can then compare that with the so-called Bryce report, I think you, Senator, will agree with me that the actual facts about that have never yet become known.

Senator OVERMAN. How do you know about the Page report? Did you see it?

Mr. VON MACH. I will tell you, Senator. On January 28, 1915, the New York World, which was very close to the administration, and I believe still is very close to the administration, published a statement that Ambassador Page had submitted to the State Department a report sent to him by Earl Grey—Sir Edward Grey—explaining that an investigation by the British Government had taken place, and that not one single instance of so-called atrocities had been proved. Now, that statement entirely coincided with the news reports from Great Britain.

In Boston there is a gentleman named Firth, whose daughter is married and in Manchester, England, and he was sending out reports to the effect that his daughter had seen in Manchester—I believe it is Manchester, it might be another city—had seen there little children horribly mutilated by German soldiers in Belgium. At the same time the news, the British press, published the statement that the bishop in that same place had publicly announced that he had been very much interested in all these stories, and had tried to trace them down, and had not found one single instance of their being true. Thereupon a lady in Boston wrote to Mr. Firth, and Mr. Firth then referred this lady to the letters from his daughter, stating that his daughter had never said that she had seen incidents of that kind. Nevertheless he sent out the reports of the letters saying that his daughter had seen them. When I began to be interested I tried to find out about those. I asked Mr. Lansing, in the summer of 1915, if he would have the goodness to tell me about this so-called Page report in the files of the State Department; that I had mentioned it in a speech which I delivered in Buffalo on the same platform with Mr. Whitridge, and he had challenged me, saying that there was no such report. Mr. Lansing, in a very courteous note, replied, referring me to the newspaper, the New York World, saying that a search of the files of the State Department had not revealed the presence of the Page report. I then wrote to the Secretary of State that it seemed to me that this was so important a matter that instead of referring me to a newspaper denial, I felt I had the right to ask him please to tell me definitely, is that report there or is it not there, because I did not want to go on referring to that report if it was not there, and the Secretary refused to say whether or no it was there.

Senator NELSON. Did you ever take any notice of Col. Mercer's report? You know who he was?

Mr. VON MACH. I know who Col. Mercer was.

Senator NELSON. Did you know about his report?

Mr. VON MACH. I knew about his report, and have not been able in my own mind, Senator—and I know that this will not appeal to you, this statement, but I have not been able in my own mind—to ascertain whether the hardships referred to there were the hardships naturally resulting from war and the devastation of war, such as Gen. Sherman described on the march to the sea, or whether they were the result of individual wickedness of individual people: as to my mind there is a fundamental difference. The one we ought to put down as a plague.

Senator NELSON. You are insulting Gen. Sherman's Army. They never killed any women or children. It is an insult to compare them with the Germans. Do you understand that? It is an insult to compare Sherman's army with the German Army in Belgium in 1914. Sherman's army, whatever else it may have done—it may have destroyed lots of property, but they never killed any women or children in cold blood. Is not that so?

Senator OVERMAN. That is so. I lived down there.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, did I give the impression in my reply to the Senator that I wished to compare Gen. Sherman's army? It was not my intention to do that in the least. I tried to point out, Senator, that I believe that there is a fundamental difference between willful atrocities committed by individuals, not as army, and the results would naturally follow in the train of any great war, and that was all I wished to say, and I wanted to be perfectly open and honest with the Senator who asked me the question.

Senator NELSON. But do not for a moment compare the German Army in Belgium with the American Army during the Civil War. The Americans are not that kind of people.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I did not compare them, and is it very fair of you to charge me with having compared them, when I told you very clearly that that was not my intention?

Senator NELSON. Well, what do you think of the case of Capt. Fryatt?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, would you permit me first to finish my statement, and then ask me questions?

Senator NELSON. This goes to the value of your statement. Will you do you think about the execution of Capt. Fryatt?

Mr. VON MACH. I am not familiar with all the details, Senator. Will you tell me the details?

Senator NELSON. Are you waiting for the State Department to say that?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. About the shooting of that woman, Mrs. Cavell?

Mr. VON MACH. I think that in the case of any woman, whether a country believes her to be a spy or not, clemency should always be exercised.

Senator NELSON. Did you not know that she was not convicted of being a spy? She was convicted of helping Belgian soldiers cross the line. She was not convicted of being a spy. She was convicted of helping Belgian soldiers; that is all. That was not spy work.

Senator WOLCOTT. Well, Doctor, there is one act charged against the Germans of which I think you can have no doubt concerning the facts. I am going to recall it to your mind and ask you if you have ever condemned that, to wit, the invasion of Belgium? Did you ever denounce that? There is no doubt that Germany invaded Belgium contrary to treaty obligations and all the rights of a free people. Did you ever condemn that?

Mr. VON MACH. I did not.

Senator STERLING. What was your view in regard to that?

Mr. VON MACH. I have expressed my views at such great length in my writings, Senator, that——

Senator STERLING. I have not seen your writings.

Mr. VON MACH. Can you not later permit me to submit my writings in answer to that rather than to make a brief statement here?

Senator STERLING. I would not want to read through your writings in order to find out what your idea was in regard to the invasion of Belgium. I think you can state that in a very few words.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, what you are trying to get at in this committee, I understand, is to investigate any evidence of vicious pro-German propaganda. You do not desire to constitute yourselves a committee of inquisition on the views and opinions of individuals.

Senator OVERMAN. But you volunteered to come here as a witness. We have a right to ask you questions?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, if you desire me to go at length into that question, I am perfectly ready to answer what I think of the invasion of Belgium.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. von Mach, did you make any effort to investigate that situation?

Mr. VON MACH. Of Belgium?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. I made great efforts.

Maj. HUMES. What efforts did you make?

Mr. VON MACH. The international aspects?

Maj. HUMES. The invasion of Belgium.

Mr. VON MACH. The international aspects of it, or the facts?

Maj. HUMES. The facts and the German viewpoint.

Mr. VON MACH. Major, the only means of investigation, the actual sources that were at my disposal, were to read all the papers in this country, and in addition, to read as many of the European papers, both French and German papers, as I could get hold of.

Maj. HUMES. The only information that you sought then was from the public prints?

Mr. VON MACH. From all the various countries, and in addition I of course got as much information as I could from people who came here. Whenever a newspaper reporter came from abroad, I investigated as much as possible. I consulted Dr. Dernburg and others.

Senator WOLCOTT. You mean you studied as to the propriety of the Germans' conduct in the invasion of Belgium?

Mr. VON MACH. It seemed to me a tremendous mistake.

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not have to go very far to inform yourself on that. Why did you not consult the works of Von Bethmann-Hollweg.

Mr. VON MACH. I found that in this country Von Bethmann-Hollweg's works are not taken as the final word on questions of ethics.

Senator NELSON. But there are a few things you knew. You knew that there was a treaty on neutrality with Belgium, did you not?

Mr. VON MACH. You refer to the treaty of 1837?

Senator NELSON. I refer to both treaties, that one and the older one.

Mr. VON MACH. That is the older one. The other one was 1870.

Senator NELSON. Did you not know of the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, and that the Prussians signed it?

Mr. VON MACH. I knew that.

Senator NELSON. You knew that the Germans had invaded Belgium?

Mr. VON MACH. I knew that.

Senator NELSON. Did you need to consult the papers to get at those two facts?

Mr. VON MACH. I did, sir. The major asked me whether I had tried to investigate the question of the invasion of Belgium, and I asked him whether he meant the question of the right or wrong from the point of view of international law, or the conduct of the invasion, and he said both. For the conduct of the invasion I consulted all the available newspapers and all the available sources, the people who had come over from there.

Senator OVERMAN. After consulting them all, what is your opinion?

Mr. VON MACH. I think that was the greatest mistake that Germany could have made.

Senator NELSON. Is that it; simply that it was a mistake?

Mr. VON MACH. Sir?

Senator STERLING. From a military and tactical standpoint, you mean?

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you not think that it was a great and crying wrong, a material wrong?

Mr. VON MACH. If I should answer——

Senator WOLCOTT. I think the Kaiser himself would now admit it to have been a mistake.

Mr. VON MACH. If I should answer that question right off now, without any qualification, I would get myself out of a momentarily difficult position, and you Senators would probably be more friendly to me, in your feeling toward me. But it would not represent the actual whole truth, and I may be entirely in error about that, but to my mind the whole war game which has been played in this world, not only in this war, but for centuries past, has been so wicked that everybody who takes part in that national game, or who starts it in any way, deserves so much condemnation that to pick out any particular part of it is perfectly ridiculous.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you think it is ridiculous to pick out the invasion of Belgium as a thing justifying comments to the effect that Germany did a great wrong? Do you think that is ridiculous?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, if I should now say "yes," I should be failing in respect to you, because you just picked it out as such; and of course you picked it out as one question to ask me.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do not have any regard for my feelings. I am interested in your point of view, that is all.

Mr. VON MACH. My point of view is that if you want to investigate that question you have to investigate the further question of the whole problem as the problem appeared to the people at that time. Now, if the thing appears to me from a certain point of view, I may be utterly wrong; I may be utterly mistaken. Now, if I am the friend of that person who so happens to act, according to the problems as they appear, it seems to me that it is so much better to try to avoid the actual underlying misunderstanding, and at this time, when really the whole of America has come to a definite conclusion, and I have accepted that conclusion, sir. So long as we were not in war I tried to prevent it if I could, by trying to center the attention upon the erroneous views and the different aspects of the problems in Europe. The moment America had finally spoken its word, and had said "We condemn," why that very moment I accepted the condemnation of my country of the past acts, and I no longer questioned them.

Now, you asked me about what I had done previously, in 1915 and 1916. That is an entirely different matter; but if I answer your question outright I may give you a different impression of what I really am, and I do not want to do that.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not seem to have any opinion of the ruth of those atrocities. You doubt them?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I doubt the atrocities so far as they are committed by individual Germans. I doubt them, but it would not have occurred to me to raise the question now again, because we are still at war, and that is a question which can easily wait. You Senators do not know the German people the way I happen to know them, and I do not believe the German people are that kind of people who will commit these individual atrocities as they have been described to us. If you want me to say, if they have been actually committed, if those atrocities have been actually committed, I believe here is not one of you gentlemen on the other side of the table who will condemn them so lastingly and who will be so unwilling and so refusing in condoning them as I shall be.

Senator NELSON. There is one thing that determines me, Professor, and that is that up to the time we entered the war you were willing to condone everything that the Germans had done in the war.

Mr. VON MACH. No, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Up to that time, and that seems to have been a dividing line.

Mr. VON MACH. It is a dividing line.

Senator NELSON. Yes; up to that time you were willing to condone everything that the Germans did.

Mr. VON MACH. No, Senator; it was not necessary to condone any of the actions that the German army had committed during this war. There were a thousand people to do that. It was not necessary to condemn them.

Senator NELSON. Was it not necessary to condemn their invasion of Belgium or the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. VON MACH. May I be permitted to go on with this statement?

Senator STERLING. Excuse me. I want to ask you a question or two. Now, you are a German?

Mr. VON MACH. Do you speak racially or nationally now, sir?

Senator STERLING. Well, racially and nationally—both.

Mr. VON MACH. Well, nationally I am an American citizen.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. Racially—

Senator STERLING. Just now. And racially?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; I am an American citizen, and I hope until my dying day.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are of German ancestry and of German birth both, born in that country?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. In what part of it?

Mr. VON MACH. In northern Germany.

Senator WOLCOTT. Prussia?

Mr. VON MACH. In Pomerania.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that a part of Prussia?

Mr. VON MACH. Pomerania is a part of Prussia; yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. You keep saying that there were plenty to blame Germany and to point out the atrocities committed by German soldiers, and you say there were plenty to condemn the invasion of Belgium, and you make that an excuse for yourself not condemning the action of Germany. Do you think that is a sufficient excuse, considering your nationality, your German birth and descent, your education, and the influence you might have exerted if you had protested against these wrongs?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I am going to quote, two pages on, from this statement from the preface of one of my books, and I believe that preface will answer your question fully. Will you permit me to defer that, only to state this?

Senator STERLING. Oh, yes. I will let you answer it in your own way.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask a question which is somewhat off this line. I want to ask it before I forget it. You are familiar with the so-called Delbrück law?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever avail yourself of the provisions of that act?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; and I will volunteer further, in reply to that, that when I became an American citizen, afterwards having heard of that, I took special pains to find out just what this so-called Delbrück law was, and whether by any chance there should be anything in it, from the German point of view, as vitiating my American citizenship, and I wrote to the then German consul in Boston and I asked him to send me a copy of this law, and I studied the law very carefully, and I have come to the conclusion that there is in that law absolutely nothing that could possibly be construed as giving double citizenship with America. If you wish to go into that whole subject, you have to look at it from the European point of view.

Take a Swiss citizen. Switzerland does not recognize the possibility of any Swiss ever becoming a different citizen. For instance, if a Swiss becomes a United States citizen in this country, and he returns to Switzerland, he is considered a Swiss citizen. Great Britain permits her citizens living across the ocean to become citizens in other countries, and when they return back again to Great Britain, after they have taken up their abode definitely in Great Britain they are eo ipso again British subjects.

When the treaty was published between Great Britain and France—a similar treaty to the one between our country and the other co-belligerents—allowing the various countries to enroll in their armies citizens of the allied countries who did not volunteer for service in their own country, there was a definite clause in which allowance was made, or in which provision was made, how things should be treated in the case of people claiming both British and French citizenship.

Now, this Delbrück law, which has been so misunderstood in this country, is the law which would make it absolutely impossible for a German who has become a citizen of the United States to come back to Germany and then claim, after a little while, to be a German citizen.

Senator STERLING. I was going to say, Mr. von Mach, I have an altogether different understanding of the Delbrück law. The Delbrück law provides, as I understand it, that a German citizen, on making a certain declaration before a certain official in Germany, can then retain his citizenship in Germany and acquire citizenship in any other country.

Senator WOLCOTT. Or by a declaration before a German consul in his country.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. May I call attention to the fact that this Delbrück law—I should have brought a copy of it if I had thought it would interest you—consists of several sections, and that there are entirely different provisions for the countries with which the German Empire has treaties? The provision to which you have referred, Senator, had no reference to countries with which the German Empire had a treaty of mutual naturalization.

Capt. LESTER. Here is a copy of the Delbrück law, if you would like to have it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you know von Bernstorff?

Mr. VON MACH. I knew him.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you know Dr. Dernburg?

Mr. VON MACH. I did.

Senator OVERMAN. He was your friend?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe I saw the man three times when he was here. He did me the honor of thinking very highly of me, and I had a great admiration for him when he was the secretary of colonies in Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you know Dr. Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. Very little, Senator. I noticed a statement in the Boston Transcript that a witness here had said before you that I had been associated with Dr. Albert. I never was associated with him. I knew him very slightly.

Senator OVERMAN. How was it with regard to Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. VON MACH. I knew Dr. Fuehr a little bit better.

Senator OVERMAN. So that you had constant communication and correspondence with German officers?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes. It was a perfectly natural thing for me to do—to be in touch with them. I inquired for accurate information, and Dernburg, I thought and I knew, had come to this country with as much accurate information as possible, and I desired any of the statements I made in print to be absolutely accurate; and to give you an instance, for instance the German Government published in the North German Gazette, which is the official gazette, statements to the effect that the Belgian chargé d'affaires had sent a report to his home government, in duplicate, one copy going through the neutral countries of the north and the other going to Germany, and that when war began this one communication was captured in Berlin, and the German Government published that. Now, I had nothing to go by except the newspaper account of this published statement in the semiofficial gazette, which was captured in Belgium and the German Government published that. Now, I had nothing to go by except the newspaper account of this published statement in the semiofficial gazette. What more natural for me when I wanted to try to find out the truth, than to write to Dr. Dernburg, "This happened before you left Germany. Can you inform me whether, on your own honor, that thing is true?" And I had communication of that kind a great many times with a great many of these gentlemen.

Senator NELSON. Were you acquainted with Von Papen?

Mr. VON MACH. Very slightly.

Senator NELSON. You met him?

Mr. VON MACH. I met him.

Senator NELSON. Were you acquainted with Boy Ed?

Mr. VON MACH. I met him once.

Senator NELSON. When did you first come to this country?

Mr. VON MACH. In 1891.

Senator NELSON. When did you become naturalized?

Mr. VON MACH. In my statement which I read before you came here I said—

Senator NELSON. I was not here, Mr. von Mach. I am sorry that I was not.

Mr. VON MACH. I said that I gave up my allegiance to my former sovereign, the German Emperor, in 1914.

Senator NELSON. Not until then?

Mr. VON MACH. May, 1914—no.

Senator NELSON. And you came here in what year?

Mr. VON MACH. In 1891, sir.

Senator NELSON. You were here 23 years?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Now, if you will permit me, Mr. von Mach. I will read a section from the Delbrück law, although it does not appear in this pamphlet as the Delbrück law. It seems to be the German naturalization law up to 1913; but here is a provision that very similar to, if not in the exact language of, the Delbrück law, which, as I understand, was enacted January 1, 1914. [Reading:]

Citizenship is not lost by one who, before acquiring foreign citizenship, has secured, on application, the written consent of the competent authorities of his home State to retain his citizenship. Before this consent is given, the German consul has to be heard.

I think that is the exact language of the Delbrück law.

Mr. VON MACH. May I read the whole? Is not the naturalization law there?

Senator STERLING. That purports to be the German naturalization law of 1913. There is no date to that, but the Delbrück law, as I say, was passed in January, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. You were naturalized after the Delbrück law?

Mr. VON MACH. Apparently.

Maj. HUMES. Did you write frequently to Dr. Dernburg and Dr. Freund on the subject?

Mr. VON MACH. I did; on all kinds of subjects, asking for information.

Maj. HUMES. Did you write to Dr. Albert at any time?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In 1914 you were writing a book, were you not?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. On "What Germany Wants"?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Was that published?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. At that time did you have any convictions on the Belgian question—the question of the invasion of Belgium?

Mr. VON MACH. You mean from the point of view of international law?

Maj. HUMES. From the point of view of the author of that particular publication.

Mr. VON MACH. Well, yes; because I treat that subject very fully in that book.

Maj. HUMES. Do you justify the invasion of Belgium in that book?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes and no.

Maj. HUMES. Well, the portion that is "yes," what was your authority for that?

Mr. VON MACH. The various treaties.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you wrote to Dr. Albert and asked Dr. Albert for information that would make it possible for you to state the German point of view, and to find a reason that would be acceptable to Americans, that you had intended to dodge the Belgian question, but that the publisher wanted the Belgian question covered, and therefore you were seeking information as to how you could best justify it?

Mr. VON MACH. I should say, from my recollection, that I did not; but I am very ready to tell you as I remember the thing now. Dr. Albert was the nephew of Prof. Kuno Francke, of Harvard, and when I had decided to write this book, "What Germany Wants," I discussed that with Prof. Francke, and Prof. Francke suggested that before I published the book it would be very desirable for me to have an interview with his nephew, who was thoroughly familiar with all the various questions, and he arranged an interview at his house between Dr. Albert and me. When Dr. Albert arrived we discussed the matter together, and I gave him the sources of my information. I remember distinctly that Dr. Albert said, "How ridiculous for you to ask me for information! You know very much more about the subject than I; and could you not give me some of the references which you have used to work up this case?" And that I did.

Maj. HUMES. He did not give you any references, then?

Mr. VON MACH. So far as I remember he did not give me the references, but I gave them to him.

Maj. HUMES. What was the purpose of this book you were publishing at that time?

Mr. VON MACH. Well, sir, will you permit me——

Maj. HUMES. Let us finish this feature first.

Mr. VON MACH. The purpose of that book is entirely expressed in the preface of the book. Will you not permit me to lead up to that? There is just one page in between.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. I had just been saying that my activities were divided first into very clearly defined periods. I had read three of those, and the fourth was the period since the declaration of war up to the present time, when I have devoted most of my energy to farming, and to watching the course of our public servants with regard to their faithful observance of their oath to the Constitution and calling the attention of the proper authorities to any infractions coming under my observation.

The dice box of fate having brought my name to the fore early during the European War, I have, of course, come into contact during the past four years with a host of people, both personally and in correspondence. In all these intercourses I have only twice met with people whose propositions seemed to me to be of an illegal nature, and both times I had the feeling my callers were Secret Service agents, intent on laying a trap for me. I sent the men sneaking. In neither case had a proposition been presented to me so fully that a denunciation of my interviewers to the proper authorities could have done any good.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you find anybody violating the Constitution? You spoke about that.

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir; I believe so.

Senator OVERMAN. In what way?

Senator WOLCOTT. Arresting people for talking, and such things as that?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. That is one of the subjects which I am perfectly prepared to take up in detail. I thought it was understood, Senator, that I should be permitted to read my statement first, and then take up the various parts, without question.

Senator WOLCOTT. Well, go on.

Mr. VON MACH. For the rest I am very happy to say that no illegal propositions have ever been brought to me, and that no attempt has ever been made to interest me in any illegal proposition. While my firm determination to hew straight to the line, and to have all my activities open and above board, was known to my friends, it is hardly believable that strangers were always familiar with it, especially in view of the attempt of a part of the press to give me another character. Personally, therefore, I can not give credence to the stories of an illegal, disloyal, and pro-German propaganda in this country, carried on by American citizens.

The spirit of my writings is expressed in the prefaces to two of my books, "What Germany Wants" and "Germany's Point of View," from which I quote briefly as follows. This is from "What Germany Wants":

Jointly they (i. e. former Frenchmen, Germans, Russians, and Englishmen of whom a few years in the clarifying atmosphere of America have made friends) pray that the present war may not be carried to such a pass that an early and honorable peace becomes impossible for any one of these great nations. Is it asking too much that America may be vouchsafed to do for their respective native lands what the American institutions have done for them individually, help them to regard each other at their true worth, unblinded by traditional hatred or fiery passion? Since war is generally only the culmination of many grievances and misunderstandings, the friend who will give more time to a study of the true aims of the contestants than to their claims and counterclaims in their moments of heated passion, is likely to be most serviceable. May there come out of this terrific struggle ways and means of preventing similar tragedies in the future, not by laws and regulations, but by a better understanding and a higher morality of the peoples of the world. And may America, who has adopted the sons of so many nations, lead the way and gain the gratitude of mankind.

It is this book, by the way, expressing thoughts of this kind, and at the time of its publication receiving the unstinted and spontaneous praise of Theodore Roosevelt, which, during the absence of Secretary Baker in France, was withdrawn from the camp libraries as being seditious and pro-German propaganda. The propaganda consists only in this, that an American citizen of German birth dared to express the thoughts of America, accepted to-day by the whole country, so far as it is truly American, as early as four years ago.

Senator NELSON. That sounds a good deal like Norman Angell's book about the "Great Illusion."

Mr. VON MACH. I am a great admirer of Norman Angell.

Senator NELSON. Yes; I can see that.

Maj. HUMES. That completes the preface, does it not?

Mr. VON MACH. That completes the preface to that book, sir.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand that preface, the purpose of this book was to support American ideals and American purposes, and preserve the integrity and peace of America. I gather that was the substance of it?

Mr. VON MACH. The purpose of the book—Major, I do not think that you yourself believe that what you have just said is a fair paraphrase of the purpose as I had expressed it here.

Maj. HUMES. Well, in a rough statement I think it is, as I understand it. It was purely American?

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, you know that your questions will be printed broadcast and that my statements on which they are based will very likely not be printed broadcast.

Maj. HUMES. I think no question will be printed unless there is an answer to the question. I assume that is a newspaper practice that is generally adhered to. Do I understand you to say that the purpose of this book was a purpose friendly to America and in the interests of America?

Mr. VON MACH. Distinctly.

Maj. HUMES. That is a fair statement, is it not?

Mr. VON MACH. That is a fair statement.

Maj. HUMES. All right; now that is a fair statement.

Mr. VON MACH. May I add to that statement, Major?

Maj. HUMES. What, sir?

Mr. VON MACH. May I add to that statement?

Maj. HUMES. If you want to explain your answer, you certainly have a right to.

Mr. VON MACH. What I mean to say is, it was distinctly in the interest of America, as I saw it, to understand the points of view of the several belligerents.

Maj. HUMES. On the theory that it was good for America to know the truth?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a letter and ask you if that is in your handwriting. [Handing the witness a letter.]

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a letter that you wrote to Dr. Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. It looks so.

Maj. HUMES. I will read the translation of that letter and ask you to follow it, and tell me if this is a fair translation:

MY DEAR COUNCILLOR: I have just been discussing with your uncle, Professor Franke, a book which is to appear in the middle of October with Little, Brown & Co., Boston. The title is, "What Germany wants."

I have tried to present Germany's wishes for her future and keep aloof as far as possible from all disputed questions. People here consider Germany "dangerous," because they do not know her, but we do not make her any further or any better known by simply trying to prove that the other countries which they think they understand better, are still more "dangerous."

My book is pacific in purpose, and God grant that I have succeeded in contributing my bit to get more friends here for our beloved Germany.

After a final conference with the publishers I have time until Monday to make some slight additional changes. Your uncle suggested to me that I address myself to you since you possibly would have material which has escaped me, and which would exactly fit in this book.

I had hoped that I could leave out the Belgian question, but I encountered opposition on the part of the publishers. Are you in possession of any proof whatever that can explain this violation of treaty in a way acceptable to Americans?

I should be obliged to you for suggestions of any sort, especially, too, for a truthful explanation why a Zeppelin dropped bombs on Antwerp.

Since my time is extremely limited, I should be grateful if you would reply at once, even if possible material cannot follow until later.

With German greetings,

Faithfully yours,

EDMUND VON MACH.
48 Shepard St., Cambridge, Mass.

SEPT. 29, 1914.

Is that a fair translation?

Mr. VON MACH. That is a perfectly accurate translation, Major.

Maj. HUMES. In view of the preface in your book, how do you explain that letter?

Mr. VON MACH. I think the letter explains itself, Major.

Maj. HUMES. I think it does, too. I am asking you to explain the preface, in the light of that letter.

Mr. VON MACH. It seems to me that it is exactly—you see in that letter my desire to get actual facts. As a matter of fact the treaty I looked up afterwards in a book of which I got possession in the Boston Public Library, The Map of Europe by Treaties, and instead of accepting what had so frequently merely been told, I investigated the treaty in itself exceedingly carefully. I asked Dr. Albert about this question, which I did not remember now, about the dropping of a bomb, of which we had heard, on Antwerp. That has been a problem which has troubled me at all times. I was exceedingly troubled by the dropping of bombs in the fall of 1914 on Paris, and it was represented in one of the papers as “the mischievous dropping of bombs on a crowd of churchgoers.”

Maj. HUMES. In your works did you justify or condemn the dropping of bombs in Antwerp?

Mr. VON MACH. My dear sir, I felt when I read that that I did not know the German people, that the German people, since those days when I was there, had entirely turned around, were entirely different; and then I saw another newspaper account of it, and that other newspaper account of the incident said that the Germans had tried to drop a bomb on the Eiffel Tower and in that way destroy the connection by air—that was the Boston Transcript which said that, which was surely not especially friendly to Germany—and in that way destroy the air connection between Paris and St. Petersburg. Now, if that was the purpose of dropping a bomb on the Eiffel Tower, that is something I can understand. The purpose of dropping bombs on peaceful Sunday people is something that is entirely beyond me, and if I had believed that I should never have written one word, or raised my voice ever.

Maj. HUMES. Did you believe that they were dropping bombs in Antwerp at the time you wrote this letter?

Mr. VON MACH. I had heard the account of it.

Maj. HUMES. In this letter you accepted it as a fact, did you not, and asked for a truthful explanation of it?

Mr. VON MACH. I wanted to know a truthful explanation of it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever get any explanation from Dr. Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not remember. I believe not.

Maj. HUMES. You got no explanation?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe not.

Maj. HUMES. Did he furnish you any data on the subject of Belgium and the violation of Belgium?

Mr. VON MACH. No. As I told you, Major, I had not remembered that I wrote to Dr. Albert, but the substance of what I remember is that the suggestion came from Prof. Francke. That is perfectly so.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make any search of your files to see if you had any letter from Dr. Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. I had not at this time. I searched through my files, but, you see, that letter was written in longhand during 19——

Maj. HUMES. Did you receive a letter from Dr. Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. No. His only response to me was the interview, so far as I remember, which we had at Prof. Francke's.

Maj. HUMES. In spite of this changed sentiment or the changed heart and mind of the German people, in this letter you say that your purpose in writing that book is in order “to get more friends for our beloved Germany.”

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. If your viewpoint had changed, why were you still seeking friends for Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. I was seeking friends for Germany for the very simple reason that I pointed out in this preface here, that I believed the United States, by being friends of both sides, would make it possible to stop the war very early.

Maj. HUMES. Now, you say that you never got a reply to that letter. I will show you a carbon copy of a letter, and ask you if that is not Dr. Albert's reply to that letter, to you? . [Handing a letter to the witness.]

Mr. VON MACH. I dare say that is, because he says, "I shall come to Cambridge"; yet, as I told you, the only thing I remember about it is my interview with Dr. Albert.

Maj. HUMES. With your recollection refreshed, you think you did get a reply to that letter?

Mr. VON MACH. Apparently. I remember my interview with him, but I do not remember this letter.

Maj. HUMES. That letter purports to be in reply to "your kind letter of September 29."

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not receive that letter from him?

Mr. VON MACH. Undoubtedly I received it, but I have no recollection of it.

Maj. HUMES. See if this is not a fair translation of that letter:

45 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY, October 1, 1914.

Professor EDMUND VON MACH,

48 Shepard Street, Cambridge, Mass.

MY DEAR PROFESSOR: In reply to your kind letter of September 29, I have the honor to inform you that I shall come to Cambridge tomorrow evening and that I shall therefore be at your disposal for a conference on Saturday morning. I should be pleased if I can be of assistance to you in the final arrangement of the text of your book through furnishing material that would be favorable to Germany.

Mr. VON MACH. Excuse me; may I interrupt you there?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. That is not an accurate translation.

Maj. HUMES. How should it be modified?

Mr. VON MACH. "Germany" is not in there, and the sense of the translation is that it would be of assistance to the book.

Maj. HUMES. What is this back here? [Indicating.]

Mr. VON MACH. Oh, I beg your pardon. Will you be good enough to read that again?

Maj. HUMES (reading):

I should be pleased if I can be of assistance to you in the final arrangement of the text of your book through furnishing material that would be favorable to Germany.

Mr. VON MACH. Well, that is twisted around.

Maj. HUMES. Well, it is there?

Mr. VON MACH. It is there.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

As for the question respecting the violation of Belgian neutrality, I am sending you today the articles by Burgess which, in my opinion, treat this question with thorough accuracy. If you are able to agree with Burgess' understanding of the matter, this would, in my opinion, only help the cause.

The answer to your question why a Zeppelin dropped bombs on Antwerp, seems to me comparatively (relatively) easy. Antwerp is a fortified city which is exposed to bombardment by the enemy. It makes no difference whether the bombardment takes place from the air, from the water or from land. That the wounding of non-combatants, indeed even of women and children, cannot possibly be avoided in connection with such bombardment, is obvious. The legal aspect is likewise established as wholly free from objection. The Hague Conference was occupied with the question whether cities can be bombarded from airships. No agreement was reached in the matter. France and Germany have, rather, reserved the right to bombard fortresses (fortified cities) from the air.

The words "fortified cities" are in parenthesis.

Mr. VON MACH. There is no parenthesis here.

Maj. HUMES. Is there any punctuation? Is it set forth between commas, "fortified cities"?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Without punctuation, then?

Mr. VON MACH. Without punctuation. But that is a very minor matter.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

France made use of this right in an extensive degree at the very beginning of the war by bombarding even open towns from aircraft. England herself has recently had bombs dropped on Cologne with the purpose of hitting a Zeppelin shed. This seems to have been successful. Any expert, however, would have to declare that it is pure accident if on such an occasion other buildings or human beings are not hit. England has done this, although in the international agreement at that time she pledged herself to refrain from bombarding from the air.

It is my hope that these brief statements will answer your purpose. Perhaps one or another can be added in our conversation. With cordial regards,

Yours,

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; that is an accurate translation. The reason probably why I did not remember having received that letter was that I had my interview with Dr. Albert, of which I spoke before, immediately on top of that, and I remember my talking with him in the interview rather than in the letter which he had sent me.

Maj. HUMES. Now, this same book—who were the publishers of this book, Doctor?

Mr. VON MACH. Little, Brown Co.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any one interested in it except you and the publishers?

Mr. VON MACH. No one.

Maj. HUMES. Did you consult Mr. George S. Viereck about the publication of this book?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I asked Mr. Viereck later on to push the sale of the book.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not ask Mr. Viereck to assist in the publication and circulation of the book, both?

Mr. VON MACH. Not to my knowledge.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you get any financial help toward the publication of it?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have that matter up with Dr. Dernberg too?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a letter written by George S. Viereck to Dr. Albert.

Mr. VON MACH. What date, please?

Maj. HUMES. On December 7, 1914, one paragraph of which is as follows:

I received a letter from Dr. von Mach, which I consider to be a matter of grave importance. Mr. Von Mach wants an answer at once. I am of the opinion that Dr. Dernberg would certainly approve of publishing this book as Dr. von Mach suggests. I have wired to Dernberg. However, I do not wish to take any step without at least your approval.

Now, will you explain what was the basis of that communication?

Mr. VON MACH. I can explain definitely that it has no reference to any of my books. I do not remember to what it has reference.

Maj. HUMES. Did you write to Viereck with reference to the publication of some book or some article?

Mr. VON MACH. There have been a great many German books that I would have liked very much to see published in this country, and really I have not the least recollection of that, except that I can tell you most positively and definitely that it can have, and has, no reference to any of my books.

Maj. HUMES. May I ask you why you were so anxious to see some of these German books printed in the United States?

Mr. VON MACH. For the simple reason that I believed it was most desirable in this country to get the full point of view of the people on the other side, and when two are fighting and you would like to have the third one make peace, as I so ardently hoped that the United States would bring about peace before the war had gone very far, I believed that the greatest thing that I possibly could do was to center the attention not upon the claims and counterclaims at the moment of heated passion, but to center the attention upon the aims of the people at the time when they were actually sane. It seems to me when people go to war they are not entirely sane. And that was my purpose. I am exceedingly sorry, Major and Senators, that I do not remember what this passage refers to, but my books have been published. You see that is in September. I published this book with Little, Brown & Co., and you can look up their records and everything at Little, Brown & Co.; and I published another book the next year, in 1915, with the McClure Co.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the title of that book?

Mr. VON MACH. Those were the collected articles that I had written in the Transcript before, and it was published under the title of "Germany's Point of View." You see, Senator. I have never desired to sail under false colors. It was a poor title, because it naturally appealed only to those people who were more or less in favor of that view, but I did not want to claim, even before the American people, that I knew it all. I know that this is the right view. I wanted to publish it for exactly what I believed it was, presenting it calmly, not attacking others, with good will towards people; to present what the German people had felt before this war, what the problems were as they had appeared to them; and I thought that this great, big country which so quickly makes friends out of these various races who come here, would be able to make friends also of their nations, and that was my very great hope in doing that.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not in an article make an assertion that the atrocities of the German soldiers in Belgium were not as atrociousas the cruelty of the American soldiers in the Philippine Islands? Was not that statement contained in one of your articles in a Boston paper?

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, since you ask the question—and you probably have the paper before you there—I suppose I must have made a statement which leads you to ask that question. If you ask me whether I would still consider such a statement to be correct and fair and in the interest of the cause, the way I wanted to promote it, I should surely say no. I have never claimed that I am infallible. But if you will go through practically all of my writings and all my statements, from A to Z, you may find that I have fallen short every now and then, and I would regret that. I think throughout the whole you will find that I have kept this one definite aim before me.

From the preface of the other book, in which I had gathered the articles previously published in the Boston Transcript, I quote as follows:

The purpose of these articles was not to comment on the progress of the war, but to go to the root of things, and to explain, if possible, why those who had not lost faith in Germany differed from many of their fellow citizens in their interpretation of the relative merits of the causes of the several belligerents. These articles, therefore, contain a wealth of economic data, historical documents, and individual interpretations. The author had one more object in mind in collecting these articles in book form. There has been much bitter feeling against the American press among the pro-Germans in this country and among the Germans in the fatherland. Without, unfortunately, being able to affirm that Germany has received fair treatment, the author wishes to bear testimony to the fact that the spirit of fair play has nevertheless been more prevalent here than in some other neutral states. The author had an absolutely free hand (in preparing his articles for the Boston Transcript) and his articles were printed as he had written them. This implies a decree of generosity which it would be difficult to duplicate outside of the United States of America.

From the principles and sentiment expressed in the quotation from the prefaces just cited, I have not consciously deviated in my many writings and lectures since I first penned them in 1914 and 1915, respectively. These sentiments were American then. They are American now. And whoever fails to recognize them as American, or whoever denounces their author, without ever having read what he has said, writes himself down as to that extent un-American.

One of the greatest philosophers has said:

Under patriotism one frequently understands a mere willingness to perform extraordinary acts and sacrifices. But patriotism is essentially the sentiment of regarding, in the ordinary circumstances and ways of life, the weal of the community as the substantial basis and the final end. It is upon this consciousness present under the ordinary course of life and under all circumstances, that the disposition to heroic efforts is founded. But as people are often rather magnanimous than just, they easily persuade themselves that they possess the heroic kind of patriotism, in order to save themselves the trouble of having the truly patriotic sentiment, or to excuse the lack of it.

The attacks which have been made upon me have not been made because I have been intemperate of speech or have broken the laws of the land, but because I have obeyed the laws of the land and because the temperate presentation of my views has gained friends for these views wherever I have been privileged to appear. The danger emanating from me has not been that I uttered falsehoods illegally, but that I spoke the truth lawfully and according to the old American principle of good will toward all mankind.

Some months ago Senator Lodge declared on the floor of the Senate, according to the press, that from now on he would give the American people the truth. I differ from the Senator only in this, that he would give to the American people the truth when it suits him, while I would give the truth to the American people always!

Another source of misunderstanding has been due to loose thinking and the vague use of the term "propaganda." Propaganda which endeavors to propagate the truth in a lawful way, and in the interest not only of one's country but also of mankind, is right and laudable. During the Civil War President Lincoln was deeply interested in American propaganda in England, and to strengthen it sent to England the cleverest American politician, Thurlow Weed, the best known constitutional lawyer, Mr. Evarts, later Senator, and the most eloquent pulpit orator, Mr. Henry Ward Beecher, not to mention other and lesser lights. In England itself there was a strong party which favored the maintenance of peace, and Englishmen constituting this party carried on an extensive campaign, a propaganda, in other words, designed to keep England out of the war. In so far as the aims of the Englishmen mentioned and of the American official propagandists, Wood, Evarts, and Beecher, were identical, their joint activities might be called American or pro-American propaganda. The Englishmen, however, took part in it only so far as they believed that they were serving the interests of their own country and of mankind.

During this investigation, and for years before, the attempt has constantly been made to eradicate the distinction which exists between the activities of foreigners sent to this country for the purpose of fostering the interests of their own country and citizens of this country, many, but by no means all, of German descent endeavoring, while it was lawful and ethical for them to do so, to assist in keeping the peace between America and the central Empires.

With the official German propaganda I have had absolutely nothing to do; and beyond the fact that I knew some of the German officials, know about as little of it as anybody. Dr. Dernberg and Count von Bernstorff, whenever I met them, expressed themselves as sincere admirers of American institutions and wished to be friends of the American people.

My own conduct has been free from all illegal and unethical associations and means. The welfare of America has been my lodestar, and I, too, may say, as Bismarck once said, "And if you point to a single moment when I have not steered by this direction of the compass needle, you may perhaps prove that I have erred; but you can not prove that I have for one moment lost sight of the weal of the nation."

Senator NELSON. Is that a quotation from Bismarck?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator NELSON. He seemed to overlook the falsification of that telegram from Ems in 1870. Were you oblivious of that?

Mr. VON MACH. It appears to me as a very excellent quotation, sir, and that is why I used it.

Senator NELSON. But were you oblivious, when making it, of the telegram from Ems that brought on the war with France? You remember that incident, do you not?

Mr. VON MACH. I do, sir.

Senator NELSON. And you remember that in his book that he published, he admitted that he had falsified that record?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I do not remember that.

Senator NELSON. I have the book. I will loan the book to you. He admits that fact.

Mr. VON MACH. I do not remember that.

Senator NELSON. Now, you spoke of the German propaganda that was carried on here. You refer to the propaganda carried on before we went into the war, do you not?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator NELSON. In 1914 you lived near Boston, at Harvard?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. You were one of the professors?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I never was.

Senator NELSON. You were there, were you, in the purlieus of Harvard?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you remember the incident of Werner Horn, a German reservist, carrying bombs through Vanceboro, Me., to blow up bridges on the boundary line? Was that German propaganda?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you condemn that?

Mr. VON MACH. I have condemned it over and over.

Senator NELSON. Did you put that in your book?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; because my book had nothing to do with that. I am perfectly ready, sir, if you think any good purpose can be served by that, to put several of those things in writing and to condemn that. I am perfectly ready; but the purpose of my book was an entirely different one.

Senator STERLING. You did not condemn it in any articles you wrote for the newspapers, did you?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I believe that the condemnation that I expressed privately and among people was probably far more effective in stopping similar conditions, if they should have been contemplated, than anything else could have been.

That finishes the statement, which has not been so brief.

What I am especially interested in is to submit to you Senators the records of the citizens' committee for food shipment, and which has been presented to you, I believe, as vicious pro-German propaganda, and also to discuss with you and to prove to you the absolute honesty in the management of the finances of that committee.

Senator NELSON. Was that the milk committee?

Mr. VON MACH. That is the so-called milk committee.

Senator WOLCOTT. Has there been any charge at all that the funds collected for the committee were in any wise embezzled or misapplied?

Mr. VON MACH. That charge has been made apparently before your committee by Mr. Becker.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not recall that any such charge was made.

Maj. HUMES. The statement was made before the committee that a very small amount of money was expended for the purchase of milk or for the shipping of milk to Germany; that a very small amount was spent for that purpose; and that the total funds were used for some other purpose. There was no charge of embezzlement, but I think the inference was that it was used for German purposes.

Senator NELSON. To milk the cows of this country.

Senator WOLCOTT. You want to show what you did with those funds?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; I would like to know whether Mr. Becker or Mr. Bielaski, who made the charges, this unjust attack, will not produce those books. I haven't the books, because either Mr. Bielaski or Mr. Becker has them, and they knew perfectly well what had happened, because these books were very carefully kept, and when I accepted the position as executive chairman of that committee I made one condition, and the condition was that the members of the committee would have to raise a special fund as an administrative fund from which all the expenses of the campaign, the office rent, salaries and advertisements, should be paid, so that not one penny of the money subscribed for the particular purpose should be used for any thing else but that particular purpose.

Senator NELSON. Do you know how much money was collected?

Mr. VON MACH. I have not the books here.

Senator NELSON. Can you tell?

Mr. VON MACH. I have the approximate figures here, Senator, which I found among my papers, which show that up to about November of that year—and we stopped the active work of the committee in December——

Senator NELSON. How much did you collect?

Mr. VON MACH. Actually there was collected for the administrative fund $11,941.96.

Senator NELSON. How much of that money was devoted to purchasing milk?

Mr. VON MACH. That was for the administrative fund. Out of that we did not spend anything.

Senator NELSON. That was used for office expenses?

Mr. VON MACH. That was used for office expenses.

Senator NELSON. What else did you collect?

Mr. VON MACH. For the food fund there was collected, according to these figures, $18,520.93, but we were able to make milk shipments only to the amount of $1,044.63.

Senator NELSON. Out of $18,000?

Mr. VON MACH. Out of $18,000.

Senator NELSON. What did you do with the rest?

Mr. VON MACH. Just a moment, Senator. When it was impossible for us to ship milk, when the presidential campaign begun, we decided that we were going to suspend activities during that time. We did not want to keep that amount of money lying inactive in the bank and since the hardships brought on in Europe, in Hungary, and in Poland were not only due to the absence of milk, but also to the high prices, the executive committee voted to inquire of all of our subscribers whether they were willing to have us establish an Empress Augusta Victoria children's milk fund and send the money abroad and ask the Empress to use it to help the poor people to get milk; and every penny of it—there may be a small balance still in the bank; I do not know whether you have seen the books or not. Either Mr. Becker or Mr. Bielaski must have those books; but every penny of that—was forwarded for that purpose, to assist poor people who, in addition to the scarcity of milk, were suffering under it.

exceedingly high prices. The expenses, every item down to a postage stamp and everything, are contained in those books, and not a penny of that has been spent for any other purpose than is indicated in the books..

Maj. HUMES. Doctor, this fund was delivered to the ambassadors of the central powers for transmittal?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; that was the only way we had.

Senator NELSON. It was delivered to Bernstorff and Dumba?

Mr. VON MACH. Only to Bernstorff.

Maj. HUMES. All went to Bernstorff?

Mr. VON MACH. Major, that was our only way of transmitting it, and we notified the State Department, and I may say right here that the notification to the State Department came about because a fund in New York—I have forgotten the name of it—had been forwarded to Ambassador Gerard in Berlin—I believe it was $5,000—and when they heard of the work of our committee they were willing to have half of their fund go to this fund, and I wrote to Ambassador Gerard about it and asked him if he would be good enough to add this to this fund which we had sent abroad, and thinking that Ambassador Gerard was in Berlin, I sent this letter to the State Department. I sent it open and asked them to please note the contents and forward it to Ambassador Gerard. He happened to be in this country, and so the State Department, after having taken note of it, returned the letter to me and said that Mr. Gerard was in New York and that I could communicate with him directly. Mr. Gerard very kindly acknowledged—and I have the letters here if you are interested in them—very kindly acknowledged the receipt and said that as soon as he got to Berlin he was going to add the fund just as we had asked him.

Now, your question seems to imply that this fund was going to Bernstorff to be used in this country. If it was sent to him to be used in this country, what would have happened if Ambassador Gerard had come over and said, "Here are $2,000 which I want to add to this $20,000"? In so far as this committee was concerned, we could not do anything else. It has been charged that this was propaganda and it has been charged that this committee was not only doing German propaganda but also political propaganda. During the months of the presidential campaign we decided not to come out in public at all, because we were afraid that anything we might say might be turned around and used as if it were propaganda. I have here the extract of a vote of the executive committee meeting in October of that presidential year. Of course, the notes of the meetings, if you desire them, are probably in the hands of the then secretary of the committee, Rev. Dr. Law. They are entirely at your disposal. This extract is from the minutes of October 25, 1916 [reading]:

FROM THE MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE COM. OF THE CITIZENS COM. FOR FOOD SHIPMENTS, OCTOBER 25, 1916.

Dr. von Mach presented a copy of a circular letter addressed on October 16 to all the contributors of the Funds of the Co., in which they were notified of the establishment of the Empress Augusta Viktoria Children's Milk Fund. He read a letter from Mr. ———, of Chicago who asked permission to publish the letter, which in his opinion would furnish excellent campaign material against President Wilson. Moved by Dr. Seeligmann that Dr. von Mach be requested to inform Mr. ——— that the Citizens' Com. for Food Shipments was distinctly a humanitarian organization and if this letter was published now, it could not fail to create the impression that it was written for campaign purposes, and not in order to inform our friends of the actual state of affairs. For this reason the Executive Committee believed it unwise to publish the letter.—Unanimously carried.

The letter referred to must be at the disposal of Mr. Becker or Mr. Bielaski. When, at the end of 1916, we had come to the conclusion that there was no possibility of having an opportunity of shipping milk abroad, I suggested to the committee that I be authorized to give up the office which we had in the Woolworth Building and to discontinue our activities, and the vote was carried. I was unwilling to destroy the correspondence which we had gathered in a steel cabinet. I asked, first, the president of the committee whether he would be willing to have me deposit this steel cabinet in his house. He was rather unwilling to have correspondence which had, of course, touched politics so frequently, in his house, and I gathered from that that the other members might feel exactly the same way. I had been elected the previous November the president of the German University League, and we had offices at 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and I, therefore, asked the recording secretary or the executive secretary of that organization, Mr. Merkel, in order to save the expense of storage, I might be permitted to put our steel cabinet, with all our correspondence, in their office, and he said, "Certainly." There it was. Mr. Merkel was a German citizen, and when German citizens were interned Mr. Merkel was also interned, and the records of the German University League were taken either by the office of Mr. Bielaski or by Mr. Becker, I do not know which. I think, also, not knowing the difference—just one more steel cabinet—they also took the cabinet which belonged to the citizens' committee for food shipments.

Senator NELSON. You say that you were the president of the German University League?

Mr. VON MACH. For one year.

Senator NELSON. What were the purposes of that organization?

Mr. VON MACH. I think Prof. Hart testified on that, and I have a letter from Prof. Hart about that. The purpose of the league was to get those men in this country who had studied in German universities and were interested in German thought. Of course, I was not eligible as a member of that league when it was started, because I had never studied in a German university. My college training and everything was in the United States—in Harvard—and so I was not eligible as a member of that league in the first year. Then afterwards the league elected me as a member. I had absolutely nothing to do with it. Afterwards they changed it while I was in New York on the German Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments, and I was elected president of that league. I mention it incidentally so that you will know that those letters and the books have been in the possession of these gentlemen that have been testifying before you.

Referring to the papers again, you asked how much had been collected, and the answer was $30,000; and how much was spent on milk, about $1,000. What have we done with the rest? I really do not know. As a matter of fact, those gentlemen who have testified that here knew where every penny of that had gone, because the books were kept with unusual care. We had a large committee, and I wanted to make it possible for every member of that committee to be able to go in at any moment into the office and see what the state of the finances was.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think Mr. Becker testified that they could not get the books; that they tried to get them from the treasurer, but were not able. I do not just recall.

Mr. VON MACH. Major, do you know who took the papers of the American University League?

Maj. HUMES. The Department of Justice, I assume.

Mr. VON MACH. In connection with those, it was a steel cabinet about the size of the cabinet there [indicating], and that cabinet contained all these letters—this letter, for instance, to this gentleman in Chicago; and in that cabinet were these books, and those books, entirely separate books, one for the administrative expenses and the other for the milk fund; were kept for the benefit of the treasurer and for the members of the committee. Daily balances were made so that if a member—if you happened to be a member and you stepped in one moment after 12 o'clock to-day you could tell the exact state of the finances.

Senator OVERMAN. What he said was that he did not know what became of it. He said he could only account, on the books, for $500 or a thousand dollars.

Mr. VON MACH. He gave out the statement first, or the New York papers published something with the consent of Mr. Becker, that during the first six weeks $10,000 had been collected and I had taken half and put it in my pocket.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think he said that.

Mr. VON MACH. I took it up with Mr. Becker immediately and I wanted him to apologize, and I gave him all the information that Mr. Becker wanted; but he has been unwilling to apologize for giving out the statement that during the first six weeks $10,000 had been taken in and I had taken half of it. Another statement given out was to the effect that when I had first taken charge of the committee I had had the circulars printed in such a fashion that all the money should be sent to me instead of to the treasury. As a matter of fact, there was not a circular that ever went out that did not distinctly state that every check should go to the treasurer; and, knowing how suspicions are apt to attach to a man in charge of a charitable fund, I arranged that I should not have the handling of one penny, and I could not draw any money on our accounts in the bank, but every dollar had to go to the treasurer, Mr. Schurz; and when he was away, a few weeks ago, they wanted to make me acting treasurer, and I refused. I would not touch a single penny, and Mr. Becker and Mr. Bielaski knew that exactly.

Now, these books that I have here I would like to submit to you, Senators. They contain official correspondence between the citizens' committee for food shipments and the President, the Secretary of State, the Acting Secretary of State, and the various parts of the executive branch of the United States Government, and I believe no greater slander could have been uttered than that these women, physicians, priests, and clergymen who formed this committee were acting as pro-German propagandists, and if there is the least doubt in your minds, let one of your agents go through the correspondence. If there is the least doubt in your minds, if you will be good enough to call the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Polk, with whom I became very friendly, I believe he will testify here that there is not the least suspicion attaching to the loyalty and patriotism of every one of these women, physicians, priests, and clergymen whose names are listed as members of the citizens' committee for food shipments. Senator, I am very desirous of submitting this.

Senator NELSON. Have you finished your statement?

Mr. VON MACH. I have.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else you want to state?

Mr. VON MACH. I should like very much, after this is prepared for publication, to insert a little speech of our treasurer, Mr. Carl Schurz, which he delivered in favor of the movement of the committee in Boston, and I believe he has so clearly and logically explained what the purposes of the committee were that there should be very little further doubt about it.

(The speech referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:

INTRODUCTION—THE CITIZENS COMMITTEE FOR FOOD SHIPMENTS "ITS ORGANIZATION AND ITS WORK"

[By Carl L. Schurz.]

One of the traits of which we Americans can justly be proud, and one which is recognized the world over, is a readiness to help where help is needed, a willingness on all occasions to allay the sufferings of others, irrespective of nationalities or creed, and regardless of the place where the need exists. If we turn back the pages of history we will find that there has never been a flood, a famine, an epidemic or other calamity of any kind in any part of the world but that this nation has eagerly come forward with open and willing hands.

In this war too, the generous sympathy of the American people has been excelled. The sufferers of every belligerent nation have had reason to turn with gratitude to this great land, which has answered with such spontaneous liberality their call for help.

But in this war a novel situation has arisen, and an unusual problem is confronted a large number of us who are anxious to do our part. In the past the giving of help has always been a comparatively easy matter. The collection of money was practically all that was needed, for the particular necessities required, be they food or clothing, medicine or shelter, could be purchased without difficulty if the money were only forthcoming. Now for the first time, I know of, it has happened that a large number of people wish to do a humanitarian service, but are shocked to find that they cannot. The money is at hand, but in this case money is only an incident.

It was in the summer and fall of last year that it first became apparent that the poorer classes of Germany, and Austria Hungary, were suffering by reason of the rising prices of certain staple articles of food, such as rice, flour, meal, and similar things. At this time the lack of milk was mentioned incidentally with the other items.

Poor people in Germany no longer wrote to their relatives and friends in this country for money, but begged them to send food instead. Travellers returning from abroad commented upon a lack of these articles, and so by degrees an increasingly large demand for shipments of various food supplies made itself felt.

At about this time the formation of the Committee for Food Shipments was resolved upon. Its object was first to call attention to the fact that shipments of food could be made with reasonable safety to Germany and Austria-Hungary by parcel post in spite of the British blockade, and then to assist those who wished to avail themselves of our services by attending to the actual purchasing and mailing of supplies to any given address. The Committee thus undertook to relieve those for whom it was difficult or inconvenient to make shipments themselves, and also hoped to make arrangements with various firms for the purchase of supplies at wholesale prices, and thereby to obtain more for a given sum than the individual shipper himself could buy. The organization was complete, the first announcement of the Committee's intentions was printed, when out of a clear sky came the notice that parcel post service between this country and the Central Empires had been suspended.

Now followed repeated efforts by delegates of the Committee to induce our Government to find some way to re-establish this branch of the postal service. Our Postmaster-General was interviewed in Washington. We were received and listened to with sympathy and consideration. We were assured that everything possible would be done to relieve a difficult situation. A memorandum of the distressing conditions abroad was submitted to the President, and by him received with sympathetic interest. The Secretary of State was appealed to on more than one occasion. But nothing came of it all, and the parcel post service between here and Germany remains a thing of the past.

In the meantime it had gradually developed that there was one thing among all those that had formerly been sent over that was becoming an absolute necessity, and that its growing need was the cause not of suffering alone but of death. This was milk. Accounts reached us from time to time of the harrowing situation in certain parts of Germany and Austria-Hungary and particularly in Poland. Heartrending accounts of starvation among the innocent victims of this world conflict profoundly stirred the Committee and those many others who knew of the true state of affairs. The Committee thenceforth resolved to limit its efforts to one purpose alone—the shipment of milk for babies, whose lives depended upon this form of nourishment, and it took up with renewed vigor a task which by this time had assumed an almost hopeless aspect. Hopeless but for one thing—our confident belief that if we can make it known all over our great country how desperate conditions really are, our citizens will so insistently demand that they be permitted to exercise their right to help that our Government in its dignity and in its sense of justice and humanity cannot fail to respond.

And we are making progress. Already in almost every State of the Union there are groups of active workers, who are awakening the people to a realization of the need for help. But more than this. We have found in Congressman Emerson an able and enthusiastic champion, whose ringing voice has stirred the halls of Congress. Through him the accomplishment of our purpose has been raised, as it deserves, to the dignity of a national question. May the consciousness that the prayers of countless mothers follow him be an inspiration to him in the future.

But the practical difficulty of making shipments is not the only one by any means that the Committee has to contend with. We have been attacked on every side. From an official source abroad we are accused of being "dishonest and insincere." Attempts have been made by elaborate statistical computations to prove that there ought not to be a lack of milk and therefore is not. But I fail to see any force to arguments that a situation should not exist when such a man as Judge Lindsey, fresh from the other side, tells us that he has seen with his own eyes that it does exist. Then there are the arguments of those who say that because in their opinion Germany started the war, Germany should bear all the consequences, and that we as neutral citizens should look on while German babies starve. We are told that during the siege of Paris during the Franco-Prussian War babies starved to death, and that therefore German babies are not deserving of a better fate. Such arguments as these, I submit, only reflect on those who make them, and like those that advance them, are deserving of nothing but contempt.

Finally we have been attacked as being pro-German propagandists, whose sole motive is to discredit in an insidious way England's methods of warfare. My answer is to point to the fact that this Committee is made up of women and men, clergymen, and physicians, all American citizens. They are working without any thought of partisanship or of politics. They are attacking no one, and certainly they are in no way seeking to benefit themselves. They are inspired by one thought, and one thought alone—the saving of thousands of those little beings that in this universe form a little world all their own, a world that in our eyes should have no nationality, that can have no enemies, and that in its helplessness is entitled to the loving support and sympathy of all mankind. They are working indeed in the spirit of true Americanism, and it is to this spirit in you that they appeal for cooperation. (Address delivered by Carl L. Schurz in Tremont Temple, Boston, April 12, 1916.)

Mr. VON MACH. I should like to put all of these letters in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. We could not put all of those in the record. You just put a sample of the letters in.

Mr. VON MACH. But if there should be any doubts in your mind as to the actual workings of the civilian committee and as to the purposes of it, I think you ought to have them.

(The papers referred to are here printed in the record as follows:

NOVEMBER 23, 1916

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Christmas is approaching and with it the desire of all people to do something for those they love. The most thoughtful look for the greatest needs and try to supply them.

The food conditions are unsatisfactory in the countries of all the belligerents and the saddest thing to contemplate in this connection is the insufficient supply of milk and the consequent malnutrition of the little children.

The mental and physical health of the future generations depends upon the proper feeding of the babies of to-day. Since the interchange between people in modern times is intimate, the American people are vitally concerned in the mental and moral vigor of those with whom they will have to live in the world as fellow human beings.

For this reason, I venture to suggest to you an idea which has come to me through the correspondence with prominent Congressmen and which amounts to this: That overwhelmingly large numbers of Americans would welcome if you were to call the attention of Congress to this fact in your next message.

If you were to do this, it is believed that Congress would make a sufficient large appropriation, should you desire this, and make other necessary arrangements to have America send milk at Christmas time to the children of all the belligerent nations.

If this could be done, it would be an enlargement of the plan I suggested to you when you were good enough to receive me last winter, and I told you that our committee had the promise of one of the Hamburg American Line steamers for carrying milk, and that nothing would suit us better than to be permitted to carry milk also to France, Ireland, and England.

Circumstances have so shaped themselves, that our committee has worked along lines which confined themselves to the contemplated shipment of milk to the Central Empires. The oceans stood open to the Entente powers, but if this had not been so, our Committee would have worked as eagerly for the children also of the Entente powers.

If this idea commends itself to you—perhaps you have already thought of it yourself—the United States would sow the seed of good will among nations. I can almost imagine that it might become the forerunner of peace.

I am, moreover, convinced that such an action on your part would be hailed as well by the pro-Allies as by the pro-Germans, into which classes our citizens in many localities unfortunately seem to be divided. My statement as regards the pro-Allies is based on an experience recently when I heard Captain Herz of the British army speak before a large New York audience of distinctly pro-Allies tendencies, and when a gasp of horror seemed to issue from all who heard Captain Herz say the following words:

"It is England's right, and her firm intention, to keep milk from the German babies as much as possible in order to starve them and to prevent another generation of Germans to grow up."

The following facts may also be of interest to you.

According to the Hungarian Daily Az Ujsag of July 23, there died during the one month of May 1916, 12,447 Hungarian children under the age of seven.

Conditions have grown worse since, and this seems to have been acknowledged by our State Department which has sent food for the sustenance of our representatives in Austria-Hungary on the S. S. Noordam, and among the articles of food condensed milk, according to the World of yesterday.

The proof of the wretched conditions among the children of Ireland is contained in an appeal issued by Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Lady Aberdeen, and other ladies. I enclose copies of this appeal and of my reply.

In England maximum prices for milk have been declared, and the sufferings in France and especially in Poland are too well known to deserve further proofs. Concerning Russia I am dependent on hearsay.

Believe me to be, Mr. President,

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed)

EDMUND VON MACH,
Executive Chairman.

Confidential.

THE SEVERAL ATTEMPTS MADE BY THE CITIZENS COMMITTEE FOR FOOD SHIPMENTS TO SHIP CONDENSED OR DRY MILK IN LARGE QUANTITIES TO THE CENTRAL EMPIRES.

(The two large and several smaller shipments made by first-class letter mail, registered, have all reached their destinations, with the possible exception of the very last shipments, of which we have not yet heard.)

1. To have the Postmaster-General re-establish the parcel post service. Unsuccessful.

2. To have the Postmaster-General avail himself of the definite stipulation contained in article 3 of the Postal Union Convention, to have arbitration by neutral post offices of our postal differences with Great Britain. He acknowledged to have the right to do this, but said that he would have to ask Mr. Lansing's permission. Mr. Lansing refused.

3. To have the President offer a transport to carry our milk. The answer was that this was not within the power of the Executive, but of Congress, (Contrast with No. 9.)

4. To have the President arrange for the safe transit of a large ship of the Hamburg-America Line, offered to us, to carry American milk to the babies of all belligerents. Refused.

5. To have the Executive Branch of our Government find any safe way to ship milk. We did not care how the milk was sent. One effort made Dec. 28, 1915; none thereafter.

6. To ship milk on the Holland-American Line assigning it to the American Legation at The Hague for trans-shipment to the Central Powers, just as money has been assigned to the American Ambassador in Turkey who attended to its distribution to the people for whom it was meant. Refused. (Because impracticable for these officers to assume the additional duties.)

7. To pay for additional clerk hire to attend to the "additional and heavy duties" of reshipping the barrels of Kindolac milk to the Central Empires. Refused.

8. To have the Navy Department carry our milk, on a collier just as it took Easter bread for the Jews in Alexandria. Refused.

9. To have Congress express the wish that our State Department arrange for the unhampered shipment of milk. Frustrated by Mr. Lansing's request that no action be taken by Congress, because this matter was solely within the power of the Executive. (Cf. No. 3.)

10. To have our Government declare unequivocally, as it has done in substance, that we have the right to ship the milk to be distributed under Red Cross supervision to those babies and nursing mothers who need it; and to have it further publicly state that such a ship could not be seized because it could not be done except by declaring to the whole world that babies were purposely being deprived of their milk. If our Government will do this, big insurance companies in New York consider the ship a good risk; and if the Government will prove it means what it says by authorizing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to write half of the insurance, one big company has offered to write the other half. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance is by law attached to the Treasury Department. The particular question of issuing insurances to our proposed ship was taken from the Treasury Department and given to the State Department where it was decided in the negative.

11. The whole subject was re-opened again by conferences with the State Department on July 11th., and 12th. These conferences were attended by the Acting Secretary of State, the Third Assistant Secretary, the Chief of the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, the Executive Chairman of the Citizens' Committee, and six Congressmen. As a result, the State Department appears now to be inclined to accept as true the presentations on the citizens' committee in spite of Dr. Taylor's report.

There are over 200 Senators and Congressmen, including the Speaker, deeply interested, in the efforts of the citizens' committee, and many of them gave the committee their active moral support.

THE SEVERAL ATTEMPTS MADE BY THE CITIZENS' COMMITTEE FOR FOOD SHIPMENT TO SHIP MILK—ADDITIONS TO THE REPORT CARRYING THE EFFORTS UP TO JULY, 1916.

12. An impasse was reached as the result of the Taylor Report just mentioned. It was published by the State Department early in July in answer to requests made upon it for accurate reports on the milk situation in Germany and in Austria-Hungary, and its promise to secure such reports. This promise was made to several Congressmen on June 12, 1916.

The published report by Dr. Taylor bore the date of April 17, 1916, and was therefore on the day of its publication three months old.

The State Department never published the report on the milk situation in Austria-Hungary, and to this extent failed to keep its word pledged to Congressmen on June 12, 1916.

It was not difficult to disprove the accuracy of the Taylor Report, and with the help of figures prepared for the citizens' committee by members of the New York Board of Health to prove the critical condition of the babies in the Central Empires, especially in Hungary.

The President, nevertheless, and the State Department, were adamant in their determination to consider the Taylor Report conclusive, and to resist the publication of the Report on the Milk situation in Austria-Hungary.

Whenever appealed to by warm-hearted members of Congress or other people, Mr. Lansing sent out the Taylor Report as proving that there was no need for action. Thus Congress was lulled into a belief that the babies abroad were safe, while at the same time agents of Great Britain were going about the country gloating over their success in starving the babies. Captain Herzog of the British army, e. g. used these words before a large audience in the Hotel McAlpin on October 20, 1916.

It is England's right, and her firm intention to keep milk from the German babies as much as possible in order to starve them and to prevent another generation of Germans to grow up.

13. During the months of the Presidential campaign all public efforts to persuade or force the State Department to secure for the committee unhampered shipment of milk were suspended. Unwilling, however, to keep idle in the bank the money already subscribed, we suggested to our subscribers the establishment of the Empress Augusta Viktoria Children's Milk Fund. With hearty approval of all the fund was established. Since milk was not scarce in the Central Empires but also dear, and we were prevented from shipping milk, we asked the Empress to use the moneys collected in order to assist the most needy in Germany or allied countries. The Empress accepted the trust, and the money was forwarded to her, and the State Department informed of the action taken.

14. After the election was over, one more attempt was made to rouse the State Department to action. It failed.

15. Then Congress was appealed, or rather influential men in Congress, and a plan was worked out to have Congress make a large appropriation for the sending of milk to the babies in all the belligerent countries as a Christmas gift. The attempt failed owing to the opposition of the President.

Senator OVERMAN. We will assume that the money was collected for humane purposes.

Mr. VON MACH. All right, and may I ask you whether you also assume on my statement now that no misappropriation or misapplication was made of the fund?

Senator OVERMAN. I am not assuming anything of that sort.

Mr. VON MACH. Let me ask Mr. Becker and Mr. Bielaski, who have the charge, to present the books.

Senator WOLCOTT. I should say that that assumption would be made by me, at least until it was overcome by some evidence that properly overcame it.

Mr. VON MACH. The assumption that it was properly spent?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; that would be the presumption until it was overcome by testimony.

Mr. VON MACH. It can not be overcome by testimony, Senator.

Maj. HUMES. Doctor von Mach, after the severance of diplomatic relations you were very active to prevent a declaration of war, were you not; and you came to Washington and were very active in that connection?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a pamphlet purporting to be signed by you, and ask you if you had that circular printed.

Mr. VON MACH. I did, sir.

Maj. HUMES. This was between the time of the severance of diplomatic relations and the declaration of war, was it not?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to one of the first statements.

Mr. VON MACH. Will you read the very first statement, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir [reading]:

To my fellow citizens—

Mr. VON MACH. The headline.

Maj. HUMES. The headline? The headline of this circular reads:

Loyal American citizenship consists in keeping unsullied one's allegiance to the constitution, and to the principles on which this Nation was founded, humanity, justice, and good will toward all.

That is the title of the pamphlet, apparently.

I call your attention to this statement in the body of the circular [reading]:

Are you being deceived?

You are told that Germany has begun a new mode of warfare characterized by ruthlessness; that her order of January 31, 1917, constitutes an affront to the honor of the United States; and that we can not maintain friendly diplomatic relations with a country which declares an arbitrary war zone on the high seas within which even American vessels will ply at their own peril, and where they are liable to be sunk without warning.

THE ORIGIN OF RUTHLESS NAVAL WARFARE.

It is not Germany but Great Britain who begun this new and ruthless and indefensible kind of warfare.

Mr. VON MACH. That is a fact.

Maj. HUMES. That is correct?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That was your position at that time?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Is that your position to-day?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In other words your position to-day is that the offense which was the foundation, or one of the foundations, for a declaration of war on the part of the United States was not an offense of Germany but an offense of Great Britain?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. No; I beg your pardon; that is an entirely erroneous statement of my position.

Maj. HUMES. That is the logical conclusion to draw from your declaration.

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; I believe that every single nation has a perfect right to declare what offenses against it it desires to consider as a cause for war, and what offenses against it it desires to condone. Up to the time when the American Nation, through Congress, spoke and declared war on Germany, I believe it was perfectly ethical for me to point out that, so far as I saw it, it was not so much the submarine that was the great principle at stake, which afterwards in future history will mark the epoch, but it was the question, Has any belligerent nation the right to establish a forbidden area in the sea just as we have granted to belligerents the right to establish forbidden areas on land? For instance, where you have a beleaguered city. Great Britain had been, so far as I understand it, the first one to establish such an area. In carrying out her policy she had given an offense to the United States, but the United States Government, through the constitutionally ordained members, had come to the conclusion that it was not a cause for war. But the offense which Germany had committed she decided on April 6 was a cause for war.

Maj. HUMES. Do you still think they were wrong about it?

Senator NELSON. Your views are that there were no grounds for our people to declare war against Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. You think we were wrong in declaring war?

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, I have just said I believe that every other sovereign nation has a perfect right——

Senator NELSON. Do not equivocate. Get right down to the point. Do you believe we were right or wrong when we declared war against Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I do not see how I can possibly answer that question differently than I have answered it before, by saying that I have accepted the verdict of the sovereign American people expressed through the proper authorities. They said that we had a cause for war, and I accepted that, and what any individual views about this or that may be in my own mind has nothing to do with the question. The question is, merely, will you accept the verdict?

Senator NELSON. But you are here to purge yourself of a charge of disloyalty.

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Now, the question is, What was your state of mind at that time? Did you believe that we had a right to go to war? Were we justified or not?

Mr. VON MACH. My state of mind up to the time we went to war was that it was a mistake, and that it would not take place if the facts were known.

Senator NELSON. You think that this Congress and the President made a mistake in declaring war?

Mr. VON MACH. Up to the time that they actually declared it, I felt that they made a mistake, but the moment our Congress declared war I felt "Now all I have to do is never mind what my own feelings formerly were. We are at war, and from now on my oath of allegiance to the Constitution prescribes a definite course."

Senator NELSON. But in your opinion we had made a mistake in declaring war?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not see how I can answer that better than I have already answered.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you mean by violating the Constitution in voting for war? What do you mean by that?

Mr. VON MACH. I mean that—Senator, I will go into that subject, if you desire me to do so.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why should there be any hesitancy in declaring your position? You had a right, if you wanted to, as an American citizen to oppose a declaration of war. Some Senators voted against a declaration of war.

Mr. VON MACH. I am not opposed to declaring my position but—

Senator WOLCOTT. It seems to me that you are hesitating about it.

Mr. VON MACH. No; my point is simply this. Senator Nelson—I recognize him from the fact that his questions are so similar to the questions that he has asked others—the Senator asked me a definite question which implied in his mind that I am not loyal if I did not believe the way the majority of Congress believed; that I am disloyal—that is back of his idea—and I want to make it clear that by what you called prevarication—

Senator WOLCOTT. I did not say “prevarication”——

Mr. VON MACH. Hesitation—excuse me. I want to make it clear to him that my understanding of allegiance to a country after a definite step has been taken is that the individual is to accept it, and that it would not have been proper for me to accept this statement, and spread it around the country and say that I believe that Congress made a mistake. I would consider that entirely improper, whatever my own belief might be. So long as Congress has taken this step, and we are at war now, it seems to me my only attitude is that I have accepted the step that Congress has taken. That is my only view, and the Senator can draw his conclusions. I wrote to the Attorney General that if I am honest in my belief up to midnight of one day I can not possibly change my belief the next day, although my course of action is altered.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, your course of action is that, yet your sympathies in your heart are with Germany.

Mr. VON MACH. My feelings in my heart are with all human beings, and with the desire to see in this world an order of things which will make such wars impossible. In the same book which the major referred to before I made this statement. I said: “The old saying ‘in time of peace prepare for war’ has played the world false, and we ought to rewrite it, ‘In times of peace prepare to preserve peace.’” And the other statement which I made in that book was that one of the most outrageous conceptions had been the theory of the balance of power, and that until European nations gave up the idea of the idolatry of the balance of power, there could be no permanent peace. These two theories I see this morning in the papers President Wilson has proclaimed, and yet when I proclaimed them I was attacked by the agents of my own Government, the Department of Justice, for my attitude. And I was attacked by a certain clique interested in certain policies in Europe; and if we can trust the papers that yesterday made an attack upon President Wilson, especially the Boston Transcript, he was attacked exactly as mischievously. He was attacked exactly as mischievously after having taken hold of those two ideas that the balance of power ought to be done away with, that you can not have peace in Europe unless you do, and that in times of peace you ought to try to preserve peace; and heaven knows that I have not been a political adherent of the President, but still my blood boils within me when I see the papers attack him now because he is trying to carry out the American ideas over there.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not at the same time say that the declaration of war was a step toward the establishment of an autocracy in this country?

Mr. VON MACH. I did not, Major; but you will not deny that in the interest of carrying on this war our form of government has of necessity been transformed very much into a one-man government.

Maj. HUMES. And the so-called necessary transformations that you speak of have given rise to the two constitutional violations that you have been complaining about, haven't they?

Mr. VON MACH. They have.

Maj. HUMES. And the constitutional violations that you have been complaining about have been the right of the Government to intern alien enemies——

Mr. VON MACH. That has been one.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). The question of sending troops to Europe, and the question of conscription; is not that true?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Those are the constitutional violations that you have been complaining of?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I beg your pardon, there is one additional one.

Maj. HUMES. Those are three of the four?

Mr. VON MACH. And a very prominent additional one, and as I said before, you might bring it out and then I might bring it out but it would mean attacking people. Now, my whole activity for the past five years has been not to attack people unless it was absolutely necessary, but my whole idea has been, when people are fighting and when people are in passion, it is so difficult to see how to get out of it, but if you once see a little bit of good out of that whole string of horrors the whole world over—but if you will permit me, I would rather not go into those questions.

Maj. HUMES. But you had raised the question that you opposed certain violations of the Constitution, and I wanted to find out the particulars in which the Constitution had been violated from your viewpoint. As I understand it, you say that three have been called to your attention, namely, the internment of alien enemies in the provisions of the act of Congress——

Mr. VON MACH. What year?

Maj. HUMES. 1917, or something like that. Section 1067 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. VON MACH. Was that before the adoption of the amendment?

Maj. HUMES. It was in the neighborhood of the year 1800, I think.

Senator NELSON. The internment law we modified a little during the last Congress.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator NELSON. But it was an old law on the statute books.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I say; it was either about 1790 or 1800 I think, that it was passed.

Mr. VON MACH. Now, may we stop that for a moment; and if the Major will permit me, may I read a letter which I wrote to the United States attorney in Boston, Mr. Anderson, with the request that he forward it to the State Department, which makes my reason why I acted in that matter so perfectly clear?

Senator NELSON. Put that in the record without reading it, so as to save time.

Mr. VON MACH. Senators, it is the treatment that was meted out to some of those interned Germans which I think, if you hear, will give you an entirely different attitude on the matter, and I can tell you—I have the letters here—the fact is that they were treated so perfectly outrageously, some of them. At Ellis Island, for instance, there was a little detention pen which was just large enough to have 12 bunks, which raised up and in daytime had to be turned over because there was not enough floor space otherwise, and in that, 16 of these men were crowded. They received absolutely nothing. They were not permitted to communicate with their families; they were not permitted to get any clothing. For 10 days they had no change of underclothing or other clothing. They had no washing facilities; they had no exercise. They were given no reason for it. They were three times a day taken as prisoners to a place to eat where the food was unsatisfactory, and were then taken back again, and not until such serious ailments developed that it was necessary to make a change was a change made.

Senator NELSON. Where was the internment made?

Mr. VON MACH. That was in Ellis Island, first.

Maj. HUMES. Were you at Ellis Island?

Mr. VON MACH. No; but I got this from one of the men that were afterwards released.

Maj. HUMES. This information you got from some one else?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; I made that clear in this letter.

Maj. HUMES. The information came from an interned alien enemy, did it?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; and my point in this is, Senator, that I wrote this to the United States attorney, with the request that it be forwarded to the Attorney General, and it was in supplement to an interview which I had had with him, in which I had asked him that if I had been misinformed, that if such treatment had not been meted out to those people, he would please inform me; and since he acknowledged the receipt of my letter but did not inform me that the statements contained therein were inaccurate, I had to assume that they were correct.

And now, Senator, take another matter. To my mind it seems to be so contrary to American principles to have the same authority to be the accuser and the judge and the only appeal. I do not claim nor have I ever claimed that any of these men should not have been arrested, or should not have been severely punished if they had done anything against the peace of the United States. I know of a case of a business man in Boston who had dissolved partnership about six months before. That man was arrested as a dangerous alien enemy. His former partner, who had started in a rival business, immediately came out in the newspapers attacking him. The only man who could actually gain any benefit from that was this rival former partner.

Every single statement which came out in the paper as a cause for the arrest of this man has been disproved, and a lawyer now connected with our Department of Justice here, whom I got interested in the case, has affirmed—Mr. Dewey, the assistant attorney in Boston, himself—that every one of these charges that had been actually publicly brought against the man, has been disproved. But there are said to be other charges, and nobody can find out what these charges are, against the man. Now, I do not believe it is in the interests of the United States not to enable such a man to appeal.

His wife wrote to me the other day that she is sure now that there must be a case of mistaken identity. And why should not such a man be able to appeal to the court, and why should he not be able to go there and say, "Now, tell me what are the charges against me? What have I done?" And if he has done something, I assure you that neither I nor anybody who believes in the unconstitutionality of this behavior, in the un-Americanism of it, will for one moment defend that man. It is not that, but it is that the same Department of Justice should be accuser, should be the judge, and should be the only tribunal of appeal. And now, according to the newspapers, the Department of Justice wishes to bring before you Senators, very soon, a law according to which the same authority shall be allowed to deport people.

I know another man who is married to a girl from Providence whose ancestors fought in the War of the Rebellion, in the War of the Revolution, and also in the Civil War, and who is about as ardent and patriotic an American as she ever has been; but her husband is a German and she is now an alien enemy, and she wrote me the other day and she said she did not know but that death was the only outlook if America was going to doubt her now. Nobody could tell her what the charges were against her husband. Now, that is the only claim I make, and you will not defend that.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you claim that an alien enemy is entitled to all the rights of an American citizen in time of war? That is your contention, is it?

Mr. VON MACH. No; my contention is that the alien enemy is entitled to all the rights that the Constitution gives to any "person." The Constitution is very definite in regard to the rights which it gives to persons and to citizens, making a distinction. When it means citizens, citizens are mentioned, and when it means "persons," that word is used.

Maj. HUMES. There seems to be some difference between you and the Supreme Court of the United States about the interpretation of that section of the Constitution.

Mr. VON MACH. Then, that is unfortunate for me.

Senator NELSON. What other unconstitutional thing has ever been brought out? What else have you there?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe that the sending of troops into Russia is an unconstitutional procedure.

Senator NELSON. Oh! Now, what else is unconstitutional?

Maj. HUMES. May I just interrupt you there, Senator? Was the sending of troops to France also unconstitutional?

Mr. VON MACH. I held that view until the Supreme Court has decided that it is constitutional.

Maj. HUMES. Now you will admit that it is constitutional. Why do you not concede that same thing to the Supreme Court in the case of internment?

Mr. VON MACH. Because I believe they have never settled that question yet.

Maj. HUMES. Oh!

Mr. VON MACH. It has never come before them for the simple reason that it has never been permitted to come before the court before which it could be settled.

Maj. HUMES. It has frequently come before the lower courts, has it not?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not think it has come definitely before them.

Maj. HUMES. If it has not come before the Supreme Court it is only because the Supreme Court has not issued a writ of error and review, is it not?

Mr. VON MACH. Why has it not?

Maj. HUMES. Is not that a fact?

Mr. VON MACH. Major, you are a lawyer, are you not?

Maj. HUMES. I am not claiming anything.

Mr. VON MACH. Are you not?

Maj. HUMES. I am not under examination now, Mr. von Mach.

Mr. VON MACH. All right; excuse me.

Senator NELSON. What other unconstitutional thing have we done? You have mentioned two things. What other unconstitutional thing have we been guilty of in this country while you have been here?

Mr. VON MACH. Well, Senator, I believe that the breaking of diplomatic relations by Executive act, when those relations are the result of an act of Congress, is unconstitutional. Mind you, not the change of the personnel, but the breaking of diplomatic relations which are the result of an act of Congress; I do not believe that to be constitutional.

Senator NELSON. Yes. Now, what else is unconstitutional? I am anxious to know.

Mr. VON MACH. Well, I am very much delighted to have you feel so. That has not been the attitude of the courts recently.

Senator STERLING. I suppose you think it is unconstitutional to adopt these prohibition amendments, do you not?

Mr. VON MACH. I have not given that very much thought, Senator.

Senator STERLING. Well, that interferes with personal liberty, does it not?

Mr. VON MACH. It does not very much interfere with my personal liberty; but I am much opposed to it, if you want it that way. I mean, I am much opposed to prohibition, because I have lived too long in Maine, and I know that it does not prohibit. [Laughter.]

Senator STERLING. Of course, you think we are doing an unconstitutional thing in having our troops occupy a portion of Germany now?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Senator STERLING. You do not.

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Senator STERLING. That is constitutional, is it?

Mr. VON MACH. Well, Senator, with Russia you are not at war. You have not declared war against Russia.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes; they are our allies? The Russian Government is our ally?

Mr. VON MACH. But we are speaking of different governments.

Senator NELSON. The great trouble with Russia is that there are a lot of Germans in there that have not retired yet. They are mixing up with the Bolsheviki. Maybe that is on your mind.

Mr. VON MACH. No, Senator. This question which was raised the other day in the Senate, and which is raised much more frequently in smoking cars and all about, is this fundamental question: During the war is it according to the Constitution of the United States and in keeping with American principles to have the chief power use the troops wherever and for whatever cause it seems to him to be to the interests of the Government?

Senator NELSON. You mean to use the food power?

Mr. VON MACH. No; to use the soldiers of the Government.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. VON MACH. And should it not be left to the decision of Congress?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. Whether the Army should be used in furthering—

Senator NELSON. You think we made a mistake, then, which was unconstitutional, to let the President send the troops to Europe?

Mr. VON MACH. That has been—I thought so, until the Supreme Court decided that it was, because according to my reading of the provisions of the Constitution I did not see how it would be possible to have Congress raise an Army to go out of the country.

Senator NELSON. What were your views as to the constitutionality of the draft law?

Mr. VON MACH. My views of that I can best explain in the answer which I sent to a young man who had formerly been my employer and who asked me what he should do in the question, and who had heard of a very prominent lawyer in Washington who had declared the law to be unconstitutional; and this young man wanted to know, on the strength of that, whether he would have a right to withdraw himself from the draft, and I wrote him that I had been very deeply impressed by the arguments which had been advanced against the constitutionality of that, but that I personally was not convinced of the absolute soundness of those arguments.

Senator NELSON. In other words, you were in doubt still?

Mr. VON MACH. I was in doubt, and that so long as I was in doubt and so long as the law remained on our statute books and had not been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, it was his undoubted duty to obey the law in every detail.

Senator NELSON. You were willing to give the Government the benefit of the doubt, then, were you?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes; I was, in every single case. I would not feel justified in disobeying the law because I personally did not believe in its constitutionality.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. And I believe that that is the proper attitude to take.

Senator NELSON. Now, what other unconstitutional things have we done here during the war? I want to know, because we are getting off the fence, now. What other unconstitutional things are there that we have been guilty of during the war?

Mr. VON MACH. Perhaps Maj. Humes may find out some more. He seems to have a great fund.

Senator NELSON. I want the information from you.

Mr. VON MACH. Perhaps he can stir my memory.

Senator NELSON. I want to know from you, because you stated a while ago that part of your mission was to preach loyalty and adhesion to authority, and to keep us straight and prevent violations of the Constitution.

Mr. VON MACH. I am so glad you put it that way, because it adds an importance and consequence to my activities which I had not hoped to get from you.

My idea in making a statement here is this: I knew that I had once or twice, or possibly more than that, mentioned such facts. If I had omitted that in my statement, your very active and watchful legal adviser would immediately have said, "How about this? Did you not, during that time, also call attention to that?" I can assure you that since the outbreak of the war the thoughts which I have permitted myself to think have been thoughts for the welfare of this country, not only for the winning of the war, which is, after all, an exceedingly small matter compared with the position of this country in this world, but whether in the world a democracy, as it is based on that wonderful Constitution of the United States, shall prevail, or whether autocracy, or what we are apt to question, Bolshevism, shall prevail.

Senator NELSON. Your constant prayer has been, then, "Oh, Lord, help my unbelief"? Your constant prayer has been all during the war to have the Lord help your unbelief?

Mr. VON MACH. No; my constant prayer has been, "Help us all, every one of us"; and I might have included you in there, Senator. I will in future.

Senator NELSON. You feel that you have been all along pouring oil on the troubled waters?

Mr. VON MACH. No——

Senator NELSON. Your mission has been to pour oil on the troubled waters in this case?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; not since the beginning of the war——

Senator NELSON. No; but before the war?

Mr. VON MACH. I have tried to.

Senator NELSON. You felt all your work, before we declared war, was simply to pour oil upon the troubled waters?

Mr. VON MACH. To have America do for the nations abroad what she has done for the people here.

Senator OVERMAN. What did you say about praying for Senator Nelson?

Mr. VON MACH. I said that in the future I would include the Senator, always, in my prayers.

Senator NELSON, you ask such embarrassing questions, and you have such a kindly smile. [Laughter.]

Senator NELSON. On these grave constitutional questions, I think you are justified in making that prayer.

Maj. HUMES. Maj. Keehn is still here, Senator Sterling.

Senator STERLING. I will not stop now. I do not think that there is anything that I care to ask, anyhow, Maj. Humes. I have not the letter before me—the statement—now.

Mr. VON MACH. Maj. Humes has not broached one subject at all, which has been broached here, and of which I happen to know something in general, and that is the idea of the establishment of a newspaper, or of newspapers, in this country. Major, have you anything—

Senator OVERMAN. I think we had better adjourn now and take that up to-morrow. You can be here to-morrow?

Mr. VON MACH. Certainly.

Senator OVERMAN. If you have any further statement to make, you had better make it to-morrow.

Mr. VON MACH. I would hate to go back and not answer these various questions, because I think that is a very important thing.

Also, I notice that the German University League has been mentioned before you here.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. I would like to get the by-laws of that. Have you got the by-laws of the German University League here?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. There were some of the exhibits that went down to the printer, and we have not got them back, and it was among them.

I may not have asked you about this: Did you contribute any articles of any kind to Viereck's Fatherland?

Mr. VON MACH. I contributed a great many to Viereck's while it was the Fatherland.

Maj. HUMES. While it was the Fatherland?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

(By order of the committee, a letter in relation to canceling the naturalization of Louis N. Hammerling is here printed in full, as follows:)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1919.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman, Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to advise you that under even date herewith the United States Attorney for the Middle District of Pennsylvania has been directed to institute proceedings to cancel the naturalization of Louis N. Hammerling. Such action is predicated upon the testimony of Mr. Hammerling before your committee from which it appears that certain statements believed to be material to which he made oath, upon which he was admitted to citizenship are false.

For the Attorney General.

Respectfully,

CLAUDE R. PORTER.
Assistant Attorney General.

(Thereupon, at 5.45 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned until Friday, January 10, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Mr. von Mach, you did not conclude yesterday. You may take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDMUND VON MACH—Resumed.

Senator NELSON. Have you some more constitutional questions?

Mr. VON MACH. No, Senator. But, Senator, to a great many of us those constitutional questions are of such supreme importance, and while they do not belong in the discussion before this committee, those of us who have sworn an oath to the Constitution can not readily understand it, why those people born under the Constitution—

Senator NELSON. It is a fortunate thing that in Germany they are not bothered with a constitution like we have.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, when a man born in Germany comes to this country and becomes an American citizen he becomes so because of his love for the Constitution and for the principles for which it stands, and it really has been a very great misfortune that during these past years the attitude of the Germans in this country has been so totally misunderstood and suspicion directed toward them, as if anything could come up which would make them willing to be faithless to it.

Senator STERLING. You have got in the habit of invoking the Constitution for the protection of everything that is pro-German.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, supposing that that should be so, do you feel that that is against American principles? Do you feel that the Constitution should not be obeyed, if obeying the Constitution should happen to be in favor of a particular case?

Senator NELSON. But you construe the Constitution—Germans are construing the Constitution themselves in their own way.

Mr. VON MACH. It is not the Germans.

Senator NELSON. You mentioned yesterday that the Supreme Court in one case has overruled your idea. Is not your trouble that you have the idea that an appeal should lie from the Supreme Court on constitutional questions to the Kaiser?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. As I suggested yesterday, Senator, you always take the sting out of your question in the way you put it. [Laughter.]

Senator OVERMAN. Well, proceed.

Mr. VON MACH. I testified yesterday to the general purpose of my writing, which was to present in temperate language the facts as I believed they appeared to the people of central Europe. This necessarily meant restriction, and in this connection I would like to present to you the following letter. This letter was sent to me—I will hand you the letter so that you can see the name afterwards—on November 11, 1914, by the editor of one of our monthly magazines, which has, I believe, the largest circulation, or if not the largest one of the largest circulations, who invited me to write a letter, as follows—

Senator OVERMAN. What magazine?

Senator NELSON. Viereck's?

Mr. VON MACH. Oh, no. This was after we entered the war; and I will hand you the letter.

Senator OVERMAN. Tell us what the magazine was.

Senator NELSON. What was the magazine?

Mr. VON MACH. Do you think it is necessary? This gentleman wrote me this four years ago.

Senator NELSON. You say it is one of the best magazines?

Mr. VON MACH. One of the largest.

Senator OVERMAN. Let us have the name of it.

Mr. VON MACH. Everybody's. The letter reads as follows:

Everybody's Magazine wishes to undertake an experiment in emotional understanding. It requires an article.—a short one, say 1,500 words,—which shall be an indictment of England written out of the deep of German feeling, and provided only that it is done by someone like yourself who is big enough to assume the moral responsibility, it may be as harsh, as bitter and as unrestrained by affections of neutrality, as the writer likes to make it.

It then goes on to suggest the kind of article he wants. He says:

If I were writing the indictment I should say that to the German the Britisher is the colossal hypocrite of the world; that he affects to disbelieve in militarism and seeks to impose himself upon the world by his naval supremacy; that, as Cramb says, he goes about saying "Let us keep the peace for the sake of God and because it pays;" that he has purloined his empire and that he no more entered this war because Germany violated Belgian neutrality than because Prussia may have not played fair with the Empress Maria Theresa, but because every trade report for twenty years had been a cause of war with Germany, and that he is the smuggest creation of God.

Senator STERLING. Now, those are the words of the editor of the magazine to you?

Mr. VON MACH. Suggesting—

Senator STERLING. Suggesting the kind of an article for you to write?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes. My reply to the letter was as follows:

I have given your offer serious consideration. Such an article can be valuable only if it expresses the honest conviction of a man, as well in style and form as in thought. I believe too firmly that intemperate speech has been a strong contributory cause of the war to yield to the temptation of putting into catchphrases my very strong feelings. However wrong England is today, some day the Germans and the English will have to face the world again as brethren and I do not wish to make the task of readjustment more difficult then.

And I may add that, what for a man of my very slender means would have been quite an inducement, he said at the end:

If you can do it will you be so good as to answer at once? We should leave the remuneration to you.

Senator OVERMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. VON MACH. November 11, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any objection to giving us the name of the editor?

Mr. VON MACH. The name of the editor? Well, I have already given you the name of the magazine, Everybody's. The editor was Garet Garrett.

Senator NELSON. Who?

Mr. VON MACH. Garet Garrett; and I simply bring this statement out because I think that I should fairly and clearly indicate just what had been the purpose of my general writing.

Maj. Humes yesterday presented a letter to me from Dr. Albert, asking for information on certain points. Similar letters can be found among the files of all or almost all the embassies here in Washington.

I remember having corresponded with Sir Cecil Spring-Rice; and I also remember corresponding with the French ambassador, whom I asked for certain information, and which he had the kindness to forward to me.

I desire to bring in this information to show that I really spared no pains and tried to get information, and accurate information, from whomever was in a position, as I believed, to give me this information, and it has been, in my whole testimony, not my intention to mention names so long as I have been attacked and have been under suspicion, as I preferred not to have other people dragged in with it until I had successfully cleared myself before this committee.

Maj. HUMES. In your letter to the English ambassador did you say that the purpose of the book for which you were seeking data was in order that you might succeed in contributing your bit to get more friends here for your beloved Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did you say that to the English ambassador?

Mr. VON MACH. Not at all, sir; and in the case of the letter to the English ambassador I asked for a copy—I remember this one letter, I believe there were several, but in the one that I remember definitely I asked for an authentic copy of the British Blue Book, because I was writing on the various documents, and I wanted to be sure to have absolutely accurate information.

Maj. HUMES. You did not express your personal sentiments in those letters as you did in the one you wrote to Dr. Albert, did you?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I surely did not.

Senator STERLING. Did you receive a letter or letters from Cecil Spring-Rice?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Did you get the copy of the Blue Book?

Mr. VON MACH. I did. Excuse me; I am not sure whether Cecil Spring-Rice sent me the copy of the Blue Book or referred me to the publication. I know I got a copy of the Yellow Book from the French ambassador.

Maj. Humes also read a passage from a letter from Mr. Viereck to Dr. Dernberg in which reference was made to my recommending the publication of a certain book, and both Maj. Humes and you gentlemen were exceedingly courteous in accepting my statement that I had no recollection whatsoever as to what that could refer to. I have been trying to think over to what that could refer, and possibly Maj. Humes may have further information on the subject; but I remember that during the fall of 1914, or the winter—I do not know just when—I was approached by one of two men, either an Englishman who had been in this country, or a man who had come from New York, and who, I believe, was connected then with the World's Peace Foundation, who had reserved the rights from Mr. Morrell, an English author, who had published a book on the Morocco affair. He is the man who came first into prominence when he published the book on the Congo. I was approached, as I say, by one or the other of these men, I do not remember now which one, about the desirability of publishing Morrell's book in this country. It was out of print, and Morrell was willing to rewrite the second edition, and asked whether it would be possible to have that book published here, and I believe that this reference in the letter which was read is probably to this book of Morrell's on the Morocco question.

Requests were made to me from all kinds of people. As I pointed out to you, Senators, yesterday, all of a sudden the dicebox of fate threw my name out rather prominently, and all kinds of requests came to me, and, as far as possible, especially if those requests came from people who, like myself, desired to have good will, I tried to carry them out.

I have here a letter from a Boston physician who called on me first, together with the late Gov. Guild, in the interest of a friend of theirs who had been arrested at the outbreak of the war in Germany, Admiral Neald. That is only one of the cases where people came to me. He wrote:

Knowing your interest in presenting the cause of Germany to Americans from a proper point of view, I venture to call your attention to the possibility of a graceful act on the part of Germany toward some English friends of mine who are detained as prisoners of war at Nauheim. At the beginning of the war Admiral Neald and his wife were at Nauheim taking the baths, etc.

And that is only one of a great many instances. Another one I happen to remember is Mr. Pritchard, who was connected years ago with the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. None of these people, including Dr. Guild, would have come to me or would have appeared to me if they had not understood in what kind of a spirit I was trying to carry on my work.

I made reference yesterday in my testimony here to what I believe was one of the most unfortunate instances of this suspicion of American citizens of German birth in this country, which had to do with the fact that those names of ours which appeared distasteful to the British secret service were afterwards, when we entered into the war, taken over as the nucleus of a list of disloyal citizens, and I have with me here a paper which I was unable to find yesterday, which I should like to present to you. This is the paper that I was unable to find yesterday. This is a transcript of a comment made by a gentleman by the name of Forbes Sutherland on January 14, 1915, before the Boston Press Club. He said that for several years he had a member of the British military and intelligence department; that he had landed in New York toward the end of June, 1914; and that he there had a cablegram from the home office in London, already three days old, telling him to report immediately; that he telephoned to his local chief in Montreal, Canada, to inquire what it was all about, and that he was told it was for the European service; that he had returned to London, and that about one week before the first declaration of war he had gone to Antwerp with one of the heads of the British intelligence department to concert measures with the head of the Belgian secret service; that he had taken part in the British Expeditionary Forces and was wounded at the Battle of Mons; that he was in this country overseeing the shipment of horses for the British Army.

And at that time when he delivered this speech, and was in British pay, he at the same time wrote the military news for one of the big Boston papers, which avowedly was distinctly neutral, as a military expert.

Capt. LESTER. May I ask who that was?

Mr. VON MACH. Mr. Forbes Sutherland.

Then, I have a letter here which is dated August 14, 1917, which is written from New York:

MY DEAR VON MACH: I think I should at once inform you of a thing which has occurred here. My eldest sister, in a letter dated June 19th, just mentioned your name. She said nothing about you. The British stopped this letter for weeks, so that I only received it last week. The British cabled my name and address to their people here, with instructions to learn from me whatever I would tell about you. Detective Ranney, accordingly, called here to-day.

When I was asked yesterday what my profession was, I replied in the words of the French author who is now exiled in Switzerland, that he still considered himself an author, but a gagged author.

Senator NELSON. A what?

Mr. VON MACH. A gagged author. I have been absolutely successfully gagged. As soon as anybody finds out anybody else who simply knows me—a man like Mr. Ranney or like Mr. Hoffer, some agent of the British secret service, and I do not know but possibly of our Secret Service, arrives and gives the impression that I am a man who is subject to suspicion and it would be much wiser for anybody to keep away from me. It has even gone to the extent that one of your colleagues, Senator, has told people they had better keep away from me, because I was going to be the next one to be arrested. It has gone to the extent that agents of the Department of Justice in the office of the United States attorney in Boston very freely said that I was to be the next one to be arrested, and it would not be safe to be friends with me, and that if there was no law yet, the department would see that certainly a law would be passed by which I should be arrested.

Now, I took the matter up with the Attorney General, and in the letter from which I quoted yesterday I stated I was ready to explain everything, ready to submit my whole correspondence that I had, and all the books, and everything. None of my books were officially examined, none of my correspondence has been examined, and yet representatives of the Département of Justice——

Senator OVERMAN. You say you are looked upon by this country, and particularly by England, as a dangerous man?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, by England. I do not believe that the Attorney General—I know that the State Department does not look upon me in that way.

Senator OVERMAN. But you say some one has been warned?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not know how that happens to come about but he probably has received such information, and I believe it is of this mixture of the British secret service with our service, and if the newspaper reports of the hearing here were correct, Mr. Bieask when he appeared before you, made the statement that he was going to speak from facts which were collected by the British secret service and by our own Secret Service, and there is an exceedingly widespread feeling, Senator, that it is not that our own proper officials have any suspicion of us, or after investigation have found that there is the least cause for suspicion, but it is because of these attacks on a foreign secret service.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think, Professor, it comes from the tenor of your books and your writings and your publications?

Mr. VON MACH. Why, Senator, if it came from the tenor of books——

Senator NELSON. Or publications.

Mr. VON MACH. I hate to draw into this hearing the name of the great man who has only recently died, but since I am not referred to what he said in any private letters to me, but to what he said publicly, I may do so. Now, this book, "What Germany Wants," which I wrote and to which this letter referred, that the Major read to why, Theodore Roosevelt himself publicly stated that to his mind was one of the most American books, written in the most American spirit; a book written in the spirit in which all such books should be written. He said that in one of his great articles in the New York Times long before I ever met him, and on the strength of my books having read them. He was not the man to jump at conclusions. I had heard of it; he bought the book; he read the book; and then he invited me to come and see him, and we had very pleasant correspondence about it. I do not want to refer to it here, but he, I think, would give you an entirely different idea. That is what he said publicly in the New York Times.

Now, that book was not offensive to America, it could not be offensive, but it was a book which was against the balance of power, which was against the idea of "in time of peace prepare for war," those very things that the President has accepted now.

And, Senators, only two days ago Rider Haggard published his last letter which Theodore Roosevelt wrote him, on December 6, and since that was published, although I have not seen it published in any of the Washington papers, it is perfectly proper to mention it here. In that letter of Theodore Roosevelt, written on December 6, he said:

MY DEAR RIDER HAGGARD——

Senator OVERMAN. What year?

Mr. VON MACH. Last December 6.

MY DEAR RIDER HAGGARD: In a moment of pessimism the other day I said I never wished to hear from any Englishman excepting——

And now the name has been deleted——

But that was because I had forgotten you.

Now, can you give any other explanation to that, than that this propaganda carried on by the secret service, which is all of this so-called German propaganda, which is in order to hide that, that even a man like Theodore Roosevelt, during the last days of his life was forced to say, on December 6, "In a moment of pessimism the other day I said I never wished to hear from any Englishman again"?

Senator STERLING. Do you think you have any justification in drawing any such inference from that letter of Theodore Roosevelt—the British system, the British detective system, or anything of that kind? Do you think for a moment, Dr. von Mach, that that has any relation whatever to England's conduct in this war?

Mr. VON MACH. No; but to England's conduct at the present time, sir.

Senator STERLING. To England's conduct at the present time? What conduct of England at the present time would evoke a statement like that from ex-President Roosevelt?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not know, but you Senators have it in your power to investigate what that really means. You Senators have it in your power to investigate whether there is any truth in the fact that these blacklists—

Senator NELSON (interposing). You must be mistaken. We are not spiritualists. We can not communicate with departed spirits.

Mr. VON MACH. No [laughing].

Senator STERLING. Dr. von Mach, I think that is a pretty fair example of the way you have distorted England's attitude, England's position, all the way through; her motives and so on.

Mr. VON MACH. What is that?

Senator STERLING. The improper inference or the unjustifiable inference you draw from that letter written by Col. Roosevelt is a fair example of the distortions you make of England's attitude all through, and that you have made from the start, from the very beginning.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, my great wish would be in this matter, as in all others, for your committee, if it is possible without resort to spiritualism, to ascertain the definite truth, and I feel that the attacks which have been made here—I feel that the inferences which you have been asked to consider from the testimony presented are such that it is only fair to call your attention also to such things.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you allege that England is doing?

Mr. VON MACH. On that side of the table "England" is used, when on this side of the table I speak of "British secret service." Now, I believe that there is a fundamental difference. I believe that there is at the present time a certain very definite campaign on foot to thwart the President from keeping the word which he has pledged in his 14 points which have been accepted, and that the President's great wish and desire is to bring about such conditions that war in the future should become an impossibility, and that these conditions must be just the world over. I believe, judging by the papers, there is a very pronounced propaganda against that, and such a propaganda would not certainly spring up if there had not been a propaganda here before.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think the British secret service got their eyes on you and were watching you because you have been hounding England so much?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I did not hound England so much: in fact, I have not mentioned, in any of these statements that I have given you now, anything about the British secret service heretofore, but I believe that if you actually wish to get at the truth of the subject which you investigate, you can not do so without also looking at that. I may be mistaken in my views.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think that England now has got a propaganda against the league of nations?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe so. But, Senator, it is a very difficult thing for me to come here and say "I believe," when I am immediately challenged by you with "Give the proofs. Who are your legal advisers who have the actual proofs?"

Senator OVERMAN. You said they are having a propaganda now and I wanted to know if you think it is against the league of nations?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe it is against the league of nations. It is counter to securing, so far as we can look into the future, a permanent peace.

Senator OVERMAN. You think a good deal of this agitation against the league of nations is being promulgated by the English people?

Mr. VON MACH. No; not by the English people.

Senator OVERMAN. By the British secret service?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes. A cablegram came over the other day: I forget now in which paper I read it, but it was to the effect that the people in charge of the Governments abroad were very much troubled by the fact that the President appealed directly to the people and to the consciences of the people and was undermining their attitude. That seems to me an exceedingly—

Senator OVERMAN. You mean the people that are in authority were promulgating this propaganda against the league of nations?

Mr. VON MACH. I should not wonder.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that what you mean by the propaganda?

Mr. VON MACH. I mean that this whole establishment in this country which goes under the name of British secret service, which has its tentacles everywhere, is at the present time—I do not know to whom—set in motion with the view of thwarting the peace aims of the President of the United States.

Senator NELSON. Do you feel that you are in those tentacles of the British secret service?

Mr. VON MACH. I feel that they would love nothing better than to squeeze the life out of me, sir.

Senator NELSON. Is that so?

Mr. VON MACH. I do believe that, sir. I know they have done everything to deprive me of my means of livelihood, to the greatest extent. And in connection with this British propaganda, I also want to read to you an editorial which appeared in the London Times, at which has to do with the committee of which we spoke yesterday.

Senator NELSON. Oh, let that go into the record without reading.

Mr. VON MACH. This is not a letter, sir; this is an editorial from the London Times.

Senator NELSON. I mean let it go into the record, but we have not the time to go into all this.

(The editorial referred to is here printed in the record in full. It follows:)

[From London Times, Dec. 31, 1915.]

CONDENSED-MILK AGITATION—REQUEST TO THE ALLIED GOVERNMENTS—"HOVERING" IN U. S. WATERS.

[From our own correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, December 29, 1915.

When Congress meets next week it will find the relations of the United States and Great Britain entering a new and important phase. The major portion of the blockade is at present in abeyance, but in its place have arisen various minor questions which, if mishandled, may give the German propagandists in the Legislature and elsewhere more formidable ammunition than has been afforded them by the generally academic annoyance of our procedure under the Order in Council.

One reason for this is that several of the questions will seem to the man in the street, unless properly explained, to raise questions of humanity rather than law. I have already mentioned Von Mach and his condensed-milk agitation. The State Department yesterday sent the American Ambassadors in London and Paris the following telegram:

"Ascertain and report promptly whether British (French) Government will permit the transportation of milk from this country to Germany and Austria, to be distributed to babies in these countries under the direction of the American Red Cross."

If we refuse leave, von Mach's propaganda will have scored a distinct triumph. Yet we surely have every right to refuse. For one thing the American Red Cross has got no units in Germany, and, therefore, no obvious machinery for distribution; secondly, the fact that the Central Powers are contiguous with Switzerland, the home of condensed milk, and great dairy countries like Denmark and Holland raises grave doubts as to the sincerity of the Teutonic complaints.

SEIZURE OF PARCELS.

A refusal too, will probably confront us with another problem. Our interference with the indirect parcel post service to Germany has already been made the subject of a sentimental German propaganda regarding Christmas presents, and our seizure of parcels for Scandinavian countries has already been the subject of informal protests on the part of the Government and today von Mach announces that he is preparing to send this week three tons of milk by the first class mail to Germany and Austria. The Germany has already tried to use the first class mail for smuggling, von Mach can, it is clear, be undertaking so uneconomical an adventure only in the hope of further tempting us to seize the first class mail, which would be a violation of the International Postal Convention.

Another controversy upon which, as already stated, the German propagandists stake a good deal concerns Red Cross rubber supplies for the Central Powers.

Maj. HUMES. Yesterday you were asked what the purposes were of this German University League of which you were a trustee and president.

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What were those purposes, as you understood them?

Mr. VON MACH. I have some papers here which I would like to refer to.

Maj. HUMES. I do not care for your papers. I would like to know what was your understanding of the purposes of that league.

Mr. VON MACH. My understanding of the purpose of that league was that it was to bring together those people in this country who, being familiar with the higher education in Germany, desired to bring about better feelings, if possible, between the two countries.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you read the by-laws published in the pamphlet? You were president of the league.

Mr. VON MACH. I was president for one year, but I do not know the by-laws, just as you might not be familiar with the by-laws of a club of which you are a member.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you read the charter?

Mr. VON MACH. No. Probably I have read it, but, as I told you yesterday, the league was formed in 1914, I understand, in such a way that only those who had studied in German universities were members of the league, and since I had never studied in a German university I was precluded from becoming a member of that league, and I was invited, I believe, in the—I wrote that to Mr. Becker the other day; I looked it up—I believe it was in the spring of 1915, to become an associate member.

Senator NELSON. Never mind that. Did you approve of the purposes of the league as announced in their by-laws.

Mr. VON MACH. I suppose I must have, but I am not aware of just what the by-laws are, but suppose the Major read it to us.

Maj. HUMES. The purposes, as set forth in the annual book of the league when you were a trustee, in 1915, are as follows:

(1) To establish in the United States a well-organized center for former students at German Universities and other German Institutions of similar standards in Germany, Austria-Hungary and other countries.

(2) To cooperate with every effort to strengthen the regard for the German and for their aims and ideals and to secure for them fair play and proper appreciation.

(3) To correct misinformation about German conditions and problems by placing before educated Americans and before the press of this country reliable material bearing on German affairs.

Now, the purpose was to strengthen Germany in the United States, was it not?

Mr. VON MACH. I think the purpose was to strengthen the good relations between the United States and Germany.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, it was to promote the propaganda program of the German Government in this country to that end, and to the extent of at least $25,000 the German University League was financed by the German Government, through Dr. Albert: is that not a fact?

Mr. VON MACH. You told me that yesterday as a fact, and I told you, Major, that it was the greatest surprise to me possible, because during the year that I was president—and you probably have the record—I may have presided possibly at five or six meetings, and I know that the treasurer's report was always greeted with a moan and a tear, because we never knew where the money was coming from.

Maj. HUMES. But you knew that money came in an emergency?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. It always put in an appearance when there was an emergency?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. I can tell you a very definite instance. Once, when it looked as if a break between this country and Germany was imminent, I suggested a special meeting of the trustees of the German University League, and we decided to send a telegram, or rather a radiogram, to the rector of Berlin University, with the intention of having the German people understand more fully the American point of view and obviate such a break, and that radiogram cost $100, and there was no money to pay for that radiogram.

we took up an individual subscription among the various members and we paid for it out of that fund. If there had been something like $25,000 at the disposal of the league, I do not see why we should have collected this money.

Maj. HUMES. You also had a meeting shortly after the sinking of the Lusitania. Do you remember that meeting?

Mr. VON MACH. No, I do not remember, because at that time I believe I was not a member of the league.

Maj. HUMES. You were a trustee?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What year?

Mr. VON MACH. As I told you, the first year, 1914 and 1915—I believe the annual meetings were held in the fall, and 1914 and 1915 I was not even a member—and I believe I joined the league, if I am not mistaken, as an associate member, somewhere——

Maj. HUMES. There is a list of officers in your own publication, in August, 1915 or 1916 [showing witness document].

Mr. VON MACH. Well——

Capt. LESTER. 1915 and 1916.

Mr. VON MACH. 1915 and 1916.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. These were elected, and here is the report of 1915 and 1916.

Maj. HUMES. When did you have your annual meeting?

Mr. VON MACH. In the fall, always.

Maj. HUMES. You became an officer, then, in the fall of 1915?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe they elected me an officer, but I lived in Cambridge, and I was very little in New York, then.

Maj. HUMES. Then, how did it happen that you participated in the sending of this radiogram to Germany, if you were not connected with it?

Mr. VON MACH. I would say that was——

Maj. HUMES. This was on the 20th of April of what year?

Mr. VON MACH. You will probably find it in there. That was probably 1916. You see, sir, let me call your attention to those books. You are probably a little misled in that, because it was the custom of the executive secretary to bring out new books in the fall, after the new elections, and you will find the new elections for the coming year, and added to that the report of the past year, and the Major has been unintentionally misled by that. You see, for the new year my name would appear, and the record of the activities of the past year, with which I had absolutely nothing to do.

Senator NELSON. You do not deny, though, that this was financed from Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. It was the greatest surprise to me, Senator——

Senator NELSON. But you do not deny it?

Mr. VON MACH. How can I, when the Major tells me he knows it is so? Of course, there is a possibility that the Major is mistaken; but I can state most definitely and firmly that I had no idea. The Major probably has among the papers a letter which I remember writing when I was president, in which I said the one thing that troubled me most was the state of the finances of the league, and then I suggested that we set up a special appeal to the members to get enough money. Now, if we had had those $25,000, that letter would have been perfect nonsense. You have that letter, Major? But you can get it?

Maj. HUMES. I am not concerned about the letter. You also were a great believer in Prussia and Prussianism?

Mr. VON MACH. What do you call Prussianism?

Maj. HUMES. And you considered Prussia the brains of Germany, did you not?

Mr. VON MACH. What do you mean when you say "Prussianism"?

Maj. HUMES. I am accepting the term that you used in your addresses.

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, I would probably use the term "Prussianism" when I talked to people who had been abroad and who know that Prussia is the largest part, or was the largest part, of Germany, and that it included such varying centers as, for instance, Cologne on the Rhine, and Dantzic, and Königsberg on the north, and Berlin in the center, and the mountains of the Woevre on the west. That is a Prussia.

Senator STERLING. Prussianism means, if I may suggest, the dominance of Prussia in the affairs of the German Empire; in the politics of Germany?

Mr. VON MACH. I suppose if you use that term, it might mean that; but if there was such a safeguard in the constitution against the overbalance of power on the part of Prussia—now, if the question that the major asked intended to convey the impression that I was not as heartily in favor of the policy of south Germany as of north Germany, I think I can say no.

Senator STERLING. Germany, under the Kaiser, has been dominated by him, has it not?

Mr. VON MACH. Not in the sense in which Germany is used in this country; sir. You see "Prussianism" in this country, the term as it is generally applied, applies to the idea of an aristocracy interested especially in military affairs, and through the caste spirit and the military spirit, dominating the political life of a country.

Senator STERLING. Has not that been true during the last several years in Germany, that the military spirit, the autocratic spirit, has dominated German affairs—German politics—through the Kaiser and through his immediate supporters?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I believe that thorough investigation would prove to you that it was no longer, during the past 10 years, the aristocracy that dominated affairs, but that it was distinctly the rich business men.

Senator STERLING. Allied with the autocracy. The rich business men in alliance with the autocracy did dominate Germany, and they are really responsible for the bringing on of this war.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, there is one definite thing, particularly, that makes it perfectly clear that in the sense you use it in, it was impossible. For instance, you remember that before war began—when the state of war was declared the Emperor, the King of Prussia, was not permitted to announce a state of war throughout the whole of Germany. He could announce that only through Prussia. And the King of Bavaria had to announce a state of war in Bavaria, because Bavaria was altogether independent.

Senator STERLING. That, Dr. von Mach, is a mere technicality, so far as that is concerned, and I think you will realize that it is. It is apart from the question of the domination of Germany and the German Empire by Prussia and Prussian influences.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, Prussia was by far the largest part of Germany, and if the question simmers down to-day to the question, has Prussia, which was about three-fourths of Germany, dominated Germany, I have no doubt that is true.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to an extract from an address delivered by you to the German University League, from which I read as follows:

Prussianism has indeed conquered the world! Not the Prussianism which those who hate it and those who do not know it have painted for American consumption, and which in practice may have had its drawbacks, for mankind have never yet been able to put into practice without defects even the best of ideas, but the Prussianism which Cobden called "the brains of Germany."

And you further say:

The Germany of to-day has laid aside many foolish prejudices of yesterday. Then the Socialists were regarded as unpatriotic because they were opposed to the present form of Government. To-day everybody knows that the love of Germany beats as true in the heart of the Socialist as in that of the nobleman. Side by side they have given their lives for the Fatherland.

Mr. VON MACH. I thank you for having read those statements, because I think they are fine.

Maj. HUMES. Just a moment. At that time you were advocating Prussianism—the supremacy of Prussia; you felt that Prussia had conquered the world, and as a part of the German propaganda of that day, you were advocating the things that Prussianism stood for; and to-day, even now, you are advocating and promulgating the propaganda that Germany is supporting against England and against all the allies, in order to stir up trouble between them; and the Prussianism that you adhered to in 1914 and 1915 you are adhering to in your mind to-day, and you have been advocating from the stand as a witness before this committee, have you not?

Mr. VON MACH. I think I need not add anything to those passages you have read there. I subscribe to those passages.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that you are as consistently supporting the German propaganda of to-day on this witness stand as you were supporting it in the German University League in 1914 and 1915?

Senator NELSON. I want to help the professor a little.

Mr. VON MACH. Thank you, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Now, is it not true that after 1871 Prussia absorbed Mecklenburg, Pommern, Schleswig, and Hesse-Cassel and Hanover? Is not that true, that they were all absorbed by Prussia and became a part of the Kingdom of Prussia?

Mr. VON MACH. No, Senator; I beg your pardon; you made just one mistake there. You included Mecklenburg. Mecklenburg is not a part of Prussia.

Senator NELSON. But Pommern is?

Mr. VON MACH. Pommern has been, since 1871, a part of the Kingdom of Prussia; since—I am sorry that my memory fails me, but for over 200 years it has been.

Senator NELSON. And they took in Schleswig-Holstein?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And Hesse and Cassel; and Hanover, that used to be a part of King George's dominions—King George the Third? They took all that country in, did they not?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, you—

Senator NELSON. So that you were born a Prussian, were you not?

Mr. VON MACH. I was born a Prussian, in a part of the Kingdom of Prussia.

Senator NELSON. And you continued a Prussian until 1914?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. And of course, such being the case, we can not blame you—I say this to help you out—we can not blame you for having the Prussian spirit.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I thank you very much. [Laughter.]

With that statement and with those terms as the Major has read them—and the Major has a wonderful control over his voice, putting emphasis and meaning into words which are sometimes meant to convey something that is actually not quite in the statement—but I call your attention to what Cobden calls "the brains of Germany." Now, that is my point, that whether you call it Prussianism, or whatever you call it, I am in favor of intelligent ruling of nationalities, am heartily in favor, and I did not know that I had expressed my admiration for the Socialists as I have expressed it there.

Senator NELSON. Evidently you are in favor of the Prussian system of government, are you not?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. I have always maintained—and it has always been a source of contention between my brothers and sisters and me—I have always maintained the novelty of having the sovereignty of the people gathered into the hands of one man.

Senator NELSON. Is that the fact in Germany, that in Germany they are gathered into one hand?

Mr. VON MACH. In the southern part.

Senator NELSON. How?

Mr. VON MACH. It has all been broken, now.

Senator NELSON. It is all broken, now; but before the war?

Mr. VON MACH. Before the war.

Senator NELSON. It was all gathered into one hand, was it not?

Mr. VON MACH. No. You see, Senator, you, with your great knowledge of European conditions, of course realize that Germany, before this present breakdown, was a federated state, and to distinguish, to make it perfectly clear that the German Emperor was not the monarch of Germany, the constitution did not give him the title of Emperor of Germany.

Senator NELSON. He was King of Prussia?

Mr. VON MACH. Of Prussia he was sovereign.

Senator NELSON. Yes; and being sovereign there he was the chief power, was he not?

Mr. VON MACH. Undoubtedly.

Senator NELSON. He ruled without a responsible ministry, did he not?

Mr. VON MACH. I suppose I may answer that question yes, although there are modifications.

Senator NELSON. And you said a moment ago that Prussia constituted about three-fourths of the German Empire, did you not?

Mr. VON MACH. That was, roughly, my impression.

Senator NELSON. Yes; so that three-fourths of the German Empire was under the King of Prussia, and he was practically an absolute monarch?

Mr. VON MACH. No; not an absolute monarch.

Senator NELSON. Well, nearly that.

Mr. VON MACH. I think you will find that he was more circumscribed in his powers than we are apt to believe, here.

Senator NELSON. Yes. Well, did that system of government that prevailed in Prussia meet with your approval?

Mr. VON MACH. It did not, sir.

Senator NELSON. Oh.

Mr. VON MACH. And it never has done.

Senator NELSON. Oh.

Mr. VON MACH. And it is because it did not——

Senator NELSON. Well, then, it seems to me that you ought to rejoice that the allies were attacking that system of government and undermining it.

Mr. VON MACH. Sir, that system of government was undergoing so many changes, which I believed would eventually lead to the kind of government which was more in keeping with the spirit of the age——

Senator NELSON. It seems to me that with your view of the Prussian Government that you say you have, instead of trying to perpetuate and build that up in this country, you ought to have been thankful to the Americans here for helping to undermine that system of government.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, I have been very active, I thought, in trying to avoid duplicating an autocracy in this country.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think we will do them a lot of good in Germany and help the poor German people to get a more liberal government?

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, please do not speak of it. When one hears of all that blood and murder, and when I think of all the people here, and then I think of what has happened and what will happen, and the civil war, this could be no time when we should really rejoice over the calamities of another people.

Senator NELSON. Do you not know that that is a part of the gospel of Treitschke and Nietzsche, that war is good and wholesome, and the spilling of blood is good, and a nation that is not equal to going to war is not fit to live? [Laughter.]

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, if I have not yet succeeded in convincing you that that is not my doctrine, it is perfectly hopeless.

Senator NELSON. You are perfectly familiar with the writings of Treitschke and Nietzsche and Bernhardt, are you not?

Mr. VON MACH. Unfortunately, I have not those particular books, and have not studied those, but I know there has been so much of that kind all over the world, if the end of all this horror should be that all that Nietzsche and Treitschke—I believe those were the authors you named—will be swept away, I will say, "Thank God that there is nothing of that kind left."

Senator NELSON. Could not their gospel be epitomized in these words, "iron and blood"?

Mr. VON MACH. "Iron and blood" were words that appealed to the German people through a long period, and I hope very much that the idea of this iron and blood will be swept away entirely.

Senator NELSON. And you can thank Americans for that, can you not?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe——

Senator NELSON. Is not this war going to prove a great blessing to the German people?

Mr. VON MACH. I believe that one of your colleagues, Senator. who talked——

Senator NELSON. No, no; never mind my colleagues.

Mr. VON MACH. Well, Senator, a great blessing? It would be so easy just to say yes or no to you and let it go at that and win your approbation; and yet it would not serve you to get an insight, really, into the minds of people of whom there are hundreds of thousands in this country. It is not only that I should just answer yes or no; but what you want to get at, you want to show how it is everything of that kind appeared in the minds of the American citizens of German birth in this country.

Senator NELSON. Do you think it is a good thing for the German people to get rid of the Kaiser?

Mr. VON MACH. I think the way they got rid of the Kaiser was an unfortunate thing for the German people.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. But I believe that if the President is enabled to carry out his ideas which he apparently has now, for the world is a whole——

Senator NELSON. You do not give me a straight answer. Do you think it was a good thing for the German people to get rid of the Kaiser?

Mr. VON MACH. I answered that, Senator.

Senator NELSON. No; you have not answered it.

Mr. VON MACH. I beg your pardon. I said I did not think it was a good thing for them to get rid of the Kaiser in the way in which they did get rid of him.

Senator NELSON. Oh, that is it. You mean, force him to abdicate?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not believe, Senator, that the forcing him to abdicate was really done in a way according to the spirit of democracy.

Senator NELSON. What you mean is that it was not done constitutionally? [Laughter.]

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. But, Senator, you would do me the greatest favor if my name can be connected with the idea of standing for the Constitution. Whether it hurts or whether it does not, I am delighted. That is what I swore and that is what I cling to.

But you, Senator, wish to ask me about the views of other countries. What I am especially interested in is our own country.

Senator OVERMAN. How would you have gotten rid of the Kaiser?

Mr. VON MACH. By becoming an American citizen, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. By bringing him over and making him an American citizen?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; I said, by myself becoming an American citizen.

Senator OVERMAN. You said that it was unfortunate, the way that we got rid of him.

Mr. VON MACH. I beg your pardon; you have twisted the question around again. Senator Nelson asked me the question, how the German people got rid of the Kaiser, and now you say how we got rid of him. [Laughter.]

Senator OVERMAN. I mean the allies.

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, all these questions conflict with a firm determination I made the moment Congress voted to go in the war, when I said: "My feelings, my beliefs—leave that entirely to a later time. I will not express those. Publicly we are now at war, and we are all in the same boat, and it would be perfectly foolish to ignore." Whether we believed up to that moment a different course should be taken, the moment a certain course had been taken that course had to be carried out for a successful end and in such a fashion that the United States should, when taken over——

Senator OVERMAN. You have stated all of that. Now, what else have you got to state? We want to get through with this.

Mr. VON MACH. There has been a great deal said, according to the accounts, before your committee also about the desire of establishing newspapers in this country; and the implication, as I understand, has been of having newspapers in this country which would be distinctly German papers, and in that way would undermine the sound public opinion of the United States. Now, I have been connected, more or less merely asked to join, here or there, with various attempts to establish papers. I was asked when Dr. Schweitzer, as chairman of the committee, tried to get public subscribers for the purpose of establishing a daily paper in New York.

Senator NELSON. A German paper?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. An English paper?

Mr. VON MACH. An American paper.

Senator NELSON. An English paper?

Mr. VON MACH. No; not an English paper; an American paper.

Senator NELSON. I mean a paper in the English language and not in the German language.

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir. I was never active, because that was during the time I was living in Cambridge, and the committee was working in New York. The committee in New York found it impossible to raise enough money by public subscription to make it worth while to start the paper, and the enterprise was abandoned.

In Boston we had a paper which at the present time has been joined with the Boston Herald, namely, the Boston Journal. It was the paper which, during the Progressive campaign of eight years ago, had been in the hands of Mr. Munsey, a very strong and prominent supporter of Mr. Roosevelt. Then Mr. Munsey sold the paper, and it was eking out a very precarious existence; but the editor, now I believe in the United States service, a Mr. Green, was to my mind one of the fairest men, and a man who desired to present to the American people, to his readers, exactly the views which he believed to be true. You have heard, I believe, the man who was business agent of that paper, namely, Mr. Ware, and a good many times when the paper was on its last legs and had not any means of paying for the paper bills and for the salaries, Mr. Ware would be up his various friends, calling on them, and he had been one of my various pupils, and that is why I happened to know him, and he came to see me several times to see whether I could not introduce him to influential people, and to see whether it would be possible to get a loan, or to sell some stock to keep the paper going.

In this connection, of course, in Boston there was very little money; there are very few people of means of German descent there, so that it was natural for me to refer him very largely to people in New York, and he was up until the very end always able to see some people to loan him the money.

Senator NELSON. Who were those people?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not know; you would have to ask Mr. Ware. I introduced him to some people in Boston, but it generally was further introduction——

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever put him in contact with Mr. Edg. Spier?

Mr. VON MACH. No.

Senator OVERMAN. Von Bernstorff or Albert?

Mr. VON MACH. I was just going to mention this, that I took the question up once through a friend. It was at a time when I knew Dr. Dernberg very slightly. As I told you yesterday, I suppose I met him only three times, and this was before I met him, and I took the matter up with a friend and asked him through a letter whether through business circles in New York Dr. Dernberg could possibly secure a loan for Mr. Ware. This has been mentioned in the paper, but what now comes has not been mentioned, and it is due to that. Mr. Ware, after this letter was gone, took me up to see Mr. Green, and, mind you, it was Mr. Green's paper, with all the money that he had in it. He had, I believe, $15,000 or $20,000 in it, and within a few days it meant practically the loss of his paper, and when Ware came out and told him that I had been kind enough to see whether Dr. Dernberg could not interest some of these people, Green said, "I have always run an independent paper, and although I understand Dr. von Mach or those friends would not put a string to their loan, still Dr. Dernberg is not an American citizen; he represents a foreign government; and while our country is neutral, I do not feel that it would be fair for me, even for the sake of keeping my paper going, to accept such a loan," and Mr. Green went there and then turned it down. As a matter of fact, nothing has come of it, anyhow.

I took this matter up with Dernberg the last time I saw him, because I had a plan which I believed would be of great benefit. Practically all our news in this country, even in times of peace, comes naturally, in a broad, natural way, to us via London, and I thought it would be very desirable, if it would be possible, to have one of our big newspapers make a perfectly public and open connection with one big paper—say, the Frankfurter Zeitung—and I wanted very much to see, with Dr. Dernberg, whether he could not interest the Frankfurter Zeitung, for instance, which is a very liberal organ in Germany, to get interested in a paper here; and the paper which I always had in mind, and concerning which I have written a great deal, and therefore, possibly, the major has a great many let-from me on that subject. I asked a very well-known publisher in Boston to investigate—a man with the very honored name of John Quincy Adams—and Mr. John Quincy Adams made a report to me; and while of course you gentlemen do not wish to hear that report, still, if you care, I would like to put it in the record, because there you will see what kind of paper I had in mind and how I thought this paper could be run. But the additional thing of importance is that when I had my talk with Dr. Dernberg, before I had entirely outlined it to him, before I had finished, when I wished to point out to him that I wished his interest in merely interesting the Frankfurter Zeitung in getting interested in this, Dr. Dernberg thought I might ask whether he, or through him German money, might be available for the purchase of papers in this country, and he told me very distinctly that that would be entirely impossible; and it is because of this conversation with Dr. Dernberg that I can not give any credence personally to the belief of the charges which have been made against Dr. Rumely and in the interest of the Evening World; and I came in contact with Dr. Rumely, and I believe that, since that whole question of newspapers has been broached here, it is only fair that I tell you what Dr. Rumely told me and how this came about. Of course, I can no more vouch for the truth and accuracy than the mere fact——

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a moment.

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I would like to ask you a question. You are in no wise concerned with this Evening Mail matter, are you?

Mr. VON MACH. No, sir; none whatever.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do we want to consume our time with this, then?

Senator NELSON. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. You want to appear in defense of Dr. Rumely, it seems.

Mr. VON MACH. No; but you are investigating this question——

Senator WOLCOTT. But you are only going to repeat something that was told to you, about the truth of which you know nothing.

Mr. VON MACH. Is it not of importance to know what a certain person said definitely at a certain time?

Senator WOLCOTT. That is, what Dr. Rumely said?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. We have plenty of proof against Dr. Rumely now.

Senator WOLCOTT. You want to tell something about Dr. Rumely?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why does he not come here and be sworn and state his case?

Mr. VON MACH. I am not particular about going into that; but the question of the newspapers has been mentioned before you here, and I thought that it might be to your interest, since I have been connected with various of these attempts in regard to newspapers to get——

Senator OVERMAN. You have stated that you tried to get money and could not. Now, we have the proof that he did get the money, so that there is no use to say anything more about that.

Mr. VON MACH. All right, sir. In regard to the German University League which the Major began there, I have here the question of money which concerns me very much, because if I were the president of a league and this league received German Government money, even though the position of president, of course, was merely an honorary position, I feel that to a certain extent I am responsible. Now, I do not give it credence that the German University League, as such, has received money, and I would like very much to have you Senators call for the books of the German University League, which must be in the possession of Maj. Humes, and get—— Senator OVERMAN. That has been testified to here by witnesses.

Mr. VON MACH. It has been testified to?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. That they had received the money?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Why, yes.

Mr. VON MACH. As an actual, definite fact?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. It is to me inconceivable, Senator, because I can tell you this definitely, that the German University League, so far as the trustees went, to pass any vote——

Senator OVERMAN. It is true that that has been testified to by witnesses, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. VON MACH. Major, did you find anything anywhere among the records that the trustees, of whom I was one, had in any meeting voted to disburse this money or had disbursed this money of those men?

Senator OVERMAN. No; we have nothing of that sort. It has just been shown that they got the money; that is all.

Mr. VON MACH. Who got the money? Our treasurer certainly never got the money.

Maj. HUMES. The German University League. Dr. Albert's records show that.

Senator WOLCOTT. The books are not before this committee.

Maj. HUMES. No. But we have Dr. Albert's records.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Bielaski produced the records as from the books of Dr. Albert.

Mr. VON MACH. I can only say that during the year that I was a member of the board of trustees of that university league there never has been any of that money, so far as I know, spent, and certainly I can speak with absolute certainty of those meetings which I personally attended.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know where the books are?

Mr. VON MACH. No; but I suppose that the books would be in the office at No. 225 Fifth Avenue, and that they would be in the charge of Maj. Humes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You have not the books, of course, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I have not seen the books.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Bielaski, at the Department of Justice, has them, I suppose.

Maj. HUMES. If any department of the Government has them, it is the Department of Justice.

Mr. VON MACH. Really, Senators, in the interest of the people who were the trustees of that league, I urge you and ask you and request you to look at those books, because those books must be in existence, and there was never any money——

Senator OVERMAN. We have not got the books. You have got charge of them—your league.

Mr. VON MACH. But I have not, Senator. Those books have been taken away, I mean.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you no longer president?

Mr. VON MACH. No; the presidency of this is nothing but an honorary position.

Senator OVERMAN. You ought to know who has them.

Mr. VON MACH. The man presided, and that was all there was to it.

Senator OVERMAN. You were the custodian of the books?

Mr. VON MACH. But I was not president the last year. Dr. Boldt was president.

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose you corresponded with Dr. Boldt?

Mr. VON MACH. No; I did not correspond with Dr. Boldt. I asked him once what had become of the books, and he said that they had been seized. They must be accessible.

Senator WOLCOTT. I understand you to challenge the accuracy of the statement that the books will disclose that this Germany University League received any money directly or indirectly from the German Government?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You challenge the accuracy of that statement, and you would like——

Mr. VON MACH. Senator, may I perhaps qualify that to the extent of saying from the time that I became a member of the league and was elected as a trustee, which was in 1915?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; and you would like to have the committee have the books examined?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. To see if the books do bear out that statement of Mr. Bielaski's?

Mr. VON MACH. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. It seems to me the request is a reasonable one, Mr. Chairman, if the books are in the hands of Mr. Bielaski.

Senator OVERMAN. He says the entries appear on the books there.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who says so?

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. VON MACH. Excuse me, Senator, those are the books of Dr. Albert.

Senator OVERMAN. The books of Dr. Albert, he says——

Senator WOLCOTT. Not the books of the German University League.

Maj. HUMES. My recollection is, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Bielaski said the entries in the books of the league were very meager. That is my recollection of his statement. He based his statement that the money was paid on the books of Dr. Albert, which showed the payment of the money.

Mr. VON MACH. Gentlemen, you are not interested in it, but I have here one of those many circulars which were sent out to fellow members asking for money——

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a minute. I would like to ask if the committee has any objection to having Maj. Humes request Mr. Bielaski to let him see the books of the league, and report to the committee and put into the record whether or not the books of the league disclose the receipt of moneys from Albert or any other German agent.

Senator STERLING. I would suggest, also, that it be ascertained just what Mr. Bielaski's testimony was on that proposition.

Maj HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. We will try to clear up the point with respect to the books.

Mr. VON MACH. Thank you. That is all that I want; and that, I think, would completely clear the names of those trustees who were there during that time.

That is all that I wish to present to you, gentlemen.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the next witness?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Becker is here, Senator. This is the time fixed for his appearance.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. We will hear him.

Mr. VON MACH. May I be permitted, Senator, to ask if your committee will permit Mr. Becker to testify once more as to the finances of the citizens' committee for food shipments, whether, after further examination, he has not completely convinced himself of the honesty of the administration of the finances of that committee.

Senator OVERMAN. If you will prepare a question I will ask it.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Mr. VON MACH. Has Mr. Becker had a chance thoroughly to examine the administration of the finances of the citizens' committee for food shipments, and has he satisfied himself as to the honesty of the administration of those funds?

Mr. BECKER. My answer is no to both parts of the question.

Mr. VON MACH. Since he answers no to the first part of the question, will the committee ask him whether he had not had the opportunity of satisfying himself on the finances completely before appearing before your committee and broaching the subject?

Mr. BECKER. I had not the opportunity of examining the books, nor had I the opportunity of examining the books of Dr. Albert. Mr. Bielaski's testimony was from far greater knowledge than I had on this subject.

Mr. VON MACH. Would the committee be also good enough to ask him where the books are at the present time?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know.

Mr. VON MACH. As the executive chairman of that committee, as that being a charitable organization, and the contributions to the milk fund having been sent from all over this country, and some people who found it very hard to spare the money, and this question having been—

Senator OVERMAN. Just ask your question.

Mr. VON MACH. Will your committee please be good enough to ask for those books, to enable me to find out how the money has been spent and that there may be no doubt in the minds of anybody—

Senator OVERMAN. Where are the books?

Mr. VON MACH. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. The only testimony on this subject was that there was a fund of from $25,000 to $30,000 raised by this committee for the purpose of shipping milk, and that the milk that was shipped amounted to only a few hundred dollars, and that was sent by mail.

There was no allegation of personal dishonesty on the part of anyone. The only natural inference to be drawn—and I think it was drawn by Mr. Bielaski—was that the fund was evidently not used for the purpose of shipping milk, because there was only one shipment made. Mr. von Mach has vindicated that statement by saying that they found that they could not send the milk and turned the balance of the fund over to Ambassador Bernstorff. That accounts for the balance of the fund. I think there is no dispute on the subject.

Senator OVERMAN. Then that will do. We have had all of that.

Maj. HUMES. Outside of the administrative fund of about $1,100, that was expended in carrying on the work, to collect the fund, and in sending approximately $1,000 worth of milk to Germany, approximately $18,000 was collected and turned over to Bernstorff.

Senator OVERMAN. Those are the facts, and that is sufficient on that.

Senator WOLCOTT. There is no testimony in here that impeaches the honesty of any of the men who were running that committee. Nobody has charged that anybody kept the money and pocketed it or misappropriated it in any wise.

Mr. VON MACH. Mr. Becker has apparently not charged it before the committee, but he has charged it in New York newspapers, and——

Mr. BECKER. I have not.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker says that he has not. That is sufficient on that.

Mr. BECKER. I would like to make a statement with reference to a letter that I received from the chairman of the committee before any further testimony is given.

Senator OVERMAN. Very will; proceed.

Mr. BECKER. I received a letter signed by the chairman of the committee, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, January 6, 1919.

HON. ALFRED A. BECKER, Deputy Attorney General,

New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. BECKER: At the instance of Senator Reed I request that you bring with you to Washington all letters rogatory, received by the Attorney General from the French Government or its representatives in the Bolo Pasha and Humbert cases; also produce all those original memoranda and affidavits which you referred to as "rough drafts", being the preliminary draft of the testimony of the witnesses whose depositions you afterwards took, and which were intended to connect Mr. Hearst with the Bolo Pasha or Count von Bernstorff; also bring with you and produce any written reports or written memoranda made to or by you regarding the testimony of the witnesses last referred to.

I also request that you give us all the original reports upon the testimony of the two witnesses whose affidavits have been referred to in the testimony, namely, Harry Block and Charles Frederickson; and also bring with you, if it can be ascertained, the present addresses of the last two named witnesses.

I have brought with me, as requested, all letters rogatory that I have received from the French Government, to the number of something over 20.

I may state, however, that I shall not be able to make public a considerable part of the Humbert letters rogatory, on account of their containing confidential matters that are still in process of investigation. For instance, one of them contains a considerable extract from the confession of Bolo Pasha, which is kept an absolute secret by the French Government.

As to the original memoranda and affidavits which were referred to as rough drafts, being the preliminary draft of the testimony of the various chauffeurs, etc., they were destroyed immediately after the depositions were taken, in August, and I am unable to present them. I wish to correct my testimony. I have looked up a report of an investigator, and I find that I was in error as to when these were taken. They were taken on the 15th of June, 1918.

Senator STERLING. What was the statement in your testimony as to when they were taken, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. I thought, about March.

Senator REED. June 15, when, did you say?

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Then: "Also bring with you and produce any written reports, or written memoranda made to or by you regarding the testimony of the witnesses last above referred to."

There never were any such. There were verbal reports given to me concerning interviews with these witnesses which I never committed to memory, except that the records of my office would show that the reports were made. They began in December, 1917, and there were others in February and March, 1918.

Senator REED. What were those dates, again?

Mr. BECKER. December, 1917, and about February and March, 1918.

Senator STERLING. Your records, then, do not contain the reports themselves, but just simply make a statement of the fact of the report?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is, they make a statement of the fact that the investigator saw some of these witnesses; that is all; and of course I know that it was reported to me at the time.

As to the original reports upon the testimony of the two witnesses—Block and Fredriksen, there never were any.

As to the present addresses of the two last-named witnesses, the best I can state is that, so far as I know, they are the same as shown in the depositions. The depositions contained the then address—that is, in August—of every person who was examined.

I made an effort to locate these witnesses, and when I left New York there was not a final report on it, except that I know that the investigator had seen Fredriksen and had learned from him facts which tended to indicate that certain persons interested in Mr. Hearst already knew how to reach him.

Senator REED. Who were those persons interested in Mr. Hearst who knew how to reach him?

Mr. BECKER. The district attorney of New York and one of his assistants.

Senator REED. Will you now, please, present the letters rogatory?

Mr. BECKER. In the Bolo case the first ones are completely executed, and there is no reason that they should not be turned over in full.

Senator REED. Let me have those about which there is no question first.

Mr. BECKER. Here they are [handing papers to Senator Reed]. The second is in French. I have here an original and a duplicate.

Senator REED. Have you a translation?

Mr. BECKER. No; I have not any translation. I do not think there ever was one. I can translate it for you if you wish.

Senator REED. You have handed me now what purports to be a translation of the first letters rogatory, which were dated the 15th of June, 1917. I desire to read them to the committee. [Reading:]

MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF PARIS.

I. Pouchardon, captain in charge of reports to the third permanent Court Martial of the Military Government of Paris.

Whereas there is an indictment against Marie Paul Bolo, accused of entertaining relations with the enemy, a crime defined and punished by article 205 of the Code of Military Justice and article 77 of the Penal Code.

Give Rogatory Commission to the competent American authorities to the effect that they may be pleased to inquire from the following parties:

1st. G. Amsinck and Co., bankers, New York City.

2nd. The New York Branch of the Royal Bank of Canada.

3rd. J. P. Morgan and Co., bankers, New York City.

Whether they have now or whether they have had an account in the name of Marie Paul Polo alias Bolo Pacha, or in the name of Mr. Bolo, and in case they have or they have had such an account, to request them to furnish a copy of the same, said copy to be transmitted to this Court Martial.

From information obtained, it appears that between the 14th of March and the 3rd of April 1916, a total amount of $1,683,000, in round numbers, may have been transferred from the bank of G. Amsinck and Co. to the branch of the Royal Bank of Canada, to be placed to the credit of the account of Paul Bolo.

It is believed that out of said amount, on the 14th of March 1916, a first sum of $170,000 was deposited with J. P. Morgan and Co., to the credit of Paul Bolo's account.

It is also believed that on the 18th, 21st and 24th of March 1916, three successive transfers were made to the Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, branch T, to the credit of Madame Bolo, in sums respectively of $168,000, $169,000, and

It is further believed that on the 14th of April 1916, a last transfer of one million dollars was made by the branch of the Royal Bank of Canada to J. P. Morgan and Co., to the credit of Bolo's account.

Is the above information correct?

On what dates has Bolo deposited funds or caused funds to be deposited with G. Amsinck and Co.?

Was the last deposit made before August 2nd 1914? Where did the funds come from? Under what conditions and in what form were they entered in the books of G. Amsinck and Co.?

Dated, Paris, Palace of Justice, the fifteenth of June 1917.

(Signed) POUCHARDON.

(L. S.) Seal of the 3rd Court Martial of the Military Government of Paris.

A true translation. Washington, August 11th, 1917. The Vice-Consul, in charge of the Chancery of the French Embassy.

(Signed) HENRI ABEL BERGERON.

I call attention to the fact that the sole matter to be inquired into here was the question of the source of these funds, and the deposits of the funds, and the transfer of the funds.

You have handed me the second and final letters rogatory in the Bolo Pasha case, which appear to be in French, and you stated that you could translate them?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I will thank you if you will.

Mr. BECKER. May I explain first that we thought that possibly the first letters rogatory were not broad enough, and consequently communicated with the ambassador, who so advised his Government.

Senator REED. That is, the French ambassador?

Mr. BECKER. And before taking any evidence in the case there were issued second letters rogatory, intended to be broader.

Senator REED. That is this document that I now have in my hand?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and the contents of these were communicated by cable on the 4th of October, which was the date they were issued, so that we had it immediately, and immediately acted upon it.

Senator REED. The 4th of October, 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

The translation is as follows:

MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF PARIS, THIRD COUNCIL OF WAR.

I. Bouchardon, captain in charge of reports, to the third permanent Council of War, Martial of the Military Government of Paris,

Whereas there is an indictment pending against Marie Paul Bolo, accused of entertaining relations with the enemy, a crime defined and punished by articles 77 of the Penal Code and 205 of the Code of Military Justice, Whereas we have given our Rogatory Commission, under date of the 27th of June, 1917, in the same case, give Rogatory Commission to the competent American authorities to the effect of extending the investigations, verification and transcripts of accounts demanded to all companies, institutions or persons in a situation to illuminate justice.

Paris, Palace of Justice, the fourth of October 1917.

(Signed)

BOUCHARDON

And then there is a note:

We desire that, in consideration of the urgency, the text of the present Rogatory Commission be cabled.

BOUCHARDON

Senator REED. That additional letter rogatory being the last of which you have just read, was sent in response to a communication which you made, or which your office made, to the French authorities?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Was that a communication in writing, or orally?

Mr. BECKER. It was the result of an oral interview with Ambassador Jusserand.

Senator REED. You did not give any memorandum or write any letter to Ambassador Jusserand in regard to this matter?

Mr. BECKER. I will look and see. I have everything of that kind here. [Examining papers.]

No. The first communication that we had was the 4th of October, 1917, as far as it is in my files.

Senator REED. That is, if I understand your answer, Mr. Becker, you mean to say that you did not write anything to Ambassador Jusserand or to the French Government in regard to the necessity for desirability for second letters rogatory?

Mr. BECKER. I did not, myself.

Senator REED. Was such a thing done from your office, the office of your chief?

Mr. BECKER. I am not positive, but I do not think so.

Senator REED. Who was it who made the representation to Ambassador Jusserand to which you have just referred?

Mr. BECKER. I shall have to stop and think, to try to recall it. My best impression is that it was Mr. Robert Morris—this may be in error but my impression is that it was Mr. Robert C. Morris—an attorney in New York, who is an expert on international law and has intimate knowledge of French affairs, and who was retained for that reason by Mr. Lewis, the attorney general. It is my impression that he was the one who conferred with Ambassador Jusserand. That is all subject to correction. It may not be right.

Senator REED. Well, if the communication was not made in writing to Ambassador Jusserand, if you did not make the communication orally, if you do not know who did make the communication orally, how do you know what the communication was?

Mr. BECKER. Because it was a subject of discussion between me and the ambassador subsequently.

Senator REED. Exactly. Subsequent to this, you had a talk with the ambassador. Now, what did you say to the ambassador?

Mr. BECKER. Well, now, as to that, I am in this position: We were not technically attorneys for the French ambassador, but that was the substantial relation; and after the last hearing I sent a cablegram to Mr. Jusserand, who is now in Europe, as follows:

DECEMBER 26, 1918.

Mr. J. J. JUSSERAND,
Ambassador aux Etats-Unis, % Ministere des Affaires Etrangeres, Paris, France.

Please cable whether you deem it proper I should read before Senate Committee investigating German propaganda our confidential correspondence between October 1917 and April 1918 regarding application of letters rogatory in Humbert case to Bolo Bertelli Humbert Hearst investigation.

ALFRED L. BECKER.

I subsequently received, through the French consul general at New York, a cable as follows:

PARIS, 30 Decembre 1918.

From Mr. JUSSERAND for Mr. BECKER, Assistant Attorney General.

Please see that no communication take place both on account of a correspondence of the private character which I have not with me and because the Humbert case has not yet been adjudged. Best compliments.

JUSSERAND.

Under the circumstances, I really feel that I ought not to disclose any of my correspondence or conferences with Mr. Jusserand.

Senator REED. Let me ask you—I am inquiring now in regard to the transaction which produced the letters rogatory which were wired to you on the 4th of October and which have to do with the Bolo Pasha case; and the Bolo Pasha case is now ended and Bolo Pasha is now executed, and you say, or have said, that those letters could be made public concerning that matter.

Now, you had not, on October 4, 1917, yet taken up the Humbert case at all, had you?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think there was any Humbert case.

Senator REED. All right. I am asking you now for communications between you and Ambassador Jusserand at the time. If there was no Humbert case, why do you insist that your telegram is privileged?

Mr. BECKER. There is nothing in that telegram that bears directly on it, but it manifests a policy which I think should be extended to what previously occurred and what was learned by the prosecution of the Humbert case. You see the Humbert case grew directly out of the Bolo case. It is the same conspiracy.

Senator REED. Humbert's case had not been even mentioned to you at Chicago as regards the extension of the letters rogatory, all what I am asking is what you said about the extension of the letters rogatory in the Bolo Pasha case.

Mr. BECKER. I object to the question on the ground that under the circumstances it should be privileged, being in the nature, although not strictly, of communications between attorney and client, and, furthermore, on the ground of governmental privilege.

Senator REED. Let us see. A governmental privilege for a communication between an officer of the State of New York and the French ambassador, and that to be insisted on in a hearing before the United States Senate committee which is investigating the subject matter. I insist that for these gentlemen to give out just what they want to give out and hold back just what they want to hold back does not accord with my opinion of what is fair.

Senator OVERMAN. When was your communication?

Mr. BECKER. On Sunday, October 7, 1917, at the French Embassy in Washington. I am going to keep faith with the French Government. I would rather run the risk of prosecution for contempt than incur the displeasure of Mr. Jusserand, as I know I would if I entered upon any discussion of these matters.

Senator OVERMAN. Is Mr. Jusserand referring in this cablegram to matters about which you ask?

Senator REED. If you will notice the language of the cablegram to Mr. Jusserand, the witness refers to both the Bolo Pasha and the Humbert cases, and asked permission, or asked information of Mr. Jusserand about giving out matters in connection with those two cases. Now, I have not made any inquiry in regard to the Humbert case up to this time, that being a case still pending. What I am asking now is in regard to the letters rogatory issued in the Bolo Pasha case long before the Humbert case was heard of, and the conversation I am asking for is a conversation touching that subject—that is, the broadening of the letters rogatory—and I insist that it is not privileged under any rule of law, and would not be privileged in any court of justice, and most certainly is not privileged in an investigation of this kind where the Senate of the United States is looking into the broad matter of German propaganda.

Senator OVERMAN. I understood that this conversation took place on the 5th of October in regard to the Humbert and the Bolo case together.

Senator REED. No, sir; the Humbert case had not been heard of as the witness states.

Senator WOLCOTT. As a matter of fact, Mr. Becker, was the Humbert case in its facts identical, substantially, with the Bolo case?

Mr. BECKER. Same thing.

Senator REED. You mean to say yes. You have exposed the Bolo case and done it voluntarily upon the witness stand, if your last answer is correct. Then you have told all there is in the Humbert case, if they are identical.

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that they are coextensive, but I said that all of the Bolo case which was made public has an element truth in the Humbert case, in all probability. I am not in charge of these things for the French Government, and you must take everything that I say as sub-rosa in that respect, and it is a fact unquestionably that the Humbert conspiracy and the Bolo conspiracy were part of the same conspiracy, and the question as between the two is one of scienter. Bolo's scienter was proved. Humbert's scienter remains to be proved. In other words, did he know it was German money?

Senator WOLCOTT. That is the only distinction between the two cases?

Mr. BECKER. Except that the Humbert case takes a much larger range—involves other matters that were not present in the Bolo case.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now, I would like to have Senator Reed's views of the materiality of this question that he has asked. I understand the question to be designed to elucidate the conversation between Mr. Becker and the French ambassador regarding the advisability of extending these letters rogatory. You spoke of the letters rogatory. What difference does it make, really, what was said on that point, for the purpose of this investigation?

Senator REED. This difference. These letters rogatory which were read here, and which were the sole authority that the attorney general of New York had to take these affidavits and depositions which have been much discussed——

Mr. BECKER. There is an error in that, you know, because Bolo was dead before they were taken, and we regarded the Bolo case as extinct. They were not taken under Bolo's letters rogatory at all.

Senator REED. Now, let me make my statement. This gentleman appears here and says that he took certain testimony in the case of Bolo Pasha, and his sole alleged authority for taking the testimony in the Bolo case was the letters issued by the French Government. He has sworn here if he is under oath, and if he is not under oath he has stated here, that he took that testimony in the Bolo Pasha case.

Mr. BECKER. You can not find anything like that in the testimony. There is some error about that.

Senator REED. That error was in your statement, then.

Mr. BECKER. Now, I made no such statement. Possibly you have been reading a report in the Hearst papers, and have got a misconception of it.

Senator REED. No; I have been reading a report of your testimony in the official transcript. Now, I am going to say to you that it is not necessary for you to make any more sneering remarks to me.

Mr. BECKER. I will be the judge of the necessity of that, depending on how I am treated.

Senator REED. I will be the judge of how I treat you.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think you will be. The committee will be the judge.

Senator REED. We will see who will be the judge if you make any more of your insulting remarks.

Mr. BECKER. No threats or bullying are going to influence me.

Senator REED. You are not going to sit in this chair and insult me with impunity.

Mr. BECKER. Do with me whatever you wish.

Senator STERLING. I think you take it too seriously, Senator Reed. I do not think the witness intended to sneer at you in any way.

Senator REED. You stated that you did not take this testimony here under the authority of letters rogatory issued in the Bolo Pasha case, and afterwards in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. No; I said that I took the letters rogatory under the authority of the names which appeared on the surface of the record—I have read them in the evidence—in the cases of Lenoir, Desouches and Humbert. It was all done after Bolo Pasha died, except that the investigations began before.

Senator REED. What was your authority in the first instance for taking the affidavits which you afterwards reviewed in the form of these depositions, which you state were the preliminary affidavits—the rough drafts? What authority were you proceeding under?

Mr. BECKER. Proceeding under all kinds of authority. In the first place, letters rogatory in the Humbert case, which I have here, which I have not yet been asked to produce, and particularly the letters rogatory in the Humbert case of February 26, 1918.

In the second place, after our investigations had proceeded for some distance, I was directed by the governor to cooperate with the Department of Justice in such matters as they might request from time to time.

Subsequently—I am not sure of the date—the governor gave me the secret directions with regard to the military intelligence, and thereafter we established a much more general investigation of everything having to do with the general program.

Senator OVERMAN. On the request of the Attorney General of the United States?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and on request of the military intelligence Col. Van Deman.

Senator STERLING. That was done under the authority of the law of the State of New York.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. In other words, we became practically an investigating bureau for propaganda, working in conjunction with Federal agencies.

Senator REED. I just want to ask you again if you have not stated in your testimony, and stated repeatedly, that you took testimony under the authority of letters rogatory issued by the French Government in the Bolo Pasha case and afterwards in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. If you will eliminate Bolo Pasha and refer to the depositions, yes. But you asked me with reference to prior investigations and preliminary affidavits.

Senator REED. I do not want to have any dispute about it. I want to know if you have not testified, and testified repeatedly, that you took the testimony in these cases under authority of letters rogatory issued by the French Government in either the Bolo Pasha case or in the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir; not as you put it.

Senator REED. And I want to ask you if you did not state that you have taken the depositions and to have used them for political purposes would have been improper, and if you did not undertake to distinguish between a deposition which you took in one room, under the authority of the letters rogatory, and the affidavits which you had signed in another room, and which contained the substance of the depositions?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is so inaccurate that I shall have to say no.

Senator REED. Very well, we will have to put the record in when we get to it.

Mr. BECKER. It is all down in black and white. I read it over this morning.

Senator REED. When was it that Bolo Pasha was executed?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember exactly. It was about a month or a month and a half after his trial, and his trial was in the early part of February.

Senator REED. What year?

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Senator REED. When did you take the affidavits of these witnesses whose testimony you have referred to here and which you used to connect Mr. Hearst with Bolo Pasha? When did you take those affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. What affidavits do you mean?

Senator REED. Any affidavits that you took in the case—the ones that have been referred to in the testimony. I am not referring to those outside.

Mr. BECKER. The rough drafts were not taken by me, of course, but they were taken on the 15th of June.

Senator REED. What year?

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Senator REED. 1918 or 1917?

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Senator REED. The affidavits were taken—the affidavits were made up subsequently from the depositions and then signed by the witnesses in another room?

Mr. BECKER. In the same room.

Senator REED. We have got a little closer, then.

Mr. BECKER. Except that some were signed up at the Belmont Hotel, as I said, because the notary had gone away. They were taken up the 9th of August, 1918, and the 19th of August, 1918.

Senator REED. Had you taken some affidavits prior to that—some months prior to that?

Mr. BECKER. About June, 1915.

Senator REED. Did you have some affidavits in 1917 when the campaign was on in which Mr. Mitchell was a candidate?

Mr. BECKER. Not an affidavit; not one.

Senator REED. Did you have some statements in writing?

Mr. BECKER. I do not recall any.

Senator REED. We have been all over that, and I thought it was said that you had affidavits at that time?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Well, now, you say that the testimony you took in these cases you did not take at all under the letters rogatory, but you took them under some different authority? Is that what you said?

Mr. BECKER. I repeat, as I have several times testified, that I took the depositions of Berkowitz, Schomaker, Cornfield, Block, Fredriksen, and Gazzola, August 9, 1918, as appears correctly on the minutes. "In the matter of the examination into the prosecutions of Humbert, Lenoir, and Guillaume Desouches, confirmatory to rogatory commissions issued by Capt. Bouchadon, in charge of the force of the third permanent Government court martial of the military government of Paris, dated the 26th day of February, 1918, the 1st day of February, 1918, etc., at Paris, France." The commissions were dated the 9th day of August, 1918, and the 19th day of August, 1918.

Senator REED. Those, then, were taken in the Humbert case and not in the Bolo Pasha case?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Bolo Pasha had already been executed?

Mr. BECKER. Long before that.

Senator REED. You make a great secret and a great mystery about exposing any evidence that was taken in the Humbert case, because it has not yet been tried, but the substance of everyone of those depositions was put into an affidavit and given to the newspapers the very next day after you had taken the testimony.

Mr. BECKER. Well, the argumentative question states the facts correctly.

Senator REED. Exactly.

Mr. BECKER. I do not accept the argument.

Senator REED. Then why do you say now that you can not expose, can not talk about, what was said to the French Ambassador in the Humbert case, because Humbert has not been tried; but you can use the very evidence and give to the public the very evidence that you had taken in the Bolo Pasha case?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I will tell you. Our statute provides that this shall not be made public except as directed by the Attorney General. If our investigation has disclosed facts which are deemed to be of great interest to the American public, and which there could be no harm to any French interest to disclose, or to any other interest, as they have been recently disclosed time and time again, it all depends upon the circumstances. You can not lay down any general rule.

Senator REED. That matter of exposure was particularly true when you got out this evidence from the political headquarters, in which you were trying to make the issue that the governor of New York was disloyal and wicked because he was connected with Mr. Hearst, who you claimed was disloyal and wicked, and in that way you were trying to gain an election.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think that will do. Nobody was trying to do it, so far as I know. I was not, and I was not conducting the campaign of Mr. Lewis.

Senator REED. Do you mean to say that you did not attempt by articles and interviews in the papers to destroy the governor because he was connected with Mr. Hearst, and Mr. Hearst was disloyal, and is not that in the record?

Mr. BECKER. That is not an accurate statement, but I do not mean to say that I reject it in toto.

Senator REED. Pay a little attention to this last matter of difference between us, and I will call your attention to an article which was printed in the New York Tribune of August 9, 1918, in which you gave an interview. I asked you about this the other day.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think we have been all over it.

Senator REED. And you stated that you gave this interview?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Do you say now that you did not give this interview?

Mr. BECKER. I said that there was part of it that was my statement that I dictated, but it never was issued in my name.

Senator REED. I do not care whose name it was issued in; if you dictated it, it was yours, wasn't it? The part you dictated was yours, whether it was in your name or the name of John Smith.

Mr. BECKER. It was mine until I gave it away. Then it belonged to somebody else.

Senator REED. You originated it.

Mr. BECKER. It was my language.

Senator REED. And when you passed it to somebody else you passed the responsibility to somebody else?

Mr. BECKER. No. I will assume full responsibility for anything I ever wrote.

Senator REED. Let us see what it says:

While William Bayard Hale was in Berlin during June and July of 1916, as the official correspondent of William R. Hearst's New York American, he was in the service of the German foreign office.

This statement was made yesterday by Deputy State Attorney General Alfred L. Becker, after he had examined a witness who was closely associated with Dr. Hale during the latter's stay in Germany in 1916. Although Mr. Becker would not reveal the name of the witness, it was learned that he had been connected with Dr. Hale as an assistant prior to that time when Dr. Hale was in charge of the German Information Service, at 1123 Broadway.

Mr. BECKER. Excuse me, Senator Reed, may I interrupt that? I was under a misapprehension. I thought you had reference to another statement that has not been discussed before.

Senator REED. Very well. [Continuing to read:]

In this connection, the witness said that despite Dr. Hale's frequent declarations that he worked aboveboard while he directed German propaganda in this country, he always used the freight elevators in the building at 1123 Broadway when going to his offices.

SAYS HALE WROTE INTERVIEW.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the unnamed witness's testimony revealed by Mr. Becker yesterday was that part which dealt with the famous Fourth of July message from the people of Germany to the people of the United States, which was printed in the New York American on July 8, 1916. This message was signed by Dr. Hale and purported to be an interview with the then Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg. According to the witness the interview was written by Dr. Hale in his Berlin studio and then taken to the Chancellor for his approval.

Mr. Becker quotes the witness as saying that he himself went with Dr. Hale to the Chancellor's office and after the interview had been approved he took it to the wireless station for transmission to the United States.

When the message was received in the United States it was printed in the New York American under the following headlines: "Faith in Wilson Gone; Hope to See Spirit of '76 Aroused Against British Domination; Declares United States Has Lost Caste by Submitting to Seizure of Mails, Ships and Citizens; Declaration of London Drawn and Quartered."

Mr. Johnson, assistant to Mr. Becker, discovered that in the interview von-Hollweg said in almost identical language what Dr. Hale wrote in his book, "American Rights and British Pretensions," printed during the summer of 1915. In the reported interview the Chancellor is quoted as saying: "How long will you permit England to enforce its municipal statutes as if they were international enactments; to exact its tyrannous police functions on the high seas, to violate your mails and to seize and hale before British judges your ships and your people?"

On page 15 of Dr. Hale's book published a year previous a line reads: "The government of Great Britain has virtually set up in the midst of the busy sea an arbitrary court, claiming unheard of powers in exercising the most tyrannous police functions."

HALE'S ROUMANIAN TRIP.

The witness, according to Mr. Becker, told in detail of a trip Dr. Hale took Roumania in July, 1916, on which the witness accompanied him. The most remarkable feature of the trip, said the witness, was the fact that, while all correspondents were continually annoyed and their baggage searched, Dr. Hale and the witness were not molested and had every courtesy extended to them.

Examination of the passport furnished him and signed by Foreign Minister Zimmermann revealed the reason the military did not interfere with Dr. Hale. The passport was stamped "The bearer is travelling on the business of the Foreign Office," the witness said.

Dr. Hale, according to the witness, travelled on tickets furnished by the Foreign Office, which also supplied sleeping accommodations on the trains.

The object of Dr. Hale's mission to Roumania was not made clear to the witness. He said that Dr. Hale was well supplied with money,

And so forth.

There is a great deal about this. Now, you gave out that interview to the papers, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. Were you present when your assistant, Mr. Johnson, analyzed the book of Dr. Hale and told the reporters the subject matter—the substance—of it here?

Mr. BECKER. To be accurate, I was not there at all. I gave it out in the sense that I authorized it.

Senator REED. And you knew about your assistant, Mr. Johnson, making this analysis and comparing it with the book of Dr. Hale?

Mr. BECKER. I think that comparison was made by somebody else. I do not know. I can not tell you.

Senator REED. Somebody else than yourself? You have a man named Johnson in your office?

Mr. BECKER. I had an assistant of that name.

Senator REED. Was he an assistant to you? What is his real name?

Mr. BECKER. I am not going to go into that sort of stuff.

Senator REED. There is not any stuff about it. What was his real name?

Mr. BECKER. No; I will not answer that.

Senator REED. Well, I will ask it in a leading form.

Mr. BECKER. I object.

Senator REED. Was his name Musica?

Mr. BECKER. I object to this sort of thing, an obvious attempt to get something into the newspapers which has no bearing on the investigation, and merely has a bearing upon certain persons who have rendered very efficient service in what has been done.

Senator REED. Was not this man's name Musica, and was not a convict? What is the answer—this assistant of yours that you had in your office?

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think it is competent whether he is a convict or not.

Senator REED. I think, of course, it is competent whether he is a convict; if this man had a convict in his office, and this man was working on these cases.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you decline to answer that question?

Senator REED. Well, what does the committee say?

Who ever heard of a man giving out statements and interviews, and saying that he is responsible for them—and he has just said that he stands sponsor for this interview—and then the question not to be allowed to be asked——

Senator OVERMAN. He says he is responsible for the interview.

Senator REED (continuing). Whether the man who gave this interview and made this analysis was a convict?

Senator OVERMAN. Well, Senator, he assumes responsibility.

Senator REED. No matter whether he assumes responsibility or not——

Senator OVERMAN. He is the man, he says, that gave out the interview, and he says that he is responsible.

Senator REED. Exactly, and no matter whether he undertakes to take the responsibility or not, if this man Musica was employed in his office and employed on this business, and he is a convict and a notorious criminal, then that bears upon every act and every transaction that took place, and bears upon the good faith of this entire transaction, and there is not a court of justice in the world that will refuse to have a question of this kind answered.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you think, Senator Nelson?

Senator NELSON. I think not. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this relates only to the character of men that Mr. Becker employed in his office. Now, Mr. Becker assumes the responsibility for this interview. It is his for all practical purposes, so we are not concerned with the men that he employed in his office.

Senator REED. But, Senator, you have not gotten the point I am trying to get clear. I have stated it, perhaps, in a dull way. I propose to show this committee that Mr. Becker, who comes here and gives this testimony, had in his employ working in these cases a man of such character that you could expect that man to do any kind of thing, to manufacture testimony, or to do any other service, however wicked it might be. Therefore the question of whether this man is a convict that was engaged in this business goes to the very heart and soul of the whole matter, and to deny the right to show that is simply to deny justice.

Senator OVERMAN. I have expressed my opinion. What do you think, Senator Sterling?

Senator STERLING. I thought this depended on the same principle in which testimony of this kind, as I remember, Senator Reed, was excluded the other day. The witness declined to give the names of certain employees, men who went out and got the testimony, and the objection to the testimony was sustained, and on that ground, and he put it on the ground of policy and that it would not do to tell the names of those who had rendered service of that kind, because they were in the public service.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were investigators. There is no charge that this man was investigating.

Senator STERLING. I do not think this man stands on the same plane, as I understand, as the men who were brought into question the other day, but he was a help, he was an aid, to the authorities in the getting of this evidence for these purposes.

Senator WOLCOTT. My view of this matter is this: There is no testimony so far to show that this man is an investigator, and therefore his case is out of the category of the cases of the other day. Now this hearing has departed somewhat from the ground laid down for it by the resolution. It has developed into a contest, apparently, for public approval, between Mr. Becker and his friends on the one side and Mr. Hearst and his friends on the other. I think it is fair to say that Mr. Becker very frankly admits that he is a disbeliever in Mr. Hearst to the extent that he thinks he is rendering the public a service if he can destroy Mr. Hearst—his influence, I mean. I think his testimony will clearly show that. In order to put Mr. Hearst in disrepute Mr. Becker has detailed many things showing Hearst's connection and acquaintance and association with German agents; and Mr. Becker, in his last analysis, admitted that the testimony in his hands did not convict Hearst of that thing which inference would indicate to wit, connection with Bolo Pasha; and yet it has gone to the public on Mr. Becker's side of this thing has been permitted to go along so as to show Hearst's connection with men who cast disrepute on Mr. Hearst from the fact that he knows them. Now, in fairness, it seems to me that the same rule would apply to Mr. Becker. If he has got a man who is in disrepute working for him, by the same rule it ought to be known. That would apply to the investigators.

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose Senator Reed would prove, if he could, that he has a convict in his employ; and he asked if a convict prepared this interview, and the witness says that he takes all responsibility for it, that he prepared it and he takes the responsibility; and then he is asked who aided him in it. I do not think this is competent.

Senator REED. Well, now, Mr. Chairman of the committee, I might just as well say to you gentlemen that I propose to show that Mr. Becker sent this convict out, knowing him to be a convict. I get this evidence; that he connived with these witnesses; that he has been paid large sums of money through Mr. Becker's office for his services; that he is on a salary down there—or was—of $20 a day and expenses, I think; I will not say the latter positively. Now, if this committee holds, when a man goes out and gets the testimony of hack drivers and discharged people and, among others, the testimony of a man that is already admitted to have been a convict, and brings that in, and the affidavits and depositions are taken ex parte that the character of the man sent upon that mission, and who procured that testimony, is not pertinent, then you are going to do something that has never been held before by any judicial or semi-judicial tribunal. The character of witnesses is involved—the purpose of the witness—and this witness has already shown, and I do not say this in any unpleasant way, a hatred for Mr. Hearst that is almost without a parallel.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no. It is paralleled by the majority of Americans to-day.

Senator REED. Oh, yes; I believe he opposed you, and I think you got pretty badly beaten. However, I am not going to have any personal talk with the witness. Of course, it might be easy enough that that impression should be created if convicts are to be put in the offices of the officers of justices, permitted there to masquerade.

under assumed names, held out to the public as assistants, and then sent out to consort with the criminal element to bring in false testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. It may be proper for you to prove all those things, and there is a way to prove it; but I do not think this question is competent. You can prove it in another way.

Senator REED. I am asking him whether he was a convict. I think it is proper to ask that to test the fairness of this witness.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think it is competent.

Senator REED. Well, you want some competent evidence on that. I will see if I can produce it at this point. I will read into the record a certified copy of the clerk of Court of General Sessions of the Peace of the City and County of New York, in and for the county of New York.

Mr. BECKER. I object on the ground that it is incompetent.

Senator OVERMAN. It is competent to put that in. Whether it is worth anything, I do not know.

Senator REED. It reads as follows:

DECEMBER 30, 1918.

I certify that the annexed is a copy of certain stenographer's minutes now on file in the clerk's office, and that the same has been compared by me with the original, and is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

EDWARD R. CARROLL, Clerk of Court.

The seal of the clerk is attached.

Mr. BECKER. Will you kindly allow me to examine that before reading it?

Senator REED. No; I will not.

Mr. BECKER. I think I have got some rights here.

Senator OVERMAN. There is no harm in letting him examine it. I have ruled the document in.

Mr. BECKER. I may have another objection to make after I have seen it.

Senator REED. It is a rather singular thing for a witness appearing before a committee of the Senate to be making objections as though he were a lawyer in a case.

Mr. BECKER. Well, I am the lawyer for myself.

Senator REED. You are not on trial.

Mr. BECKER. I think perhaps you are trying to put me on trial. I want to see what this is about.

Senator REED. I have not any objection to your seeing it. Look at [handing the document to Mr. Becker].

Mr. BECKER. This appears to be the proceedings on the occasion when a gentleman by the name of Philip M. Musica was given a suspended sentence on a charge of crime.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. I object to it.

Senator REED. Because you have not yet admitted that Musica is our assistant Johnson.

Mr. BECKER. Well, I object to it.

Senator REED. I am going to follow it by showing that this gentleman filed bills for Mr. Musica in the city of New York.

Mr. BECKER. Now, I object to that as an attempt on the part of Senator Reed to testify.

Senator OVERMAN. Put that document in the record just as it is. If I have ruled it in, you do not want to say anything more about it.

Senator REED. No; but I just want to tell the committee that I am going to follow it up by showing he filed bills in the names of Johnson and Musica.

Mr. BECKER. The Senator is so afraid——

Senator REED. Will you swear that Musica and Johnson are not the names of the same person?

Senator OVERMAN. Senator, put that document in and let us go ahead.

Senator REED. Why does not the committee make this witness answer as he should?

Senator OVERMAN. Put it in in the right way; put your affidavit in evidence.

Senator REED. I am going to prove who this gentleman is. You need not worry; I will prove it. The document reads as follows:

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS OF THE PEACE, COUNTY OF NEW YORK, PART TWO.

The People of the State of New York, against Philip M. Musica. Before Hon. James A. Delehanty, J.

Indictment filed March 1, 1913.

Indictment filed for grand larceny in the first degree, New York, March 20, 1916.

Appearances: Assistant District Attorney William D. Embree for the people. Mr. Leventritt for the defendant.

The defendant is arraigned for sentence.

The COURT. Is there anybody here who desires to be heard in this case?

Mr. RICE. I have expressed myself so often in this matter that I think the court can have no doubt what my views are.

The COURT. I understand your position.

Mr. LEVENTRITT. I ask that the defendant be sentenced at this time. Your Honor has all the facts so well in mind that it is unnecessary for me to make any statement, as I believe you will give the recommendation made by the former district attorney full effect.

The COURT. Musica, in April of 1913 you were arrested on the charge which you ultimately pleaded guilty in May of that year. The record shows that for two years you have been awaiting sentence before my predecessor, who is now district attorney. That delay in your sentence, as I am advised by the district attorney, is due to an effort you were making to recover some funds that were stolen, and you have been kept here in the city prison instead of being sent to State prison at the request of the district attorney and the representatives of the bankrupt estate.

I have here the written recommendation made by former District Attorney Perkins, and under this date concurred in by the present district attorney for a suspension of sentence in your case and for your parole. At the time you pleaded I am advised by the district attorney that you pleaded guilty to this indictment with the understanding that it would cover all the cases against you. At that time the maximum sentence that could have been imposed upon you was not to exceed five years.

I would be reluctant to accept the district attorney's recommendation if there were not for the fact that you already have served three years in prison awaiting sentence.

In view of the reasons adduced by the district attorney in his recommendation in writing, and in view of the information which I myself had while member of the district attorney's staff of the aid which you gave to the State in matters affecting your own and other cases——

A jail snitch.

Mr. BECKER. Is that in the record?

Senator REED. I am putting the explanation in.

Mr. BECKER. I move that it be stricken out.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think that should be in the record.

Senator REED. I do not think this witness will strike out my comments as a Member of the Senate and of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BECKER. That is not reading the record.

Senator REED. I am reading the record and I put that in as a side remark, and everybody understands it.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think that should be in the record.

Senator REED (continuing reading) :

I am going to accept the recommendation of the district attorney and suspend sentence, conditioned, however, upon some essential acts on your part. Your mother is awaiting examination before the referee in bankruptcy. It is said that she has in her control, or within her knowledge, information as to funds which properly belong to the creditors, and while I am not going to charge you with your mother's withholding of funds to-day, if there comes to my attention any substantial reason for believing that she actually has funds and that she refuses to turn them over, I intend to take it for granted that she is acting under your direction, because I have no doubt that her acts have been under your direction from the beginning, and I intend to charge you with her delinquency if she fails to restore to the creditors all the money which is known to be in her possession. I am going to require you to see to it that she attends whenever required by the attorney for the trustee at any time and place set for her examination. I am going to require you to report, in addition, to the probation officer. I am going to require you to report on the first Monday of each month until you are formally released from that requirement, to the district attorney of New York County. I will designate Mr. Embree for the present as the representative of the district attorney to whom you are to report, and in his absence you will report to the district attorney directly. In the event that the first Monday happens to be a legal holiday, you will report on the succeeding day. I make that requirement specifically for the purpose of having it in my power to send for you and to send you to prison if you fail to report on any one of those days, and I will certainly take that action if you fail to report. In addition to that you will yourself attend, whenever required, before the referee to submit to examination respecting your knowledge of the bankruptcy affairs, and you will make every reasonable effort within your power to, first, satisfy the bankruptcy court as to where the funds of the bankrupt went to, and, second, if any are found to be in existence, to recover them for the bankrupt estate. In addition to these requirements which I have now made, you are also required to report weekly to the probation officer designated by the court, and to obey each other rules than those which I have laid down for you as the probation officer shall require.

The probation period in your case I have set now at five years, because I intend to leave the court in a position where, if your conduct hereafter does not meet the highest standards, you may be sent for and sent to prison.

Sentence suspended.

Mr. BECKER. Are you through, Senator?

Senator REED. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we will adjourn now.

Mr. BECKER. May I have about three minutes before the adjournment? I should like to make my statement with reference to this gentleman.

Senator REED. What gentleman?

Mr. BECKER. The fact that Philip M. Musica is an investigator in the employ of the attorney general's office has never been concealed.

Senator REED. Well, is Johnson and Musica the same man?

Mr. BECKER. I would like to make this statement without interruption.

Senator REED. I never heard of a witness before taking a case in his own hands. But let the witness proceed.

Mr. BECKER. I will make this statement and perhaps you will be glad of some of the facts I will give you.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Musica, as I said, was an investigator for District Attorney Charles S. Whitman, subsequently governor. He subsequently served as an investigator for District Attorney Perkins, who succeeded Mr. Whitman as district attorney to fill out his unexpired term of one year, after Mr. Whitman became governor on the 1st of January, 1915. He subsequently served as an investigator for Edward Swan, the present district attorney, down to April, 1917. He was chiefly engaged in the investigation of what are known as the "Baff murder" cases. In April, 1917, Gov. Whitman made an order superseding the district attorney, and directing the attorney general to take charge of the Baff murder cases. At the same time the district attorney's office—not Mr. Swan but one of the district attorneys—recommended Mr. Musica to me as a competent investigator who knew more about the history of the Baff murder cases than anyone else. I thereupon took over the services of Mr. Musica at that time.

Senator REED. Under what name?

Mr. BECKER. Under the name of Musica.

Senator REED. Has he gone by that name since?

Mr. BECKER. And I call attention to the memorandum which I made in my own memorandum book on May 16, 1917:

Memorandum of arrangement for compensation made to-day with M. B. cases.

And it gives the rate of compensation, and is signed "P. M. M." and "A. L. B."

Senator REED. What is the rate?

Mr. BECKER. It seems to be at the rate of $25 per day for days actually spent on the work and to include all expense other than traveling expenses out of town.

Senator REED. What was that date, please?

Mr. BECKER. May 16, 1917.

Senator REED. Now, is that Mr. Johnson, the man that you are talking about, also Musica?

Mr. BECKER. Now, please don't interrupt me. Mr. Musica I was thrown into intimate contact with, and the first material question in the Baff murder cases was whether, as was charged, Mr. Musica had created a false theory of the Baff murder cases which would have the effect, to use the expression that was used by certain people at that time, to acquit the Italians and convict the Jews. Mr. Musica is an Italian. I was charged at that time with the duty of determining which of the two theories of the Baff murder cases was correct, one of which involved granting a new trial to a man who was awaiting execution in the death house. I spent something over a month in intimate association with Mr. Musica, watching him, as well as investigating the facts in the Baff murder cases.

Senator REED. What name was he going by?

Mr. BECKER. As a result of that month of intimate association I reached the conclusion, and so advised the attorney general, that the theory of the facts advanced by Mr. Musica in the Baff murder case was correct. We adopted it, prosecuted Joseph Cohen for the murder, obtained a conviction, which has been affirmed away up to the United States Supreme Court, and Mr. Arichiello, as he was known, who had been convicted, was given a new trial by order of the court.

As a result of my acquaintance with Mr. Musica, I became convinced that he had repented of his sins, and there sprung up between us a friendship. He is, and for some time past has been, the intimate associate of my family, who know his past history. Mr. Musica is the friend of my children, he helps them with their Christmas, gives them Christmas presents, and I have had the pleasure of watching during this period starting in May, 1917, and coming down to date, the coming to life of a beautiful spirit, a beautiful Christian spirit, in a man, which shows and convinces me that there is such a thing as reform. There is no man in the world to-day whom I trust more than I trust Philip M. Musica. He is one of my best friends. I couple myself with him; I stand with him; I stand for him.

Senator REED. What is his name?

Mr. BECKER. His name is Philip M. Musica.

Senator REED. What name is he going under in your office?

Mr. BECKER. I am not going to say any more.

Senator REED. Now I submit I want an answer to that question; I am entitled to it after this speech, and I ask the committee to rule whether he should tell this man's name, the name that he goes under. How long ago, after he had been in jail three years and circulating around as a "snitch" among all the jailbirds and criminals, did you take him to your home and make him your friend and the intimate of your children? How many months had elapsed?

Mr. BECKER. I decline to answer the question, because it is incompetent and improper in form. I deny that he ever was a "snitch." I do not know what the word means, but I am sure he never was it. [Laughter.]

Senator REED. You deny it, anyway. Well, I think you might adjourn on that.

Mr. BECKER. It is a reasonably offensive word, and therefore I may say it is not so.

Senator OVERMAN. It is now 1.20, and we will adjourn until half past 2.

(At 1.20 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The committee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker, you made a statement here before we took the noon recess, after Senator Reed read a record from a court stating that—what was the man's name?

Senator REED. Musica.

Senator OVERMAN. That Musica was a convict, and so on, and then you frankly stated that this man had been employed by certain district attorneys, and had been in the employ of the District Attorney's office some time, and you spoke very highly of him. What objection would you have, if I asked the question, to stating whether this man Johnson was one and the same man?

Mr. BECKER. Absolutely. He has used the names of Musica and Johnson indifferently.

Of course, our position about it, or my position about it, is this. I am very fond of the man, and this Hearst defense against these charges consists of blackening the people connected with them.

This man is trying to live an honest life, and I have done my utmost to protect him from a raking over the coals again of his past career, which I believe he has canceled and paid in full. But Senator Reed has got the benefit of all the display of headlines that is possible——

Senator REED. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BECKER. And all these groups of photographs, that will undoubtedly appear in the top editorial column——

Senator REED. I protest——

Mr. BECKER. And I am perfectly willing to say now that——

Senator REED. I want to call to the chairman's attention——

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker, you must not——

Senator REED. Let him finish.

Mr. BECKER. I am perfectly willing to say now that we have protected Musica in his conduct of these matters by letting him use the name of Johnson, but in his bills, for instance, which he has rendered even to the city of New York, and which have been duly audited by the comptroller and are on file, the name Musica is used.

Senator REED. Now, I want to call the chairman's attention to the fact that this witness is continually undertaking to criticize my conduct.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I will caution him that——

Senator REED. Just one of two things can be done in a case of that kind. The committee has its course open to take, and I think it had better take it.

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that we get along without any feeling. I hope you will not refer to Senator Reed, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. I merely intended to refer to Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. I am ready to proceed. Does the committee desire to wait for the other members of the committee?

Senator OVERMAN. No. Here is Senator Nelson now.

Mr. BECKER. This is the sort of thing I referred to, Senator [exhibiting photostats of newspapers]. It does not hurt me any, and it does not hurt Mr. Lewis any, but it does a lot of damage to Mr. Jerome, who, so far as I know, is trying to lead an honest life.

Senator REED. Now, I would like to have this witness be a witness for a while.

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the questions, Mr. Becker. Answer the questions of Senator Reed and let us get down to business.

Senator REED. I am ready to proceed, sir, just as soon as the witness takes his seat. I propose now to offer in evidence the indictment.

Senator OVERMAN. The indictment of Musica?

Senator REED. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Is that the same case we had before the recess. Mr. Chairman?

Senator REED. Yes; but it brings out some facts that did not appear in the other paper.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think an indictment is accepted as proof, if the Senate committee please. I therefore object, if the indictment is to be offered as proof of the facts stated in it.

Senator OVERMAN. It will go in as a part of the record, for what it is worth.

Senator WOLCOTT. The material thing is the conviction—if he pleaded guilty to the indictment.

Senator REED. I want to get the character of the defense before the committee. That is the point of the indictment. I will just read the body of it and put the indictment in in full:

The indictment for grand larceny in the first degree for stealing $16,793 in money, lawful money of the United States, property of the firm of J. W. Seligman & Co., by falsely representing to said J. W. Seligman & Co. in nine certain cases which had been——

Senator OVERMAN. Why not put it in the record, Senator, and just state what it was?

Senator REED. I can state it from here quicker than I can state it in my own language. [Continuing reading:]

delivered at the Fabre Line Pier, and consigned to the City of Marseilles, France, by the defendant, contained human hair of the value of $16,794.96;

Whereas in truth and in fact, said representation was false and untrue as the defendant then and there well knew.

The defendant is arraigned at the bar, and, by leave, &c. withdraws his plea of not guilty, and now pleads guilty of grand larceny in the first degree.

That is Monday, March 20, 1916.

(The indictment above referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

At a Court of General Sessions of the Peace of the City and County of New York, holden in and for the County of New York, at the building for Criminal Courts in the Borough of Manhattan of the said City, on Tuesday, the 27th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen.

Present, The Honorable Edward Swann, Judge of the Court of General Sessions, Justice.

The People of the State of New York against Philip M. Musica, alias William Wiemer.

On indictment, for grand larceny in the first degree (filed March 18, 1913), March 11, 1913, feloniously stealing $16,793 in money, lawful money of the United States of America, property, &c. of the firm of J. & W. Seligman & Company, by falsely representing to the said J. & W. Seligman & Company, that nine certain cases which had been shortly theretofore delivered at the Fabre Line Pier, and consigned to the City of Marseilles, France, by the defendant, contained human hair of the value of $16,794.96;

Whereas in truth and in fact, said representation was false and untrue as the defendant then and there well knew.

The defendant is arraigned at the bar, and, by leave, &c. withdraws his plea of not guilty, and now pleads guilty of grand larceny in the first degree.

MONDAY, MARCH 20TH, 1916.

Court Meets—Present, Hon. James A. Delehanty, Judge of the Court of General Session.

The defendant is arraigned at the bar.

The defendant having nothing further to say &c.

Ordered that sentence be suspended and the defendant discharged from custody.

A true extract from the Minutes.

(Seal)

EDWARD R. CARROLL, Clerk of Court.

Senator REED. Just one further paper on this. I introduce now a certified copy of a part of the record of the court in this case. [Reading:]

The People of the State of New York against Philip Musica. Cal. No. 10,734
Ind. No. 93,630.

RECOMMENDATION.

In the indictment the defendant, Philip M. Musica, is charged with the crime of Grand Larceny in the First Degree in that on the 11th day of March, 1913, he stole from the firm of J. & W. Seligman & Company the sum of $16,793.33 by means of false pretenses.

On the 11th day of April, 1913, Musica was arraigned on the indictment and pleaded "Not Guilty," but immediately notified the District Attorney that he was willing to make a complete confession and render aid to the State and to those having civil claims against the firm of A. Musica & Son, the business formerly conducted by the defendant and his father, Antonio Musica, and an allied corporation called the United States Hair Company.

On the following day the defendant was brought to the District Attorney's office and there made a detailed statement to District Attorney Whitman, in which it appeared that, by means of attaching false bills of lading to foreign bills of exchange, Musica had defrauded some half dozen banks and private bankers in the City of New York of upwards of half a million dollars. Among the private bankers so defrauded was the said firm of J. & W. Seligman & Company.

Senator OVERMAN. What are you reading from now?

Senator REED. I am reading from the court record a recommendation that was made by the district attorney. This is a certified copy.

Senator OVERMAN. A recommendation for clemency?

Senator REED. A recommendation for certain action in the case.

I continue to read:

Within a few days after making the statement to District Attorney Whitman, Musica made a much fuller and more detailed statement to Mr. Stern, of the firm of Ruchmore, Bisbee & Stern, representing the Manhattan Company and John Munro & Company. Mr. Stern had brought to the District Attorney the evidence on which Musica was indicted.

On the 27th day of May, 1913, Musica pleaded "Guilty" of the crime charged in the indictment referred to above.

Afterward, on the 29th day of May, 1913, Musica testified before the Grand Jury against one Hans Shapire, who had been the Paris agent in the Musica frauds.

Afterwards, on the 1st day of August, 1913, Musica testified before the Grand Jury against one Frederick D. Holder who had also participated in the Musica frauds.

At the request of the attorneys for the receivers in bankruptcy of A. Musica & Son and the United States Hair Company, the sentence of Musica was postponed from time to time in order that he might remain in New York City and appear as a witness at the various hearings before the referee in bankruptcy. These postponements continued until June, 1915, and, during that period, Musica appeared as a witness before the referee in bankruptcy some forty or fifty times.

After Musica had plead guilty, the books, papers, and correspondence pertaining to A. Musica & Son and the United States Hair Company, which had been theretofore concealed, were turned over to the receivers in bankruptcy by Musica and he also turned over certain assets which had been theretofore concealed, to wit, a quantity of human hair of the value of $25,000, a quantity of other merchandise of the value of five or six thousand dollars, and negotiable instruments of the value of several thousand dollars.

Philip Musica had now been confined in the City Prison, without bail, for a period of two years and five months.

In view of the defendant's plea of guilty, the testimony which he has given against his accomplices, his voluntary appearance as a witness before the referee in bankruptcy over a long period of time, and the two years and five months which he has spent in jail, I respectfully recommend that the sentence in this case be suspended and that the defendant be placed on probation.

Respectfully submitted.

(Sd.) WM. DEAN EMBREE,
Assistant District Attorney.

Approved,
(Sd.) CHARLES ALBERT PERKINS,
District Attorney.

NEW YORK, September 8, 1915.

For additional reasons I renew the above recommendation dated New York, March 20th, 1916.

(Sd.) EDWARD SWANN,
District Attorney.

Senator REED. I want to put in the record this paper from the Tombs records, merely for the purpose of fixing some dates.

(The paper above referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

DECEMBER 30, 1918.

Matter: Washington. Report of Hopkins.

There is no picture of Philip Musica in the Rogues gallery, at Police Headquarters. There is a record of his arrest as follows:

Name Philip Musica; address, 1885 18th St., Brooklyn; crime, grand larceny; color, W.; age 31; date of arrest March, 1913; officer, Detective Flood.

REMARKS.

Sen. suspended by Judge Delehanty, Part II, General Sessions, March 28, 1916.

Bertillon finger marks taken of Musica does not show that he was ever at Elmira or ever arrested by the police of N. Y. under any other name.

TOMBS RECORD.

First Tier, Hall Records show that Philip Musica was received in the Tombs (City Prison) as follows:

Date (of reception in the prison) April 10th, 1913. (Name) Musica, Philip. Crime, Grand Larceny. Transferred to Fourth Tier of prison, May 7th, 1914.

The fourth tier records show—

Date (of reception at the prison) April 10, 1913. Name, Musica, Philip. 420 (Meaning cell he was transferred to). Crime, grand larceny. Disposition—Discharged March 20, 1916.

Senator REED. It was on March 20, 1916, that Mr. Musica, alias Johnson, was paroled. When did he come into your office? What was the date of the memorandum you had an hour or so ago when you read a memorandum from your pocket?

Mr. BECKER. May 16, 1917.

Senator REED. Where had Musica been just before that? Had he been in anybody's office or connected with any office?

Mr. BECKER. Connected with the district attorney's office.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, when Musica was released on this parole he continued to work out of the district attorney's office, did he not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. And I may say that he used the name of William Johnson in an investigation at that time.

Senator REED. So that from the time this man was paroled, and while he is under the parole, he has been constantly engaged in assisting the district attorney, I believe you call it in New York, or he has been engaged in working out of the office of the attorney general of New York. That is correct, is it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; substantially correct. It is not quite accurate, but almost.

Senator REED. And during the time he was with the attorney general of New York this gentleman received, I believe you said, $25 a day and expenses?

Mr. BECKER. No. That included expenses, except when he had to travel out of town.

Senator REED. If he expended any money in the prosecution of any case or in running down any case, he got that amount of money back?

Mr. BECKER. In the Baff case the only expenses referred to were his personal expenses. That was the rate in the Baff murder case.

Senator REED. The rate in the Baff murder case was what?

Mr. BECKER. Twenty-five dollars a day, including all of his personal expenses.

Senator STERLING. That was only for actual days of work?

Mr. BECKER. For actual days of work.

Senator REED. But, as a matter of fact, he has been drawing this right along and all of the time has been spent in your office, has it not?

Mr. BECKER. No; not quite all, but nearly.

Senator REED. What has he been getting during the time he has been in your office—$25 a day?

Mr. BECKER. On the Baff case, yes.

Senator REED. Has he been on the Baff case all the time?

Mr. BECKER. Including expenses, yes.

Senator REED. On the Baff case all the time in your office?

Mr. BECKER. More or less.

Senator REED. But what I want to get at is, no matter what case he was engaged in, he has drawn $25 a day since he has been in your office?

Mr. BECKER. When he was working on the Baff murder case.

Senator REED. When he was not working in that case was he drawing any pay or not?

Mr. BECKER. I think that was changed.

Senator REED. What was that memorandum you read? Will you not please revert to that again?

Mr. BECKER. This is an arrangement that was made that did not continue very long. That was changed; I remember now.

Senator REED. What was the change that was made?

Mr. BECKER. That was changed to a basis of $20 a day and his expenses paid additional.

Senator REED. The expenses he was paid additional were his board, his lodging, his hotel bills, and things of that kind, were they not?

Mr. BECKER. When he had them.

Senator REED. He always had to eat or live some place and you paid that, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. No; not always.

Senator REED. Was not that the rule?

Mr. BECKER. About half the time I kept him with me in the Murray Hill Hotel, when we were engaged on daily work and nightly work. Other times he lived at home, and then, of course, there was no expense bill.

Senator REED. But a good part of the time he received $20 a day and his board and lodging in addition to other expenses. That is right, is it?

Mr. BECKER. Up to about the 1st of May last, I think.

Senator REED. What happened on the 1st of May last?

Mr. BECKER. Then he went to live at his home, and there were not any more expense bills to pay except for other things.

Senator REED. Except for other things outside of his home?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. How long did you pay his board? How many hundreds of dollars did you pay to this man, or has the public been obliged to pay to this man, on vouchers, and so forth? Have you any idea?

Mr. BECKER. I might approximate it.

Senator REED. Would you be so kind as to do that? It might save me introducing a great many papers.

Mr. BECKER. While he was in the Murray Hill Hotel I think the expense for board averaged about $5 a day, and, with the exception of probably about a couple of months, between May 16, 1917, and May 1, 1918, he was there probably about four days in the week. You can figure that.

Senator REED. He had some men under him whose expenses, and so on, he also took charge of?

Mr. BECKER. You mean that he paid?

Senator REED. Yes; and then afterwards rendered accounts for them?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, I think it was done that way. But usually I would put it on my own bill.

Senator REED. Did you say that he got his money altogether under the name of Musica?

Mr. BECKER. I was under that impression. It may not be so.

Senator REED. I hand you a photographic copy of a letter purporting to be written by you under date of November 26, 1917, and which reads—

Mr. BECKER. Let me see that, please.

Senator REED. I will hand it to you.

Mr. BECKER. I prefer to see anything before it is read.

Senator REED. I prefer to read this paper, and I intend to read it; do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. BECKER. I wanted to see whether the signature was mine. It is my signature.

Senator REED. I have not asked you whether it is yours.

Mr. BECKER. I have no objection. I object to anything being put on me that I do not have a chance to see.

(The paper above referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

NOVEMBER 26, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM A. PRENDERGAST,
Comptroller, New York City.

SIR: I enclose herewith an expense bill against the City incurred in connection with the investigation into the matter of Harry Robitzek et al in the County of Bronx, amounting to $177.15.

I incurred this expense pursuant to the designation of the Governor under Executive Law, Section 62, and the expense is a proper charge against the City of New York.

The full amount of this bill has been advanced by me in cash. Please send the warrant therefor to my order when issued.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED L. BECKER,
Second Deputy Attorney General.

Senator REED. I was going to read this and ask you if that was your signature, and I believe you have stated it is. Now I call your attention to the voucher attached, and to the item November 1, the William Johnson voucher attached, for $100.15.

Mr. BECKER (after examination). That is the man. I recall the circumstances now. That was a criminal prosecution which was proposed and never came off.

Senator REED. But the point I am making now——

Mr. BECKER. And the point about it was, I wanted to use the services of Mr. Musica in it; and I felt that the interests of the State might be prejudiced if he did it under the name of Musica, and I authorized him to use the name of Johnson in that proceeding and in the bills that were rendered, for the good of any prosecution that might take place. If he continues—as I hope he will—as an investigator in the future, I think we will get up some new name and use that for the same reasons, as I would not like to part with his services. They are very effective.

Senator REED. In other words, you would not want the true name and history and character of your investigator known to the courts or to the accused?

Mr. BECKER. No; for this reason, if you care to hear the reason.

Senator REED. I do not care for it.

Mr. BECKER. I think I would like to state it, because the character of the investigator has not the slightest thing to do with the truth of the charge, except in the most indirect manner. But it is a method that is commonly used by persons who have no defense against a charge to raise the same kind of a smell that a skunk raises when it is attacked, in the hope that it can escape by reason of the smell.

Senator REED. And of course, if the associate of the skunk is around, you can generally get your odor from him. So that it is not necessary to dwell much on the skunk.

Will you please look at this other paper, which contains what purports to be the signature of Alfred L. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. That is mine.

(The paper above referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

NOVEMBER 26, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM A. PRENDERGAST,
Comptroller, New York City.

SIR: I enclose herewith an expense bill against the City incurred in connection with the investigation of the murder of Barnett Baff and in the cases of People vs. Joseph Cohen, et al; People vs. Jack Rizzoto, alias Charles Draglia et al; People vs. Giuseppe Arichello and People vs. William Simon amounting to $400.17.

I incurred this expense pursuant to the designation of the Governor under Executive law, Section 62, and the expense is a proper charge against the City of New York.

The full amount of this bill has been advanced by me in cash. Please send the warrant therefor to my order when issued.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED L. BECKER,
Second Deputy Attorney General

Senator REED. In that I find the following items, to which I call attention:

An item of $32 to P. M. Musica. The bill is as follows:

NEW YORK, November 23, 1917.

Hon. Alfred L. Becker, Second Deputy Attorney General, to P. M. Musica.

Oct. 23.	Lunch witnesses J. Mascetta and Guiseppe De Benedetto	$2. 20
27.	Supper witnesses Moe Rosenstein and Guiseppe De Genedetto and Officers Vaughn and Noonan	4. 35
Nov. - 1.	Supper witnesses G. De Benedetto and John Mascetta and Officers Noonan and Vaughan	3. 85
3.	Lunch for witness Thomas Gentile	. 95
10.	Supper witnesses Guiseppe De Benedetto and J. Mascetta and Officers Noonan and Vaughan	3. 15
13.	Supper witnesses Guiseppe de Benedetto and J. Mascetta and Officers Vaughan and Noonan	3. 60
15.	Supper witness I. Portman and Officer Vaughan	2. 35
17.	Supper witness Thomas Gentile and Officer Noonan	2. 05
17.	Supper witnesses G. De Benedetto and Joseph Rosensweig and Officer Vaughan	3. 60
19.	Supper for witnesses I. Portman and J. Rosensweig and Officers Vaughan and Noonan	4. 10
22.	Expenses of Officer G. C. Vaughan	2. 18
		<hr/> 32. 38

Received payment.

P. M. MUSICA.

It appears, therefore, that Mr. Musica at least was authorized to board the witnesses for the State and the officers at will. Was that the case?

Mr. BECKER. No; not at all the case.

Senator REED. That was what was done here, was it not? He was furnishing them meals?

Mr. BECKER. They were furnished with meals; yes. What objection is there to that?

Senator REED. This was not only done in one case, but it was a common occurrence, was it not? I do not intend to take up the time of the committee now—

Mr. BECKER. When a witness was kept away from a meal, he always got it. I did it myself. You will find my bills there with the same class of charges.

Senator REED. That is using them very handsomely. Now, I call attention to this letter, dated June 6, 1918, and I ask if that is your signature to that letter [exhibiting letter to witness].

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. I call attention now to the item in this account which is attached to the letter. I will not take the time to read the letter. Let it go in the record.

(The letter above referred to is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

JUNE 6, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES L. CRAIG,
Comptroller, City of New York,
Municipal Building, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I am transmitting you herewith a bill against the City of New York for $150.14 for expenses necessarily incurred in re the investigation into the murder of Barnett Baff and in the cases of People vs. Arichiello, People vs.

Joseph Cohen, et al., People vs. William Simon, People vs. Charles Dragna alias Jack Rizzotto, pursuant to the designation of the Governor under Executive law, section 62.

This expense is a proper charge against the City of New York. The amount of this expense bill has been disbursed by me in cash, and the warrant therefor should be drawn to my order and forwarded to me at 51 Chambers Street, New York City.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED L. BECKER,
Deputy in Charge.

Senator REED. Then follow a number of items. The bill reads:

To expenses necessarily incurred, as per annexed vouchers, in re the investigation into the murder of Barnett Baff and in the cases of People vs. Archie v. People vs. Joseph Cohen, et al., People v. William Simon, People v. Charles Dragna alias Jack Rizzotto, pursuant to the designation of the Governor under Executive law, Section 62.

May 22.	Paid to Anna Vucri	voucher attached	-----	$10
	" " Antonio Cardinale	" "	-----	15

I want the committee to bear Cardinale's name in mind, please.

Mr. BECKER. That $15 item is an allowance made by order of the court to him as a detained witness.

Senator REED. Very well. The bill continues:

May 28.	Paid to Antonio Cardinale	voucher attached	-----	$15
	" " Anna Vucri	" "	-----	10
31	" " John J. Noonan	" "	-----	10 35
June 4	" " Joseph Sorro	" "	-----	7.90
	" " Antonio Cardinale	" "	-----	15
	" " Anna Vucri	" "	-----	10
5	" " A. Palisi	" "	-----	25
6	" " William Johnson	-----		30.80
				<hr/> $150.14

Mr. BECKER. That bill is accompanied by supporting vouchers that show the nature of each item.

Senator REED. I am coming to the vouchers, as far as I have them. and if I have not them complete, of course I should be glad if you would produce them.

Mr. BECKER. They are all on file with the comptroller of the city of New York.

Senator REED. The items which I want to read are those of Mr. William Johnson. His bill reads:

NEW YORK CITY, June 3, 1918.

Attorney general of the State of New York to William Johnson, Dr.

In re disbursements incurred in the matter of the prosecutions of the case Peo. v Josephn Cohen, et al and People v. William Simon, et al, as follows:

June 1.	Meal for witness Moses Rosenstein and Officer John J. Noonan	-----	$1.90
	Carfares witness Moses Rosenstein and Officer John J. Noonan	-----	.20
2.	Railroad fares to and from Patchogue, L. I. for self, Officer Gordon and witness A. Cardinale	-----	9.90
	Luncheon at Patchogue, L. I. for self, Officer Gordon and Antonio Cardinale	-----	5.30
	Auto hire at Patchogue, L. I.	-----	9.00
	Supper for self, Officer Gordon and witness A. Cardinale	-----	4.35
	Carfares	-----	.10

Received payment,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

There is a large number of these that I do not intend to burden the committee with, as to which I merely make the statement that some of the bills are in the name of Musica, and some in the name of Johnson. But they appear to be in the Baff murder case and other cases.

You made a voluntary statement in regard to Mr. Musica and his connection with certain murder cases. One of them you referred to was the Baff murder case.

Mr. BECKER. That is the only one.

Senator REED. I suppose you would include in the Baff murder case the several parties who were charged with the commission of the crime or complicity in it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. There were about a dozen.

Senator REED. I want to see if I can get before the committee, if I may have the committee's close attention to this matter I am going to bring out, a concrete statement of those cases. It is stated to me in the memoranda which I have that on the 24th day of November, 1914, Barnett Baff was murdered in the West Washington Market, in the city of New York. Is that the date of the murder?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Afterwards you were associated in one of the prosecutions that grew out of this case?

Mr. BECKER. In all of them, except perhaps I might make the reservation of those that were already finished before I came into it.

Senator REED. Now, this occurred on the 24th day of November, 1914, and for a considerable time the manner of the shooting and who did the shooting was a good deal of a mystery and puzzle to the police. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. At the time that crime was committed Musica was in jail?

Mr. BECKER. I can not say as to that.

Senator REED. He was indicted on the 11th day of March, 1913, and he was kept in jail substantially all of the time for three years?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Sometime in February, 1916, there was arrested for his murder a man named Archiello, and on the 11th or 12th day of February, 1916, Archiello made a signed and written confession, did he not?

Mr. BECKER (laughing). Excuse me for smiling. All right. Yes, that purported to be one. I might suggest to the committee, if they will permit, that we can spend an hour on this case.

Senator REED. We will not spend very long.

Mr. BECKER. And the fact will always remain that the theory that was ultimately adopted was adopted by the jury and that the conviction was affirmed all the way through.

Senator REED. Let us follow it a moment.

Mr. BECKER. Apparently we are going into the defense that was raised in the Joseph Cohen trial, to see whether it was good or not.

Senator REED. I submit that if the witness will just answer these questions we will get along better.

Mr. BECKER. If Cohen could not prove it on his trial for murder, I do not see how Senator Reed can expect to prove it now.

Senator REED. The witness brought this case in, dragged this case in by the ears, and now I want to follow it for just a few minutes. On the 11th day of February, the same day that Arichello confessed——

Mr. BECKER. His name is Arichiello, by the way.

Senator REED. Let me pronounce it my way, it is so much easier.

Mr. BECKER. I might not answer your question.

Senator REED. Ferrari——

Mr. BECKER. F-e-r-r-a-r-i.

Senator REED. I have spelled it out that way.

Mr. BECKER. I may not want to answer except as to correct names. I am like the dog that would not answer to anything except Fido.

Senator REED. I will admit the appropriateness of the simile.

Mr. BECKER. That is one on me.

Senator REED. February 11, Ferrari confessed that he was hired by Greco and Cardinale to drive the car for the gunmen who did the shooting, and that Arichiello and Rena did the shooting. That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. There was a purported confession that was somewhat like that, but not entirely like it.

Senator REED. I think I will have the confession here and let the committee judge.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Cohen tried to get an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, and now they are going beyond the United States Supreme Court.

Senator REED. I submit that the witness should answer the question. February 21, 1916, Mr. Ferrari was indicted for the murder of Baff and Arichiello was also indicted for the murder?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. That is about correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think that is probably right.

Senator REED. April 7, Arichiello was convicted of murder in the first degree and convicted in part upon these confessions he had made.

Mr. BECKER. Arichiello was.

Senator REED. On April 13 Ferrari was convicted in the same case of murder in the first degree, and largely upon his confession. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. These convictions of these two men became final. did they not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. That is to say, there was no appeal perfected, or if perfected, it was affirmed. Which was it?

Mr. BECKER. The convictions were affirmed.

Senator REED. Were affirmed. Then they went into final judgment?

Mr. BECKER. I thought you meant that they were executed.

Senator REED. Oh, no.

Mr. BECKER. That would be final.

Senator REED. No; the convictions went into final judgment. These confessions which you have seen fit to laugh at, at least Arichiello's—or whatever way you pronounce it—were made, one of them to Inspector Gray at police headquarters, and the other to District Attorney Swan and Assistant District Attorney James O'Malley; that is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think they were both made before Mr. Swan, but I may be mistaken.

Senator REED. Now, in the confession, Arichiello—or however you pronounce it, I have no acquaintance with the gentleman—stated substantially that he and a man named Rena were the men who actually fired the shots which killed Baff and that he was hired by a man named Ippolito Greco?

Mr. BECKER. Ippolito Greco.

Senator REED. Since dead. And that Greco had been procured to hire the gunmen by one Antonio Cardinale. That is the substance of the confession, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember whether they went so far as to say Greco was hired by Cardinale or not. I think not.

Senator REED. No; Greco had been procured to hire the gunmen by Cardinale, Antonio Cardinale, then a fugitive from justice in Italy.

Mr. BECKER. It was not very material. He undoubtedly was, as a matter of fact, but I did not recall that was in the confessions, but perhaps you are right.

Senator REED. Now, these confessions described the manner in which the murder was committed, told exactly how the shots were fired, and they tallied with the testimony of witnesses who saw the shooting?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir; absolutely not.

Senator REED. You say that is not true?

Mr. BECKER. That is absolutely untrue.

Senator REED. All right; we may have to get the record on that.

Mr. BECKER. That was the great trouble with the confessions, they did not tally with the testimony of the other witnesses.

Senator REED. But the confessions nevertheless stood in the court and stood in the appellate court and the men were convicted, and both of them had the sentence of death passed upon them. That is perfectly true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is true.

Senator REED. Do you know a lawyer named Walter R. Duel?

Mr. BECKER. Very well, indeed. I was with him night before last.

Senator REED. Did Walter R. Duel come into the defense at any time of Ferrari and Arichiello? I will so pronounce it; you can pronounce it any way you please.

Mr. BECKER. He represented Arichiello. I do not recall that he ever represented Ferrari. But bear in mind this was before I knew anything about the case.

Senator REED. But I am asking for your knowledge of what you learned afterwards in the case.

Mr. BECKER. Of course, that is not so exact in my mind as some of the other circumstances.

Senator REED. Now, as a matter of fact, after these confessions had taken place, a man was sent for Cardinale?

Mr. BECKER. To Italy.

Senator REED. And brought him back from Italy?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who was that man, do you remember?

Mr. BECKER. Herman Black, the assistant district attorney of New York.

Senator REED. Cardinale came back with a promise of immunity. did he not?

Mr. BECKER. No, no.

Senator REED. How did he come back if he did not have a promise of immunity?

Mr. BECKER. He did not come; he was brought against his will.

Senator REED. He was brought under a requisition?

Mr. BECKER. No. That is peculiar. Here is the fact, if you would like to have it. The Italian Government does not allow extradition of persons charged with murder. They have an extradition treaty with the United States, but it has been practically—like other treaties—repealed by enactment or decisions of the Italian Court. Cardinale refused to come over here, and Mr. Black made an arrangement with the Italian Government whereby he should be brought over in custody but under a stipulation or order of the Italian Court that he should not be prosecuted over here, but should be returned to Italy if required, to be tried over there for the offense.

Senator REED. That amounted to immunity from trial here, and did give him immunity?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; he could not be tried here.

Senator REED. Now, when Cardinale got here, how was it that he became the client of Mr. Duel?

Mr. BECKER. That was long before I knew the facts. My impression is that he had another lawyer for a little while and then Mr. Duel became his attorney.

Senator REED. So that now Mr. Duel became the attorney of Cardinale, and at the same time he was the attorney of Ferrari? That is true, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. He was the attorney of Arichiello.

Senator REED. Well, of Arichiello.

Mr. BECKER. I did not remember whether he was the attorney for Ferrari.

Senator REED. Arichiello will do me just as well as Ferrari.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Both of them were sentenced to death—Arichiello and Ferrari—so that this man Duel became the attorney of the man who was under sentence of death and became the attorney of the witness who was brought over to this country, the witness Cardinale?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. To be used against some other man in another case. Did you say just before the adjournment that Mr. Musica, alias Johnson, was the man that worked out the theory in the case under which Cohen was convicted subsequently of this murder?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I put it just that way.

Senator REED. Now, just what did you say?

Mr. BECKER. The point is that Mr. Musica was the investigator who had had the case in hand for the district attorney under three administrations—no; under two administrations, under Perkins and Swan. I am not sure he was under Mr. Whitman in that case. He was in the Becker case and some others. And as an investigator he was the one who dealt with these witnesses and got their evidence.

Senator REED. So that we will not have any dispute about whose theory it was, I will read you back your testimony given this morning. You had been speaking of Mr. Musica. "As a result of that month of intimate association"—that is, with Musica—"I reached the conclusion, and so advised the Attorney General, that the theory of the facts advanced by Mr. Musica in the Baff murder cases was correct. We adopted it, prosecuted Joseph Cohen for the murder, obtained a conviction, which has been affirmed away up to the United States Supreme Court, and Mr. Arichiello, as he was known, who had been convicted, was given a new trial by order of the court." So that it was Mr. Musica's theory, arrived at after you had spent a month with him in consultation, that it was not Ferrari and Arichiello who had been convicted of these murders, and who had confessed to these murders, who had actually committed them, but it was a man named Cohen?

Mr. BECKER. No; there is scarcely one thing in that question that is correct.

Senator REED. Very well; then let us get at just what is correct. You did say, and I want to know if you want to take it back, that the theory of the facts advanced by Mr. Musica in the Baff murder cases was correct; that is, you arrived at that conclusion, and you adopted it and prosecuted Joseph Cohen?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, the theory of fact which he advanced resulted in the conviction of Joseph Cohen, did it not?

Mr. BECKER. The proof of that theory.

Senator REED. Yes; the proof of that theory.

Mr. BECKER. As against, I may say, the complete disclosure in the court of the connection of Mr. Musica with the case.

Senator REED. I am not asking you about that, at all. If you will just answer these questions, we will get along much more rapidly. Musica's theory brought about the conviction of Cohen, and it was the conviction of Cohen which brought about the release from the electric chair of Arichiello and Ferrari?

Mr. BECKER. Let us get that straight. What brought about the condition was the proof of the witness Ferrari, who is still under sentence of death, but has been reprieved from time to time.

Senator REED. You do not intend to execute him, do you?

Mr. BECKER. He has been reprieved from time to time because he is to be used as a witness in one remaining prosecution. Whether he shall receive a commutation of his sentence to a life sentence rests with Gov. Smith; what will be done with him depends on Gov. Smith. A new trial was granted by Judge Tompkins, who presided at the first trial.

Senator REED. Was he granted a new trial because of the assistance that he gave to the State?

Mr. BECKER. Possibly, because he had heard the trial of the case and he read the papers on which application was made, and made up his own mind.

Senator REED. What papers? The papers of the Cohen case?

Mr. BECKER. That was adopted as the basis for the application for a new trial.

Senator REED. Let us see. Was this before Judge Strong or Johnson?

Mr. BECKER. Judge Tompkins. He presided at the Cohen trial.

Senator REED. And he then went on to the appellate court?

Mr. BECKER. No; he did not.

Senator REED. I wanted to get it right. I wish you to state it please, so that it will be plain. Was he a member of the supreme court?

Mr. BECKER. That is our trial court.

Senator REED. And having heard the Cohen trial, he proceeded to give a new trial to Arichiello because of the facts developed at the Cohen trial? That was the situation, was it?

Mr. BECKER. In a way, yes; it is not exactly.

Senator REED. Is it fairly accurate?

Mr. BECKER. Fairly.

Senator REED. That is doing pretty well in this case.

Mr. BECKER. I have no doubt that that is what moved him to action.

Senator REED. It then transpires that the effect of Mr. Cohen's conviction—oh, by the way, before I come to that. When Cardinale got back here he refused to testify for a while?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Then after he had refused to testify, Mr. Duel became his attorney and he did agree to testify? That is right, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. In the sequence of events, probably, but I am not so sure.

Senator REED. Then when he did testify, Cohen was convicted?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And then as a result of Cohen's conviction, Arichiello, the client of Duel, who also represented the witness against Cohen, was released, Ferrari?

Mr. BECKER. He was granted a new trial, and has been declared guilty of attempted murder.

Senator REED. So that Mr. Duel's defense of his client, letting his client out, seems to be this: He persuaded a witness to testify, and when that witness did testify he put the crime upon Mr. Cohen, and the crime having been put upon Mr. Cohen, the court then released Arichiello, the client of Mr. Duel?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is mostly wrong.

Senator REED. What is wrong about it?

Mr. BECKER. I can not pick it out.

Senator REED. Is not this absolutely the situation as near as it can be stated in human language?

Mr. BECKER. No; it was Mr. Musica who induced Cardinale to talk. It was not Duel, it was Musica.

Senator REED. Musica was then in your office, too, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. No; he was then employed by District Attorney Swan.

Senator REED. Oh, yes; Musica is the man who induced Cardinale to talk. Was Musica then in Swan's office?

Mr. BECKER. Not physically, but he was in his employ and receiving regular compensation.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, when it came to the trial of Cohen, the trial was transferred from the district attorney's office to the attorney general's office. That is correct, is it not? And you helped try the case, or tried it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, why was this case transferred from the district attorney's office to your office?

Mr. BECKER. On account of an order of Gov. Whitman, directing that it be done.

Senator REED. I know, but why was the order given?

Mr. BECKER. I should prefer that you swear the ex-governor as a witness on that.

Senator REED. Do you not know why the order was given?

Mr. BECKER. I will tell you why I think it was, but I am trying now to express the reasons that moved the executive mind of our former governor. There was a stalemate in the case from the district attorney's office——

Senator REED. In the Cohen case?

Mr. BECKER. All of these cases, practically, in the district attorney's office. Mr. Swan, who had heard the confession, right before his own eyes, of Arichiello, with the utmost honesty—now, I make no criticism of Mr. Swan; I understand it perfectly—he could not get it out of his head that Arichiello was guilty, and when they got the testimony of Cardinale, Cardinale refused to mention the names of the gunmen, but he stated positively that Arichiello was not one of them, and that a great injustice was being done to Arichiello by his conviction. Now, that was the situation presented. There was another witness—his name escapes me for the moment; he was an Italian; I will see if I can recall it—it was Di Paolo—who had originally “broken the case,” in police parlance, by making a statement to the police, the general effect of which was that he had at one time been one of the hired assassins to kill Barnett Baff, but that he had dropped out of the matter before the crime was actually committed; but that he had subsequently seen, in the back room of Greco's saloon, a large sum of money being paid to Tom Lehna and to Arichiello in payment for the commission of the homicide.

Senator REED. I do not want those details.

Mr. BECKER. Now, wait a minute, please. The question was how these other cases could be tried. I know Mr. Swan believed that Cohen was guilty because he told me so, but the question was how they could be tried when the State's principal witness, the one witness who could connect Cohen with the crime, insisted that a man who had already been convicted of murder was not guilty, notwithstanding his conviction. Mr. Duel went to the governor and insisted that by reason of the very natural tendency of the district attorney, Mr. Swan, to cling to the original theory of the case, the theory of the case which, if established, would benefit his client, Arichiello, it was not receiving fair and impartial attention. In other words, the claim was made by Mr. Duel that the district attorney had a biased view of the case, and was committed to a theory which was injurious to his client. The case was then sent to us under a section of our law which permits us to take charge of the case, so that the responsibility rested on me.

Now, with respect to Mr. Musica, the claim was made by the Cohen outfit that Musica had framed up this new theory of the case with Cardinale for the purpose of hanging the Jews and getting the Italians off; that it was going to acquit Arichiello and that it was going to put Cohen in the electric chair. And when it came to the trial of the case, after he had reached the conclusion that Arichiello had made a false confession there for the purpose of getting the benefit of it when it came to trial of the case, all the things were gone over for his defense, but Cohen was convicted.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, the attorney now for Arichiello becomes the attorney for Cardinale, and the attorney for this convicted man gets the case transferred to the attorney general's office from the district attorney's office, as you see, because the district attorney was not taking a proper interest. As a matter of fact, did not the district attorney positively refuse to turn loose and grant immunity to men who had confessed their crime and who had been duly convicted of it?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think the question came up at all.

Senator REED. Was not an effort constantly being made before the district attorney, and did not the district attorney stand up and refuse to dismiss the case against either Arichiello or Ferrari?

Mr. BECKER. No; that was not the situation. There was a question of whether the Cohen case could be tried. Cohen was not a man claimed to have shot Baff. He was claimed to be the employer of the man who shot Baff.

Senator REED. But the testimony on which he was convicted showed a different man to have done the shooting than Arichiella or Ferrari or the man that they had implicated?

Mr. BECKER. No. It showed that Ferrari was guilty. There never had been any question about his guilt. He admits it. He admitted it to me. But it showed that a man other than Arichiello did it. Ferrari did not do the shooting. Nobody ever claimed he did the shooting. He was the driver of the taxicab in which the two gunmen went to the scene of the crime and removed from it.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, Musica went to see Arichiello and Ferrari and Cardinale repeatedly before these trials, did he not all of them?

Mr. BECKER. Not as to all of them. Of course, he was very friendly with Cardinale; very frequently with Cardinale, very rarely with Ferrari.

Senator REED. Was he not with Arichiello almost constantly for days?

Mr. BECKER. No, indeed.

Senator REED. Did he not go to visit him over 30 times?

Mr. BECKER. No, indeed. I doubt if he was there more than once to see Arichiello. You remember, Arichiello was in the death house.

Senator REED. Yes. He did not stay there. Where is he now? Walking the street, is he not?

Mr. BECKER. As I started to say a moment ago, Arichiello pleaded guilty two days ago to attempted murder, and Judge Tompkins suspended sentence. He had been in jail about three or four years.

Senator REED. Did Cardinale refuse to testify against Cohen unless Arichiello was released?

Mr. BECKER. Never, that I know of.

Senator REED. Did he not do it right straight along, and was it not after Musica had seen him that the deal was fixed up?

Mr. BECKER. That is absolutely preposterous. The point has never even been suggested to my mind before. The only condition that he imposed for testifying was that he should not be required to name the two gunmen whom he himself had been associated with in the commission of the offense.

Senator REED. Did not Duel and Musica visit Cardinale many times during his imprisonment in the city?

Mr. BECKER. Musica and Duel visited him many times. He was not exactly in prison.

Senator REED. He was being held as a witness.

Mr. BECKER. He was being held as a material witness.

Senator REED. Did he not visit Arichiello in the death house at Sing Sing in the same period that was covered by the visits made to Cardinale?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know, but I imagine probably he saw Mr. Duel at that time. He had made a motion for a new trial for Arichiello, and there was prepared a long affidavit of Arichiello at that time.

Senator REED. Was there an agreement made or an understanding arrived at with the Attorney General that Arichiello was to be discharged when the new trial was reached?

Mr. BECKER. Never.

Senator REED. He was, as a matter of fact, turned loose, except that he has been sentenced for this minor crime, and he is not going to be sent up for that, is he?

Mr. BECKER. He had his sentence rescinded, as I have stated, by that court about a year and a half after the Cohen trial.

Senator REED. Now, at the very time that these visits were being made to Cardinale and to Arichiello, Musica was working in your office, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. He was not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. When were those visits made?

Mr. BECKER. To Arichiello, you mean?

Senator REED. Yes; to Arichiello, and to Cardinale.

Mr. BECKER. After the 15th day of May, 1917.

Senator REED. While he was in your office?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Duel, Mr. James O'Malley, and I went to Sing Sing to see Cardinale in the death house. He was there with me. The records of the prison will show that.

Senator REED. Musica was then in your office, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I asked you a moment ago if he was not employed in your office at the time he made numerous visits to Cardinale?

Mr. BECKER. No; for I had my office at that time in the Murray Hill Hotel, and the meetings were right there in the office in my presence.

Senator REED. Very well, then; he was in your office at the time that numerous visits were had with Cardinale?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is right. Now, as a matter of fact, then, the net result of this whole business is this: That Cardinale testified against Cohen, admitted that he hired the gunmen, and that the gunmen who committed the murder were Dragini and Titi, is that right?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Who were they?

Mr. BECKER. He never named them.

Senator REED. Did he not name them at all at the trial?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Ferrari changed his story and said that the young men he drove to the scene of the shooting were Dragini and Titi?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is the way their names came?

Mr. BECKER. From Ferrari.

Senator REED. Yes; without Cardinale testifying against Cohen, that is right?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. Cohen was convicted of the crime of first degree murder. Now, he is under sentence of death, and on appeal his judgment and conviction have been affirmed?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Arichiello has been released from prison and is now at large?

Mr. BECKER. A year and a half afterwards, he was given a suspended sentence by Judge Tompkins, and Ferrari has been reprieved from time to time.

Senator REED. Under an agreement that he should not be executed, but should receive a modified sentence?

Mr. BECKER. No such agreement.

Senator REED. Well, understanding, then.

Mr. BECKER. No understanding.

Senator REED. How did he come to testify if there was no understanding.

Mr. BECKER. I went up and saw him and said, "Mr. Ferrari, without any promise from us, will you come down and testify in court voluntarily with full knowledge of what it means? There is absolutely no assurance to you that you can get anything." He said, "Yes; I will."

Senator REED. Of course, he came in without expecting the least bit of clemency, and you did not expect to give him any?

Mr. BECKER. I did not have power to give him any.

Senator REED. You have power to recommend some things, do you not?

Mr. BECKER. The reason I am so particular, I really think I shall take that case up to the governor, as I would have to Gov. Whitman, and lay the facts before him and make no recommendation whatever. That is my expectation of what I will do.

Senator REED. During this same period when Musica was in your office and he was looking up interviews showed in previous statements, or comparing statements of certain people with books—I read this morning from this interview, and do not need to go back to it—did he also have something to do with the affidavits and depositions that were obtained in, we will say, either the Bolo Pasha or the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. Now, if the committee please, a situation arises here that I think I ought to explain. I am going to object, and I will state the grounds. I do not know whether I have the power to release any privilege that may attach to the question of who have been investigators, and what they have done, or not, but the specific request has been made by the Department of Justice to me, for reasons affecting pending prosecutions, that there be no discussion of the work by the investigator, or by any investigators, in connection with the work of our office, which was done largely in conjunction with the Department of Justice. Now, so far as this is concerned, I care nothing about it, and if it is understood distinctly that I go this far and that it does not mean that I have opened the whole door to an examination of the question of identity of investigators, and so on, I am perfectly willing to say that Mr. Musica had something to do with the so-called Hearst investigation, and had something to do with the question with relation to these affidavits. That is as far as I ought to go. It was the subject of a conference between the special assistant for war work and me this morning.

Senator REED. Who is the special assistant for war work at the Department of Justice?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. John Lord O'Brian.

Senator REED. When did Mr. Musica begin to take any action in this matter which you now call the Hearst affidavits or depositions?

Mr. BECKER. Of course, I am referring myself, now, to the ones of June 15, the original affidavits. They were in his handwriting.

Senator REED. 1918?

Mr. BECKER. 1918. They were in Mr. Musica's handwriting.

Senator REED. So that Mr. Musica——

Mr. BECKER. That was not the first.

Senator REED. Well, let us stick to that, just for a moment. What we call the original affidavits which were taken in June, 1918——

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Senator REED (continuing). Were actually written up by Mr. Musica. Where was he when he wrote them up, do you know?

Mr. BECKER. As far as I know, it was at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

Senator REED. Were you present?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. How many and what were the names of the witnesses to these affidavits that Mr. Musica wrote out?

Mr. BECKER. They were the affidavits of the four chauffeurs.

Senator REED. Will you please give me their names?

Mr. BECKER. I will do the best I can. I think Morris Berkowitz was one.

Senator REED. All right, Berkowitz.

Mr. BECKER. Vittorio Franco, Samuel Cornfield, and T. J. Fredrisen. Then there is another man named Block. I know there were only four of them, because I found out about it.

Senator REED. That makes five.

Mr. BECKER. There were only four, and I think you have five names. Which four out of the five are the ones, I can not tell you. It is beyond me.

Senator REED. Can you tell me whether Fredriksen or Block was one of the four?

Mr. BECKER. No; I can not.

Senator REED. Who else, in addition to Musica, could have gotten this extra affidavit, this fifth one that you can not account for?

Mr. BECKER. Those were the only affidavits there were.

Senator REED. Well, you say there is one that you do not think that Musica got. Who else could have gotten that?

Mr. BECKER. No; I say there were only four affidavits.

Senator REED. There were only four?

Mr. BECKER. And here are five persons; and there were only four out of the five.

Senator REED. I see. Whatever affidavits you had, then, Mr. Musica obtained?

Mr. BECKER. Whatever affidavits, but not whatever information.

Senator REED. I am speaking about the affidavits. Those were taken in the month of June, 1918. They were in Musica's handwriting and afterwards were destroyed. When were they destroyed?

Mr. BECKER. I destroyed one of them right immediately after the deposition of Frederickson was taken. They had attached to them some photographs showing Bolo Pasha and Bernstorff, and so on—not these ones [indicating photographs], but some others—and they were pasted, or something, on the affidavit, and I tore them loose and put them on the new affidavit. My recollection is that the others were destroyed at the same time; that they were all destroyed immediately.

Senator REED. If you destroyed them immediately after the Fredriksen deposition was taken——

Mr. BECKER. I remember the Fredriksen one in particular.

Senator REED (continuing). And the pictures were attached to that affidavit, then you do know that Fredriksen is one of the men—one of the four——

Mr. BECKER. Obviously.

Senator REED. Whose deposition Mr. Musica took?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I can say that positively.

The man I was in doubt about was Block. It is between Block, Cornfield, and Franco. I am pretty certain of Berkowitz and Fredriksen.

Senator REED. All right. When did you destroy the other three affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. I did not.

Senator REED. They have been destroyed, have they not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Well, who destroyed them?

Mr. BECKER. I think that Mr. Musica asked me then, "What about the rest of them?" I said, "Well, we had as well tear them up. It is now that we have something in the form of a deposition."

Senator REED. So that Mr. Musica destroyed——

Mr. BECKER. But, as I say—as I have told you already—that is something I am not positive of.

Senator REED. You say Mr. Musica destroyed them?

Mr. BECKER. I just happened to remember the Fredriksen one because you asked me about it.

Senator REED. You say that they have been destroyed, and you say that you destroyed the Fredriksen one? Now, do you say that Musica destroyed the other three?

Mr. BECKER. I think he did, in my presence, also; but whether that is so positively I am not absolutely sure.

Senator REED. Musica writes a good hand, does he not? He writes very good hand, as I judge from his signature.

Mr. BECKER. There were a good many misspelled words.

Senator REED. Among his other reforms he has not reformed his spelling?

Did these affidavits differ in any material respect from the depositions that you took afterwards?

Mr. BECKER. One of them did.

Senator REED. Which one?

Mr. BECKER. The one of Fredriksen. Not in a very material respect; no.

Senator REED. If it was material at all, it was probably very material. Now, in what respect did it vary?

Mr. BECKER. There was a statement made—there is a statement made—in Fredriksen's deposition as to the time when the firm, called the Mason & Seaman Co., which they had worked for, went into bankruptcy, or went out of business, or something like that; and when I came to take the depositions of the others they did not agree with Fredriksen about the date, and that started the discussion about the date.

Senator REED. What date were you speaking of?

Mr. BECKER. The date Mason & Seaman went out of business.

Senator REED. Why were you trying to fix the date when Mason & Seaman went out of business?

Mr. BECKER. Because that fixes the time when these people—well, it was a landmark in their memory, don't you see?

Senator REED. You were trying to fix the time when Bolo Pasha and von Bernstorff made this trip to Hearst's house, were you not? What was the date you were trying to fix?

Mr. BECKER. Among other things.

Senator REED. That was the date you were trying to fix, was it not? You nodded your head.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; one of the dates.

Senator REED. Now, you found that Fredriksen fixed that by the date when—what is the name of the firm?

Mr. BECKER. Mason & Seaman.

Senator REED. When Mason & Seaman went out of business?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not remember that he did.

Senator REED. Why is it that you just told us, not 10 seconds ago, that the date when Mason & Seaman went out of business was the landmark in this case?

Mr. BECKER. No; I did not say any such thing. I said it was a date that they could remember, and it was a sort of a landmark that they went by; and this whole thing started a discussion among the men, and when we got through, after we had all talked it over there, Fredriksen had a new idea about it, and we verified it by the books of the Mason & Seaman Co.

Senator REED. You were trying to fix the date of this alleged trip of Bolo Pasha and von Bernstorff to Mr. Hearst's house?

Mr. BECKER. One of the trips.

Senator REED. And that had been fixed with relation to the time that Mason & Seaman went out of business?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not think that was so.

Senator REED. And you told him that the other witnesses said that he was wrong and you had looked the thing up and found out that he was wrong, and he would have to change that date?

Mr. BECKER. No; that was not what happened.

Senator REED. Was that just about what happened?

Mr. BECKER. No; not even just about.

Senator REED. Well, what part of it did not happen?

Mr. BECKER. We all talked it over and concluded he had been mistaken in the date.

Senator REED. You succeeded in convincing your man that he would have to move that date up a month?

Mr. BECKER. It was only a matter of memory.

Senator REED. Yes; a memory properly aided by proper consultation?

Mr. BECKER. Of memory properly aided, as it should be.

Senator OVERMAN. Did it make any difference whether it was April or August?

Mr. BECKER. Not a particle.

Senator REED. Then why did you destroy the affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. As I said, it was absolutely useless. I had torn up the photographs, and what was the use of it. We did not care anything about it any more.

Senator REED. You had taken the depositions, and immediately after taking the depositions you tore up the four affidavits that had been made. That is right, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; to the best of my recollection.

Senator REED. And then immediately you sat down and wrote new affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no; they were not torn up until after that.

Senator REED. Then you had the affidavits that were taken at Musica at the time you wrote additional and new affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. You say that the affidavits that Musica took in the first instance were substantially the same that went into the testimony which you took in the form of depositions; that you had those affidavits after you had taken the depositions, and that, although you had them, you tore them up and immediately wrote new affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. No; I did not say that.

Senator REED. And that there were no discrepancies of a material nature?

Mr. BECKER. I did not say that.

Senator REED. What did you say if you did not say that?

Mr. BECKER. There were a lot of things that I developed in the course of my examination of these witnesses by question and answer which Mr. Musica had not developed, and that were not included in his affidavits; a lot of important things, too.

Senator REED. After you had had these conversations with these witnesses all together, and had compared notes and fixed dates, you were able to develop some things which even Musica had not discovered before?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Then the statements were taken in the form of depositions, do you mean to say, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. It is all here.

Senator REED. They were taken in the form of depositions, with no person in the world to appear except you yourself and the notary and the witness. Nobody appeared on the other side of the case. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Hearst's attorney was not there.

Senator REED. No; Hearst's attorney was not there, and nobody else's attorney was there to watch you precious gentlemen while you compared notes and fixed dates.

Senator OVERMAN. Well——

Senator REED. Just keep the witness in the tracks, and he will not get anything like that. But when he gets out, he will.

Mr. BECKER. I am beginning to be frightened at your threats, Senator.

Senator REED. You need not be frightened at my threats. I would not hurt a little fellow like you.

Senator KING. I would like to ask a question, Mr. Becker. Were the affidavits which you took after the first ones which were destroyed, the same in substance as the depositions?

Mr. BECKER. They can be compared. I made them just as accurate as I knew how.

Senator NELSON. I think I can put it in a different light. I think there was one set of affidavits, and they were merged in the depositions. Is that true or not? Did you have two sets of affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. No. After the depositions had been taken I boiled it all down in each case to a new set of affidavits of all the witnesses. We now had eight witnesses instead of four.

Senator REED. Let me state it, Senator Nelson, so that you can get it. First, they had four affidavits.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator REED. Taken in June.

Senator NELSON. Then they followed that by depositions.

Senator REED. Then they took what they called depositions. They put it in questions and answers. Then they made affidavits which the witness says are condensations of the depositions. Then they destroyed the original affidavits made by Mr. Musica.

Senator KING. My question was whether the last affidavits taken corresponded with the depositions, and you stated affirmatively that they did; that you boiled down the depositions and compressed them into the affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. The depositions are here, and subject to examination and comparison with the affidavits to see if there is any failure to do that.

Senator NELSON. Have you got those last affidavits that were made after the depositions?

Mr. BECKER. Possibly; but Senator Reed has, because they were published in the newspapers.

Senator NELSON. I was going to say that if we have those affidavits we can see whether they compare with the depositions.

Senator REED. I think I have the affidavits as printed in the newspapers, and I assume that they are correct.

Now, I want to ask the witness if Mr. Musica did not work a part of his time in Mr. Deuell's office?

Mr. BECKER. When Mr. Musica was working for the district attorney, as a species of camouflage for investigation purposes, with Mr. Swann's consent, as he will tell you, Mr. Musica had a desk in Deuell's office, and for certain reasons which are very interesting—I will explain them if you like—it was supposed he was working for Mr. Deuell, that he was his employee. In fact, in the Cohen case, the attorneys for the defense went right into the trial working under this supposition, and when we proved by the records of the district attorney's office that he was an employee of the district attorney at the time they were simply astonished.

Senator REED. So that this interesting situation appears: That Mr. Musica was an office mate of Mr. Deuell; Mr. Deuell was the attorney for a man who was convicted of murder; Mr. Musica, while he was in the office of Mr. Deuell, was in close conference with Mr. Cardinale, who was the witness who was to put this crime upon Mr. Cohen; Mr. Deuell, in whose office Mr. Musica was, went to the governor of New York and got the case removed into your hands, where you and Mr. Musica, cooperating, succeeded in getting a conviction of Mr. Cohen, whereupon Mr. Deuell's client substantially goes scot free. That is the situation?

Mr. BECKER. Not at all.

Senator REED. Not at all?

Mr. BECKER. It is about 50 per cent right.

Senator REED. All right. Fifty per cent right is pretty good now.

Mr. BECKER. I have never been able to admit one of your long questions more than 50 per cent right.

Senator REED. All right. I think we can pass to something else. Did this man Musica take the affidavit of a man named Howard in these matters, do you know—referring now to what we will call the Hearst matters?

Mr. BECKER. I never heard of Howard that I can recall. If you will refresh my recollection—

Senator REED. Was he a musician? Did you have an affidavit that you never gave to the press and never made any use of?

Mr. BECKER. I am pretty sure that there was not anything taken of Howard, because it recalls nothing to my mind at all.

Senator REED. Did you mean to give the committee the impression when early in your testimony you referred to the unlikelihood of Von Bernstorff giving up 10,000,000 francs in money, that Mr. Hearst had been a party to that arrangement and had agreed to the conducting of what is termed a "defeatist" program or propaganda?

Mr. BECKER. I said that the burden of proof as to that theory had never been sustained.

Senator REED. If it had not been sustained, will you tell us why you threw the innuendo in here?

Mr. BECKER. I did not throw in any innuendo.

Senator REED. Why did you mention it, if it had not been sustained? Why did you drag in a matter here voluntarily, without anybody putting any questions to you, the effect of which was at least attempt to create a suspicion that Mr. Hearst had entered into an agreement that a defeatist campaign was to be carried on in the Paris Journal?

Mr. BECKER. My reasons were these: I always regarded that theory as a very possible one. There were many things that pointed toward t, toward building up what might be called a circumstantial case. My testimony here was not the only testimony, and I was under the impression that it might very well be that before all the testimony was given before this committee, by circumstances—by an aggregation of many circumstances to which I could contribute some—the circumstantial case and the burden of proof would be met.

Senator REED. In other words, you were perfectly willing to throw out an insinuation which you say yourself you had no evidence to sustain?

Mr. BECKER. I have some evidence to sustain it, but I have not enough.

Senator REED. The evidence you gave to sustain it was that the Paris Journal printed an article that you say was very laudatory of Mr. Hearst. That is the only thing you cited, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. There was a great deal more than that.

Senator REED. Is not that the only reason you give here in your testimony?

Mr. BECKER. No; I think not.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Becker, did you not testify that you had detailed all of the testimony of which you were aware that tended to connect Mr. Hearst with this Bolo Pasha deal?

Mr. BECKER. I meant here in America—all the testimony that I knew of that in any way tended to directly connect him here in America.

Senator REED. You just said that you had not given all the testimony, and you brought these matters in, which, as I gathered your idea, would go to make up a portion of a circumstantial case, and that later on in the committee's hearings other testimony, which you had not produced, would be put in to supplement what you had produced and thus build up a case. Is that the idea? Or did I get a wrong impression from your statement?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I want to be sure that you have the correct impression. I do not know what other people know. My opinion was asked originally whether I thought what I had—what I knew about—was sufficient to sustain the burden of proof. My position then was that it did not sustain the burden of proof, but it was some evidence, and the committee decided that it wanted to hear the some evidence. I was reading it over this morning, and I think that is a very fair summary of what occurred when this question came up.

Senator REED. Did the committee ever pass on whether it would hear this evidence, or did you bring it here prepared and read it off? Did they ever pass on that?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; they did.

Senator REED. I would be interested in being cited to that.

Mr. BECKER. I will be glad to show it to you. I was reading it over this morning.

Senator REED. Since you take the ground you do now, I will ask you a few questions about it. Have you the complete article in the Paris Journal?

Mr. BECKER. I think this is a translation, and I think it is not quite complete, but it is substantially complete.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Becker, can you put your finger on the place in the hearings where the committee asked you to open up that line of testimony? If you will have to search, do not bother now.

Mr. BECKER. I haven't it marked. I just recall one phrase. I think it will be remembered that on the question of circumstances of this kind Senator Sterling said that it was his view of the matter that it was something to be put into the mass concerning Hearst and his relations with Bernstorff, etc., which has been brought before the committee.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was that in connection with putting in the conference up there in the woods when Bernstorff was quoted?

Mr. BECKER. It was in connection with our discussion about whether the burden of proof had been met.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was after all this stuff was in, though? was it not?

Mr. BECKER. No; that was before.

Senator REED. I have no recollection of the committee ever inviting this gentleman into this field. He did not need an invitation. The article that you say appeared in the Paris Journal I now want to put in the record. You say it is not exactly complete, as far as you know, but as far as given it is correct. Is that right?

Mr. BECKER. It is a correct translation as far as it goes. It may be that it is complete.

Senator REED. Do you know who made this translation?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not. I have somewhere—or have had—the original copy of Le Journal with the extract. But I do not seem to have it.

Senator REED. I wish very much that you would find it, because I have been hunting for it for some time; and if you have it in your papers I will pause a little bit to see if you can locate it.

Mr. BECKER. No; I did not bring anything of that sort the last time, and I brought this time only what you see in the folder here. So I know I have not got it here in Washington.

Senator REED. I want to read this. [Reading:]

ARTICLE ABOUT HEARST IN "LE JOURNAL" OF MAY 3, 1916.

Never have the sympathies of the Americans been more precious to the Allies than in the present hour, when the policy of the United States is in the balance. And when these sympathies are emanating from a man like Hearst there is a double reason for mentioning the fact.

William Randolph Hearst is figuring in the front rank as a Gotha American. Who would dare to deny the kingdom of publicity to this man, who himself owns eleven great daily newspapers, several of which are regarded as the most important organs in the New and Old worlds; a number of magazines; a news agency, which is distributing news to more than four hundred newspapers; who, in addition, is supplying more than three thousand motion picture theatres with films? This handler of the masses has brought under control all the means by which one can appeal to the crowd.

We would be slighting his personality if we considered in him only a "business man," the man of affairs. Mr. Hearst has done more than perform a colossal transaction. He wanted to help himself with the lever which himself had forged. He was the first, even before Mr. Roosevelt, to play his own politics and to shake off the tyranny of the machine. The fact that he has dared to leave the groove renders Mr. Hearst a personality apart from others and explains to a certain degree the spacious rôle which he has played since the beginning of the European conflict.

An originality and a power—that is Mr. Hearst. No one will be astonished to learn that our opponents have not been the last ones to notice this fact. They have made advances to him at a time when the Allies did not pay sufficient heed to following the evolutions of the official intrigues. Mr. Hearst borne them no grudge for it.

Do you say that is a fair copy of that article?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. That is the article as it actually appeared, not as it was submitted by Bolo.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Becker, do you say that article was supplied by Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Not in that form.

Senator STERLING. He submitted an article, did he, for the Paris Journal?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I have here the whole thing. I have here a copy from Le Journal of October 5, 1917, which contains the following: "Letter addressed by Charles Humbert to Bolo, dated Paris, the 11th of September, 1917."

Senator REED. Does that contain the complete Hearst article?

Mr. BECKER. No. It contains—it discloses the situation to which the Senator referred.

Senator REED. I want first, if the Senator will pardon me——

Senator STERLING. Certainly.

Senator REED. To get the question settled whether this is a complete record or not. I had some newspaper clippings that had it in, and I do not seem to be able to lay my hands on them.

Mr. BECKER. Would it not be expedient, while we are at it, if I were to translate this now and read it?

Senator NELSON. I would like to hear it, for one.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead.

Senator NELSON. While Senator Reed is hunting for his papers you may go on and read it.

Senator REED. Is he going to read it in French?

Mr. BECKER. In English. I will have to translate it. [Translating:]

There is one point concerning which I want, however, to draw all your attention; that is the article on Hearst, concerning which I had the loyalty, perhaps excessive, of writing that it had been published by my responsibility and in agreement with me. If I had held myself to a more scrupulous exactitude I should have said, in effect, that that article was provoked by you upon your return from America, and first drafted by you in an unacceptable form which could have engaged the Paris journal upon a most dangerous road.

Senator STERLING. That is Humbert to Bolo?

Mr. BECKER. That is Humbert to Bolo. [Continuing translating]:

I should have added that against my resistance——

Senator REED. Now we are going to have read into this case against an American citizen a letter written by a man in France to another, under the pretext that we are getting a translation of this letter.

Senator NELSON. Oh, no; this is another item. We are confined to the evidence you are after. We have a right to get more evidence from this witness.

Senator REED. Certainly; but, Senator, you will not be at disagreement with me if you understand——

Senator NELSON. If you prefer to wait until you can get your paper on, let him wait, but I want this evidence.

Senator REED. What I am asking is this: I am calling your attention to it, that he is now reading as against somebody—and the presumption is as against Mr. Hearst—a letter written by Mr. Humbert to Bolo Pasha, probably a year or so after these events. Now, I cannot see how what Mr. Humbert said to Bolo Pasha, long after these events were over, can have any bearing on the matter.

Senator STERLING. I do not understand it as against Mr. Hearst, but I do understand it as an explanation of the article which you have already read into the record from the Paris Journal, and that shows how the article came to be in the form in which it was read and the letter from Humbert to Bolo explains that.

Senator REED. Yes; but it is an unsworn statement; it is hearsay evidence; it may be correct and it may not be correct, and it does not come within any rule of evidence, and I have seen some faint signs of the aurora dawn of a desire here to have some regard for evidence since I commenced to ask questions. I want to ask you, in this Bolo letter—

Mr. BECKER. Shall I continue with the translation?

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Nelson and Senator Sterling both have asked for it.

Senator NELSON. If Senator Reed wants that first, let him go on.

Senator REED. I want to ask you if you were not inquired of in the earlier part of your examination, with regard to this article in the New York Tribune, which purports to have a copy of the Hearst letter?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. And you said that was a correct copy? You nod your head. Do you mean to say "Yes"?

Mr. BECKER. Mine is substantially the same. There are one or two corrections for the sake of a more accurate translation.

Senator REED. There is a clause in here I did not omit to read, but I did not catch it, so I am ready to proceed on the basis that this is a correct article, subject to correction. Now, if Senator Nelson—

Senator NELSON. I wanted to hear this because this is a sort of key to that; that is all.

Mr. BECKER. Shall I begin over again?

Senator NELSON. Yes; you might begin over again, so as to get the thread of it.

Senator KING. This purports to be a letter from Humbert to Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. Appearing in a French newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. In the same paper.

Senator WOLCOTT. And dated when?

Mr. BECKER. The 11th of September, 1917.

Senator WOLCOTT. And at that time had Bolo Pasha been arrested—on the 11th of September?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. How long prior, do you know?

Mr. BECKER. About a month.

Senator WOLCOTT. At that time was there any agitation in France or any discussion in France imputing complicity with Bolo Pasha to this Senator Humbert?

Mr. BECKER. Very, very great.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is this letter written to Bolo Pasha what you might call a piece of evidence that Humbert was putting before the public in an attempt to acquit him of any complicity with Bolo?

Mr. BECKER. Possibly.

Senator WOLCOTT. With the idea that whatever he said was to be thought of in that light?

Mr. BECKER. I think it is in the nature of an admission against interest, as a matter of fact. He has deeply regretted that he ever wrote it.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the date?

Mr. BECKER. September 11, 1917.

Senator REED. It might be an admission against interest so far as Mr. Humbert is concerned, but the point I am making to the committee—I am not going to discuss it, I think it makes but mighty little difference—is, whether the committee is going to admit evidence to sustain a charge against an American newspaper man that some Frenchman who was under suspicion of treason wrote to another Frenchman and printed in the newspaper.

Senator NELSON. It is not unfriendly, as I understand it. It simply gives the genesis of this letter, that is all, which has been read into this record.

Senator REED. The point I make, Senator, is this: We have not got any witness on the stand. You have got a newspaper article being read into this record.

Senator NELSON. That is all you put in?

Senator REED. I am putting in the articles this man gave us.

Senator NELSON. They have not been verified as they do things in court.

Senator REED. It was brought here by this witness. And if you will pardon me, Senator, the reason for using the article was this. This witness stated that the sole indication there was of a change from a position of loyalty to the French Government to one of disloyalty on the part of Le Journal was that it printed this article about Hearst; that that was the thing that was suspicious; and the question I am coming to test now is whether as a matter of fact that was suspicious.

Senator NELSON. I would like to hear this article read.

Senator REED. Certainly.

Mr. BECKER (reading):

There is one point as to which I want, however, to draw particularly your attention, that is the article on Hearst, concerning which I had the loyalty, perhaps excessive, of writing, that had been published by my responsibility and in agreement with me. If I had held myself to a more scrupulous exactitude I should have said, in effect, that this article was provoked by you upon your return from America, and first drafted by you in an unacceptable form, which would have engaged Le Journal upon a most dangerous road.

I should have added that against my resistance you had during many weeks obstinately solicited its insertion, with an insistence of almost daily visits, of telephone calls, and of letters, in which you invoked successively all sorts of pretexts, including among them that of its being agreeable to President Monier, and that up to the day when, not without having reduced your apology for Hearst to inoffensive proportions I finished by believing upon your word, in the sincerity of his conversion in favor of France and her allies.

Events soon proceeded to teach me that, intentionally or not, you had deceived me, and when a second time you came again to the charge, for the purpose of associating me with this same Hearst in telegraphic combinations of a suspicious character, I categorically refused in a letter of which you have like me no doubt preserved the trace. I do not draw, however, from these documents and from these facts any deduction against you. That is not my rôle. I simply recall to you their existence, and I hope that after reflection you will not speak any more of an address for the prosecution and will no longer treat as accuser the man who, taking the responsibility for his imprudent conduct, has in spite of all the anguish which afflicts him, the delicacy of keeping silent.

Truly,

CHARLES HUMBERT

Senator REED. It was the paper that Mr. Bolo Pasha had gotten the money from Bernstorff (and had used it) to help float.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, I want to ask you if on your previous testimony you were not asked these questions and did not give the answers:

Senator REED. Le Journal was a patriotic, virile French newspaper at that time, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes: unquestionably. Of course, it has been testified by Bernstorff that it was represented to Bernstorff by him as being for Bolo that the intent was to start a defeatist propaganda in the Paris Journal, and that it was on that representation that the paper was purchased by the Germans.

I may say that about all that was done, so far as appears from an examination of the files of that paper, was to get in this fulsome account of Bolo which appeared on the 6th of May, and certain discussions with reference to a possible combination of news service between the Paris Journal and the Hearst papers, or the International News Service in this country.

Do you remember that testimony?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. This article which you speak of as indicative of a change, as an act of disloyalty to the French Government, as indicating that the Paris Journal was carrying out its corrupt agreement, the correct agreement of Bolo Pasha with von Bernstorff is the only thing that you have been able to cite to show that the paper was carrying out that agreement?

Mr. BECKER. I have a little something more now.

Senator REED. Well, that is all you did cite the other day?

Mr. BECKER. That is all that came to my mind at that moment.

Senator REED. This one mention of Hearst. Now, I want to ask you just a few questions about it. But first I want to read these other questions by Senator King and the answers which you gave thereto:

Senator KING. Was the policy of Le Journal changed?

Mr. BECKER. Only to the extent of publishing a laudatory article on William R. Hearst.

Senator KING. Was the policy changed?

Mr. BECKER. That is the only sign of any influence on Le Journal.

Senator KING. Was the policy toward the war changed?

Mr. BECKER. Not at all. The only sign of any influence being exerted in any way that could possibly be construed as a German influence was the publication on the 6th of May, 1916.

Senator KING. But it is still a French paper?

Mr. BECKER. It remained in other respects, so far as anybody can discover, just the same as before, and just as much given to the protection of Senator Humbert as it ever had been.

Now, you remember those questions and answers, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. What I want to get you to tell us now is how the publication—or before I ask that question I will ask you this: The article was printed on May 6, 1916, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think so.

Senator REED. And Bolo Pasha was not tried until February 5, 1918?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. And during that period of nearly two years the only thing that you have been able to cite is the printing of this one article?

Mr. BECKER. No; I can tell more things now.

Senator REED. You could not do it the other day?

Mr. BECKER. I would not say that, either.

Senator REED. You did say it the other day, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. I just read to you the questions and answers that you gave.

Mr. BECKER. That was the point, that that was the only sign in the Journal—to be found visible in the Paris Journal.

Senator REED. That is what I am talking about, is the Paris Journal, and I am not talking about anything else.

Mr. BECKER. That is the only thing that anybody reading the Paris Journal would have discovered.

Senator REED. Now, I want to ask you, if this statement was believed by the French people that Mr. Hearst was a great newspaper man in America, and that his sympathies were with the French people, if that would be calculated to break the morale of the French people if they believed it?

Mr. BECKER. You are asking me my belief, are you?

Senator REED. No.

Mr. BECKER. Or are you asking me my opinion?

Senator REED. I am asking you if you pretend to say, if the French people read the statement in their paper that a man represented as a great American newspaper man was their friend, that that fact standing alone could break the morale of the French people?

Mr. BECKER. Will you take the risk of letting me explain?

Senator REED. No; I will take the risk of just having you tell me how a statement to that effect would break the morale of the French people.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, just that one article, of course that is nothing. But I can explain the theory, and I do not think you will let me do it.

Senator REED. I do not care anything about your theories.

Mr. BECKER. I can show you the facts and show what led up to it, and show what I believe it was intended for.

Senator REED. If the Germans saw that article and if the Germans believed it, would it increase the morale of the German people?

Mr. BECKER (continuing). The ultimate result intended to be brought about and in which that was the first step.

Senator REED. You are swearing to something that is intended, that you do not know anything about.

Mr. BECKER. I know a good deal, sir.

Senator REED. I do not think so. Yes; I think you know a good deal about a good many things.

In the two years that passed, the Paris Journal, according to your statement here, I do not know whether made under oath or made on honor, because I do not know whether you are under oath or not, but made here——

Mr. BECKER. It would not make any difference to me. As a matter of fact I am.

Senator REED (continuing). Was to the effect that this article is the only thing that indicated that that paper had become disloyal.

Mr. BECKER. The only thing appearing in the paper?

Senator REED. Probably; yes.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think the paper ever did become disloyal. The French theory in the trial of Humbert probably will be that Mr. Humbert got "cold feet."

Senator REED. Probably; yes. Mr. Humbert got "cold feet"; and the theory might be that a good many other things were so that you and I need not speculate about, because it would be too wild a dream.

Senator KING. Mr. Becker, repeating somewhat the question that I propounded when you were on the stand before, there has been nothing in Le Journal, that has come to your attention during the course of the war, that would indicate that Le Journal was not loyal to the cause of France and the cause of the allies?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator KING. There is not a single line or editorial or local page to which your attention has been called or of which you have any information, that would indicate that that paper deviated in any degree from the high path of duty and loyalty to France?

Mr. BECKER. There is no question, as was said before, that the plot, if there was a plot, was not carried out. For some reason or other it failed.

Senator KING. I was not asking you about a plot. I am asking you if you will kindly answer that question, whether there is anything in that newspaper to indicate that it ever departed from its high path of duty and loyalty to France?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I think there is.

Senator KING. In any publication?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. Will you point to a sentence in any of the publications that indicate that?

Mr. BECKER. You see, Senator, you put the matter so broadly. I believe the publication of those articles about Hearst had a purpose. It was connected with an absolute purpose. But as to anything that on its face was disloyal, there never was anything.

Senator KING. I am interested in this not for Mr. Hearst or any American, but we are now, in part, trying a French newspaper. I am interested—at least I ought to be, and all of us ought to be—seeing that no French newspaper, having no one here to represent it, shall have any unjust suspicion raised against it. Now, I want to ask you on your oath here whether you charge that that newspaper in any of its publications was not true to the interests of France?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I do.

Senator KING. What publication; what article?

Mr. BECKER. Now, please let us understand about this. Le Journal—that is to say, Senator Humbert—was under indictment in French court, and if you will pardon me for saying so, Senator, with the utmost sincerity, for this hearing to assume to pass in any way upon or to try the loyalty of Senator Humbert—that is to say, of Le Journal—would be in derogation of the exclusive jurisdiction of the French court.

Senator KING. I am not trying it; you are trying it. You have impugned, as I understand your testimony, the loyalty of Le Journal to the cause of France.

Mr. BECKER. The loyalty of Senator Humbert.

Senator KING. I am speaking of the newspaper, and I have asked you if there is anything in the newspaper, to which your attention has been called, to indicate that it was disloyal to France?

Mr. BECKER. The publication of the laudatory article on Hearst, for reasons that I can explain——

Senator KING. Is that the only thing?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. But, aside from that, there is not a thing in the newspaper that indicates that it is disloyal to France?

Mr. BECKER. I have not examined the files.

Senator KING. I am asking you if you have had any information of it?

Mr. BECKER. I have been told by those who have examined the files that there is nothing you could put your finger on.

Senator KING. And you have seen that?

Mr. BECKER. I have only seen three or four copies of it; the only ones that I wanted.

Senator REED. You stated as follows in your examination:

It seemed so unlikely that Bernstorff would recommend the giving of ten millions of money, as they were given, to a man that he had never met and whose name, according to Pavenstedt, he did not even know. It seemed as if there must have been a closer connection in some way between Bolo and Bernstorff in this country; it did not seem likely it was through Pavenstedt. The question was when, where, and how it was; and it was in an endeavor to throw some light upon that problem that this investigation was made and these depositions were taken.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask you if the theory was evolved that Mr. Hearst was the man?

Mr. BECKER. It was considered a probable theory. I will say frankly I do not regard it as proved by any means.

Senator WOLCOTT. I was about to say, myself, that from what you have produced here before the committee it does not look as though it were at all possible, because there was no time fixed when Mr. Hearst and Bolo and Bernstorff were seeing each other from time to time. There was a string of visits, apparently, if these depositions and affidavits are true. Yet the fact is that within some four or five days after the arrival of Bolo, Bernstorff had O. K.'d the scheme and was wiring for the money, so it did not require all this long series of visits, and they could not have had anything to do with that very rapid action of Count von Bernstorff.

Senator NELSON. It might have related to the way they were to handle the funds around about in this country.

Mr. BECKER. It might have related to the form that the Defeatist propaganda was to take in France, but that is purely speculation, and I want to be very careful to say that I do not regard the case as proved; but these are facts which I think it is proper for the committee to understand in relation to the connection in America.

Did you want the committee to understand that there was any evidence whatsoever that Mr. Hearst had ever said anything to Count von Bernstorff about this money at all; that you were in possession of any evidence that he had ever talked to him about the money?

Mr. BECKER. None. At best, assuming even that the burden of proof was sustained, the persons were not produced as witnesses.

Senator REED. Of course, you do not think, do you, that Mr. Bernstorff and Bolo Pasha wanted Mr. Hearst to advise Bolo as to how he could carry on a Defeatist propaganda in France?

Mr. BECKER. That was a very important element to consider.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Very important.

Senator REED. You think that this gentleman living over in France, this great French politician and soldier of fortune, as you described him, would come over to this country to find out from an American how to carry on a defeatist program in his own country?

Mr. BECKER. The question was how to get the matter over there. I fancy.

Senator REED. Get what matter over there?

Mr. BECKER. The matter that was to be published.

Senator REED. Were not the wires open between here and France?

Mr. BECKER. But they were not open between Berlin and France.

Senator REED. No; they were not open, of course, between Berlin and France.

Mr. BECKER. But they might be, by way of New York.

Senator REED. Oh, they might be? Is there any evidence, now, while you are throwing out these insinuations so glibly, that they were, through Mr. Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. William Bayard Hale went to Berlin. One of his purposes was to try and arrive at a secret method of communication between the Hearst papers and Berlin.

Senator REED. Do you swear that is true?

Mr. BECKER. I think it has been sworn to here.

Senator REED. I am asking you if you swear to it.

Mr. BECKER. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Senator REED. Well, then, do not assert it.

Mr. BECKER. I will assert it, because I believe it to be true.

Senator REED. You do not know whether it is true or not?

Mr. BECKER. It was sworn to before me by a witness that I believe to be credible.

Senator REED. You are here on your oath, and you have just said you do not know whether it is true or not, and then you say you swore to it.

Mr. BECKER. The first thing that I said when I was sworn as a witness here in this investigation was that there was probably not a single thing that I was going to say that I had personal knowledge of. Now, with that warning, you want to put me in the position that I would have to be responsible for the truth of my rehearsal of what other people have sworn to. I am very sorry I was not interrupted at that time.

Senator REED. If you did not come here for the purpose of telling anything you knew yourself, you ought not to have come at all.

Mr. BECKER. There ought never to have been an investigation of that is true.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker was asked to come here, Senator.

Senator REED. Was he asked by this committee to come here and give his opinion?

Senator OVERMAN. No; he was asked to come here and state facts.

Senator WOLCOTT. The committee was perfectly willing to assume the responsibility of it, and has assumed it, to have Mr. Becker detail the substance of evidence he has gathered from witnesses. Of course nobody in this country had direct knowledge of these things.

I want to ask you, now, just a few questions about Mr. Fredriksen. Would you know a picture of Fredriksen if you saw it?

Mr. BECKER. I might; I am not sure whether I could distinguish one from the other. I might possibly. I will try.

Senator REED. Very well. Fredriksen and Harry Block are the two witnesses who undertake to say that von Bernstorff and Bolo Pasha visited Mr. Hearst's house together. I say that for the information of the committee.

Did you want the committee to believe in the truth of these statements that—do you mean to give the committee to understand that you vouch for the truth of those affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. I was asked that question by one of the Senators, and I answered by asking if it was proper to express the opinion, and the ruling was that it was not.

Senator REED. Very well; that is all on that.

Mr. BECKER. So that I did not express it.

Senator REED. You said in your testimony that Bolo Pasha lived at the Plaza Hotel.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is a very large hotel in New York City. You stated that he was well known there; that he associated with some Turks and a number of people whom you rather described as of questionable character.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think he was well known there, at all. I think he kept under cover very largely.

Senator REED. Did you not state that he was well known around the corridors of that hotel?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not think so. I think it would have been a mistake if I had said so. I knew it was almost impossible to find anybody in the hotel who remembered him, except one or two clerks to whom he paid his bill, or something like that.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you almost through, Senator?

Senator REED. I can finish in the morning. It will take me a half hour or more to get through. I do not think that I can get through in that time to-night.

(At 5.10 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 11, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in Room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, and Nelson.
(The following letter was ordered to be inserted in the record, and is here printed in full:)

[David Starr Jordan, Stanford University P. O., California.]

DECEMBER 23RD, 1918.

Hon. LEE SLATER OVERMAN,
Chairman Special Committee Investigation,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg you to make the contents of this letter a matter of record. I note in the public press that Mr. A. B. Bielaski—described as an agent in the service of the Department of Justice—has presented to your Committee a list of names of certain so-called "prominent Americans" found in the effects of one Karl A. Fuehr, said to have been an agent of the German government.

In this connection, Mr. Bielaski is reported as saying that the list he quoted, in which my name appears, "contains the names of practically all those who were actively Pro-German before the entrance of the United States into the war."

For myself, I wish to deny emphatically that I have ever been actively or otherwise "pro-German." For eight years I have openly and vigorously opposed the German emperor and the system he represented. In 1910, I spoke publicly in the German language in Berlin against German militarism, and later in the fall of 1913 in the cities of Southern Germany, from Frankfort to Munich. Among other things I said that the German war-system had "perverted and poisoned all teaching of history, of patriotism and even of religion."

I believe that I am the only outsider who has thus spoken in Germany in open meetings in the German language.

In London in August, 1914, with Sir John McDonell of the British Court drew up an indictment of German violations of International Law, which we sent to President Wilson with the plea that he verify and protest against them as well as against other violations which might arise.

In America I was correctly quoted in December, 1914, as saying: "Prussian militarism is responsible for the whole thing; there can be no permanent peace in Europe until Prussian militarism is wiped out."

That I had no sympathy with the German government my writings clearly show. I would especially call attention to "The Ways of Pangermany" in the Scientific Monthly for January, 1917, and to the affixed pamphlet "The Root of the Evil," and its German version, the latter distributed by our Foreign Information Bureau in German prison camps in England and France.

I never heard of Karl A. Fuehr until his name appeared in the newspapers. I never met Bernstorff, or had any relations with him or with any of the others alleged to have been associated with him.

My name appears on the published list as "David S. Jordan, of Berkeley, California." My address has never been Berkeley and I never of recent years have signed my name in that way.

Respectfully submitted.

DAVID STARR JORDAN,
Chancellor Emeritus Stanford University

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Are you ready to proceed, Senator Reed?

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Senator REED. Yesterday, the last thing, you were asked these questions and gave these answers:

Senator REED. You said in your testimony that Bolo Pasha lived at the Plaza Hotel?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. That is a very large hotel in New York City. You stated that he was well known there; that he associated with some Turks and a number of people whom you rather described as of questionable character.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think he was well known there at all. I think he was under cover very largely.

Senator REED. Did you not state that he was well known around the corridors of that hotel?

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not think so. I think it would have been a mistake if I had said so. I know it was almost impossible to find anybody in the hotel who remembered him, except one or two clerks to whom he paid his bill. Something like that.

I now call your attention to your testimony which appears on page 5100 of the stenographer's transcript [page 2099 of this printed record], which is the testimony to which I referred in my question:

Senator REED. But were there not responsible people in New York City whom he met?

I am giving you this for the context:

Was he not invited out to dinner and places?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think so. All I have been able to trace is a friend's visit to Madame Barientos, and then I have traced his telephone calls from the Plaza, etc., and it does not indicate a very wide social acceptance.

Senator REED. I do not mean that he became a social lion.

Mr. BECKER. He used to stay around in the Plaza Hotel with a group in the bar—a group of Orientals. I do not think it is necessary to name them; they are pretty well-known men from Armenia, and such people; in the rug business and that sort of thing; one art dealer on Fifth Avenue. They would stay around there and have drinks. At least, it has been reported to me to that effect by the waiters.

Senator REED. These people that he was with were strongly anti-Germans—were they not—these Armenians? They hated Austria?

Mr. BECKER. I guess I will not discuss that now, if you will excuse me, because it is a subject that we have been very much interested in. It is under investigation.

Now, I want to know which one of these statements you stand on.

Mr. BECKER. Both.

Senator REED. Both; all right.

Mr. BECKER. The only difference is that we have got to add a waiter or two to the couple of clerks.

Senator REED. You say here nothing about a couple of clerks, but you say "He used to stay around in the Plaza Hotel with a group in the bar—a group of Orientals. I do not think it necessary to name them; they are pretty well-known men from Armenia." Now you say it is a couple of clerks?

Mr. BECKER. All right; I will add a couple of waiters to make it a little better.

Senator REED. Do you take back the statement that he hung around here with a group of Orientals?

Mr. BECKER. These terrible discrepancies in my testimony are very surprising and take me quite aback, I must say, but I am perfectly willing to stand on both and regard each as amending the other.

Senator REED. Then you want it understood that he was well acquainted around there with a group of Orientals and that these Orientals were under suspicion, and that in addition to that he was known to the waiters of the hotel?

Mr. BECKER. I think not; not at all.

Senator REED. You do not want it that way?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Very well; I can not find out how you believed that he was not going under his right name or that he was secreting his identity.

Mr. BECKER. I would not assert that I do not know, but my impression is we were unable to find his name on the register.

Senator REED. You know he did not secrete his identity in this country; that, as you have already stated, he had a dinner at Sherry's and invited people there; that he communicated under his own name with Mr. Grace; that he communicated under his own name with different parties? You know that, do you not, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. I think he was anxious to meet as many people socially as he possibly could.

Senator REED. Therefore he did not secrete the fact that he was Bolo Pasha, did he?

Mr. BECKER. Not in the least, outside of the hotel, but I think in the hotel he kept very quiet and was a very inconspicuous figure there.

Senator REED. Whether he was conspicuous or not, he was around with these Turks and these Armenians?

Mr. BECKER. If we can trust the waiters' identification of his photograph.

Senator REED. That is all you know about it, is it not, what you heard from other people?

Mr. BECKER. I was not there; I did not see him myself.

Senator REED. You swore, however, to these facts which I have just read, and you gave them as your best understanding of the facts, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You nod your head. You mean to say "yes"?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I have not sworn to any facts. I am going to have that understood fully.

Senator REED. Of course, we can admit that.

Mr. BECKER. With the exception of things that have relation to my personal knowledge, which is entirely confined in the cross-examination, I have not sworn to a single fact from the start to the finish of my testimony. What I have sworn to has been information which I regarded to be trustworthy, and it is all conditioned on the proposition that I have been given correct information.

Senator REED. But when you are swearing about your information you ought to be able to make your testimony of one day agree with your testimony of another day about the same information, ought you not?

Mr. BECKER. After three or four days of cross-examination I should expect to find a great many little slips.

Senator REED. This is not a little slip; it is an important matter. Now, I want to know whether you take the position on your information or on your knowledge of facts, either one, that Bolo Pasha was secreting himself around this hotel, or whether he went around like other people and was known as Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. Neither one nor the other. He was inconspicuous.

Senator REED. He was not known as Bolo Pasha nor did he secret himself?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Was he known around the hotel as Bolo Pasha at all?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think he was known as anybody around the hotel.

Senator REED. You do not think he had any name there?

Mr. BECKER. Not among the employees.

Senator REED. These Turks and Armenians did not know him?

Mr. BECKER. I have not the slightest doubt they knew who he was. They were just strangers that would drop in to get a friendly drink in the hotel.

Senator REED. Did you not say they were a group that was under suspicion and under investigation at this time?

Mr. BECKER. No; nothing like that, at all.

Senator REED. You did not?

Senator KING. You said that one of them was an art dealer on Fifth Avenue.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; but I have not stated they were under suspicion at all.

Senator REED. You have not? Let us see.

Mr. BECKER. I said we were interested in them and had them under investigation.

Senator REED. Do you investigate a thing you have not any suspicion about?

Mr. BECKER. Sometimes we do not suspect the persons we investigate, but we suspect somebody that is back of them, and under other circumstances.

Senator REED. You testified to this, did you not:

Mr. BECKER. He used to stay around in the Plaza Hotel with a group in the bar—a group of Orientals. I do not think it is necessary to name them; they are pretty well-known men from Armenia, and such people; in the rug business and that sort of thing; one art dealer on Fifth Avenue. They would hang around there and have drinks. At least, it has been reported to me to that effect by the waiters.

Senator REED. These people that he was with were strongly anti-Germans, were they not—these Armenians? They hated Austria?

Mr. BECKER. I guess I will not discuss that now, if you will excuse me, because it is a subject that we have been very much interested in. It is under investigation.

Mr. BECKER. You see, there is some evidence that Bolo came in contact with the Turkish consul general.

Senator REED (reading):

Senator REED. The veil of mystery will be drawn there. All right. Now we want merely to take up a few dates.

In addition to that you said he had been out with some girls and a captain.

Mr. BECKER. The name there should have been Verdier.

Senator REED (continuing). Of the French Army. Did he go under an assumed name when he was with this captain, or did the captain know who he was?

Mr. BECKER. The captain was introduced to him by Madame——

Senator REED. Barrientos?

Mr. BECKER. No. This was not a very reputable crowd. He was introduced by one of the women at a hat shop or modiste shop.

Senator REED. I just want to know if that man knew that he was Bolo Pasha.

Mr. BECKER. I think probably he did; I do not know. It is a fair inference that he did, from the facts.

Senator REED. The Plaza Hotel, I guess you will admit, is a large hotel, where there are hundreds of people going in and about all the time?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. Now, was Count von Bernstorff pretty well known around the hotel where he stopped?

Mr. BECKER. The Ritz-Carlton. I guess everybody knew him.

Senator REED. And they knew he was the German ambassador?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. The Secret Service was pretty active in those times, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think there was none that was active around the Plaza Hotel or the Ritz-Carlton. I have never seen the slightest sign of there having been anything of that sort.

Senator REED. I am not asking if it was active around any particular spot. I am asking if the Secret Service of the United States Government was pretty active during this period.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, it was very inactive.

Senator REED. How about the English secret service?

Mr. BECKER. There has been more nonsense stated about what the British secret service was supposed to be doing than anything else. As a matter of fact, they had only two or three men here in the country at the time. They were very inactive.

Senator REED. The English were asleep, and the French also were asleep, were they?

Mr. BECKER. They had not anybody.

Senator REED. They had not anybody at all?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. No English agents, secret or otherwise, over here; no French agents, and our own Secret Service was absolutely asleep?

Mr. BECKER. No; inactive.

Senator REED. Inactive?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Were all the police force of New York City also asleep or inactive?

Mr. BECKER. They were doing absolutely nothing as regards the question of German espionage, or anything of that sort.

Senator REED. I suppose you mean to have us understand, then, Mr. Becker, that it was perfectly natural for this man who had come over to betray his country, and who was known around the hotel as Bolo Pasha——

Mr. BECKER. No; I do not think he was.

Senator REED. You have just told us he was.

Mr. BECKER. I deny it.

Senator REED. You have told us he was known to these Turks—these Armenians, and you have said he was known on Fifth Avenue to a man there, and you said he tried to break into society. You want us to understand that this man came over here to betray his country in the city of New York, and repeatedly met the German ambassador, who was a marked man and known by everybody——

Mr. BECKER. You have got a lot of things in there that are not true at all. That is an argumentative question, and most of the things you assume are not true at all.

Senator REED. It is true that Bernstorff was well known, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think that there was not probably more than one person attached to the staff of the Plaza Hotel that knew him.

Senator REED. Was he well known around the Ritz?

Mr. BECKER. Undoubtedly, he was.

Senator REED. What right have you got to say that not more than one person around the Plaza Hotel knew Count von Bernstorff?

Mr. BECKER. It was not, what we call out in Missouri, his "hang-out." His "hang-out" was the Ritz-Carlton.

Senator REED. You just assume that, and do not hesitate to say that there was not one person that knew him?

Mr. BECKER. I am trying to match argument with argument. That is all.

Senator REED. You are trying to match argument with something that you do not know anything about.

Mr. BECKER. That is where you have the advantage over me. You can say anything you please, and I can not.

Senator REED. I do not think I have much more advantage than you have been taking.

Mr. BECKER. Possibly not.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed, gentlemen.

Senator REED. You want the committee to understand that this Frenchman came over here with the purpose of betraying his country, of selling it to Count von Bernstorff, and that after the deal was all made he then went about the streets of New York with Bernstorff?

Mr. BECKER. I never said any such thing.

Senator REED. Why, have you not put in, in the affidavits that he rode around with von Bernstorff?

Mr. BECKER. In a taxicab. You have got him walking around the streets with him.

Senator REED. I said he went about; I did not say "walked about." That they went to Mr. Hearst's house, which is in a large apartment building, where people could see them together; you want that believed, do you?

Mr. BECKER. Now, just think of this——

Senator REED. Just answer the question.

Mr. BECKER. I am going to say something a little different.

Senator REED. Just answer my question.

Mr. BECKER. I am not going to answer it directly; I will answer it indirectly. It is only one degree stranger——

Senator REED. I want that question answered. I am entitled to an answer to this question.

Senator KING. I think you should answer the question first, and then you can make such explanation as you want to.

Mr. BECKER. I will answer it "no"; and this is the explanation. It is only one degree more strange than the association of Bolo with Pavenstedt. Pavenstedt was a man who had in his own office Boy-Ed and von Papen as office associates. He was a man whose connection with the German propaganda was known to many circles. There was Mr. Pavenstedt sitting down to the board at Sherry's with Bolo Pasha, a Frenchman and a German together, and Mr. Hearst sitting there with them, and a lot of other good Americans, and nobody suspecting anything. Nothing among these things seems incredible until you consider the fact that America was neutral at the time, and we simply were very, very easy and unsuspecting in this country.

Senator REED. That applies to everybody in the world but Hearst. If he was there he was a wicked scoundrel and a betrayer of his country, of course. But everybody else was free and easy, as you say.

Mr. BECKER. That is a nice little speech, and I would like to reply to it. May I reply, Mr. Chairman? The only question about Hearst is not founded on the dinner, because the way that people looked at things at that time in this country was such that they did not apparently tumble to what it meant seeing Bolo and Pavenstedt fraternizing together. But I will concede there is a vast difference, after all, between Pavenstedt and Bolo and Bernstorff and Bolo together. I will concede, when anybody saw Bernstorff and Bolo together and knew who they were and knew that one of them was not a Turk, as he appeared to be, but was a Frenchman, and knew that the other was the German ambassador, he would be a marvelously unsuspecting man——

Senator REED. You want it understood that this man Bolo Pasha, who came here to betray his country, did the very thing which you say would have aroused the suspicions of any man; he began to go about with and meet von Bernstorff?

Mr. BECKER. If he had done it openly, in a way that would have been discovered by anybody, he would have been putting his neck in the noose.

Senator REED. You have testified here that they met on a number of occasions; they rode in automobiles on a number of occasions.

Mr. BECKER. Two occasions. There are two shown.

Senator REED. Well, let us see—and then went to Mr. Hearst's house on a number of occasions?

Mr. BECKER. Together, twice.

Senator REED. Together, twice; and went there the same day on a number of occasions?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Do you know whether Mr. Hearst's house might almost be called an open house; that is to say, that a great deal of business is transacted there—that there are a large number of people coming and going through that house nearly every hour of the day?

Mr. BECKER. I really think that is not so, Senator Reed, from what I know.

Senator REED. Do you say it is not so?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I really think so. I am only giving you my opinion. I believe that is not so. I believe it is a private apartment and that the persons who are going back and forth there are very few. Mr. Hearst, I know, keeps himself there in considerable session, because it came out in court there were days that a process server, while he was in New York, spent six weeks in trying to serve him with a process, and finally had to serve it by publication.

Senator REED. Did they have any harder time serving it than they had serving it on your man Musica, when they had to break out a window to get him?

Mr. BECKER. What are you referring to? I know nothing of any such event.

Senator REED. I will see if I can not refresh your recollection a little. I am asking you this question, and I just want you to tell the committee if you know anything about it, and if you do not know anything about it, say so: Whether it is not a fact that there are a great many people who visit Mr. Hearst's apartment at all the ordinary hours of the day when people visit, in the afternoon and at night, up to 10 or 11 o'clock, and if in a sense it might not almost be said that he keeps open house?

Mr. BECKER. If the information we have from these witnesses is trustworthy, that is not true, and the only person who ever had anything like that sort of a free privilege, of getting there and getting there unannounced, was von Bernstorff.

Senator REED. That is your statement. Do you swear that he was the only man that could go up that elevator unannounced, or are you swearing to that as something in your information?

Mr. BECKER. The information that was given us by this committee was to the effect that Bernstorff was the only one.

Senator REED. By these discharged bellboys or one of your convicts. Now, what other convicts did you get any information from? Did you get any information except what you got through Musica--any of it?

Mr. BECKER. I have stated a good deal of the information I received was obtained by his investigations, which were very effective.

Senator REED. Well, let us see. You tried to tell us yesterday something about fixing some dates, and that you had some affidavits that were made, that Mr. Musica wrote them down, and you wanted to fix a date, and that the date was not right in these affidavits.

Mr. BECKER. Was not right in one affidavit. It did not agree with the others, and that raised the question.

Senator REED. The date you were trying to fix was the date of visit to Mr. Hearst's apartment?

Mr. BECKER. No; the date of the time the Mason & Seaman Taxicab Co. went out of business.

Senator REED. The date the Seaman Taxicab Co. went out of business was utterly immaterial except as it helped to fix another date, and that other date was the time of the alleged visit of Bernstorff to Mr. Hearst's apartment. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And you say that you found in these affidavits that were originally taken, that one of your witnesses fixed the date of Seaman's failure in the month of August?

Mr. BECKER. That is as I recall it, but it may not be correct.

Senator REED. And you learned the fact was that it was in the month of April, and accordingly you changed the affidavits to conform to the fact as ascertained?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Or you changed the testimony?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is not right. I did not change any testimony. I took the gentleman's deposition, and after his memory had been refreshed and checked up we got it right.

Senator REED. Now, I want to see if you do not think you will have to recheck it again. I put in the record the certified copy from the United States District Court, in the case of the Michelin Tire Co., complainant, against the Mason & Seaman Transportation Co., defendant.

Mr. BECKER. Now, what is the date given there? The company went out of business twice. That is the explanation of that.

Senator REED. This is the first one, and this is the one you were fixing the date by, which shows that the order appointing the receivers was filed March 31, 1916.

(A printed copy of the order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, appointing receivers for the Mason-Seaman Transportation Co., referred to, was here filed with the committee by Senator Reed.)

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Neither August nor April.

Mr. BECKER. Now wait a minute, please. Do not try and imagine for a second that it is possible, when I am present, to get away with anything like that.

Senator REED. Well, I know, but with a man of your shrewdness and ability——

Mr. BECKER. That is so ridiculous I am going to insist upon the opportunity to point out what the thing was, right now. That was the 31st day of March. Now, Mr. Fredriksen's testimony is that he left them on the 1st day of April.

Senator REED. Fredriksen says in his testimony that he left them on the 1st day of April.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Let us see.

Mr. BECKER. He seems to have been 24 hours wrong. It is a serious matter.

Senator REED. You said some time in April, in your testimony.

Mr. BECKER. The deposition speaks for itself.

Senator REED. But you did not introduce the deposition.

Mr. BECKER. I put in these depositions, and you have had them in your possession, Senator, and have examined from them.

Senator REED. Very well; we will not quarrel about that. Let us see what Fredriksen does say, that part where it goes to fixing this date.

Mr. BECKER. "April, 1916. The 1st of April, I think it was." That is his answer.

Senator REED. I am talking about the affidavit.

Mr. BECKER. I am talking about the deposition, which I hand you [handing paper to Senator Reed].

Senator REED. I have the affidavit, and it is the affidavit you revised and put forward. I will be glad to have these depositions. This is the first time I have had them.

Mr. BECKER. I beg to challenge the Senator's statement on that. He cross-examined me from that deposition.

Senator REED. Well, do not let us quarrel about that.

Mr. BECKER. He has been trying to make it appear that I was withholding those depositions, which is absolutely not the case.

Senator REED. I am reading from the affidavit, now:

On one occasion, which I place, for reasons hereafter stated, as in cold weather, which, as I remember, was some time during 1916, before the Mason & Seaman went into bankruptcy, I drove Count Von Bernstorff from the Carlton Hotel to the Plaza Hotel. He there picked up a stranger,

And so forth.

Now, that is the only statement fixing the date of the affidavit. But you have testified that these affidavits are a correct condensation of the depositions.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And that is just as near as this gentleman can get that it was sometime in cold weather, "which," he says, "I remember was sometime during 1916, before the Mason & Seaman went into bankruptcy."

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Now, the bankruptcy occurred on the 31st day of March.

Mr. BECKER. I think the receiver took possession on the 1st day of April.

Senator REED. Oh, I do not care about that one day. I have not been haggling about that.

Mr. BECKER. You seemed to care a good deal about it a few minutes ago.

Senator REED. No; I did not. I understood your statement to have been that it was sometime in April, and I was trying to fix the accurate date.

Now, let us go to the next witness and see how accurate he is. After you had talked this all over and after you had revised the testimony—I am talking about Harry Block—he said:

I can not recall the date when this happened, except that I remember it happened in cold weather, and that it was in the year 1916, prior to the time when the Mason & Seaman Co. went into bankruptcy on the first occasion. I can not state definitely whether it was in the cold weather at the beginning of 1916 or in the cold weather at the end of 1916.

So that this gentleman could not come within 12 months.

Mr. BECKER. Except that he remembered it was shortly before the bankruptcy, and when that was he did not distinctly recall.

Senator REED. And he could not remember the bankruptcy within 12 months.

Mr. BECKER. He could not remember it at all. He was not sure whether it was one year before or two.

Senator REED. He is quite a reliable witness to fix facts by.

Mr. BECKER. And a pretty honest one, I should say; a man who is trying pretty hard to tell the truth.

Senator REED. Harry Block?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; Harry Block.

Senator REED. Did you ever see that man [handing witness photograph]?

Mr. BECKER (after examination). Well, I have not any recollection of him whatever. I do not know. I do not think I have. Still, I can not swear to it.

Senator REED. Did you ever see this man [handing witness another photograph]?

Mr. BECKER. No; I am almost sure I never did. I may have. I can say that the second one I am quite positive does not resemble any of those witnesses.

Senator REED. You can not say that about the first one?

Mr. BECKER. The first one I am not so sure about. It might possibly be one of them. There was a smooth-faced fellow who looked like a Hebrew, as I think he does [indicating].

Senator REED. Which one of the witnesses does he most resemble, in your mind?

Mr. BECKER. I could not distinguish them now.

Senator REED. Could you not give us a reasonably good guess as to which one of the witnesses you think he looks like?

Mr. BECKER. Let me look over the list. [After examining list.] Berkowitz, I should say; and I think the resemblance is very slight. You see, I saw these people only once, and I have not a very good recollection for faces. I do not want to be put in the position of saying that those are not photographs of some of those men, but I could not help you on that, because I really do not remember.

Senator REED. What does Block look like? Have you got any recollection about Block? He was the Hebrew, was he not?

Mr. BECKER. I think Berkowitz was a Hebrew. I would have said that Block was not.

Senator REED. You saw these witnesses a number of times, did you not?

Mr. BECKER. No; only once.

Senator REED. You were in the room quite a while with them, and took their depositions? That is right, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; a couple of hours.

Senator REED. And you had good light and could see them well?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And yet you can not identify photographs and state whether they are their photographs or not, but you unhesitatingly put into the record as against a citizen of the United States the identification by a hack driver or chauffeur of a photograph of a man that he had not seen for a year or two years before he gave the testimony?

Mr. BECKER. That does not seem to call for any answer.

Senator REED. No. The doctrine of res ipse would apply to that, I think.

Mr. BECKER. I will say this about myself, that my political career has always been interfered with by inability to remember names and faces. I have not that political talent. I have often wished that I had.

Senator REED. I presume undoubtedly your chauffeurs—witnesses—possessed it to a high degree?

Mr. BECKER. They very often do. I have often noticed it, that men of that type and station in life, who pick up customers here and there, have a wonderful ability, to me it seems, to remember the people that they take around.

Senator REED. It is quite a usual thing for a New York chauffeur who drives an unknown man once, to be able to identify his photograph two years afterwards?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; it is quite a usual thing.

Senator REED. You think that would be the ordinary thing for the driver of a taxi?

Mr. BECKER. Besides, I have a notion that anyone who has seen Bolo Pasha would remember him. Look at his photograph.

Senator REED. He had highly developed characteristics?

Mr. BECKER. See what an unusual and distinguished looking person he is.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you his photograph there?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Do you think this talent is peculiar to the drivers, the chauffeurs, of New York, or is it one that is simply denied to gentlemen of your ability?

Mr. BECKER. It very often pertains to the men who make their living out of getting patrons and picking people up, and all that.

Senator OVERMAN. Never mind about that photograph, Mr. Becker, of Bolo Pasha.

Mr. BECKER. I have it here, unless it has slipped out.

Senator REED. I think those photographs are here in this deposition that you gave me. I suppose they are here. I do not know the gentleman. Is that the one [indicating photograph]?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is Bolo in the dock awaiting his trial.

Senator REED. Who is this man [indicating another photograph]?

Mr. BECKER. That is von Bernstorff.

Senator OVERMAN. This was while Bolo was on trial in France?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Who is this [indicating another photograph]?

Mr. BECKER. That is Bolo as he walked along the street.

Senator REED. You think that there is something so peculiar and remarkable about that man that a chauffeur—a New York chauffeur—having seen him once, would be able to sort out his picture two years afterwards, although he could not remember within a year of the time.

Mr. BECKER. I think that he is a good deal stronger on men's faces than he is on dates.

Senator REED. Yes; undoubtedly; particularly if he got—how much did this gentleman get when he got through giving his testimony?

Mr. BECKER. Which one?

Senator REED. Well, we will say, Mr. Block. How much did he get?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that he got $2.25.

Senator REED. The fact is, is it not, that he got forty some dollars?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think that there is the remotest chance that, unless he was in the Army. Was he off in the Army, somewhere? Let us see. There was one man who was brought there from a distance, and we had to pay his railroad fare, and it amounted to quite a little. I will tell you in a minute whether that was Block or not. [After examining papers.] Block was employed in the Brooklyn Navy Yard at the time, and I am positive he did not get but just a very small sum of money, just enough to pay for his meals, or something like that. I would be under the impression that Block did not get more than 50 or 75 cents or something like that; not more than a dollar. I recall the man that came from the navy yard, and he would get his pay, anyhow, whether he was over with us or not. It did not involve a loss of pay, so that he did not get anything but the price of a meal.

Senator REED. Fredriksen was the gentleman whose recollection was stimulated by these affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I stimulated his recollection.

Senator REED. He is the man that got $40, is he?

Mr. BECKER. I stimulated his recollection as to the dates and the things—the date when the bankruptcy occurred.

Senator REED. How much money did Fredriksen get?

Mr. BECKER. Let us see where he came from. He was paid for his loss of time.

Senator REED. How much?

Mr. BECKER. Probably a couple of dollars.

Senator REED. Have you not testified here that he got $40? Who was it that got $40?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I testified as to that as to anybody. I testified that Franco got $30, and I will tell you what I found out about that; when I got home I found out that his bill had been lying around for several months, and he had not been paid, and the amount was $27, and he was paid $27 on the 27th or the 28th of December last, which was after the beginning of your cross-examination.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, did not Fredriksen get $41?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no; I am very sure he did not. I could not see any possibility of that at all. The man that cost the most money was in the second batch, I believe. I will tell you in a minute.

Senator REED. How much did this man who cost the most money cost?

Mr. BECKER. I will tell you in a minute, if you will wait. George Aloysius Butler—wait a minute; maybe I am wrong about that. I think that is right. Yes, that is right; George Aloysius Butler. He was down in Camp Sevier, in South Carolina. I arranged with the Military Intelligence to have him come up, and I paid his carfare from South Carolina to New York. I do not think I paid it the other way, but I may have.

Senator REED. How much did it cost?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember. You can find out what the carfare is coming up in an ordinary coach.

Senator REED. Now, have you not testified that you paid one of these men a sum of money—I think about $30—and that the reason you paid it was that he had a cab?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that was Vittorio Franco.

Senator REED. That is Franco?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; he did not have a cab. He had a motor truck.

Senator REED. He had a motor truck?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. In addition to Franco, who got how much money?

Mr. BECKER. $27.

Senator REED. $27?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and he got that on the 27th of December, I think.

Senator REED. Well, it is not very material when he got it, if he got it.

You paid, or caused to be paid to Fredriksen—I just want to ask you if you will be sure you did not pay him about $41, or cause it to be paid?

Mr. BECKER. I am positive, unless there is some circumstance that has entirely gone out of my mind. If he was brought from a distance and had to come a long way, that would have been done, but I have no recollection of anything of that kind in his case.

Senator REED. Was he brought from a distance?

Mr. BECKER. No. My recollection is that the farthest he came from was over on Long Island.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. Wait a minute, now, until I verify that. He lives at 4703 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn, and I believe he was just paid for his day's time, or something like that.

Senator REED. Did you know anything about the vouchers that were on file with the Governor of New York, or in the capitol at Albany, having been requested to be sent to this committee?

Mr. BECKER. Well, all I know about it is this: I know that the Attorney General called me up three days ago—that would be on Wednesday, I guess; possibly it was Tuesday—and said that the request had been made, and wanted to know what I thought about it.

Senator REED. Where were you then?

Mr. BECKER. In New York. He called me on the long-distance telephone. We agreed that it should be done.

Senator REED. That what should be done?

Mr. BECKER. That they should be sent here.

Senator REED. And you agreed with Attorney General Gregory—

Mr. BECKER. With Attorney General Newton, of New York. I am not talking about Mr. Gregory.

Senator REED. You gave your full consent to their coming here?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes.

Senator REED. Have you copies of them in your office?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Have you any books from which the facts can be obtained?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Do you know how it happens, then, that the governor did not send them?

Mr. BECKER. He did.

Senator REED. Did you have any consultation about the matter further than you have stated?

Mr. BECKER. None whatever.

Senator REED. Did you have any talk with these military gentlemen who sit back here and seem to enjoy this so much, about these papers?

Mr. BECKER. No; none whatever.

Senator REED. Did you have anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the refusal of these papers?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. All right.

Senator REED. Let us have it all.

Mr. BECKER. That the request had been made on the 31st of December, and that Gov. Whitman had then issued an order, directed to him—Mr. Newton—to produce the papers down here, which he said to me, I remember, was embarrassing to him, because the governor went out of office before he came into office.

Senator REED. You mean the governor went out of office before Mr. Newton came into office?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. He took it up with Gov. Smith, and they agreed that the papers should be sent down here; and I said to Mr. Newton, "I do not see any reason why they should not be." I said, "I have gone over them and examined them all, and I do not find anything in them that can not properly be disclosed. Everything seems very reasonable." I remember he joked about it, because somebody had charged 40 cents for a breakfast, which I said was rather an evidence of apparent evil, because the presumption was that any man that would eat a 40-cent breakfast had not had it at all. The result was that we agreed that the papers could properly be sent down here.

I then said to the attorney general that I wanted to call his attention only to the fact that in the papers there were various charges against the Department of Justice, and that Attorney General Gregory had an interest in the matter for that reason. That was all that was said. He did not tell me what he would do.

I then sat down and wrote a letter to Senator Overman concerning the matter, part of which reads as follows:

The request of your committee for the production of all the vouchers showing expenditures of the State Secret Service has been a subject of discussion between the new Attorney General and me. I do not know, definitely, what will be the action by the present administration thereon.

In the long-distance conversation, according to the best of my recollection—

Senator REED. What was the date of this letter that you wrote?

Mr. BECKER. The same day, and within a few minutes after that.

Senator REED. That would be December—

Mr. BECKER. January 7.

Senator REED. January 7?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Within a short time thereafter, if not in this same conversation, I received word in some way—my recollection is that it was in the conversation, but for some reason or other I have a kind of a blank in my mind on that—I had an appointment with Mr. Newton on the arrival of this train—

Senator REED. How did you make that appointment?

Mr. BECKER. I think it was over the telephone in this same conversation. Let me see, now; this was on Tuesday, the 7th, and I believe Mr. Newton told me at that time that on Thursday, the 9th, he would arrive in New York on a train due about a quarter after 9, and would see me then. Let me see; did I come down here yesterday morning, or was I here the day before?

Senator OVERMAN. Yesterday.

Mr. BECKER. Oh! And accordingly I went to the hotel and found him there, and he then disclosed to me that that afternoon before he left Albany the messenger had come back to Albany with the papers and with a letter from Attorney General Gregory. But, so far as I can recall, he did not tell me much about what was in the letter. I did not learn that until I had a chance to talk to Mr. O'Brien. However, my memory may be defective on that point.

Senator REED. You at no time made any resistance to the sending of these papers, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. Do you mean in my conversation with Mr. Newton?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. None whatever.

Senator REED. Or in any letters that you wrote?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Or in any conversation that you had with anybody?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. When did you change from your attitude of refusal to turn over these papers to your attitude of entire friendliness to their being turned over?

Mr. BECKER. I never was entirely friendly to the idea, because I felt that there was a strong public policy against it, and I told Mr. Newton——

Senator REED. Well, you entirely acquiesced in it, then?

Mr. BECKER. I told Mr. Newton that I thought so.

Senator REED. You told Mr. Newton that you thought what?

Mr. BECKER. That there was a public policy against it.

Senator REED. Then you did resist turning over these papers?

Mr. BECKER. But Mr. Newton told me that he—well, to put it flatly, he practically told me that it was an affair that was settled, and inasmuch as there was nothing wrong, I felt the best thing for me to do was to agree, as I did, but not on principle; I agreed as a matter of expediency, and did not agree on principle, and do not.

Senator REED. Then, as a matter of fact, when you stated a little while ago that you talked it over with him and you agreed that the papers should be turned over, what you really meant was that Mr. Newton told you, in substance, that he was going to turn them over anyway, and being unable to prevent it, you acquiesced?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is not quite it, either. It is a little more subtle than that.

Senator REED. It is a little more subtle than that, is it? Well, I wish you would draw the subtle distinction so that an ordinary mind like mine, can get it. I am not very good on subtleties.

Mr. BECKER. All right. I will do my best.

Mr. Newton's idea was, and he expressed the opinion, that it should be done, but he wanted to consult with me about it and see what I thought about it. I told him that I thought there was a public policy against disclosures of that kind. He said: "I have gone over the papers, and there is absolutely nothing in them that is not perfectly all right, and it seems to me that it is more dangerous to decline than it is to comply; that there will be inferences raised on account of it." "Well," I said, "all right." I knew there was no harm in the papers, and I could not see any reason why, as a matter of expediency, they should not be turned over, although I thought that there was a question of policy involved against it. That is about the substance of it.

Senator REED. You then became willing, did you, finally, that the papers should be allowed to come here?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; and so expressed myself.

Senator REED. And you say there was nothing in them that could not properly be disclosed?

Mr. BECKER. I say there was nothing in them that would harm anybody; but I think that the whole thing was something that should not properly be disclosed.

Senator REED. They did contain the names, did they not, of your investigators, and the sums of money paid to these investigators?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. These papers contain those names, do they not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, yes; absolutely every one.

Senator REED. Now, since you say there is nothing improper to be disclosed, please tell us the names of the investigators who were working on the Bolo Pasha-Humbert matter.

Mr. BECKER. I think that I will adopt this course. Of course, I am placed in a very difficult position on account of the attitude of the Department of Justice. These matters that were conducted for the French Government, and that are past, so far as they are completed I can properly disclose. Matters that are now under investigation, including the Humbert case, I can not disclose.

Now, with regard to the Bolo case, the persons who investigated it that I know of were Perley Morse and his force of accountants and investigators, whom I can not name. To a limited extent I investigated it myself.

After the investigation was practically complete on certain phases of the Bolo case, Mr. Musica did some investigation. That, however, was all done after the publication in the newspapers of the facts. I do not think that he had anything to do with the Bolo case until the latter part of October.

Senator KING. Of 1918?

Mr. BECKER. Of 1917. About two or three weeks after the disclosures in the newspapers. In fact, up to that time Mr. Musica had not done any work in connection with this so-called secret-service work. All his work was on the Baff murder cases.

Senator REED. Well, he got the four affidavits, did he not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; in June of the following year.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. That matter is finished, and that is all that I can recall, except that I am under the impression that there is another investigator I had who did some work on it on account of his French connections; a man named Blumenthal.

Senator REED. Blumenthal?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Herman Blumenthal, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no.

Senator REED. What is it, then?

Mr. BECKER. Charles.

Senator REED. Charles Blumenthal?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. He is a brother of one of the French high commissioners. I am not positive that he did any work. I would have to refresh my recollection on that.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Reed, will you let me read into the record some telegraphic communications that I have had with the governor of New York?

The communications in this matter are as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, December 28, 1918.

Senator LEE S. OVERMAN,
Salisbury, N. C.

Please immediately wire Governor Charles S. Whitman to forward to your committee all vouchers and reports by Attorney General Lewis or any of his assistants showing the expenditures of moneys for any purpose whatever in connection with any investigation conducted by the Attorney General relative to Bolo Pasha or Senator Humbert whether pursuant to Chapter 595 of the laws of 1907 or otherwise. I am confident the Governor will comply with your request as chairman of the subcommittee. Please attend to this at once as it is important that action be taken before the Governor goes out of office on December 31st.

JAMES A. REED.

[Telegram.]

SALISBURY, N. C., December 29, 1918.

His Excellency Governor CHARLES S. WHITMAN,
Albany, N. Y.

For use of subcommittee of Judiciary, U. S. Senate, to investigate German propaganda and activity of the Brewers I respectfully request you to forward to committee, Washington, D. C., vouchers and reports by Attorney General Lewis and assistants showing expenses in connection with investigation conducted by the Attorney General relative to Bolo Pasha or Senator Humbert pursuant to Chapter 595, Laws 1907, or otherwise, State of New York.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee

[Telegram.]

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

I have asked the attorney general elect to forward to your committee vouchers as per your telegram received. Will you communicate direct with Hon. Chas. E. Newton, Attorney General, Capitol, Albany.

CHAS. S. WHITMAN.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, January 7, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS W. GREGORY,
Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Overman subcommittee, investigating German propaganda, has requested the production before it of vouchers showing the disbursement of funds appropriated by the State of New York pursuant to Chapter 595 of the laws of 1917.

Mr. John A. Waldron has these papers in charge. In several instances the vouchers show payments by the United States Government in connection with the State of New York. Before producing these vouchers to the subcommittee.

we have requested Mr. Waldron to call upon you and see if you wish to consent to such production. It has occurred to us that perhaps it would be against the policy of your office to have disclosed the names of those men to whom sums of money have been paid in this confidential work.

Please advise Mr. Waldron, in writing, as to whether or not you consent to the production of these vouchers before the subcommittee in question and he will act accordingly.

(Signed) ALFRED E. SMITH,
Governor.

(Signed) CHARLES D. NEWTON,
Attorney General.

JANUARY 8, 1919.

Mr. JOHN A. WALDRON,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have before me the letter of the 7th instant, addressed to me by the Governor and Attorney General of the State of New York, calling attention to the fact that the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, investigating German propaganda, has requested the production before it of vouchers showing the disbursements of funds appropriated by the State of New York pursuant to Chapter 595 of the laws of 1917.

The letter states that you have these papers in charge and calls attention to the fact that some of the vouchers show payments by the United States Government in connection with the State of New York and asks whether I consent to the production of these particular vouchers before the subcommittee on question.

The Attorney General of the State of New York, at my request, investigated several matters connected with German propaganda, and the information obtained will be utilized by the Federal Government in the trial of several men now under indictment and possibly this evidence may be used as the basis for the indictment of other individuals as well.

Under these circumstances, and in accordance with the long established rule of this department, I deem it incompatible with the public interest that the information contained in these vouchers should be made public and I therefore do not consent to their production by you.

Respectfully,

(Signed) T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

Senator REED. If the committee please, I ask, and will make a formal motion, that the Attorney General be requested to waive his objection to the bringing of these papers to the city of Washington, where they can be examined by the committee, confidentially, and those papers which pertain to the business of the Government and which can not be properly disclosed be segregated from the other papers, and that the papers that can be properly used shall then be brought here to this city for the purpose of examining this witness, and for such other purposes as they may be properly employed in.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you prefer for us to segregate, or to let him segregate them? How would it do to just telegraph him to send all the papers consented to by the Attorney General?

Senator REED. No; I prefer to have it done here. And let me add that I also ask that the governor of New York and the Attorney General be requested to return these papers here at once, to the end that they may be dealt with as indicated in the foregoing motion.

Senator OVERMAN. At the same time assuring the governor that these papers objected to by the Attorney General will not be produced?

Senator REED. Assuring the governor that the committee will not use those which, in the opinion of the committee, after conference with the Attorney General, should not be used.

I insist upon this. This Senate committee has the right to investigate this subject matter. It has been directed to do it by the Senate, and it becomes its solemn duty to carry out that direction. It sends to the State of New York for evidence. It does not get this evidence from the United States Government or the Attorney General. If the documents were in the possession of the Attorney General, if they were his own documents, I still have no doubt of the fact that the Senate would have the right to demand them; but I also know that the Senate would demand them in such a way, and employ them in such a way, as in the opinion of the Senate would not interfere with the public business. But in this case, I think probably for the first time in the history of our Government, do you find an attempt to keep from the Senate documents which it has called for, and which are in the possession of State authorities, and which, at most, can be nothing but mere vouchers and receipts for money paid. Yet it presents a grave question, and it is one which I hope will be dealt with in that spirit.

Senator KING. I think that that statement of yours might be a little unfair to the State. From the record here it is apparent that the State has not declined to produce these documents.

Senator REED. I did not mean to say that it has.

Senator KING. I think your statement would be susceptible of that construction, and I think that Gov. Smith and Attorney General Newton pursued a very courteous and very proper course, and they have acted very prudently in the matter.

Senator REED. Except that they ought, I think, to have submitted this matter to the Senate committee instead of coming here, and without seeing the Senate committee, returning the papers.

Senator KING. I am not speaking about their returning. I think it was quite proper that they should submit the matter to the Attorney General of the United States, in view of the fact that some of those papers, as I understand, relate to expenditures made by the Department of Justice, and that some of the persons to whom money had been paid were still investigating matters for the Federal Government. But I wanted to make one inquiry, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, first possibly of Senator Reed, and then of the witness. Is it contended, Senator Reed, that those vouchers relate to matters in connection with the Bolo Pasha case and matters with which Mr. Becker is familiar?

Senator REED. Yes; matters with which he is familiar, or about which Mr. Becker has testified here.

Senator KING. Because, if he is not familiar with the expenditures and not connected with them in any way, then, no matter what the expenditures were, or the extent, it would be wholly immaterial to produce them in connection with the cross-examination of Mr. Becker.

Senator REED. I said, and for such other purposes as they may be used for.

Mr. BECKER. May I clear that matter up?

Senator KING. Just a moment, until Senator Reed gets through.

Senator REED. It is a most astonishing thing to me to find any public official refusing to disclose the payment of money and to whom paid. I do not care in what case it occurs. Neither the Department of Justice nor the Government of France ought to want any advantage of anything except facts; and a prosecution is in a most pitiable condition which finds it necessary to withhold a single fact in any case that is on trial.

Senator KING. Now, Senator Reed, I think all of us agree with that general statement, but I do think that if the Attorney General is still employing individuals to investigate matters, in the public interest——

Senator REED. Which have nothing to do with this case?

Senator KING. Nothing to do with this case.

Senator REED. Then, I——

Senator KING. Let me complete my sentence.

Senator REED. Pardon me.

Senator KING (continuing). And those same persons have been engaged in investigating this case, to disclose their identity now and to put into the record the fact that they were employed by the Government in connection with certain important work, to make their names public, might frustrate the ends of justice and defeat the object of the Government in the legitimate prosecution of matters that were committed to its charge.

Senator REED. If I were to admit that to be the case, I repeat my statement that a Government that has to act in the dark, that can not put its acts on the table, that has men working for it whose identity it dares not disclose, is engaged in a very dangerous and questionable business, and the things that brought the French Government, many years ago, to a point that resulted in the revolution.

Senator KING. Well, Senator, there is no good in you and I arguing that proposition.

Senator REED. I do not want to argue it. My motion is this, that these papers be asked to be brought here, and then this Senate committee can do whatever it pleases, in consultation with the Attorney General; and I do not want to be in the position for a minute of interfering with the processes of justice, and I am willing that this committee shall take the matter and settle it.

Senator KING. For myself, there can be no objection to that; but the point I wanted to emphasize is this, so that the Attorney General would understand it, that there was no disposition upon the part of this committee, and I certainly think there is no disposition upon your part, Senator Reed, to give publicity now to matters not related to this case, and the giving publicity to which might interfere with the ends of justice in some other case.

Senator REED. Certainly not.

Senator OVERMAN. There can not possibly be any criticism of the Attorney General. The Governor of the State of New York sends these papers to him and asks his advice. He tells the Governor of New York that he has prosecutions now pending, and other cases that possibly will be brought, and these papers, or some of them, especially, of which the Government has knowledge or that have been presented to the Government, affect this litigation; that the ends of justice might or might not be defeated, and in the interest of public justice, he should decline, when it is put up to him, to return those papers to be presented. That is frequently done in all departments of the Government, where the Senate itself asks for the production of papers. There is hardly a month passes that some department does not answer, when they send down for papers, and inform the Senate that it is against the ends of public justice to have those papers presented, and the Senate never makes any objection, leaving it to the department to say whether the ends of justice require that the papers shall not be produced.

This matter was presented to the Attorney General, and he passed upon it, as he had a right to do, and I think he acted very fairly and justly and squarely about it. He said, "When this litigation is over and these indictments are settled, nobody would have any objection to any of these vouchers being presented; and it is because these cases are now pending that they ought not to be made public at this time;" and I do not think that the committee or Senator Reed would contend that they ought to be; and certainly, so far as I am concerned, as chairman, I will ask the governor to send these papers, but it is a question whether we ought to ask him to send these papers that the Attorney General thinks ought not to be made public. I think that is a matter for him to decide and not for us, because it is in his province and not ours to say what is proper and what is not.

Senator REED. The Attorney General?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes, the Attorney General.

Senator REED. I do not think he designated the particular papers. He simply spoke in a general way. I want to say this. I do not want to be considered as criticizing Mr. Gregory at all. That is farthest from my purpose in this case. But there is a great difference between sending to Mr. Gregory and asking him to send certain files in certain cases, and the Attorney General interfering in the procurement of testimony that is not in his possession.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, now, he did not say that. His letters show that he did not. He uses the words "particular papers." What particular papers?

Senator REED. Not in his possession; not his files, but papers coming here in the hands of a witness.

Senator OVERMAN. The governor of New York, as it turns out, and the State of New York, have been active in conjunction with the United States Government in helping to ferret out some of these things, and he uses the words "particular papers." "My papers," he says, "I do not want to produce at this time."

Senator KING. I move that this matter be considered in executive session.

Senator OVERMAN. That will be done.

Senator REED. That will be agreeable to me.

Senator OVERMAN. There will be no objection to asking for the papers, and I have no doubt that the governor of New York will produce them. The only question in my mind is whether we ought to segregate them ourselves or whether we ought to let the Attorney General segregate them.

Senator REED. In view of a remark made by Senator King which seemed to indicate that he thought I had in some way intended to criticize the governor of New York or the New York authorities, I want to be particularly understood. I am not criticizing them and I am not criticizing the Attorney General. I am trying to get these papers here, and when they are here, those of them that are confidential, if any there are, will be retained in confidence by the committee, who are quite as trustworthy, of course, as other public officials.

Senator OVERMAN. This telegram shows that Gov. Whitman ordered immediately that those papers be sent here. Those telegrams I put in the record. He has done his duty and consulted the new governor. On the 31st of December, when the new governor came in, as soon as he came in the Attorney General consulted him, and Gov. Smith ordered the papers to be sent here, with the understanding that they should be submitted to the Attorney General, because there were some matters in those vouchers that he ought to see and pass upon, because they were really the papers of the Attorney General; and they brought them to the Attorney General, and he said, "I have nothing to do with the New York papers, but my own papers just at this time I do not think ought to be produced, because it is in the interest of the public not to produce them because of certain trials in cases now pending, and certain cases that will be brought into court." That is the case. I think we can settle it, Senator Reed.

Senator REED. All right; that will be taken up in executive session, which of course is entirely proper.

I want considered in the record, if the committee please, these various political articles and various interviews and statements which appeared in the newspapers, and which have been largely referred to in the testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. Perhaps one or two of them were not. Let them go in, but I hope that you will cull out some of them, if you can, because this record is getting to be very large.

Senator REED. I know it is large, but of course I am not responsible for that.

I have forgotten when you became the assistant attorney general.

Mr. BECKER. I became a deputy attorney general on the 1st of January, 1915. I have been some kind of a deputy ever since, of different sorts.

Senator REED. 1915.

Senator OVERMAN. Were you reappointed?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Generally?

Mr. BECKER. No; I had gone back to the status that I had the first six months of last year.

Senator REED. What is that?

Mr. BECKER. It comes under a special provision of the statute, as a special——

Senator REED. You have been kept in this one matter that we are investigating; is that it?

Mr. BECKER. Only about five or six different matters. It is the same status that I had six months ago.

Senator REED. Do you know Jacob Lubin?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I ever met him. I think I know him. He is a convict who was very anxious to help the State and get commutation, which he never got by any recommendation from us.

Senator REED. You said by any recommendation of yours. If got it, did he not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know; possibly.

Senator REED. Was he drawing pay over there in your office since you have been in it?

Mr. BECKER. In the Baff murder case he was paid something of confidential information. I have forgotten what it was. The information did not pan out.

Senator REED. When did the Baff murder case originate?

Mr. BECKER. November 24, 1914.

Senator REED. Let us see if he was on the pay roll right about that? What about that?

Mr. BECKER. At what time do you mean?

Senator REED. Was he not on the pay roll quite a little, while the Baff murder case was going on?

Mr. BECKER. If you have a copy of the records, they will show. He was never on the pay roll, though. That would be an improper expression. You see, that is what we could call a crooked case, the Baff murder case. That is by no means an isolated instance. There were half a dozen instances where we got various people of shadowy reputation to give us information, and we probably paid them for their services in every instance.

Senator REED. You stated that four of the affidavits which were taken in these matters that we are now talking about were written by Musica, but that there were four other affidavits gotten by somebody else?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. You said eight affidavits in all.

Mr. BECKER. Eleven affidavits.

Senator REED. Eleven affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Let me be explicit about that, because you seem to misunderstand the situation. The only written affidavits that there were were those four of four chauffeurs. The others were the information that we derived from the others, which was obtained at various times and reported to me verbally by various persons.

Senator REED. Who were those various persons who have obtained the information and have reported to you verbally? That is just what I want.

Mr. BECKER. Philip M. Musica, alias William Johnson for investigation purposes.

Senator REED. He got some besides the four, because we are talking about those outside the four?

Mr. BECKER. In order to get the information, he interviewed some of the 11 probably at least 8 or 9. I myself interviewed one, and got information about another from one of the witnesses, Mr. Alexander P. Gazzola. That is all I know about it.

Senator REED. Then Musica and yourself are the only two people who interviewed these witnesses, to your knowledge?

Mr. BECKER. The way the information as to the chauffeurs was obtained was this. These chauffeurs were under the general control of the ones stationed at the Ritz-Carlton, of a firm—I do not remember the name of the firm, and I do not think I have ever met them.

Senator REED. You mean they were working for this firm? You said "under the general control." Is that what you mean?

Mr. BECKER. I am not sure what they were. I think they called them starters. Whatever those starters were or are, that information was obtained and reported to me by Mr. Musica. He made friends with these starters, and then interviewed these various men to find out if any of them could identify these photographs, and out of a large number that were interviewed there were found the ones who appeared and could identify either the Bolo photograph or the Bernstorff photograph or both, and those men that did that service for us were paid for their services some moderate amount.

Senator REED. How much?

Mr. BECKER. I could not tell from memory.

Senator REED. Who were the men that did this service for you?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember the names, if I ever knew. I must have drawn a check to their order, but that has completely passed out of my mind, and I never came in contact with them.

Senator REED. Were the bills that were paid for these moneys that you advanced to these people who found the men who would make the affidavits—were those bills filed in Albany with the governor or were they filed with the city of New York.

Mr. BECKER. They were filed in New York. None of these expenses were charged to the city; not one of them.

Senator REED. So that if we had the vouchers from New York we could determine who these gentlemen were, and the amounts?

Mr. BECKER. One of the names comes back now. I think it was MacDowell or MacDougal, or something like that.

Senator REED. How much did he get?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember, at all.

Senator REED. You do not know whether he divided with anybody?

Mr. BECKER. My impression is, as to these questions of payment—I have not seen any of the vouchers since they were sent to Albany, and probably not since they were signed, and so my recollection is very vague; and I do not propose, if the vouchers are produced later, to be tripped up because I differ with the voucher on any question as to money, but I am trying to give you my best impression about it, and my best impression is that there were two such persons—two men in partnership. Whether they were employees or whether they had some privilege at the Ritz-Carlton, I do not know. At any rate, they were in touch with chauffeurs at the Ritz-Carlton.

Senator REED. You mean in partnership in getting this evidence?

Mr. BECKER. I think practically so. I think we probably drew the check to one. Whether they were in partnership I do not know.

Senator REED. In partnership to get evidence?

Mr. BECKER. To act as investigators; yes.

Senator REED. Were they on the roll as investigators—the men that Musica picked up and offered some money if they would find somebody to offer this evidence against Mr. Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. Both of them were on the roll as investigators, men that he found and promised to pay if they would go out and find the men. It is all hearsay and a rather vague recollection.

Senator REED. You say that you are anxious to have the vouchers produced?

Mr. BECKER. In the present situation; yes.

Senator REED. You have changed your mind since you testified the other day.

Mr. BECKER. I regard it as against public policy that secret service work should not remain secret service work. I believe the ability of this country to counteract the spy service in this country would have been curtailed and perhaps destroyed if it had not been able to keep these things secret. I regard this whole attempt to make secret service not secret service as against public policy.

Senator REED. Were you against making the secret service not secret when you took these witnesses, whose testimony you secretly took, and immediately turned it over to the newspapers?

Mr. BECKER. That is the result of the secret service.

Senator REED. That is the result.

Mr. BECKER. The secret service by which these things are obtained as a matter of public policy should be secret, and no Senator or anybody else should have the power of stripping the secrecy from it. If the precedent to the contrary is established it means that if we have another war and a matter is referred to a Senate committee some Senator may appear before it who has voted against the espionage bill, and whose purpose it is to cripple it, and he can destroy the whole effect of the secret service. But after the secret service has obtained its results, if there has been any disloyalty, or if there is something that the public ought to know, the publication of these results to the public is of the highest public interest, and is a big public duty.

Senator REED. Do you mean to insinuate that I voted against the espionage bill?

Mr. BECKER. Senator, I have no idea of how you voted.

Senator REED. Your remark might have been meant to indicate that. It was certainly very irrelevant if it was not meant as an insinuation, and if you have any insinuation to make I do not want you to make an insinuation, I want you to make a statement.

Mr. BECKER. I have not been interested in the record of your vote on that.

Senator REED. I thought you had not. You were too much interested in other matters.

Mr. BECKER. I was interested in attending to my own personal work as a deputy attorney general, and not in washing linen for an individual. That is an insinuation.

Senator REED. Your idea of secrecy is that as to the witnesses who gather the evidence and who receive the money, their activities should be kept secret——

Mr. BECKER. My theory is——

Senator REED (continuing). Just let me ask my question. All those things shall be kept secret, everything shall be kept secret: but that having obtained the testimony under a secret process of this kind, you have the perfect right to open up a political headquarters and give out this testimony procured in this way; you have a perfect right to come down to the committee and talk of the results of your investigation, without pretending to know the actual facts yourself, and then you think you ought to be allowed to hold back the source of your information?

Mr. BECKER. I believe that a witness should be subject to the utmost scrutiny. I believe in cross-examination. I believe in the ability to probe a witness. By becoming a witness it becomes his job ic duty to consent to all the facts becoming known about him. When the facts with reference to Jerome as a convict were known, that was within the utmost propriety. I hold that when a gentleman makes his statement, defying the Attorney General "to disprove any word in this statement of mine, to substantiate any one of his own unwarranted implications, except his one truthful statement that my acquaintance with Bolo Pasha was purely social—the statement being also that he met Bolo Pasha at the Sherry dinner—and that is all I have ever known or seen or heard of Bolo Pasha," when that situation is created, when Attorney General Lewis is put in the position that if he does not act, or if he does not make public the evidence that has been disclosed in the course of a legitimate investigation, the defiance stands good, and that if he does act and does meet the defiance and does publish the facts, that he is going to be charged with a breach of public duty because he has made them public, I hold that is a case of being "good Lord and good devil," and that it puts a man in an unconscionable position.

Senator REED. That is a very lucid statement.

Mr. BECKER. If it is not lucid I will make it plain.

Senator REED. The right way to make the facts known is to have a political headquarters and to make them known from that political headquarters in a campaign which you are waging in the hope of electing yourself to office. That is the right way to make them known, and the right way to repel such a thing, as you have just said. Now, let us see. Is that true?

Mr. BECKER. The Attorney General's office makes no attack against whatever.

Senator REED. Had not the Attorney General's office given out the statement that Boy-Ed and von Papen had been at a dinner at Mr. Hearst's house?

Mr. BECKER. It had not. We have been all over that. I would make the same answers as before.

Senator REED. And did you not state that they got out a report made by Mr. Perley Morse?

Mr. BECKER. I testified that it was contained in a paragraph in the accountant's report of Mr. Perley Morse.

Senator REED. And that report was given to the newspapers by the Attorney General's office?

Mr. BECKER. It got out by accident.

Senator REED. Is it not a fact that no such statement was made in any statement by Mr. Perley Morse?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that it occurred in it.

Senator REED. This is Mr. Perley Morse sitting here.

Mr. BECKER. It is not in the report in the form in which it now stands.

Senator REED. Was it ever in the report filed by Mr. Morse?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that it was taken out and corrected.

Senator REED. Who took it out?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Morse.

Senator REED. We will let it be supplied by Mr. Morse. I have not talked with him about it, but have some information. As to your willingness to give up certain testimony, I will read from your testimony:

Senator REED. Yes; I want you to produce your vouchers and accounts showing moneys that have been expended in procuring this evidence.

Mr. BECKER. They will not be produced, and I want to say now that I not produce any of the confidential papers on our so-called secret-service department, nor will I produce or give any information in regard to the persons of the investigators who have been working for the department.

And again:

Mr. BECKER. I decline to give any information in regard to the names of investigators who have been employed from time to time.

Mr. BECKER. I made an objection that was sustained by the committee in that respect, as a matter of grace, and under no compulsion, because we had had a ruling. We have since decided to do so.

Senator REED. We will not discuss how it happened, but you have now had a change of heart, and you are willing to have these papers turned over. That is the point I am getting at.

Mr. BECKER. I will do it, so far as I am concerned, excepting that it having two effects, one to prejudice pending prosecutions of the French Government, and especially those prejudicing pending prosecution of the Federal Government.

Senator REED. Have you got any investigators now that are working on the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. Two.

Senator REED. Only two?

Mr. BECKER. Only two.

Senator REED. So that if the names of all of the others except those two were given, it would not interfere with the Humbert case?

Mr. BECKER. It would not, at all.

Senator REED. And you only desire to withhold the names of those two men? Have I called the names of those two men in this examination?

Mr. BECKER. I decline to state.

Senator REED. Is Musica one of them?

Mr. BECKER. I decline to state.

Senator REED. Is Lubin one of them?

Mr. BECKER. No; it is perfectly settled that he was never one of them. He was in the nature of a stool pigeon. That is what I think you meant by a "snitch."

Senator REED. That is what I meant. It is a western term, not eastern. It has a well-defined meaning among people who have had contact with criminal cases. The term "snitch" means a man who is engaged in the business of getting something by secret or contemptible, crooked processes, from somebody else, and turning it over to the State. Some people might call it a "plant." Our friend here prefers the term "stool pigeon."

Mr. BECKER. Among district attorneys or prosecuting officers it is considered all right to employ a stool pigeon, but the defense thinks it is contemptible. It depends upon the point of view.

Senator REED. It depends on the men and the circumstances.

Mr. BECKER. It is a method which has been used in the district attorney's office in the State of New York since the late days of Bertram Gardner; possibly before.

Senator REED. I have no information about New York, and I will not take my methods from that place.

I notice here several items for Mr. Lubin in 1914. Mr. Lubin seems to have been paid $25.

Mr. BECKER. 1914?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. That would be by Mr. Whitman or his district attorney.

Senator REED. 1915, I find Mr. Lubin is here for $15.

Mr. BECKER. That would be paid by Mr. James Albert Perkins, district attorney.

Senator REED. That was at the time you were in your present office?

Mr. BECKER. Let me ask if you mean to insinuate that I had anything to do with that payment in 1915?

Senator REED. I wanted to know if Lubin ever worked here in this Baff case.

Mr. BECKER. He certainly did.

Senator REED. And he drew some pay?

Mr. BECKER. Under me?

Senator REED. Under you.

Mr. BECKER. But that would be after May 17, because I had nothing to do with the case at that time. He is a regular old-timer at that game, you know.

Senator REED. He seems to have been working in the Rosenthal case.

Mr. BECKER. That is the Becker murder case.

Senator REED. And to have drawn money in 1913 and in 1914, and then in 1915 still to have been drawing money. You did not have anything to do with that, however?

Mr. BECKER. Not with the Becker case. That is another Becker.

Senator REED. I understand.

Mr. BECKER. I guess he and Bolo Pasha are playing pinochle together.

Senator REED. I am surprised to hear a gentleman who delivered the homily you did a little bit ago make such a remark about people who are dead, however bad they are.

Mr. BECKER. All right, I stand rebuked.

Senator REED. So far as we are concerned, I think we can rely on this conclusion, that Mr. Musica is really the man that gathered nearly all of the evidence in the case against Mr. Hearst.

Mr. BECKER. About half of it.

Senator REED. You got the other half? You told us that Mr. Musica got 8 or 9 of the witnesses and you got one.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Musica did not get any of the chauffeur witnesses.

Senator REED. He got the men that got the chauffeurs?

Mr. BECKER. He hired the men that acted as my agents to get the evidence.

Senator REED. He got the gentlemen who were to get the testimony?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I want to put into the record these copies. I simply want to put in the items, the amounts of the money that Mr. Musica drew from the city of New York.

Mr. BECKER. I could tell you how Mr. Musica operated at the Hearst apartment to get in there and get the evidence.

Senator REED. We had better bring him here and have him do it first hand. I would like to see the gentleman.

I want the record to show all these statements, I presume there were some others.

May 13—

Mr. BECKER. What year?

Senator REED (continuing). 1918, William Johnson drew from the State of New York $789.

Mr. BECKER. From the city of New York.

Senator REED. From the city of New York.

Mr. BECKER. That was as an investigator.

Senator REED. June 6, $30. June 6 again, I think it is $30. October 7, $500. May 8, 1917, $68. November 26, $100. Undoubtedly there were many more payments, but those are all that I have happened to find here.

Mr. BECKER. Let us see if you have the dates right, please. That does not accord with my recollection. Yes; there are more than that.

Senator REED. A great deal more than that? How much more, do you suppose?

Mr. BECKER. Well, you see, you have the rate. I think that the greater part of the payments that have been made to him in the period now covering a year and a half at the rate of $20 a day, plus expenses, were made out of the city treasury in connection with the Baff cases. There were about 10 or 12 of the Baff cases at that time.

Senator REED. Then some more expenses had been charged to the State, had they not?

Mr. BECKER. Well, as I told you, with the exception of a short time he has been working on one case or the other. You can figure it out. Take his pay, $20, and multiply it by, say, about 500 days, something like that. That will be the total.

Senator REED. Would he be paid for Sundays, Saturdays, and all that?

Mr. BECKER. When he worked.

Senator REED. $10,000; and then he got his expenses in addition to that?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is, some of the time.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOSEPH A. MOORE.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. State your name and residence.

Mr. MOORE. My name is Joseph A. Moore, and my residence is 11 West Fortieth Street, New York. I am the general manager of the Hearst International Library, which concern does a general book publishing business.

I am also the general manager of the International Magazine Company, which is owned by Mr. William Randolph Hearst, and publishes the six magazines: Cosmopolitan, Hearst Magazine, Good Housekeeping, Harper's Bazar, Motor, and Motor Boating.

My object in appearing before this committee is to correct certain glaring misstatements in the testimony given before this committee on December 9, 1918, by Capt. George Benjamin Lester, of the Military Intelligence Bureau of the United States Army.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask you to expunge from the record the statement just made by the witness concerning glaring misstatements made by Capt. George B. Lester, of the Military Intelligence Department.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think that need go in.

Mr. MOORE. I am going to read the misstatements, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Senator KING. The committee can determine whether they are misstatements or not.

Mr. MOORE. Capt. Lester stated, for example, that the Deutschland library, or rather Mr. Hearst personally, undertook, in September, 1915—that is what it is in my transcript, but I think he meant 1916—to publish a book on the underseas boat Deutschland, written by Capt. Koenig. That is Capt. Lester's testimony.

Senator STERLING. Written by whom?

Mr. MOORE. Written by Capt. Koenig.

Senator STERLING. Capt. Koenig?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; Capt. Paul Koenig.

Senator STERLING. The captain of the submarine boat Deutschland?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

As a matter of fact, Capt. Lester's own records must show that the Deutschland Library did not come into existence until January, 1917, more than three months after the date he mentions, and that when the Deutschland Library did start it had absolutely no connection with Mr. Hearst or the Hearst interests.

This is a fair sample of the inaccuracy of Capt. Lester's testimony all the way through.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that that statement be stricken out and expunged from the record, for the reason that my statements are based upon documentary evidence which I have before me. I undertook to make no statement not supported by correspondence and documents, and references in the files of the Military Intelligence Department.

Senator OVERMAN. We will hear what he has to say, and then take up the question of expunging from the record.

Mr. MOORE. Thank you, Senator.

Capt. Lester testified elaborately regarding the activities of a Viereck Library Organization, and then went on to state that "the Hearst American interests, or some one affiliated with them, conducted a library similar."

The facts are that the only library conducted by Mr. Hearst or the Hearst interests was and is the Hearst's International Library, which is in no respect similar to or honestly comparable with the Viereck library described by Capt. Lester.

The most searching investigation on the part of any fair-minded person will reveal in the activities of the Hearst's International Library from its beginning nothing but the ordinary activities of a legitimate trade book publishing concern which was in existence long before the war began and which, we expect, will be doing exactly the same sort of business long after the war has stopped.

The activities of the Hearst's International Library which can, in any way, be construed as having any bearing whatever on the war are, given in strict chronological order, as follows:

First. The publication of the celebrated "King Albert's Book." in November, 1914. This was a tribute to the Belgian King and the Belgian people by representative men and women throughout the world. The idea originated among the literary men of Great Britain and was put up to Mr. Hearst by Sir Hall Caine, now a knight of the British Empire. The Hearst's International Library agreed to donate all profits of the publishing of this book to the Belgian relief fund of Great Britain, and as a result of our publishing the book in this country $8,200 was paid to that fund.

Second. In May, 1915, the Hearst's International Library entered into an agreement with Mr. Hilaire Belloc, the eminent English historian and essayist, to publish his "History of the Great War." Of this book and its author the Philadelphia Public Ledger said on the morning of July 17, 1915:

Mr. Belloc needs no introduction to the American readers. He was expected here last winter but canceled his engagements in order to place his literary talents at the disposal of the British Government. Mr. Belloc has produced a masterly work, every page of which is full of the most vital interest.

We have up to the present published two volumes of this history, and the books are still enjoying a large sale.

Third. In November, 1916, the Hearst's International Library took over the manuscript secured by the New York American of Capt. Paul Koenig's story of "The Voyage of the Deutschland." Although the value of this book had been to some extent impaired by its publication complete, as testified before you, by both the New York World and the Hearst newspapers, it was decided that whatever might be the loss, Mr. Hearst's offer to publish the book would be carried out in good faith.

Merely to remind this committee of the general attitude of the American people at that time towards this Deutschland enterprise. I would like to submit this page from the New York Times of July 11, 1916.

You will notice here a three-column interview with Capt. Paul Koenig entitled: "Subsea Perils Bring Joy to Skipper; Wine Flow. Music Blares Under Waves. Doughty Capt. Koenig and His Crew Sipped Champagne and Heard 'Peer Gynt' While Foes' Warcraft Churned Water Above Them in English Channel."

Also, you will find a photograph of Capt. Koenig, a photograph of the Deutschland, a photograph of the crew and the names of the men therein. In fact, you will find nearly half the front page and the entire second page of this paper treating the advent of the Deutschland in a tone of the most jovial hospitality.

This is not to be taken in any sense as reflecting on the patriotism of the New York Times, but merely as indicative of the general attitude of newspapers throughout the country. It is not surprising, therefore, that upon announcement of the proposed publication of The Voyage of the Deutschland, advance orders were universal given by all the leading booksellers and publishing distributors. A very fair sale followed, for, as the New York Times said in a current editorial:

One doesn't have to be a German or a sympathizer with Germany's cause to see in the crossing of the Atlantic by the Deutschland an achievement of small magnitude, or to admire the courage and hardihood of the officers and men who brought so far a craft so desperately uncomfortable as is a submarine.

Financially, however, the book was a failure. The 25,000 or so copies sold before war was declared by the United States and further publication stopped were not sufficient to pay the high initial cost, and the loss on the enterprise was about $760. With that loss the incident was closed until its brilliant resurrection in these later years in the hands of Capt. Lester.

Fourth. In December, 1917, we arranged with Harry Lauder, whose son, captain in a Highland regiment, was shot by the Germans, to publish a book. Mr. Lauder at this time, as will be remembered, was touring the United States and Canada from coast to coast. He visited 88 different cities, securing donations for the aid for maimed Scottish soldiers, addressing countless huge meetings, and doing more, perhaps, than any other one man has done to popularize the British cause and combat German propaganda.

It was on this trip that his book, A Minstrel in France, was written. It tells of his recent visit to the British trenches and the allied battle fields and hospitals on the western front.

So thoroughly did this book represent the feelings of the famous Scotch comedian that he is reported in the Brooklyn Citizen as saying to its reporters:

My impressions? Yes; I was feeling the pulse of the war over there. You will find it all in my book, A Minstrel in France. Be sure to read it. It's all for the cause.

To back up Mr. Lauder and give his book the greatest possible distribution, a vigorous advertising campaign was started in the Hearst magazines and newspapers.

As a result of Mr. Lauder's personal popularity and of our work on his behalf, this book remains to-day—a year afterwards—the best selling nonfiction book in America.

Furthermore, as indicated in the January issue of the Bookman, the reports of 200 librarians throughout the country show that A Minstrel in France—a vigorous book of out-and-out British propaganda, published by Hearst's International Library—is at this moment the one nonfiction work by far the most called for by readers in their libraries.

At the same time that A Minstrel in France appeared in book form it was published serially in Hearst's Magazine, and so presented to another half million readers.

Naturally enough, Capt. Lester and some others testifying before this committee have made no mention whatever of the extensive patriotic activities of the various Hearst organizations.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Moore, just make your statement without referring to any witness. Let the statement speak for itself.

Mr. MOORE. All right.

Those who read the Hearst newspapers and magazines are familiar with those, and that, I take it, is why, in spite of the bitter and carefully organized attack on Mr. Hearst, the circulation of his publications continues steadily to increase.

But since it is highly probable that a great many who will read the reports of this committee are not familiar with Mr. Hearst's magazines, I am, on behalf of the International Magazine Co., going to ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments to point out a few of the unquestionably patriotic achievements of these six magazines.

First, if I may suggest it, let us consider Good Housekeeping. The most popular novel to-day in New York and New England, and the second in demand throughout the whole United States, is, according to the "Bookman," "The Rough Road," by William J. L., a noted English author.

Of this story the New York Herald said:

If it was the author's purpose to give his readers a new respect for the spirit of unselfish patriotism that the war has developed in every grade of society in Great Britain, he has succeeded admirably.

Prior to its publication as a book, this vastly popular book of British patriotism ran for 12 months as a serial in Good Housekeeping, one of Mr. Hearst's publications.

Or, take "The Glory of the Trenches," by Coningsby Dawson, a young Canadian lieutenant with the British Army, three times home wounded and three times returned to the front. The Boston Post said of his book:

In "The Glory of the Trenches," Coningsby Dawson pictures the feelings of a sensitive mind amid the horrors of war, the sense of joy and elation that thrills those who can serve at the front in the biggest cause that the world has known.

You will perhaps be interested to note that this splendid brief in behalf of "the biggest cause the world has ever known," published last spring in one of Mr. Hearst's magazines, still remains, according to the "Bookman," one of the six books other than fiction most in demand in your public libraries in the Southern and Western States.

But Good Housekeeping's interest in the war was far more practical than merely publicity articles and fiction. Beginning with the May, 1917, issue, as soon as war was declared, the whole magazine began to devote all its departments entirely to the service. So successful was it that during the year 1918, just past, 50 per cent of its entire contents—505 pages of the entire 1,015 editorial pages—was planned and published deliberately as a part of this magazine's war program.

For example: One of Good Housekeeping's largest departments is known as "Good Housekeeping Institute." Laboratories are maintained here for the scientific study of all problems confronting the housewife. And in each issue of Good Housekeeping since the war began will be found from 10 to 15 pages devoted to this department.

No stronger emphasis, perhaps, can be given to the value of the war service rendered by Good Housekeeping than a reference to the monthly bulletins of the United States Food Administration, a copy of which is submitted. A careful checking of the first 10 issues of this bulletin shows that in articles from 49 different magazines cited by the Food Administration as especially helpful in meeting war conditions Good Housekeeping led the entire list with 71 mentioned articles, its nearest competitor having but 42. The following shows the record of the first five magazines in the order of the number of their articles thought worthy of listing by the Food Administration: Good Housekeeping, 71; Ladies' Home Journal, 44; Woman's Home Companion, 39; Pictorial Review, 27; Delineator, 26.

Although Good Housekeeping is essentially a woman's magazine it has had in 35 of the 53 issues published since the world war began in 1914 signed editorials on matters pertaining to the war. And since he United States itself entered the war, 85 per cent of the editor's signed page in all of the issues has been devoted exclusively to war problems. As a sample of these, I would like to take your time to read just one—Mr. Bigelow's reply to a pro-German subscriber who wrote that the magazine had lost three subscribers by its condemnation of the Lusitania outrage:

"Editorial from Good Housekeeping for August, 1915; censored by E. A. M." On page 78 of the July issue, we ran a little editorial on "saving the kiddies." In it we commented on an event in world history which was then more than a month past, so that it cannot be said that we were either excited or misinformed when we placed upon the German name the heart-breaking shame of the sinking of the men and women and children on board. The event is, as we write, two months past, and our opinion of it is still in accord with that held by a great majority of the inhabitants of the civilized world. But we are not to enjoy it without loss. Recently there came back to us a copy of the editorial, with the words at the head of this column scribbled across it. With it was this letter:

THURSDAY, July 1, 1915.

EDITOR GOOD HOUSEKEEPING:

You have lost three subscribers in publishing this article. How long is it going to take Americans to see that England is laughing at us? Yours very truly,

E. A. MAYER.

That was all. There was no address—just a torpedo out of the dark, which showed no ingenuity on the part of the sender. Of course, there was no intention to sink us outright; it was simply a warning that if we got into the habit of not "thinking as the Germans do" and saying things out loud we must take the consequences—in this case three subscriptions lost and the charge that we, along with the other Americans, are stupid because we can not see that England's face of seeming sorrow bears in reality a grin.

Why should England laugh? You mothers of Americans answer that and exercise your God-given right of thinking for yourselves. Some of you who read this remember fifty-odd years ago when we were putting our young men into hastily dug graves. Was either side of our country laughing at anything then? The dispatches of the week say that England's just-buried dead at the Gallipolies alone number nearly eight thousand. And yet, for some reason, England is laughing at us! Evidently one must be able to "think as the Germans do" to have the faculty of seeing things like that.

Where do we stand:

Our reference to the sinking of the "Lusitania" and our refusal to submit to censorship must not, however, be taken as evidence that we are anti-German and pro-Allies. We are not anti-German; we are anti-humanity and pro-keeping the faith, and that alone has guided and will guide the placing of our sympathies. We envy Germany her former supremacy in nearly every expression of life; we admire the present very remarkable evidence of her world-leadership in manufactures and in organization; but we cannot excuse her for the empty homes and the crowded graves that have been the result of the tempest she set loose. When we are asked to further or even condone the kind of leadership that would break the heart of the world and that stops at no abomination—we cannot do it.

WILLIAM FREDERICK BIGELOW, Editor.

Hearst's: The greatest single contribution toward the war made by Hearst's Magazine was, perhaps, the publishing of Harry Lauder's "A Minstrel in France," already spoken of. This book even now is the one book, outside of fiction, most in demand in public libraries throughout the United States.

Although Hearst's contents is so largely fiction, this magazine has had since January, 1916, a steady stream of notable articles bearing on the war and its collateral problems and activities.

Some 95 pages of these articles are submitted herewith.

Among the titles you will find "The New Navy," a description of the American Navy with a foreword by Secretary Daniels; "The American Army of Today," with the endorsement of Secretary Baker; "Our Job as a Nation," with a signed declaration of war by Henry Ford; "The American Red Cross," by Stockton Axson; "The World's Greatest Business—U. S. Ordnance"; "Mussing Up the Prussian Guard"; and many others of the same calibre and interest.

As to writers, you will find among these pages articles signed by Count Tolstoi, Rabindranath Tagore, Charles S. Whitman, John Ashmead-Bartlett, Evangeline Booth, George Creel, B. C. Forbes, Charles Edward Russell and the Countess of Warwick.

And speaking of authors, it may interest you to note in connection with the violent emphasis being laid on Mr. Hearst's alleged Anglophobia, that since January, 1915, no fewer than 75 different articles and stories by distinguished British authors have been printed in Hearst's Magazine alone. The list for this one magazine submitted herewith contains 19 eminent British writers. Neither in number nor in distinction, I believe, can this list be matched by any magazine in America.

Cosmopolitan: Cosmopolitan has the largest circulation of any general monthly magazine. It prints and circulates more than a million copies monthly.

Senator OVERMAN. You say that has more subscriptions than any other magazine?

Mr. MOORE. It has more sales than any monthly magazine. There is one weekly magazine that has a larger sale that sells for 5 cents. The Cosmopolitan sells for 25 cents.

Senator OVERMAN. Just as a matter of curiosity, what is the weekly magazine?

Mr. MOORE. The Saturday Evening Post, which sells for 5 cents.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The Cosmopolitan sells for 25 cents, and is only published once a month.

Since the beginning of the war, Cosmopolitan has done its utmost to interpret to this great group of readers the part they should take toward the winning of the war. As Cosmopolitan is so largely a fiction publication, it is, of course, obvious that most of the inspirational matter would take the form of fiction. Stories, therefore, were planned and written with plots definitely laid to point a moral.

In the portfolios which I have here are included most of the stories to which I refer, together with a great many editorials, poems, and special articles. In it you will find Herbert Kaufman, Fannie Hurst, George Ade, Gouverneur Morris, Rex Beach, Edith Wharton, Maurice Maeterlinck, H. G. Wells, John Galsworthy, Arnold Bennett, and many others, each writing and publishing their own best contributions toward the winning of the war.

So successfully was this work done that we have received a great number of requests from individuals and organizations asking permission, which was always freely granted—to reprint matter appearing in Cosmopolitan, so that the inspiration therein might be more widely distributed.

Many of these letters are included in the portfolios I have submitted to me. They indicate the widespread interest that this inspirational editorial matter aroused throughout the country.

At the urgent request of the Red Cross we commissioned George Ade to write one of his famous fables, dealing with Red Cross activities, in the same way he had earlier treated those of the Y. M. C. A. Two million copies of this fable, reprinted in a booklet, were distributed by the American Red Cross.

Other committees and associations to manifest particular interest in material published in Cosmopolitan were:

Y. M. C. A.

Knights of Columbus.

American Red Cross.

Local liberty loan associations.

The national liberty loan committee.

The Food Administration.

Bureau of public information.

Joan of Arc statue committee.

American Library War Association.

Motor: It is possible that some other technical magazine did more along the lines of popularizing the war and backing it up in practical ways than did Motor.

But to have done this, that magazine would have had to discontinue practically all other activity, for during the year and a half of fighting Motor itself published no less than 77 different articles dealing in some way with the war. Many of these articles were sent over by correspondents abroad, such as Lieut. Leon See of the French Army, and Charles G. Harper, an English authority on motor topics.

In special appeals to automobile owners, Motor published no less than five full-page Liberty loan editorials, and backed up liberally every war drive. For example, in the September issue of 1918, you will find no less than six pages devoted to the work of the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and the Salvation Army.

In addition to this support in its own pages, Motor's technical staff has been able to be of some slight practical assistance to the Government. Mr. H. A. Tarantous, one of its editors, wrote and edited seven instruction books for the war-time work of the United States Ordnance Department.

Harper's Bazar: Harper's Bazar has a circulation of 100,000 among women of wealth and social position. From the very beginning of the war, therefore, the editors of the Bazar have felt that the magazine could be a potent factor in arousing women of the wealthier classes to a sense of realization of what the war meant and the part they should play in it.

Mr. Hearst's instructions to the editors of Harper's Bazar have been, from the first, very definite that every important war work, every Government activity, and every worthy charitable project, in which women could be interested, should be featured in the Bazar's editorial pages. In the planning of these articles, Harper's Bazar has also had the direct cooperation of Mrs. Hearst who, as chairman of the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense here in New York City, has played a most active part in all war work.

The articles on war service published by Harper's Bazar have been written by the most prominent men and women in America. They are submitted herewith. Among the contributors have been: Mrs. William Astor Chanler, Mrs. Belmont Tiffany, Duchesse d'Uzes, Dr. Henry H. MacCracken, Mrs. Frank Gray Griswold, Richard Le Gallienne, Miss Martha McCook, Mrs. James W. Ward, Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, Dr. John H. Finley, Mrs. Reginald Ward, Kauffman, Dr. Rosalie S. Morton, Mabel T. Boardman, Mrs. Richard Aldrich.

Mrs. Humphrey wrote for us in 1918 a story of women's war activities in England. This story ran through 10 issues of Harper's Bazar. As Mrs. Ward had been doing propaganda work for the English Government, the Bazar is proud to have been selected for her to carry her message on women's war work to America. L. Phillips Oppenheim, another writer recognized as doing vigorous propaganda work for the British Government, has also been represented by several short stories and a novel in Harper's Bazar.

The eminent French artists, Drian, Soulie, and Erte, have been appearing exclusively in Harper's Bazar in America while André Castaigne and Matania, the celebrated English war artist, have been illustrating for us.

As might be expected in a woman's society magazine, at least 50 per cent of Harper's Bazar is devoted to women's clothes. At least three quarters of this space has been devoted in each issue to illustrations and descriptions of the work of the famous French dress-makers. No magazine in America has published more material each issue featuring these French houses than has Harper's Bazar. We have done everything possible to uphold their prestige and reputation in war time, and we believe, that this cooperation has been greatly appreciated by the French people.

In addition to the special articles on war services—from one to three of which have appeared in every issue of the Bazar—the Bazar has also appeared in each issue an editorial on some phase of war activity or conservation which had been requested by either the United States Government or one of the important war organizations.

These monthly editorials treated of such subjects as the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross drive, the conservation of coal, the waste of paper, the United War Work drive, the saving of coal, the movement for early Christmas shopping, food conservation, and the Home Service of the Red Cross.

Many of these editorials, submitted herewith, were reprinted and distributed by war organizations. Several of our illustrations used for our war articles were deemed so striking by the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. that they asked our permission to reproduce them for publicity purposes. This, of course, we were very glad to give.

In addition to special articles and monthly editorials on war work, Harper's Bazar has run a monthly department called "Where you can fit into the war" to give advice to women on war service. The inquiries from this department ran from 300 to 600 a month, and we were able to supply women to the organizations where their services were most needed. Fuller details of the record of "Where you can fit into the war" are herewith submitted. Harper's Bazar, in addition to running 68 pages of special articles, 20 pages of editorials, and 10 pages of special departments, has endeavored to help the cause of our allies even in its fiction and art features.

Harper's Bazar has received letters of thanks from the most important war-work organizations in America for these articles. The letters of thanks and appreciation—some of which are submitted herewith—have come from the Liberty Loan Committee, the American Red Cross, the Council of National Defense, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, American Women's Hospitals, the Committee on Public Information, the National War Work Council.

Motor Boating: A small publication with so limited a field as Motor Boating could not be expected to do very much toward winning the war. But I believe what it did manage to do will surprise you.

In the first place, since November, 1916, each issue has contained one or more editorial articles dealing with some phase of the war. In all, there have been 72 of these articles. They are submitted herewith for your examination. You will find them all emphatically pro-American and proadministration.

Among them are a number of educational articles dealing with the preparation of yachtsmen and motor-boat men for the Navy. Motor Boating has been a strong advocate of the Navy Department's policy of using small boats for national defense purposes, and strongly in favor of the Government's plans for building submarine chasers and other fighting ships of this nature. We have received the commendation of several high Navy Department executives for the part we have taken in the naval program and for the assistance we have been to the department.

Besides preparing the many articles published in the magazine itself, the editors of Motor Boating have been instrumental in establishing free navigation schools in New York City, Brooklyn, Bronx, New Haven, Boston, Staten Island, Washington, and Detroit. More than 5,000 young men have been graduated from these schools in courses prepared by the editors of Motor Boating in such subjects as coastwise navigation, piloting, deck seamanship, dead reckoning, and astronomical navigation. At least 1,000 of the graduates from these schools went directly into the Navy, many of them receiving commissions on account of the instruction which they obtained in the navigation schools. The Navy Department itself took advantage of these schools and sent many enlisted men to receive instruction in the various nautical subjects which were taught.

Furthermore, Motor Boating has published several books allied to naval and national defense subjects, the principal one of which was published in April, 1917, under the title of "Practical Motor Boat Handling, Seamanship, and Piloting." This book is now in its fourth edition, and over a thousand copies have already been purchased by the Navy Department direct.

Besides publishing articles and furnishing information editorially, the offices of Motor Boating have during the period of the war been virtually an information bureau, where anyone who so desired could get information and literature regarding enlistment and enrollment in any branch of the naval service. And so Motor Boating credits itself with having been instrumental directly and indirectly in putting a thousand or more young men in the Navy and Naval Reserve Force.

Capt. LESTER. I would like to ask Mr. Moore one or two questions.

Senator KING. Will it take long?

Capt. LESTER. About 10 minutes. Mr. Moore, have you ever seen the correspondence that passed between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Bayard Hale?

Mr. MOORE. I have not.

Capt. LESTER. In reference to the Paul Koenig book?

Mr. MOORE. No.

Capt. LESTER. Then how can you characterize the statement covering the arrangement that was made as inaccurate or a glaring misstatement?

Mr. MOORE. Simply from what you said, that the publication of the book was by the Deutschland Library, and that Mr. Hearst owned the Deutschland Library.

Capt. LESTER. Does he own the Deutschland Library, or does the International Co. own the Deutschland Library?

Mr. MOORE. No, sir; never had the slightest interest in it.

Capt. LESTER. Who is Mr. Perkins?

Mr. MOORE. He is a man that was discharged from the Hearst International Library long before, and then he went out and formed the Deutschland Library.

Capt. LESTER. I want to read to you a cablegram sent from Bayard Hale, addressed to Randolph Hearst, on September 15, 1916.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1916.

RANDOLPH HEARST, New York:

Have secured you American rights Captain Koenig's book provided following arrangements satisfactory. Manuscript approximately thirty thousand words delivered me September twenty. We pay cost translation and agree cable approximately ten thousand words for serial use during month or so required for full text reach America by submarine. You have American rights both English German texts two sets mats latter being forwarded. Profits sale this book go to pension fund Ocean Reiderel. They demand large lump sum but finally agreed basis royalty for which they await your offer hoping it liberal as possible. They expect first high class edition book sell for about dollar quarter followed by cheaper popular edition. Book is signed by Koenig is in first person and first five chapters read well. Can send you installment within a week and first publication possibly in Sunday paper will synchronize with event adding interest to story. Tis stipulated that special courtesies be extended Staatszeitung and Fatherland and expectation is your royalty offer benefit pension fund liberal.

BAYARD HALE

To that Mr. Hearst replied, or the Hearst American, on the 16th day of September, 1916, as follows:

NEW YORK, September 16, 1916.

BAYARD HALE,

American Correspondent, Berlin.

Desire to donate entire profits of all Koenig book to pension fund. Would like to publish all or large part of book in Sunday American. Believe Sunday publications will help rather than hurt sale of book.

HEARST-AMERICAN.

I will also read the cablegram from Bayard Hale to William Randolph Hearst, September 22, 1916, which is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST,
New York.

Berlin twenty one your generous offer donate profits Deutschland book deeply appreciated. No objection publication almost entire Sunday American. Tis hoped, however, publication begin soon. How much shall I cable? Hoped first edition be handsome cloth volume.

BAYARD HALE

Did you ever hear of Paul Hilken, of Baltimore?

Mr. MOORE. I have heard of him.

Capt. LESTER. Do you know his connection with the Deutschland, the undersea boat that came over?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. What was it?

Mr. MOORE. He was an officer of the company that owned the Deutschland boat, as I understand it. The Deutschland boat was a commercial proposition, as I understand it.

Capt. LESTER. Do you remember whether Mr. Hearst or your magazine section ever published the Paul Koenig book?

Mr. MOORE. I do not quite understand.

Capt. LESTER. Did you ever publish the Koenig book?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I testified to that here.

Capt. LESTER. Who published it?

Mr. MOORE. The Hearst International Library has the book.

Capt. LESTER. Do you know that Paul Hilken was the treasurer of the pension fund?

Mr. MOORE. I did not know that until he made a request of me to furnish him with the profits from the sale of the book.

Capt. LESTER. There were no profits, were there?

Mr. MOORE. There were no profits. There were none furnished.

Capt. LESTER. He wrote several letters to Mr. Hearst?

Mr. MOORE. Not to Mr. Hearst.

Capt. LESTER. I mean to that organization. When I speak of Hearst I mean the organization.

Mr. MOORE. That is perfectly proper.

Capt. LESTER. Now, I wish to read a letter, for your information and for the record, from the Deutschland Library Co. to Mr. Paul L. Hilken, March 1, 1917.

Senator KING. Kindly give just a mere excerpt of it.

Capt. LESTER. Let me complete my question. I understood this witness to testify that the Deutschland Publishing Co. was not connected with Mr. Hearst, or, rather, he was not connected with it in any way. Our information regarding it is that the Deutschland Publishing Co. was one of the subsidiary distributing book companies owned by the International.

Mr. MOORE. I would be glad to have you produce the slightest evidence of that. That is just the very point where I claim that you—

Capt. LESTER. That is the very point I would like to have you testify about.

Senator KING. The witness denies that.

Mr. MOORE. I deny that emphatically.

Capt. LESTER. I am very glad to have you come here and deny it. If so, you deny all these records I have. I am going to ask the committee to permit me in that connection to convince you that I was making no glaring misstatement. This letter is dated March 1, 1917, and reads as follows:

MR. PAUL G. L. HILKEN,
American Manager of Deutschozean Reideret,
Hansa Hans, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. HILKEN: I returned few days ago from a very successful five weeks' business trip in the Middle West.

This is signed by Deutschland Library Co.; that is the signature of the letter.

Mr. MOORE. What bearing can that have?

Capt. LESTER. Listen to the letter and perhaps you will see. [Reading:]

Mr. PAUL G. L. HILKEN,

American Manager of Deutsch Ozean Reiderei.

Hansa Hans, Baltimore, Maryland.

DEAR MR. HILKEN: I returned a few days ago from a very successful 2 weeks' business trip in the Middle West, during which I covered dealers in newspapers in about twenty-five cities. You will be interested to learn that we now have open account connections with over five hundred outlets, book sellers, newspapers and agents. The Fatherland gave us their list of accounts which numbered only one hundred and thirty after two years, so I feel we have accomplished quite remarkable results in two months.

Your cordial letter of recent date was awaiting me and I thank you for your good wishes. It seems an age since I last saw you in Baltimore early in December. What a deplorable condition has come about since then as a result of previous lack of wisdom and judgment at Washington.

Well, I am going right ahead with my publishing plans. Enclosed is a copy of the second edition of my catalogue which has been well received. I have important new books in preparation, and while I have spent a lot of my hard earned money, I am confident of ultimate success.

I enjoyed a visit from Mr. Jerguson yesterday. In reply to some inquiries of his, I told him that I could not properly discuss the Koenig book matter further than to say that I am sure of Mr. Hearst's sincerity and believe the Hearst organization will deal fairly with you in settling whatever is due the pension fund of your company.

This brings me to a subject which I have long wanted to talk over with you viz the cheap edition of Koenig's book which we have all understood should be made at the proper time which I think is at hand.

Now, it seems obvious to me that this company named in honor of the Deutschland, and specializing in similar books with unusual success can more successfully exploit the 50 cent or 60 cent paper covered edition than any other company for the benefit of the pension fund. Indeed I know we can do this, and I do not believe the Hearst people will object, if you approve of our taking over the publication. I know Mr. Hearst's idea was only to make profit for the pension fund, and if we can realize more money for the fund on the cheaper edition, I think the Hearst management will not stand in the way.

I am going to take up the matter with them soon, and in the meantime I wish you would write me if it would be agreeable to you to deal with me on the cheap edition after you have made your settlement with Hearst. I should also want to continue the $1.25 editions, as there will be a continuous sale for the cloth bound editions for years.

Won't you please think the matter over and let me hear from you?

Very truly yours,

*

DEUTSCHLAND LIBRARY COMPANY.

Mr. MOORE. What possible connection can that have?

Senator KING. That would still indicate that the Deutschland Library Co. was separate from the Hearst Co.

Mr. MOORE. Absolutely.

Capt. LESTER. Did the Deutschland Co. settle with Paul Koenig for any of the pension funds?

Mr. MOORE. I can not speak for the Deutschland Co. I do not know the first living thing about it. I did not know about it until you stated that, and when I started to look around and find out what it was I discovered what it was—that it was a company started by Mr. James L. Perkins with Mr. Hilken and a man in Boston, whose name escapes me for the moment. I think he has since been interned. I assume that Capt. Lester had the same facilities for investigation.

and could have learned it. He could have learned by inquiring at our office that we discharged Mr. Perkins, and in order to get a contract canceled we paid him one or two thousand dollars so we could discharge him before the expiration of the contract.

Capt. LESTER. When was Perkins discharged from your employ?

Mr. MOORE. I will have to get my data.

Capt. LESTER. About when?

Mr. MOORE. In the fall of the year before; it must have been in the fall of 1915, I should say.

Capt. LESTER. 1915 or 1916?

Mr. MOORE. It may be 1916; 1916 is right.

Capt. LESTER. Is it not a fact, Mr. Moore, that Mr. Perkins inaugurated the Deutschland Co. with money supplied to him by the Hearst organization and undertook not only the publication of the first but the second edition of the Paul Koenig book?

Mr. MOORE. We paid him, I think—I have that data upstairs in a portfolio. I did not think it was important.

Capt. LESTER. It is not a matter of the slightest importance, except in this particular: You have gone out of your way to introduce my name in your statement read before this committee, and have stated that I have made glaring misstatements in reference to the Deutschland Co.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I have done that.

Capt. LESTER. You have done that willfully and intentionally?

Mr. MOORE. Intentionally; absolutely.

Capt. LESTER. That is all I have to say.

Senator KING. You repeat now——

Mr. MOORE. The Deutschland Library had not the slightest connection with the Hearst organization.

Senator KING. Did Mr. Hearst or his company furnish the money for the establishment of the Deutschland Co.?

Mr. MOORE. Perkins stated that he had none of his savings from his work with Hearst. That is the assumption, because he did not have any other money. He went broke and committed suicide.

Senator KING. Did you furnish the money?

Mr. MOORE. Not for that purpose. My file on the discharge of Perkins will show that he was discharged and his contract brought up so we could discharge him before his contract expired. We were still publishing the book when we discharged Perkins.

Senator STERLING. What time had he to serve for you when he was discharged?

Mr. MOORE. He must have had quite a little time, or we would not have paid him that thousand dollars, I think it was.

Senator KING. What position did he occupy?

Mr. MOORE. He was the general manager of the Hearst International Library.

Senator KING. What is the Hearst International Library?

Mr. MOORE. It is a general book concern. It publishes books. We publish stories in the magazines. Once in a while a story comes along that we think would make a good book, and we turn it over to the Hearst International Library to sell. We simply sell to the trade. This whole proposition of connecting that Deutschland book with the Hearst organization, which has been exploited, is purely visionary. When you look back at the situation you get an entirely different idea, I think.

Senator STERLING. What was the pension fund?

Mr. MOORE. I think that ought to be cleared up. As I understand it, it was a pension fund of this commercial company secured from the sale of the book.

Maj. HUMES. It was a pension fund for the widows and orphans of persons in the German submarine service?

Mr. MOORE. No; I understand that is entirely wrong. They might have been in that service, but not exclusively so.

Maj. HUMES. The records show that was the pension fund.

Mr. MOORE. The pension fund only applied to sailors on those submarines?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Maybe I am mistaken.

Maj. HUMES. Is it a fact that the publication of Koenig's book was subsequently turned over to the Deutschland Co. through some arrangement?

Mr. MOORE. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did they publish the final edition of that book?

Mr. MOORE. My records will show I refused even to reply to this man in Baltimore—Hilken, or whatever his name is—and my instructions were to absolutely suppress the publication of the book after we got into the war.

Maj. HUMES. You do not know whether the book was afterwards published by the Deutschland Publishing Co. or not?

Mr. MOORE. I do not. I did not know this Deutschland Co. existed really until I saw the statement had been made that we owned it or controlled it, and then I went and looked it up.

Maj. HUMES. The only issue you raise is as to the fact that Hearst controlled the Deutschland Co. There is no issue raised but what the book was controlled by him, or you are not sure whether it was subsequently published by the Deutschland Co. or not?

Mr. MOORE. No. I have no knowledge of that fact, at all.

Senator STERLING. You have control, you say, of these various magazines?

Mr. MOORE. I have, Senator; yes.

Senator STERLING. And you are the general manager of the magazines?

Mr. MOORE. The general manager of the magazines; yes.

Senator STERLING. You have nothing to do with the newspaper publications at all?

Mr. MOORE. Nothing whatever.

Senator STERLING. Or anything to say concerning the policies of the Hearst newspapers?

Mr. MOORE. Nothing whatever; just the policies of the magazines.

Senator STERLING. You do control the policies of the magazines?

Mr. MOORE. No, sir. Mr. Hearst controls the policies of his magazines to the most minute detail. I simply act for Mr. Hearst.

Senator STERLING. And as his general manager?

Mr. MOORE. And as his general manager.

Senator KING. Has anything appeared in any of these magazines since we have been at war, favorable to Germany?

Mr. MOORE. Not a thing.

Senator KING. Or that could be construed as favorable to Germany?

Mr. MOORE. Not a single line. You see, a magazine is different from a newspaper. It is published carefully. The work is done much more thoroughly, and there is time to give everything proper consideration. It is not like printing the news of the day, in which you have to rush the printing.

Capt. LESTER. I would like to have permission to put in the record copies of some of this correspondence and other records as to which testified in making the statement about the Deutschland Co.

Senator KING. You mean in justification of your statement?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator KING. I feel now that unless you have something to connect it with Mr. Hearst you should not be permitted to make such introduction, without proof of the fact that it was owned and controlled by Mr. Hearst.

Capt. LESTER. There is no question on the issue of my testimony except as our records disclose the fact, and they are here.

Senator KING. The committee will pass upon that when presented. We will now take a recess until half past 2.

(Thereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of the recess.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order.

Capt. Lester, you have something to say in regard to some letters.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER—Resumed.

Capt. LESTER. I desire to put in the record several letters. The purpose in offering these two letters in addition to what has already gone in is to show that Mr. Moore's statement that my statement based upon the records of the Military Intelligence Division is incorrect, is not a fact.

I offer in evidence a letter of June 16, 1917, from Paul G. L. Hilken, American manager of the German Ocean Navigation Co., to Hearst's International Library Co., and a letter of July 6, 1917, in reply hereto, which read as follows:

JUNE 16, 1917.

HEARST'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY COMPANY,
119 West 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

Attention of Mr. McCann.

GENTLEMEN: A few months ago the writer called at your office and discussed with Mr. McCann the advisability of publishing a cheaper edition of Captain Koenig's "Deutschland" book. At the time both he and the writer deemed best to take no action in the matter.

Since then conditions have changed and, owing to the state of war existing between our country and Germany, you, no doubt, will issue no other editions

Captain Koenig's book, and I presume, have discontinued the sale of copies of editions already published, under the arrangement made between your European representative and the Bremen office of the German Ocean Navigation Company, under which you agreed to donate all publishing profits to the Pension Fund of the Deutsche Ozean Rhederel.

If this is so, will you kindly make a settlement for the amount due the Fund from your goodselves, and transfer to me as American Manager for the German Ocean Navigation Company, your copy-rights and publishing-rights. Will also transfer to me the plates, matrixes, etc., which, I presume you have charged off and deducted from the profits, and which are of no further use to you.

I feel sure that this course will meet the approval of my principals and hope that Mr. Hearst, too will acquiesce. If it is not possible to make a complete settlement, I would suggest that you transfer to me the copy rights, plates, etc. and that you make a payment on account of the fund; a final settlement might then be made after you have received a complete report on all accounts.

Appreciating an early decision in the matter, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN MANAGER

JULY 6, 1917

Mr. PAUL G. L. HILKEN,

Amer. Mgr. German Ocean Nav. Co., Ltd., Hansa Haus, Baltimore, Md

DEAR MR. HILKEN: Thank you for your letter of June 16th enclosing a copy of your letter to Hearst's. I am suffering from my annual attack of hay fever, which, while a very healthy disease, is not conducive to mental or physical efficiency, which will explain my delay in answering.

However, I doubt if the Hearst management will hurry about answering, if they answer at all. Of course they should have made a partial settlement of the profits due the pension fund in January or February at the latest and I believe it would have been Mr. Hearst's wishes to make a fair settlement of the account. Under the present management and conditions, unless you get satisfaction soon, I should advise you to address your proposition as outlined in your letter of June 16, direct to Mr. Wm. Randolph Hearst, care of the New York American and mark it "personal."

When the negotiation reaches the proper stage, if the management claim that they have stock on hand, why tell them that you will allow them to take this stock at cost to you, deduct it from the sum due the pension fund, and you will then guarantee you the sale of this stock for the benefit of the fund. I would insist on taking over the plates of both English and German editions of all binding dies which they have charged off and deducted from the profits. This fall we should have a popular edition of the book which will sell for $1.00 in both German and English.

The war has had a very bad effect on the Deutschland Series but I am going ahead as strong as I can with limited capital and hoping for a return to normal conditions on the part of German-American reading public this fall. There are already signs of a revival of interest in our books.

Under present conditions I have not hurried our new books but Der Feldlegionär in German will be ready next week and is a remarkably wonderful book—the advance wrapper enclosed gives a good description of it.

Bolcke's Feldberichte will be ready in both German and English within a month, the English edition being published under the title of "An Aviator's Field Book" in convenient size for our soldiers. Don't you think this is a good idea? Probably I will not use the Deutschland Library Co., imprint on the English edition for the present because of obvious reasons.

I do hope you will press the Hearst people for a settlement and earnestly have to have the privilege in the near future of promoting the sale of Koenig's book along with our other books.

The story of "Moewe" is being translated and will be out in book form this fall.

With highest regards and hoping to hear from you when anything develops, I am

Sincerely yours,

Senator NELSON. Whom is that by? Who signed it?

Capt. LESTER. It is in reply to a letter addressed to "Hearst's International Library Company, attention of Mr. McCann," whoever Mr. McCann is. I am informed that the letter is by McCann, although it may have been written by Perkins.

The information that we have is that the Deutschland book venture, the Koenig book matter, was settled and adjusted. There is charge or implication that there is any impropriety in the transaction at all.

(The three following letters were also later submitted by Capt. Lester:)

MARCH 1, 1917.

MR. PAUL G. L. HILKEN,

American Manager of Deutsche Ozean Reederei, Hansa Haus, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. HILKEN: I returned a few days ago from a very successful five weeks' business trip in the Middle West, during which I covered dealers and newspapers in about twenty-five cities. You will be interested to learn that we now have open account connections with over five hundred outlets, booksellers, newspapers and agents. The Fatherland gave us their list of accounts which numbered only one hundred and thirty after two years so I feel we have accomplished quite remarkable results in two months.

Your cordial letter of recent date was awaiting me and I thank you for your good wishes. It seems an age since I last saw you in Baltimore, early in December. What a deplorable condition has come about since then as a result of previous lack of wisdom and judgment at Washington.

Well, I am going right ahead with my publishing plans. Enclosed is copy of the second edition of my catalogue which has been well received. I have important new books in preparation and while I have spent a lot of my own hard earned money, I am confident of ultimate success.

I enjoyed a visit from Mr. Jerguson yesterday. In reply to some inquiries of his I told him that I could not properly discuss the Koenig book matter further than to say that I am sure of Mr. Hearst's sincerity and believe the Hearst organization will deal fairly with you in settling whatever is due the Pension Fund of your company.

This brings me to a subject which I have long wanted to talk over with you viz. the cheap edition of Koenig book which we have all understood should be made at the proper time which I think is at hand.

Now it seems obvious to me that this company, named in honor of THE DEUTSCHLAND and specializing in similar books with unusual success, can more successfully exploit the 50 cent or 60 cent paper covered edition than any other company, for the benefit of the Pension Fund. Indeed I know we can do this and I do not believe the Hearst people will object if you approve of our taking over the publication. I know Mr. Hearst's idea was only to make profit for the Pension Fund and if we can realize more money for the Fund on the cheaper edition I think the Hearst management will not stand in the way.

I am going to take up the matter with them soon and in the meantime I wish you would write me if it would be agreeable to you to deal with me on the cheap edition after you have made your settlement with Hearst's. I should also want to continue the $1.25 editions as there will be a continuous sale for the cloth bound editions for years.

Won't you please think the matter over and let me hear from you?

Very truly yours,

DEUTSCHLAND LIBRARY CO.

APRIL 24TH, 1917.

MR. PAUL G. L. HILKEN,

Hansa Haus, Baltimore, Md.

MY DEAR MR. HILKEN: Enclosed is a letter I would suggest writing Hearst International Library Co., on the green letter head of the Deutsche Ozean Reederei and signed as American Manager. This will doubtless call forth either complete settlement or some reply on which we can base future negotiations.

Very truly yours,

DEUTSCHLAND LIBRARY COMPANY.

HANSA HAUS,

Baltimore, Md., June 16th, 1917.

MR. J. L. PERKINS,

Deutschland Library Company, 1919 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. PERKINS: "Much water has come down from the mountains" since I received your kind favor of April 24th with your suggestion to write to Hearst's International Library Company. My only excuse for not having attended to the matter sooner is my constant going and coming, here to-day there to-morrow. I have hardly been in Baltimore more than a day or two any one week, only today have had an opportunity to discuss the "Deutschland" book with our Mr. Jergunson and my father.

The letter to the Hearst people has been written and goes by same mail. Copy for your information is enclosed. I trust it agrees with your ideas, that we will soon have some satisfactory reply from the Hearst Company.

I have not yet had a chance to get after the people who have the other books about which I spoke to you. I will try to see them during the coming week. I now have more leisure. How are the sales of your books progressing? I think the war has not had a bad effect.

With best wishes and sincere regards, believe me

Faithfully yours,

(Signed)

PAUL G. L. FULKNER.

Capt. LESTER. There is one reference that I would like to put in the record, taken from the file of Theodore Ritter & Co., of Boston.

This is a summary in regard to Ritter & Co., who were dealers in books, and among the associates of Ritter which are mentioned, this being a summary of all the investigations of people connected with Ritter & Co., is this reference:

In the city of New York, J. L. Perkins, manager of Hearst's Deutschland Library, 1919 Broadway, New York City.

There is a mass of additional correspondence, but as I have stated before to Senator King, this is put in for the purpose of justifying the statement that I have made in reference to the ownership of the Deutschland Library, as disclosed by the files and records in the Military Intelligence, from which I was testifying.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that there be stricken and expunged from the record Mr. Moore's statement and the various allegations and charges contained therein and reflections upon my testimony in this and other respects.

Senator OVERMAN. I wish you would get up those statements and submit them to us and we will pass on them—the statements containing any reflections on you.

Capt. LESTER. I think the stenographer has them.

Senator OVERMAN. You can do that at any time, and we will take them up.

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

STATEMENT OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Mr. BECKER. Before we go on, I would like to make a slight modification of my testimony. I have been thinking as hard as I could, trying to get myself straight on how it happened that the newspaper article showed the statement that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at this Sherry dinner, and I have concluded that I have admitted too much in stating that there was given to the newspaper men an accountant's report that contained that statement. I have reached the conclusion that it was not in any accountant's report.

Senator REED. How did it get out, then?

Mr. BECKER. Wait a minute. I have concluded that it never was in there. I can not get my mind clear on it. In the testimony of Pavenstedt, which was given to the newspaper men at the same time, on page 29, there is this series of questions and answers:

Q. Where were you living in 1916?

A. A German club, 112 West Fifty-ninth Street.

Q. Was Capt. Boy-Ed living at the German Club at that time?

A. He was gone. He left about Christmas, 1915. This all happened in 1916.

Q. Where did he go from there?

A. He went to Germany. He went back to Germany at the end of 1915.

That was the testimony taken on October 3——

Senator REED. What year?

Mr. BECKER. 1917; before these statements were given out; and those present at the taking of depositions were Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, Mr. Robert C. Morris, and myself.

I am inclined to think that Mr. Perley Morse was also present, but his name was not included in those formally recorded.

As I have already stated, the explanation of how it happened, given to me by a reporter on the New York Tribune, was that there was some question of a semicolon which got eliminated, so that the names of Boy-Ed and von Papen were carried into the list of those present at the dinner, when the intent was merely to indicate that they were associates of Pavenstedt.

The whole thing has always been more or less of a mystery to me, but I do recollect this——

Senator REED. When did you discover that the semicolon——

Mr. BECKER. I am not through, if you please.

I do recall this. I recall that the accountant's report, which contains a reference to the dinner, was what led to a discussion of the dinner, at the time we gave out this information, and that one of the reporters found it and he asked about this dinner, and that Mr. Lewis then said so far as he knew the dinner was purely a social affair, or words to that effect.

The written statement that was given out by Mr. Lewis at that time contained no reference to Hearst whatever. That I distinctly recall. When I was in New York this week I tried to hunt up the files of the newspapers so as to get that original statement in the form in which it was given out, that being the only written statement that was given out; but I found that there was not a single New York paper that printed it just as we gave it.

Senator REED. What statement do you refer to now?

Mr. BECKER. The written statement that we had prepared, and which was given out to the reporters.

Senator REED. What was the date of that statement?

Mr. BECKER. On the date that these stories were given out; I think it was the 4th of October, was it not?

Senator REED. When was it that you discovered the semicolon explanation? That is a new one this morning?

Mr. BECKER. No; I mentioned it in my original testimony.

Senator REED. First you stated to us, I believe——

Mr. BECKER. You will find it in the record of the first part of your cross-examination.

Senator REED. I have it all here.

Mr. BECKER. I also stated, at that time—I will refresh your recollection—that the newspaper reporter came and acknowledged the blame, and apologized to us for the difficulties that had originated by reason of his mistake.

Senator REED. Now, just to clear this up a little bit: The statement that appeared in the New York Tribune—and I refer you to the typewritten record, page 4064—was as follows:

The records compiled by Lewis show that at the dinner given to William Randolph Hearst by Bolo Pasha there were also present Adolph Pavenstedt, a friend of Count von Bernstorff, and his directors of bomb plots, Capt. Boy-Ed and von Papen, Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Owen Johnson, and Julius Bols.

In testifying in regard to that you made this statement—allow me to read you now an excerpt from your testimony from page 4074:

Mr. BECKER. In the accountant's report, as originally submitted—I must say that I had not noticed, until this day, that it had been modified, but it appears to have been—there was a paragraph that merely represented rumor, I think, which stated that a very notable dinner was given at Sherry's, one time at which William Randolph Hearst, Bolo Pasha, and others were present. In the original form—this may be given in some other place in the report. I have missed it; but I remember distinctly that in the original form—of the accountant's report the names of von Papen and Boy-Ed were mentioned as being there; which, of course, was impossible.

Again, at page 4075, you say:

Mr. BECKER. Then, lo and behold, in the morning papers, some of the papers appeared the statement which some keen-eyed reporter had gotten out of the accountant's report, which was entirely erroneous, that Boy-Ed and von Papen were present.

Now, since Mr. Morse has come here, you withdraw that statement—that there was anything in his report which would have formed the basis for this statement?

Mr. BECKER. In stating there that I remembered that distinctly I made a mistake, because I do not remember it distinctly, and the whole thing is vague in my mind. I have not had any conversation with Mr. Morse, but after I had made that statement, the whole thing began running through my mind again, and I have been trying for the last 10 days to puzzle that out and get it straight. I am not entirely clear about it yet, but there are certain points that I am clear about. I am clear about the reporter's apology, and his statement that there was a lack of a semicolon which caused an ambiguity in his story, whereupon his story was misconstrued by the other papers and the Associated Press got it wrong.

I think what you read there, Senator, from that story, will give you the secret of the thing, if you will read it carefully. You will see that there is an ambiguity about it—whether it means that Boy-Ed and von Papen were present at the dinner, or merely that they were friends of Pavenstedt.

Senator REED. As to the ambiguity about it, we will just let that go. But did you not testify, on your examination—did you not laugh, here, when I asked you about this Boy-Ed and Von Papen story, and then say, in substance this—I will not go to your testimony for the present—that that was really amusing, and that you were going to show us exactly how it occurred? And then you reached down and got a copy of Mr. Morse's report?

Mr. BECKER. I thought I had a clear recollection, but when I got up the report—

Senator REED. And you started to find out, and you said there was in the report that statement, that some keen-eyed reporter had gotten it out?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And that statement was the one to the effect that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at this dinner. Then you said that the report had been changed since, modified by Mr. Morse?

Mr. BECKER. That it must have been, I think.

Senator REED. Yes. Did you not also say that the reporter came to you the morning or the day after this report had appeared in the newspaper, connecting Mr. Hearst with Boy-Ed and von Papen—did you not say that the newspaper reporter came to you and asked you how you liked the report?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Some reporter did.

Senator REED. And that you said it was all right, and let it go at that?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. When was it that the reporter apologized for his report? The very next day? What was the occasion for him to apologize?

Mr. BECKER. We discovered what he really had put in his report.

Senator REED. When did you discover that?

Mr. BECKER. And the matter naturally was discussed, because Mr. Hearst came in with a 16-inch gun.

Senator REED. When was it you made the discovery—some days afterwards?

Mr. BECKER. Later in the same day.

Senator REED. Now, then, if you discovered it later in the same day, did you learn, at that time, that the reporter had gotten it from Mr. Morse's report? What explanation did the reporter give you at that time? Did he say he got it from Mr. Morse's report?

Mr. BECKER. I think the reporter told me that it was due to the omission of a semicolon. Now that you read his report, I think that is it.

Senator REED. How could you, by the omission of a semicolon, put Boy-Ed and von Papen at a dinner that they never attended in the world?

Mr. BECKER. Very easily. If a semicolon were placed there it would make them merely friends of Pavenstedt. If it were not put there it would make them at the dinner.

Senator REED. Let me see you change a semicolon there now and make it read that way.

Mr. BECKER. I wish I could do it. I would like to get this matter straightened out.

Senator REED (reading):

The records compiled by Lewis show that at the dinner given to William Randolph Hearst by Bolo Pasha there were also present Adolph Pavenstedt, a friend of Count von Bernstorff, and his directors of bomb plots, Capt. Boy-Ed and von Papen. Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Owen Johnson, and Julius Bols.

Now, just put your semicolon wherever you want to and get those gentlemen out of that dinner.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; it is very easy.

Senator REED. Punctuate it now.

Mr. BECKER. Only I would prefer to do it by using——

Senator REED. By using an eraser?

Mr. BECKER. By using parentheses.

Senator REED. By using parentheses?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I will read it to you:

The records compiled by Lewis show that at the dinner given to William Randolph Hearst by Bolo Pasha, there were also present Adolph Pavenstedt—and then put in parenthesis—"a friend of Count von Bernstorff and his directors bomb plots, Capts. Boy-Ed and von Papen"—turn parenthesis—"Mrs. Hearst, Mrs. Owen Johnson, and Julius Bois."

Senator REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. BECKER. Very simple.

Senator REED. Do you not think you had better take a knife and cut it out?

Mr. BECKER. I wish it had been cut out, because it was an unfortunate occurrence.

Senator REED. When you say you wish it had been cut out, why did you not, when you found it was in there and found that it had been circulated all over this country and taken up by the Associated Press, etc.—why did you not come out in a manly statement—

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis did so.

Senator REED (continuing): And say that von Papen and Boy-Ed were not there?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Lewis did so.

Senator REED. Did Mr. Lewis say—

Mr. BECKER. But he would not do it in the way that Mr. Hearst wanted it done. I have it all right here.

Senator REED. Let us see what he did. You have got so vehement about it. You might as well be calm.

Mr. BECKER. I am always somewhat agitated in the presence of misrepresentation.

Senator REED. Well, you must be agitated all the time, for I think you travel with it.

Mr. BECKER. That is very witty, but I think, if the Senator please, the Senator is not justified in making that remark.

Senator REED. Do not start it, that is all. Just keep being a gentleman and you will not have any trouble.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we ought to keep to the ordinary procedure.

Senator REED. Find the statement in which Mr. Lewis exonerates Mr. Hearst.

Mr. BECKER. When Mr. O'Reilly—

Senator NELSON. What are you reading from?

Mr. BECKER. I am stating my personal knowledge first. When Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. De Ford came with their demands, which I characterized, and characterize again, as a demand for a certificate of 100 per cent Americanism.

Senator REED. You have just said that you were going to state your personal knowledge. Were you present when they were there?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that I was.

Senator REED. Will you swear that you were?

Mr. BECKER. I think I will; yes. I was certainly in the vicinity.

Senator REED. Were you present so that you could see and what took place?

Mr. BECKER. That is my recollection. Mr. Lewis prepared a statement, or rather a letter, which he submitted to me first, and when it was agreed should be the only thing that he would give to the gentlemen. The letter was never published in the Hearst paper. But Mr. Lewis took the precaution to send it to the World, which it was printed on Friday, October 5, as follows, there being first a statement that I heard Mr. Lewis give over the telephone:

Mr. William A. De Ford, counsel for Mr. Hearst, and Mr. O'Reilly, his secretary, called on me to-day at my apartments in the Murray Hill Hotel and asked me regarding the truth of the statement attributed to me in the morning papers. I replied that I had made the written statement which appeared this morning. I then handed to Mr. De Ford this letter:

"In compliance with your request, I am handing you herewith a copy of the statement which I gave to the press last evening. This is the only written statement I have made for publication. I made no verbal statement except that, in reply to a newspaper man's inquiry, I said to him that, according to the testimony of a witness, William Randolph Hearst and his wife were present at a social dinner given by Bolo Pasha at Sherry's."

Senator REED. Do you call that a complete vindication to the public of a statement that had gone out purporting to go from your office in which it was charged that Mr. Hearst was present at a dinner—

Mr. BECKER. I was not quite through, there. Mr. Lewis also stated verbally to all the reporters who asked him about it, in their presence, that there was no evidence in his possession that Boy-Ed and Von Papen were there, but, on the contrary, they could not have been there because, as had appeared in the very evidence that had been taken prior to that and which was submitted to the reporters, they had sailed about Christmas, 1915.

Senator REED. Then why did he not put that in this written statement that you and he were preparing so carefully?

Mr. BECKER. Because Mr. Hearst insisted that he should assume and acknowledge the blame for that statement.

Senator REED. Would he have assumed and acknowledged the blame if he had said in his written statement that his statement in the newspapers attributing to him the charge that Von Papen or Boy-Ed were at a dinner at Mr. Hearst's, or with Mr. Hearst, was incorrect; would he have assumed any more responsibility there than he would have when he said it orally, as you claim he said it?

Mr. BECKER. It amounts to the same thing.

Senator REED. There is no use discussing a question of that kind. Are you through with your explanation?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Morse is here and he can probably tell you what was in the report.

Senator REED. Yes; I asked to have him brought here, to have him tell it. I think it has had a good effect.

You stated in your testimony that you did use Mr. Lubin in the Baff murder case?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. In any other cases or matters?

Mr. BECKER. Can you refresh my recollection about that? I am not very clear.

Senator REED. I thought perhaps you could remember, on account of the character of this man.

Mr. BECKER. I do not seem to.

Senator REED. You can not say that you did not use him?

Mr. BECKER. I think I can safely say that I did not; yes.

Senator REED. Was the Baff murder case known as the gangsters' case.

Mr. BECKER. No; I never heard it called that. It may have been, but I never heard it. That term, "the gangsters' case," was usually used in other litigation.

Senator REED. It was a different case. Did you have anything to do with it?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. I notice here on November 3, 1915, that there is an item of $15 for Jacob Lubin.

Mr. BECKER. That settles it, because I had nothing to do with the Baff case until two years afterwards.

Senator REED. That is the only item in the gangsters' case. Now, are there any bills for Mr. Lubin or for moneys that were paid to Mr. Lubin on file in the office in Albany?

Mr. BECKER. I can not say for sure. I keep duplicates of those bills always, and whether they are in the Albany office or the New York office of the attorney general I do not know.

Senator REED. You do keep duplicate bills, and you could give us duplicates of all these bills if they are on file? Are there many on file in the governor's office?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think there are many in the New York office.

Senator REED. Do you or do you not keep duplicates of the bills?

Mr. BECKER. I keep all these city bills. That is ordinary office routine. That is a different thing.

Senator REED. Do you keep duplicates of the vouchers that you send to Albany?

Mr. BECKER. The vouchers under the Peace and Safety Act have all been sent to Albany.

Senator REED. You have no duplicate copies of them?

Mr. BECKER. No; the only thing I would have in New York would be the check stubs.

Senator REED. Have you got the check stubs?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I will ask the committee to require the witness to bring over his check stubs.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you refuse to bring them over?

Mr. BECKER. They are in the same status as the others. I am a subordinate. I want them to go in the same boat as the others, exactly.

Senator OVERMAN. You will bring them with the other vouchers!

Mr. BECKER. Whatever is done with the others. The check stubs will go with the others. If they are sorted out and certain ones removed the check stubs will be the same. They will neither add to nor subtract from them.

Senator REED. I would like to get them. I may not get the other information.

Mr. BECKER. If you do not get those, you may not get these.

Senator REED. I will ask that the committee demand that the witness bring these stubs. We have at last found a record, which he has testified about in a manner which led me to believe he did not have it.

Mr. BECKER. I stated what there was.

Senator REED. If so, the record will show it. My recollection is that he said there was no record in the office. But now, if there is, I will ask that the witness be directed to bring them here, and the committee can then determine the question. I will submit that to the chairman and let the committee decide it in executive session if you desire. I want to go on with some other matters, because I want to get through.

Mr. BECKER. There should not be any misunderstanding. All of the records are in the custody of the attorney general at Albany. I was under the impression that they had been turned over to the governor, but I learned afterwards that while they had been taken to the governor for audit, they had been returned to the attorney general's office.

Senator NELSON. Of the State of New York?

Mr. BECKER. Of the State of New York.

Senator REED. But you still had your office check stubs?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. The records in the office of the attorney general's office.

Mr. BECKER. The vouchers.

Senator REED. You said that Lubin had been used as a stool pigeon in the Becker case.

Mr. BECKER. I had heard so.

Senator REED. You stated so; that he had been a stool pigeon in that case.

Mr. BECKER. I said I had heard so.

Senator REED. And he testified in that case?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember anything about it.

Senator REED. Do you not remember that he not only testified in that case, but that the appellate court, which decided the case, practically said that his testimony was unworthy of belief?

Mr. BECKER. Well, there were two very long opinions in the Becker case, and my impression is that there is nothing of that kind in there in either of them.

Senator REED. Very well. You would recognize a picture of the gentleman, I presume, would you not?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I ever met him, and yet I may have. Possibly the picture will refresh my recollection.

Senator REED. Yes; I will be glad to hand it to you [handing photograph to witness].

Mr. BECKER. I do not think I ever saw him.

Senator REED. Well, I will put it in as a picture of him. I want to put it in evidence in connection with the criminal record of this man.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not mean to put the picture in?

Senator REED. Yes, offer it; but you do not have to print it. I offer it for the purpose of identification in the future. [Reading:]

As Jacob Cohen, 9/11/99, Chicago, Ill., robbery, discharged. (Chicago, Ill. letter of 8/17/00.)

As Jacob Luban, May 1904, St. Louis, Mo., Forgery, On 11/11/04, 2 years, Jefferson City, Mo. Pen., (Motion for a new trial was sustained and on 1/4/05, he pleaded guilty to 3 charges of Forgery, Sentenced to 8 months, City Workhouse and paroled Jan. 23, 1905).

As Jacob Lubin, 7/31/09, N. Y. City, Petit Larceny (Letter box Thief), on 3/09, Discharged, Special Sessions, Officer Landers & Horton, D. B.

As Jacob Lubin, 10/27/10, N. Y. City., Grand Larceny, On 12/13/10, Sentence suspended, Judge Mulqueen, Officer Gegan, Allen & Brown, D. B.

As Jacob Lubin, 5/15/12, Bklyn, Forgery, On 4/5/15, 20 years, Sing Sing, Judge Dike, Officers Van Duzer & Burke, Bklyn D. B., (Out on Writ. 7 3 15) Taken to Sing Sing on March 3, 1916.

As Jacob Lubin, 8/12/12, Newark, N. J., Forgery, on 11/12/12, Discharged, Judge Martin, Officer Fulti & Maier, Newark, N. J.

As Jacob Luban, 7/30/15, N. Y. City., Common Gambler, On 9/17/15, Discharged, Grand Jury, Officer Cantwell, C. O. Sq. #2.

As Jacob Lubin, 2/28/16, N. Y. City., (Forgery of 5/15/12,) Delivered to City Prison, Officers McQuade, 501, Special Quad #5.

Now, is it not a fact that you knew of this man's long criminal record at the time you were employing him?

Mr. BECKER. I never employed him.

Senator REED. Well, at the time he was working out of your office.

Mr. BECKER. He never worked out of my office.

Senator REED. Did you not say he worked in this Baff case that you handled?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. What! Did you not testify that Lubin worked the Baff case?

Mr. BECKER. No; I said that he gave us some confidential information, and that he was paid for it.

Senator REED. Did you not state, "In the Baff murder case he was paid something for confidential information. I have forgotten what it was"?

Mr. BECKER. That is it.

Senator REED. Well, then, if he was working, he was doing something.

Mr. BECKER. But you are trying to make it appear that I was doing something out of the ordinary, which is perfectly ridiculous. Prosecutors undertake to find out some things that are going on inside of prisons. It is rather interesting, since you have gone so much into that, that there was a group of six or seven witnesses of various kinds in an intrigue who expected to get Cohen off at trial by proving statements that were supposed to have been made by Cardinali and the other complaining witnesses. We got rid of that. I believe it was a crooked plot to frame up a defense, and the question was, so to speak, to go inside the State prison and find out what was going on in there, and the only way I know of doing that is to do it through convicts.

Senator REED. And stool pigeons.

Mr. BECKER. It is the ordinary method if you want to get any convictions, if you want to get the facts necessary, and I believe the prosecuting attorneys in Missouri do it.

Senator REED. I want to say that if they did the things disclosed in this case they would be tried and convicted and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. BECKER. I want to say that if a cross-examining attorney conducted himself in New York as you have done in this case he would be found guilty of contempt.

Senator REED. Of you or of the court?

Mr. BECKER. Both.

Senator REED. One of them would be impossible.

Mr. BECKER. Anybody can make those remarks. I can make them myself.

Senator REED. Another thing I want to ask you about, sir, if this man Lubin, who was sent up for 20 years, was not pardoned and turned out by a governor who had been a prosecuting attorney, and he was used in other cases—in the Becker case—and after he was turned out, if he was not used in the Baff case?

Mr. BECKER. I think it is just the other way around.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. One other thing. I forgot to state that the group of witnesses was brought down in the defense of Cohen and kept there all during the trial, and at the end of the trial the defense themselves came to the conclusion that their testimony was not honest, and he did not call any of them as witnesses.

Senator REED. That was a very honorable position to take.

Mr. BECKER. It was taken by Mr. Frank Morse, who is the principal counsel in the defense. He is a very honorable man.

Senator REED. Was that due to what Mr. Lubin had disclosed?

Mr. BECKER. I always felt that Lubin was trying to double cross us.

Senator REED. Did you say that in the Baff case he was paid for confidential information, but that the confidential information did not pan out?

Mr. BECKER. It has come back to me. I have been thinking about it.

Senator REED. You testified about it a few hours ago.

Mr. BECKER. That is the first time I had thought of it for a year.

Senator REED. I will pass on.

Mr. BECKER. I wish you would.

Senator REED. Was Mr. Lubin used in the case of United States against Ringwall?

Mr. BECKER. I have no recollection of it whatsoever.

Senator REED. Did you have something to do with that case?

Mr. BECKER. I am the man who advised, chiefly, the attorney general's office in regard to that case. That was a case where, in substance, there had been an attempt to bribe a deputy attorney general in the Albany office. That was the substance of it. What was done was that after that attempt was made, on my advice—the man on whom the attempt was alleged to have been made was acquitted—on my advice the man was encouraged, to see how far he would go with it. He was encouraged to write letters, and all that sort of thing.

Senator REED. What I am trying to get at is this: Were you and Mr. Musica very active in this case?

Mr. BECKER. We were active in one phase of it.

Senator REED. And is it a fact that the substantial charge here was that this man was forming a conspiracy to defraud the draft?

Mr. BECKER. The specific charge was that they had attempted in a specific case to bribe the deputy attorney general. That was not a part of the case.

Senator REED. The case was broader than that?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; quite.

Senator REED. You and Mr. Musica really organized that case, did you?

Mr. BECKER. The Ringwall case? Mr. Ringwall ordered it.

Senator REED. He was an aid?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. But I am talking about the prosecution.

Mr. BECKER. The investigation of the case was participated in by a deputy in Albany, by a man that posed as an Albany lawyer, could be employed and could influence the attorney general's office and the adjutant general's office. That is about the substance of it and that was the Albany end of it. The New York end of it was conducted by Mr. Musica and me.

Senator REED. Did Mr. Musica appear as an attorney in that case?

Mr. BECKER. He never appeared in it at all.

Senator REED. Under what name did he operate when he was working at that case?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember: he used so many different names at different times.

Senator REED. How many different names did he have? Well, Johnson and Musica. It is interesting to know how many names he had.

Mr. BECKER. In investigations he used Johnson, Musica, Tracy, and several others.

Senator REED. Well, give us those.

Mr. BECKER. I can not remember them.

Senator REED. So many you can not remember them?

Mr. BECKER. I dare say he has used 25 or 30 names in the course of his investigations for us, the same as every secret service man does.

Senator REED. Can you remember some more of the 25 or 30 names?

Mr. BECKER. I know of one occasion when he said he used "Mr. Becker."

Senator REED. Of course, that did not offend you at all?

Mr. BECKER. No; I authorized him to. That was a case where we talked over the telephone and we were trying to get an admission from somebody, and I listened in on an ear piece and had it taken down by a stenographer.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not shorten this? This is not a trial in this sort of cases. We have tried half a dozen murder cases here and never saw such an examination since I was born. It has nothing to do with what we are proposing to investigate.

Senator REED. I think the matter we are trying to bring out is material. If the witness did not go into so many details, I would not know what to do.

Mr. BECKER. I know one case when he pretended to be a man named Galliani, and he talked over the telephone in a similar way, imitating the Italian accent. He convinced one of the defendants in the murder case that he was talking to Galliani and got a lot of information from him to use in that case. He was a very versatile and able man.

Senator REED. He told this man that he was Galliani?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. He did not hesitate to lie about it?

Mr. BECKER. That is the way you have to conduct these investigations. These top-lofty ethics would not get you anywhere.

Senator REED. What I want to get at is, in the trial of this Ring case, if an attempt was not made to serve a subpoena on Mr. Musica?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I heard of it, and I went over there and the judge shut out the attempt to prove that Musica was listening.

Senator REED. He did shut it out. And was there not an attempt to serve it on him, and he escaped through a window?

Mr. BECKER. I think not. I think he would have killed himself if he had, since he was on the ninth floor.

Senator REED. Did he not try to crawl out of a window, and did he not crawl out of a window and go along the coping and escape in that way?

Mr. BECKER. I doubt it very much.

Senator REED. You doubt it?

Mr. BECKER. The coping was only about so wide [indicating]. I never heard of it.

Senator REED. Do you know of him escaping from any window?

Mr. BECKER. No; I think it is preposterous.

Senator REED. But you did refuse to give his name in the trial of a case where a man's liberty was at stake?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. And the judge did not compel you to give his name?

Mr. BECKER. No, sir; that was not it, at all.

Senator REED. Was not that just what you said?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Did you not say that you refused to give his name?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Did you not say, a minute ago, about that?

Mr. BECKER. I said that the judge shut it out. The objection was made by the United States assistant district attorney.

Senator REED. And the judge shut it out?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and the judge shut it out. No; I am wrong on that. I will take that back, now. The judge smelt a rat as to what was happening, that an attempt was being made to make a defense on an utterly immaterial issue, and he shut it out on his own motion.

Senator REED. The judge smelt a rat, and it was not material who might have been working in the case, and he just would not let them ask even the name of the man?

Mr. BECKER. I was sitting on the witness stand, and only one question was asked me: "What is your name?" and the judge said "What is this all about?" Then he said to counsel, "Come up here," and there was a little discussion between him and counsel, and he said he would exclude it all.

Senator REED. The defense in that case was that this was a job worked up by Mr. Musica and others, and the jury acquitted the men in about 20 minutes' time, did they not?

Mr. BECKER. I think you are pretty much wrong about that.

Senator REED. There was an acquittal, was there not, in about 20 minutes?

Mr. BECKER. No; I think you are wrong on that. I think the jury were out quite a long while.

Senator REED. Since we have got so many names for Mr. Musica since this morning, I want to ask you if he was one of the men known as John Johnson?

Mr. BECKER. Not to my knowledge.

Senator REED. Who was John Johnson, do you know?

Mr. BECKER. See if you can refresh my recollection. What have you there?

Senator REED. I have a statement here that the disbursements necessarily made were made to a person by a fictitious name, and then it is put in here "Paid John Johnson, $61." There are a large number of these.

Mr. BECKER. I never had one like that [indicating paper].

Senator REED. Mr. O'Malley appeared in this case.

Mr. BECKER. That is probably under District Attorney Swan.

Senator REED. I am asking you if you know about this. It was in the Baff investigation in 1916.

Mr. BECKER. No; I have not the slightest idea who John Johnson

Senator REED. All right; if you do not know, I will not pursue it. I have just one more question to ask. I want to be a little more specific about this attempt to serve a process on Mr. Musica. You state he was not in an office and did not barricade himself against the process servers?

Mr. BECKER. All I know about it is that I came down to the office and I was informed—I had been away to lunch, or something like that; and I was informed—that somebody had been trying to serve Mr. Musica with a process in that case.

Senator REED. Yes; and what had happened?

Mr. BECKER. And that he was not there. I said "I will take care of that myself. I will go over and myself settle this proposition," and I went over to court, with the result that you know about.

Senator REED. Got it so that the judge would not send for him?

Mr. BECKER. What?

Senator REED. Did you in that case state——

Mr. BECKER. I would like to answer that last question. I will like to have that question read.

(The question referred to was read by the stenographer as follows—)

Senator REED. Got it so that the judge would not send for him?

Mr. BECKER. No such thing occurred.

Senator REED. Did you, in that case, state in court that Musica was in Washington?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Very well.

Mr. BECKER. Positively not.

Senator REED. In connection with this work and investigation of the Bolo Pasha case and in the Humbert case and the Hearst matters. I will ask you if you had under consideration the matter of writing a book.

Mr. BECKER. Not seriously.

Senator REED. Had you taken it up with the Wildman Syndicate?

Mr. BECKER. No; the Wildman Syndicate had up the matter of publishing—well, not the Wildman Syndicate; Mr. Wildman's magazine, I think it is the Forum, had up the matter of writing an article about the Bolo case. That is all that happened in that connection, and I have not seen anybody connected with the Wildman Syndicate since.

Senator REED. Have you had it up with anybody else—the matter of a book?

Mr. BECKER. I have talked over the book question, in a joking way with two individuals.

Senator REED. Yes; was it a joke, entirely?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Did you have the question up of moving pictures in connection with it—these subjects?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that we did have up, seriously.

Senator REED. Yes. Whom did you have that up with?

Mr. BECKER. The question in my mind was if there was not enough dramatic material in the whole Bolo case up to the time of his death to make a scenario for a moving picture.

Senator REED. With whom did you have that up?

Mr. BECKER. With several moving-picture men, whose names I do not recall; and I went so far as to attempt to see what I could do—it was the first experience I had had with that business—in drafting a scenario for a moving-picture story of the Bolo case, and I think I have a lot of my notes here, that I made at that time for that purpose. That was serious, and I still think it would have been a success.

Senator REED. Now, I want to go back.

Mr. BECKER (continuing). But the moving-picture men did not seem to be interested, and they never came around any more. I saw a chance to eke out my meager salary a little bit, there.

Senator REED. Yes; you expected to make some money.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Of course. Is it not a fact, now, in regard to these vouchers, that the vouchers which are now being withheld are the vouchers which show the moneys paid to the witnesses and the snitches and stool pigeons and the partners who were engaged in the business and association for getting evidence? Are not those the very vouchers which are now withheld?

Mr. BECKER. No; there is nothing in that. That is the sort of a question that ought not to be asked, anyhow. It is not a fair and candid question. It is only designed to make copy for a newspaper. That question was framed in that way with the express intent of making something that would read well in the papers.

Senator REED. I am not playing to the newspapers, or writing scenarios for moving pictures, or anything of that sort. I am asking you, now, if it is not a fact—I will be a little more specific with you. I will ask you if it is not a fact that the vouchers which were paid to the two gentlemen who entered into the partnership for the purpose of procuring the evidence, that you referred to this morning, are not among the vouchers that are withheld?

Mr. BECKER. Nothing of that sort ever happened, so that there are no such vouchers.

Senator REED. Do you mean to say that you have not testified here this morning that two men were employed, and they formed a partnership for the purpose of procuring witnesses who would make the affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Nothing of that sort could be found except in the vivid imagination of a reporter.

Senator REED. Did you not make that statement this morning under oath?

Mr. BECKER. No; certainly not.

Senator REED. Did you not make it in substance and effect?

Mr. BECKER. No; certainly not.

Senator REED. I will not press it, because the record shows the facts.

Mr. BECKER. What I said was, that one of these men, McDowell or McDonald, and another man, or something like that, were a firm engaged in controlling the chauffeurs at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, and those were the two men that did the work for us, and I did not want to swear that the check was not made out in the name of the partnership.

Senator REED. But that check, which was paid to that partnership who were just then engaged in the business of getting this evidence, will not that check, or the evidence of that check, be one of the vouchers that is being withheld? Is not that one of those vouchers?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know that anything is being withheld.

Senator REED. Very well; that is all, Mr. Becker; except that when we get those vouchers I may want the witness back.

Mr. BECKER. I do not think it would be a proper method to have counsel rummaging over the vouchers to determine whether he wants the witness back or not.

Senator REED. Well, I say now that I would like to have the witness back then.

Mr. BECKER. All right, that suits me much better. If the vouchers come I will come with them.

Senator REED. All right.

Mr. BECKER. Now, I would like to state to the committee that in view of the hostile cross-examination and the course that it has taken, I feel that, whatever I might think about myself, it is my duty to my former chief to make some statement with reference to the series of transactions that occurred, because, after all, up to the last of last December, while he was Attorney General, he was the man who will have to take the responsibility, coupled with me, for anything that I did as his deputy; so that I am going to review the situation very briefly. I think I can compress it into about five minutes.

Senator REED. It seems to me this is very irregular in a hearing.

Mr. BECKER. In October, 1917, there was an exposé through the newspapers of the facts in the Bolo case, which, as I have stated, consisted of presenting a statement in writing to the papers, of showing them all the evidence that had been taken up to that time, and the accountant's report, and of making such oral explanations as were called for by questions. Unfortunately, I have not been able to find the written statement, but I am positive that it contains no reference to Mr. Hearst whatever.

One of the reporters then inquired concerning the dinner at Sherry's, having, according to the best of my present recollection, obtained information of the fact that that dinner had occurred, from the accountant's report. Mr. Lewis stated that to the best of his knowledge and belief it was merely a social affair.

Senator KING. He indicated that to you or to the reporter?

Mr. BECKER. To the reporter; to all that were present, and I was present throughout. Nothing was said in any way, shape, or manner, and there was nothing in the testimony, that could have in any way justified the statement that Capt. Boy-Ed and von Papen attended the dinner.

The next morning all of the New York papers printed accounts of it, and what happened was, as appears by the statement in the Tribune, that a statement that was really intended to convey the only that Boy-Ed and von Papen and Bernstorff were friends of Pavenstedt, was so worded in the report that it was ambiguous, and could convey to the mind, perhaps, that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at the dinner. I think that is perfectly apparent from the excerpts from the Tribune article that counsel have.

It was subsequently explained to me by the reporter that wrote it, that it was the lack of a semicolon, but I should say, rather, it was the lack of two parentheses, which would have made it perfectly clear that the reference was to those two persons. The unfortunate result was that there was a general copying of the Tribune article by some of the other papers and by the Associated Press, with the result that Mr. Hearst, who was then in California, got the impression that Mr. Lewis had charged him with being present at a dinner at which Bolo Pasha, Pavenstedt, Boy-Ed, and von Papen were present.

On October 5, the next day after the publication, Mr. Hearst sent a dispatch from Los Angeles in the form of a written statement. It has already been read in evidence, and the only point about it that I wish to call attention to is that it contained, first, a statement about his meeting with Bolo Pasha at that dinner; "That is all that I have ever known or seen or heard of Bolo Pasha"; and that it contained, second, a defiance to the attorney general "to disprove any word in his statement of mine, or to sustain any one of his own unwarranted imputations, except his one truthful statement that his association with Bolo Pasha was purely social."

On that same day, the 4th, Mr. Lewis had a call——

Senator REED. Was that 1917 or 1918?

Mr. BECKER. It was all in 1917. On that day Mr. Lewis had a call at the Murrayhill Hotel from two representatives of Mr. Hearst; from Mr. De Ford, his attorney, who has been here throughout these hearings, and Mr. O'Reilly, who was the personal representative of Mr. Hearst. The demand was made that a certain letter be signed, to which some reference has been made here, and I need not go into that.

Mr. Lewis stated that the letter as drafted amounted practically to a confession that he had misrepresented the facts as to Boy-Ed and von Papen being present at the dinner, and that he would not do any such thing; that he would give them a copy of the letter and a copy of the statement in writing that he actually gave out; and I have read that into the record.

If I remember rightly, on the following day, the 5th, there was a call from two other Hearst reporters, at which I was present, at which Mr. Lewis reported that he was not responsible, and should not be held responsible. The reporter afterwards apologized both to Mr. Hearst and to me for having started this mare's nest.

Senator NELSON. You mean not to Mr. Hearst and you?

Mr. BECKER. No; he apologized to Mr. Lewis and me for having started this mare's nest on Boy-Ed and von Papen.

Senator KING. Was the correction made in the Tribune or the Associated Press?

Mr. BECKER. I think it was. I prefer to confirm that by examination of the files. Of course, the facts spoke for themselves, because everybody that knew anything about it knew that Boy-Ed and von Papen had been out of the country since December, 1917.

Senator REED. Do you have any recollection of a correction having been made and sent out to the country?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. When?

Mr. BECKER. It is indefinite in my mind.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. As I say, I would like to consult the files on that.

Senator REED. I wish you would consult them and bring them.

Mr. BECKER. Now, during the same month of October, and during subsequent months, and continuing down to the present time, various departments of the Government have been engaged in investigating Mr. Hearst's alleged pro-Germanism and disloyalty. I doubt if any of the investigating branches of the Government is exempt from the taint of improper activity, and I think I may properly state that during October, 1917, and down to April, 1918, I had quite a protracted correspondence with the French Government on the subject, but I have been unable to obtain the permission to read that correspondence here.

In February the Bolo Pasha trial occurred, and in that connection I would like to read, from a report that I have of the trial, certain things which occurred. This is partly a narrative report and partly a stenographic one.

Senator REED. Now, I submit——

Mr. BECKER. Just a moment. I am not quite ready to read it yet. I was requested by Senator Reed on the first day to produce this here if I could, and I have it now.

Senator REED. Let us see it.

Mr. BECKER. It is in French, and I shall have to translate it.

Senator REED. Is that the original that you have there?

Mr. BECKER. It is my copy from the source from which I obtained it, which was a very elaborate report of the French trial in a French newspaper.

Senator REED. You say that I asked you to get a report from a French newspaper of that trial?

Mr. BECKER. You did not make any reference to a newspaper. I said that I had an accurate and full report of the trial, and I offered to state the substance of what was proved there, from memory, and you said you would prefer to have it from the accurate French account.

Senator REED. Very well; you have not got it here. We have a newspaper account. I object to that.

And this witness, by the way, who asked merely to be permitted to make some explanations, is now going into new matter. I do not know when you want to end this case.

Senator NELSON. Well, Mr. Reed, he is the witness of the committee. We have the right to him.

Senator REED. Certainly; if the committee wants to hear him, I am just making the point to the committee.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. I translate as follows:

At the fifth session of the trial, Rene Prevost, lieutenant attached to the Bureau of the Foreign Press, speaks of Hearst and of his newspapers.

Senator REED. I submit that is not evidence, and it is not a proper thing to bring it in here.

Senator NELSON. It is as much evidence as the rest of it we have got here.

Senator KING. There is so much hearsay evidence that has gone in, and there is so much evidence that is not recognized as evidence, that while I do not think it is competent or material, as it is purely hearsay—

Mr. BECKER. It is a report of sworn testimony at a trial, and as you will see, very accurately stated.

Senator REED. And of course that would be hearsay in this case.

Senator NELSON. It is of the same character as most of the testimony we have had here. We have had statements and summaries of testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in. Go ahead.

Mr. BECKER (continuing translation):

An article on Hearst which appeared in the Journal to-day disquieted the censorship.

Senator KING. You mean the article to which you referred some time ago, which was published in the Journal?

Mr. BECKER (continuing translating):

Mr. Prevost declared that articles containing eulogies of Hearst had been on many occasions presented to Senator Humbert's newspaper personally by Mr. Charles S. Bertelli, representative at Paris of the International News Service. The Lieutenant declared that his attention had been drawn the first time to Bolo Pasha by an article containing a eulogy of Mr. Hearst printed in English, in La Victoire. He described also the relations of Bolo Pasha with the American press.

Lieutenant Prevost declared that he had received an order to make translations of many articles appearing in the Hearst newspapers, after which the censorship decided not to allow any articles containing a eulogy of Mr. Hearst to be printed, as the censorship considered him as absolutely pro-German.

Then was called Mr. Bertelli, the American correspondent, and he denied that Mr. Hearst had ever been pro-German. It has been said in the market place that he was.

The president of the court, the presiding judge, said. "The phrase has not been pronounced."

Mr. Mornay, the prosecutor, said, "I pronounced it."

Mr. Bertelli said Mr. Hearst was a Federalist, like President Wilson.

Bolo has said that he wished to win over Hearst to pro-French sentiment, That did not have any result, since these sentiments, he has always professed them.

Mr. Bertelli made the voyage from America with Bolo, whom he found charming. He introduced the Pasha to Hearst and assisted at the dinner at Sherry's.

Q. Who gave it?

A. Bolo and I.

Q. Who paid for the dinner?

A. Bolo.

Q. Is it not a fact that Bolo loaned you money?

A. Oh, yes; with the best grace in the world; and he has, furthermore, been reimbursed.

Now, at the seventh session of the Bolo trial the witness was Mr. Henri Cain. His testimony was as follows:

Bolo was my friend during seven months and a half. It was I who prepared the president of the Republic, my friend always, to receive him and give him an audience. It was before the voyage to Spain of Messrs. Bolo and Humbert. Bolo did not devote himself at all to the Spanish question. He spoke of Hearst and of the Khedive. Immediately the conversation became very cold.

Senator REED. I would like to have you file that original memorandum.

Mr. BECKER. That last should have been translated:

Immediately the conversation became more cold, instead of very cold.

Senator REED. I would like to have the original of that statement filed.

Mr. BECKER. All right [handing statement to the committee]. The investigation of the Bolo case succeeded, along precisely the same lines as the Humbert case, at the request of the French Government. There are four or five letters rogatory in the Humbert case, and it was necessary to keep most of it confidential, for the benefit of the investigation. However, I can read the precise part under which the evidence was taken.

In the letters rogatory of February 26, 1918, the following occurred:

In a general way, to proceed to all investigations, hearings, and such measures.

That was the subject of communications between——

Senator NELSON. Have you finished taking these letters rogatory?

Mr. BECKER. No; I have not finished. That was the subject of correspondence between the French Government and me.

On June 15, 1918, a report of what could be stated by Francis Berkowitz, Cornfield, and Fredricksen—those are the names—was given to me in the form of affidavits. Many other witnesses have been interviewed whose testimony would have some relation to the possible participation of Hearst in this pacifistic plot, but these are the only ones whose affidavits were taken. There were depositions taken of other persons, one on the 8th of April and one on the 22d of April, both of which touched upon Mr. Hearst.

Senator REED. By the way, will you file those depositions with the committee—the copies that you have?

Mr. BECKER. Well, they ought to be privileged on account of having relation to the Humbert case.

Senator REED. You had stated to me that you had turned them over to me to allow me to examine them this morning.

Mr. BECKER. I misunderstood you. Yes, indeed. I thought you referred to something else.

Senator REED. I am referring to the depositions of all these witnesses.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Here they are. [Handing papers to Senator Reed.]

Some time in the summer, possibly in May, Mr. Lewis announced his candidacy for governor.

On July 22 Luke J. O'Reilly announced the candidacy of Mr. Hearst for nomination for governor on the Democratic ticket, and petitions were circulated, necessary under our law, to procure Mr. Hearst's nomination. We do not nominate under the convention system. We nominate at primaries by petition.

Senator NELSON. You nominate by petition?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I thought I had here some of those petitions. There is the designating petition for the nomination of William Randolph Hearst for governor of the State of New York on the Democratic ticket.

On July 22 Theodore Roosevelt declined to run for governor on the Republican ticket.

On the 23d the unofficial Democratic convention met at Saratoga. Mr. Hearst still being a candidate, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the convention——

Senator REED. Now, wait. Mr. Chairman, are we going to have the resolutions of political conventions put in here?

Mr. BECKER. This is all necessary, I think, to explain the course of events and the reason why things were done and to take away the unjustifiable inferences that counsel has sought to draw from the situation.

Senator REED. I do not know what this resolution is, Mr. Chairman, but——

Senator OVERMAN. Let me see it.

Mr. BECKER. Here it is. [Handing paper to the chairman.]

Senator REED. But I submit that if it does go in——

Mr. BECKER. That was the resolution that blew Hearst out of the water as a candidate for governor.

Senator REED. I submit that if that sort of thing were to go in, then the whole political proceedings of the State of New York might become pertinent.

Mr. BECKER. They have pretty nearly all gone in, thanks to the cross-examination.

Senator REED. Oh, no. I just simply asked a few questions about whether there were certain gentlemen who were candidates, in order to get at your animus.

Mr. BECKER. I think counsel will recognize that he has asked about 300,000 questions concerning political matters.

Senator KING. I think it is unnecessary to have that colloquy.

Senator REED. It does not make any difference. I suppose.

Senator NELSON. I suppose the resolution has been published, anyway. Senator Reed.

Senator REED. I suppose it has, a hundred times; but it is a strange thing to bring in here.

Senator OVERMAN. Everybody knows that resolution has been published. I saw it myself.

Mr. BECKER. If everybody knows about it, we will pass it by.

On the 23d of July, the same day, in the afternoon, as I understand it, Arthur Brisbane called on Charles S. Whitman, who was the opponent of Mr. Lewis in the primary campaign, at the St. Regis Hotel; and on July 25, 1918, two days later, an attack in Mr. Hearst's Democratic Evening Journal appeared on the Republican candidate for governor, Merton E. Lewis, headed:

HAIL—THE GANG'S ALL HERE.

AND BEHOLD, IT WANTS MERTON E. LEWIS.

Why, in the opinion of Mr. Merton E. Lewis, is the old gang, each man with a tear in each eye, anxious to have him run for governor?

Why do Root, Barnes, and Elon R. Brown—Root, the trust Don Quixote; Barnes, the Sancho Panza; and Elon R. Brown Sancho's donkey—all want Lewis for governor?

Why have these men such hostility to Whitman?

On July 30 here is another, which contains a cartoon attack on Barnes and that eminent and admirable statesman, Mr. Root; Elon R. Brown, who was lately retired from the leadership of our senate full of legislative honors; and Attorney General Lewis, who was pictured as standing in front of Mr. Root's door, although, as a matter of fact, Mr. Root did not come out for Mr. Lewis in the campaign at all.

On July 31 the same bete noires of Mr. Hearst, Barnes and Root and the Wall Street machine, are shown taking a picture of Attorney General Lewis, pictured as a little boy sitting up on a chair holding in his lap a rum hound.

An editorial entitled "A little attorney general who would make a still littler governor."

On August 1 the rum hound again appears in the cartoon, with tag on his tail called "The liquor interests," and Attorney General Lewis is shown as a little boy; and in the background our great statesman, Elihu Root, is pictured in an attitude of I know what—it is beyond description.

While it is amusing, it is scurrilous.

It was the opinion of Attorney General Lewis that the intent was in this way for Hearst to support Mr. Whitman.

Right at this time, continuously, every day, paying no attention to politics—and I had nothing to do with the Lewis campaign even in the very slightest degree—I was engaged in the investigations that I was conducting. We proceeded to take the depositions of the different witnesses.

Senator REED. Were you a candidate then?

Mr. BECKER. Not yet. My candidacy was announced, I believe, on the 31st of July.

Senator REED. Right after that?

Mr. BECKER. Almost at the time——

Senator REED. You had the varioloid at that time, but had not broken out into the actual disease?

Mr. BECKER. No. You see, the whole situation developed some time after Mr. Roosevelt declined to run for governor.

It was in the fiery heat of that situation that these depositions were taken. I knew about the evidence, and it grew while we were in the course of taking it, and I consulted with Mr. Lewis about the matter, and we concluded, as there had been this specific challenge published in the Hearst papers defying the Attorney General to disprove any word in this statement, that this particular part of the mass of evidence bearing on Hearst, that we had taken, could properly be put into an affidavit which could be used and given publicity; not alone for the purpose of meeting the attacks that were being made on Mr. Lewis of this scurrilous character, but also for the equal purpose, or the far superior purpose, if you please, of enlightening the public as to something that we believed to be a matter of great interest to the public.

The depositions were taken. They were taken in the Humbert case because they were of importance in that case and, I believe, in the trial of the Humbert case, they will be presented in evidence in the French court, as I have read enough, in my opinion, from the records of the Bolo trial to show that the participation of Hearst in the matter, the use of laudatory articles of Hearst as an enterprising wedge toward the pacifist campaign, was the theory on which the Bolo case was tried, and on which, presumably, the Humbert case will be tried.

However, it did not seem to us that it was exactly proper to publish the depositions themselves—they being taken for the purposes of Humbert case, which we thought at that time would be soon tried after that—in a political campaign.

So, at the same time, I prepared a series of affidavits based on those depositions, containing, as accurately as I could manage, the substance of them; and those affidavits which were not official records in the Humbert case, were used for the purpose we had of publicity at that time. That is all there is to this story. If that be treason, make the most of it.

Senator REED. Have you finished, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. Just a moment.

After the commencement of these hearings, the old Hearst methods of attack were again begun, and I wish to file with the committee an earlier and a later edition of the Evening Journal for December 23, 1918.

In the earlier edition there appear at the left, at the head of the editorial page, a picture of Mr. Lewis, then two pictures of Charles H. Jerome, and then a picture of me. And over the head of it it says: "Attorney General Lewis, Deputy Attorney General Becker, and their Convicted Felon"—which last the casual reader might suppose applied to me and if he compared Mr. Jerome's looks with mine as shown in that photograph, I do not think anybody could fail to think that I was the convicted felon. One thing I complain of is that any such snapshot photograph as that should be used as my picture, because it is libelous to my sense of personal dignity and beauty.

First it designates Attorney General Lewis, then Charles H. Jerome, ex-convict—this poor chap who has to be paraded in the papers again, and who can not be allowed to rest in peace——

Senator REED. Or given a job.

Mr. BECKER. Then "Deputy Attorney General Alfred L. Becker, tool of Attorney General Lewis in the malicious effort to besmirch the reputation of Mr. Hearst."

In a later edition, evidently discovering an ambiguity about it, they moved my picture over in better company, next to Mr. Lewis. [Handing to committee newspapers referred to.]

I stated, during the first part of my cross-examination, that I anticipated that this would happen, and it has happened.

Senator REED. Do you, in making these statements, claim to represent in any way Mr. Lewis?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Now, were you through?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. I want to ask you a question which I omitted. I shall not refer to this statement.

When you took the affidavits and depositions, there were some pictures attached which are referred to in the affidavits as exhibits, I think as Exhibits 1, 2, and 3?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And they are referred to in the depositions, I believe, in the same way?

Mr. BECKER. They are loose around here somewhere. What has become of them? Here they are.

Senator REED. Please hand them to me.

Mr. BECKER. Here they are—1, 2, and 3. [Handing photographs to Senator Reed.]

Senator REED. I am inquiring, now, about the pictures that were attached to the original affidavits that Mr. Musica took, and which you said were detached from those affidavits. Are these papers which you have handed me those same pictures that were attached to the original affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. They are not?

Mr. BECKER. They are identical, except that they are different prints. That is what I mean.

Senator REED. Were the pictures that were attached to the original affidavits photographs like these are, or were they newspaper prints?

Mr. BECKER. They were the same ones, exactly.

Senator REED. They were identical with the ones which you have now handed me?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. And the ones which you have now handed me—that it will appear in the record—are photographs?

Mr. BECKER. One of them is an original photograph. The Bolo ones are photographs taken from magazines.

Senator REED. Exactly. Which is the original photograph?

Mr. BECKER. That is plain to the eye. I am just judging by the eye.

Senator REED. I am asking you to tell which ones they are, so that I can identify them and offer them in evidence.

Mr. BECKER. This one, the picture of von Bernstorff, is taken directly from the negative.

Senator REED. The one of von Bernstorff, you say, is an original picture?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. We will have that marked, now, as an exhibit.

Mr. BECKER. It is marked on the back.

Senator REED. It is marked on the back. "Exhibit 3, W. B. F. I will ask the reporter of the committee here to initial it.

(The reporter thereupon initialed the photograph on the back, "F. R. H.")

Senator REED. There still remain two other pictures, which are both pictures of Bolo. Is that right?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. These pictures of Bolo Pasha are not original photographs, but are photographs of a newspaper or magazine picture, are they not?

Mr. BECKER. They were taken from some French periodical in each case.

Senator REED. Let them be initialed, now, by the reporter. One of them is marked "Exhibit 1, S. B. stenographer," and the other is marked, "Exhibit 2, S. B. stenographer." I will ask the reporter of the committee to initial these also.

(The reporter thereupon initialed each of the photographs on the back, "F. R. H.")

Senator REED. Who was it that had the French magazine or newspaper in which these pictures had appeared photographs of the picture that you obtained these photographs of the picture?

Mr. BECKER. I directed it to be done.

Senator REED. In what French newspaper or magazine did you find the pictures?

Mr. BECKER. I think one of them was in L'Illustration. As to what the other one was in I do not recall.

Senator REED. Which one do you think was in L'Illustration? Describe it by number?

Mr. BECKER. I think it was No. 2.

Senator REED. You think it was No. 2?

Mr. BECKER. I may be wrong about that. When you check it up, you may find that I am mistaken about that.

Senator REED. What was the other picture in?

Mr. BECKER. I do not remember that.

Senator REED. Can you not give us any idea? The one that you are uncertain about is the one that shows Bolo Pasha at the bar?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. It may have been the one that was in the French paper; but I think it was the other.

Senator REED. All that you can be certain about is——

Mr. BECKER. Let me see it. I think I have one way of guessing it. I will guess for you. That is all I can do.

Senator REED. All right.

Mr. BECKER. I shall have to withdraw that, about it having been in L'Illustration. I think each of them was in a French newspaper. You see the photograph shows signs of a fold there. I think each of them was in a French newspaper, that was folded.

Senator REED. What French newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. I could not tell you that.

Senator REED. Who did the photographing for you?

Mr. BECKER. I do not know who the photographer was.

Senator REED. Whom did you send on the errand to have the photographing done?

Mr. BECKER. I could not even tell you that.

Senator REED. Was it Musica?

Mr. BECKER. No; I am pretty sure it was not. I had other assistants that I would usually send for such things as that.

Senator REED. What photographic company usually does your work?

Mr. BECKER. It is a place on the corner of Broadway and Chambers Street, upstairs. Underwood, is it?

Senator REED. I do not know.

Mr. BECKER. I think it is Underwood.

Senator NELSON. Does not the back of the photograph show, Senator Reed?

Senator REED. No; it does not, Senator. It is blank.

Now, Mr. Becker, were these pictures, in your judgment and best opinion, taken by Underwood?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no. I would not be responsible for that. There is no use in trying to guess about it, I suppose.

Senator REED. As a matter of fact, you got hold of a French newspaper or a French magazine that contained these pictures, and you turned that over to somebody in your office whose name you can not now place, and who went and had it photographed, and you think likely at Underwood's?

Mr. BECKER. That is about right. That is as closely as I can come to it.

Senator REED. Is there any way that you can ascertain what French newspaper or magazine you used as the original of these exhibits—Exhibits 1 and 2?

Mr. BECKER. I think it would be very difficult. I had the hardest time in the world to get possession of files of French papers. I tried to get all that I could find in any of the French newspapers bearing on Bolo Pasha.

Senator REED. When did you begin that search?

Mr. BECKER. About October or November, 1917, and I have been doing it ever since—

Senator REED. You were conducting an investigation for the French Government. Do I understand that you want the committee to understand that the French Government could not get plenty of pictures, real, genuine, good pictures, of Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BECKER. They could have done it very easily. I never thought of it. It never occurred to me to make that request.

Senator REED. What?

Mr. BECKER. I did not make the request. I wish you had been there, because that would have been such a good way to do it.

Senator REED. It would have been so obvious that I should have thought even Musica might have thought of it.

Mr. BECKER. Well, it takes a Senator to think of some things.

Senator REED. That is true; they can think of some things that other people can not; but that is a perfectly obvious thing to have done, is it not? Anybody could have thought of that?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I will tell you. I admire the French people, but I used to send over there for various things, and would usually get them about four or five months later. Probably that is the reason that I did not do it. I never knew anything as slow as the tape of the French foreign office in my life.

Senator REED. Can you tell us the date of the newspaper or publication in which the picture appeared which shows Bolo Pasha at the bar?

Mr. BECKER. No; but it unquestionably was in February.

Senator REED. 1917?

Mr. BECKER. 1918.

Senator REED. 1918?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. I am going to ask you, now, if you will make inquiry at your office and endeavor to produce and send to the chairman of the committee the original paper or the magazine which contained these photographs which you have produced as Exhibits 1 and 2.

Mr. BECKER. I should be very glad to oblige, but I am pretty busy and I would not like to bother with so trifling a thing unless I am directly requested by the chairman of the committee to do it.

Senator REED. I ask the chairman of the committee to ask for those papers.

Senator OVERMAN. We would be very glad if you could do it, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I will try.

Senator REED. All right.

Mr. BECKER. I will say that one of those photographs appeared, also, in an American newspaper—in several of them—but I think I got it out of a French one.

Senator REED. Which one appeared in an American newspaper, and in what American newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. To the best of my recollection, this one of Bolo Pasha at the bar appeared in some American newspaper or other.

Senator REED. Do you remember what paper it was?

Mr. BECKER. I think it appeared in several. I saw it in several ones. What ones I do not know.

Senator REED. That is Exhibit 1; Pasha at the bar.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I think the other one appeared in some American newspaper, too.

Senator REED. When you say the other one, you mean Exhibit 2?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You do not know what American newspaper it appeared in, do you?

Mr. BECKER. No; I can not say.

Senator REED. Did you get an American newspaper and have it photographed in order to get these Exhibits 1 and 2, or was it a French newspaper?

Mr. BECKER. I have said that I am very sure that one of them came out of a French newspaper, and I still think it is out of a French newspaper.

Senator REED. But you can not remember the name of the paper?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. I want to know, when you were getting the Fredriksen affidavit, when his affidavit was first taken by Mr. Musica, if he was shown these particular pictures that you have shown here marked "Exhibits 1, 2, and 3," or if he was shown other pictures at the same time?

Mr. BECKER. He was shown some other pictures besides those. He was shown those, I happen to remember.

Senator REED. He was shown those particular pictures—Exhibits 1, 2, and 3—and additional pictures. What other pictures?

Mr. BECKER. I had a whole picture gallery of German celebrities, and I remember that I had shown him also the photographs of Boy-Ed and von Papen. I think that was all; but I think I had some others.

Senator REED. And you asked if he had ever seen Boy-Ed or von Papen?

Mr. BECKER. If that would refresh his recollection.

Senator REED. Did you get Boy-Ed's and von Papen's pictures in the same way you got Bolo Pasha's, by photographing magazine pictures, or did you have photographs?

Mr. BECKER. My recollection is that we bought them as we did the Bernstorff photographs, from somebody who deals in those.

Senator REED. In photographs. When you showed him the Boy-Ed and von Papen pictures he was not able to identify them?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. You told them that they were Boy-Ed's and von Papen's, and asked them if they could identify them?

Mr. BECKER. I asked him if he could identify them. I had them with me at the session in August, but I think they were there on the previous occasion.

Senator REED. On the previous occasions you were present with Mr. Musica and talked with these persons whose affidavits he took at the first instance?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator REED. Do you know what pictures he showed them?

Mr. BECKER. I know what ones were attached to the affidavits.

Senator REED. And they were the same pictures that were produced here?

Mr. BECKER. That is my recollection.

Senator REED. These identical documents?

Mr. BECKER. I have said "no" to that. They were not the same prints, but ones exactly the same, to the best of my recollection.

Senator REED. I did not understand you to say "No."

Mr. BECKER. The record will show that that is what I did say.

Senator REED. I want to get it right. The pictures that Mr. Musica had attached to the first affidavits he took were not the particular pieces of paper that are here now, but are an exact duplicate of these here. Is that what you mean to say?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; to the best of my recollection, subject to correction if that is not correct.

Senator REED. I would like to call Mr. Morse. He is a busy man, and I am through with this witness.

TESTIMONY OF MR. PERLEY MORSE.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator REED. Your name is Perley Morse?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. And your residence is in New York City?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. And your profession is what?

Mr. MORSE. I am a certified public accountant.

Senator REED. Were you engaged at one time in investigating the fiscal transactions of Bolo Pasha, taking it through some of the banks?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. You are the man who has been referred to in the testimony as the man who put together the evidence which formed the strongest link against Bolo Pasha—that is, by bringing in the bank accounts and showing their connections?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. When were you first employed on that work?

Mr. MORSE. My first employment was due to a letter which I received from Attorney General Lewis under date of September 2, 1917, and I commenced work immediately afterwards.

Senator REED. I have not talked with this witness, and I am going to say to him that if there is any matter that he thinks ought to be stated to the committee, that I do not inquire about, he has entire liberty to make the statement, as far as I am concerned.

How long was it before you concluded that investigation of the fiscal transactions?

Mr. MORSE. My report was rendered to the attorney general under date of September 21, 1917.

Senator NELSON. You were not a long time at it?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir; I have a large organization, Senator, and I employed a great many men.

Senator REED. Was that report in writing, Mr. Morse?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. As you originally filed it with Attorney General Lewis, did you ever withdraw it or any part of it and change it?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Senator REED. Is there a statement in that report to the effect that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at a dinner with Mr. Hearst?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Senator REED. The statement, then, that you afterwards changed your report putting in the names of these men, and that your first report did have them in, is incorrect?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir; and it has to be so, Senator, because I have only made four copies of this report, three of which were delivered to the Attorney General for his disposal, and the fourth copy, which we call our proof-reading copy, is here in my hands; and I think that if the reports I rendered to the Attorney General are compared with his, you will see they are all the same.

Senator REED. I wish you would turn to that clause in your report which makes a reference to that dinner and read it.

Mr. MORSE. It is one paragraph in the report. It reads as follows:

In the New York branch of the Royal Bank of Canada I interviewed one E. C. Pignatel, an employee of this institution, who, I was told by a Mr. McKinney, also of this bank, was very familiar with all of the details surrounding the transactions of Bolo Pasha. Mr. Pignatel said to me that he knew Bolo Pasha before these transactions had taken place, and had been very friendly with him, and had had a great many private and confidential talks with him; but he always supposed that Bolo Pasha was here in the interest of promoting anti-German sentiment in favor of France, and to this end he was trying to convert William Randolph Hearst, who he thought was pro-German; that a very notable dinner was given at Sherry's one time, at which William Randolph Hearst, Bolo Pasha, and others were present.

Senator REED. This statement, as you have just read it, is as it was in your report first, last, and all the time?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. During the time that you were investigating the Bolo Pasha case—let me ask you this question preliminarily: When you got through with the Bolo Pasha case, were you afterwards called in in the Humbert case in any way?

Mr. MORSE. Why, the Bolo case and the Humbert case were run together, in a way, because in investigating the Bolo Pasha matter I found that certain funds had been transferred from the Bolo Pasha fund to the Humbert accounts in the offices of one of our bankers in New York City, and I called the attention of the Attorney General to this, and he told me to investigate as to the Charles Humbert matter as it was called, and I did so, and made a report to the Attorney General on that matter under date of October 7, 1917.

Senator REED. In that report of October 7, 1917, is there any statement to the effect that Boy-Ed and von Papen were at a dinner with Mr. Hearst?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Senator REED. There never was any such statement in it?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Senator REED. When did you begin work on the Humbert case? believe you said you made a report October 5?

Mr. MORSE. October 5.

Senator REED. Was that the date of the report or the date it began?

Mr. MORSE. That is the date of my report. We commenced work on the case—I can tell by referring to a memorandum I have here—probably some four or five days prior to that.

Senator REED. During the time you were investigating these cases or either of them, did you come in contact with Mr. Becker?

Mr. MORSE. Practically after finishing the Bolo Pasha investigation.

Senator REED. In what way did you come into connection with Mr. Becker?

Mr. MORSE. In making our investigation of the Bolo Pasha matter we recommended the examination of certain witnesses, and some of those witnesses were represented by a lawyer whom I knew very well—a lawyer whom I used to meet at the Lawyers' Club in New York City, and one day while we were engaged in the investigation he said to me, "You are very busy nosing around among my clients."

Senator KING. I do not think that is material.

Mr. MORSE. I am leading up to something, Mr. King.

Senator KING. Cut it short.

Mr. MORSE. I am trying to make it short, as I am just as anxious as you to get through and go home.

I did not express any opinion. He says, "You are making an examination of G. Amsinck."

Mr. BECKER. You mean Reperti. Amis was dead.

Mr. MORSE. I mean G. Amsinck & Co., the firm.

He says, "When you want to take their depositions you will have to subpoena Mr. Pavenstedt. He will come as a willing witness, or as one in G. Amsinck & Co.'s office whom you want." So I remember that conversation, and after we were ready to take depositions of the gentlemen Mr. Albert C. Morse and myself had a conversation with this lawyer in the Lawyers' Club at that time. He outlined all of the testimony that Mr. Pavenstedt would give, so when it came to the matter of taking the depositions Mr. Becker was sent for by Attorney General Lewis, and he came down to New York and conducted the examination. Mr. Pavenstedt, I may say, was a willing witness. His lawyer was there to guarantee that he was going to tell the truth.

Senator REED. Who was the lawyer?

Mr. MORSE. His name was Joseph Proskower.

Senator REED. And Pavenstedt in this deposition which he voluntarily and willingly gave furnished the connecting links in the testimony against Bolo Pasha?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. And Pavenstedt was a German and has been interned, has he not?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. So that Pavenstedt, the German, now interned, voluntarily furnished the evidence to you that connected the Bolo Pasha fiscal transactions up with the German Government?

Mr. MORSE. No; he only corroborated it, Senator.

Senator REED. Corroborated it. He corroborated it and furnished a link; or, if he did not furnish a link, he was a witness that helped furnish it.

Mr. MORSE. Because I have in my report the exact connecting up of this money with the German Government. I have photographs that I took of the transactions at the time.

Senator REED. Then Pavenstedt, however, gave the material testimony which bore out the book evidence which you had obtained?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. Pavenstedt was the man who had come over to see Count von Bernstorff, was he not?

Mr. MORSE. He came over from New York to Washington to see him; yes, sir.

Senator REED. He was the go-between between Bolo Pasha and Count von Bernstorff, in the first instance?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. Now, Bolo Pasha went home after he had gotten this money, and you found—did you find out what became of the money?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. What had Bolo Pasha done with this money?

Mr. MORSE. Some of it he had transferred to Senator Humbert, a few dollars to one Jules Bois, and the rest of it he had transferred over to France to certain banking institutions.

Senator REED. Had part of it gone into a munitions factory?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir; the records did not show that.

Senator REED. That was the testimony of Mr. Becker, as I remember it. No part of it was traced to any German use?

Mr. MORSE. Not on its face.

Senator REED. Not on its face. Now, this money having been obtained from Count von Bernstorff by Bolo Pasha and taken back to France and not used—on its face, at least—for any German purpose, Mr. Pavenstedt, the German, voluntarily furnished evidence against Bolo Pasha, and that evidence tended to show that Bolo Pasha had been handling German money?

Mr. MORSE. His evidence showed it, as well as our report.

Senator REED. Very well. During the time that you were engaged in this work, did you come into contact with a gentleman named Johnson or Musica?

Mr. MORSE. After the investigation was finished I met a man who was introduced to me under the name of Johnson.

Senator REED. By whom was he introduced to you?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Becker.

Senator REED. Is that the man you know now as Musica?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Musica in regard to these cases or in regard to Mr. Hearst?

Mr. MORSE. Well, I may say, Senator, that I withdrew from this matter after I had finished my report and had attended several hearings. I think I withdrew the latter part of October, 1917.

Senator NELSON. Excuse me, Senator Reed. What caused you to withdraw?

Mr. MORSE. Well, Senator, I would not like to say that unless I am required to.

Senator NELSON. I will not press it.

Senator KING. You mean that you withdrew from examination of the Bolo Pasha and the Humbert cases?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir. I used very frequently to go to the Murrayhill Hotel to see Attorney General Lewis, and this man Musica used to hang around there a great deal, and whenever I saw him he used to speak to me, and he used to volunteer information as to what they were doing. I know at one time he told me—I think it was in July, 1918—that they had discovered that Mr. Hearst and Bernstorff and Bolo were friends, and that they used to come to Mr. Hearst's home on Riverside Drive. But, of course, I do not know anything about that, of my own knowledge; only what Musica told me.

Senator REED. Were you ever requested to come up there for the purpose of facing a man named Johnson, at the Murrayhill Hotel?

Mr. MORSE. Why, that is another Johnson, Senator.

Senator REED. I know that is another Johnson—Johnson, a newspaper reporter.

Mr. MORSE. Yes, I was asked to.

Senator REED. Who asked you to do that?

Mr. MORSE. First, Mr. Musica asked me over the telephone.

Senator REED. What was the conversation at the time, between Mr. Musica and yourself?

Mr. MORSE. It seems that this Mr. Johnson is—I had better call him by his full name so as not to mix him up with the other man—Severance Johnson. He was a man that had been connected with the Hearst publications for a long time, and I think he was city editor at that time, and Musica called me up one afternoon and he said they were examining Severance Johnson, and called me to come up and face him, because they might as well finish this man Hearst right away.

Senator REED. What was the term about Hearst? What did he call him?

Mr. MORSE. It is a name that is not pronounced in polite society.

Senator REED. Tell us the language as near as you can, and you can omit this language.

Mr. MORSE. "It is time that we land this ———— Hearst."

Senator REED. And he used—did he use the term in describing him that is always supposed to mean fight in this country?

Mr. MORSE. Unless you say it with a smile, Senator.

Senator REED. Did you have any talk with Mr. Becker about the same proposition?

Mr. MORSE. I think I got Mr. Becker on the phone right away after that and told him that I did not approve of those methods, and I believe that I met Mr. Becker that night or the day after, in the evening, and dined with him. I told him that those methods would not succeed, and he should not do those things. I think I told him that you could not do that way in New York and succeed; that New York people would not stand for it. Mr. Becker was from Buffalo.

Senator NELSON. Is Buffalo a bad place?

Mr. BECKER. It is the home of all wickedness and the source of all depravity, Senator.

Senator REED. In that conversation you had with Mr. Becker—well, I withdraw that.

I do not like to press it more, but was the occasion of your withdrawing from these cases the methods that were being employed by Mr. Becker?

Mr. MORSE. I will say this much, Senator, that I never liked his methods.

Senator REED. That is all.

Mr. BECKER. May I ask a couple of questions? I will be just as brief as possible.

Senator OVERMAN. I will let you ask a question; yes.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Morse, there recently came up a question of the investigation of the Staats Zeitung. Well, I will withdraw that question.

The reason why Mr. Severance Johnson was originally called in by me was that you had told me something about what you believed Severance Johnson might tell about Hearst. was it not?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Mr. BECKER. Did you not have a conference with me about Severance Johnson?

Mr. MORSE. No; I had a conversation with you, but I said that he would tell you nothing about Hearst. I did not say that.

If you will let me, I will refresh your recollection, as long as you have brought that up.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. I met you at the——

Mr. BECKER. At the Republican Club, was it not?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir; it was at the apartment of William Barnes. Does that refresh your recollection?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MORSE. And I said to you that Severance Johnson had resigned, and you said, "Yes; I knew that, because a man that I have on the American had already told me so"; and he immediately picked up the telephone in order that he be served with a subpoena. Now, that is all there is to it, and the truth of it.

Mr. BECKER. Then it is true that at the time, you suggested that by proper management something might be gotten out of Mr. Severance Johnson in regard to the inside management of the Hearst papers?

Mr. MORSE. Severance Johnson is my friend, and you know it.

Mr. BECKER. That is true. Now, is it not a fact that you and I were on friendly relations until, to my great astonishment, the question came up of the Staats Zeitung investigation, and I heard that you had declined——

Mr. MORSE. I refused to work with you.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. It is.

Mr. BECKER. And is it not a fact that when you were served with a subpoena—well, there were two points to that question. Had we not maintained friendly relations at least up to the time that you told me I had made a great mistake in calling Severance Johnson as a witness?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Becker, I do not like in public to enter into a discussion of these affairs with you.

Mr. BECKER. I am asking you if we had not maintained friendly relations up to that time, and were on speaking terms, which apparently we are not now?

Mr. MORSE. I am on speaking terms with you.

Mr. BECKER. Well, that can be judged for itself. Did we not maintain friendly relations up to that time, at least?

Mr. MORSE. I was always friendly to you.

Mr. BECKER. That is, so far as anybody knew.

Mr. MORSE. I was always friendly to you.

Mr. BECKER. Is it not also a fact that when you were served with a subpoena to appear here, you went to consult with Attorney General Newton as to what had better be your course of conduct?

Mr. MORSE. I did.

Mr. BECKER. And he advised you to consult with me, and you declined to do it?

Mr. MORSE. I did.

Mr. BECKER. Since that matter has come up in this way, and has raised the suspicion that some of the personal attacks on me are traceable to you, I would like you to tell me something that is absolutely unknown to me, here in public, and that is the reason for your sudden declination to have anything to do with me, which certainly did not exist for a long time. Now, it was reported to me by Mr. Lewis that you had stated to him that the trouble was that I had, as he expressed it, said something unpleasant about you to some Government department at Washington. Please tell me if that is what you said to him, and what the fact of the matter was?

I do not propose to have my character assassinated for the cause of a personal grudge, the real cause of which is totally unknown to me.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Becker, I am quoting from my diary under date of October 20, 1917.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Mr. MORSE (reading):

Mr. Morse determined Alfred L. Becker could not be trusted, and that he not care to work with him any longer, inasmuch as sooner or later he would bring us into trouble.

That is a copy of my diary.

Mr. BECKER. Then, in spite of your maintenance of friendly relations with me from October 20, 1917—surface friendly relations—down to at least October 18, all the time you carried in your heart a feeling of that kind toward me?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Becker, I do not like to go into these things in public. If you insist on my doing it, if you want to do that here, I am perfectly willing; but I would not like to do it.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think we ought to go into those things.

Mr. MORSE. I do not think we should.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not see what it has to do with this investigation.

Mr. MORSE. I do not think it has anything to do with it. I think every man has a right to choose his own company, and if he does not want to associate with ex-convicts he has a right to refuse to do so.

Senator OVERMAN. That draws in another question.

Mr. MORSE. If Mr. Becker wants to meet me personally I will explain to him, but I do not think it is proper to explain in public unless he wants it.

Mr. BECKER. We will sit down and do it at once, because I am entitled to an explanation.

I would like to have your answer on the record, because, while I care nothing about the attacks that were made during the cross-examination, this production of this witness here, who I have discovered for the first time recently, had a grudge against me, for the purpose of trying in some subtle and insinuating way to destroy me, is something that I do take seriously.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you ask your question and let him answer it.

Mr. BECKER. I have just this one question to ask: Did you or did you not tell Mr. Lewis, the attorney general, as he told me, that your reason for not wanting to have anything to do with me in the Staats-Zeitung investigation was that you had found out that in some way or other I had run you down with some Washington department, or something to that effect?

Mr. MORSE. Must I answer that?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Becker, I warned Attorney General Lewis against you away back in October, and also other friends of his warned Attorney General Lewis against you at that time.

Mr. BECKER. Please read the question to the witness.

Senator REED. Now, I submit that that question could not have any possible bearing on this matter.

Senator OVERMAN. Not a bit in the world.

Senator REED. It is simply an attempt on the part of Mr. Becker—

Senator OVERMAN. I allowed him to ask the question, and now let the witness answer it.

Mr. MORSE. I prefer, with your kind permission, not to continue his examination.

Senator OVERMAN. We will allow it for this one answer, but then it must stop. Did you tell Mr. Lewis that? Answer the question.

Mr. BECKER. I would like to have the question read.

The question was repeated by the stenographer, as follows:

Mr. BECKER. I have just this one question to ask: Did you or did you not tell Mr. Lewis, the attorney general, as he told me, that your reason for not wanting to have anything to do with me in the Staats-Zeitung investigation was that you had found out that in some way or other I had run you down with some Washington department, or something to that effect?

Mr. MORSE. I did not tell Mr. Lewis that at that time. I did tell him something of the kind, I think, in November, 1917. Now, if I must tell the story about this Staats-Zeitung case, I will; but I prefer not to do it.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I just asked you to answer that one question.

Senator REED. I think the witness is perfectly warranted in telling anything that he wants to, after that question, which could only have one purpose in the world.

Senator OVERMAN. If you want to explain why you told him that, think you might do it.

Senator REED. Mr. Morse, did you have some occasion to examine into some of the accounts of Mr. Musica, in some of your capacities?

Mr. MORSE. No, sir.

Senator REED. To refresh your recollection, I will ask you if you had some occasion to examine—I think this is the item [handing photograph to the witness]?

Mr. MORSE (after examining document). Why, Senator, I think I know something about this case, but I do not know anything about this account. This is the first time I have ever seen this.

Mr. BECKER. May I see it, Mr. Morse?

(The photograph in question was here examined by Mr. Becker.)

Senator REED. I will ask you this question, Whether or not in your examination of accounts in any of these cases you ran into the fact that Mr. Musica had been in the habit of getting some money that he was not entitled to?

Mr. MORSE. Well; I can not say that, for this reason: That is the first I have ever seen of that voucher, this minute. I know what the case is about. I say this, though, I am surprised that he got $100.

Senator REED. You do know what the case is about?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. The document I have been reading from I want to put into the record, and then I am through. [Reading:]

To: Alfred L. Becker, State of New York.

Alfred L. Becker, Assistant Attorney General, Murrayhill Hotel.
For expenses.

November 1, William Johnson, voucher attached, $100.15.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that all?

Senator REED. That is all.

Senator KING. There is another gentleman here who wanted to testify.

Mr. DICKINSON. Whenever it will suit the committee. I could possibly get through this afternoon.

Senator NELSON. Who is he?

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Dickinson. We will be glad to hear Mr. Dickinson, but we can not hear him this afternoon. If he wants to make a statement we will hear him, but it takes two or three hours for anybody to make a statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. I hope that I will have at least that time.

Senator OVERMAN. You will be heard, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Before the committee adjourns I want to make a motion.

This committee, when it organized to proceed with this investigation, took the position that the most feasible way to promote the investigation would be by producing persons from the various departments of the Government who had engaged in these various investigations and ask them to produce the results of the investigation made by their respective departments, on the same theory that an expert accountant might be called to explain a set of books. That was followed. When Mr. Becker was called, as the result of that practice, neither the committee nor anyone else knew of the particular matters that were going to be brought before the committee. It was the explanation of a set of books, in substance. In that examination of Mr. Becker, or in his statement, he produced a number of affidavits relative to the relations that existed between Bolo Pasha, Ambassador Bernstorff, and Mr. Hearst.

At the conclusion, or during his examination and while he was presenting these matters, he made the statement that those affidavits themselves did not sustain the charge that was under investigation, in so far as it affected Mr. Hearst, and were insufficient to support the charge. Now, this examination has gone on from that time, and cross-examination, until I suppose there would be a thousand pages of the record of the work of this committee devoted to those affidavits and to the examination and cross-examination of Mr. Becker thereunder.

It is my opinion that the report of this committee will be a valuable reference book for the people of this country because of the information that it contains and will contain. It is only lumbered up with a lot of extraneous matters, affidavits, in the first place, that the sponsor admits do not support the charge that was under investigation, followed by the trial of murder cases and the trial of a personal dispute between an accountant and Mr. Becker, and I therefore make the motion that the record be purged by striking from the record and not printing in the record the cross-examination that has been conducted and the affidavits that were presented by Mr. Becker in connection with his testimony, that have been the basis of the cross-examination; and I suggest that, in order that this committee may preserve at least the dignity of its own record.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, that matter, obviously, requires a good deal of consideration.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; of course.

Senator NELSON. That ought to be considered in executive session. We can not take that matter up to-night.

Senator REED. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his intimation that my cross-examination is utterly worthless.

When a man goes so far afield in the matter of evidence that he will put a witness on the stand to produce affidavits that reflect upon a citizen of the country, and yet, as the witness does say, that does not prove anything, and then that gentleman objects to a cross-examination to throw light on the character of the affidavits and the way they were obtained, if that is the position of this gentleman, I think the committee needs a new counsel.

Maj. HUMES. I think the Senator entirely misunderstood me. The cross-examination is certainly worthless on the record if the affidavits are not a part of the record, because the affidavits are the basis of the cross-examination. They must stand or fall together. I have made no objection of any kind on the record; I have made no complaint of any kind; but I frankly admit to the gentleman that with the affidavits in the record he is entitled to the cross-examination in the record that has been conducted, but with the affidavits out of the record then the cross-examination ought to fall with the affidavits.

Senator REED. But, my dear sir, your witness went on and told the substance of these affidavits, gave his conclusions from these affidavits, and it was equally as bad as the affidavits. I do not care to discuss a question of that kind.

Senator OVERMAN. We will stand adjourned until half past 10 Tuesday. I want an executive session at half past 10, and witnesses will come at 11 o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 5.20 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned on Tuesday, January 14, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.)

(The following affidavits of Louis N. Hammerling and accompanying papers, ordered inserted in the record, are here printed. follows:)

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of New York, ss:

I, LOUIS N. HAMMERLING, of New York City, being duly sworn, depose and say:

I have read the stenographic copy of the testimony of Arthur Gabryel Frank Zotti before a Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Judiciary of United States Senate, on the 4th day of December, 1918.

When Gabryel testified that, in requesting him to go to Bethlehem, in connection with the gathering of information for the proposed advertising known as the "Appeal," I told him to "spare no expense" and to "bring me back data there, whether they are satisfied with the working conditions, the wage earning, what they are earning per week," etc., he states what is definitely false, and such testimony can not be supported by any of the employees who went elsewhere upon similar missions and whose testimony was not requested before the Judiciary Committee, affidavits from which, however, are filed with the Committee concurrently herewith.

Gabryel's testimony with reference to the "Appeal" advertisement that told me "Why, Mr. Hammerling, it is an open secret among the Poles in New York that you are supplied by the Austro-German Government," that in my office, in the presence of Miss Leffler, he said "That is all I hear among Polish people here in New York, that you are being paid by the Austro-German Government" and turned to Miss Leffler and asked her if she had said anything to her sister Margaret, and she had replied "No," and that he said "Arthur, whatever you know, keep your mouth shut. Whatever people do not know will not hurt them" is merest fiction, not a word of it being true is verified in part by the affidavit of Bertha W. Leffler, filed with the Judiciary Committee.

Arthur Gabryel never received a dollar from me or the Association as bonus other than his pro rata share of any bonuses which may have been given by the Association either at Christmas time or at Easter time and Christmas time, in accordance with the policy of the Association for years in recognition of faithful service of employees. His testimony that he received "as high as $2,000" is utterly untrue, as he never received that sum as a bonus from the Association in his life, nor anything approaching it, and when he stated that he was getting money every month or every second month, I didn't know what for," and that "when my girl was born, Hammerling paid the bills, without my asking him, so that I do not know what I got the money for," he simply states what he knows is a shameless falsehood. When his child was born I asked me to loan him $100, which I did and was never repaid.

The whole tenor and most of the statements by Gabryel about the treatment by the Association of advertisers, the alleged improper advantage taken by Foreign Language Newspapers, the unconscionable profits made out of advertisers, is utterly false and unjustified by the ten years of close business relationships between the Association and many of the largest national advertisers of the Country.

The animus and motives of Gabryel are apparent; the accomplishments of the Association, as between the large advertisers and the more than 700 Foreign Language Newspapers, speak for themselves.

The purposes and methods of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, as testified to by Frank Zotti, are stated as maliciously and improperly as it is possible to express them.

Zotti testified that I had endeavored to purchase the Il Progresso Italiano and that "Mr. Barsotti told me himself that Hammerling was trying to buy his paper for German purposes and had offered him a million dollars." This is untrue in every respect, and I notice that Mr. Barsotti's Manager of Il Progresso Italiano, formally denied the Zotti testimony in the December 6, 1918, issue of the New York Tribune.

Zotti testified that owing to my connection with the Food Administration had attempted unfair tactics with the "Ward's Tip Top Bread" people in New York. The President of the Ward Baking Company, George S. Ward, issued a letter under date of Wednesday, March 20, 1918, in which, referring to a similar statement in Zotti's Narodni List of January 31, 1918, he said "In times past the writer has placed advertisements in Foreign Language Newspapers through Mr. Hammerling and have occasionally advertised in his publication known as the American Leader, but we have never at any time had any controversy with him about anything. We therefore wish to repudiate the statements contained in the editorial in the Narodni List of January 31st." In his loose defaming way, Zotti, in his testimony, stated that "Hammerling became a Director in the Savoy Trust Company through the machinations of Mr. Cummings who was sentenced to seven years in the State Prison at Sing Sing and Mr. Reichmann who was also sentenced." Neither Mr. Cummings or Mr. Reichmann had anything to do with my becoming a Director of the Savoy Trust Company. I was a depositor long before I had the slight acquaintance which I later had with these men.

LOUIS N. HAMMERLING.

Sworn to before me this 12th day of December, 1918.

[SEAL.]

HARRIES A. MUMMA,
Notary Public, New York County, No. 220;
New York Co. Register's No. 10014.

My commission expires March 30, 1920.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

I, Bertha W. Leffler, of New York City, being duly sworn, depose and say: I have read that portion of the stenographic minutes of the hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate, held Wednesday, December 4, 1918, wherein Arthur Gabryel testified that in my presence Mr. Hammerling inquired from Mr. Gabryel on an extension wire with reference to alleged reports from the Street that Mr. Hammerling was being paid for the so-called "Appeal" by the Austro-German Government, also that he, Mr. Gabryel, came in to Mr. Hammerling's office while I was there and in my presence said "That is all I hear among the Polish people here in New York, that you are being paid by the Austrian-German Government," and that Mr. Hammerling also said "Arthur, whatever you know keep your mouth shut. Whatever people do not know will not hurt them," and that Mr. Gabryel sat for a while talking with me and asked "Isn't it true?" and that I was reported not to admit or deny it.

Every word of the foregoing testimony by Arthur Gabryel is rank perjury. No such conversation ever occurred in my presence, nor were any references of the sort at any time ever made by Mr. Gabryel to Mr. Hammerling either in my presence or within my knowledge.

Mr. Gabryel also testified that he was getting $500 or $1,000 "every month, or every second month, I didn't know what for. At Christmas time I got as high as $2,000." At the time in question I was either Treasurer or counter-signed every check or disbursed all moneys of the Association. Mr. Gabryel never in his life received from the Association so high a bonus as $2,000; he never received a bonus of any kind to my knowledge except as all employees received bonuses in accordance with the policy of the Association to distribute bonuses either annually or semi-annually at Christmas time or Easter time and Christmas time, such bonuses being pro rated according to salaries. Furthermore, Mr. Gabryel never received such substantial sums as he indicated. When he testified that he did "not know what I got the money for" he testified to what he knew was false, as he was perfectly familiar with the policy and system of bonus distributions, as recognition for devoted service, based upon salary, to employees who had been in the employment of the Association for at least one year.

SIGISMUND DATTNER.

Sworn to before me this 11th day of December, 1918.

[SEAL.]

HARRIES A. MUMMA,
Notary Public, New York County No. 220;
New York Co. Register's No. 10014.

My commission expires March 30, 1920.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of New York, ss:

I, Don S. Momand, Second Lieutenant, R. M. A., A. S. A., United States Army, being duly sworn depose and say: During the latter part of March or the part of April, 1915, I was told by Mr. Louis N. Hammerling, President of American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., to go to Bronx, N. Y., where the E. D. Bliss Company was located and ascertain, as far as possible, the nationalities of the employees working for the above company.

An advertisement was to be published which was intended to be read by employees of the Company referred to and the purpose of my visit to Bronx was to find out in what languages it would be necessary to advertise in order to reach the employees of the Bliss Company. The expense for this trip was nominal, not over $5.00, was paid by the Association.

DON S. MOMAND

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of December, 1918.

[SEAL.]

FRANK D. GARDNER

Notary Public, New York County, No. 3.

My Commission Expires March 30, 1919.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

City and county of New York, ss:

Leon Wazeter being duly sworn deposes and says: that he resides at 3758 Bronxwood Avenue in the City of New York and that for the last twenty years he was the editor and publisher of various American publications published in Polish and prides himself on the fact that such publications have been held by able judges to be models of proper form of Americanization.

Deponent has during the last twenty years made distribution of immigration and the so-called foreign labor problem in America, his especial study and to certain extent is considered an authority thereon. In this capacity he has frequently been called upon to make investigations and submit reports on various cities and communities where foreign born locate or reside, with various objects in view, the most important being in the interest of law and order. During the last ten years he has had more than forty such assignments.

To the best of deponent's knowledge, in the Spring of 1915 he was asked by some one in charge of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., possibly Mr. Momand, to make a report on the nationalities represented in certain manufacturing plants in Philadelphia and some other places in the West, the name of which deponent does not now remember for the purpose of an advertising estimate which was then in course of preparation, but which he had no intimate knowledge. Deponent made the investigation and reported accordingly and was paid his expenses and time lost.

Deponent has been informed and from press reports of the testimony of Arthur Gabryel is led to believe that said Gabryel has falsified his testimony with respect to deponent and to many matters with which deponent is conversant and in this relation deponent says that for many months prior to leaving the employ of Mr. Hammerling, said Gabryel was planning to injure the character and business of his employer-benefactor and conspiring on various means of getting him to pay blackmail.

Deponent has known said Arthur Gabryel since he was a child and is able to say under oath that his reputation for veracity among those who know him have had dealings with him is not to be envied. On several occasions he has been accused of conversion of other peoples' money, including a society or organization of which he was a member.

[SEAL.]

LEON WAZETER

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of December, 1918.

FRANK D. GARDNER

Notary Public, New York County, No. 3.

My commission expires March 30, 1919.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

City and County of New York, ss:

Sigismund Dattner being duly sworn, deposes and says: that he resides at number 507 Seventy-eighth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. That he was in the employ of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers for a number of years prior to 1915 and in the latter year was one of its Vice-Presidents.

In March or April, 1915, in the course of his employment, deponent was instructed by the President of the Association, Mr. Hammerling, to go to several towns—Bridgeport, Hartford and New Haven. if I remember right, and find out what nationalities were represented or employed in the factories there. in conformity with such instructions deponent did go as directed and reported verbally.

Deponent, though in close contact with Mr. Hammerling and the entire office force while there employed, never saw or even heard of von Bernstorff, Boy-Ed or von Papen ever having called at the office of the Association, or having called on the phone. Except for lunch or necessary relief, telephone operators were never changed on any especial occasion. Were such the fact it would have been spoken of or otherwise brought to the notice or attention of deponent. In this respect the published reports of Gabryel's testimony is without foundation in fact.

Having worked in the same office with Arthur Gabryel for years our relations were more or less intimate and my later unfortunate connection in business with him make me verily believe that he is unworthy of belief. From early Summer in 1915, during Mr. Hammerling's absence from the City, Gabryel was planning the establishment of a business in competition with that of Mr. Hammerling and to my great regret he induced me, by means of false information and a faked telegram which he said he received from Mr. Hammerling, to believe that I would soon lose my position with the Association. These misrepresentations induced me to resign my position and in February, 1916, to enter into partnership with Gabryel in an advertising agency business with an office in the World Building, on the same floor with one Frank Zotti, under the firm name of the Gabryel-Dattner Co.

Within a comparatively short time after that I withdrew from that firm for the reason that I could not accede to or agree to the blackmailing if not questionable method of doing business proposed and persisted in by said Gabryel, which consisted in attacking Mr. Hammerling as a means of getting business away from the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers. I thought it a dishonorable way and not leading to ultimate success. His constant touch and co-operation with Zotti, an avowed enemy of Mr. Hammerling, had a great deal to do with his state of mind, and Zotti at every opportunity privately and publicly threatened he "would put Hammerling out of business." Gabryel failed in the advertising venture.

I cannot understand Gabryel's attitude or animus toward Mr. Hammerling or he, like every one else in the office, was receiving good salary and frequent holiday and business bonuses, except that from personal observation and knowledge I can say he is addicted to drink, gambling and other vices which leave him constantly without money.

In making this affidavit, I am actuated by the fact that statements contrary to the truth have from time to time appeared in the public press as the testimony of Gabryel in the investigation before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, in which my name has been mentioned, and I take this opportunity, not having been called to testify, of stating facts under oath in justice to others, as well as myself, in the hope that the same will be taken into consideration by said Committee.

SIGISMUND DATTNER.

Sworn to before me this 6th day of December, 1918.

JOSEPH H. FARGIS,
Notary Public, N. Y. Co.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of New York, city of New York, ss:

I, Margaret C. Leffler, an employee of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., for nine years, have read in a recent issue of the New York World of the investigation being made by the Senate Committee and of the charges made against Mr. Louis N. Hammerling, President of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., by Arthur Gabryel.

Arthur Gabryel's statement that upon instructions from Mr. Hammerling relieved the regular telephone operator, upon different occasions, so that Hammerling could converse with Von Bernstorff, Von Papen and Boy-ed is absolutely untrue. I have never connected Mr. Hammerling with any of the gentlemen. On many occasions since being employed by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc., I have relieved the telephone operator, and still do so, but at no time was it at the request or instructions received from Mr. Hammerling or to make any special connections with certain persons. I relieved the operator at her request only, and this was when the regular operator was not in the office or otherwise engaged.

MARGARET C. LEFFLER

Sworn to before me this 6th day of December, 1918.

[SEAL.]

FRANK D. GARDNER

Notary Public, New York County, No. 31

My commission expires March 30, 1919.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of New York, ss:

I, Elizabeth Weston Allen, being duly sworn depose and say: I have been employed since October 8th, 1913, as telephone operator and stenographer at the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, Inc. From the time of my employ I have never received any telephone calls from Von Bernstorff, Boy-ed or Von Papen as stated by Arthur Gabryel, who was formerly employed by the Association, in his testimony before your Committee, yesterday, December 4th, 1918, nor was I requested by anyone during the period from August 1914 to May 1915, to leave the switchboard so that Miss B. W. Leffler or Margaret C. Leffler could take the switchboard while anyone else held a conversation. During August 1914 and May 1915 the only time I was away from the switchboard was one hour for my luncheon and during my relief in the morning and afternoon. My relief was at that time either Miss C. F. Nolan or Miss Namson now Mrs. H. Brudney. However, on several occasions I was relieved by other young ladies in the office when Miss Nolan and Miss Namson were not available but to the best of my knowledge not for the purpose of getting on the telephone with either of the three gentlemen mentioned in Arthur Gabryel's testimony.

ELIZABETH WESTON ALLEN

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of December, 1918.

[SEAL.]

FRANK D. GARDNER

Notary Public, New York County, No. 31

My commission expires March 30, 1919.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 11 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. I will state that the motion made by Maj. Humes to strike from the record all testimony in regard to the Bolo Pasha matter has been withdrawn.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman——

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Dickinson, you want to be heard this morning?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; I do.

Senator OVERMAN. At the request of a gentleman from New York who has expressed a desire to be present at your hearing—Mr. Abraham Grill, I think his name is—we have postponed hearing you until he can be here.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know his name. I have no objection to his presence at my hearing, Senator, but I have been suffering under this accusation here for several weeks.

Senator OVERMAN. This will be only three days more. We will hear you on Friday.

Mr. DICKINSON. Senator, I will go ahead and make up the record, and then——

Senator OVERMAN. No; we will just postpone your hearing until he gets here.

Mr. DICKINSON. Who is Mr. Grill?

Senator OVERMAN. Who is he, Capt. Lester?

Capt. LESTER. He was the attorney for Mr. George Sylvester Viereck, and secretary of The Fatherland corporation, and he was present when the arrangement was made.

Mr. DICKINSON. What arrangement, may I inquire, sir?

Capt. LESTER. He will have to answer for himself—Mr. Grill.

Senator OVERMAN. We think it is best for the interests of everybody to continue your hearing until Friday.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why, Senator Overman, I submit that I have been under this terrible charge for over a month.

Senator OVERMAN. This will be only three days more.

Mr. DICKINSON. You will do me the favor, Mr. Chairman, to recollect that I communicated with you——

Senator OVERMAN. You communicated with me, and you can be heard and will be heard on Friday.

Mr. DICKINSON. This is a very surprising turn. I am a citizen of the Republic, Senator, and I do not see why I can not be heard—

Senator OVERMAN. You will not be injured, Mr. Dickinson, in any respect by this delay.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not see why this gentleman can not be inconvenienced as well as I. He is under no charge.

Senator OVERMAN. We did not hear about it until this morning. He is in court there and can not get here.

Mr. DICKINSON. Here is the record. I make no accusations against anybody, but it consists of such a loose statement, none of which is true, and which I know Capt. Lester will admit afterwards is not true—

Senator OVERMAN. We will give you a fair hearing and treat you right. This will be a delay of only three days—Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday—and on Friday you can be here and we will give you the whole day, if you want it.

Mr. DICKINSON. You do not inconvenience the other man, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. This is only in order to bring him here, and we will hear you just as well Friday.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is all I can do, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Mr. Stowell has been here twice before, but he thinks that he has not made it plain that he is a loyal American, and he has another statement that he wants to put in the record.

Senator NELSON. What is it?

Senator OVERMAN. It is a statement as to his loyalty—what he has done in the interest of the Government.

Senator STERLING. I thought Prof. Stowell had pretty full opportunity the last time he was here, Mr. Chairman. I thought he made a very clear statement.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ELLERY C. STOWELL—Resumed.

Mr. STOWELL. You see, in an investigation of this kind the record is read by a very few people, but the newspapers are read by a great many, and this committee is not responsible for what the newspapers do; but the whole trend and scope of the investigation depends upon the newspapers, and statements were made in the press, and I feel that those statements that I object to were made because of some questions and the manner in which those questions were directed to me by this committee; and it was not with any criticism of this committee that I wished to say this.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you your statement written out?

Mr. STOWELL. I have my statement written out.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it connected?

Mr. STOWELL. It is connected.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it lengthy?

Mr. STOWELL. No, sir; it is not lengthy.

Senator OVERMAN. How long will it take you?

Mr. STOWELL. I do not think it will take me 15 minutes to say that, and for any questions you want to ask. To read the statement will take me only 10 minutes.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you going to put in a lot of extracts from newspapers in your statement? I do not want to encumber the record. Can you not make a statement without putting in a mass of other things?

Mr. STOWELL. I have prepared this statement and submitted these papers, but my object was to make it perfectly clear——

Senator OVERMAN. We had better let you read your statement. You will get through quicker.

Mr. STOWELL. I would like to read it.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you read your statement, if it will not take over 10 minutes.

Mr. STOWELL. I made this modification, Senator, for the reason that I included another paragraph in addition to what I read to you. I did not want to spring anything on the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I volunteered the other day to make a statement before your committee because I thought it would be of assistance in elucidating some of the methods of the German propagandists in this country. During the hearing some of the questions were directed toward my own attitude in the war. I did not come prepared to make a statement of what I had done. I should, therefore, like to ask the committee if it will permit me to add a few words of explanation to what I said and to inclose for the record copies of two or three of the articles and statements to which I referred in my evidence. Some of the reports in the press of my hearing have been misleading, and I feel that, since the matter of my activities has been taken up thus publicly the record ought to be in as complete a form as possible. I append a copy of the account in the New York Tribune, which I submit conveys a very different impression from the testimony taken as a whole.

No doubt, as the chairman has remarked, this Senate committee has no control over the newspapers and can not be held responsible for the interpretations they may put upon testimony, and with this I entirely agree, but, nevertheless, in the case of my hearing the circumstances are somewhat exceptional. The chairman toward the conclusion of my hearing remarked that I had volunteered, and that "when people came in where they were not asked they sometimes regretted it." I am quoting from memory, as I have not the record. This sally and the laugh that followed seemed to express satisfaction that one who had volunteered in an effort to help had been penalized by being put on the defensive. Senator Nelson characterized "as carrying water on both shoulders" my efforts as a scholar to be fair to both sides. Under these circumstances, I feel that this committee must share with the New York Tribune a part of the responsibility for the false light in which I have been placed by reports such as that which appeared in the Tribune and in the Philadelphia Press.

I referred to Viscount Bryce's commendation of my book on the Diplomacy of the War of 1914. It was in his introduction to The War of Democracy where he said:

No fuller and fairer examinations of them [the circumstances attending the outbreak of the war] have been published than are contained in two books written by American jurists, the book of Mr. Ellery C. Stowell, entitled "The Diplomacy of the War of 1914," and the book of Mr. James M. Beck, called "The Evidence in the Case," books to which rather than to any English book I desire to refer to, because their authors, being neutrals, wrote with a complete freedom from national bias.

Sir Gilbert Murray, in one of the papers contained in the same volume, says:

Read the documents and read the serious studies of them. I would recommend specially the book by Mr. William Archer, called "Thirteen Days." There is also Mr. Headlam's admirable book, The History of Twelve Days, and the equally admirable book by the American jurist, Mr. Stowell. There the issue is clear and the question is settled. The verdict of history is already given in these negotiations.

When I resigned from Columbia University it was, I believe, generally recognized that I had been pro-ally before we entered the war and loyal always. In an editorial of March 4, 1918, the New York Tribune said:

Prof. Ellery C. Stowell was one college professor who stood out very clearly for this country's entry into the war. It is announced that he purposes to take up war work. There is no hint or taint of a pacifist about him. Prof. Stowell of high standing as a professor of international law, has resigned from the faculty of Columbia University. This is the fifth Columbia professor to resign or be dismissed within the year. These things do not seem to happen at Harvard or Yale, at Princeton or Cornell. We hope there is no room in this country and certainly not in New York City, for another University of Pennsylvania.

The Springfield Republican, of the same date, in an editorial on the situation at Columbia said:

Prof. Stowell is as free of pacifism or pro-Germanism as a Yankee machine gun.

The World of March 3 said:

In the resignation of Prof. Ellery C. Stowell, Columbia University loses not only an instructor of highest order but a two-fisted, fighting pedagogue.

In its evening edition of March 2, referring to my resignation, the World said:

As an authority on the subject (international law) Prof. Stowell has been constantly quoted on the diplomatic developments of the war. He became one of the leaders of the growing sentiment that the United States declare war on Germany. He led a pilgrimage to Washington, and after the declaration of war was one of the founders of the Patriotic Service League, of which he was elected treasurer.

Prof. A. Pearce Higgins, the distinguished English authority on international law, in his discussion on "Defensively armed merchant ships and submarine warfare," quotes approvingly (see pp. 9, 21, 26, 27, and 44) from an article I wrote on the right of belligerent merchantmen to resist capture. (New York American, March 1916.) I append this article.

I also referred to the protest which I was the first in this country to make against the execution of Capt. Fryatt. It was printed in the New Times of July 30, 1916, and reads:

By telegraph to the editor of the New York Times, Seal Harbor, Me., July 29. If the facts are as reported in the press, Capt. Fryatt, of the steamer Brussels had a right to attempt to ram the German submarine, and his execution is a judicial murder for which every lover of justice will condemn the German Government. Ellery C. Stowell.

I append a copy of another protest against the same act which I sent the New York Evening Post and a copy of a letter I wrote to American Rights League. This latter was very widely distributed by that league.

In the case of the O'Donnell children, drowned by German submarines while traveling on the steamship California, I wrote to the New York Times and pointed out that they were Americans, and that their destruction was an overt act such as cried out for redress against Germany. I append a copy of this article—one of the few I volunteered.

In regard to Dr. von Mach's book, I did not, before we entered in the war, feel that it would be right to turn down the request for an opinion of it on its merits, nor did I think it right that I should be a prey to any request and be obliged to do the work without a minimum compensation. The German University League asked me to fix my compensation, and to preserve its judicial character I made it so small that it could not recompense me by half for the time I was obliged to give to the matter. I openly told everybody I was doing the work and let the compensation I was receiving be known. As I have pointed out, in other instances I returned several hundred dollars to avoid having any pecuniary interest in the result of the war. For the newspaper articles I wrote I received no compensation, except a very few—in less than half a dozen—instances. I never asked for pay nor made my writing conditioned upon remuneration. The large amount of time devoted to elucidating these international questions was given by me as a public service, entailing great personal sacrifices.

When I was studying the war I felt, and do still feel, that it was only proper for me to try to get all the evidence I could from German sources, but this impartial attitude as a would-be scholar did not prevent me from throwing all my influence on the side of international justice and in support of my country when we entered the war.

I think it was some slight service that we performed who came on here as the patriotic pilgrims to offset the antiwar propaganda of the pacifists financed by German money. Some of the members of the New York committee for the organization of this expedition were: Chairman, Hon. Charles S. Fairchild, Secretary of the Treasury in Cleveland's Cabinet; Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Richard M. Hurd, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Hon. George W. Wickersham, Hon. Morgan J. O'Brien, Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, Hon. Oscar S. Strauss, and Dr. James C. Egbert. Appropriate resolutions were adopted at the Hotel Raleigh and transmitted to the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. I append a copy of the short report of this expedition. After my return to New York and the declaration of war, I helped to organize the Patriotic Service League, which has looked after all the patriotic drives and campaigns in an important region of New York. In an effort to extend the work of this organization I expended some $3,000 and spent the summer in New York without a cent of remuneration. I append a short report.

There is just one other statement which I should like to place on record. When on the 4th of July, 1917, the citizens of Seal Harbor, Me., where I go in summer, asked me to make a patriotic speech, I emphasized the need that we should accept no halfway peace and said that we must have a decisive victory over Germany—that France must be given back Alsace-Lorraine not only as a matter of justice, but also that Germany might realize how thoroughly she was beaten. I was one of the first in this country, publicly, to voice this demand.

It has been my firm belief, founded upon years of study, that observance of international law by all the nations is the best, perhaps the only, guaranty of peace. Only when the principles of the law of nations are clearly set forth can public opinion in a democracy rally to its support. I felt it was my duty and my opportunity of service to set forth what I believed to be the law without fear or favor. By so doing I may not have made friends where parties were wanted, but I think by this method I helped to convince many misguided persons of the justice of the cause of the allies and won them to its support. I recall such an instance concerning one of my students who was of German blood. He became an enthusiastic champion of the allies, and enlisted when we broke with Germany.

In the defense of the cause of international justice I have sacrificed time, money, and my position at Columbia, and I am not willing that any imputation of pro-Germanism should ever rest against my name, for it is one of the most dishonoring charges that can be laid at the door of an intelligent student of international affairs. I should like to request the committee to accord me the privilege of including this statement and the appended articles in the record to supplement and complete my explanations of the points covered in my testimony.

In further answer to Maj. Humes's question as to the newspapers for which I wrote, I will, with the committee's permission, prepare and subjoin as complete a list as possible, noting those articles for which I received compensation and the amount thereof.

Senator STERLING. There is just one exception to the statement made by Prof. Stowell, and that is to the statement made at the beginning, to the effect that this committee must share the responsibility of the New York Tribune and other papers in regard to statements that went out to the public. I do not know that the New York Tribune or any other paper has made statements concerning any witness otherwise than fair statements, and if any unfair statement has been made, surely this committee is not in any way responsible for it.

Mr. STOWELL. As I explained in my statement, the remarks that were made here by Senator Overman and Senator Nelson raised the question as to my loyalty—particularly those by Senator Nelson. In that respect—and Senator Overman emphasized the fact that I had volunteered my statement before this committee, and when people came in where they were not wanted, the idea was they sometimes got in trouble. Now, that impression was conveyed, and the reporters sitting around here carried that out.

Senator OVERMAN. If you had not volunteered there would not have been any of this in the record, would there?

Mr. STOWELL. No; and I am glad it is in the record and I should hope that you would be glad. I think it is a valuable piece of evidence that I have put in the record; and I thought it would be. I have been volunteering ever since we went into the war. I volunteered to come on here for that expedition. This country is one volunteers. We do not have to wait to be told what to do. That is why we are beating Germany.

Senator NELSON. Did you not render a legal opinion about the Appam case?

Mr. STOWELL. No.

Senator NELSON. I thought you did.

Mr. STOWELL. No; I did some work for nothing.

Senator NELSON. Did you not pass an opinion on it in some form or other?

Mr. STOWELL. No, sir; I gave my opinion to everybody that asked it on every subject, and I gave it to this committee on the Appam case.

Senator NELSON. And you disagreed with the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. STOWELL. I disagreed particularly on the point about title, where enemy property is concerned.

Senator NELSON. You need not go into it. It is the fact that you disagreed; that is all?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you review Von Mach's book?

Mr. STOWELL. I did.

Senator NELSON. What conclusion did you come to about that book? State briefly about that. I do not care about a long rignamole, but state briefly what you said about it.

Mr. STOWELL. I said that it was partisan.

Senator NELSON. Partisan?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; and so partisan that it ought not to be submitted to uninformed readers.

Senator NELSON. What do you mean by "partisan"? Was it pro-German?

Mr. STOWELL. Yes; pro-German.

Senator OVERMAN. From whom did you receive the money?

Mr. STOWELL. From the German-American League.

Senator OVERMAN. You did receive money from Germans?

Mr. STOWELL. But Mr. Merkel sent me the check.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand, and that is what brought forth my remark, that you had come here and said you received German money for criticizing a book. You came here voluntarily and that was brought out in the examination, and I said that people sometimes volunteered to do things, and you had volunteered to come here as a witness, and you got into trouble. That was my remark.

Mr. STOWELL. I said——

Senator OVERMAN. You have made your statement. That is all right, now.

Mr. STOWELL. I stated that, because it was important to explain what kind of a man Merkel was; but the committee interrupted me there, and I never did finish that explanation.

Senator OVERMAN. That is why I allowed you to make this other statement this morning. That is all right, now. That will do.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will you permit me to say one word, Senator?

Mr. STOWELL. Will you excuse me just a moment?

Mr. DICKINSON. Certainly, sir. I have been excusing people for a week here.

Mr. STOWELL. May I be permitted, Senator, to put in these articles [indicating papers]?

Senator OVERMAN. What is the length of them?

Senator NELSON. We will look them over and pass on them.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; we will pass on them.

Mr. STOWELL. I will leave these here for you to pass on.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Now, what is it, Mr. Dickinson?

Mr. DICKINSON. I must make a very frank statement to you, to let you know what is pressing upon my very nature for an early hearing. For nearly six weeks, my son, who is an officer in the Army in France, a captain of engineers—he has been there 18 months—now that we are in a condition of profound peace, for nearly six weeks we have not heard one word from him. He is very prompt in answering, and you can know the suspicion that naturally has been in my mind, now that I am under unjust charges—that the Government of the United States, probably through its Intelligence Department, is holding my boy's letters to his mother. Resting under such charges, I submit, Senator—

Senator NELSON. I do not think that is so.

Senator OVERMAN. That can not be true.

Mr. DICKINSON. I say resting under such unjust charges, such loosely made charges as I am resting under, I do not see why I should be kept waiting here to give some man in New York—a man, so help me God, that I never heard of before—the privilege of coming here to testify against me. Why is he not here? I have been here for more than a week asking this committee for the privilege of appearing as soon as I could.

Senator OVERMAN. You can clear up this whole matter if you will wait. We will give you every opportunity in the world. We want to hear the truth about it, and a postponement of two days will not hurt anybody. So, that will do.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to put into the record a letter from the governor-elect of Tennessee. I suppose he has been inaugurated by this time. Will you read it, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES (reading):

OFFICE OF A. H. ROBERTS,
TULANE HOTEL, NASHVILLE, TENN.,
Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 9, 1911

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Some time ago there appeared in the Nashville Tennessean & American, under a Washington date line, an article bearing upon the probe then being made by your sub-committee of the activities of the brewers in the dissemination of German propaganda. Among other things the following statement was made:

"Organized campaigns directed by the United States Brewers' Association against prohibition laws and dry sentiment were described to the committee today by John McDermott of New York, manager of the association's organization.

"Under questioning the witness told of organizations formed in various states, sometimes with their names giving no indication to the public in wet and dry fights and of other activities.

"McDermott said he prepared a schedule showing the situation in many states, but denied his committee actually participated in political contests except in Tennessee and Texas, where it supported anti-prohibition candidates for Governor. In other states local organizations were left to conduct the est in the interests of individual candidates favorable to the brewery interests."

Having been a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Tennessee in a State-wide primary, held on August 1, 1918, in which I was nominated, and having been elected governor of Tennessee at the November election, 1918, I desire to request that you do me the favor and the honor of having this letter made a part of the record of the proceedings of your subcommittee.

Let me say with emphasis that no part of this brewers' fund ever came to me or to my campaign committee or was used by me or by anyone for me. I had no connection whatever with the brewers' organization, nor was I in sympathy with it. In my campaign I stated that I was in favor of the ratification of the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution, which amendment has just been ratified by the Legislature of Tennessee almost unanimously. I would thank you to develop the facts in the examination of witnesses who may appear before your committee, so that it may be made known whether or not the brewers took any part in the 1918 campaign in Tennessee, and if so, in whose behalf their activities were exerted and funds expended.

Thanking you for any courtesies extended me, I am,

Very respectfully,

(Signed) A. H. ROBERTS.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, call your next witness, Major, please.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Smith.

TESTIMONY OF MR. AUSTIN J. SMITH.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you live, Mr. Smith?

Mr. SMITH. Los Angeles, Cal.

Maj. HUMES. Were you formerly a resident of Denver, Colo.?

Mr. SMITH. I was.

Maj. HUMES. Were you engaged in newspaper work or employed by any newspaper in Denver, Colo.?

Mr. SMITH. I was employed as advertising and circulation manager for the Chieftain, of Pueblo, and the Grand Junction News, of Grand Junction, Colo.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time were you so engaged?

Mr. SMITH. From about December, 1913, to about January, 1917.

Maj. HUMES. Your offices were in Denver, however, as I understand it?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the owners and the publishers of these two papers in 1915 and 1916?

Mr. SMITH. In 1915 the Chieftain was owned by Col. I. N. Stevens. In 1916 he leased the paper, as I understand it, to Mr. Swain.

Maj. HUMES. What is Mr. Swain's first name?

Mr. SMITH. Alva A.

Senator NELSON. What is the name of that paper, please?

Mr. SMITH. The Pueblo Chieftain.

Maj. HUMES. Who was the owner and publisher and editor of the Grand Junction News?

Mr. SMITH. J. A. Barkley was the editor over there, while Alva Swain was the editor in Denver.

Maj. HUMES. But the same person owned both of these papers?

Mr. SMITH. During 1916 Mr. Swain leased the Chieftain, but he was also at that time editor of the Grand Junction News.

Maj. HUMES. Then, while editor of the Grand Junction News, I leased the Chieftain and also edited that paper?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state if at any time after the breaking of the European War, in August, 1914, you had occasion to consult with Ambassador Bernstorff and with representatives of the German Government, with a view of negotiating contracts with the newspapers?

Mr. SMITH. I consulted first with Bernstorff in New York, at the Ritz Carleton, on the 13th day of October, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. Will you tell us how you happened to enter into these negotiations and at whose direction, and what arrangement was made for your coming in contact with Ambassador Bernstorff?

Mr. SMITH. Do you wish me, Major, to go into the details of the campaign early in 1915?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; just tell in your own way what led up to your negotiations with Bernstorff, and everything in connection with it.

Mr. SMITH. In the spring of 1915 I was instructed by Alva A. Swain and I. N. Stevens to start a campaign to obtain subscriptions from a list which was furnished by the Colorado Herold (The German paper of the Rocky Mountain region) and to employ as many subscription solicitors as I desired——

Senator STERLING. When you say "The German paper," you mean a German-language paper?

Mr. SMITH. A local paper there in Denver; yes, sir; but to contact and index every German and German American in the West if possible to obtain their subscription. Little headway was made with the Germans and German Americans in Denver, and later on I was advised to confer with Godfrey Schirmer, president of the German American Trust Co., of Denver and to obtain from him if possible a complete list of every prominent German in Colorado who would be interested in chipping into a fund whereby the Chieftain would be circulated all over the State of Colorado. After chatting the matter over with Mr. Schirmer, who was very favorably impressed with the scheme, I chatted the matter over with several prominent German Americans in Denver, who after a meeting which was held in Denver, informed me that the matter would be presented to the German consul, Dr. Kurt Zeigler.

Dr. Zeigler phoned me the next day and asked me to come to his office, where the proposition was submitted to me to have Mr. Swain call and see him the following day and that the matter of circulation would be arranged. Mr. Swain and I went to Dr. Zeigler's office where the matter was chatted over, and Dr. Zeigler then accompanied us to the office of the Austro-Hungarian consul where we were introduced to Mr. Von Fischer, the vice consul of the consul and who informed us that he would be only too glad to assist us in any way possible. In the presence of Dr. Zeigler and Mr. Von Fischer, Mr. Swain suggested that he desired the proposition to be handled by me, and that they were at liberty to give any and all instructions to me.

The matter of submitting the circulation proposition to the ambassadors at Washington was put off until the latter part of the summer of 1915, as Mr. Swain remarked that it was too risky a proposition.

sition to handle at that time, but Dr. Zeigler kept on insisting that no one would be the wiser, that he would furnish the list and arrange everything in such a manner that it would never be detected, but Mr. Swain was satisfied with the results that were coming in on the circulation—that we were making around town—and the deal with the ambassadors was held until September, 1915, when the matter was submitted in October.

On or about the 25th day of July, 1915, we were requested by Dr. Zeigler and Mr. Von Fischer to erect a booth on the lakeside grounds (a pleasure resort near the outskirts of Denver and owned by Mr. Frank Kirchoff, a prominent German American of Denver) for the volkfest, which would be held in the very near future, and that it would be advisable to have a thousand copies or so of the Chieftain on hand so as to post the Germans that the Chieftain was the only paper in the Rocky Mountain country that was friendly to the German cause. We appeared on the grounds with the sample copies; we did not erect a booth, but we had a special editorial which was approved by Zeigler and Von Fischer, and with their assistance we had a very successful day.

During the latter part of August or September, 1915—August, I am sure—Dr. Zeigler, Mr. von Fischer, Mr. Swain, and myself went over the proposition of erecting a booth between the beer garden and the dance hall at Lakeside Park, where another volkfest was to be held, and that the Chieftain was to carry the special editorial of Dr. Charles F. Aked, a minister from San Francisco, Cal., and the day before the volkfest our tent was put in the place mentioned above and thousands of copies of the Chieftain were at the park to be given away and to be paid for by, as I understand it, Zeigler.

Senator STERLING. Do you know the character of this editorial?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not recall it now.

We were assisted by Dr. Zeigler, Mr. von Fischer, several prominent Germans, and one in particular, a Rev. Schmide, of Denver, who spent almost the entire day in the booth assisting me in taking subscriptions. Two large banners were erected on the top of the tent calling attention to the fact that the Chieftain was the only paper west of Chicago that was giving the Emperor a square deal.

About the very latter part of September, 1915, Mr. Stevens and Mr. Swain called me on the carpet and criticized the success we were having with the Germans and that the matter of personal solicitation must be dropped, and that I must get the prominent Germans of the city together and tell them that Mr. Stevens desired that all of them make up a $5,000 pot, and that if I could not turn the trick, that he would hire somebody who would. After conferring with the Germans he mentioned, I reported back that they were all in favor of Zeigler's proposition, and Mr. Swain and Mr. Stevens informed me then to go ahead with the German consul's plan, but that they were not to be known in the transaction at all, and after conferring with Dr. Zeigler and Mr. von Fischer, who informed me that they desired to deal with prominent Americans all over the western part of the United States, how the papers must be distributed, and that we must deal only with the most prominent business men, such as lawyers, doctors, dentists, merchants, etc., and after reporting back to Mr. Stevens and Swain I was advised to go East and follow instructions.

On or about the 4th day of October, 1915, Dr. Zeigler and Mr. Fischer handed me letters in German to Ambassador von Bernstorff, Ambassador Dumba, and Zweidneck, and the German consul at Chicago, Ill. On or about the 6th day of October, 1915, I left for the East and called on the Chicago consul, who was out of the city, and the same day wired Mr. Swain, who wired me at a later date to make the best deal possible, and sign nothing. I arrived in New York about the 9th of October and went to the Knickerbocker Hotel, and phoned to Dr. Eidler at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, who asked me to come over after I informed him that I had a letter for the ambassador.

Upon arriving at the Ritz, Dr. Eidler, after reading Dr. Zeigler's letter, informed me that the ambassador was out of the city, and that he would make an appointment for me the following Wednesday, October 13, 1915. Dr. Eidler suggested that I had better go on to Lenox, Mass., where I was to see Baron Zweidneck, as I had missed Ambassador Dumba, who had been recalled. I arrived at Pittsfield, Mass., Saturday evening, October 9, and stayed there until the following morning, when I started for Lenox, arriving there in short time, and went direct to the summer embassy, where the baron had been informed by phone by Dr. Eidler that I was coming. After a lengthy conference with the baron, who decided that he desired to have the Chieftain carry a column of news printed in Italian type in our weekly or the daily, and desired to have the price submitted to Mr. Von Fischer as soon as possible. The baron also desired to have a considerable number of copies of the Chieftain sent out by rail. After the conference I left for Pittsfield, and then back to New York where I waited until October 13 for my conference with the ambassador. On the morning of the 13th Dr. Eidler phoned me to come over at 10 a. m., and upon arriving was shown into the ambassador's presence by Dr. Eidler, who introduced me and who then retired.

The ambassador, after going over my letter from Dr. Zeigler, informed me that he was very glad to meet the representative of the paper who was very friendly to the cause, and that he would be very glad to render whatever assistance was possible, as he felt very kindly toward the Chieftain. He seemed to be pretty well informed of Dr. Zeigler's plans regarding the Chieftain, and after going over a map on his table informed me that he would like to have the Chieftain scattered over the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado to start with, but that the paper must be sent to the most prominent men in the four States, and that I must see that the names were carefully selected so as the most remote hamlet would be reached, and that at all times I should follow Dr. Zeigler's directions. It was very important that the matter be handled so as to not create suspicion as to who was paying for the circulation, and that receipts should be given by either side for the money given or received, as it would cause considerable embarrassment to the paper and to Dr. Zeigler. He informed me that he would chat the Austro-Hungarian deal over with the baron, and that he would advise regarding that end through Dr. Zeigler at Denver.

He agreed to give us $20,000, to be payable in monthly installments, and after that expired to renew the same, with the promise that we follow all suggestions that Dr. Zeigler would make, so as help the people of the four States to obtain Germany's side of the war. After the conference I returned to Denver and reported to my superiors, who were very well pleased with what was accomplished, and on the 22d of November, 1915, I was advised by Mr. Swain to see Zeigler about some cash, and Zeigler informed me that it was due almost any day now, but that I could wire the ambassador or Dr. Eidler if I desired as to when we would receive our first payment, and between the time of sending my telegram to Eidler and receiving my answer I received word the morning of the 23d day of November to stop that wire if possible, as some of the money had arrived, and inside of a half hour I received a wire signed by the ambassador informing me to confer with Dr. Zeigler, who was informed, and upon reaching Dr. Zeigler's office he informed me that he had a draft for the first payment of $1,080, and that if I would return in about three hours he would have the cash; and returning at about 1 p. m., I was informed by Mr. Martin, Dr. Zeigler's secretary, that the doctor was out, and I asked for the cash, and he gave me the draft, saying that Dr. Zeigler had indorsed it and told him to go to the bank and have same cashed, but that he had not the time to go, and would I mind cashing the same at the German-American Trust Co. I cashed the draft at the German-American Trust Co. after Mr. Schirmer had indorsed it on the face of the draft; and returning to the office of the Chieftain, gave the same to Mr. Stevens and Mr. Swain, who informed me that they were very well satisfied.

Some time in the next month or so Zeigler bitterly complained about a photograph which appeared on the front page of the Chieftain regarding the enlistments at Toronto, and Mr. Swain immediately phoned Pueblo asking for an explanation as to why such a thing appeared in the Chieftain, and the answer by mail was turned over to Dr. Zeigler, who forwarded same to the ambassador at Washington and the matter was smoothed out. In the meantime I was very busy with Mr. Von Fischer regarding the Austrian deal which was dragging along very slowly, and Baron Zwedneck informed Von Fischer that the matter would soon be ready.

On or about February 10, 1915, I was advised to go to Washington by Mr. Swain and Mr. Stevens to see the ambassador and also the baron regarding more cash which had failed to come through Dr. Zeigler's office, and Mr. Von Fischer gave me a letter to the consular general at the embassy at Washington, which I did not have to present, as I got to the baron without any trouble, and he advised me that the matter was to be started in March, 1916——

Here is the letter. [Producing a letter and offering it to Senator Overman.] I do not know whether it has ever been translated, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. All right. Do not hand it to me.

Maj. HUMES. Give it to me. Maybe we can translate it.

Mr. SMITH. Referring to this last letter, which I did not have to present, as I got to the baron without any trouble, and he advised me that the matter was to be started in March, 1916, and that it could have been started sooner but that he had been afraid of an exposure, but that Ambassador Bernstorff had informed him that the best way to handle it would be to pay us the cash and have us in the Italian column, and that the editorials would do the rest; but the baron did not favor the idea of sending the papers to American business men, but to have them sent to the prominent Austrians through several western States, and promised me that the matter would be ready by March 10. Later, when calling on the ambassador at the embassy, the ambassador went over the matter regarding the Austrian deal and said that he would adjust any differences between the baron and myself and that he would also make immediate arrangements whereby we could get our payments promptly, and that he was very well satisfied with the paper to date but that we must never forget to follow his consul's instructions.

In April the ambassador advised me that Zeigler was going to give me some instructions regarding an editorial that he desired to have printed regarding Col. Roosevelt, and that he wanted extra copies sent out. Zeigler gave me the general idea of what he wanted published, and I turned same over to Mr. Swain, and the editorial appeared later as to why Col. Roosevelt should not be nominated at the Chicago Republican convention. The consul and the ambassador conveyed their personal thanks on the editorial and Zeigler mailed out several hundred copies from his own office around the eastern part of the United States.

After the Chicago convention, Dr. Zeigler called me to his office and informed me that they had a special proposition to put over as to another matter was not working out as well as they had planned, and that he was going to increase the amount of papers being mailed to either five or ten thousand copies daily, and that a few editorials now and then why Mr. Wilson should not be reelected would be advisable, and that as we were the leading Republican paper of the West the public would never bite as it would be taken and accepted as politics. Zeigler requested me to wire to the ambassador and make the suggestion but to word the letter so as no one would be the wiser in event it fell into the wrong hands. He had requested me to do the same thing before, and I saw no harm to his request. I always followed his suggestion, and later on he informed me jokingly that, as the request came from me, the ambassador could not be blamed in event matters went wrong, as by this time there was considerable comment around Denver as to whether the Chieftain was getting paid for a lot of editorials that were appearing almost daily. My letter to the ambassador was answered with the invitation to come on, and later I was informed that the entire balance that was standing out, about $17,000, would be paid in lump form just as soon as we started the new system, the paper refusing to go any further. I had received the balance or part of the cash, but upon assurance from Bernstorff and Zeigler that the matter would be fixed up in a hurry the lists were all made up out of telephone books from several States and I waited for instructions.

I was beginning to get the feeling that Zeigler was not playing a fair game on the square, and during the summer of 1916 spent considerable time around his office and was present when the letter came from the ambassador regarding the Wilson deal, and not receiving the balance of cash in the short time in which the matter was to be settled, I decided that I would endeavor to obtain the original copy from the ambassador to the consul and turn the same over to the State Department at Washington, and spent considerable time on the plan. My idea was not to even up with Zeigler, but after turning the matter over for days felt that they were going too far with propaganda when it came to taking such an interest in the coming election. I sent J. M. Strauss, a reporter on the Denver Express, to Washington, after writing the State Department, and upon Mr. Strauss's return I was informed that they took no stock in the matter at all, at least not enough to make an investigation, which would have proved beyond a reasonable doubt just what was going on, and a few weeks later when in conference with the ambassador I was informed that everything was ready. Returning to Denver, I went ahead with my idea of obtaining the letter, but foolishly mentioned and went over my plans with C. W. Richards, the Denver druggist, who in turn took my plan to Godfrey Schirmer, president of the German-American Trust Co., and the two then conferred with Dr. Zeigler, who wired the ambassador regarding Richards's demand of $5,000 for the information, and, upon receiving a favorable answer, Richards, with the aid of Schirmer, informed Dr. Zeigler of the entire transaction, and upon advising the office, Mr. Stevens and Mr. Swain agreed to handle the matter with the ambassador in person, and, according to the statement made to me by Mr. Swain, Mr. Stevens received the sum of $12,000 from the ambassador in Washington, and then Mr. Swain sent me to Washington December 1, 1916, to try to get the ambassador to pay the balance which he felt was due, the ambassador very politely informed me that while I had tried to spoil the scheme, that the balance would be paid to Zeigler who in turn would pay same over to me; and it dragged along until the severance of relations.

The Austrian deal never went through, only in a small way through the consul and the vice consul, Mr. Von Fischer, who subscribed to a great many copies of the paper by the year to be sent to their personal friends and paid for by the consul and Mr. Von Fischer.

Maj. HUMES. In conducting these negotiations, how many times did you confer with the German ambassador?

Mr. SMITH. October, 1915; February, 1916; April, 1916; July, 1916; and December, 1916.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any memorandum showing the date of the draft that you say was handed to you for cashing?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Maj. HUMES. You do not remember?

Mr. SMITH. I cashed the draft on the 23d of November, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. You cashed it on the 23d of November, 1915?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That is the only cash that went through your hands in the deal?

Mr. SMITH. That is the only cash that I ever handled.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any exhibits in the shape of telegrams or letters passing through you and the German ambassador?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a telegram which has been marked by the porter "Smith Exhibit No. 1." Is that the telegram you received from Ambassador Bernstorff?

Mr. SMITH. That is the answer.

Maj. HUMES. That is an answer to the telegram that you sent?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The telegram you sent is the one which the report has marked "Smith Exhibit No. 2"? Smith Exhibit No. 2 is the telegram that you sent to the German Embassy, and Smith Exhibit No. 1 is the reply that you received?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Maj. HUMES. I submit Smith Exhibit No. 2, Mr. Chairman, is a copy of a telegram dated Denver, November 22, 1915, reading as follows:

SMITH EXHIBIT No. 2.

Dr. EIDLER,

Care the German Embassy, Washington, D. C.:

Could you let me have an immediate reply as to whether there is a chance of an early and favorable reply in reference to my appointment at Ritz Car. New York, October 13. Answer collect.

A. J. SMITH.

Smith Exhibit No. 1 is a telegram dated Washington, D. C., November 23, 1915, reading as follows:

SMITH EXHIBIT No. 1.

A. J. SMITH,

Care Pueblo Chieftain, Denver, Colo.:

Please confer with Dr. Ziegler, who is informed.

J. BERNSTORFF

Senator STERLING. What was Dr. Zeigler's position?

Mr. SMITH. General counsel for four or five western States.

Maj. HUMES. You mean consul, do you not? He was the German consul in that district?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What became of him? Is he in this country?

Mr. SMITH. He went back with Bernstorff.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state as to whether or not the editorial with reference to Col. Roosevelt, to which you have referred, was printed in the Chieftan?

Mr. SMITH. It was; but that editorial is not here.

Maj. HUMES. You have not that editorial here with you?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What instructions, if any, did you receive from Dr. Zeigler, the German consul, as to the editorial policy of the Chieftan or what the editorial policy of the Chieftan should be with reference to the 1916 campaign?

Mr. SMITH. Dr. Zeigler was very well satisfied with the editorial policy of the paper. He had no complaint about that at all in submitting the proposition in July, 1916, I believe, regarding the distribution of either 5,000 or 10,000 copies to be sent out over the five States mentioned and three extra—I believe it was Wyoming, Montana, and South Dakota—his suggestions being merely that I was to instruct the editors below that an editorial occasionally, now and then, should be published as to why Mr. Wilson should not be elected to fall, and that he thought that would have considerable influence owing to the fact that it would appear over all that section of the country; that there would not be any suspicion attached to it, due to the fact that it was a Republican newspaper and that the subscribers would just assume that it was politics.

Maj. HUMES. What was the policy of the paper with reference to the Republican national convention and the Republican candidates?

Mr. SMITH. They backed Mr. Hughes and the Republican ticket as a whole, I guess; but they did not favor Col. Roosevelt.

Maj. HUMES. They were to oppose Col. Roosevelt?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes. At that time the paper was being written by Mr. Swain, understand. Mr. Stevens is a pretty strong Republican. Mr. Stevens had nothing to do with the editorial policy of the paper at that time, in the summer of 1916.

Maj. HUMES. At that time it was under lease by Swain?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I believe that is all.

Senator STERLING. What was the attitude of the paper in regard to the war and the German cause?

Mr. SMITH. They just favored the Kaiser from start to finish, as the editorials here will show.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any sample editorials with you?

Mr. SMITH. I have editorials here; yes. Here is one which appeared, also at the suggestion of Dr. Zeigler; that he did not think it would do any good, but that he did not think it would do any harm. I believe that was just prior to the recall of Boy Ed and von Papen.

Maj. HUMES. This is an editorial opposing the withdrawal of Boy Ed and von Papen.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are these papers still being published?

Mr. SMITH. One. The News went under.

Senator WOLCOTT. How about the other one?

Mr. SMITH. The Chieftain is still in existence, and very prosperous.

Senator WOLCOTT. Under the same management?

Mr. SMITH. Under the same management.

Maj. HUMES. It also published an editorial defending Dr. Dumba and opposing the attitude of this Government toward the recognition of Dr. Dumba as the Austrian ambassador?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I do not know whether the committee desires to put any of these matters into the record or not.

Senator OVERMAN. I think not. He has stated what the policy of the papers was; that they were favorable to the Kaiser.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the position the Chieftain took on the question of the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was it?

Mr. SMITH. I would say that they upheld it, by the way we lost subscribers there for the following two weeks.

Maj. HUMES. What news service was used by the Chieftain? Do you know?

Mr. SMITH. The Associated Press.

Maj. HUMES. It had an Associated Press franchise?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say that the paper upheld or sustained the sinking of the Lusitania, and you judge that from the way you lost subscribers?

Mr. SMITH. I judge that by the attitude of a dozen or fifteen of our very prominent subscribers there in Denver, who immediately called down to the office of the Chieftain, and, while it was the policy of the Chieftain to collect $7 a year in advance for subscriptions, some of those subscriptions practically had just started when they came there looking for the gentleman who editorially upheld the sinking of the Lusitania and wanted their subscriptions canceled.

Senator WOLCOTT. The editorial policy was, then, clearly one of the justification of that sinking?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. That is all, Mr. Smith.

Maj. HUMES. I would like to submit this translation and have it put into the record in connection with the testimony of Mr. Smith. Would the committee like to have it read?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES (reading).

SMITH EXHIBIT No. 3.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF, WASHINGTON, IMPERIAL AND ROYAL AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN CONSULATE
Denver, Colorado

DEAR SIR: Mr. A. G. Smith, who was received a few months ago by Counselor of Legation Zwiedinek in Lenox, who is about to go to Washington and would like to try to be received, if possible, by the Imperial and Royal charge d'affaires.

Since Consul von Manojlovits is absent on official business this afternoon, it was not possible to provide him with official credentials, and for this reason I take the liberty herewith of introducing him to you so that you may be able to do what you consider fitting in his behalf.

Accept, Sir, the expression of my most loyal devotion.

(Signed)

FISCHER-ANKERN
Vice-Consul.

Senator OVERMAN. You are excused, Mr. Smith.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. J. A. Arnold is here.

Mr. J. A. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I want to have an opportunity to consult with Senator Bailey, who has not arrived yet. He is expected at any moment, and I would prefer to discuss the matter with him before appearing.

Senator OVERMAN. We have postponed this for a week.

Mr. ARNOLD. I know you have, Mr. Chairman, but I want to confer with him first, although I want to get along just as much as anyone and get through just as quickly as we can. But that is the situation and that is my desire. He may be here any minute.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think you need counsel?

Mr. ARNOLD. I would prefer to discuss matters with him; yes.

Senator OVERMAN. When do you think he is coming back?

Mr. ARNOLD. His residence told me at 11.30 that they expected him in any minute. His wife said they were waiting breakfast for him for that matter, and did not know why he was delayed, but heard he was on a late train.

Senator OVERMAN. If Mr. Arnold wants counsel, I suppose he is entitled to it.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but he should be ready by half past 2.

Senator WOLCOTT. There should be some time limit fixed. If he can not get Mr. Bailey, there are plenty of other lawyers that he can get.

Mr. ARNOLD. Senator Bailey is more familiar with this matter and with the circumstances surrounding it than anybody else.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any witnesses to go on with, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. As to the other witnesses that we have here the same request would apply, I imagine. Is that correct, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You will be ready at half past 2, then, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. PATTERSON. May I go ahead now, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. I would like to have Senator King here before we proceed, however. We will telephone to him that we are ready to go ahead.

Mr. ARNOLD. I understand that you want us to go on at half past 2. Can it not be put off until to-morrow morning, in case Senator Bailey does not get here, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. We will make it 3 o'clock, then.

(Whereupon at 12.05 o'clock a. m. the subcommittee went into executive session, at the conclusion of which a recess was taken until 3 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met at 3 o'clock p. m. pursuant to the taking of the recess.

Senator OVERMAN. Is Mr. Arnold here?

Mr. ARNOLD. The situation is unchanged. I have not heard from Senator Bailey, with whom I want to discuss these matters. He is expected at any minute. I would like to crave the indulgence of the committee until to-morrow.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is Senator Bailey now?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was in Tucson, Ariz. He was there Thursday. He has been delayed, or is in a wreck, somewhere. I called his office and they said that they expected him any moment, but they had had no wire from him to-day.

Senator OVERMAN. We want to go on, and if there is anything that you want to consult your counsel about you could reserve it until you can see him.

Senator WOLCOTT. Can you tell us, Mr. Arnold, why it is necessary to consult your attorney?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I would prefer it. I take it that this investigation will go into matters that I would prefer to consult an attorney about.

Senator WOLCOTT. I know; but is it your objection that you will be called to answer questions that would incriminate you in any way?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not think that would be possible.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the point of having an attorney, then?

Mr. ARNOLD. I only want to go over it with an attorney who understands the general situation better. I think there is some politics mixed in it.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, that has not anything to do with it. Unless there is something that might incriminate you in your testimony, I shall insist that you go on.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I would prefer to consult Senator Bailey, unless you insist that I shall proceed. That is my request.

Senator WOLCOTT. If you think that you are going to be asked questions that might bring you to the point that you might not be able to determine, when you are asked questions, whether your answers will incriminate you, and therefore would like to have counsel that is one proposition. But if you want to talk with your lawyer before answering questions, with no thought of that in your mind, it strikes me as a request that it is rather difficult to grant.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any suggestions, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Of course, we are willing to proceed with this matter. The request that Mr. Arnold makes is a personal request to the committee, but we are ready to proceed, and of course we are anxious to progress with this matter. The matter has now been held up for a week. I think it was a week ago to-day that you came.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think a week ago yesterday, the 7th.

Maj. HUMES. A week ago to-day.

Mr. ARNOLD. You are right.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose that Senator Bailey does not come to-night?

Mr. ARNOLD. I say that we shall proceed to-morrow, and I shall make no request for further delay.

Senator OVERMAN. Where are you from?

Mr. ARNOLD. Fort Worth, Tex.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know Senator Bailey personally?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. When did you see him last?

Mr. ARNOLD. I talked with him about a couple of months or so ago, I guess; something like that.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you discuss this matter with him?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I did not know this matter was coming up.

Maj. HUMES. Has he been your attorney in connection with general matters that are likely to be inquired about?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have had no attorney.

Maj. HUMES. He has no particular knowledge of these various transactions that the subpoena would indicate are going to be inquired into?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know that he has any knowledge about it; no; but I would prefer to consult him, and the man I am associated with would prefer to do so.

Senator OVERMAN. Is this your request or the request of somebody else?

Mr. ARNOLD. It is my request.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anybody with you that wants it postponed?

Mr. ARNOLD. The young lady that is subpoenaed with me and working with me.

Senator OVERMAN. Your secretary?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. She wants to consult Senator Bailey also?

Mr. ARNOLD. We would like to consult Senator Bailey, if you please. If he is not here by morning, we will gladly proceed without any further discussion.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not know whether—have you any idea whether you can get him to appear for you or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I consulted his offices and residence, and used due diligence, and telephoned every 30 minutes, but he had not arrived up to the time I last telephoned.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say that you will be ready to go ahead to-morrow whether he is here or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I would not crave the further indulgence of this committee.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we will postpone it until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ARNOLD. If he is not here I will go on anyway.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well, 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ARNOLD. All right.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you proceed with anything else, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir; the witnesses that were being delayed by reason of this postponement would probably take a couple of days.

Senator OVERMAN. Will Mr. Swenson be here to-morrow?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; he is to be here in the morning?

Senator NELSON. Who is that?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Swenson. That is in connection with the same general matter.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take an adjournment until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

(Thereupon, at 3.15 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned until Wednesday, January 15, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 11 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman) and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to put upon the record the fact that Senator Nelson is always on time. He is always present when he should be. I want to put that upon the record.

The committee will come to order. We will not wait for the other members of the subcommittee. They will doubtless be in shortly. Senator Thomas is here, and we will be glad for him to make a statement.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR CHARLES S. THOMAS, OF COLORADO.

Senator THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I am here in what I conceive to be the discharge of a personal and public duty.

The Washington Post of this morning contains what purports to be the substance of so-called testimony of one Austin J. Smith before this committee yesterday, which assumes to involve the good name and loyalty of three citizens of the State which I, in part, represent in the Senate. I seldom indulge in expletives, but I want to say in advance that this man, Austin J. Smith, is an unsuccessful black-mailer, an unmitigated liar, and a man whom I believe to be a forger.

In the month of October, 1916, a prominent business man of Denver, whose name I do not care to use, informed me confidentially that one Austin J. Smith was in possession of information of a very formidable character, involving the conduct of a prominent newspaper in the southern part of the State and the proprietors of that paper in an intrigue with German influences and contrary to the neutral position which this country then occupied in the war, and he thought I should see him. Shortly afterwards this man appeared at my office in Denver.

The substance of his story, then, was that he had been connected with the editorial staff of the Pueblo Chieftain, and that while there a telegram had been received from Ambassador Bernstorff which he had secured possession of in the interests of the Government and because of his own conceptions of the duty he owed to the country.

The telegram purported to be signed by Bernstorff, and, as I now recall, referred the papers to the then German consul at Denver. I did not believe that Bernstorff was rash or foolish enough to use the wires in any such way unless the business itself was legitimate. But this man appeared to be very earnest, and told me that he knew letters on file in the office of the Pueblo Chieftain which he was willing to take the risk of securing if they could be made useful to the Government.

I neither recommended nor opposed the suggestion. He then told me that he was a Democrat; that among his other purposes was that of aiding the Democratic campaign, the presidential campaign, and that he would like to come on to Washington and be put in touch with the State Department. I told him that if he would go to the Democratic headquarters in Washington and consult with Senator Walsh I would see that his expenses were paid. At the same time I told him very candidly that I did not take any stock in the telegram which he possessed, a copy of which I took and afterwards destroyed; but that if Senator Walsh, then in charge of the campaign headquarters at Chicago, thought enough of his story to send it further, I would apprise the Secretary of State that he should have an interview.

I did not see nor hear of this fellow for some time afterwards. And I will say another reason why I thought his story was preposterous was my acquaintance with Isaac N. Stevens and Mr. A. A. Swain. These gentlemen are prominent Republicans in my State; they are citizens of unquestioned standing and character, and I number them among my warm personal friends. I did not speak to them about this matter, because the gentlemen who sent Smith to me assured me that any statement he made would be confidential. I subsequently discovered that he did not go to Chicago at all.

Subsequently—and, as I recall, in the month of February or March 1917—this man appeared in my office in this building, saying, in substance, that he had tried in vain to secure an audience with the powers that be, but they seemed to be as much opposed to receiving information of importance to the Government as he was anxious to impart. I asked him if he had the letter to which he referred, and he said he had not.

I then told him that as far as I was concerned I did not want to hear anything more about it. He then intimated that he thought he should be compensated for the efforts which he had made, both to his Government and his party, and that he was strapped, or wanted to that effect.

I told him that, as far as I was concerned, I should neither pay him nor recommend anybody else to pay him, and that I was satisfied his whole scheme was one of blackmail, which aroused an apparent protest, accompanied by a slight show of indignation.

Shortly afterwards I informed Mr. Swain and Mr. Stevens of this incident, and was not at all surprised when they told me that he had begun this campaign of his by demanding money from them in consequence of which they had, metaphorically speaking, kicked him out of the office and out of further employment with the paper.

Mr. Swain also told me at that time, and Mr. Stevens subsequently, that the whole thing was a scheme which either he or some one for whom he had concocted, and that the purpose was, if possible, to secure money by purchasing his silence.

During his interviews with me—and there were three or four of them—he never intimated that he knew Bernstorff, that he ever him, that he had ever had any contact with anybody connected with the matter, his sole source of information being what he had heard in this office and his apparently surreptitious theft of this so-called telegram.

I informed the gentleman who had first brought the subject to my attention of the character and conduct of this man and advised him to beware of him. He also said that the sum of $1,500—I think that was the amount—had been paid in advance to the proprietors of this paper through the German-American Trust Co., of Denver. It so happened that the man who sent him to me was a director in that institution, and he could find no trace of any such thing. I asked particularly if any of the articles which these men were to publish as consideration for this money had appeared. He was unable to direct my attention to a single one of them.

He now comes before this committee at this belated time with a statement that is entirely different from the statement that he made to me, and evidently made for the same purpose.

The dispatches have gone out carrying the story that these three gentlemen were engaged in an intrigue, which was virtually treason against their country, with the recent German Emperor. It is an outrage that they should be subjected to any such imputation. I hope that what I have said will be given similar publicity in their interest.

I am not so well acquainted with Mr. Eidler; I know him slightly and I know of him. He is at present the managing editor of the paper. He is an American citizen—loyal, upright, and respectable. Mr. I. N. Stevens has never had anything more than a nominal connection with the paper for the last four or five years. He is at present president of Philadelphia, president of one of the most prosperous insurance companies in that city, a native-born American citizen, a native of Ohio, and a patriot in every sense of the term.

I am obliged to you, gentlemen.

Senator OVERMAN. Much obliged to you, Senator.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, how did this man make his appearance before this committee?

Senator THOMAS. I might add, if there is any way to prosecute that man for perjury before this committee (he testified under oath) it ought to be done.

Maj. HUMES. Senator Thomas, for your information, there is the original letter of introduction of the Austrian authorities and referring to the conferences that he had had with them [handing letter to Senator Thomas].

Senator THOMAS. Do you know what the date of this is?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir. Here is the translation.

Senator THOMAS. It is a little curious he did not call my attention to this, when he was so anxious to serve his country. He never mentioned it, directly or indirectly, to me at the times of which I speak.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that a letter of introduction?

Senator THOMAS. I do not believe he had that letter at the time. Of course, that letter does not in any way inculcate the gentleman.

Maj. HUMES. It was evidence of the genuineness of the witness in presenting himself to testify to the committee.

Senator THOMAS. I am not finding fault with the committee or the intelligence section of the United States for heeding this man's statements, because I did the same thing, and because he has taken several people in, but that does not do away with the fact that he is a liar, a blackmailer, and I say it deliberately, fully aware of the personal consequences that may result from it.

Maj. HUMES. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that Mr. Smith filed yesterday not a copy but what purports to be an original telegram from Bernstorff.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you yet examined those editorials which he filed?

Maj. HUMES. I have some of these editorials; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Are they pro-German or not?

Maj. HUMES. Here is one of the editorials he presented, which is defending Von Papen and Boy-Ed, and saying they should not be withdrawn, or should not be ordered back home, and the other is an editorial entitled "Questionable Diplomacy," defending Dr. Dumba and saying he should have been recognized by this Government. Those are two of the editorials that I have read. There are several others, the whole text of which I have not yet undertaken to read.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better read in all of these editorials.

Senator NELSON. They ought to be put into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. In justice to him he is entitled to have these editorials go on the record.

The editorials referred to are here printed in the record as follows:

QUESTIONABLE DIPLOMACY.

It is not a matter of doubt whether Dr. Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador in Washington, has been guilty of any impropriety in his official conduct. But it certainly was not improper that he should notify Austro-Hungarian subjects resident in the United States that they could not expect assistance in the manufacture of war munitions for Great Britain and her allies without infringing upon their loyalty to the nation of which they are citizens. As we understand it, has been the extent of Dr. Dumba's activities, and these are no more obnoxious than the activities of the British ambassador in Vienna in forwarding the manufactures of munitions and in facilitating the payment of them.

If Dr. Dumba has undertaken to control the conduct of naturalized American citizens who have renounced their allegiance to Francis Joseph and his government, that is quite a different matter. It is also a different matter if he has made an effort to disorganize and to obstruct the course of American industry without regard to the Austro-Hungarian subjects employed there.

PERSONAE NONGRATAE.

[From the Pueblo Chieftain, Monday, Dec. 6, 1915.]

The request of the State Department for the immediate withdrawal of German men, military and naval attachés of the German embassy, opens several interesting topics for discussion.

As a matter of diplomatic practice, the department is entirely within its rights in asking for the recall of these men. It does not matter what they have done or left undone. It does not matter whether or not they have violated any laws of this country. It does not matter whether or not the State Department or any other department has any evidence to prove that they have done anything which they ought not to have done. If the State Department wishes, for any reason, for their recall, it has a right to make that request, and the other government concerned has no reason in diplomatic custom to feel that it has any cause for complaint.

When we consider the relations of the German people and of the people of the United States, however, there are certain circumstances that come into question, which are not strictly matters of diplomatic practice at all, but which are rather matters of public opinion and of what may be called "public policy."

If it is a matter of some importance to hold the good will of the German people toward the people of the United States, so far as is practicable under present conditions, and also to hold the course of the Government of the United States strictly neutral and without offence to Americans of German birth and descent, it would seem that no complaint of this kind ought to be made at the present time against any official connected with the embassy of any belligerent government, unless the activities of that person are of such a nature as to be inconsistent with the laws or the national interests of the United States.

In spite of the vast amount of public talk of criminal activity on the part of German or Austrian agents or sympathizers in the destruction of property and the endangering of life, we are not aware that a charge of this kind has been made against these two men. They have been accused of trying to help German commerce raiders in a manner not prohibited at that time by the laws of the United States. The case against them, it is said, is not capable of legal proof, "consisting of an accumulation of suspicions, circumstances, and conditions which connected the attachés with attempts to violate the neutrality laws of the United States."

When one considers the various activities that have been manifested in this country in connection with the efforts to supply arms, munitions and other materials of war for the enemies of Germany, it appears clear that our Government should be slow to act against German agents or supporters who were trying to do what they could, lawfully, to help the German cause. It may be that the anti-German activity was not unlawful, but if our Government was to preserve its neutrality, in the face of such activity it was not good judgment to take summary action against German attachés without showing of good reason.

It would have been better to have avoided action in this matter, or else to have presented a clear showing of reason for taking this action. For this reason we say, that the administration in this case has demonstrated once more its inability to follow a strong, wise and dignified course that commends itself to the judgment of fair-minded and impartial Americans.

Maj. HUMES. Here is another editorial, entitled "Successful publicity," the last paragraph of which reads:

Sentiments may be against Germany, but she has managed to keep admiration with her, and one is as broad as the other.

(The editorial here referred to is printed in the record, as follows:)

[From the Pueblo Chieftain of Dec. 6, 1915.]

SUCCESSFUL PUBLICITY.

Many are wondering why the Germans undertake the Balkan drive at this time. We are not a member of any inner circle of the German military staff, but we suspect it is for the purpose of distracting attention from the western theater of the war.

Whatever else Germany has, she is a rattling good press agent. Every time the allies pull a stunt that should give them a week's run of good stuff, Germany does something to counteract it. When France was driving the Germans back from Paris, a German submarine sank three English cruisers and held the attention of the world in the North Sea while she retreated to her present line of trenches.

A little later when the English troops were getting the best of it along the northern line of trenches, she sent her ships over and shelled the English coast towns. And so it has been all through whenever and wherever she has been given a defeat she has offset it with a spectacular move of some kind.

The allies' big drive started in earnest three weeks ago, but how long did it occupy the front page? Not over four days. By that time Germany had sprung the greatest sensation of the war, her determination to drive through the Balkans and march to Constantinople. No one knows what is happening in the big drive. Germany may lose a few miles or a few hilltops, but if she does no one will know for the drive through Serbia is the headliner.

What the allies need is some one who can plan press agent drives just at a time when they are getting the worst of it. Some one who can come up smiling and hit back with a punch that can be heard round the world.

Sentiment may be against Germany, but she has managed to keep admiration with her and one is as broad as the other.

(The following editorials submitted by Senator Thomas are printed in the record as follows:)

[From the Pueblo Chieftain of July 21, 1916.]

THE LATEST COMPLICATION.

The "Wilson Waltz" has been outlined as "one step forward, two back, side step, and hesitate," all of which is both apt and applicable. The latest illustration is to be found in the complication of circumstances to arise as a result of the appearance of a merchant submarine.

The Wilson administration has gone on record as declaring that a merchant ship must not be destroyed without warning and without giving its crew passengers an opportunity for escape, and has insisted that an established principle of international law must be observed until changed by international agreement even tho material conditions may have changed by such invention as the submarine and the airship. It has declared that a German submarine must be governed by this rule, even tho a single rifle bullet from the merchant ship might cripple or destroy the submarine.

And now comes the submarine merchantman, which under the principle declared by the Wilson cabinet, must not be sunk without warning by an armed cruiser, or without the opportunity of escape for its crew. And if an American citizen should happen to be a passenger on the Deutschland or its sister ship and the life of that American should be lost an offense would be committed against the honor and dignity of the United States which would justify the President in writing at least another note demanding satisfaction.

It is quite possible to imagine a British cruiser in close proximity to the scope of an unknown submarine waiting to investigate whether that submarine is a peaceful merchantman or an armed torpedo boat, but no incident of this kind is likely to be recorded in the history of this war. If the Deutschland is sighted by an allied cruiser there will be no thought of warning, examination or escape for the crew. The cruiser will shoot as quick and as fast as possible and if the Deutschland escapes it will be because he gets under water before the shot hits her. If there is an American on board, so much the worse for the American. And President Wilson may continue writing notes until the end of the war, or until the end of his presidential term, or until it suits his pleasure to stop writing them, and it will make no particular difference to any one.

[From the Pueblo Chieftain of May 9, 1915.]

THE SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA.

In so far as concerns the death of the Americans who were aboard the Lusitania many things must be taken into consideration before we can arrive at any just conclusion concerning either our governmental duties or our private opinions.

It must be remembered that each and all of these American passengers voluntarily went aboard the Lusitania, after having signed a waiver of all liability for damages for any untoward accident that might take place, and being fully cognizant of the dangers that beset their paths by going into the war zone of Europe and into the waters where the Germans have maintained an armed blockade for many weeks.

It is to be presumed that these passengers were satisfied with the protection as well as with the dangers involved in sailing under the British flag and on a British ship. They also knew that this ship carried large quantities of munitions of war for the use of the Allies against the Germans and they also had the knowledge that there were other nearby sailing dates of ships flying the American flag.

Therefore, it would seem that these passengers, bent on pleasure or business as the case may be, had ample knowledge of the risk they were taking.

(The following letters, ordered by the chairman to be inserted in the record, are here printed in full, as follows:)

18 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTH STREET,
New York City, December 11, 1918.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman of Senate Investigating Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The inclusion of my name in the "Important List of Names" of the German agent, Dr. Fuehr, and Mr. Bielaski's remark that this list consisted of pro-Germans require me to make this answer, so far as I personally am concerned. I never saw Dr. Fuehr nor even heard of his name until the publication of Mr. Bielaski's testimony. I have no knowledge whatever of the reason for the inclusion of my name in his list.

As Assistant Professor of European History in Indiana University I have had many occasions to discuss the issues of the war. Ever since the sinking of the Lusitania I have not merely privately but also publicly both in class and in the press strongly advocated the entrance of the United States into the war against Germany, as my students and associates can readily testify. More than that, I then began an active study of the methods and aims of German propaganda both in this country and abroad (during 1915-1916 while in Spain as a Traveling Fellow from Harvard University I had an excellent opportunity to study certain phases of German propaganda there).

The result of this study was a series of lectures on German Propaganda which I delivered during the academic year of 1917-1918 in Indiana University as a part of a general course on the Causes of the War. In these lectures, one of which appeared in the April 1918 Alumni Quarterly of the University, I pointed out how, previous to our entrance into the war, Germany sought to prevent our participation, and how, failing in that, she sought to render our participation ineffective, or worse than ineffective, by attempting to cause us to actively encourage the Allies to accept a German peace.

To those who know me and have known my views on the war the charge of pro-Germanism requires no defense. Were it not for the official character of the charge I should let it pass as unworthy of notice. As it is I should greatly appreciate your inserting this letter in the record of your Committee's proceedings. If any member of the Committee has the least doubt of the adequacy of this reply I hope you will accord me the privilege of a hearing.

Very respectfully yours,

JAMES G. McDONALD.

248 SOUTH TWENTY-THIRD STREET,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 11, 1918.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of the fact that my name appears in a long list that was published in the press of this country a few days ago, said to have been found in the diary of a certain Dr. Fuehr, (agent of the German Embassy at Washington), that was laid before your Committee, I beg to submit the following statement in earnest protest against the unwarranted use of my name, and in explanation of my attitude towards the war.

I do not know Dr. Fuehr, and never heard his name until I saw the publication in the newspapers above referred to. I never had any connection of any kind with the German Embassy or with any kind of German propaganda, or any other kind of propaganda, before, or during, or since the war. The use of my name in the diary was, therefore, entirely unwarranted, and I beg to submit that the Department of Justice, before allowing that diary to be brought before your Committee as evidence, should have given those whose names appeared therein an opportunity of making an explanation. It is not fair to citizens in good repute to have their names published far and wide throughout this country as connected with a propaganda with which they not only had nothing to do, but which they strongly condemn, in common with all other fellow-citizens. I venture to think that it is the duty of a Department of Justice to protect citizens against unfounded implications, as much as it is the function of such a Department to expose persons who are guilty of misdemeanors.

As for my own attitude towards the war, I wish to say that at the beginning of the conflict in 1914, after my return from Munich, where I spent the summer of 1914 engaged in research in my chosen field, I wrote a number of articles which were published in the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, and some of which were published in The New York Evening Post and The Nation. These articles were mainly concerned with "a plea for fairness and moderation" (as in the first article) regarding our judgments about the war. These articles and letters were written entirely on my own initiative and solely from a view of presenting certain facts and views which I thought might be of value and interest to others on the subject that was occupying the attention of the entire American public. My chief aim was to counteract the tendency which I regarded as unjust, to turn every incident and occurrence of the war to the disadvantage of Germany and to blame her for things which could not be laid at her door. The tone of these articles was moderate, and I must say that in the very first one I condemned the violation of Belgium's neutrality and I did so more specifically in a letter to The Nation, written in the early part of the war (dated February 20, 1915) and published in the issue of The Nation of March 4, 1915. At the same time, these articles indicated a sympathetic attitude towards Germany, the result of a strong intellectual attachment to that country, due to the training that I had received at German universities (after finishing my college course at the University of Pennsylvania) and further strengthened by repeated sojourns in that country, more particularly in Munich.

My attitude received a shock when reports concerning the treatment of Belgium by the German government and soldiery were confirmed, and this sympathy was entirely dispelled by the sinking of the Lusitania. Shortly after that inhumane act, I published in the New York Evening Post, of June 1, 1915, and likewise in the Public Ledger of the same date, an article expressing the horror of the act, and appealing to the friends of Germany to recall to her obligation to the world and to herself as one of the standard-bearers of civilization. Instead of making amends for her brutal act, Germany continued in the same course, which lost her the sympathies of those who still believed in her at the beginning of the war and forced them to become her enemies.

Since that time I have published two books on the war, (1) "The War and the Bagdad Railway" (Philadelphia, Lippincotts, 1917) and (2) "The War and the Coming Peace" (Philadelphia, Lippincotts, 1918), in which I set forth incidentally to my subject, in clear and unmistakable language my attitude of opposition towards Germany's policy, as revealed in the course of the war, and my horror at the brutal manner in which she was conducting the war. I refer you more particularly to the statement found on pages 124-126 of the former book, and on page 32 seq. of the latter, in which I condemn in unmeasured terms Germany's inhumane conduct, and mention specifically the insidious propaganda and the elaborate spy system organized by her, as part of a system that converted the war into a struggle for a great moral issue waged by the Allies and ourselves to save the world from the menace to liberty and civilization.

In view of this I feel justified in asking your Committee to be kind enough to include this statement in your records, and to ask also for your protection against the further unwarranted use of my name. For your further information, I beg to call attention to an error in the published list from February, in which I appear as being connected with the University of Wisconsin. That is not correct. I have never been connected with that institution; but I have been associated, as a member of the faculty, with the University of Pennsylvania, and as Librarian of that institution, for almost thirty years; and I add that I have resided in Philadelphia ever since my fifth year. The foregoing furnishes a further illustration of my contention that the Department of Justice, before submitting material as evidence, should first ascertain the facts.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Obediently yours,

MORRIS JASTROW, JR.

(From Prof. Morris Jastrow, Jr., 248 S. 23d St., Philadelphia, Pa.)

[Horace N. Hawkins, attorney and counselor at law, 401-408 E. & C. Building]

DENVER, COLO., January 17, 1918

MR. ALVA A. SWAIN,
Denver, Colorado.

DEAR SIR: I have read with indignation the press dispatches containing the testimony given by one A. J. Smith before the United States Senate Committee.

touching the alleged disloyalty of Mr. I. N. Stevens, and you and others connected with the Pueblo Chieftain, and my indignation at the false statements of Smith prompts me voluntarily to write you this letter, which you may use as you please.

Had the Senate Committee made an investigation as to Smith before permitting him to testify, it would have easily learned that national and state officials had long since branded Smith as a blackmailer whose testimony was not entitled to the slightest credence.

I was appointed by Governor Gunter as a member of the first State Council of Defense organized in the United States, and have ever since been engaged in war activities. I am vice-president of the War Savings Committee of Colorado, vice-chairman of the Colorado Liberty Loan Committee, a member of the executive committee of the Denver Liberty Loan Committee, chairman of the Denver Legal Advisory Board for Division 7, and a member of the City Council of the City and County of Denver. It has been a part of my duty to watch for the slightest evidence of disloyalty in Colorado. In all of this work I have been constantly in touch with the officers of the Federal, State, and City government. My services in Colorado have been commandeered by the authorities at Washington in prosecuting disloyalists in other states. I ought, therefore, to have some right to speak when the loyalty of a Colorado newspaper and Colorado citizens has been attacked.

I am not a member of the political party to which Mr. Stevens, and you, and the editors of the Pueblo Chieftain belong. On the contrary, as you know, I was the chairman of the recent state convention of the Democratic party. I ought, therefore, to be able to speak without any political leaning towards a Republican newspaper.

In all of the war activities in which I have been engaged, the councils, and committees, and patriotic organizations with which I have been connected have had magnificent and splendid support from the Pueblo Chieftain, and its officers and editors. No newspaper in all the United States has been more loyal to the government. The Chieftain, in every line and in every issue, has breathed the highest spirit of patriotism. It has consistently put aside opportunity to make political capital, and has whole-heartedly aided Democratic national and state administrations. It is only common justice and decency, therefore, that I should denounce as wickedly and false any aspersion upon patriotism of the Chieftain or those connected with it.

I desire to add what I know personally about the Smith charges. Quite a number of months ago you and Mr. Stevens called upon me as a member of the Colorado State Council of Defense, and told me of the statements which Smith was circulating, and which he has now been permitted to repeat to the Senate committee. You both asked for a full and open investigation of the matter by the Colorado Council of Defense. I made an investigation of Smith at that time, and found that he was an irresponsible faker, whose story was based upon bogus telegrams concocted by himself, and purporting to be to and from Count Bernstorff, none of which telegrams had ever passed over the wire, or had ever been sent or received. I found that the Federal secret service regarded Smith as unworthy of the slightest credence, and had simply manufactured the story out of whole cloth to get even with the Chieftain for being discharged from its employment. At the conclusion of my investigation I told you that neither the Chieftain nor its people needed any vindication from any charges made by such a man. You and Mr. Stevens insisted upon the investigation. I never dreamed that any public body would ever allow such a man as Smith to repeat his fake stories in public. The charges were so ridiculously absurd that I did not think them worthy of being brought before the State Council.

Before closing this letter, Mr. Swain, I want to say to you that all of us in Colorado who know the great work you have done for the United States will ever gratefully remember your service. I can enumerate but a few of the many activities which I personally know you have been engaged in. At one time since the war broke out, a great strike of miners threatened to paralyze every war activity of Colorado. You, to my personal knowledge, worked day and night to avert the threatened catastrophe, and your work, indefatigable as it was, had a great influence in enabling Colorado to have industrial peace and to successfully do her duty by our nation in time of war. You were personally responsible, to a large extent, in the raising of the many millions of dollars which the national government asked Colorado to raise to send our boys across the water, and feed and clothe them while fighting against the Hun.

You spoke day and night as a "four-minute man" to arouse our people to what patriotic people should do in such a crisis. All of these things, and others, came under my personal knowledge. I know that in the face of times being in ill health, you did the patriotic work of a half dozen of men, and you can rest assured that you have the strongest possible approval of all of us whom you so faithfully and so successfully and efficiently aided.

Yours truly,

HORACE N. HAWKINS.

[State of Colorado, Insurance Department. C. W. Fairchild, commissioner; J. H. Rolph, deputy.]

DENVER, January 18, 1917.

Mr. ALVA A. SWAIN.

Manager, The Pueblo Chieftain, 420 Ernest and Cranmer Building, Denver, Colorado.

MY DEAR MR. SWAIN: I am amazed at the statements made before the investigating committee at Washington by one of your former employees which the loyalty of the Pueblo Chieftain and you as one of its owners questioned. Nothing could be farther from the truth. I have known you about ten years during which time I have been honored by having your friendship. You assisted me as chairman of a committee of insurance men campaign among the insurance agents of this state in combating and putting down pro-German propaganda; I have listened to your splendid patriotic talks as a four-minute man; I have read forceful editorials on the war written by you; I have discussed with you plans for the carrying on of various war activities. No one who knows you will credit for an instant the statements imputing your patriotism; and to my notion the man who made them is of unsound mind and an unsafe individual to be at large.

You and I are of opposite political faith, but I am for square dealing and justice before party politics, and if justice prevails you need have no fear of your high standing in Colorado as a forceful patriotic citizen will be impaired in the slightest degree as a result of these ridiculous charges.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

C. W. FAIRCHILD, Commissioner.

CWF:S

[United States of America, Treasury Department. Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, Mo., Fiscal Agent. Liberty Loan Committee, tenth Federal reserve district: J. L. C. Kansas City, Mo., executive manager; W. R. Rowe, Kansas City, Mo., executive secretary; J. Z. Miller, jr., Kansas City, Mo., chairman; Asa E. Ramsay, Kansas City, Mo., deputy chairman; O. T. Eastman, Omaha, Nebr., deputy executive manager; C. A. Harhardt, Denver, Colo., deputy executive manager. J. M. Worley, director bureau of publicity. E. E. Violette, director speakers bureau. P. W. McMahon, director bureau of supplies. Colorado division: Harold Kountze, Denver, State chairman; H. L. Vogan, Denver, secretary; Hugh McLean, Denver, chairman speakers bureau; Alva A. Swain, Denver, chairman publicity bureau.]

DENVER, COLO., January 18, 1917.

Honorable CHARLES S. THOMAS,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: I am in receipt this day of a telegram from Mr. Stevens asking for an affidavit in re the investigation conducted by the United States Senate Committee on German propaganda. I am attaching an affidavit of my own, together with a letter from Mr. Horace N. Hawkins, the Colorado State Council of Defense; a second letter from Hon. Julius Gunter, War Governor of Colorado; and a third letter from Mr. Claude Fairchild, Commissioner of Insurance of Colorado. The letter from Mr. Hawkins and the one from Mr. Fairchild came unsolicited. After Mr. Smith made his testimony, Gov. Gunter and I were discussing it and I suggested to the Governor that if I had to go back to refute it, or if I had to send an affidavit, a letter from him as to my activities in support of his war program would be appreciated. Gov. Gunter readily consented to give me such a letter and this afternoon when he handed it to me stated that if there was anything I wanted in there regarding my loyalty or war work that he hadn't put it to call his attention to it and he would rewrite the letter and include it.

I believe these three letters, together with your statement before the Committee, and the statement of Rolland K. Goddard, the United States Secret Service Agent, who investigated Mr. Smith's story, which statement was printed in the Rocky Mountain News the day following Mr. Smith's testimony, should clear this matter up. As to Mr. Goddard, I never met the gentleman in my life, and would not know him if I passed him on the street to-day. When the Smith testimony was published in the afternoon papers, he, Goddard, voluntarily made his statement to the morning papers. Last night I phoned and thanked him in behalf of Mrs. Swain and myself for having made his statement and told him that we appreciated it all the more because of the fact that I had never seen him and did not know him. Mr. Goddard's only comment was that he did what he felt to be his duty as an American citizen.

I will appreciate it if you will file these letters and my affidavit with the Senate committee. If there is any doubt in their minds regarding the falsity of Mr. Smith's statements, I will be glad to furnish any further evidence necessary to clear up that doubt. Since the story has become public a number of gentlemen, with whom I had not personally discussed it, have come to me and told me incidents in the Denver life of Mr. Smith showing him to be a professional fakir. About a month ago Mr. Harry Mulnix, our State Treasurer, met him in California and Mr. Smith told Mr. Mulnix a story about having been appointed to the position of Publicity Director of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company for 1919 in Denver; that his children had the "Flu", and that he needed some money until he could get a check from the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company to get back to Denver. Mr. Mulnix loaned him $15.00 and, of course, never heard of it again, and afterwards learned that there was nothing to his story. Many such stories have come to my notice since his testimony. You know the caliber of man he is. It was unfortunate that the Chieftain ever had such a man in its employ.

I do not know that I ever told you, and I have not used it against Mr. Smith before, even during all the time that he was circulating these rumors in Denver, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that he still owes me the money which I loaned him to bury his Mother and his baby, and to help bury his Father. He has not even paid the interest on the loan.

As you know, Senator Thomas, I have lived in Colorado since Dec. 13, 1897. I quit a three and one-half years' sick bed and started to fight my way to a position of some prominence in this State. I believe every Governor, every other state official, together with every Senator and Representative of this State since 1900 would, if asked, testify in my favor as a factor for good in the up-building of this commonwealth. Mr. Smith is the only man in all that time who ever uttered a word directed against my loyalty and patriotism. In refuting his statements I submit the testimony of yourself and others who have known me during the twenty years I have lived here, together with my own affidavit.

In discussing this matter with Mrs. Rolph, Deputy Insurance Commissioner of Colorado, today she said: "The publicity given to you by reason of Mr. Smith's making his statements, will re-act against you, where you are unknown, for years to come. You can take a sack of feathers to the top of the Capitol Building and spill them out; later you can gather up, perhaps, the most of the feathers, but some of them you will not find and they will blow out of the wedges, across your path, when you are least looking for them."

Mrs. Rolph is correct. Mr. Smith's testimony will blow out across my path during my entire life, when I am least looking for it. I care very little so far as I am concerned, but out at my house are a couple of boys and I don't want the feathers from my life to blow across their paths. Hence I ask that you have inserted in the Senate Committee Records the testimony of yourself, Governor Gunter and Mr. Hawkins, who know me for what I am, in order that in the years to come if any one refers to this Smith incident in a manner impeaching my loyalty to my boys, they will have the public testimony of men of your character and standing to refute it.

I have sent copies of all this correspondence to Mr. Stevens at Philadelphia. Mrs. Swain joins me in thanking you for all you have done in this matter.

Very sincerely yours,

ALVA A. SWAIN.

AAS/M.
Encs.

[Law offices, Julius C. Gunter, 529-35 Equitable Building. Julius C. Gunter, M. Lindsey, Langdon H. Larwill.]

DENVER, January 18, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. SWAIN: I have noticed certain statements in the press reporting to question your loyalty to our country. I am very glad and justified in saying and stating that immediately after declaration of war by our country against the Imperial Empire of Germany, I called you, together with certain other loyal citizens of the state, into conference. I especially relied upon your aid and patriotism in reference to the activities of the press of the state.

I had made up my mind to convene the State Legislature in extraordinary session and to ask it to pass such war legislation as the state would need in meeting its obligations to its own citizens and to our country in time of war. I outlined to you the general legislation I intended to ask. You very earnestly and personally and thru the press and especially in the Chieftain, urged the people of the state to support their Governor and upon the Legislature to grant to their Governor what he asked in the way of war legislation.

You further advised me, as the Governor, that a meeting of the Editorial Association of the State should be called in aid of war legislation and war activities. With my approval, you took steps at once and were very active in gathering the press of the state in session here in Denver. This session of the press of the state was very largely attended and did honor to the patriotism of the members of that profession thruout the state. They came from all parts of the state however far removed from our capitol city, bore their expenses, gave audience to the war program of the Governor, announced their intention to support it and went to their respective homes and earnestly urged upon the people of the state to do as you had already spoken thru the Chieftain, loyally support the war program of the Governor. This action of the press was without regard to party or religious faith.

From that day to this, I have frequently conferred with you as to the war activities of the state, including especially the Liberty Loan and War Savings campaigns.

At your instance and suggestion, I wrote many letters in aid of these undertakings and issued a number of proclamations. Some of them you aided in the preparation of. As to practically all of them I had conferences with you before the letters were signed or the proclamations issued.

As the Governor of your state and as one of its citizens, I am grateful to you for your patriotic activities. I have never had the slightest doubt nor have I now, as to your devoted loyalty to our country. You have at all times been most earnest and effective in your patriotic work and I am pleased to be able to so speak. It was with my knowledge and approval that you were called in the publicity department of the above campaigns by Captain John Evans.

I have known the Honorable I. N. Stevens for a great many years. I had no direct or indirect conferences with him that I now recall as to war activities. I have, however, at all times found him a public spirited citizen. I have not now and never had the slightest doubt as to his loyalty to our country.

As to the Chieftain of which you, Mr. Swain, are one of the editors, this newspaper has been at all times during our war activities a most loyal and influential factor in the support of the state and nation. At no time have I had the slightest doubt of its patriotism and that of its editors.

Very respectfully,

JULIUS C. GUNTER

Mr. ALVA A. SWAIN,
419 E. & C. Building, Denver, Colo.

IN RE INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED BY UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

STATE OF COLORADO,
City and County of Denver, ss.

Alva A. Swain, first being duly sworn, upon oath deposes: That he is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the State of Colorado; that he was born in Bartholomew County, Indiana, March 25th, 1874, and that both of his parents were native born citizens of the United States, both having been born in North Carolina; that affiant has resided in Denver, Colorado, since December 13, 1897, and that he has been manager of the Denver office the Pueblo Chieftain, a daily newspaper published at Pueblo, Colorado, since March 1st, 1903;

That he is acquainted with one A. J. Smith, who is reported through the press as having testified recently before the United States Senate Committee on German Propaganda; that said Smith was at one time employed by the Chieftain as a subscription and advertising solicitor; that he was discharged from said position, and has had no connection with the Chieftain since June 1, 1916; that at no time did the said Smith have any authority from any one to either solicit or receive subscriptions or advertising on any agreement, theory or idea, either expressed or implied, that any such subscription, or any such advertising should in the slightest control the editorial or other policy of the Chieftain, and at no time was any subscription or advertising turned over to the Chieftain by the said Smith with any statement or suggestion of any kind that any such agreement had been made, or any such inference permitted to be drawn;

That affiant was in close touch with the affairs of the Chieftain and the policy of its managers and editors, and knows that no permission was ever given to any solicitor or subscriptions to make any such agreement, or to do or say anything which would cause any inference to be drawn that the policy of the paper could be controlled through any subscriptions or advertising obtained; that no subscription or advertising order was ever taken except legitimate subscriptions which were filled, and no funds were ever received by the Chieftain or any one connected with it, from the said Smith, except for said legitimate subscriptions;

Affiant further states that according to press dispatches the said Smith testified before the Senate Committee that this affiant had a conference with one Dr. Ziegler, German Consul in Denver, touching the policy of the Chieftain. Affiant says that if the said Smith gave such testimony, it was unqualifiedly false, and that no such conference ever occurred at any time.

Affiant further is informed from the press dispatches that the said Smith testified that Mr. I. N. Stevens and this affiant sent him to see Bernstorff, the German Ambassador. If such testimony was given, affiant states that it is absolutely false, and that nothing of the kind ever occurred.

Affiant further states that in the summer of 1917, and after the appointment of Governor Gunter of Colorado of a State Council of Defense, this affiant learned that the said Smith was circulating a report similar to the testimony reported to have been given by him before the Senate committee, and affiant and the said I. N. Stevens thereupon went to Horace N. Hawkins, a member of the Colorado Council of Defense, a law partner for many years of Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, former United States Senator from Colorado, and repeated to the said Hawkins the stories alleged to have been circulated by said Smith, and requested that the said Hawkins present the matter to the State Council of Defense, and that an investigation be had and a hearing connected with said charges; that the said Hawkins made an investigation, the result of which is shown in a letter written by the said Hawkins to affiant, a copy of which is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

Affiant also attaches to this affidavit and makes a part hereof a letter from Gov. Gunter, Colorado's war governor, with references to the work this affiant did in connection with the Governor's war activities.

Affiant further states that he has occupied a number of public positions in connection with war activities; among others, Director of Publicity for the United States Treasury Department in Colorado for the sale of war savings stamps and Liberty Loan bonds. Before accepting any of these positions affiant was careful to tell the authorities, namely, John Evans, State Director of War Savings, Harold Kountze, chairman of the Colorado Liberty Loan Committee, and Samuel D. Nicholson, second chairman of the Colorado Liberty Loan Committee of the stories which Smith had circulated, and notwithstanding these stories said public officials appointed this affiant to said positions, and the said Mr. Harold Kountze appointed affiant to act on occasions as his representative in investigations which were made as to alleged disloyalty of certain Liberty Loan officials.

Affiant further states that he has only a partial report of the testimony given before the committee by the said Smith, but so far as he has the report, the said testimony is a fabrication from beginning to end.

ALVA A. SWAIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of January, 1919.

[SEAL.] ELLIS J. LEWIS, Notary Public.

My commission expires May 13, 1922.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you not got a check here?

Maj. HUMES. No; he had a memorandum showing the date of the data with reference to the draft of $1,080. Of course he would not have the draft. The draft would go through banking channels. It was a memorandum of the draft.

Senator OVERMAN. You can examine those papers afterwards. I may call the next witness.

Maj. HUMES. I would like to call Mr. Squires just for a moment.

TESTIMONY OF MR. GRANT SQUIRES.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Squires, where do you reside?

Mr. SQUIRES. New York city.

Maj. HUMES. What is your business?

Mr. SQUIRES. I am an attorney.

Maj. HUMES. State if you were recently connected in any capacity with the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department and when you became so connected.

Mr. SQUIRES. April 23, 1917.

Maj. HUMES. In what capacity were you?

Mr. SQUIRES. I was an investigator.

Maj. HUMES. As investigator for the New York office of the Military Intelligence?

Mr. SQUIRES. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state if, in connection with the investigations which you conducted, you had occasion to make some inquiry with reference to the publication of the Koenig book, on the trip of the Deutschland?

Mr. SQUIRES. I did.

Maj. HUMES. In making that investigation, did you come in contact with Mr. Bradford Merrill, of New York?

Mr. SQUIRES. I did.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state just what took place in that interview, and when it was?

Mr. SQUIRES. It was about November 10, 1918, by appointment made to meet him at his office, which was the office of the Hearst newspapers in New York, North William Street.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. SQUIRES. Mr. Merrill claimed quite complete familiarity with the details of the contract or terms or agreement that had been entered into by Mr. Hearst with the representative of Capt. Koenig of Germany. I understand Mr. Merrill to say that while Capt. Koenig was in this country he had been asked to write out the story of the Deutschland's first successful voyage to this country for the purpose of selling it to the Hearst organization. Koenig demurred until he should have made a safe return voyage to his country, when he would endeavor to get the permission of his superior naval officers, or the Kaiser, to enter into such a contract.

Later he cabled, or sent a return message to this country, to Mr. Hearst's representatives, entering into an agreement for the presenting and selling of this story, the understanding being that the serial or newspaper publishing privileges should be bought at an outright um, and that thereafter it should be optional with Mr. Hearst and his managers whether the matter should take on a permanent book form. If it did, Mr. Hearst entered into an agreement with the captain and his representatives abroad that the entire net profits from the sale of the book should be donated to the so-called German Navy pension fund, designed, not, I understand, to aid the victims of submarine accidents, but the officers and men of the German submarines and their families.

Mr. Merrill went on to say that the exact facts that I sought from his office were not then at his down-town office available for me, but by communicating with a Mr. Moore, who was the successor of a Mr. Perkins in the management of the Hearst publications uptown, the needed facts and data and figures could and would be obtained for me.

He then, while I was in his office, telephoned to Mr. Moore for that purpose.

Mr. Moore was out at luncheon, but he left word that he should be called as soon as Mr. Moore returned, when Mr. Moore would give him instructions that such an inquiry as I had brought had been presented to him, and that he, Mr. Merrill, wished Mr. Moore to examine the books and records of both the Deutschland Library Co. and of the Hearst International Publishing Co. for the purpose of learning from those books the particulars of publication, cost of publication, the numbers of books published, and the profits, if any.

I waited two or three days, and then the material was presented to me, first by telephone, and later by memorandum, which I took down from Mr. Merrill, which he claimed he had obtained from Mr. Moore in response to my first request, that I embodied in a short report, which I believe is in your hand.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a report, or a communication, dated November 12, 1918, addressed to the director of military intelligence, Washington, D. C., and signed Nicholas Biddle, lieutenant colonel, U. S. A., and ask you who wrote that?

Mr. SQUIRES. I wrote it; all but the signature, Nicholas Biddle.

Maj. HUMES. You dictated the report?

Mr. SQUIRES. Yes, sir; this is my report.

Maj. HUMES. And this is the report that was submitted, based upon the information you had received from Mr. Merrill?

Mr. SQUIRES. That is correct.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state as to whether or not, in your interview with Mr. Merrill, the Hearst International Library Co. and the Deutschland Library Co. were both discussed?

Mr. SQUIRES. They were both mentioned in my interview, and in Mr. Merrill's conversation back with me with reference to them.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any disclaimer, at that time, of the proprietorship of the Deutschland Library Co., or how did Mr. Merrill treat the Deutschland Co. in this conversation?

Senator KING. What did he say? Is not that the better way, rather than giving his inferences?

Mr. SQUIRES. I beg your pardon, Senator.

Senator KING. State what he said; do not state your conclusion.

Mr. SQUIRES. Having given no particular attention at that moment to the words he said, of course it must be a matter of my best recollection.

Senator KING. Surely.

Mr. SQUIRES. That he made no attempt to disguise that the Deutschland Publishing Co. and the Hearst International Library Co. were practically one and the same, although the Deutschland Library Co. had practically gone out of existence, so far as putting out any literature was concerned, with the entry of our country into the war. And he further said that a Mr. Perkins, who had been manager or direct representative of Mr. Hearst in connection with the Deutschland Publishing Co., no longer was with the company or with his organizations, but had been superseded by Mr. Moore. Mr. Moore then taking the place of the up-town manager for the publishing of the books that were called the Hearst publications, of which this Deutschland Voyage was the earliest publication. I think.

Senator KING. Mr. Moore claims that he never heard of the Deutschland Library until long after it is alleged that it was organized; that Mr. Perkins was employed by Mr. Hearst and had charge of the Hearst publications; that he was discharged, or was paid something for his contract which had not terminated; and that, after he had separated himself from the International, which was admittedly a Hearst organization, he, Perkins, and perhaps some other persons who may have been associated with him, organized what is known as the Deutschland Publication Co., if that is the name?

Maj. HUMES. The Deutschland Library Co.

Senator KING. The Deutschland Library Co.; and that that company had no existence, or at least that Mr. Moore had no connection with it—I am giving you his contention—and that it was not organized at the time he took employment at the hands of Mr. Hearst.

Mr. SQUIRES. That is just the reverse of the impression I received from Mr. Merrill, namely, that the Deutschland Library Co. had been in existence and were the publishers of the book in question, and that the Deutschland Co. preceded the Hearst International Publishing Co.; and it seems almost inconceivable that Mr. Moore should have really meant what you gentlemen have him on record as saying here, because he found no difficulty, at the order of Mr. Merrill, in finding out for me and for the office that I represented last November, and from the books of the two organizations, all about the publishing of this book in question; and he did get it, and furnished it to me within 48 hours.

Senator KING. Mr. Moore, if you will pardon me, claimed that it was published by the International; that is my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. The Hearst International.

Senator KING. Yes.

Mr. SQUIRES. All that I could learn was the other way—that the Voyage of the Deutschland was admitted by Mr. Merrill to have been a publication of the Deutschland Library Co.; that they ceased to publish under that name—very properly, probably—with the entry of our country into the war; and that the organization known as the Deutschland Library Co. did exist as early as September or October or November, 1916.

Senator KING. You made no independent inquiry, then, for the purpose of ascertaining who organized the Deutschland when it was organized?

Mr. SQUIRES. You say the "Deutschland". Do you mean the Deutschland Publishing Co.?

Senator KING. Yes.

Mr. SQUIRES. I made no independent inquiry other than I just detailed—that I sought to find out the details of the contracts subsisting for the publication of this book.

Senator KING. The book itself shows that it was published by the International and not the Deutschland.

Mr. SQUIRES. Notwithstanding that, I am very much of the impression that it was conveyed to me by Mr. Merrill that the book was published by the predecessor to the existing Hearst International Publishing Co.

Senator KING. Let me see if I am in error.

Mr. SQUIRES. The imprint looks to the contrary.

Senator KING. The title-page reads: "Voyage of the Deutschland, the first merchant submarine; by Capt. Paul Koenig, New York. Hearst's International Library Co., 1916."

Mr. SQUIRES. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The purpose of this, Senator, was to justify the statement as to what the records of the Military Intelligence showed, because of the testimony which has been offered. We are not at all concerned, and I do not suppose this committee is, as to who owned it or what the Deutschland Library was; but in order to justify the testimony that has been presented here and to show just what it is based upon, we asked Mr. Squires to appear.

Senator NELSON. That report has not been read?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir.

Senator KING. In fairness to Mr. Moore the attention of the witness should be called to Mr. Moore's statement, I thought, and also to the title-page of the book, which would seem to contradict the statement of the witness.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

We submit the report which Mr. Squires identified, as follows:

Referring to your letter of inquiry dated October 31st, Mr. Grant Squires of this office has visited the office of the subject and learned from those in charge of the financial end of that enterprise that the book written by Paul Koenig relative to the voyage of the "Deutschland" and which Mr. Hearst promised to pay all the net profits arising from the sale of the book to the Pension Fund of the Deutsche Ozean Reederei, to the effect that there were no net profits arising from the sale of this book but that its publication showed a net loss of between $670 and $680. This answer was only obtained after a careful examination of the books of both the Hearst Paper as well as the books and records of the Deutschland Library Co., which is an enterprise under the control of the Hearst's International Library Co. at No. 119 West 40th Street, this city, which is a subsidiary concern of the Hearst publication enterprises and to which are sent all books for publication.

It is stated by the Manager of this Bureau of Publication, that the book in question never was a success and never more than 250 copies of it were sold from an edition of nearly 1,000.

It is believed that the information above given, to the effect that Mr. Hearst at no time paid into the pension fund above referred to, any money as promised in case there were profits from the publication of the book, can be relied on.

NICHOLAS BIDDLE,
Lieutenant Colonel, U. S. A.

Senator KING. Mr. Witness, that report states: "On making an examination of the books." Do you mean that an examination of the books was made by—

Mr. SQUIRES. By Mr. Bradford Merrill, treasurer of the Hearst organization.

Senator KING. You did not mean to convey the idea that you did the examination of the books?

Mr. SQUIRES. I have made that clear. I made no attempt to deny that, because they were entirely within the control of Mr. Merrill and—

Senator KING. Just answer the question. You do not intend to convey that you, or anybody for the Intelligence Department, made an examination of the books?

Mr. SQUIRES. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Squires, was the statement of Mr. Moore called to your attention last week?

Mr. SQUIRES. It was called to my attention on Monday noon of this week.

Maj. HUMES. When that was called to your attention, what did you do?

Mr. SQUIRES. I said I should like to go over to the office of Mr. Moore and satisfy myself that he had said so, and demonstrate the contrary if he made such a statement under oath here.

I thereupon offered to go over, but I was urged not to go. So I went on my own account, contrary to the suggestion of those that had made the inquiry of. I went to the office of Mr. Moore, 119 West Fortieth Street, for the purpose of meeting the gentleman, and was told that he was in Washington; I was told that he had gone down there to straighten out for his bureau some questions that had been raised by the inquiry that you are conducting here, with reference to that particular book.

Before I indicated the book in question I asked the gentleman in charge in Mr. Moore's absence—having first asked to speak to Mr. Moore and learning that he was here—if I might have the catalog of the Hearst or the Deutschland Bureau's publications. I was handed, by the man in charge, a very brief printed list embodying perhaps 30 or 40 books. I told him that was not the list I wanted. That I wanted the full list that probably had been in existence a year ago, and that must have had many more books. He said that was the only one they were permitted to give out then, last Monday afternoon.

Then I asked him if I might not get from him a copy of a book that I was interested in, known as "The Voyage of the Deutschland" by Paul Koenig. He said: "No; we are not allowed to give out any more of those, or to sell any more of those." I said last November Mr. Bradford Merrill told me that I might have a copy, saying that he would ask Mr. Moore to send me a copy, but he had never done so. The young man said if I could get—meaning myself—if I could get Mr. Merrill's further confirmation of that promise of last November, he, the gentlemen with whom I spoke, would get me a copy from the shelves of the office I was then in. I thanked him and went away.

Senator KING. You saw nothing improper in his not giving you the book, did you?

Mr. SQUIRES. I saw nothing improper in anything there.

Senator KING. Because if the order had been given to suspend publication and to suspend the sale of the book, he was simply obeying instructions?

Mr. SQUIRES. That was perfectly proper, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was the name of that gentleman, if you know

Mr. SQUIRES. I dislike to misspell his name. It was a name that could not properly repeat. It sounded to me as if it were spelled "L-e-b-u-r-r-y," if that gives any identification. He was either the first or the second assistant under Mr. McCann at the office of the Hearst publications on the eleventh floor at 119 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Maj. HUMES. In your investigation did you ascertain when Mr. Perkins left the employ of the Hearst International Library?

Mr. SQUIRES. I did not make any specific inquiry, but Mr. Merrill told me that he had left their employ some months previous to my talk, in November, 1918.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Squires, were you over in Europe during the war?

Mr. SQUIRES. I was in Europe during the months of November, December, and January—November and December, 1914, and January, 1915.

Senator NELSON. Where were you?

Mr. SQUIRES. I was in Belgium most of the time. I was one of the officers of the Commission for the Relief of Belgium, by appointment of Mr. Hoover.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us any information about German atrocities and barbarism in Belgium at that time?

Mr. SQUIRES. I would rather not, Senator, unless it is a part of your committee's duty to inquire into that.

Senator NELSON. Go on and tell us what you can.

Mr. SQUIRES. I entered Belgium over the line from the Dutch frontier in November, 1914, and helped in the organization of the relief committees in the cities of Liege, Namur, Charleroi, Mons, Louvain, and one or two smaller towns, where there were then only one or two Americans, of Mr. Hoover's appointment, then doing the business of caring for the incoming cargoes of food.

Of course, in going in there at that time I was practically at the heels of the German Army, and it was good business for me to behave myself so far as the new rulers of that country were concerned; so I only kept my eyes open. I did not run counter to their rulings.

Senator NELSON. What did you see and learn of the operations of the army in respect to the civilian population.

Mr. SQUIRES. Having traveled with the aid of a German passport that had been obtained for me by the courtesy of the Holland minister, Dr. Van Dyke, am I free to state what impressions I got of the German rule there, having accepted their hospitality?

Senator NELSON. Go on and state what you saw. Do not indulge in any circumlocution, but come right to the point.

Mr. SQUIRES. I have seen cities destroyed—leveled to the ground. I have seen the civilian population driven out of their homes with the butts of rifles.

I have seen old men and women brained because they did not work fast enough to suit their new rulers in the baking of bread.

I have seen the dining room tables of residences in Louvain put to use for the violation of women—young women, particularly—in Louvain.

I have seen places where babies were crucified on the doors of houses.

I have seen the bread lines in various towns before I left.

I have seen mothers bring to me their babies, to give them food which I could not give them because it was not possible to carry around in quantities to feed a thousand or two thousand in a town.

I have seen the insults of the German soldiery, mostly drunk, visited on women whom they met in the streets.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you see whether the German armies took food that belonged to the civil population and used it themselves, thereby depriving the civilians of it?

Mr. SQUIRES. I did not see that. I understand at one stage in the occupation of the country they were rather careful to give tickets to those from whom they took food, so that within a few days after those same people could go to the German commissariat and get in return equivalent of what had been taken from them.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know whether they ever got any food on those tickets which were given to them in that way?

Mr. SQUIRES. I do not; no, sir. I do not think the Belgian population ever sought to redeem any German promises that were made that way. They were a cowed, terrorized people. Their only wish was to be permitted to live.

You can picture any town in which you have ever been which has been leveled to within about 4 feet of the ground, which was the condition of many of the cities that I visited. People who had been there ran up the alleyways, after their homes had been destroyed, whenever anyone in uniform came along. They would hardly, in those circumstances, enter into negotiation with them to redeem their tickets.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you say that these villages had been destroyed by bombardment, or were they just ruthlessly and deliberately destroyed to terrorize the population?

Mr. SQUIRES. They were ruthlessly and deliberately destroyed largely by fire grenades, charged with explosives and with fire-igniting substances.

Senator WOLCOTT. Not as one of the ordinary incidents of warfare?

Mr. SQUIRES. Of their warfare.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of civilized warfare?

Mr. SQUIRES. Of the warfare of those that entered Belgium.

Senator OVERMAN. Where did these people live—in the cellars of their houses after they were destroyed?

Mr. SQUIRES. Yes; or out in the open.

It was the rainy season when I was there, November and December, and I frequently was accosted, in the day and the night time, by little children of 4, 5, and 6, being borne in the arms of little people also 10 or 12 years of age, asking for 2 sous with which they might buy a loaf of bread.

There was no shelter for the people in many of the towns. They lived in the open, where there was no protection for them at all.

Senator OVERMAN. No covering at all?

Mr. SQUIRES. Very little, in many of the towns.

In one town I was able to take a small deal table, longer than here, where we gathered 30 or 40 of the victims at the table and gave them soup or bread, as we were able to get it ready for them.

hurry, and there are one or two instances which I might tell you which are rather striking.

When I went into this place where they were being fed by some committee that I had helped to organize, they were eating loaves of bread and a little soup, and there were two gentlemen there who I thought were advanced in years, who sat at the table with nothing on but a pair of trousers. I said to one of them, "Where are you from?" and he said, "I am from Visè." Visè is the first town in Belgium after you leave the Dutch frontier that had not been completely demolished. Until the war broke out there had been 6,000 people, and there were none of them left. These people were fugitives. This old gentleman said, "I came from Visè." They were being fed there. I said, "How old are you?" And he replied, "I am 73 years old." I said, "That old gentleman next to you; who is he?" He replied, "He is my father; he is 91 years old." They were eating a crust of bread and a little soup there.

I saw that their feet were bare, that they had nothing on their feet, no shoes nor socks on their feet. And when they were given a pair of stockings, socks, without waiting to finish the food that they were making, they drew them on with great pleasure; because the penetrating cold was very searching even to those who were better clothed than they were. They were feeding in the open, and there was no shelter for them. It was just like a table being spread out on the sidewalk here.

Senator NELSON. Go ahead. Have you anything more to tell?

Mr. SQUIRES. It is not a case of anything more, Senator. It is a case of trying to forget it.

I was glad to be able to do anything like that. The organization of the committees was done by getting the names of a few Belgians who had been permitted to remain there by their German conquerors, and we organized them in this way: The moment I entered a town I went to the proprietor of a hotel that might be still remaining and took him into a car that I had commandeered on the frontier and made him take me to the homes of these half dozen Belgians, who were leading citizens in these various towns, and got them in some one place and asked them to organize this committee to receive the shipments of American grain, beans, and other food that might be sent to them, so that when the shipments arrived they should not be carelessly received and perhaps wasted.

Senator OVERMAN. In regard to these women that were violated in the manner you have stated, was that done in the presence of the German officers or was it done by drunken soldiers who were sky-arking?

Mr. SQUIRES. It was mostly the work of private German soldiers. I do not think the German officers were quite guiltless, but I imagine they might have done their acts under the cover of a house. The city of Louvain was famous for having had its tables and lounges brought out into the public square, where these acts were committed in the nighttime, just about as if it would be in the park outside of this building, as being easier, more convenient to the soldiery as they were about, to provide themselves with satisfaction of that sort.

I have even been at the doors of the houses when I have heard the shrieks of the women upstairs recovering from their treatment of the night before, because they knew no difference between a German and a man from some other country and were afraid to open the door for me to give them something to eat, but I did not mind that.

It was mostly a case of trying to pacify these people, in view of the treatment they had received, and to let them feel that better things were coming to them in the way of food at least. That was nearly four years ago now, was it not, Senator? Four years ago.

It is very difficult for you gentlemen to realize it. It is not a pretty picture to be called on to redraw, and I had hoped that I would not be asked to do it. The mistake that I made was to come back here. That is all.

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose Senator Nelson asked you those questions because of a statement that was made here——

Senator NELSON. I asked you these questions to meet the imputations of Von Mach, who appeared here as a witness the other day and who insinuated in one form or another that the treatment of Belgian people by the German soldiers in 1914 was not worse than our soldiers had treated the people of the South in Sherman's march to the sea, and he also referred, I think, to the Philippine Islands.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That is why I asked you these questions—to give us this information.

Mr. SQUIRES. They did not go through the country according to any practice that had ever been done in similar warfares in the past that I know anything about or have read anything about, nor in any of the countries that I have visited, and I have visited practically every country in the world.

Senator NELSON. They destroyed these villages, absolutely—razed them?

Mr. SQUIRES. Yes; Senator, for the purpose of the terrorization of the people, to reduce their morale and their ability to withstand the advance of the German armies.

Senator NELSON. And they crucified children?

Mr. SQUIRES. I have had places pointed out to me by fathers who had been crazed by the sight of their children hanging on gallows bells the night before. One man took me up to a door and showed me the nail points in the door where his little baby had been nailed the night before, because the baby got in the way of the German guard of four or five men and stepped on their feet, or in some way hindered their passage, and one of the men snatched up the baby and held it up against the door, probably in their drunkenness, nailed it up against the door, and it was dead in five minutes, I suppose.

Senator KING. You did not see the child?

Mr. SQUIRES. No, sir. The child was not permitted to remain there more than a minute or two after the soldiers went on.

I know it is very difficult to believe these stories, gentlemen, and that is one reason why I hesitate to tell them, because I am meeting the perfectly respectful questioning attitude of Senator King—that is your name, sir—but I have seen all that I have told you myself.

Senator NELSON. Are there many of those towns and villages in Belgium that have been razed to the ground—destroyed?

Mr. SQUIRES. Not so many completely razed. Many of them have been partially razed; notably Louvain.

Louvain has been destroyed to a degree for an offense committed, I am told, by the daughter of the mayor of the city who was entertaining the first incoming general officers of the German army who were occupying Louvain. I verified this, as far as it is possible to verify it, when the events were only a few days old, by speaking with some who were present.

It seems the incoming generals of this command, who had entered Louvain and taken it, were being entertained, as a matter of courtesy, by the burgomaster in his home, and he called on his daughter to bring in some light refreshments, cigars, and light wine for the entertainment of their guests that they had been compelled to receive from this German command, and while she was bearing in the cigars and wine one of the officers of the staff offered her an insult which he did not note at the time or make any reference to; but during the evening word of it came to the brother of the young woman, whereupon, with less consideration than he should have had for his father's guest, he went in and shot the man dead in the presence of the other German officers. Whereupon, they left the office of the mayor, and the next day the section of the town where the mayor's office was and where the family resided was burned. About one-third of the city, including the university, the town hall, the handsome section of Louvain, was destroyed that day.

There has been no other explanation given, and it was the penalty for the offense committed to these visiting German officers who were falling on the mayor.

This is hardly a part of your inquiry, gentlemen, but I am answering your question, sir.

Senator NELSON. Did you meet Cardinal Mercier?

Mr. SQUIRES. I never met him, no, sir; although I went through Malines.

Senator NELSON. In regard to that incident you referred to, relating to Louvain, my recollection is that they afterwards killed a woman in the case?

Mr. SQUIRES. In Louvain?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. SQUIRES. I really do not know anything about that.

Senator NELSON. I did not know but you knew. My recollection is that I saw something of the kind stated, and that they destroyed the house.

Mr. SQUIRES. They burned about one-third of the city—either burned or destroyed it; bombed or fired about one-third of the city of Louvain.

Senator NELSON. And that was the occasion of it?

Mr. SQUIRES. I was so told, and made some inquiries to verify it.

Senator NELSON. That is the reason they did that?

Mr. SQUIRES. I was so told.

Senator NELSON. I think that is all.

Senator OVERMAN. That is all, Mr. Squires.

I offer in evidence at this time a telegram that I have received from Mr. Garet Garrett, which he asks to have put into the record.

Senator KING. Who is he?

Senator OVERMAN. Some gentleman that was referred to by Mr. von Mach. He is the editor of Everybody's Magazine, or assistant editor—is that it?

Senator WOLCOTT. May I see the telegram, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; just read it, if you will.

Senator WOLCOTT (reading):

NEW YORK, Jan. 10, 1915

Senator L. S. OVERMAN,

Chairman Senate Committee Investigating German Propaganda.
Washington, D. C.

In relation to Edmund von Mach's testimony, touching an article he did write for Everybody's Magazine in 1914, will you please put upon the record the following statement: I was never editor of Everybody's Magazine. The editor in 1914 was Erman J. Ridgeway. It was Mr. Ridgeway's idea that we should get both sides of the case stated in the most radical manner possible. That we should get the highest available authority on each side to do it. So, we were to find a German authority to make a statement of Germany's case against England with as much latitude as he wished to have and then we should get an Englishman to state England's case against Germany in the same way. Mr. Ridgeway asked me to do this. My recollection is that we asked Derenburg to do the German side because he was recognized as the Kaiser's spokesman in this country. He wrote an article which was unavailable for our purpose, as it turned out to be a kind of heavy German propaganda, and then we asked Mr. von Mach. Nothing came of it because, as I remember, we did not get the English side stated in a way to balance the German. It was intended to be an entirely neutral performance. I do not know what Mr. Ridgeway's personal feelings were toward either England or Germany. My recollection is that Everybody's Magazine at that time had no policy. My own feelings, if this is of interest, were then and are now ardently friendly to Great Britain.

(Signed) GARRET GARRETT

Senator OVERMAN. Call your next witness.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold.

Mr. JOSEPH W. BAILEY. If the committee please, I have been requested by those interested in the agricultural organizations of Texas whose activity, as I understand, is to be investigated, to represent them here.

I am not quite able to see how they may need my service, but in order that I may serve them, if service becomes necessary, I am going to ask, Mr. Chairman, if you will be good enough to give me the resolution under which the committee is proceeding.

Senator OVERMAN. It is right there before you, on the table.

(The resolution was handed to Mr. Bailey.)

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, is this the resolution that was adopted by Senate resolution No. 307, the only one under which the committee is acting?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I will state very frankly to the committee that this investigation seems to have developed into an investigation of German propaganda; and I want it to appear distinctly that Mr. Arnold and Mrs. Darden—who are probably the only witnesses to be examined—who are connected with those agricultural organizations in Texas—are not summoned here because of any suspicion of any connection with German propaganda, and, if it is permissible, I want to know whoever is in charge of the investigation whether or not that is true.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, you have examined into the matter, and I will ask you to make the statement.

Maj. HUMES. The primary purpose of this particular inquiry did not have to do with German propaganda, but I am not so sure there may not be some developments along that line in rather a small way. I am not entirely sure as to just what that connection is. I do not want to say that no connection will be developed, because I am not entirely familiar with all the ramifications of the plans and activities that I have hoped we might develop from these witnesses. I am, therefore, not in a position to state definitely whether or not any German propaganda will develop in the matter under inquiry.

Senator KING. What is the particular purpose with reference to this witness? There is one other aspect of the information.

Maj. HUMES. In connection with the brewery matters.

Senator KING. Senator Bailey, the resolution relates to breweries.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; we are perfectly willing to meet that. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I supposed that was what would be said, and I want to record my protest here now, not only as representing these gentlemen but as an American citizen, against summoning people of impeccable character and integrity here and arranging them practically before this committee with a suggestion that it may develop that they have been concerned in some German propaganda. A man's character is worth very much, and a woman's character worth more than can be said, and they ought not to be tainted with this indiscriminate, indefinite suggestion that it is possible that the evidence may develop some slight connection with German propaganda. That is not the way American citizens should be treated by the American Senate, and I think I know this committee well enough to know that no member of it is willing to put an ineffaceable stain on a well-behaved American citizen, and it is an ineffaceable one to suggest here, or elsewhere, that they were concerned in German propaganda.

Of course, I know this committee has no power—and I do not know any better than the committee does—to pursue this inquiry in this way. The Senate of the United States does not possess unlimited inquisitorial power; it has no power to summon people here from every quarter of this country and put them on the witness stand and see if it is possible that there may be offered testimony here which will develop some connection with this and that, and even the subject matter is not one over which an inquisitorial inquiry extends. But we have no objection to come and give you all the information you want. But I would like for this committee, if the Government—I suppose that is the Government represented over there [indicating Maj. Humes and Capt. Lester]—

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a little odd to me to appear before you gentlemen and find gentlemen in military array—

Senator OVERMAN. I expected the Senator would make that objection before we went very far, as to how he feels about it, but I want, in justice to Maj. Humes, to say that he was a United States district attorney in Pennsylvania—

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; that is all right.

Senator OVERMAN. And was familiar with these facts, and, in order to help this committee, we requested that he be sent here.

Mr. BAILEY. If I were on the committee I would ask every soldier to take off his uniform when he comes in here to execute a civilian function, but I will not raise any objection of that kind. If the inquiry does not exonerate these people from participation in German propaganda I am going to ask the committee to do so, and with that statement we are perfectly ready to go on.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to make any statement—and voluntarily I made no statement—even insinuating the possibility of the injection of any propaganda into this matter. Counsel asked me a direct question, that I had to answer either truthfully or falsely, and I answered it to the best of my ability. If my answer did not please the gentleman it is not my fault. I cannot revamp the authoritative information that I have, to suit the notion of counsel, who possibly knows more about the real facts of the matter, having conferred with these witnesses, than I do. And I think it is very unfair for counsel to say that I injected into this record an insinuation as to what might develop in this particular line of examination, because I made no such statement, and had no purpose of intimating that there was any purpose of injecting German propaganda or anything else into the record.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, I simply beg to say that it would be impossible for Col. Humes, or anybody else, to develop, as he said, "some slight connection" without asking questions that would leave their implication. Now, I had hoped that Col. Humes would very frankly say that it was only the question of the brewing inquiry, because I know these people, and I want to say to Col. Humes that I am not here as their counsel in the ordinary sense; I accept no compensation for coming here. I am here because I know these people, and I know the people with whom they are associated, and I would stake my life that neither Mr. Arnold nor Mrs. Davis are concerned in any German propaganda, and I asked the question because I hoped it would be stated there was no evidence or suggestion of that kind against them. And then I wanted to develop it in the beginning, if there was, because it would be impossible to ask the questions designed to develop this slight connection, without leaving a trace in the record.

Now, we are ready to proceed.

Senator VERMAN. Mr. Bailey, you may sit down right there if you want to.

Mr. BAILEY. All right, sir.

STATEMENT OF MR. J. A. ARNOLD.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, where do you reside?

Mr. ARNOLD. Fort Worth, Tex.

Maj. HUMES. How long have you resided there?

Mr. ARNOLD. About 12 years, I should say—12 or 13 years.

Maj. HUMES. In what business are you engaged?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am engaged in publicity, have been.

Maj. HUMES. Have you been conducting your business in your own name or under some trade name?

Mr. ARNOLD. We began the organization work by the Texas Business Men's Association. I was manager of that organization.

Maj. HUMES. The Texas Business Men's Association?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time were you connected with that organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think it was 1908 to 1914; I should say about that time.

Maj. HUMES. During that period of time were you connected with any other organization, or were all of your efforts confined to that association?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; we who were connected with the Texas Business Men's Association, on October 6, 1912, organized what they term the Farm Life Commission. Its purposes were intelligent and diversified production, successful marketing. I will file the report here. It had to do with association with organized farmers largely. The Farm Life Commission asked the Texas Farmers' Union to furnish a man as manager of that commission. They named Peter Radford, who was at that time president of the Texas Farmers' Union. He served in that capacity at a salary of $125 a month, which he turned into the treasury of the Texas Farmers' Union. I have a report here of the farmers' union, showing that that was done.

Maj. HUMES. Is that commission still in existence?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. That ran along until August 5, 1913. Mr. Radford at that time retired as president of the Texas Farmers' Union by constitutional limitation.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is this?

Mr. ARNOLD. President Radford—he retired by constitutional limitation. He was then appointed national organizer, national lecturer, I believe it was, of the National Farmers' Union, and carried on his organization work in that capacity. I do not know what his salary was there. We continued to pay him $125 a month. I do not know whether he turned it in there or not.

Maj. HUMES. Now, you say, "We continued to pay him." You mean this farmers' commission?

Mr. ARNOLD. The Texas Business Men's Association. That was in 1914. The Texas Business Men's Association was discontinued—

Maj. HUMES. When?

Mr. ARNOLD. Some time in 1914. I do not recall the exact date.

Maj. HUMES. Did it have some other organization as a successor?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am just getting to that. In the early part of 1914, when Mr. Radford was appointed national lecturer, the work began to expand in a national way, both in publicity and in organization, and was carried on largely in that way. We sent out publicity and we did organization work in the National Farmers' Union. I have a prospectus here issued by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, covering the matters I am discussing, and, I think, answering your question. It is signed by Peter Radford, national lecturer; approved by C. S. Barret, president, and by A. C. Davis, secretary, and I believe was passed upon by the executive committee. I shall read what they say, if you desire to hear it.

Maj. HUMES. Proceed.

Mr. ARNOLD (reading):

The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America invites your cooperation in advancing the interests of agriculture throughout the nation. The Union is organized in 27 States and has a membership of approximately six million plowmen. Its slogan is education and cooperation. We solicit financial contributions from those interested in the betterment of agriculture, to be used in supplementing the educational and organization work of the Union under the direction of the Publicity Department of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America.

The educational work contemplates, to the extent of our financial ability, a free weekly news service, a monthly plate service, a weekly feature service in the national press, and the dissemination of information through pamphlets and by lecturers. In addition to the officers of the Farmers' Union, we have on our staff some of the most distinguished writers of the nation who are contributing their talent through our service to the cause of agriculture, free of charge.

The discussions will deal with the problems of agriculture and related industries from the scientific, economic and business standpoint, and will encourage cooperation between all classes of people and all lines of industry. We will especially deal with the problems of production, marketing, rural transportation and kindred subjects and we will squarely face every economic issue that bears directly or indirectly upon the business of agriculture and rural life, and we shall in every instance promote and protect the interests of the men who feed and clothe the world.

The organization work comprehends the organization of farms into local units in unorganized sections for the purpose of educating the members in scientific agriculture, cooperative methods in marketing and to make the business of farming more remunerative and farm life more attractive. A staff of able specialists, right from the plow handles, who know agriculture as only the men who plow know it, will do the organization work.

The farmers of the South have suffered a loss of $400,000,000 on the present cotton crop, which could have been avoided with proper organization and cooperation with the banking and business interests. Money lent on agriculture pays a rate of interest greatly in excess of that of other industries. Organization and a system of rural credits will give the farmer money. The farmer can neither help himself nor be helped by others who do not organize.

The contributing editors referred to are; Thomas N. Carver, professor of economics of Harvard University for the past 15 years; H. S. A. Lindsey, one of the best-known writers in the country on rural credits and cheap money. He was a member of the American Agricultural Commission which visited Europe in 1913 to study agricultural methods; Logan Waller Page, Director of the Good Roads Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, an eminent authority on highway construction and maintenance; Homer D. Wade, chairman of the good roads committee of the National Farmers' Union, one of the best-known good-roads experts in the United States; Dr. M. A. Carrick, on sanitation, who had charge of that work in Texas; H. S. W. English, State fire marshal of Texas, and one of the best authorities in the country on fire prevention; P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, one of the foremost educators in America.

I may say that 20,000 of these pamphlets were issued; they were sent to every newspaper in the United States that receive the service so that they would understand where the service came from, how it was to be increased, and what they proposed to do.

Maj. HUMES. When was that issued?

Mr. ARNOLD. January 15, 1915.

The arrangement, however, which it proposes here, had probably been going on for probably six months and perhaps a year before this.

Maj. HUMES. Whom was that printed by, the Farmers' Union itself?

Mr. ARNOLD. By the publicity bureau of the Farmers' Union. That is what this established.

Maj. HUMES. Then, do I understand that one of your activities has been the management and conduct of the publicity bureau of the Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is one of the activities. Mr. Radford appointed me to take charge of the publicity matters.

Maj. HUMES. He appointed you in charge of the publicity matters during the time that he was president?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; while he was national lecturer of the Farmers' Union. This is national work and not State work.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that the lecturer of the Farmers' Union was the executive officer?

Mr. ARNOLD. This is approved by the president and the secretary. This is his signature, with their approval.

Maj. HUMES. It was one of the activities that properly belonged to the lecturer of that organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is where they placed it; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is this publicity bureau still in existence?

Mr. ARNOLD. The authority for it has never been canceled. It ran along for a while until it was found that in both organization and publicity the service was a little cramped, inasmuch as not all the farmers belonged to the union, nor, as indicated here, probably half of the States, and many of those States only partially organized, and it was desired to reach all sections and all classes, and there was some prejudice among the farmers' organization, of course, and it was then broadened into an agricultural and commercial service, which eliminated those objections, and this announcement is made by the agricultural and commercial service. [Reading:]

The service is open to a dispassionate discussion of both sides of important economic questions confronting the farmers of this Nation for solution from the standpoint of the welfare of the country. The publisher is at liberty to use all or any part of it, or if it is desired to confine the discussion of any subject to one phase—to the affirmative, the negative, or the middle course—we shall be glad to send only the phases preferred, upon request of the publisher to do so. This service will be furnished regularly to such publishers as will use it. Financial support for the work is solicited from every citizen who believes that the rural press is the proper forum for the discussion and settlement of public issues; who is willing to aid in the creation and expression of an enlightened public opinion on the important economic and social issues of the day; who is broad enough to join in a fair and impartial presentation of all sides of the subject under consideration; and who is willing to trust to the intelligence of the masses for a capable solution.

Maj. HUMES. What is the date of that?

Mr. ARNOLD. That pamphlet is not dated. It was probably about a year later, I should say, that that was gotten out. That was a page of plate sent out to the press, which moved from one State to the other. The dates do not seem to be given.

Maj. HUMES. That is, that this particular service was organized about a year after you had organized the publicity bureau of the Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. They broadened out into that. It might have been six months or a year.

Maj. HUMES. Then that was not the publicity of the Bureau of Farmers' Union that you just a moment ago outlines?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, it was incorporated, I should take it, in this general work.

Maj. HUMES. It was absorbed by this larger program?

Mr. ARNOLD. You might say so, yes; and Mr. Radford was also put in as warehouse commissioner of Texas. He confined his activities largely to the office at that time, and he did not do so much national work after he was put in there.

Maj. HUMES. I believe you stated, and I am not sure that I understood you, that you had been designated as in charge of this publicity work in your State. Was that correct, or had you charge of the publicity work of the national organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nationally, yes; I should say.

Maj. HUMES. You had charge of the national publicity work?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Now, did Mr. Radford continue his connection with these organizations after he became warehouse commissioner?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, to a certain extent. He did not leave the State, however, not nearly as much as he did before, but still kept up his connection, especially in cotton. The farmers' union was largely a cotton States organization, and the Texas warehouse commissioner had to deal largely with the marketing of cotton. We raise a third of the cotton, and to market it, it takes that in. It naturally kept him in the South in his activities.

Maj. HUMES. What are the duties of the warehouse commissioner? I do not understand. That is a public office down in Texas?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. He is appointed largely by the governor.

Maj. HUMES. What are the duties of that office?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was marketing—warehousing and marketing—cotton largely.

Maj. HUMES. It had to do with the marketing of the cotton crop?

Mr. ARNOLD. Largely the cotton crop; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You say that when you then became connected with this organization, or with the business men's association, that Mr. Radford was on the pay roll at $125 a month. Is that correct?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; he was on the pay roll of the Texas Business Men's Association at $125 a month.

Maj. HUMES. Now, when the Texas Business Men's Association went out of business, he continued to draw $125 a month, did he?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I think he went into the warehouse commission soon after that. If not, however, he did continue to draw that salary until such time as he went on the commission. I can not give the dates.

Maj. HUMES. He drew the salary until he became warehouse commissioner?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; from the publicity bureau.

Maj. HUMES. From the publicity bureau?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. First it was from the publicity bureau, or from the business men's association, and then from the publicity bureau of the farmers' union?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, first from the Texas Business Men's Association, then as a national lecturer of the farmers' union.

Maj. HUMES. Well, now, his compensation as national lecturer, was that paid by this publicity bureau?

Mr. ARNOLD. We paid him no salary as national lecturer. His organization may have paid him. I am not sure about that. We paid it as long as the Texas Business Men's Association was in existence.

nce. He was then national lecturer, and whether he got a salary here I could not say.

Senator OVERMAN. What association was it under which he was a lecturer?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was the National Farmers' Union, a national organization. He became the national lecturer.

Senator OVERMAN. Of which Mr. Barrett is president?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What I am asking is this: When the Texas Business Men's Association went out of business and you ceased to be the secretary, then that organization took charge of that publicity bureau of the Farmers' Union. Did Radford continue to draw his $125 a month from the publicity bureau?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, when the publicity bureau merged into the larger commercial organization—commercial publicity organization—that you have referred to, he continued to draw his $125 per month from the organization, did he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Hardly. I think on January 1, 1915, or at least early in 1915, he was appointed warehouse commissioner. That paid him $300 a month, I believe, and we paid him no money after that in salary. That would probably be—the way you outlined would probably be the procedure, if the dates are not mixed.

Maj. HUMES. You were subpoenaed to bring your books showing receipts and expenditures, all your activities, your publicity activities, with these several organizations. Have you those records?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; we have not. We did not keep a record of those, did not keep any definite record of those things—the money feature of them, at least. The money was solicited for publicity purposes, some of it from corporations which paid direct to the plate house. I should say that the publicity consisted of plates. This is a page of plates [indicating].

Senator OVERMAN. Metal plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. The article photographed into the metal.

Maj. HUMES. Did you send out any publicity except in the form of plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. We issued pamphlets.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you please let me see one of those plates? (A paper was handed to Senator Overman by the witness.)

Mr. ARNOLD. We had a news service. We have the items here covering one year, I think, which will give you a general idea about that. We had a news industrial service, an illustrated plate service, an illustrated news service, a plate service, and special articles to the papers from the writers that I have mentioned.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Arnold, I notice that you have here a Virginia page. Did you have a North Carolina page, a South Carolina page, and so on?

Mr. ARNOLD. It went to every State and would have the name of each State.

Maj. HUMES. With the same matter to all States?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. How did it get to the papers—sell it to them?

Mr. ARNOLD. We gave it to them.

Senator OVERMAN. And a weekly paper would use it, for instance, if they chose, in connection with their paper?

Mr. ARNOLD. That page would cost about $2 a page to the paper.

Senator OVERMAN. So that by giving this to them, the weekly paper would have it already set up in this form here, and this page was left blank for the local news?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You did not send this as a patent inside where the plate matter, if used, is put into the form of the newspaper and printed?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. The Senator misunderstood you. He was confusing it with the practice of sending out patent insides.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; we did not do that.

Maj. HUMES. You sent the so-called boiler plate out to the newspapers for publication?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; they could publish or not, as they liked.

Senator OVERMAN. The newspaper gets this blank page?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; the metal is shipped to them, and they take that metal and set up the form.

Maj. HUMES. That is a print that was printed from the plate matter.

When did you commence sending out this plate matter to newspapers?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect it was about in 1914, probably about the middle of the year—somewhere along there.

Maj. HUMES. Well, did you commence that on behalf of the Texas Business Men's Association or not, until the publicity bureau was organized?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was sent out as the page insert of the National Farmers' Union.

Maj. HUMES. It was sent out in the name of the National Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; the publicity of the National Farmers' Union as authorized, as I have read into the record.

Maj. HUMES. For a period of time that was conducted by what you have described as the publicity bureau of the National Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. And later by this—

Mr. ARNOLD (interposing). Agricultural and Commercial Press Service.

Maj. HUMES. The Agricultural and Commercial Press Association which had absorbed the publicity bureau of the National Farmers' Union. Is that correct?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. Well, did you not fix about January 1, 1915, as the time of the organization of this publicity bureau of the National Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. How was that?

Maj. HUMES. Did you not fix January 1, 1915, as the time of the organization of the publicity bureau of the National Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, no; that bureau had been going on, and those plates had been going out, at least I should say, four or five months.

Maj. HUMES. In anticipation of the organization of that bureau his work had started prior to the formal organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; before the commencement, you may say, of that.

Maj. HUMES. Now, is that work still carried on in the name of the Agricultural and Commercial Press Service?

Mr. ARNOLD. We did send out stuff until the war, and then we did not think, while the war was on, that that sort of publicity would be desirable or acceptable, and there was so much war news, and we did not think the public would be interested in those matters.

Maj. HUMES. Then you discontinued this service after this country became engaged in the war?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was practically suspended soon after.

Maj. HUMES. Can you fix an approximate time?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not know that I could, offhand. I do not know. I know that I have sent no plates out. There might have been some articles sent out, but no plates since the war was declared. I am certain that I can say that.

Maj. HUMES. Have the activities been resumed yet?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; they have not.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Arnold, this bureau to which you refer was part of and financed by the National Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I should say it was a part of the farmers' union, but it financed itself independently.

Maj. HUMES. Financed itself independently of the farmers' union?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did the National Farmers' Union or the Texas State Farmers' Union pay in regular assessments or contributions, or make any regular appropriations to this publicity bureau?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I should say not.

Maj. HUMES. Then all of the money that was used in carrying on this work was raised from independent subscriptions, and from the activities of the bureau itself in raising funds?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I think that would be a complete answer to that.

Maj. HUMES. Who was associated with you in this official capacity as an official representative of the farmers' union in this work? Was there a committee?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, Mr. Radford. Of course the work was turned over to Mr. Radford by the officials of the national organization. I worked for him.

Maj. HUMES. You worked for him?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I worked for him—was really an employee of Mr. Radford's.

Maj. HUMES. Just an employee of Mr. Radford's?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. Was Mr. Radford one of the committee that had charge of this work—did he have autocratic power under the by-laws and constitution or the action of the farmers' union to control these matters?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I read the authority there on which he acted and as far as I was concerned at all, Mr. Radford was the man that I went to, he was fully in control of it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know of any formal action being taken by any official body of the farmers' union authorizing and creating this publicity bureau?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Well, as a matter of fact, there was never any formal action taken by the organization as an organization, was there?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know any more about it than what is there. What the officials did I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. You kept in touch with these meetings of the farmers' union? That was part of your work?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never attended a meeting, was never there, was not a member.

Maj. HUMES. If there had been any formal action authorizing you to take up and carry on this work, you would have known of that action?

Mr. ARNOLD. I understood that I had no authority to do anything, except Mr. Radford appointed me in his work. He ran the institution something like he would run a farm, every one was hired and was trying to help out.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not conducting this in a scientific manner? That was the purpose, to make agriculture scientific, to adopt economic practices?

Mr. ARNOLD. Perhaps so. I hope so.

Maj. HUMES. You were not practicing what you were preaching, then?

Mr. ARNOLD. I hope we were economical and efficient.

Maj. HUMES. Now, was the National Farmers' Union a secret organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. I understood it to be.

Maj. HUMES. You are not a member of it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Oh, no.

Maj. HUMES. But you understand it to be a secret organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is my understanding.

Maj. HUMES. It is a secret organization in what sense?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, you have to have the password to get into the unions. I am sure you do.

Maj. HUMES. It is secret in the same sense that a fraternal organization is a secret organization, I suppose?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say so.

Maj. HUMES. Have you a copy of the constitution and by-laws or laws whatever they may be denominated, of this organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I was not concerned in that. I may have had one, but it did not occur to me to bring it if I did.

Maj. HUMES. Now, during this period that you have covered, were you official acting in any way with any other organization, or did you conduct your business under any other trade name?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, we had for a while what we called the Texas Economic League. It ran about six months. Mr. J. S. Cullinane of Houston, Tex., was the president of it. Its constitution and by-laws are here. He was not able to finance it properly, and I think it was abandoned in a little while.

Here are the constitution and by-laws, and also some plate matter that was gotten out by it. I was not on its pay roll, but I was secretary of it, however.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time did it exist, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say about six months.

Maj. HUMES. During what period of time?

Mr. ARNOLD. Maybe I have it right here—January 1, 1916; it probably ran six months, I should say.

Mr. Cullinan was later associated with the Food Administration and in getting them to have a statute for this sort of thing. The publicity gotten out by that association is here. It was to be a publicity organization. It did nothing else. All the money went into plates. I have copies of the plates gotten out by these people.

Maj. HUMES. Purely for publicity? It was not a secret organization in any sense?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any knowledge of the amount of money used for publicity by that organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Why, I should say they spent a couple of thousand dollars a month.

Maj. HUMES. You were the secretary of that organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How did it go out of existence? Was it dissolved or just permitted to lapse?

Mr. ARNOLD. They rather permitted it to lapse. Mr. Cullinan did not get the financial support he wanted. He had to bear most of the burden himself, and he stopped the work.

Maj. HUMES. You have the plate matter of that organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think it is here.

Maj. HUMES. Where was this plate matter made—this boiler plate—for the Texas Economic League?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was strictly a Texas organization, and no publicity went out of Texas. It was made at Dallas, I think.

Maj. HUMES. By what organization; do you remember?

Mr. ARNOLD. The Western Newspaper Union, I think. I think they sent most of that out. Of that I will not be certain.

Maj. HUMES. Its activities were confined solely to Texas?

Mr. ARNOLD. The activity of the Texas Economic League were confined to Texas.

Maj. HUMES. During this period of time what other organizations were you connected with?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall any others, except what I might have had indirectly through Mr. Radford. He was undertaking to connect up with as many farmers' organizations as he could. I think that is the only organization, I should say, of any note that did any work.

Maj. HUMES. The plate matter of the agricultural publicity organization that you have described, where was that prepared?

Mr. ARNOLD. Where was it prepared?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I mean where were the plates made?

Mr. ARNOLD. They were made, I think, by the Western Newspaper Union. They made the plates. It has offices all over the Nation for the purpose of national publicity. I think it made most of plates, probably not all of them.

Maj. HUMES. Well, with what officers of the Western Newspaper Union did you transact your business?

Mr. ARNOLD. With the managers.

Maj. HUMES. At what branch office? They have offices all over the country.

Mr. ARNOLD. I dealt with the manager of it, whose headquarters are at Omaha, Nebr. I think that is the general headquarters although I met him in St. Louis, and he would come to Texas. I also met him at Chicago, wherever I happened to see him.

Maj. HUMES. This plate matter was sent out from the branch office of the Western Newspaper Union to the newspapers who were the subscribers for it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir; it was sent out to the newspapers by the branch offices of the Western Newspaper Union.

Maj. HUMES. Who prepared the material that went into this plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, we have indicated that special writers prepared some of it. We prepared part of it, probably, in the office. Some of it was prepared by the news industrial service, by men whose names you have seen here.

Senator OVERMAN. Did this Western Newspaper Union ever do anything in that you did not authorize?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; they were just manufacturers.

Senator NELSON. Did you furnish this plate matter just to subscribers, or did you furnish it to any newspaper that would use it?

Mr. ARNOLD. We tried to furnish it, to the extent of our financial ability, to any newspaper that would use it.

Senator NELSON. You made no charges to the newspapers?

Mr. ARNOLD. None whatever.

Senator WOLCOTT. How did you determine what newspapers to have it sent to?

Mr. ARNOLD. We would ask them if they wanted it, and usually we would get enough replies to take care of all our plates. In some instances, if we had the money, we would send it out to papers that did not ask for it, and they generally used it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you make up a list of the papers to which the plates were to be shipped?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you sent that list to the Western—

Mr. ARNOLD. The Western Newspaper Union; yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. And they shipped the stuff direct from there to the people designated on your list?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then the Newspaper Union had nothing to do with selecting the papers to which plates went?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were simply manufacturers, and nothing else?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you a record of the newspapers to which you furnished this material?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I probably have not. We would send it to any newspaper that would take it, if we could get the money. There was no discrimination and no classification.

Maj. HUMES. If there was discrimination, it was against the acceptance rather than the delivering of the plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, if we sent them plates and they did not use them, we would find it out, because we would have them send us copies of the newspaper, and if it was not using the plates we would probably send it to papers that would use it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any contract with the Western Newspaper Union for the preparation of this plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. They have a regular rate for the manufacturing of plates, which we paid them for it.

Maj. HUMES. But the contract price depends upon the number of plates that are sent out, does it not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; it is just like freight rates. They have a regular schedule there, and the rates are regulated, like them, by the Federal Government in some way. At least, they told me that, and I never could get any reduction in rates.

Senator OVERMAN. Might it not happen that they could get their paper cheaper? For instance, I might put plate matter in and sell to this paper cheaper than they could get it themselves.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And by that means certain organizations in this country are getting their material printed in the papers all over the country. Is not that so? For example, if I wanted an article on this plate matter, they would put it in there and send it to these papers all over this country?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; they would if you paid for it.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the way they get their pay, from men who put the article in?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Because the newspaper does not pay anything. They put it in and he gets that part of the page that he can use to print on?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What he does is to put in his paper the material sent to this association?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And they have a blank page, thus giving them a paper which they can use?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the advantage to the newspaper that they get this paper for nothing?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; and then they are glad to get the plates for nothing.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that the rates of the Western Newspaper Union are, for instance, just the same whether they send out a plate to 1,200 papers or whether they send the plate out to 50 papers?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; 50 is the minimum. You can send as many more as you want to, but there is no reduction in the rate.

Maj. HUMES. But is there an increase in the rate when you increase the number of plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. They are charged by plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I think it is $1.50 per page per plate.

Maj. HUMES. Per plate?

Mr. ARNOLD. A dollar and a half per paper per plate.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I understood. I could not comprehend that it was the same whether you sent out 50 or 500.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I thought you were getting at the change in rate.

Maj. HUMES. Could you state how many newspapers you sent out by plate to?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not. The plate service did not run very long. We were not able to finance it. There were 12,000 plate-matter papers in the United States. I do not think that we were ever able to work up to more than half of them; probably less than that. Of course, it was our hope and ambition to supply them all, but we were not able to do so.

Maj. HUMES. But your estimate is that you probably, at various times, supplied 6,000 of them with plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. Perhaps so. I should make that estimate; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember what the contract price, or regular price, amounted to, per week, for this plate matter, approximately?

Mr. ARNOLD. We tried to send out a page a month. It was not a page, as many papers as you sent.

Senator WOLCOTT. If you sent to 6,000 papers that was $9,000.

Mr. ARNOLD. $9,000. That is the correct multiplication.

Maj. HUMES. That would be $9,000 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That is one page?

Senator WOLCOTT. One page.

Maj. HUMES. Did the Farmers' Union get out any official publication of any kind, any particular paper or organization paper?

Mr. ARNOLD. The Texas Farmers' Union or the National?

Maj. HUMES. Either one, or both?

Mr. ARNOLD. Both of them had official organs.

Maj. HUMES. What were their official organs?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think the Messenger is the Texas Farmers' Union organ. I have no relations with it; no connection with it. I think it is called the Messenger.

The National Farmers' Union did have a paper for a little while but it went down and was sold, or something. I do not know what became of it.

Maj. HUMES. What was the name of that?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was the National Field.

Maj. HUMES. My attention has been called to a paper called Fireside Bulletin. Did that have any connection with the farmers' union? [Showing witness paper.]

Mr. ARNOLD. It did have some connection with the Farmers' Union but it was later canceled on account of its position on the minimum.

Maj. HUMES. Can you tell us the period during which this paper was an official paper, recognized by the Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not. I would not be sufficiently familiar with that to tell you about it.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time was it an official organ?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say. I do not know.

Senator OVERMAN. A member of this committee has suffered the misfortune of a death in his family, and this committee will adjourn now until to-morrow morning.

(At 1.10 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow Thursday, January 16, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.45 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Wolcott.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. While we have not a quorum, we will proceed with Mr. Arnold's testimony.

Maj. HUMES. The reporter calls my attention to the fact that the record does not show that Mr. Arnold was sworn as a witness.

Senator OVERMAN. He was sworn.

Maj. HUMES. Was he sworn?

Senator OVERMAN. I think so. Were you not, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. I suppose he was, but the record did not show it, and the reporter called it to my attention.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the record show that he was sworn.

Senator OVERMAN. If you have any doubt about it we will swear him again.

Mr. BAILEY. Swear him, then, and let the record show he was sworn.

(The witness was sworn by Senator Overman.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. A. ARNOLD—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. You yesterday mentioned several organizations that you were secretary of or represented in some capacity. Are there any other organizations of which you were secretary, or with which you were connected?

Mr. ARNOLD. None.

Maj. HUMES. And in whose name or on whose behalf you transacted any business of any kind?

Mr. ARNOLD. Those were the only two that any business was transacted for.

Maj. HUMES. What did your office in Fort Worth consist of? What employees did you have, and how large an enterprise did you have there?

Mr. ARNOLD. At times that varied. We might be sending out a large amount of printed matter and checking the papers to see that it was in there, and it would take four or five clerks. If less went on then the clerks would come off. But the regular force would be myself and Mrs. Darden, who is here, who had charge of the office, and we kept one or two others there pretty regularly.

Maj. HUMES. Was there a man by the name of Muse?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In what capacity was he employed?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was the statistician; we looked to him to get the figures and information brought out.

Maj. HUMES. He was known as the statistician?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was the work in which we used him; yes. In all the pamphlets and things of that sort the tables were his.

Maj. HUMES. In conducting this press work for the farmers' union, did the farmers' union, by appropriation or otherwise, contribute to the support of the enterprise?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. They never contributed?

Mr. ARNOLD. They never contributed any money.

Maj. HUMES. Any money?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. The only thing that they or anyone connected with them contributed was services and assistance and cooperation?

Mr. ARNOLD. That, I guess, is correct.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Arnold, have you any books showing the receipts and expenditures of your activities in behalf of this publicity work?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mrs. Darden would be the one to answer that question better than I can. We kept very little—there was very little occasion to keep any record. Mr. Radford handled that, as he did not care to have any extensive record kept on that.

Maj. HUMES. You were subpoenaed by the committee to produce all books of account that you might have; and in the papers that you have already produced I have not noticed any books of account. Have you any such books of account?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am saying that the lady has that, and she has something to say along that line, I think, herself.

Maj. HUMES. Can you not produce them?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not got them.

Maj. HUMES. We can interrogate her about them, but has she got them with her?

Mr. ARNOLD. She will be able to account for them, I think.

Maj. HUMES. But you were subpoenaed to produce them, and these are your records.

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not anything more than has been turned over to you or to the State officials who asked for those things. I do not get them twice.

Maj. HUMES. Has Mrs. Darden those books of account with her ready for production to this committee?

Mr. ARNOLD. She has not.

Maj. HUMES. Where are they?

Mr. ARNOLD. The books were turned over to the Attorney General up to a certain time.

Maj. HUMES. Up to what time?

Mr. ARNOLD. Probably in the middle of 1914.

Maj. HUMES. The Attorney General of the United States or the attorney general of Texas?

Mr. ARNOLD. The attorney general of Texas.

Maj. HUMES. Up to 1914 they were turned over to the attorney general of Texas. Where are the books of account and the records subsequent to 1914?

Mr. ARNOLD. They were turned over to the grand jury.

Maj. HUMES. When and where?

Mr. ARNOLD. Dallas; about a year ago.

Maj. HUMES. What did those books consist of?

Mr. ARNOLD. Why, I do not recall them now.

Senator OVERMAN. Were they delivered back to you after the grand jury got through with them?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I understand they were sent here.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any book account produced at that time except this check book or voucher register, as it is denominated?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say. Radford was handling that. I presume this is the book we kept. They, however, were the books of Mr. Muse, who was the accountant, and do not represent either the receipts—would not represent the total receipts or disbursements.

Maj. HUMES. You do not turn over to the grand jury, then, any books that represented the receipts and disbursements of these organizations or of your activities, did you?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not a complete—that could not be done.

Maj. HUMES. Did you turn over any book of account showing any of the transactions, except that book that I have just shown you?

Mr. ARNOLD. As far as I know, he did have the records there. I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember any record except the one that I have just shown you, that you turned over?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall any.

Maj. HUMES. Did you turn over to that grand jury all of the books of account that these associations had?

Mr. ARNOLD. Why, I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Then we are to understand, are we, that there is no book of accounts in existence showing the receipts and expenditures of these associations or of your activities?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; not that would show it fully.

Maj. HUMES. None that would show it fully?

Mr. ARNOLD. The business was not handled that way.

Maj. HUMES. Now, tell us how the business was handled and how the accounts were kept.

Mr. ARNOLD. Very well. Let me, if I may digress a moment, to say what Peter Radford was trying to do and how he was trying to do it—

Maj. HUMES. I have no objection to your explanation of it, but I have asked a direct question.

Mr. BAILEY. Answer that question and then make any explanation you want to.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and then make any explanation you want to make.

Mr. ARNOLD. The plate matter was paid for by Mr. Swenson, of New York, direct to the plate house. The money did not pass through our hands.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. who?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. E. P. Swenson, of New York. That money did not pass through our hands. It was always my plan and purpose to handle as little money as possible, and I would rather a man would pay the bills than give me the money to pay them, where he would do so, and that was the policy pursued, so far as the plates were concerned and in so far as the contributions from New York were concerned, in which he was interested.

Senator OVERMAN. The contributions in New York—what were they?

Mr. ARNOLD. I say Mr. Swenson handled such contributions as we were able to get there.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I understood you wanted to inquire about some brewery contributions. Now, any information in the world these people have on the subject they are willing to give you, but, really, I hardly think this committee wants to encumber its record with the cost of plate matter; that has absolutely no relation to any possible brewery connection or any brewery contribution. Now, these organizations, so far as they were active in promoting the interests of agriculture or so far as they were active in promoting agricultural organizations, I take for granted is not a matter of concern on the part of this committee. I do not attempt to control the order of interrogation, but I do venture to say that all these matters outside of the breweries are immaterial. Now, for instance, Mr. Swenson is a man who is largely interested in the development of the State. His contributions are not denied nor concealed and nobody is ashamed of them; we are ready to tell you all about them; but they do not relate to the question of the brewery contributions or any other question that this committee is investigating.

Senator OVERMAN. Let us see how that is. He said he had certain contributions from Mr. Swenson himself, as I understood it.

Mr. BAILEY. No; Mr. Swenson paid for certain plate matter.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; he said that, and afterwards he said he did not handle any money; that generally the money he got came from Mr. Swenson.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to put it on the record that Mr. Arnold has been on the stand during practically all of the time of the session yesterday and up to the present time, and there has not been a question asked him concerning any brewery connection or contribution, but it is all a matter really local to Texas and Texas politics.

Senator OVERMAN. I think that it is so.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, I said nothing yesterday, because I presumed Maj. Humes was laying the foundation for these questions about it, and if that is still his purpose—

Maj. HUMES. That is what I am trying to find out, how the accounts were handled, and that is the question I asked, how the accounts and financial transactions were handled, with a view of ascertaining what information and record is available, either in the possession of Mr. Arnold or elsewhere, of these financial transactions.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, if we were in the court room we would say you had a right to interrogate him about the contributions which this committee is directed to inquire about, and then you would have a right to make him say whether he handled those contributions as he handled all others; there would be no objection to that. But I must no objection. I just want to call the attention of the committee to what is proceeding.

Senator OVERMAN. The Senator understands about these investigations by the committee. We are not held down to the technical rules. Maj. Humes is laying the foundation to make his proof.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course we are not, and yet I want to make this observation, that in an experience covering some senatorial investigations and some in the House, I have no hesitation in declaring that the best way in the world ever devised to elicit the truth is to adhere to the rules of evidence as laid down in the law books. If that is the best way to elicit the truth, as it is done in the courtroom, it is the best way to elicit the truth every place else in this world. Still, I do not insist that you adhere to it.

Senator OVERMAN. That may be so, but still that has not been the rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I know it has not, and I make no objection.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, you say that the bills for plate matter, from the plate houses, were taken care of by Mr. Swenson. Were they billed directly to Mr. Swenson by the plate houses or were they billed to you and by you referred to Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. The bills, I think, were made out to me; at least I O. K.'d them; and I do not recall just how they passed over my desk; I do not recall just how they were handled.

Maj. HUMES. You would approve them and they would go to Mr. Swenson, and Mr. Swenson paid all the bills at the plate house?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was the rule; yes. There might have been exceptions. There were exceptions to that.

Maj. HUMES. If there were exceptions to it, the rule de minimis would apply to your statement?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should think so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. There would only be small items that would be exceptions to the general practice?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You say your activities were financed by contributions. Were those contributions made directly to you?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Some of these contributions were made directly to you?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. How did you receive contributions or financial aid from contributions that were not made directly to you? How were they handled?

Mr. ARNOLD. The railroads paid for some plate matter; their money was sent directly to the plate house through Mr. Swenson. He also had a fund there of private moneys, such as he himself contributed, which went toward defraying the expenses of the office. It was a dual account there with him, and we would draw on him whenever there was any money there. We had money in Texas that we received there—from private individuals in Texas, that helped to support it and to take care of the office end and the organization end of it.

Maj. HUMES. Then you say that the contributions from private individuals in Texas were made directly to you and that other con-contributions were made to Mr. Swenson, and that you drew on Mr. Swenson for the funds that had been thus contributed to him?

Mr. ARNOLD. That would be the case, excepting what is paid—

Maj. HUMES. What portion of these funds that were expended by you were contributed to you directly and what portion of the funds were paid through Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know that I could make that division with any degree of accuracy. It was always a hard matter to get money; we were always or usually in debt, and it took most of my time trying to solicit money wherever I could, and it came irregularly and was spent irregularly, and the activities were very much disturbed by inefficiency for the lack of any regular sort of finances—for any sort of financial plan, we may say. We always were deficient in that way. Institutions supported by voluntary contributions suffer that way.

Maj. HUMES. The contributions that were made through Mr. Swenson, were those contributions solicited by Mr. Swenson, or were they solicited by you, with the direction or request that they be paid to Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. They were solicited by me. Ordinarily he would help do so, but I presume that I have personally solicited most of the funds, based on the authority read yesterday.

Maj. HUMES. You solicited most of the funds that were handled through Mr. Swenson and directed the contributors to make the contributions to Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. That, I think, is a correct statement.

Maj. HUMES. He had the custody of the funds?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Now, in communicating with—

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me interject a question here. Did you have a branch of this farmers' union in New York State?

Mr. ARNOLD. Did we have?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; Mr. Swenson was authorized to receive money for this institution, I think, by Mr. Radford. I do not want to be sure about that. I know Mr. Radford has gone to talk with him many times about it and solicited, and gave him such authority. Whether it was in writing or not I do not know. But he had authority to solicit money or had the request to do so. I guess anybody had authority, for that matter, like anybody who wanted to do that.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is all. Go ahead.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, where is Mr. Radford?

Mr. ARNOLD. He is dead.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Radford is dead?

Mr. ARNOLD. He died about a month ago.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he a citizen of Texas?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In your correspondence with those with whom you were affiliated and with whom you transacted business, did you have a code of any kind?

Mr. ARNOLD. Sometimes we did; sometimes we did not.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a code book that was the basis of your code? [Handing the witness a black-covered volume.]

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell. I suppose it is. The code books are on sale at almost every bookstore.

Maj. HUMES. That is the same code? I do not mean the same book.

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell you that. Suppose we concede that it is.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember presenting to the grand jury the code that you used?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Were you interrogated about it in any grand jury proceeding?

Mr. BAILEY. Wait a moment.

Mr. ARNOLD. I was not.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the fact that the code that was presented from your office had some missing pages?

Mr. BAILEY. I want to suggest that under the law of Texas Mr. Arnold has no right to disclose what transpired in the grand jury room, and I am satisfied the Major will not insist on him doing that.

Maj. HUMES. I did not catch that.

Mr. BAILEY. Under the law of Texas, a man who is summoned before a grand jury has no right to disclose anything that transpired before the grand jury or in that grand jury room.

Maj. HUMES. Is it my understanding that the gentleman contends that the statutes of Texas supersede or control the Federal grand jury proceeding?

Mr. BAILEY. You have no more authority here to conduct this kind of an inquiry than I have, and your questions would afford no protection at all. Of course, if a man is called before the grand jury of the United States, he might be interrogated about what transpired in the grand jury room of the State; and if he would say "I am under the obligation of an oath and under the penalty of the law not to disclose it," the Federal grand jury could not make him disclose it; but they would have a right to pursue their inquiry independently of that.

Senator OVERMAN. There is no question about the fact that the law of Texas does not allow a man to disclose?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; it does not allow such.

Maj. HUMES. I might say, for the information of the committee, this was not a matter before any State grand jury. The matter under discussion was before a Federal grand jury, and in the United States court. I think Senator Bailey misunderstands the inquiry I made. I do not concede the correctness of his position, that it applies to the Federal grand jury; but it is not important, because my inquiry was one of identification of a given book, rather than to disclose anything that occurred in that grand jury.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Arnold has said that these books are on sale at all places, and he had no doubt that it is the one. Now, the colonel inquires if he presented that book to the grand jury. Mr. Arnold says he did not. Then the colonel inquires if he was interrogated about it. That would be a plain violation of his oath.

Senator OVERMAN. I understood Maj. Humes to ask him if they did not have some pages of another code in connection with it.

Mr. BAILEY. He had not reached that question.

Maj. HUMES. What I think I asked the witness is, as to whether or not there were not several pages missing in the code book that was produced before that grand jury.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Stenographer, I will ask you to turn back to the question immediately before I interposed and read it. I may be mistaken. I might have had my mind diverted for a moment, but I thought the question was whether or not he was interrogated about that.

Maj. HUMES. I think you were anticipating my next question.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, if I did, I was looking into your mind. And now, Mr. Stenographer, if I am wrong about that, I want to know it.

(The reporter read the following questions and answers:)

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember presenting to the grand jury the code that was used?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Were you interrogated about it in any grand jury proceeding?

Mr. ARNOLD. I was not.

Maj. HUMES. And do you remember the fact that the code book that was presented from your office had some missing pages?

Mr. BAILEY. I rose to interrupt, and the Major insisted on finishing the question. He proceeded to ask the question as to what the interrogation was. I arose to make the suggestion at the time he asked if he was interrogated. That is all right; that is my recollection of it. Mr. Arnold, I suggest that you say to them that you do this only because ordered by the committee, so as to protect yourself if any question should arise about your disclosing the secrets of a grand jury room.

Senator OVERMAN. In order to protect him, I will ask him to please answer the question.

Mr. BAILEY. What is that, Senator?

Senator OVERMAN. I will order him to answer the question.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the record show that he objected upon the ground that he did not want to disclose what transpired in the grand jury room, and that the chairman then ordered him to answer it, and that he answered it under protest. That makes the record sufficient.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; that is all right.

Maj. HUMES. Now, answer the question, please.

Mr. BAILEY. Protesting only on the ground that he did not want to divulge what transpired there.

Mr. ARNOLD. What is the question, now?

Maj. HUMES. I will ask to have the question read.

Mr. BAILEY. What I think he asked the witness was whether there were not several missing pages in the code book that was produced before that grand jury.

Maj. HUMES. Were there not several pages missing from the code book that was presented to that grand jury?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am telling you that I did not present that book and I know nothing about it. The code books, as we used them, were discarded some two or three months before then, when we went to war and the Secretary of War announced that coded messages should not be sent, as they might be under some sort of suspicion or delay on account of spies and things of that sort, and we soon discontinued the use of the code books, or at least minimized it.

Let me see where this place is in the book that you refer to.

Maj. HUMES. I think I can find it for you in just a minute here. I had the pages marked, but the marker seems to have fallen out. Here it is—from page 306 to page 319.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that Maj. Humes is not identified this yet as the book that was——

Maj. HUMES. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. BAILEY. No; but you would not, of course, say that you have the right to take a book to a witness and without telling him where it was used ask the question in that way. Somebody might have handed you this book on the street. This witness has already testified that he did not present it and knew nothing about it.

If Maj. Humes will say that this is the book that was used by somebody before the grand jury, then Mr. Arnold will answer.

Maj. HUMES. I will say that that is the book that was produced by Mr. Arnold, or some one representing his office. I do not presume to say whether Mr. Arnold personally presented it or whether Mrs. Gorden did; but that is the book that was presented as having been the code used.

Mr. BAILEY. With that statement, of course, Mr. Arnold will proceed to answer.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will you give me that question again?

Maj. HUMES. I ask you if that is the code book that you used, and the pages from 306 to 319, inclusive, were missing when it was presented before the grand jury?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say. I did not present it; I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the fact that there were missing pages from that code book?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should think so. There would be a change in the code names of men, and in that way a change would be made probably once a month, or something like that. The rest of the code book would be immaterial, as it is on sale anywhere and everywhere, and there is not any secret about it; but the names of the men that we did not want to disclose would naturally not be in the code book.

Maj. HUMES. They were torn out and abandoned?

Mr. ARNOLD. After a while. They were used for a while and then they would be changed.

Maj. HUMES. Why were they torn out? I believe you gave a reason for it a moment ago, but I do not know that I caught your reason.

Mr. ARNOLD. I say they would be discontinued. They would be superseded by some other list.

Maj. HUMES. I thought you said something about an order of the Secretary of War having something to do with it.

Mr. ARNOLD. That would be to the discontinuance of the code book entirely.

Senator WOLCOTT. Code messages?

Mr. ARNOLD. Code messages; yes. I think that was his request, if I recall it correctly, soon after we went to war. At least, my attention was called to it two or three times by parties.

Maj. HUMES. Was that the reason that the home-made portion of this book was destroyed?

Mr. ARNOLD. Oh, no. That was the reason for the discontinuance of the book.

Senator OVERMAN. I understood you to say, Mr. Arnold, that account of secrecy you would add certain other of your own material there to the code?

Mr. ARNOLD. That would be as to parties whose names we had have added, and we changed that once in a while.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask you this: Are the missing pages of the book pages that contained code names of men?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say that. I imagine that is so. I presume it is.

Senator WOLCOTT. Having your own set of men whose names were going to employ, or might use in your messages, you got the code to fit those particular names?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is correct.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is right?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. And that code would be changed probably once a month, or something like that.

Maj. HUMES. And that was the portion of the code that was taken out of the book?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Or that is missing from the book?

Mr. ARNOLD. I presume so. I could not say.

Now, may I make the general statement which I asked to read a while ago?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Peter Radford, who is the central figure of the work—it is probably of some importance that you understand what he was doing and how he was doing it—in addition to the matter of scientific production and the bettering of markets he saw a tendency on the part of legislatures to pass many laws that increased the expense of farming and few laws that decreased it.

He was not a highly educated man, but he was able to grasp the fundamentals of government and of society.

I have seen him sit in the office and take a board and, in a certain way, balance up the acts of Congress as they related to agriculture, taking a debit and a credit side.

Take, for example, the Adamson law, which I believe was a law of increasing the expense of railroading $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, and the farmer, perhaps, bore half of it; that would mean $50,000,000 on the debtor side of agriculture and nothing on the credit.

He was not opposed to eight-hour laws; but where does the farmer come in? Can he stand it? Those were the questions that were in his mind, not only in the matter of that sort of legislation but in such items as personal injuries, and there was a tendency on the part of legislatures, apparently, to make it easier for a man who was injured to collect more money from the railroads or from industrial institutions, which became an operating expense, and the farmer paid it. That was all right. We favored that. But how about the farmer when he got injured? Who paid him?

It was the inequality and not the act of which he complained.

Then, take the item of pensions, which many of the industrial institutions employed—a very proper one—of pensioning their employees, and yet it becomes an operating expense. The farmer?

it. Yet, when the farmer becomes old and indigent, he must go over the hills to the poorhouse.

Then, again, we find many of our industrial institutions boast of entertainments, such as parks and playgrounds, and music and rest rooms for their employees. That is all right. That is fine enough. But it is an operating expense, and the farmer becomes the host. He pays it.

Senator OVERMAN. If you do not object to that, why make that speech?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am just trying to get into your minds, Senator, an understanding of these things which were in his mind.

Mr. BAILEY. He wants to state the purpose of this organization, Senator, and the men at the head of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Was the purpose of this organization to antagonize those laws?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was the purpose to study those laws, Senator, not to antagonize them. We did not antagonize them.

Take the matter of farm machinery—getting away from legislation—an item of very especial interest was the matter of farm machinery; and the manufacture of farm machinery increased the wages of their employees, I believe, $100,000,000. They increased the price of farm machinery a similar amount, and passed it on to the farmers. He analyzed those things. He claimed the right of representation on those boards.

These are the things that he was undertaking to stand for, and the same with the tariff—a protection tariff—that gave protection to manufacturers and none to the farmer; and in that tariff cotton, especially, was an item that was discriminated against, it being not possible for protection; and it was Mr. Radford's idea that the policy of protection should be extended to all matters. In that respect he probably did not differ from Calhoun and others who have gone on before, who have contended against that discrimination, where a farmer must buy in a protected market and sell in a free one; forcing him to buy in an 8-hour market and sell in a 14-hour market.

Those were the things that he was undertaking to analyze, to study, and to watch closely in the interest of the farmer, and to do that through organization and publicity work.

In doing that, in organization, he recognized that there must be farm organizations to stand and represent these things.

Those are the things, largely, that were in his mind, the things that he was undertaking to do; and to do them, he said to get money wherever we could for that purpose, and any way we could, and that we have probably done.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you get any money for the purpose of opposing the Adamson law?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. From the railroads?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. No; not from the railroads. When the Adamson law first came up—that was a year ago—or rather it was the 8-hour law, I believe, Mr. Radford saw what was coming there, and he tried to do what he could to represent the interests of the farmer. He opposed it, and he suggested—or I suggested, on his behalf, and at some time suggested to railroad presidents that it was a matter between the men who paid the freight, the farmers, and the people who received it; that the railroads would simply have to increase their rates to foot the bill.

Senator OVERMAN. That is, if the Adamson law passed: of course there would have to be an increase in the freight rates?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is the point.

Senator OVERMAN. And that would affect the farmer directly?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. I see how that could be, and it was probably wise. The question I asked was, Was there any contributions to the organization to defeat that law?

Mr. ARNOLD. There were contributions made that were used, at least, for that purpose. Mr. Radford solicited money, and tried to get, through Mr. Swenson, money for that purpose some 12 months before the Adamson law came up, and repeatedly tried during that interval, but was unable to do so until it was a law, for that matter, or practically so.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was Mr. Swenson a railroad man?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was he connected with any railroad?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say. His interests, as I know them in Texas, are that he is interested in ranches and stock lands and stock and things like that. He has a large ranch there. I could not tell you about his investments. I do not know anything about them. I could not give you a list of them.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is his first name? What are his initials?

Mr. ARNOLD. E. P.

Senator WOLCOTT. What does the "E" stand for?

Mr. ARNOLD. Eric P. Swenson, I think.

Senator WOLCOTT. Eric?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. I think I noticed that in your affidavit there.

I would like to have the Adamson pamphlet. Have you one of them there, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I have all that you gave me. I did not notice any of the Adamson law. Here they are.

Mr. BAILEY. I have one of those pamphlets at my office, and I ask permission to put it in, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not seem to have one of them here. I thought I had one of those Adamson pamphlets here, but I do not seem to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I have one at my office, if the Chairman please, and I want to have it go in with Mr. Arnold's testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there much of it?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I think it a very sensible production.

Senator OVERMAN. Could you not edit it?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. All I care about going in is a statement that they sent out to Mr. Lovett, who then represented the railroads, which it was said that if the railroads are willing to divide their dollars with their operatives, we are perfectly willing for them to do so, but if the railroads intend to pass this charge on to the farmers of this country, or to those who must use them for fares and freight, then we protest against it.

Senator OVERMAN. That is all right. That may go in.

Mr. BAILEY. There are only five or six lines which define their attitude on all of those questions.

Senator OVERMAN. There is no objection at all to that going in. It should go in. But the pamphlet, as a whole, may contain many other things not germane to this investigation.

Mr. BAILEY. That defines their attitude on that and all other questions, and that is what I want to go in.

Senator OVERMAN. All right. That may go in.

(The extract referred to will be found in this record, on page 2614.)

Maj. HUMES. One of the mouthpieces of the organization in publicity work was Mr. Pope, was it not? And he promulgated some of these arguments and some of this publicity material in carrying on the work of your bureau, so that his attitude would simply be a reflection of the attitude of the organization. Is not that true?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not at all. Mr. Pope was president of the Association of Farmers' Union Presidents, and Mr. Radford was an official of that organization. I worked with Mr. Radford. I had no business connection whatever with Mr. Pope.

Maj. HUMES. You had no connections with Mr. Pope?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, no. I had no business connections with him. I knew him around the office.

Maj. HUMES. You never sent out his publicity material to the newspapers.

Mr. ARNOLD. Oh, yes; if Mr. Radford wanted it; just like we sent out matter from the National Farmers' Union, or anything else.

Maj. HUMES. You never sent out telegrams and signed Mr. Pope's name to them, and sent material out in his name?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not unless Mr. Radford wanted it done. I was in the capacity of clerk.

Maj. HUMES. He frequently wanted that done, did he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. At times, I suppose so.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Then you had more than simply a casual acquaintance with Mr. Pope?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not indicate that I did not have an acquaintance with Mr. Pope. I said that my relations were with Mr. Radford. Mr. Radford worked with Mr. Pope or whomsoever he pleased.

Maj. HUMES. And Mr. Pope and Mr. Radford were carrying on his work together, were they not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; they worked together.

Maj. HUMES. And the utterances of one were merely a reflection of the views of the other, were they not?

Mr. ARNOLD. They worked together very intimately.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and you frequently sent out press matter in the name of Mr. Pope because of the fact that he was the president of the Association of Presidents of the Farmers' Union, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. We sent out stuff from all officials of organizations or of industries. We did not use any other kind except officers of organizations; that was the sort of publicity that we always sent out, and that included Mr. Pope.

Maj. HUMES. In sending out your publicity matter, you would send it out in the name, or at least used the name and the authority of these persons who had some official connection with some of these organizations in order to give an official status to their utterances, would you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; everything we sent out was ordinarily by the official of some organization. That is what we sought.

Maj. HUMES. Then, is it not a fact, Mr. Arnold, that the plate-matter sent out in the name of Mr. Pope would be a reflection of the views of Mr. Radford, as you have described them here?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not say that. It would be the joint opinion of them, at least.

Maj. HUMES. Well, the joint opinion, then.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. I think Mr. Pope and Mr. Radford worked very intimately together.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I am sure they did.

Maj. HUMES. Is your statement completed? Have you completed it?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think so; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Arnold, what proportion, approximately, of the contributions made for your work were handled through your hands and through your records, and what proportion were handled directly by Mr. Swensen, as he handled the plate-matter transactions never coming into your hands?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I could not say. I do not know that I would know just how much money Mr. Swensen handled. I do not know that I would know that; but we sent out plates for about six months and I think we spent $10,000 a month, or something near that. I think $10,000 every six weeks. There were six columns to the page and I think a column a week—the columns as there indicated [indicating newspaper] were about what we sent out. Then we were not able to continue that except at irregular intervals.

Maj. HUMES. Let me understand on that item. That plate matter was practically all, as I understand it, paid for by Mr. Swensen and did not go through your hands at all, but was paid directly by him to the plate houses?

Mr. ARNOLD. Practically so; yes. That is right.

Maj. HUMES. So that would be $10,000 a month for approximately six months?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That would be about $60,000?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect he spent that much.

Maj. HUMES. Were there any other sums paid by Mr. Swensen directly that did not go through your hands?

Mr. ARNOLD. To anybody?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Not that I can recall.

Maj. HUMES. All the rest of the money that was spent by these organizations went through your hands, and was ultimately spent by you?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think so; yes. I think that is correct.

Senator WOLCOTT. But Mr. Swensen did, in addition to paying for the plate matter, send money direct to you folks down in Texas.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; we got some support there direct from private individuals like himself, who contributed in that section of the country.

Maj. HUMES. What were your average annual expenditures, as from the money expended direct by Mr. Swensen from, say 1914.

date? What were the average annual expenditures; what would they be?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, they would run from probably thirty or forty thousand—let me see; it would run from two thousand to three thousand dollars a month, I should say. We could not run with much less than that.

Maj. HUMES. Two or three thousand dollars a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; to do any sort of business. Sometimes we did not spend that much. The last year we have not spent anything like that.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was aside from the plate expenditures made by Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was aside from the plate expenditures made by Mr. Swenson.

Maj. HUMES. This money that was contributed to you from the various sources, was it deposited in a bank account, or was it paid in cash?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, it would be ordinarily deposited, I should say, in a bank.

Maj. HUMES. In what bank, and in whose name?

Mr. ARNOLD. We deposited our money in the American National Bank at Fort Worth.

Maj. HUMES. In whose name was it deposited?

Mr. ARNOLD. The money, as I understand it, would be deposited in the name of Mr. R. V. Muse. I think all of it would be deposited there and then distributed by him. Mrs. Darden, however, could give you that information more accurately than I could. In those matters of handling accounts, and handling the office, I should want her statements to supersede mine, if they interfered in any particular, because she knows more about it. She handled it. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. As far as you know, then, was there any money deposited, any of this money, in your own name, personally?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not know your dates, there. Probably we might have changed our methods at some time. As a rule, I do not think I personally handled any of the money, and I only handled it when at some time it was necessary to do so; although I would not object to it, and may have, at times, deposited money in my account for a while, and then turned it back for that matter. The general plan, however, was to pass all of it through that account, although there might have been variations in it, and no doubt were.

Maj. HUMES. Your practice was the general practice of depositing this money in Mr. Muse's accounts?

Mr. ARNOLD. I will say yes to that.

Maj. HUMES. The money that was expended, was it expended by check? What was your method of expending it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, the money that was used—yes, I should say we drew it out of the bank by check, of course, if we put it in there. I probably do not catch your question.

Maj. HUMES. I mean, did you liquidate your indebtedness and the debts that you were paying in cash, or did you expend all this money by check?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I should say by check.

Maj. HUMES. Have you your canceled checks, or your check stubs for these expenditures?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. Where are they?

Mr. ARNOLD. We did not keep them any longer than was necessary to account to the contributors for them. We had no further use for them.

Maj. HUMES. How long did you preserve these records?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not any longer than was necessary to account to those who made the contributions.

Maj. HUMES. How long, ordinarily, was that?

Mr. ARNOLD. It might be a month, or it might be six weeks.

Maj. HUMES. But they have all been destroyed now, have they?

Mr. ARNOLD. I gave you, I think, what I had on hand there.

Maj. HUMES. All but these have been destroyed?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is all I know anything about; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And all of the rest of the canceled checks and all of the check stubs have been destroyed?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know as we ever had any check stubs in that matter. We checked out the money from the bank, and issued the checks.

Maj. HUMES. Have you a list or record of the contributors to this fund?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you keep such a record?

Mr. ARNOLD. Of the names of the men who contributed?

Maj. HUMES. Of the names of the men or the organizations.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I have no record now. No; I have no record.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state to the committee, as far as you remember, the names of the persons or organizations who contributed to this fund that was used as you have outlined?

Mr. BAILEY. I must interpose an objection to that question, V. Chairman. If he wants to know who, if any men, owning a brewery or interested in a brewery, contributed, we are ready to answer. But to set this man on the witness stand here and make him divulge the names of contributors—and perhaps I ought to say that it has been more or less of a political issue revolving around this organization in Texas; a suit was brought to dissolve it; some of the politicians liked it and some of them did not; and I want to say, for the benefit of the committee, that I was not one of the public men in this State who have enjoyed the benefit of its influence; still, that does not affect my view of its usefulness in some directions—this man or any man might have contributed in a matter wholly apart from any subject under inquiry here, and I am going to instruct Mr. Arnold not to answer that question except as to brewery contributions.

Any question about the brewers or anyone interested in them connected with them, he will answer, but he is not going to give a list of the names outside of that.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I do not conceive it to be my duty to make an argument in behalf of the introduction of any particular class of testimony, because it is only my purpose to assist, and under my instructions I am only to assist and cooperate with this committee. It is a matter for the committee to decide.

Personally, I feel, however, that the only way that this committee can ascertain the source of the influence that inspired and financed the activities described by the witness is by disclosing the financial support which made possible the activities; and it is for the committee to then determine whether or not that support was either a direct contribution of brewers or brewery interests or whether it was an direct cooperation and support from breweries and brewers, or whether it came from sources entirely separate and independent of that interest.

I do not understand that this committee is sitting as a court to hear an argument or a contention between Senator Bailey and myself on the question of the admissibility of this evidence.

In undertaking to prepare this matter and to present it to the committee, I have conceived that the only way to do it is to disclose to the committee all of the facts in connection with these activities.

If the committee agrees with me in my understanding of the best way of disclosing this matter, of course this testimony ought to go; and that, of course, is purely a matter for the committee. I want to cooperate in the best way possible to produce all of the facts, let the chips fall just where they may, with none to serve and none to perish.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand that you instruct your client not to answer this question, Mr. Bailey?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I will. I do not want to do it, Mr. Chairman.

The committee is instructed to inquire about two questions: German propaganda and brewery contributions. I make no question, now, about the authority of the Senate to order that kind of inquiry. I said to the committee yesterday that we are ready to give them any information on either question in our possession.

For instance, suppose I had contributed to that organization. I did not; but I would have done it to have assisted in much of this work. Could it be imputed to me that I was engaged in German propaganda or that I was engaged in aiding the breweries?

For instance, in regard to these plate matters here; I see the photograph of the junior Senator from Texas here, with some argument that he made in behalf of prohibition; and I see the Hon. William H. Taft's photograph on this same page. I believe he has an argument against prohibition. I do not know who paid for that. I do not know if anybody paid for it. But if they did, surely Senator Sheppard would not have been suspected of having paid for his prohibition argument with brewery money.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention also to the fact that it is about a two-to-one shot. Mr. Brisbane, in the same paper, and Mr. Taft, presenting views on one side; a statement of Senator Sheppard, with an apology by way of introduction, in the same sheet—

Mr. BAILEY. The colonel says, "an apology." I will tell you what an apology is. A statement that he believes in presenting both sides of every question. That is what these people were doing. They were an educational organization, and it was their purpose not only to teach the farmer what was his interest, not only to try to instruct him in scientific and economical agriculture, but to teach him to think; to think, if necessary, on both sides, so that he might get which was the right side of every question as it arose, and its proper name, I believe, is "educational and cooperative." And it was a proper thing. They introduced Senator Sheppard's statement with the statement that they wanted both sides presented.

Suppose the railroads contributed. I do not know that the railroads as corporations contributed, but these gentlemen would have accepted the contribution. They make no concealment of that. I say in their prospectus that they will take the contribution of everybody interested in the betterment of agriculture. Suppose the railroads contributed. I believe they resisted the passage of what is known as the full-crew bill in Texas—am I right about that, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Upon the theory that every time you require the railroads of Texas to expend a dollar, 40 or 50 per cent of it is paid by the farmers of that State; and, believing that it was unnecessary to employ people that did not have any work to do, they joined the railroads in that.

Another part of the activities of these gentlemen was to promote a better understanding between the farmers and the townspeople there, to get away from the old idea and the old prejudice that there must be a conflict between those who till the soil and those who run the stores, necessarily.

Suppose the merchants contributed—and in my opinion some of the largest merchants in the State did contribute to this merchants' secretaries' or commercial secretaries' organization——

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose the meat packers contributed?

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. If you are authorized to investigate the activities of the meat packers, we will tell you anything you want to know about that.

Now, we had a contest down in Texas, and one attorney got brought quo warranto proceedings against this commercial secretaries' association upon the ground that it was a political organization intended to help the other side.

Those are the controversies we are trying to avoid here.

We are ready to have these organizations tried and searched to the uttermost upon every fact and circumstance that can relate to these matters which your committee has under inquiry; but I think it that the committee does not want to thrash out Texas politics. I take it that your committee does not care to inquire the names of the merchants who contributed to this organization, believing that they would promote a better understanding between the people of the town and the people in the country.

There are many of the purposes of this organization with which I thoroughly sympathize, and yet it is fair to say that I do not know what Mr. Arnold's attitude toward me was when I was in public in Texas, but I suppose I never had a more bitter antagonist than Peter Radford. Peter Radford has been well designated as a man of uncommon common sense. Without any education, he was a Populist. And you may be sure that no man whose democracy was not of the strictest kind ever had any political favor to bestow.

I have no sympathy with some of the things that they did with some of them I was in thorough accord. Though I did not contribute to it, I would have contributed to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, remembering that this is an inquiry into the activities of these organizations relating to the brewers' interests, German propaganda, do you want recorded, in an inquiry conducted along these lines, the names of hundreds of the best citi-

Texas, hereafter to be pointed to as men who were identified with an inquiry into German propaganda and into brewery interests?

I do not want to raise the issue with the committee. I do not think it will be necessary to do it; because I do not think the committee itself thinks that it is proper to go into those things. I am satisfied that it is not going to do it.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand, Mr. Arnold, that you will follow the advice of your counsel and decline to answer the question under discussion?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. For the present, Maj. Humes, pursue the inquiry along the lines of the German propaganda and the brewery interests, and we will take under consideration, in executive session, this question which has been raised by Senator Bailey.

Senator NELSON. Have you got a list of names, or any names, you suspect? You might ask him about those particular ones.

Maj. HUMES. I could not complete that list under the ruling.

Mr. BAILEY. If you will submit any list of names you have that you think are identified with the breweries or with the German propaganda, we will go over it with you. I do not care whom you ask about if you ask about him in connection with the German propaganda, or we will call it the brewery propaganda. I want to say to the committee, while I am on my feet again, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe in the use of money in politics at all, but I never was able to see why the breweries did not have the same right to protect their business when the Anti-Saloon League was using money to destroy their business. I believe that if a man believed in prohibition he was justified in contributing to establish it; and if he did not, he was justified in contributing to defeat it.

We are ready to make any disclosures in the world as to our knowledge of that. If Col. Humes has anybody interested in the breweries or connected with the breweries, and he will submit the names to me—I do not know them myself, I suppose Mr. Arnold does; I do not know—we will help him to revise his list and complete the list and get all the information he wants about it. We have nothing to conceal about it.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, can you reserve this question for consideration in an executive session, or do you want the question decided right now?

Maj. HUMES. I have not any particular desire on that question, except this, that it may result in continued objections, because it is rather difficult, perhaps, in this examination to confine myself as strictly as the chairman has suggested, and ask direct questions. I could pursue the examination by asking indirect questions along this line, within the ruling of the chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. You can ask any question, and if he desires not to answer it, we will take the question up.

Senator WOLCOTT. Just a moment. I am wondering in my mind if we really are not putting the cart before the horse. I know nothing at all about this organization. I do not know what Maj. Humes and Capt. Lester may have in the way of information about it. It seems to me the logical course to pursue is to show the committee first whether or not those organizations were engaging in any kind of brewery propaganda; and if we find they were, then probe the contribution list, and I am frank to say that if there is any evidence either in the shape of these plates and their contents or some other shape, that shows that the organization was aiding in a secret way the brewery propaganda, I should be in favor of going with considerable latitude into the inquiry as to who put up the money.

Mr. BAILEY. And we will aid the committee in that, if that can be established here. I should not be very squeamish about hunting for individuals in the list. But are you prepared to go ahead now and show wherein this organization was doing anything in aid of the brewery propaganda, without disclosing its interests or its connection with the brewery business?

Maj. HUMES. That is bound always to be a matter of opinion, as to what certain things were intended for.

Senator WOLCOTT. There is nothing before the committee now, that I recall, that enables the committee to form any opinion whether or not any particular thing was brewery propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. I will make some inquiry along that line.

Senator WOLCOTT. I glanced over these sheets in three or four minutes, looking at the headlines, and nothing caught my eye as being of a brewery nature. There is something there, maybe, that I did not see.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, what was the attitude of Mr. Radford on the liquor question?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was a Prohibitionist, always voted for it, and always favored it.

Maj. HUMES. Have you any writings of his to show that he was a Prohibitionist?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. None to show that he was not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you know Mr. R. L. Autry, of Houston?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any business with him?

Mr. ARNOLD. I had.

Maj. HUMES. Did he make contributions? What is his business?

Mr. ARNOLD. He is interested in the brewing business. He probably has others.

Maj. HUMES. He is an official in the Texas State Brewery Association, is he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never heard of that organization.

Maj. HUMES. Did you receive contributions from him?

Mr. ARNOLD. He has given me some money, yes, as an individual, not as any association.

Maj. HUMES. As an individual?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You mean he, as an individual, has given it to you, and you have received it in behalf of this organization that you were connected with? Is that the idea?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In the code that you used you had a code word for Mr. Autry's name, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Was not Mr. Autry's code name in your code "Confidy," and was not that the name you used in telegrams in reply to Mr. Autry?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not that I recall. I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that that is tantamount to a negative or—

Mr. ARNOLD. We listed the names of many men, and I could not know. I suppose we sent a code telegram if we had any occasion to use it, but I do not recall that there is any significance one way or the other.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever come in contact with anyone representing the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. John A. McDermitt?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have met him; yes.

Maj. HUMES. When and under what circumstances?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nothing except in a casual way.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you meet him?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall it now. I probably met him in New York.

Maj. HUMES. Did you meet him in Chicago?

Mr. ARNOLD. Perhaps so.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Lansberg?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have met him.

Maj. HUMES. He was connected with the United States Brewers' Association, was he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever receive any financial support from him?

Mr. ARNOLD. From Mr. Lansberg?

Maj. HUMES. From Mr. Lansberg.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever receive any financial support from Mr. John A. McDermott?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not meet Mr. Lansberg at the suggestion of Mr. John A. McDermott through Mr. John A. McDermott?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say you received no support, no financial support, from Mr. John A. McDermott?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; he has never given any.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever receive any through him?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Any financial support through him?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, not that I know of. No, I did not.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that Mr. Lansberg was a very prominent brewer and was connected with the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. You knew he was a brewer, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not know as I did.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you heard from anybody that he was? Not of your own knowledge; what you have heard?

Mr. ARNOLD. I rather suspected he was. He was concerned as a lawyer. My impression was he was a lawyer.

Maj. HUMES. Then you suspected that he had some brewery connection? Do you know of anyone connected with the Anhauser-Busch Co. in St. Louis?

Mr. ARNOLD. Do I know them?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I have met them; met Mr. Faust. He is connected, but is not now, I believe.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever receive any financial support from that source?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. From anyone connected with the Anhauser-Busch Co.?

Mr. BAILEY. Do not shake your head. Use words. The stenographer can not get the shake of the head.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I never did. I think they contributed toward the Texas Business Men's Association, probably back in 1912 or 1913. I think we met him in St. Louis, and Mr. Faust made a contribution, 10 or 12 years ago, but not since then.

Maj. HUMES. That was the Texas Business Men's Association?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think it was. He was president of the bankers' association, and contributed, and some of the others contributed. The same may be said of all the other brewery associations.

Maj. HUMES. What other brewery contributions have you in mind?

Mr. ARNOLD. Those that you allege as having brewery connections.

Maj. HUMES. I want you to describe them by name.

Mr. ARNOLD. You have just named them. I may say that Mr. Autry gave me private money, not of a brewery association or of a brewery organization.

Maj. HUMES. How do you know?

Mr. ARNOLD. He said it was.

Maj. HUMES. That is what he told you when he gave it to you.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say that the only two contributors that ever contributed to your organization are the only two that you suspect in the brewing business, Mr. Lansberg and Mr. Autry?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never inquired of the men that contributed to me a list of property. I could not answer that. We took it wherever we could get it, and used it as we wanted to use it, not controlled by them, not used for them.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand it, you remember having received contributions from Mr. Autry and Mr. Lansberg, whom you at present suspect are connected with breweries, and if any of the other contributors are connected with breweries, you have no knowledge of it.

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say that they were.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply suggest to the committee the absolute necessity of going into the question of who the contributors are, in order that the committee may determine whether the witness says he is unable to determine, namely, the question to the brewery connection of contributors.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Major could identify them that way, if he take a list of every man that ever contributed, John Smith, Jones, and all the others, and could pick out from that list the ones with brewery connections, he can ask about them now. He would know any more after the list was given than he does now. 1 just a fishing expedition. The truth of the matter is that the Major does not know anything about the activities in this respect, and is just fishing. I sat here for four hours yesterday and up to the present time to-day waiting for him to lay the predicate for his questions. And it now transpires that he has got three names.

Maj. HUMES. We caught three fish in a very short time on that fishing expedition.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; you did not catch anything that we would not have told you and told the committee and told the world.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you a list of the names?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir; I have not. And how much more appropriate it would be under the circumstances, if a list is to be submitted, for this witness to submit confidentially to the committee a list of the contributors in order that it might act intelligently on all of the questions the Senator raises.

Mr. BAILEY. The witness is ready to testify as to anybody or any brewery connections or brewing interests, so far as he knows. The witness is ready to testify to anybody connected with German propaganda so far as he knows. He is ready to furnish any names. He is not able. The witness says that when the contributor offered his money he did not ask him his name; he did not ask him his connections; he took the money and used it for purposes of his organization. He read to the committee in the very beginning of his testimony the authority he had to solicit contributions from everybody interested in the betterment of agriculture. I assume that everybody in this country is interested in the betterment of agriculture, and that would embrace every man—that invitation, that authority to these people to solicit the subscriptions.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Arnold, will you furnish the names of those from whom you received contributions——

Mr. BAILEY. No; he will not.

Senator OVERMAN. You have not heard my question.

Mr. BAILEY. What?

Senator OVERMAN. You have not heard my question.

Mr. BAILEY. Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, please.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you furnish to the committee a list of those who contributed to that, who you knew or had reason to suspect were connected with the Brewers' Association?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, he will furnish that.

Maj. HUMES. The witness has just stated that with the possible exception of Mr. Autry or Mr. Lansberg he knows nothing of the connections of those who contributed.

Senator OVERMAN. He said that he had reason to suspect.

Maj. HUMES. Just one; that is Mr. Lansberg.

Senator OVERMAN. I confined my question in that way. Will you furnish the names of any others that you had reason to suspect, by public knowledge or by other means, were connected with brewing interests?

Mr. ARNOLD. They were the only ones that I would say were concerned.

Senator OVERMAN. Or that you suspected were concerned?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; so far as I know.

Mr. BAILEY. We will relieve the committee of that inquiry by saying that without a minute's hesitation he would have accepted a contribution from any brewer in the United States, that might have come to him.

Senator OVERMAN. That is not the question. That is not what I wanted to know. I want him to give us the names of any person that he had reason to suspect, by public knowledge or otherwise, that he knew.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not. I may add Mr. Faust. Lansberg and Faust—I should say Mr. Faust contributed some 12 years ago.

Senator OVERMAN. Are those the only three that you had reason even to suspect.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; they are all. I would have been glad to take from any of them.

Senator OVERMAN. That is not the question. Did you know, or have reason to suspect, that any other contributors were connected remotely, directly, or immediately, with the brewery interests.

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir; I could not say.

Senator OVERMAN. Were there any saloon keepers or was there anybody connected with the whisky business?

Mr. ARNOLD. Any saloon keepers?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir. If any of them contributed, I do not recall it. We had a $5 list there, and there might have been some got in there once or twice, but I do not remember that they did. You take a man like that, he might contribute because he wanted to promote the work, or something like that.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the extent of Mr. Autry's contribution?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not recall it just now, but during 1914 there was some plate matter in Texas, in the campaign, during the campaign, that he paid for, that he got the money for. Whether it was brewery money or not I do not know.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did he pay directly to you or to the plate manufacturers?

Mr. ARNOLD. He paid the bills. He probably gave me the checks or the cash. The checks might have been made out direct to the plate manufacturers, but anyway, I handled it.

Senator WOLCOTT. That does not throw much light on my inquiry. I asked you how much he contributed.

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not give you the contribution in dollars and cents, because he would simply pay a bill, of which I had no record and kept no record.

Senator WOLCOTT. Can you not approximate the amount of his contributions in 1914—the amounts of his contributions?

Mr. BAILEY. All of his contributions, if he can.

Senator WOLCOTT. In 1914, I said.

Mr. BAILEY. And between that year and any time?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I expect the contributions that were received through him and his influence might approximate between $1,000 and $1,600 a month, during that year.

Senator WOLCOTT. Throughout the year?

Mr. ARNOLD. Throughout the year.

Senator WOLCOTT. That would be from $12,000 to $18,000 during the year?

Mr. ARNOLD. Something like that, I should say. But, then, I do not think that they did contribute with much regularity. Let me see, now, that is 1914. [After a pause.] They made some small contributions during 1915, I should say, to the extent of $4,000 or $5,000.

Senator WOLCOTT. For the year?

Mr. ARNOLD. During the year; I expect so. In 1916—let me get that. I think he contributed about $3,000; and since then, nothing.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what his purpose was in making these large contributions?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, the purpose, as indicated there, was he paid for some plate matter, which he considered, I presume, of interest to his people.

Senator NELSON. To the brewers.

Mr. ARNOLD. Out in Texas.

Senator OVERMAN. The brewers, you mean?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. In 1914—

Mr. ARNOLD. In 1914.

Senator WOLCOTT (continuing). Was the fight on in Texas during that year between what we call the "wet" and the "dry" people?

Mr. ARNOLD. There is always a fight; never any other way.

Senator WOLCOTT. In that year particularly was there an election on, involving that matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, always in an election.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the Senator understand that was the year in which we were nominating our State officers, although there was no prohibition amendment to be voted on; but it was the year during which we nominated our State officers and all our county officers.

Senator WOLCOTT. And I suppose the "wet" people were anxious to elect a "wet" assessor, and the "dry" people were anxious to elect a "dry" assessor.

Mr. ARNOLD. They would not elect a man unless they agreed on that question. It was the dominant issue in the campaign.

Senator OVERMAN. There was a contest there between the whisky men and the dry men in the election for governor, too, was there not?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was in 1914; yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not say the whisky men, because there were a great number of earnest anti-Prohibitionists in Texas that never had a dollar's interest in any whisky establishment in the world, and did not drink a drop. We have wet "drys" and dry "wets" down here, as you have other places.

Senator OVERMAN. That was the intent. While, as Senator Bailey says, the men on either side took no interest in prohibition, the interest was intense between the dry and the wet men on this question of governor?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir. I may add to the Senator's inquiry there, along the line of Mr. Autry, that I saw him, I believe it was some 30 years ago. They are out of business now, both State and nationally. And him I thought that he ought to continue—he had large property interests in Texas and that he ought to continue—the contributions, at least $1,000 a month; that we were trying to get going again; and he rather indicated that he would try; although their brewery, I believe, is now a cheese manufactory, or something of that sort.

Mr. BAILEY. He is a rich man, is he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. He has made a great deal of money, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Percy Andreae of Chicago? Did you ever meet Andreae or Hartley?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You know Mr. Pabst of Milwaukee, do you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have met him.

Maj. HUMES. Did he ever give you any money?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did he not give you $1,000?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Pabst?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir; he never gave me $1,000, not that I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Just think a minute.

Mr. ARNOLD. I tried to get money from everybody I could, for that matter.

Maj. HUMES. Did not Mr. Pabst give you $1,000?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. And have you not so stated?

Mr. ARNOLD. That Mr. Pabst gave me $1,000?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think I have. If I had, I would have included it in the Lansberg, or through Autry. He never gave me any money, I think, as I recall.

Maj. HUMES. You would include it in the Lansberg contribution, if he gave you $1,000?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. If you did not know that Lansberg was in the brewery business, why would you include any contribution from Pabst with Lansberg's?

Mr. ARNOLD. I told you that I knew he was in the brewery business.

Maj. HUMES. You said that you suspected it.

Mr. ARNOLD. I did.

Maj. HUMES. You did not know anything about it, you suspected it, you said.

Mr. ARNOLD. I did; I do not know it yet.

Maj. HUMES. Then why would any contribution of Pabst's be included by you with the Lansberg contribution?

Mr. ARNOLD. Because Lansberg was interested in that side of it.

Maj. HUMES. He was connected with the brewers' association, was he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Lansberg?

Maj. HUMES. Actively, yes?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I took it, when I first met him, he was a lawyer representing them, or at least some concern interested.

Maj. HUMES. He is treasurer?

Mr. ARNOLD. Treasurer? Well, I do not know that. But I do not think Pabst ever paid me any money. That is not the fact, if I ever made that statement, as I now see.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not make that statement to the United States attorney in Dallas, Tex.?

Mr. ARNOLD. That Pabst gave me any money?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall it, if I did.

Senator WOLCOTT. How much did you receive from Lansberg, altogether, approximately?

Mr. ARNOLD. I suppose between $10,000 and $15,000.

Senator WOLCOTT. In what year?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was in 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. Between what sums did you say?

Mr. ARNOLD. Between $10,000 and $15,000. I tried to get them to contribute more than that toward the movement of the publicity of the plate matter and our general work, and they started out, I think, to contribute $15,000.

Senator WOLCOTT. You employed the plural pronoun "they."

Mr. ARNOLD. I am speaking of Lansberg, because, particularly, I take it from the major, I suppose you are asking about brewers, and I am recognizing him as representing that interest.

Senator WOLCOTT. You think that that $10,000 contributed by Lansberg in 1915 was contributed in what form? Did he pay for plates like Mr. Autry, or did he contribute money directly to you?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was contributed toward the work, and the publicity work, largely.

Senator WOLCOTT. I know, but Mr. Autry contributed for that purpose largely, too; but Mr. Autry to a large extent paid the plate bills. Now, I want to know whether Mr. Lansberg's contribution of $10,000 or $15,000 was toward paying for plate manufacturing?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was for that purpose.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did he pay the bills direct, as Mr. Autry did?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, he gave me, as I recall it, either checks or cash.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you paid it?

Mr. ARNOLD. I paid it. I paid it out.

Senator WOLCOTT. But this was to pay for plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is, the Lansberg contribution?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who wrote the material that went into those plates for which these men were paying? Who prepared the material that went into those plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. We have the plates there [indicating]. The Senator just called attention to the plates.

Senator WOLCOTT. There are not many of them here, and some of those here are duplicates. I gathered that from my examination of them. But that does not throw any light on my question. Who prepared the material?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am just saying that Mr. Taft made two speeches, and we copied it—an anti-prohibition speech.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who determined that Mr. Taft's article should be selected? Who gathered together the material that these men's contributions were to pay for?

Mr. ARNOLD. I prepared the prohibition and the antiprohibition matters. I prepared those without consulting any of the parties in interest; Senator Sheppard's and Mr. Taft's; and I think Senator Underwood was one of them, probably.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did this man Lansberg, or Autry, or anyone else, pay their pay, at various times O. K. stuff that was to go into the paper?

Mr. ARNOLD. They did not.

Senator OVERMAN. Were you trying to collect these amounts from men for and against the principle of prohibition?

Mr. ARNOLD. The plan as outlined is just as laid out. It did not work. They did not like it.

Senator OVERMAN. Who did not like it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Lansberg. The publicity was to move, and I wanted to move that publicity, in all States west of the Mississippi. That is what I tried to do, and I wanted them to contribute to it. It did go in a few States. They did not think much of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was their objection to it?

Mr. ARNOLD. It did not concur with their ideas of publicity. I wanted to show that the brewing interests used so much corn and so much barley, and something like that, and paid so much taxes. This is the kind of publicity they were getting out in all their literature. This was simply a discussion, a dignified discussion, by Mr. Taft, Mr. Underwood, or some one of that character, and apparently they did not think that was a line to put out. I gathered that. I criticized it considerably.

Senator WOLCOTT. They did not think that was much of a contribution to the kind of publicity that the brewers were interested in.

Mr. ARNOLD. They did not regard it that way; no, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. I gather, then, that their contribution of money was for the purpose of obtaining brewery publicity?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, that might have been an influence that acted on them in that, to try out the service, to see what they would get.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were they not, as a matter of fact, contributing this money for the purpose of getting publicity which, in their opinion, would aid them in the publicity campaign which they, as brewers, were interested in?

Mr. ARNOLD. That might have been an influence, but not the only one.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Autry ceased large contributions after 1914. If he was interested in the general object of this organization, and was contributing money for it, and that was his controlling motive, and he is a rich man, and he can well afford to contribute, as you say, why did he not continue large contributions?

Mr. ARNOLD. You will find those irregularities coming in all contributions, from all men.

Senator WOLCOTT. This is no question of irregularity. It is a question of a man's attitude and interest in propaganda. Did you not have an understanding with them? Let us be frank about the matter.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you not have an understanding with them that they were contributing money, and did you not understand that they were contributing the money to get the brewers' argument before the public?

Mr. ARNOLD. I presented to them the suggestion, there, that a frank expression of all sides of that subject would be much to their interests, by able men, capable of handling the subject, and that they agreed to. That was one of the motives.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then, in so far as their contributions went, your organization was submitting itself to the purpose that it would operate in the way that you determined wise, to an extent at least, in behalf of the brewery interests?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not exclusively so.

Senator WOLCOTT. In connection with the publicity?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; not exclusively so.

Senator WOLCOTT. I said "to an extent, at least."

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, it might be in their minds; yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. In your mind too?

Mr. ARNOLD. It might be in their minds. I think it is in the interest of prohibition and of antiprohibition to contribute toward that sort of a service, and I tried to get all sides to contribute, and I would present the arguments to the Prohibitionists that I would present to the other people, to move both plates, that what you want is a capable discussion by able men, and let the people decide.

Maj. HUMES. How can the same material be of benefit to both sides of any question?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am not saying both sides. As I understand it, Senator Sheppard is an authority on prohibition, and I used him as such, and those plates moved as they are. I took it also that Mr. Taft is an authority on antiprohibition, and I would use the same argument in talking to an "anti" for money that I would in talking to a "pro."

Senator OVERMAN. Did any of the "pros" contribute?

Mr. ARNOLD. Men that probably were prohibitionists contributed, but not any prohibition organizations contributed.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no special interest represented by prohibition, because there is no property interest connected with that question.

Mr. ARNOLD. The same applies to woman's suffrage. I solicited from the "antis" and from the woman's suffrage organizations, and in fact was going down the line with those economic issues, trying to assemble both sides into the service, to move the service and keep it going, and I solicited most all sides of all economic subjects.

Senator OVERMAN. You had this matter, on every question you were interested in, put into plate matter, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Any subject the public was interested in.

Senator OVERMAN. They would be interested in the matters you were interested in?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Therefore this brewery matter was put in there by the brewers for their own special interests, through you?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I would not say it that way, any more than the matter on prohibition was put in there by the Prohibitionists through me. I could hardly say either matter was correct. I undertook to get the Republican and Democratic national campaign committees to have in mind to take plates side by side.

Senator OVERMAN. If the Democrats had contributed any money, that would have been in the interest of the Democratic Party?

Mr. ARNOLD. In that particular case it would probably have been in the interest of the Democratic Party.

Senator OVERMAN. And the brewers—in this case—what these contributed was to get their interests before the public?

Mr. ARNOLD. They had that in mind, no doubt.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that your argument to them?

Mr. ARNOLD. My argument was that the public should have both sides of this subject.

Maj. HUMES. And, for a consideration, you would present to the public their side of it?

Mr. ARNOLD. No consideration to it. They would pay an amount equal to the plates.

Maj. HUMES. In return for their contribution, you would present their side of it to the public?

Mr. ARNOLD. No consideration about it. They would pay an amount equal to moving the plates. That is about the way it was run.

Senator WOLCOTT. All the money they paid did not go for the payment for plates, did it?

Mr. ARNOLD. All the money that the brewers paid?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No. I intended to pay that. They said they did not care for it to move.

Senator WOLCOTT. I have been wondering all the time where the folks who were running the organization got any compensation. The only thing we have had mentioned here, so far as I can recall, is that people contributed money to pay for plates. Now, they contributed money for something in addition to that, to wit, payment of you people who were conducting the thing. Can you tell me how much of this $12,000 to $15,000 contributed by Mr. Autry in 1914 went for plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect most of it. I should say 75 per cent of the plates and pamphlets; yes, more than that.

Maj. HUMES. You did send out pamphlets in addition to the matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. The plate matter was put in pamphlet form.

Maj. HUMES. And this particular matter was put in pamphlet form?

Mr. ARNOLD. What particular matter?

Maj. HUMES. This plate matter in behalf of the brewers.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; there was no prohibition discussion there at that time.

Maj. HUMES. What was this plate matter that you say was sent out at the expense of practically the total amount of their contribution? Of what did it consist?

Mr. ARNOLD. What was the subject matter?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. This discussion there was, I think, on the preacher being in politics.

Maj. HUMES. The preachers in politics?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That was the kind of propaganda that you plated for them at that time?

Mr. BAILEY. You printed Jerry Black's letter on that, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Radford gave those things out to the daily papers—his views on political preachers at that time. He gave out statements to the daily papers during the campaign, and Mr. Autry thought that it might be of interest to the anti-prohibition side of it if he would plate it and send it out to the daily papers.

Maj. HUMES. Then, Peter Radford was opposing the methods of the prohibitionists; at least, he was opposing their methods and the activity of the preachers in behalf of prohibition?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; he was opposing only the influence of the preachers in politics. He opposed it after the election, before the election, and still opposes it.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; and that was used to further the cause of the brewers who were contributing this fifteen thousand or more dollars.

Mr. ARNOLD. I would consider their interest the least. From the preachers in politics I think society suffers perhaps as much as anybody else.

Maj. HUMES. Was not an attack on woman's suffrage one of the things that developed as a result of this brewers' contribution?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not recall any attack.

Maj. HUMES. I find in these few sheets that you have produced several attacks on woman's suffrage. Was not that one of the objects that the brewers were interested in?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think so. I think the brewers are pretty much divided on that subject, as I gather from the press reports.

Maj. HUMES. Where were they out for suffrage?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I gather that they were pretty well divided on it. The women would sometimes make the town wet, as they did in California, I know.

Maj. HUMES. I thought that you were familiar with the propaganda that the brewers' association were supporting, and I was interested to know where they had supported woman's suffrage.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know.

Senator NELSON. Were the preachers of the State as a class opposed to the liquor interests, and in favor of prohibition?

Mr. ARNOLD. They were in favor of prohibition; yes.

Senator NELSON. All of the preachers themselves?

Mr. ARNOLD. Most all of them. All in politics were.

Senator NELSON. Did you not think that your man—what is his name?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Peter Radford.

Senator NELSON (continuing). Do you not think, then, that the effect of his warning the people of the State against that kind of thing was used in the interest of the liquor interests?

Mr. ARNOLD. They might have been the beneficiaries.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me to say, the first constitution of Texas provided that no minister of the Gospel should be eligible to election to the legislature; that they must serve the Lord, not the State.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Radford quoted that.

Senator NELSON. That related to holding office.

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, in politics.

Senator NELSON. If all of the preachers, or nearly all of them, your State were in favor of prohibition, and were advocating that in their sermons and on the platform, and your man there, who at the time seems to have been the leading spirit of your organization—

Mr. ARNOLD. He was.

Senator NELSON (continuing). Was not the plate against the preachers a pretty strong argument in favor of the wet interests, as opposed to prohibition?

Mr. ARNOLD. Those things would be on the anti side.

Senator NELSON. Was not that an insidious way of attacking prohibition interests?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, no; I should say that he did it before the election, and did it afterwards, and always stood for that.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was a form of antiprohibition argument that made its appearance elsewhere. I know it did in Delaware. We had a "wet" and "dry" campaign in Delaware, and one of the favorite methods used was to fire into the preachers.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say that the best paper Jerry Black ever contributed to public discussion was a denunciation of political preachers in Pennsylvania, long before this question ever arose. That paper is printed in the same volume with Jerry Black's famous defense of the Christian religion against Robert G. Ingersoll's attack.

Senator OVERMAN. One of the methods of the brewers has been this propaganda. We have in evidence these books and pamphlets, two or three of them, and that is one of their ways, attacking ministers of the Gospel. It is the most scandalous stuff I ever read. Have you it there?

Maj. HUMES. I do not think it is here now. It is packed away.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course to scandalize the ministry is indefensible, but to insist that the minister keep out of politics is a good democratic doctrine. There never was a good government in the world controlled by the clergy, and there never will be.

Senator OVERMAN. I agree with that.

Mr. BAILEY. Clerical government is an oppressive one in every country in the world.

Senator OVERMAN. I am not attacking the ministry.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, did you not also send out a great deal of plate matter pointing out the large income to the Government from the liquor business, and the increased burden that would be imposed upon the farmers as a result of prohibition?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall that?

Senator OVERMAN. It was one of the arguments made up here in Congress.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did your organization ever in any manner come close to the public the brewer's contributions?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. At the time the publicity was going out, contemporaneous with the publication of it?

Mr. ARNOLD. With the publication of it?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I suppose it was. There was no occasion at that time. I suppose it was known, however.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why do you suppose it was known?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was known; put out that way. There was no effort made to conceal it. But no public statement was made simultaneously with the appearance of the article.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did the public know in 1914 that Mr. Autry had contributed this sum of money or anything like it, at the time these plates that he was paying for were going out to the public?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not at the time. Not as he sent them out, no.

Senator WOLCOTT. You make the assertion that the public knew that brewery money was paying for that plate matter.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know of any public statement that was made. We made no effort to conceal it and none to advertise it. If the question was asked we answered it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was it asked?

Mr. ARNOLD. Sometimes; yes. These appeared first in the papers by Peter Radford. They were not copyrighted. They were later plated and sent out, as I have indicated.

Senator WOLCOTT. We are getting branched off to another shoot of this thing. Did Mr. Radford originally write the articles and publish them in the daily papers?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; the articles were prepared in the office by him.

Senator WOLCOTT. After the Autry money had been received?

Mr. ARNOLD. After? He had nothing whatever to do with it and knew nothing about it. His connection with it began and ended when he gave the articles to the daily press. Now, they were not copyrighted, and they were printed later on and paid for as I have indicated.

Senator WOLCOTT. Well, now, you stated the question was asked as to who contributed the money, or whether money was contributed at the time Mr. Radford published his articles originally in the daily press. Did I understand you correctly on that or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, you say "contribution." There is no contribution, if a man wants to pay. The plates were not copyrighted.

Senator WOLCOTT. There were no plates, then. I understand you, Mr. Radford wrote articles to the daily press, and at that time there was no plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was the question asked in connection with Mr. Radford's articles, by people in Texas, whether or not brewery money was paying for those articles?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; the question came up in the payment of plates. The plates cost money. Somebody paid for them.

Senator WOLCOTT. And then the question was asked as to who was paying for those plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you say that question was answered by you people by informing the public that Mr. Autry had paid for the plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was answered by me in the affirmative whenever it was asked.

Maj. HUMES. Was it ever asked?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Can you cite to us a specific instance, disclosing the circumstances, when such question was asked and you answered it and disclosed that Autry was paying for the plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, it was very frequently asked; I could not give any particular instance of any man that asked it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did any newspaper ask it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not recall any newspaper making inquiries about it. I do not recall any now. It was not considered anyway an antiprohibition argument. It was an argument of preachers begun six or eight months before in Texas.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, at the time these articles were written by Mr. Radford he was on the pay roll of your organization at a rate of at least $125 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; he was on our pay roll.

Maj. HUMES. He was drawing pay while he was making these speeches which were afterwards put in plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was on our pay roll; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, I call your attention to this article from your plate entitled "The Patriotic Dollar—War Revenue Tax of $105,000,000 Levied—Beer Bears Brunt of Burden." After giving the figures the article proceeds as follows:

Congress has decreed that the brewer, the banker, and the investor should shoulder the musket and march to the front; that milady that would add beauty must first tip Uncle Sam and a dollar that seeks pleasure must salute the flag; that Pleasure and Profit—the twin evils of many wars—fight the Nation's battles and by an ingeniously arranged schedule of tax. Congress has shifted the war budget from the shoulders of Necessity to those of Choice and Gain, touching in its various ramifications almost every line of business.

All hail the dollar that bleeds for its country; that bares its breast to the fortunes of war and risks its life to preserve the stability and integrity of the Nation's credit.

And further down:

All honor to the dollar that answers the call to arms and, when the battle is over, bandages the wounds of stricken soldiers, lays the wreaths upon the graves of fallen heroes and cares for the widows and orphans.

All honor to the industries that bend their backs under the burden of a tax to lift the weight from the shoulders of the poor and build a bulwark around the Nation's credit.

All honor to those who contribute to the necessities and administer the comfort of the boys who are marching; cool the fevers of the afflicted soldiers and kneel with the cross beside dying heroes.

A dollar may fight its competitor in business, industries may struggle for supremacy in trade and occupations may view each other with envy or suspicion, but when the bugle calls they bury strife and rally around the flag. Companions and friends, mess mates and chums all fighting for one flag, one cause and one country.

Now, is not that one of the articles in which the brewers were interested?

Mr. BAILEY. I would pay to circulate that myself.

Mr. ARNOLD. Do you object to that?

Maj. HUMES. I do not object to the sentiment. That is not the question. It is a question as to whether that was put out as propaganda.

Mr. ARNOLD. It was not.

Maj. HUMES. Is not that the same material that the United States Brewers' Association and their allied interests were using for propaganda purposes at that time?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know anything about that. They had nothing to do with the article.

Senator NELSON. Who got up that article?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect that we prepared it in the office. I either wrote it, or the young lady who is here.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Radford was also opposing woman's suffrage?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was opposed to woman's suffrage; yes.

Maj. HUMES. And you carried a good many articles on that in this plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; we carried very few and did not carry them very far.

Maj. HUMES. Did you carry them until Mr. Lansberg withdrew his contributions?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not. His contributions had nothing to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the information elicited by Senator Wolcott shows this fund to be such a mixed fund for propaganda of various kind that it is absolutely impossible to segregate it all, and that the committee, in order to make an investigation, ought to properly inquire as to all of the contributions which made up the mixed fund.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you got the plate matter here that was sent out in 1914?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I have not.

Senator WOLCOTT. This plate matter that Maj. Humes has been reading from was sent out in what year?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was in 1914.

Mr. BAILEY. This last was after we had declared war.

Maj. HUMES. That would have been after the revenue bill was passed.

Mr. ARNOLD. Probably so. That would have been sometime in 1917.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then we have not before us complete copies of all of the plate matter that Mr. Autry paid for?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that we are unable to judge whether or not that plate matter was really beer propaganda. That may have been published at the time when you were getting only $3,000 to $5,000 a year from these brewery interests.

Mr. ARNOLD. It had no relation to that. I can not recall it, but it had no relation or connection with it. It was published at the time when the revenue bill passed as an item of news, and was published as an item of news only, and would not have gone out had it not been an item of news.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you in your files prints from the plates published, we will say, in 1914?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I have not. I think I have given you everything I have. We probably turned them over to your people there, as we indicated. When they asked for these things, we gave them to them. We gave up our last record, sometimes. We have a bound record of those things, and they were turned in to the court, to whoever asked for them, and then we were through. I think some of them are in there; I am sure. I think you have the information right before you here. This paper is not a complete list of all I gave you.

Senator WOLCOTT. I thought everything was there except duplicates. That was my purpose.

Mr. ARNOLD. I know I saw some of those you were talking about. I know I saw it in here somewhere. [After further search.] Here it is. There is the article you are talking about.

Senator WOLCOTT. I was not talking about any particular article.

Mr. ARNOLD. I mean the line of articles. That was reproduced and sent out in some instances nationally.

Senator WOLCOTT. This is 1914.

Mr. ARNOLD. You have it.

Senator WOLCOTT. But there were, of course, many plates in addition to this one in that year.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. I am trying to find you some others. This, however, you may say, is the one which you are discussing.

Senator WOLCOTT. No, I was simply asking if we had before us the prints from the plates in 1914, the year when Mr. Autry made his rather substantial contribution, because I would like to see them and try to form some opinion of my own as to whether they might be called brewery propaganda.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. I wish we had them here. We do not seem to have them. But that is the one that would nearly classify them. The others apply to local political matters.

Senator WOLCOTT. My purpose was to see whether, in my opinion, Mr. Autry got any substantial benefit along the line of his desire from the expenditure of his money.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is as nearly anti-prohibition—if that is what you would call it—as anything that ever went out written by him.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Arnold, you and Mr. Radford originally started your organization in the interest of the farmers, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was in the farming interests, yes; always so.

Senator NELSON. For the farmer organizations?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Then, as you moved along, you took in other interests. You took in the liquor question, pro and con, you took in woman suffrage, and you also took in the Adamson law, and other questions, did you not, in your operations?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And you collected funds from these various interests, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Or received funds?

Mr. ARNOLD. At the beginning we undertook to send the plates out as a general contribution to our publicity matters. We were not able to finance ourselves, quite, that way, and then we undertook to discuss these economic questions, and then entered into the industrial side of it. I have a page here, "Special Brick and Tile Edition."

Senator NELSON. How much were the yearly expenses of your organization, aside from what you paid for plate matter and printing, as near as you can get at it, on an average?

Mr. ARNOLD. It ran between $2,000 and $3,000 a month.

Senator NELSON. During all the time? For how long a time? Up to what time?

Mr. ARNOLD. All the time it ran, up to the last year, probably.

Senator NELSON. How much of that was salaries?

Mr. ARNOLD. It would probably run a couple of thousand dollars a month.

Senator NELSON. In salaries?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say it would be a couple of thousand dollars a month in salaries.

Senator NELSON. Radford got $125 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. What did you get?

Mr. ARNOLD. Five hundred dollars.

Senator NELSON. Five hundred dollars a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. What did this lady who is present get?

Mr. ARNOLD. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

Senator NELSON. What other high-paid officials did you have?

Mr. ARNOLD. None.

Senator NELSON. So that all this time you have been getting $500 a month out of this, have you?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. That only foots up to about $1,000.

Mr. ARNOLD. I was just answering his question.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your salary roll was $2,000 a month, you say?

Mr. ARNOLD. Sometimes more than that. When our plates were running, and we were getting the papers into the office, it would take clerks to check them up and send them out. When the plate was not running, which was not all the time or half the time, then that service would be taken off.

Senator NELSON. How many years have you been receiving $500 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Almost since we began, up to the last three years. That was 1908 when we started, I believe.

Senator NELSON. What time did you close?

Mr. ARNOLD. We are still going.

Senator NELSON. Still going on?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And you are still drawing $500 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. I am saying that for the last year or year and a half we probably could not pay that.

Senator NELSON. How near have you come to it?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not come anywhere near it.

Senator NELSON. Have you gotten half of it?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, not during the last year. We have not been doing anything.

Senator NELSON. Prior to that you got your $500 a month?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. What years has Mr. Swenson made his contributions for buying and paying for the plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say in 1915; the latter part of 1914 and 1915, when we started the national plates. The Texas plates were never paid for by him, except as included in the national plates.

Senator WOLCOTT. And he has been making his contribution annually since then?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, very nearly so. He has been making some contributions every year, I am sure.

Senator WOLCOTT. In 1916 did he make his contribution of $2,000 a month, as I think you said?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; something like that. I could not answer the questions just definitely, because the contributions were irregular. I should say that it would come something near that; $1,000 or $2,000.

Senator WOLCOTT. And that was for paying for the plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; we had two funds there. One was for paying for the plates, and the other was for money that we might use in office and organization work.

Senator WOLCOTT. My memory may be wrong, but my recollection was you said he paid plate bills to the extent of about $2,000 a month. That was aside from his contributions direct to the office. He paid plate bills to the extent of about $2,500 a month. That is my recollection of your testimony. I may be in error. If so, correct me.

Mr. ARNOLD. He paid for about six months. Our plate bills were $10,000 a month. Since that time they were so irregular and reduced in such a way, that it would be difficult to estimate them. I did not get very far. It probably would not amount to $1,000 a month.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am speaking of the year 1916.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; he did not. We did not send out many plates in 1916.

Senator OVERMAN. What connection had Mr. Swenson with your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nothing except a friendly one. He has large investments in Texas, and is concerned in that way. We got acquainted and connected and concerned with him.

Mr. BAILEY. He had no interest in any brewery there.

Senator OVERMAN. I know; but was any money contributed by Mr. Swenson for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. By him?

Senator OVERMAN. No; to him, for your organization.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. He received money there from anybody who could get it from.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he active in collecting money for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. He helped us considerably; yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not know how much, if anything, was contributed by breweries to him for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am sure he had no brewery connection. I am sure none.

Senator OVERMAN. Breweries did not contribute to him for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am sure they made no contributions to him.

Senator OVERMAN. Did they contribute to this "plate" money of this money he has been paying there?

Mr. ARNOLD. They never contributed anything to him.

Senator OVERMAN. How do you know?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am sure they did not. I make that statement; I am sure they did not.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know who contributed to him?

Mr. ARNOLD. To him for the plates?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I might know some of them, but I understand that is not of interest.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand. I am not asking you for the names of contributors.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, I know some of them who contributed, because I would go to see them and talk to them.

Senator OVERMAN. He got contributions from organizations and individuals, did he?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, from corporations, I would say, and individuals. I do not think from any organization, in the sense we use the word, at least.

Senator OVERMAN. It was corporations and individuals?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Of your own knowledge you do not know whether the breweries contributed anything or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am sufficiently familiar with it to answer in the negative. I feel that way about it, but, as a matter of absolute fact, I probably would not know.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how much money, all told, he collected by contributions and otherwise for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I could not say that.

Senator OVERMAN. He never told you?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I do not know that he did.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you approximate how much money Mr. Swenson paid?

Mr. ARNOLD. He paid the six months I have indicated there. The plates ran us $10,000 a month. He did not pay that much. I would say about $50,000, and after that time it would run probably a thousand or two thousand dollars a month we would be able to get for plates, and for office use; sometimes more than that.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he contribute to your office expenses and overhead charges?

Mr. ARNOLD. Sometimes he did; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Out of his own money, or money he had collected from others?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was always a contributor himself, and had friends who could ask for money and get it.

Senator OVERMAN. So that the sum total of the amount he furnished was $50,000 for plates, and $2,000 a month for your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. It would not exceed that; and probably would not come to that in every case. I do not think it would exceed that.

Senator OVERMAN. He was not treasurer of your organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Oh, no. He just agreed to handle the fund there.

Senator OVERMAN. This money you deposited in this Fort Worth bank was a separate fund?

Mr. ARNOLD. He did not deposit any money there.

Senator OVERMAN. That was your own deposit?

Mr. ARNOLD. My own deposit, yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you remember how much money you deposited there?

Mr. ARNOLD. How much money I deposited?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I suppose you mean for the organization?

Senator OVERMAN. I do not mean your personal money, of course, but money for the organization.

Mr. ARNOLD. I suppose our expenses ran $2,000 or $3,000 a month, not to exceed that.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that the money you received of Swenson which you deposited in that bank?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, it would be deposited in the Fort Worth bank if he sent it to me; or if anybody else sent it to me, it would be deposited there. That was to run the organization and of it. Mr. Radford used some of it in his work. Mr. Radford used some money in organization work among the farmers, separate and apart from the office fund. Our office expenses would run, in salaries and expenses and office expenses, and telegrams, and literature we would get out—

Senator OVERMAN. How did Mr. Radford get out among the farmers—in what way?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was interested in the organization. I have his receipts for money which he has paid since 1914, I believe it went into the treasury of the National Farmers' Union, for use in organization and such work as they might want. You can read the rest of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Just tell me the amount.

Mr. ARNOLD. The amount is $6,500 for that year.

Senator OVERMAN. That is money who contributed?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is money he gave me, which he contributed to the organization for the Farmers' Union.

(Thereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of the recess.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. A. ARNOLD—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. You may go ahead, Maj. Humes.

This subcommittee has decided that, as to contributions made by corporations or representatives of corporations, the witness shall answer. He shall answer questions that may be asked by Maj. Humes as to money received from corporations or representatives of corporations. Those questions he will answer.

Mr. BAILEY. We have no objection to that.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Arnold, did you receive, at any time during your activities, commencing say in 1914, any contributions from corporations or from any representative of a corporation?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not. Mr. Swenson probably handled some of that, in the plate matter that went through the plate houses.

Maj. HUMES. How do you know that none of this money came from corporation—any of this money that you received?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was not solicited from corporations. They were told that we did not want corporation money.

Maj. HUMES. Did you receive any money from the presidents of any railroads?

Mr. ARNOLD. Did I,

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No. That money would go through Mr. Swenson, whatever was received from the railroads. That would go through his hands.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, yourself, receive any contributions or arrange for the making of any contributions through Mr. Swenson—

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. From the presidents of any railroads?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who were they?

Mr. BAILEY. Now, if the chairman please, obviously a contribution by a railroad is neither a pro-German nor a pro-brewery contribution.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, if it is not, Senator, it does not hurt anybody.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, these presidents of these railroad corporations I do not think live in Texas, and probably I owe them to—to borrow Hamlet's expression—"subscription," but am I mistaken in thinking that if any man's name is brought into this inquiry as contributing to an organization that is charged with subserviency to the breweries it carries with it an intimation that he may have some connection with German propaganda?

Senator OVERMAN. If it does not, it is not competent, and we have no business going into it. And yet I do not know. If the witness answers yes, then—

Mr. BAILEY. Well, suppose he answers yes. Now, that is all that you want to know, is it not?

Let me say this. Much of this testimony is about contributions made in 1914, before there was any war with Germany. It should not relate to that?

Senator OVERMAN. No.

Mr. BAILEY. A contribution by a president of a railroad might have been inspired by the hope in the breast of the railroad president that the publicity bureau would counsel and advise a milder course toward the railroads, but that is not what you are inquiring about.

Senator OVERMAN. No, that has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BAILEY. And the contributions by the presidents of the railroads have nothing to do with this. I do not think that any American citizen ought to have his name brought in, when you remember the nature of this inquiry, unless—

Senator OVERMAN. We have ruled with you on that, Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. As to the corporations, all right; I do not object to that.

Senator OVERMAN. Of course a man who does a thing himself through somebody else, nevertheless does it.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to suggest to you, Mr. Arnold, that the committee can take care of the balance of the United States, and you and I will take care of Texas. You need not give the name of any citizen of Texas, but if they want the names of citizens of the other states, I do not care; I will leave that with you gentlemen of the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer the question. What was the question?

(The reporter read as follows:)

Maj. HUMES. Did you, yourself, receive any contributions or arrange for making of any contributions through Mr. Swenson—

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. From the presidents of any railroads?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who were they?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was received from the railroads. I do not know that I could say that the president signed it. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Oh! You received it from the railroads, did you?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; it was a corporation—

Maj. HUMES. Just a minute ago you said you did not receive money from any corporation.

Mr. ARNOLD. I know, but I am talking about Mr. Swenson. That is what I have in mind. I have not. He received some money from railroads to pay for those plates—I mentioned that this morning—from corporations to pay for those plates.

Maj. HUMES. He received that at your solicitation, you said?

Mr. ARNOLD. He was authorized to do it; yes.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not do it. You asked if I did.

Maj. HUMES. Then I will enlarge my question. Were there railroads, or the presidents of railroads, from whom contributions were received either by you directly or through Mr. Swenson.

Mr. ARNOLD. There were. Let me see. There were about 10 railroads that contributed, to the fund I was speaking of this morning, some $40,000 or $50,000, and among them were the Santa Fe, the Southern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the M. K. & T. I do not know that I could relate—

Senator WOLCOTT. What was that last one that you mentioned?

Mr. ARNOLD. The M. K. & T.—the Missouri, Kansas and Texas.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what they call the "Katy"?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; that is what they call the "Katy." The railroads of the Southwest generally; I think the Illinois Central and a few other roads; I believe, the Norfolk & Western. I am only repeating this from the printed statement which was made, of all the contributions, by Mr. Swenson when he received them. I distributed 200 copies or more of them, and I think one was turned over to the people.

Maj. HUMES. When and where?

Mr. ARNOLD. Through the grand jury. I have none now. I am repeating from memory, the best I can. I may have put in a railroad that did not contribute, and I may have left out some that did, but that list, the report which Mr. Swenson made there of receipts, was printed, and I used it in soliciting money as indicating that they were interested in the business.

Maj. HUMES. Then the list that was printed was a list of those that you had solicited, rather than a list of those that subscribed?

Mr. ARNOLD. Everybody was solicited. We did not miss anybody in solicitation, in any way.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand that you made a general solicitation of individuals and corporations and everybody else?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right, yes. We solicited them personally, and wrote them, and sent a copy of that pamphlet that we had here yesterday. There is no doubt about that; and it was done on that basis.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not state to the United States Attorney in Dallas, Tex., that you could not remember the names of any companies or any corporations that had contributed to this fund—any of the railroads, I mean?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I do not know that I did.

Maj. HUMES. And after having your recollection refreshed, did you not state that the only two that you could think of at that time were the Santa Fe and the Illinois Central?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I do not think so. I do not know what particular point he was inquiring into at that time.

Maj. HUMES. How many railroads do you suppose there were that contributed, in all?

Mr. ARNOLD. They contributed from one thousand to five thousand dollars, the total fund, perhaps, equaling $40,000 at least, I should say. About $40,000 went into the fund and was turned over by Mr. Swenson to the plate house.

Maj. HUMES. When were those contributions made?

Mr. BAILEY. Now, if the Chairman please, I do not know, you gentlemen may have all the time in the world, and I have no doubt that you are ready to devote as much of it as may be necessary to these matters; but my time is limited, and I happen to know that the witnesses have not all the time in the world, and I am going to ask that this inquiry about the railroads be terminated, and that we proceed to the real subject of inquiry here.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to restrict this matter as much as possible. Maj. Humes, as you know. I do not know where it is going to lead, but I do not want it to lead away from the main subjects of investigation.

Mr. BAILEY. Obviously, Mr. Chairman, the question as to the railroads' contributions can have no relevancy to the brewery propaganda or to pro-German propaganda.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know, of course, but we have ruled—

Mr. BAILEY. If the railroads are connected with the breweries, all right; or if they can show that the breweries were connected with these contributions, all right. But surely we are not to be kept here hour after hour inquiring about what the railroads did and what the railroad presidents did. We are ready to concede that the railroad presidents contributed. There is no concealment about it. Now, why the inquiry?

If Maj. Humes will say that this is intended to lay the predicate for showing that these people were connected either with the breweries or with German propaganda, I withdraw the objection.

Maj. HUMES. We have already elicited enough to establish a partnership in this fund that went to Mr. Arnold, either directly or indirectly. Of the partners that have been discovered there were at least three breweries.

Mr. BAILEY. And one from Pittsburgh, I think, by the name of Gordon, or something of that kind?

Maj. HUMES. Well, that is one that has not been mentioned. We have not gotten to that one.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought you had asked about that. I was taken about that, then.

Maj. HUMES. No. We have only got three up to date. There have been others interested in that fund. The purpose of this investigation is to discover, among other things, the political activities of the brewers and the expenditure of brewery money in politics; if it should develop in this examination that this joint fund, made up by these breweries and by the railroads and by others that I propose to ask about later, was used in order to dominate and influence the 1916 election in this country, it certainly is competent for the purpose of this investigation; and I propose to undertake to follow up by proof to show that, in so far as this fund was contributed in, at least it was used in order to control or influence the election of President of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. If there is any contest about the election of the President of the United States, the Senate can conduct the inquiry.

Maj. HUMES. And if this fund is a partnership fund of the railroads and the breweries, and possibly others, certainly this investigation can not be made without going into all of the ramifications of the activities of the people who were expending this partnership fund; and it seems to me that it is clearly within the purview of this investigation, and I think that to make a thorough investigation of the matters under consideration by the committee it is necessary to go into the transactions of this man and the organizations with which he was connected in expending this partnership fund of certain special interests.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a new element presented in this investigation, that we are trying to see what happened in the presidential election of 1916. Undoubtedly if there is a contest in regard to the presidential election pending before the Congress and the Senate has any function to perform, it can conduct an inquiry to determine how that result was accomplished, and in view of the fact that the Vice President was elected at the same time. Undoubtedly they would have the right to inquire into the method by which he was elected; but there is no question of that kind pending here or elsewhere. The election is over. The ballots were counted. The result was announced, and the men chosen, or some of them at least, are in the successful performance of the functions to which they were assigned by that election. That is a closed chapter. It is where the Senate would get the power to call people here from all quarters of the United States to thresh over straw that is threshed more than I understand.

I think, when the Senate was proposing this prohibition amendment, maybe it might have inquired into the activities of these people but that has been submitted. The function of the Senate has been performed. I am advised by some very intelligent and active newspaper men that the thirty-sixth State has this day ratified. So that is out. And just to come here and talk about a partnership between a fund existed to which people contributed, one man not knowing:

another man contributed to it, possibly—you can not constitute a partnership in that way.

All I care about it is to have an end to this endless thing.

We say the railroads contributed. We say their money was used in this publicity work. Why, then, proceed to inquire about who gave and what they gave? It is not one of the subjects into which you are charged to inquire, Mr. Chairman.

There is no pretext that the railroads were helping conduct a brewery propaganda. There is no pretext that the railroads were helping to conduct a pro-German propaganda. It is admitted—asserted, even—that the railroads did contribute to them. Then why prove it, just to encumber the record, to take up the time of the committee?

Senator OVERMAN (reading):

When the traffic, doomed though it is, undertakes and seeks by these secret methods to control party nominations, party machinery, whole political parties, and thereby control the government of State and Nation, it is time the people know the truth.

The organized liquor traffic of the country is a vicious interest because it has been unpatriotic, because it has been pro-German in its sympathies and its conduct. Around these great brewery organizations owned by rich men, almost all of them of German birth and sympathy, at least before we entered the war, have grown up the societies, all the organizations of this country intended to keep young German immigrants from becoming real American citizens.

We know that the breweries have been trying to control politics. But whether this fund has been used to control German citizens I do not know.

Mr. BAILEY. If the chairman please, of course I would be the last man to deny the Federal Government the power through its appropriate agencies to protect itself. I have always believed that neither the House nor the Senate possessed a general inquisitorial power; and the Supreme Court has held that.

Senator OVERMAN. Has held what?

Mr. BAILEY. That you do not possess any general inquisitorial powers; that you have only the right to investigate those subjects especially committed to you. For instance, I have no doubt you would have the right to summon anybody from any part of the Republic, if you had a contested election case pending; or if there was an impeachment proceeding pending in the Senate, you would have a right to examine men on oath and bring them there and compel them to testify. If there was any question about the conduct of Senators which might result in an expulsion, I have no doubt that you would have a right to inquire into that, or anything that affected the proceedings of the Senate. But where does the Senate of the United States obtain the right to inquire about the elections in the States. You are the last man in the Republic to admit that—unless it would be me. And where did they get the right to inquire into the nominations?

So far as it has been suggested here, there never was one dollar of this fund used in any Congressional election in Texas. Undoubtedly this particular organization has been involved somewhat in the local politics, in the election of the governor and other subordinate State officials; but there is not a suggestion that it was ever involved in a single Congressional contest, and I am sure it was not. But what power has the Senate to inquire into that?

We are willing to give you any information we have relating to brewery propaganda, or a pro-German propaganda, and that is what you ought to have, sir, I submit. And if you have confined the inquiry to that, we could have been through before this; because there is no doubt about what has been done there. There is no attempt to conceal it. There has been a readiness here to tell you all they know about that. But let us have an end of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. If we adopt the theory of Maj. Humes's suggestion, namely that inasmuch as the breweries contributed to a fund it is pertinent to show who else contributed to it, it is not logical to stop and say that we must inquire only as to corporations.

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. If that theory is sound, we ought also to inquire into individual contributions.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. That follows, of course.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your idea, Senator Nelson?

Senator NELSON. What was the question?

(The reporter repeated the question as follows:)

Maj. HUMES. How many railroads do you suppose there were that contributed in all?

Mr. ARNOLD. They contributed from $1,000 to $5,000, the total fund, perhaps equalling $40,000 at least, I should say. About $40,000 went into the fund, which was turned over by Mr. Swenson to the plate house.

Maj. HUMES. When were those contributions made?

Senator OVERMAN. Just answer that question, and when the next question is asked we will take it up.

Mr. ARNOLD. They were made in 1915, probably along about February. The plates you have before you, the stuff they went out and paid for. There is nothing in them relating to breweries.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, it seems from my reading of the resolution that while we have broadened the question considerably we are limited to German propaganda and brewery activities. It is as nearly as possible, to confine your questions to matters arising out of those things—German propaganda and brewery activities.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I realize that the committee and the chairman are not as familiar with the facts in this matter as I am, and it is therefore necessary for you to see the position in which I am placed in an effort to confine this inquiry.

The activities that I had proposed to inquire into were the activities of this man and the organization with which he is connected along political lines, on the theory that it is absolutely impossible when a pool is made up of various contributions, to segregate the fund, to identify the particular remittance or the particular description that defrays the expense of any given kind of activity.

The charge that was made in the resolution that was the basis of this investigation was that the brewers and the brewery interests were secretly carrying on their political activities by propaganda and otherwise in various parts of the country.

Now, if they are carrying on political activity, certainly the alliance which they make—whether or not that alliance be through an organization that they are using in common with other concerns—is instrument that they are using, whether they are simply devoting their attention to some one thing periodically, or to some one common organization and financing it entirely themselves.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me interrupt you, Major. I think what you say is true. The alliance they make in carrying on their propaganda is pertinent to this inquiry. But that is not the real question presented, as I can see. The question is whether or not the contributions of the different interests to a fund which is used to advance different interests constitutes an alliance in the interest of only one of those intermediaries, to wit, the breweries.

Maj. HUMES. I am alleging there was a common interest in an election, that was jointly financed by those who felt the same interest.

Senator WOLCOTT. The joint financing may have been due to the fact that the brewers who contributed to it were interested in shaping results favorable to them. The railroads, we can very well conceive, were interested in securing results favorable to the railroads, and were not at all interested in the breweries. Their contribution might have been to a common fund, to be sure, but entirely disassociated from any brewery activity. That is possible.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; that may be possible.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is there anything that you have in the way of evidence that is going to tend to build up an alliance between the breweries and the railroads and what not, other than the mere fact that they contributed money to this organization with which this Mr. Arnold was identified?

Maj. HUMES. Nothing except the joint interest in organizing this organization and the expenditure of the funds for a political purpose; and that certainly is a political activity—a political activity of the brewers. And it is just as important, as I view it, for this committee to discover the partnership into which the breweries entered.

Senator WOLCOTT. There we are, right at this point. Does this constitute evidence that amounts to the disclosure of a partnership? That is the thing that is troubling me.

Mr. BAILEY. If that can be shown, we make no objection.

Maj. HUMES. I can not conceive how different organizations can contribute to the same fund without knowing what the fund is being used for and knowing who is joining in the fund.

Senator WOLCOTT. It is hardly appropriate, it seems to me, in the light of the evidence we have so far, to call it a common fund. It is a contribution to the same concern, but that does not necessarily mean that it is a common fund which is to be used for common purposes and in which all are interested. That fund might be designed to be used by one contributor for one purpose, by another contributor for another, and still by another for another purpose. All we are interested in is the brewery objects, and it seems to me that something more than contributions to Mr. Arnold is necessary to establish this partnership or alliance.

Maj. HUMES. I think the committee would soon discover, in even the meager plate matter we have, the evidence of the alliance of these interests—right in the plate matter that was sent out by this organization.

Senator WOLCOTT. It discloses, necessarily, the bringing together of all these financial resources by Mr. Arnold?

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose, for example, this plate matter should have some matter in one column against the Adamson law, and in another column something in favor of the brewery activities, would that be such a common fund as to bring out whether the railroad contributed for the purpose of defeating the Adamson law?

Maj. HUMES. This witness has said that he does not know who of the contributors were interested in the breweries proposition. He said he suspected Mr. Autry was in that business. He knew that Mr. Faust was in that business. His first statement was that he suspected that Mr. Lansberg was; that as to all the other contributors he did not know whether they were interested in the brewery business or not. Now how can we determine the extent of the brewery participation in this fund, when he does not know who the brewery interests are, except by a process of elimination? By finding out who the various contributors are, we would find out, for instance, how much the railroads put in the fund and eliminate them, and then go into the various classes of contributors until we find out what the brewery activities in this enterprise were. If he would produce a list of his contributors, so that we could segregate them and determine which was brewery and which was railroad and which was something else, we might be able to determine what this brewery participation was; but the witness not knowing, we certainly cannot determine what their participation was in the fund.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I will illustrate how utterly absurd it is to talk about a partnership here. For instance, I happen to know one citizen of Texas who does not own any farm. He contributed. He paid for the plate matter on silos, which this organization distributed to all the farmers of Texas, so far as they could reach them.

Now how absurd it would be to say that this man, whose only interest in farming was the welfare of the farmer and the State—because he had no selfish or personal interest—shall be arraigned and his name written in this record as in partnership with the breweries and the German propagandists, when the whole extent of his connection was that he gave his own money to disseminate among the farmers of Texas useful information about the silo!

And yet if you are going on that theory of partnership, he must be brought in too. There was not a semblance of a partnership.

This enterprise, if you call it such, was conducted as a kind of farmers' library, a forum of discussion for all kinds of questions those that were concerned in the farmer's occupation, and questions which concerned him as a citizen. They were all presented to men of the most widely dissimilar interests and the most widely dissimilar views contributed to it. You find a preacher that gave something. Maybe he gave only a small amount, because generally ministers of the gospel, serving the Lord, have little time to serve themselves, and do not have much to give, and yet it would be a spectacle to write the minister of the gospel down by the side of the brewer as contributing to the common partnership fund that was used in the interest of the brewers. That is the kind of a situation that confronts us.

We say again, for the eleventh or twelfth or thirteenth time, to make it odd, that as to anything that concerns the brewers or their campaign or their propaganda, or anything that concerns the propaganda, we open the doors wide and invite you to inquire, ready to give you any information we possess, but we do not believe time ought to be taken up with these other matters, and especially with a charge against these men.

Senator OVERMAN. Ask the question and let us see where we are getting to.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you not testify this morning, Mr. Arnold, that you knew of no contributions from brewery sources, direct or indirect, other than the three that you mentioned?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is right.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you tell us whether or not you could give us a list of all the contributors to this organization?

Mr. ARNOLD. Could I give you a list of all the contributors to the organization?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not.

Senator WOLCOTT. You testified you had none?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not do so.

Senator WOLCOTT. You could not make one up from memory?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not do it.

Senator WOLCOTT. I suppose you could make one up that would cover a good many?

Mr. ARNOLD. Probably so, something like I have in the case of the railroads; but a good many of them would be guessed at.

Senator OVERMAN. Ask the question, and I will rule on it when it comes.

Maj. HUMES. Did I understand you to say that all these railroad contributions were made in the early part of 1915? Was that the time you fixed?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I think it is 1915.

Maj. HUMES. I think you gave contributions after that time.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think there are some contributions made after that time, but that is the general fund I am speaking of there, which went out in the plate matter, where we sent plates out for six months.

Maj. HUMES. That is the six months' period that you referred to in discussing Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have covered the six months' period, yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Did the railroads contribute any money except for this plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. They contributed for nothing except plate matter, which went out. They paid for nothing that had any relation to the breweries or any prohibition or any other matters. Many of the articles they wrote themselves, as you will find it plated there.

Maj. HUMES. You have a complete set of those plates?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think we turned over to your district attorney a complete set of them. I do not know what has become of them. You will find, though, that railroad presidents have articles in there.

Maj. HUMES. What other corporations? You mentioned the railroads. What other corporations contributed either as corporations or through presidents and officers?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know of any.

Maj. HUMES. Any of the meat packers?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. I do not think so, during that period.

Maj. HUMES. Well, at any period?

Mr. ARNOLD. Oh, they contributed, but not recently.

Maj. HUMES. The Armour and Swift companies both contributed, did they not?

Mr. ARNOLD. They did to the Texas Business Men's Association and I think they contributed a thousand dollars later on towards the work. I do not recall just when. I know that they have not for the last three or four years. I could not get any money out of them.

Maj. HUMES. When was it that the brewers that you have referred to made their contributions?

Mr. ARNOLD. In 1914. I think I gave that this morning. In 1915 and up till 1916.

Maj. HUMES. From 1914 to 1916?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that inclusive, would you say?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, that is inclusive; not every month, but from time to time.

Maj. HUMES. How much did you say Mr. Lansberg contributed, $15 000, was it?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was between ten and fifteen thousand. I do not recall the exact amount.

Maj. HUMES. How much did Mr. Faust contribute, or the St. Louis people?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was back in 1912, I think, or 1911; somewhere in there. Contributed a thousand dollars. I believe it was 1911 or 1912.

Maj. HUMES. And how much did Mr. Autry contribute?

Mr. ARNOLD. I suppose it would run eighteen or twenty thousand dollars; somewhere around there.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Autry was the president of the Texas Brewers' Association, was he not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never heard of the Texas Brewers' Association. I don't think there is one.

Senator NELSON. Something was said this morning about Mr. Pabst contributing a thousand dollars, but you were not very clear; you did not give a positive answer.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think so. I do not recall where he ever gave me anything.

Senator NELSON. It was asked whether he had not done it directly or indirectly.

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Senator NELSON. Through Mr. Lansing—is that the name?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Lansberg.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Lansberg. Did he not contribute $15 000 through Mr. Lansberg?

Mr. ARNOLD. He probably did. I do not recall that. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not state to the United States attorney in Texas, and did you not testify down there, that Pabst had made a contribution to you?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall it if I did. That was nearer the time of it than now, and that might be the case, but at this moment I do not recall and can not think of any money ever having been received from Mr. Pabst.

Senator NELSON. Did you say anything about the Anheuser-Busch Co. or any of its officials contributing?

Mr. ARNOLD. I said that Mr. Faust contributed $1,000 in 1911.

Senator NELSON. He belonged to that company?

Mr. ARNOLD. He belonged to that company. He was a member of that firm, and I presume it was their money. I always took it that way.

Senator OVERMAN. Did any owners of saloons contribute?

Mr. ARNOLD. Any of the saloons?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think so. The organization had a $5 fund for membership, and while there might have been a few of them in here, if there was I do not recall it. It would not amount to anything.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Lansberg's contribution was made in 1916?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Who arranged for that contribution from Mr. Lansberg?

Mr. ARNOLD. I arranged for it, I suppose.

Maj. HUMES. Where and when and under what circumstances?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not just recall the date. It was some time in 1916.

Maj. HUMES. And what was that money to be used for?

Mr. ARNOLD. To be used for publicity. I proposed to move in west of the Mississippi the plates that you have seen there on prohibition and antiprohibition and on the middle ground.

Maj. HUMES. Was it put out in the shape of plate matter?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not all of it. As indicated this morning, the plate matter they thought of no concern.

Maj. HUMES. What method did you adopt?

Mr. ARNOLD. What method?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, they did not want the plates, and I did not want to go if they did not, and so I stopped it. My recollection is that they did not pay the full amount.

Senator OVERMAN. You stated this morning about sending out some pamphlets.

Mr. ARNOLD. That was in 1914. But in 1916 the only one that we sent out was the pamphlet on the Adamson law. That was sent out by the State Presidents' Association, giving the copy of Mr. Pope's telegram to President Wilson and to Judge Lovett, telling him that if the railroads could stand that increase it was all right, but that if they expected to shift it to the farmers, the farmers would fight an increase in the freight rates. That was the basis of that pamphlet.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to telegrams sent by you to Mr. Swenson during the year 1916, and ask you to look them over and see if you remember them. [Handing telegrams to the witness.]

Where there is a translation of the code, that is my first interpretation of the code. Pay no attention to the code translation.

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not say about these code messages unless I sit down to the code book. I am taking the translations as meaning approximately what you have here.

Maj. HUMES. Just put a check mark in the margin and we verify that decoding.

Mr. ARNOLD. What do you want me to do?

Maj. HUMES. I want you simply to look over and see if you identify these telegrams. Do not pay any attention to my translations. This is a matter to be worked out afterwards.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is what is going into the record.

Maj. HUMES. Well, we will have to see the translation later.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think these are all right. I don't want to get into something that I do not know anything about.

Maj. HUMES. They are approximately correct.

Mr. ARNOLD. I can give you blanket authority for such as you want. They look like they are all right.

Maj. HUMES. You recognize these telegrams as having been sent by you to Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think they are. I should say so.

Maj. HUMES. Some of them are signed with the word "Orphanism." In the code who was "Orphanism"?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not say. I do not recall the code.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that your code name?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I expect I had one.

Maj. HUMES. Was not "Orphanism" your code name?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell you anything about a code. I can not remember that.

Maj. HUMES. You say that these are telegrams sent to you by Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. You can make that known.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not know whether you had a code?

Mr. ARNOLD. We changed our code name every 30 days. I do not recall it now. That is two years ago.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to ask you, If you had that word, you certainly would remember whether you used that name in the code. Would you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I would not, for two years back. I probably held this word. It was for a month or two weeks, and I would not want under oath to identify that as being used. Where my name is signed it is all right.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not know whether you would have had a code name or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You would?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, I would have a code name.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you not know what your code name was?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not any particular name.

Senator OVERMAN. Any time, anywhere?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know that I could.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not remember when you used any code name at all?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not remember the name. I should say that no name was coded.

Maj. HUMES. The telegrams to which the word "Orphanism" is signed are telegrams that you recognize as having been sent from your office?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not know. Those particular telegrams, I might. I presume that those telegrams were sent from my office.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Now there are some pages out of this code. What was the code name of President Wilson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell that.

Maj. HUMES. Was "Outcast" the code word that you used for President Wilson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what the code name was for Washington?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I do not know that it was coded. I should not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Was not "Overman" the code word for Washington?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell you. The towns were coded, but I could not give you that sort of information. It is too far back.

Maj. HUMES. Under date of July 1, 1916, you sent this telegram to Mr. Swenson:

As I understand it the out-of-State publicity already given covers a good portion of the restricted funds. Have devoted exclusive attention to Texas matters for the past few months and must continue during the present month. The amount requested is absolutely necessary to take care of present situation.

What did that relate to, what kind of publicity, and what were the funds that you requested at that time?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not the least idea. I was always requesting funds. That was a daily occurrence, for one purpose or another.

Maj. HUMES. You always knew how much in funds Mr. Swenson had, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. I did not know what he could give, did not know what he had; did not know what he could get. He always did what he could to get money.

Maj. HUMES. Most of the money he raised from his own independent efforts rather than from subscriptions you solicited and asked him for?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, he used his influence to get money.

Maj. HUMES. You do not remember what that relates to?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I could not tell you that.

Mr. BAILEY. Would you ask the witness whether any of the money ever received for Mr. Swenson was used in the brewery propaganda, and if he says "Yes" let us go into it, and if he says "No" let that dispose of it. The colonel has 25 or 30 telegrams. It will take all the evening to go over them.

Senator OVERMAN. It will not take long. Let it go on.

Senator BAILEY. All right.

Maj. HUMES. On July 17, you wired Swenson:

Please authorize plate expense of twenty-five hundred dollars to H. H. Fish, secretary, Western Newspaper Union, Omaha, Nebraska. This will cancel authority asked for in my letter the fifteenth.

What was that plate matter for?

Mr. ARNOLD. What is the date of that?

Maj. HUMES. July 17, 1916.

Mr. ARNOLD. July 17, 1916. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember whether you got the money or not, or got the authority?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not recall that, I do not know why it is small an amount as that would be used in plates. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. That was an unusually small amount to require was it?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not for plates. You could not get anywhere with that money on plates, no.

Maj. HUMES. On July 31, you wired Mr. Swenson:

We have secured five thousand dollars of the fund for the special agricultural work and subscription list goes forward to you to-night. If I can, service will come to New York.

Who was on that subscription list, and what was the nature of the work?

Mr. ARNOLD. How was that?

Maj. HUMES (reading):

We have secured five thousand dollars of the fund for special agricultural work and subscription list goes forward to you to-night.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is that a code message?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir. I say it is not a code message. If there is some code word in there, I do not know it. It makes good sense without.

Mr. ARNOLD. I never sent a subscription list of any kind in my life that I know of. I can not identify that message in my own mind.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember what the special agricultural work was?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I do not know that.

Maj. HUMES. Have you got his answer to that telegram?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. That might give us the whole thing.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I tried to get it, and have not succeeded up to this time.

Mr. ARNOLD. Those messages are unintelligible, just that one of the situation. Without referring to letters or referring to what might be enlightening at the time, without referring to the character of the work, it would be difficult to identify them and give intelligent information as I would like.

Maj. HUMES. On August 2, you wired Mr. Swenson: "Will be in New York Monday to meet Mr. Swenson." Do you remember that trip to New York?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. I went to New York very frequently, and I usually met Mr. Swenson.

Maj. HUMES. What particular sort of propaganda or public work was under consideration at that conference?

Mr. ARNOLD. What date?

Maj. HUMES. August 2, 1916.

Mr. ARNOLD. I should say it related to the Adamson law. That would be my guess.

Maj. HUMES. In relation to the Adamson law? At the same time the brewers were making contributions to you, at that time.

Mr. ARNOLD. Not for that purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. I want permission to ask one question of the witness in order to base an objection.

Mr. ARNOLD, did you ever confer with Mr. Swenson at any time in any place under any circumstances, with respect to any brewery campaign or brewery propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never did.

Mr. BAILEY. Did you ever confer with Mr. Swenson at any time at any place or under any circumstances with regard to any pro-German propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never did, or with anybody else.

Mr. BAILEY. Did Mr. Swenson ever contribute one dollar to your organization or to you, personally, to be used in any brewery campaign or pro-German propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. He did not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, plainly, I object to any testimony about telegrams that passed between Mr. Arnold and Mr. Swenson.

Senator OVERMAN. The witness says not, but he may be able to contradict him. I do not know.

Mr. BAILEY. He may be able to.

Senator OVERMAN. Those telegrams might do it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman——

Senator OVERMAN. You do not object to that?

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to object, yes, and I am going to instruct the witness not to answer any more questions about that.

Senator OVERMAN. Ask the question, Maj. Humes, and let him object.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. On August 19, 1916, the following telegram was sent to Mr. Swenson, and this is a code message. I am going to read it as I have decoded it, and then you can look at it and see whether my decoding is correct. [Reading:]

Pope leaving here to-night for Oklahoma. Will be ready to facilitate the work there when authority will be given for five thousand dollars. I will be in Houston Friday, but office can get me. Orphanism.

Now, I think that is decoded correctly. If there is any doubt about it, we have as much of the code as you furnished, and we can verify it.

Mr. ARNOLD. I presume it is correct.

Maj. HUMES. You are not questioning the decoding of it?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I presume it is correct. The only thing I object to is that I probably did not get the money. That is the only thing I object to in it.

Mr. BAILEY. Answer that. I want that answered.

Mr. ARNOLD. His work was connected with the presidency of the Texas Farmers' Union, which was opposed to the Adamson Law; and it probably had to do with that, if there is any transaction there.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; it was to finance Mr. Pope's efforts against the Adamson law?

Mr. ARNOLD. There was no money spent in Oklahoma or anywhere else, for that matter of the Adamson law, by us.

Maj. HUMES. What was the $5,000 used for?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was used, and I do not know whether I got it. I do not always get money when I ask for it. I wish I could.

Maj. HUMES. You usually got it when you asked for it, did you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I did not. I wish I could get it always when I ask for it. I would be happy if I could.

Maj. HUMES. On August 21 you wired Swenson as follows:

Your telegram. Will hold conference with parties here to-morrow. They want to lay plans for their future work. Think it imperative that you send a telegram of assurance that matters we discussed will be immediately carried out.

J. A. ARNOLD

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Arnold, decline to answer that question upon the ground that the telegram read does not relate in any way to the two questions which this committee is authorized and instructed to inquire about.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is my answer.

Senator OVERMAN. I did not hear the telegram. Let me read it. [After examining telegram.] Did this telegram have anything to do with brewery activities or German propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nothing whatever; not the remotest. No telegram that I ever sent, or no word that I ever said, or act that I ever had anything to do with pro-Germanism.

Senator OVERMAN. Or brewery activities?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have related here this morning the connection with the brewers. You can figure that as you like, but I am addressing myself now to the pro-German end of it.

Mr. BAILEY. And as to these telegrams, the brewers too.

Senator OVERMAN. You say this had no connection whatever with it?

Mr. ARNOLD. None whatever.

Senator OVERMAN. I think that covers the ground.

Maj. HUMES. The witness is to be the judge of that, the committee rules?

Senator OVERMAN. No; he says it had nothing to do with German propaganda or brewery activities.

Maj. HUMES. And do I understand that the committee sustains the objection?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The committee sustains the objection; that is all.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I wanted to get. I did not quite get it from the Senator.

I have no more questions to ask of this witness, because, if the witness is to be the judge of that, and he has answered the question broadly, the same objection would apply to all of these telegrams and all of the matters that I want to inquire about.

Senator OVERMAN. He says there were some telegrams addressed to the brewers' activities. You can go into that.

Mr. BAILEY. Before you instruct him to do it, Mr. Chairman, I will remember that I asked the witness if he ever had any conversation with Mr. Swenson about brewery propaganda, and he said that he had not. Mr. Swenson will be before the committee and will corroborate that.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there is any reason why we should interrogate Mr. Arnold, but I would like for him to make the committee a little plainer than he has in his questions and answers, the objects and purposes of this organization, and I am going to ask him one or two questions about that, only.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to interpose an objection to that. I can see no reason, if the committee under this ruling is to deprived of an opportunity to cross-examine this man as to the exact detailed nature of his transactions, why he should be permitted to make self-serving declarations, we not having an opportunity to go into the details of the transactions that he is trying to discuss.

Senator OVERMAN. I think he has stated pretty fully what the objects of the organization were.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, I think so. Of course the colonel can cross-examine him about anything I questioned him about. But if the committee thinks that it is full enough, I am content.

Senator OVERMAN. Stand aside, Mr. Arnold.

Maj. HUMES. Just a minute, Mr. Arnold. Who is Adolph Boldt?

Mr. ARNOLD. Adolph Boldt?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. He is a man at Houston, Tex.—used to be there, and used to know a man named that; and he was secretary of the chamber of commerce some four years ago there.

Maj. HUMES. Did he have any brewery connection?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not that I ever heard of.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to interpose right there, Mr. Chairman. There is not a more reputable man in Texas than Adolph Boldt.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is the truth.

Mr. BAILEY. And I do not think his name should be bandied around here in this way. The name suggests a brewery, of course, and——

Maj. HUMES. Yes. There were a couple of telegrams about him here, and I did not know who he was.

Mr. BAILEY. He has no more interest in a brewery than the colonel has. But that is exactly what I did not want to see in this investigation.

Senator OVERMAN. We ruled that out.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I would like to have it stricken out.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever send Mrs. Darden to Chicago to look after any brewery money, to see Mr. Lansberg.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think she went up there one time to see Mr. Lansberg.

Maj. HUMES. When was that?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not recall it now—it was for some reason—I think I could not go myself—I believe she went up there to get some money, but she did not get it. Either she did not see him, or I do not know what it was, but she did not get the money.

Maj. HUMES. Did she see Mr. McDermott?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say. You had better ask her that; but I am sure she did not.

Maj. HUMES. That was in September, 1916, was it not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Probably so.

Maj. HUMES. When was it that you saw Mr. Lansberg in Chicago.

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say; but it was along about that period; during that period. I could not say the date.

Maj. HUMES. You were there in September, 1916, too, to see him, were you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I probably was. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a telegram sent to you at Chicago by Mrs. Darden, dated September 20, 1916, addressed to you at the Congress Hotel at Chicago. I will read it as I have decoded it. If my decoding is incorrect, you can correct me:

Pope and Radford want me to take my Ford and a boy and carry the circulars out in country districts. They think it important that they be in the country with them. Impossible to get cars so I am going to take them. No one knows me in the country. Besides I am only a chauffeur. Vance is a carpenter—

Decoded meaning lecturers—around over country every day. Bacon—

Decoded should be Ham—

according to the data that I have—

What are you laughing at? Did you not call Mr. Ham “bacon” in your code?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know anything about that.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that you did?

Mr. ARNOLD. I was just laughing at the similarity of the word.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that that was a part of your code?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know anything about it.

Maj. HUMES (continuing to read):

Preparing to leave soon, and practically admits defeat. Jim does not write any more articles.

Now, what was referred to in that telegram? What was the purpose of that? What were the lecturers, denominated as carpenters, so active about.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I do not know of anything that was had on there at that time.

Maj. HUMES. You were in Chicago to see Mr. Lansberg, to get money from the breweries at that time, were you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have told you that the money I got from Mr. Lansberg was to be spent in publicity, and I have showed you the publicity that went out.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any of those circulars that this was circulating?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have no idea what they are, Senator; probably some local matter of some sort.

Maj. HUMES. July 18 you went to Houston to see Mr. Autry. What did you go there to see him about?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. I go to Houston ordinarily once a week.

Maj. HUMES. On the 17th you wired Mr. Autry that you would be there the next day.

Mr. ARNOLD. I usually go to see him when I am in Houston.

Maj. HUMES. What did you go to see him about?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not tell you. Two years ago? I could not tell you what I went to see a man about then.

Maj. HUMES. Do you always go to see him about getting funds?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not every time, no.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that usually your mission?

Mr. ARNOLD. I try to get funds out of everybody I can. Anywhere I talked to I tried to get funds out of. That was my purpose.

Maj. HUMES. The money you got from Mr. Autry was for the purpose of carrying on brewery propaganda, was it not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I could not say that, no. I can not identify that particular message.

Maj. HUMES. What money you got from Mr. Autry was for that purpose?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know whether I got any on that message from Mr. Autry.

Maj. HUMES. I am not talking about that message.

Mr. ARNOLD. I thought you were.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not use all the money you got from Mr. Autry for the purpose of carrying on brewery propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not.

Maj. HUMES. What else did you use it for?

Mr. ARNOLD. I used it for general work.

Maj. HUMES. What general work did you use it for—the breweries?

Mr. ARNOLD. I might pay rent with it.

Maj. HUMES. Were Mr. Autry and the breweries interested in this Adamson law fight?

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Maj. HUMES. Were they interested in the eight hour day fight that you were carrying on?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. What else was there that you were doing that they were interested in? What were they contributing their money for?

Mr. ARNOLD. What do you call the propaganda? You asked me about that and——

Maj. HUMES. You are more familiar with propaganda than I am, probably.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I confess I am not.

Maj. HUMES. In rendering service to them, then let us put it that way.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not consider any service was rendered to the brewers when, in talking to them about publicity I stated that we must treat the prohibitionists the same way, and asked either or both to contribute.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you get any money from the prohibitionists.

Mr. ARNOLD. Not from any prohibitionist organization. I have probably had money from prohibitionists. No doubt I have.

Maj. HUMES. Did you know R. L. Soergel?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never heard of him.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Wirmel—W. C. Wirmel, or H. C. Wirmel?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never heard of him.

Maj. HUMES. He spent a good deal of time in Texas about this time?

Mr. ARNOLD. I never heard of him.

Maj. HUMES. You were taking an active part in the prohibition fight in Texas in 1916, were you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. In 1916?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not know there was a fight on in 1916.

Maj. HUMES. You did not? What were you after money up at Chicago for, then?

Mr. ARNOLD. In 1916?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I am telling you that I sent those plates out. I have answered that question so many times.

Maj. HUMES. Why were you so interested that, on September 21, when you were in New York, Mrs. Darden sent you a telegram, "Prohibition defeated by over 1,000 majority"?

Mr. BAILEY. That could not have been in 1916, because they did not take any vote in 1916, Colonel.

Mr. ARNOLD. You probably got your code mixed up.

Maj. HUMES. It is not my code, Mr. Arnold.

Mr. BAILEY. There was no vote on it in 1916.

Maj. HUMES. The telegram speaks for itself.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me see the telegram. If this is correct, Mr. Chairman, it referred, probably, to a local contest.

Maj. HUMES. I assume that it was a local contest because of the majority that is mentioned in the telegram.

Mr. BAILEY. There were only about 3,000 or 4,000 when the State election of 1911 occurred, but there was no State election that year so that evidently referred to a local option contest.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, there was some interest shown by the lady and yourself as to the local contest?

Mr. ARNOLD. We all took an interest, Senator. We get interested in Texas on prohibition, either on one side or the other. You can be a citizen there without being interested.

Mr. BAILEY. I got a telegram myself the same night, and I do not suppose I engaged in any propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. You could probably tell us what county this was, Mr. Bailey?

Mr. BAILEY. Tarrant County, which is the county in which Fort Worth is located.

Maj. HUMES. On January 30, 1917, a telegram was sent from your office, Mr. Arnold, to Mr. Autry, "Call me on the phone. Have good news." What was the subject matter of that?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not know. Some State had gone Democratic, I guess.

Maj. HUMES. Was that good news to you about that time?

Mr. ARNOLD. What was the date? January?

Maj. HUMES. January, 1917.

Mr. ARNOLD. January, 1917?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I have no idea what it was. I could not tell you.

Maj. HUMES. If that was good news to you in January 1917, you had had a change of heart since the preceding November, had you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. If what was good news?

Maj. HUMES. The democratic victory, that you were talking about.

Mr. ARNOLD. I just gave you a phrase there, that is all.

Maj. HUMES. Your whole organization, and you, were fighting the reelection of President Wilson in every way you could during the campaign, were you not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You were not?

Mr. ARNOLD. No. We were fighting the Adamson law.

Maj. HUMES. I think that answer ought to make competent a lot of this matter that the committee ruled out a little while ago, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are going into the presidential election, generally, I want to know the authority to make that inquiry.

Senator OVERMAN. The witness has said that he was not fighting President Wilson, that he was for him, as I understand?

Mr. BAILEY. All right, does that make it competent to go into the question as to whom he supported or whom he opposed?

Senator OVERMAN. Only as to the credibility of the witness; that is all.

Mr. BAILEY. If the presidential election of 1916 was conducted on the prohibition question, or on a prohibition propaganda, then I doubt that whether this man supported the President or did not might be competent.

Senator OVERMAN. This does not go to the issue before us.

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Senator OVERMAN. It is a question of whether this witness said he was fighting for Wilson or—

Mr. BAILEY. Do you want to contradict the witness with a view of discrediting him?

Maj. HUMES. Here is the proposition, Mr. Chairman.

The committee has permitted this witness to assume the rôle of determining, in an omnibus fashion, the subject matters that we can inquire into, he alone to determine whether or not there is any brewery connection with the funds that he was disbursing. The whole ruling of the committee is based upon the good faith and credibility of this witness in his statement, and in a sweeping statement, an unheard-of method of establishing a fact, swearing to a negative, that a great volume of telegrams, a great amount of business, did not in any way involve the breweries or any brewery interests. He testified to a negative here; and then, based upon that answer, and upon the alleged establishment of a negative, the committee has ruled that it is incompetent and improper to conduct an examination of this witness for the purpose of inquiring into the exact nature of these transactions covered by that negative of his. He has made a statement here that, I say, is not warranted by the facts and by the records which I have.

Senator WOLCOTT. What statement do you mean, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. With reference to his attitude politically; and remember that the whole issue here is the political activities and the political views of that brewery outfit whose money was going into this man's hands; and to attack his credibility, now, I ask to introduce these telegrams to show that his statement just made has no substantial foundation in fact.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me understand, major. The statement you refer to as having been made by the witness is the statement that he was not fighting President Wilson?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And you desire to contradict that statement for the purpose of impeaching the witness?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now, as a matter of law, there is no doubt in my mind but what the impeachment of a witness can not take place in that way. If there is any well settled rule of evidence as to the impeachment of a witness, it is that you can not impeach a witness contradicting him upon an immaterial fact.

Maj. HUMES. But it is not immaterial, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is the meat of the question, whether it is material or immaterial. If it is material, then it is pertinent to ask him the question, not on the ground of impeaching him as a witness, but because it is material evidence.

Maj. HUMES. The material inquiry that this committee is making is as to the political activity of the brewers, and those that they dominated and those that they financed—their agents in the field, and you can separate the agents and the paid hirelings of the brewers from the brewers themselves. The question is: Have they been engaging in politics? Have they been secretly expending their funds for political purposes? That is the gist of this inquiry. Now, that is the gist of the inquiry, certainly we can inquire into the conduct of one of the hirelings who admits that at least three of the brewery elements contributed. There has been sufficient put into the record for the committee to realize that these funds he has admitted came from three separate classes of brewers, Lansberg, who is connected with the United States Brewers' Association and with the National Association of Commerce and Labor, from the St. Louis brewers, the Anheuser-Busch people, who were seceders from the United States Brewers' Association, and from Mr. Autry, who was the active spirit and the prime mover of its Texas Brewers' Association. He has admitted financial support from those three sources, and our records show just what those sources are and what their activities have been.

Now, is it possible that when this witness makes an assertion with reference to these political activities, that is not a material part of this inquiry?

Senator WOLCOTT. To be sure it is, if the political activities he engaged in were conducted by him in behalf of the brewers.

Maj. HUMES. Gentlemen, suppose for a moment that political corruption on my part was being inquired into, and it was charged that I had received a corruption fund of some kind from the brewers, and that it developed in that inquiry that I also had received money from other sources, could I interpose, as a defense for my action, that the fact that led me to do the things I did was the money that I got from the railroads, and not the money that I got from the brewers, and therefore you could not inquire into all of the activities in which I had engaged? That is just the situation that confronts this committee here, just exactly the situation; and would it be adjudged that by my swearing to a negative, that no, it was not the brewery money that prompted me to take this action, therefore your committee was estopped from making any inquiry into any of my activities?

Senator WOLCOTT. Major, the ground upon which you are urging this evidence now, is not the one you originally advanced, to wit, the impeachment of the witness.

Maj. HUMES. I beg your pardon, Senator, if I may interrupt you a moment, but you were not here when the ruling was made upon this question, and because of the fact that you and Senator Nelson have come in since, I was adding the contention that I made originally to Senator Overman, when he was here alone, and when the objection was made to the introduction of this testimony. I think both contentions are absolutely sound. I was simply repeating my original contention because you had not been present.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let us see. The sort of political activity that you are proposing to inquire about now is as to whether or not this witness and his organization carried on political activity against President Wilson?

Maj. HUMES. That was the last question, yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes. Now, then, if it can be said with any show of reason that that political activity against President Wilson is brewery activity, then, I think, the line of interrogation would be proper; but I am at a loss to see how, if we prove that he was actively engaged against President Wilson, we have then established the proposition that he was advancing the brewery interests. So far as I can recall the campaign, I do not recall that the brewers were active against President Wilson because of any interest in their business. I do not recall that they were.

Maj. HUMES. We know that one of the ramifications of the brewery, to wit, the German-American Alliance, was active in the fight for another reason, although financed by the brewers.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against Maj. Humes' statement, three times repeated, that this witness is a hireling of the brewers. There is not a syllable of evidence in this record to justify that statement, and that statement is not correct.

This man conducted a publicity bureau. He solicited subscriptions from everybody, or contributions from anybody, who would contribute; and it is to his infinite credit that it can not be found in a single instance where he sought to serve the use of any man or any institution because that man or that institution contributed to this end. They find one pamphlet or one sheet here with the best prohibition argument, I suppose, that can be made, because it was made by the distinguished Senator who is the author of Federal prohibition. It prints, likewise, a speech on the other side from President Taft.

Now, can it be said that any man is conducting a propaganda when he is printing both sides of the question? I have no doubt that every man who believes in his side of a question believes that his side will be promoted by being fairly presented to the people in contrast with the other side; but a man who is presenting both sides of the question can hardly be accused of conducting a propaganda; and surely a man who is doing that can not be characterized fairly as a hireling of the brewery interests.

If there were any testimony here that justified that characterization of this witness, I would not protest against it; but there is, up to this time, not one syllable in the record that justifies Maj. Humes' denunciation of this witness as a hireling of the brewers; and I protest that a citizen of the United States ought not to be summoned from 1,800 miles from his home, put under oath, and then be denounced as a hireling without any testimony in the record to sustain that assertion.

That he sought contributions, he not only admits but avows. Early in his testimony he produced his authority for asking contributions from everybody. He has not attempted to evade that question. He said he received them from brewers, and from everybody else; but he likewise says that attached to no contribution was any stipulation that he should serve any particular interest.

With that much aside, I want to address myself to the competence of it.

I am not much inclined to object to any question, in the court or elsewhere, because it is immaterial. I learned a lesson on this point from one of the most remarkable men I ever knew in my life who held the ancient and honorable office of a justice of the peace down in Hill County, Tex. I think I never knew a wiser man. He was trying a case one day, and he had a habit of referring to lawyers by the name of the town from which they came, if it happened to come from any place outside of Hill County. He was trying this case, and a lawyer by the name of Benjamin Ayers came down there from Fort Worth and made some objection, and the justice said: "Well, Mr. Fort Worth, why do you object?" Promptly Mr. Ayers was on his feet, and he said: "I object because it is immaterial." "Well," said the honorable justice of the peace: "What the devil do you care, if it is immaterial, whether it goes in or stays out?"

That is my philosophy. I do not care about this matter, because it is immaterial, and I pursue that policy in court as well as elsewhere. It is only the prolongation of the matter here, the consumption of time, that I object to, and I appeal to you to end it. How in the world can you be enlightened upon the proposition which you are inquiring by whether or not this gentleman supported President Wilson or did not support President Wilson? Maj. H. produces a lot of telegrams to prove that he criticized President Wilson, perhaps, about the Adamson law, or about some other thing, and then Mr. Arnold will say "I will produce fifty witnesses to bring them before this committee, to show that I supported President Wilson." Where would be the end of this inquiry? If you allow him to be impeached upon that immaterial question—allow me to take it that it is immaterial, whether he supported President Wilson or not—then you must allow him to sustain himself, and the matter would come when the winter is past; and you gentlemen would be here day after day, pursuing an immaterial inquiry.

What do you care, and what does the Senate of the United States care, and what do the people of the United States care, whether Mr. Arnold supported President Wilson or not, and how can it be immaterial?

So far as I am informed, most of the Prohibitionists voted the Republican ticket. Probably I should express it the opposite way, that most of those who were opposed to prohibition voted the Democratic ticket. The Republican party in State after State declared for prohibition. And now to undertake to confuse and discredit this gentleman by saying that he is opposed to prohibition and opposed to President Wilson is inconsequential. It aligns him on a side the natural alignment. But what does it all come to? I only appeal against such testimony as that because of the waste of time.

If you want to go into the question, now, of whether he supported President Wilson, as a means of discrediting him, I am not going to make any further objection than that. I only say to the committee that we, of course, shall ask the privilege of bringing men here to prove that what he has spoken on that subject is the truth.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, I do not care anything about whether this man supported President Wilson or not, whether he was for President Wilson or Mr. Hughes, or anyone else; but I did use that with this purpose in view, to bring up once more the whole question of the materiality of the inquiry which I undertook to make a few minutes before, an inquiry into all the activities and connections between this man and Mr. Swenson in New York and the others with whom he was associated in conducting the business that he was representing himself to in Texas and in the other States.

Mr. BAILEY. In other words, you were indirectly appealing from the decision of the committee?

Maj. HUMES. I am not appealing from the decision of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I say indirectly.

Maj. HUMES. And I do not think there is any such pride of authorship that anyone's feelings are hurt at all. I say frankly that I did not agree with the ruling, and I am simply reciting my position.

Senator OVERMAN. I am only one of the committee, and I will put the question to the whole committee.

Maj. HUMES. And I hope no apology is necessary.

My contention is this—and I repeat it—that when a man is the custodian of a joint fund and you are trying to follow a portion of that fund, when that fund is given to an organization that is devoted to propaganda work—and that is all a publicity bureau is; propaganda is merely publicity, and when you go into a deal with a propaganda bureau, you can not determine the activities of that bureau and the real purposes of the donors of that fund—whether you are going to let a witness, one of the parties affected, by negative testimony rule out the competency of all things except such as he in his opinion thinks and admits may be material to your inquiry.

And yet that is the position that we are placed in. Instead of the committee being the judge of the materiality of this testimony and as to the importance of these activities, the manner and method and reason for expending money, the matter has now been put up to the witness to say what is competent and material and what is not competent and material. And I say that we can not make this examination, we can not get the facts, unless we go into all of the activities and ramifications of this bureau that was in part financed by the brewers who are under investigation. Whether this man was for President Wilson for reelection, or for Gov. Hughes, is absolutely inconsequential, except that it is important in this inquiry to connect the brewery activity up with some sort of political activity—and it must be connected, under the resolution, with either political activity or with German propaganda—and certainly the support of Mr. Wilson as a candidate for President of the United States, no matter what his politics, is his participation in political affairs.

Why, this propaganda material that has been brought here is the most subtle sort. Only a few sheets out of the propaganda that was issued have been produced before the committee, and yet we find in that a statement purporting to come from President Wilson in favor of the liquor business; and in the same paper we find one by Arthur Brisbane—and the committee well knows the nature of his writings. He indicated that to the committee most lucidly as he was before the committee. In the same periodical—the shrewdest sort of camouflage, and the only way in many cases that anything can be gotten into newspapers—there was a statement by Senator Sheppard. But the fact remains that that was the last article of the three that carried with it a disclaimer of the sentiment expressed in the article for the paper which might publish it.

Then we have the article which was a part of the brewery propaganda system, the eulogy of the 'brewery dollar' that I called the attention of the committee to this morning. I am not concerned with the sentiment; it is not a question of sentiment; it is the purpose of it and it connects up with the general brewery program exactly. It is a part of the program they were using all over the country.

Then, there were two articles against woman suffrage in these sheets that have been brought here. And the records of this committee also show, in the testimony already produced, that that was part of the propaganda of the brewers.

Senator WOLCOTT. That need not necessarily be so, because it happens that I have been known as an antiwoman-suffrage man, but I have also been known as quite a rabid prohibition man.

Maj. HUMES. That is true, and there are a lot of men who are in favor of woman suffrage that are not prohibitionists. I know a number of them that are. But the fact remains that that was a part of the general propaganda plan of the United States Brewers' Association, and therefore it brings it within the scope of this investigation. That is a matter that the committee is informed of, because the records of this committee are filled with it.

Now, the only question is whether we can inquire into all of this matter and the expenditure of this joint fund, or whether by the establishment of a negative it is ruled out as incompetent.

Senator WOLCOTT. Maj. Humes, your employment of the "joint fund" seems to me to be troublesome. If I thought it was a joint fund, a pool made up by these newspapers who came and employed this man, I should follow the fund wherever it went.

Mr. BAILEY. Just as you could do in a case of conspiracy.

Maj. HUMES. Where can you get more persuasive evidence of this than the fact that they have no record of this fund? There is no record in the books, there is no account with the people who patronized them. The methods were the methods of the United States Brewers' Association, that destroyed their books at the end of every thirty days. They have not got a book to show that they had an account with any of these subscribers. If it was a legitimate business, a business that would stand the scrutiny of men, it would have a book like any other business of that kind would have, and there would be a set of books. It would be conducted in the open, and there would be some record of its transactions. But there is not. All is destroyed, just as the brewers destroyed all of their records.

Senator WOLCOTT. I have not any doubt but the people who are interested in the brewing business contributed that money, and expected, at least—and had something on which to base their expectations—that something would be put in this plate matter that would present their side of the issue in a way that would please them. I have not any doubt of that in my mind, because they are not giving money for humanitarian purposes, generally speaking. They were looking for results. Whether they were pleased with the results I do not know. The witness said not.

Mr. BAILEY. I want, Senators, to make this suggestion to you all. The colonel keeps talking about these people conducting a propaganda. If I ever doubted the effect of bringing a soldier in to try a civil matter, that doubt all disappears after hearing the colonel on two or three occasions to-day.

There is not a syllable of evidence here that they conducted any propaganda; not a syllable. The evidence is that the brewers contributed, other people contributed, the railroads contributed, and what is there here to show that they even gave the prohibition side an advantage in the only publication that touches the question? The only publication before this committee is this plate matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. They are not all of them here, Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I know, but that is all there is before the committee. The witness says that the Federal Government, through its processes and the grand jury, came to their office and got all they had. You see these telegrams here, you see everything else here. Somebody's offices have been invaded. They have produced everything. The witness says that the Federal Government, by its grand jury, came and got them. He brought what we had left.

Now, this committee certainly is not going to be asked to assume that if something was here which is not here, and for which we are not responsible, it would be otherwise than it is. This plate matter is the only thing touching what is called the brewery propaganda, and it contains the argument of ex-President Taft against prohibition. It contains the argument of Mr. Brisbane for a limited prohibition. As I understand his position, it is to prohibit the sale of whiskey and permit the sale of wine and beer—light wines and beer. And then here is the argument of Senator Sheppard who is in favor of making the United States as dry as the Sahara Desert. Now those are the three views of that question, and they are all presented in this same paper. And there is not another scintilla of evidence before this committee that these people conducted any propaganda. Why, if the complexion of the Senate were to change and the anti-prohibitionists would get after the prohibitionists with a sharp stick, and wanted to know how much money they collected and how they spent it, they would use this with just as much grace as the prohibitionists are using it now.

The colonel said they introduce the article of Senator Sheppard with an apology. They introduce it with a statement that all sides of every question ought to be put before the people. I wonder if anybody contradicts that statement? I wonder if there is a man in the world, who wants anybody to understand a question, who is not ready to say to that man that he ought to consider every side and every phase of that question?

These people were engaged in conducting an agricultural educational campaign. They not only wanted to teach the farmer how to plow, how to sow, and how to reap, but they wanted also to educate him upon the great public questions. A farmer who knows how to plow and how to sow and how to reap and still does not know how to vote, may be a good man, but he can not be a good citizen. These people were trying to supply that need of equipping the farmers and citizens of the United States for the performance of their duty. When they got this special matter, as we call it, suppose they had an article prepared by some railroad company or some railroad president and printed it here, and then they printed another one on the other side of the question, was not that educational work? Was not sending both sides of the question to the people? And if a railroad president was willing to pay to circulate his views, and if another man was willing to pay to circulate his views, or if they were circulated without pay, the result of it was that these people were enabled to send literature to the farmers of the country at a minimum cost—to the farm organizations.

Now, if they can come and produce evidence against these people that they are trying to argue in favor of brewery candidates, in favor of brewery policies, or even antagonizing as an organization the adoption of a prohibition (State or Federal) amendment, then they may say with some show of reason that they were serving the brewery, although I would hate to say that opposing prohibition is a brewery service, because I do not forget the time when the Democratic Party, under the leadership of men greater than any—I will not say greater than any who bear its honors to-day, but certainly as great as any—who bear its honors to-day, denounced salubrious legislation in its national platform. I do not forget the time when all Democrats were opposing Federal prohibition, without exception. Twenty years ago a man could not have been elected a delegate from any precinct to any county Democratic convention in the United States if he had said that he was in favor of national prohibition. And the fact that a man might oppose either State or national prohibition would not convince me that he was a hireling of the brewers. But if you can find where these men have been doing that, then you may call on them to explain, and if they can show that it is consistent with their conscientious judgment and that answers the charge of subserviency to the brewery interests. But until you can show it, why talk about them conducting brewery propaganda any more than they were conducting any other kind of propaganda?

In this pamphlet, in all these pamphlets, they were discussing questions in which every citizen of the United States was interested. Some questions in which the farmers were especially, or I might say professionally, interested, and that is all. And until these gentlemen can show a propaganda, surely they can not ask you to hear irrelevant, immaterial, and inconsequential evidence upon some vague suggestion that there was a joint fund to conduct a propaganda. Suppose, then, if the other committee over here that is inquiring into the activities of the Beef Trust summon these people over there and say: "You received money from the owners or managers of the Beef Trust, and as you also received money from the brewers, we want you to tell this Beef Trust inquiry committee all the activities of the brewers' subscriptions." Then maybe they will all turn them over to the railroad committee, the interstate commerce committee, and say, "We understand that the railroads contributed something to your organization, and now we want you to tell us, on the theory of a joint fund, all that the beef packers and the Beef Trust and all that the brewers contributed, and why and how." There would be no end to it.

Let them prove a propaganda, and then all concerning the propaganda follows as a matter of course. I will not resist. But there has not been one syllable of testimony to establish here that these people engaged in any propaganda of any kind except to carry to the farmers of the United States useful information of every kind. That is the only definite, consistent purpose either attributed to them or fixed upon them, and all this other is merely incidental. To denounce them as hirelings of the brewers, to stigmatize them as conducting a brewery propaganda, upon this document that carries the best argument that could be made for prohibition, because made by the Prohibition forces in this country, and carries the other side from the lips of a man who was once President of the United States, and worthy, I will say, to be President again; and then the other argument from the man who occupies a middle ground—and without knowing much about Mr. Brisbane, I think he is the most conspicuous advocate in this country of that middle ground, and the only one so far as I know—with those three views set out before the farmers, to call it a brewery propaganda is a new way to describe things, to me.

Senator OVERMAN. The only way to get this question passed upon is to have Maj. Humes ask the questions, and the committee will pass upon them.

Mr. BAILEY. All right.

Maj. HUMES. On October 17, 1915, you sent the following telegram to Mr. Swenson—I am reading the decoded message:

Parties here have made arrangements for a meeting of National Farmers' Union officials, which I consider extremely important, but unless they can get assistance Wednesday, they will have to call off their arrangements. Go forward at once or temporarily abandon all effort.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Maj. HUMES. I have not asked the question. I suppose you had better wait until I ask the question. To what does that matter refer, and was there money received by you in response?

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I object to that question as irrelevant to the inquiry of this committee, and I desire to say for the benefit of Senator Nelson and Senator Wolcott that before objecting the other time I inquired of the witness whether or not any of those telegrams which have been submitted to him for identification related in any way to the brewery question or the German propaganda. I asked him further, as all of those telegrams are to or from Mr. Swenson, whether or not he had ever at any time or at any place under any circumstances discussed the brewery question with Mr. Swenson, or the pro-German propaganda question. He said that he never had discussed with Mr. Swenson either the brewery question or the German question, and that none of those telegrams related to either question. Upon that answer I based the objection to that testimony as irrelevant and immaterial to the inquiry under consideration.

Senator OVERMAN. The chair, after that statement by the witness that neither remotely nor indirectly did any of them deal with German propaganda or money furnished by the brewers, or any brewery activities, ruled out the question.

Mr. ARNOLD. I just want to correct one statement. The declaration message is not correct. It says "the National Farmers' Union." It must have been the State Presidents' Association.

Maj. HUMES. You mean the State Presidents' Association of the Farmers' Union?

Mr. ARNOLD. It would hardly be of the National Farmers' Union.

Maj. HUMES. It was the Presidents' Association of the State Farmers' Union.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I am not concerned with which it was.

Mr. ARNOLD. I just wanted to get it correct.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee agrees with the chairman that the evidence is not competent.

The telegram that was read to you—do you know to what it related?

Mr. ARNOLD. Let me see the telegram, will you?

(The witness was shown the telegram referred to.)

Senator NELSON. We might find out what it related to, and if it related to some other matters, we would exclude it.

Maj. HUMES. That was the question that I asked, what it related to.

Mr. BAILEY. He had already testified that none of them related to German propaganda. He examined them.

Mr. ARNOLD. This evidently relates to a meeting of farmers. It probably had reference to the Adamson law.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you state further that it had nothing to do with the brewers' interests.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Or German propaganda?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nothing whatever.

Senator WOLCOTT. I understand the witness to have sworn that with respect to every telegram in the batch, that there is nothing any wise directly or indirectly connected with any brewery interests.

Mr. BAILEY. He swore that.

Senator NELSON. Or German propaganda.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir; that is my statement.

Maj. HUMES. That was the negative I referred to.

Senator WOLCOTT. In other words, he described the whole batch instead of picking out this one.

Mr. BAILEY. He examined each one. They were handed to me for identification, and after examining them, I asked him the question.

Maj. HUMES. I gave them to him to identify, and Senator Bailey asked the privilege of asking a question, and he made the inquiry which elicited the negative statement that none of them related to either the brewers or German propaganda. It was not in any inquiry made. It was in response to Senator Bailey.

Mr. BAILEY. You began to inquire about them, and I made an objection, and realized that if he could not swear that they did not relate to breweries or German propaganda, the objection would lie. He swore they did not, and then I made the objection. That is the record.

Maj. HUMES. I would like to ask one more question about this. I do not want to put myself in the position of trying to get these in by asking questions and having them ruled out. I bring this to the attention of the committee because of the statement that was made, and the apparent misrepresentation or the insinuation that I was misrepresenting the situation in the questions that I asked.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you ask the question. We can rule on it then.

Maj. HUMES. On October 18, 1916, you sent the following telegram to Mr. Swenson:

Think it important that our work coordinate with that of the Republican party and that our position taken on the tariff be publicly approved by Hughes to make it effective in the South. If this can be done then we are almost certain to win in the State referred to in my telegram to you today and perhaps in other States. Please submit to Hughes (?) the following resolution for approval and suggestions and reply not later than Monday twenty-third. We denounce the tariff of the Wilson administration as a rank discrimination against the farming interests of this nation and especially in the South. We favor protection on all farm products and demand a revision of the tariff so that the farmers of the nation will not be compelled to sell in a free market and buy in a protected one as they are forced to do by the present tariff.

(Signed) J. A. ARNOLD.

That is one of the telegrams that you sent to Mr. Swenson?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect so.

Senator OVERMAN. That had nothing to do with German propaganda or brewery interests?

Mr. ARNOLD. Nothing whatsoever.

Mr. BAILEY. Evidently that related to the tariff.

Senator OVERMAN. But you spoke of carrying the State.

Maj. HUMES. But it did not show that you were interested in Democratic success.

Mr. BAILEY. Hughes did not succeed.

Maj. HUMES. But the resolutions were passed that you wanted, were they not? Did you not wire Swenson to see that they were adopted?

Mr. ARNOLD. In the election of that date? In that campaign?

Maj. HUMES. No, the resolution referred to was adopted by the organization afterward, whether Hughes was elected or not?

Mr. ARNOLD. They favor the protective tariff.

Maj. HUMES. I show you a certified copy of your bank account in the American National Bank of Fort Worth. You testified this morning that all of the funds that came into the association were deposited to Mr. Muse's account. I show you this to refresh your recollection, and ask you now if considerable sums of this money did not go to your account, to wit, about $100,000 at that time.

Mr. ARNOLD. No.

Mr. BAILEY. I object to that form of question, because it does not state what the witness swore. The witness swore that some of the sums might have been sent to him and passed to his account, and afterwards transferred to the other. He did not swear that all of this money went to the credit of Muse.

Maj. HUMES. I think you are correct as to that. He said that there were transactions of that kind, but that they were of small amounts.

Mr. ARNOLD. That did not cover the entire period. He had reference to the period——

Maj. HUMES. What period do you mean?

Mr. ARNOLD. It began about 1915, I should say. It would come right along there. There is $10,000 a year. That is not so much.

Maj. HUMES. Ten thousand dollars in 1916. There was $16,000 deposited to your account was there not?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is the way it looks.

Maj. HUMES. And some of the drafts that were drawn on Swenson were deposited to your account, were they not then?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not know, I could not say how that was. It was all mixed up. We were always in debt.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not true that you had another account that was kept in the name of Ida M. Darden, in which considerable sums were kept?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was part of the Muse account, transferred by her to the Muse account. The total was in this account, that was from 1915 on. That was my understanding of it.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Arnold, is this a fact, that a very considerable amount of the funds that were drawn on Mr. Swenson were drawn by Mrs. Darden and deposited to her account at the time?

Mr. ARNOLD. He drew the money and it was put into the Muse account. The drafts were deposited to the Muse credit.

Maj. HUMES. And when the draft was drawn the telegram authorizing it was attached to the draft, and the bank cashed the draft on presentation. Is not that true?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was deposited at the bank.

Maj. HUMES. In Mrs. Darden's account?

Mr. ARNOLD. No, I do not think it was in her account, I think it was in Mr. Muse's account.

Maj. HUMES. In these three accounts, the Muse account, the Darden account and your own account, in the year 1914——

Mr. ARNOLD. When did the Muse account open?

Maj. HUMES. Nineteen hundred and fourteen, on the 19th of December. It was practically a three-year account, and $110,754.12 passed through it in those three years, did it not?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect so. I do not know. Yes, you have got 1914, 1915——

Maj. HUMES. There was only the first $5,000 deposited at the end of 1914. That is the only item in December.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, then, in 1914 there was $90,000 that went through your account, was there not?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is before this account was opened?

Maj. HUMES. Oh, no.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. This account covers the whole period. Both accounts cover the whole period. There is a summary of it. I am taking up these three years, 1911, 1912, and 1913, and starting at 1914 it shows a total of $110,000.

Mr. BAILEY. The other account did not start until December, 1914.

Mr. ARNOLD. I probably said to Mr. Muse, "Everything will go into your account after this."

Maj. HUMES. In 1914, you had $47,000.

Mr. ARNOLD. I never had an account in 1914.

Maj. HUMES. From 1914 down it amounted to $90,000.

Mr. ARNOLD. For six years.

Maj. HUMES. From 1914 down.

Mr. ARNOLD. In 1914 $47,000. That is the point you are getting at.

Maj. HUMES. And in 1916 Mrs. Darden opened her account. Is that so?

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect so. I do not recall the dates.

Maj. HUMES. In 1916 and 1917, when practically all the transactions were carried on, there was $39,000 in the Darden account, $110,000 in the Muse account and in your account $101,000, making a total of $250,000 in the three accounts?

Mr. ARNOLD. The Muse account covers the entire receipts from the time it was opened until closed.

Maj. HUMES. Do you swear to that?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have sworn several times to that.

Maj. HUMES. You swear here that the funds of the Muse account were transferred from either the Darden account or your personal account to the Muse account?

Mr. ARNOLD. I swear that when money came in it was deposited to the Muse account and was transferred some to Mrs. Darden and some to me.

Maj. HUMES. That was the plan, to transfer some to one, and some to the other?

Mr. ARNOLD. It was transferred to one or the other.

Maj. HUMES. How about these drafts then, were they all deposited to the Muse account?

Mr. ARNOLD. That was the rule.

Maj. HUMES. Why did not you swear to that before the grand jury down in Texas?

Mr. ARNOLD. I think that is the way they handle it.

(Thereupon, at 4.55 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 17, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BEWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 17, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman) and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Several of the members of the committee can not be here this morning, but we will proceed with the investigation without a quorum.

[I will say, Senator Bailey, that under my ruling of yesterday, this matter is simplified, and we will have no further use in this case for witnesses, Mr. Arnold and Mrs. Darden. We will excuse them.

Mr. BAILEY. You will excuse them?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. That is satisfactory to us. Mr. Arnold, if the Chair please, would like to make a statement concerning a statement contained in the prints this morning.

Senator OVERMAN. Does he desire to make any correction in his testimony?

Mr. BAILEY. No. Here is all that he wants to do. The newspapers misunderstood him as saying that these contributions which they made were made for the purpose of propaganda against the Adamson law. He did not testify to that, and he simply wants the record to show that if he testified to anything which could be construed as meaning that, he did not intend to do it, because——

Senator OVERMAN. We will hear him. Go ahead, Mr. Arnold.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. A. ARNOLD—Resumed.

Mr. ARNOLD. I notice in this morning's Washington Herald, in regard to my testimony of yesterday before this committee, there is the following statement:

He stated that the following railway companies had also contributed through P. Swenson, a New York banker: Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific, Missouri, Kansas & Texas, Illinois Central, and Norfolk & Western. Payments by the railways were made in February, 1915, for the purpose of propaganda against the Adamson law.

They made no contributions for that purpose. I did not testify that they did.

Major HUMES. Now, just wait a moment. I certainly object to this needless stating things that he did not do. If he wants to correct something that the newspapers have said, that is one thing. when he undertakes to testify to things that he did not do, that is another and quite different matter.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, Colonel, you would not object to a citizen claiming having said certain things?

Maj. HUMES. No; that is what I say.

Mr. BAILEY. And he wants to do that on the record.

Maj. HUMES. No; if he confines his statement on the record to correction of a misstatement of what he testified to, that is one thing, but I object to his coming here and making self-serving declarations.

Senator OVERMAN. Just read to the witness, Mr. Stenographer, what he said, if you can, from the record of yesterday.

Mr. BAILEY. I would just simply say, without taking the time to go all through that, that what he testified to was, he did not say that they contributed such moneys for the purpose of propaganda against the Adamson law—for the purpose of defeating the Adamson law. As a matter of fact, the money was contributed a year or two before the Adamson law was passed.

With that, as I understand, Colonel, Mr. Arnold and Mrs. Darden are excused?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. Here is a pamphlet to which reference has been made known as the Adamson law pamphlet, and the Chair will remember that I undertook to quote, and substantially did quote, the telegram to Mr. Lovett.

Senator OVERMAN. You only want this paragraph which you have marked to go in?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. The stenographer will put that in.

(The extract from the pamphlet referred to, containing the telegram mentioned, is here printed in the record, as follows:)

In order that the railway managers might become officially informed of the position of the Union, the following telegram was sent Judge R. S. Lovett, member of the committee representing the railroad presidents in their negotiations with the President of the United States:

"We desire to give notice through you to the railroad interests of this country that the organized farmers will fight any increase in freight rates that is attempted in settlement of the present labor controversy. If the owners of the railroads want to give their employes an increase in wages from present rates that is their business, but if the increase in wages is to be given them at an increase in freight rates, that is our business."

Mr. BAILEY. I only want, now, to thank the committee for their courtesy during this hearing.

I want to ask Maj. Humes, now, if he is not willing to say upon the record that there is no evidence that either Mrs. Darden or Mr. Arnold was implicated in any German propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. It would be rather presumptuous for me to undertake to make findings for this committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not ask you to make that finding.

Maj. HUMES. The record speaks for itself, and I remember the introduction of no testimony on that subject, whatever.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Maj. HUMES. But I do not undertake to draw any conclusions. The committee must do that, and I can not presume to do it.

Mr. BAILEY. I only ask you, as a lawyer, a soldier, and a gentleman, to say, for the benefit of this woman, that there is no testimony here tending to show any connection on her part with any German propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. Well, the record speaks for itself, and that certainly is true.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Maj. Humes, speak also, and say.

Maj. HUMES. I say there is no evidence before this committee involving Mrs. Darden in German propaganda in any way.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the stenographer record that, and I am satisfied. After consultation with Maj. Humes.] And the record will show that Mr. Arnold is included in Maj. Humes's statement as to that exculpation.

Senator OVERMAN. I promised to hear Mr. Dickinson this morning. You may take a seat, sir.

Mr. DICKINSON. You desire to swear me, I suppose?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. J. DICKINSON.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Mr. DICKINSON. It was stated here, Mr. Chairman, the other day, when you postponed my hearing, that I would be confronted by a witness, the absence of whom was the cause of my hearing being postponed to this date. May I now be confronted by that witness before we proceed?

Senator OVERMAN. Is the witness here in the room?

Capt. LESTER. He is sitting right over there.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, you may go ahead with your statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is it not customary for a man under charge, as I am, to know what the charge is, sir?

Senator OVERMAN. No; you make your statement. You requested an opportunity to be permitted to make a statement. You proceed with your statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I want first to sincerely thank you for the opportunity. I am here to defend a name that is mine, but that belongs to other human beings. I simply hold it in trust, and no man can have a more sacred trust than that. That is enough to say on that, I believe. I propose to leave nothing unturned to show that the charges that were hurled against me here, loosely and from an irresponsible and uninformed source, every one of them can be and shall be disproved categorically. So that I wanted to know what other charge may be recklessly hurled against me here, sir. However, if it is your wish, I submit to your wisdom and your fairness.

(The following letter was submitted at this point:)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 24, 1918.

MY DEAR MAJOR DICKINSON: I understand that you have submitted your resignation as a captain in the Signal Corps. I believe that it is the wisest thing to do, as you say you are precluded from field service. The work which you would be called on to do in an office in Washington is probably about the worst thing that you could be called on to do for your health that differs little from your normal occupation as a newspaper man.

I desire, now that you are leaving the service, to make of record the fact that you earnestly sought military service at the beginning of the war and that, on my recommendation, you were made a captain in the Signal Corps and assigned to duty under me as chief military censor only when I had become aware that the rules governing the appointment of officers for field service would prevent your being so appointed. I desire also to state that you worked satisfactorily with me until I was relieved as chief military censor.

While you are doubtless disappointed at not being able to perform the character of service which you desired in the field, it must still be a satisfaction to know that you have attempted to do all that was possible and that you have done well what was assigned to you.

With kind regards and best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely,

(Signed)

FRANK MCINTYRE
Major General U. S. Army

Captain J. J. DICKINSON,
Office of the Chief Signal Officer,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. DICKINSON. I desire first to give here a brief outline.

I represented George Sylvester Viereck in Washington about a year, or from about March, 1916, to about the first week of February 1917. I abandoned all relations with him about the time our diplomatic relations with Germany were broken, or it appeared that they were about to be broken. In other words, it was only during the period of absolute neutrality that I maintained this relation. This I was within my legal and moral rights.

I used the nom-de-plume "Josiah Wingate" both in the material prepared for publication in his newspaper, The Fatherland, and in numerous private letters I wrote to him—letters that were merely to keep him informed of events in Washington.

For this legitimate service I received $30 a week up to the time the services were transferred from Viereck to the Trans-Oceanic News Service, which was under the management of Dr. K. A. Frazier. I would have performed both services without pay had it been necessary or advisable. Those who know me appreciate that this represented very little to me and covered a very small part of my expenses. I sought and maintained this connection with Viereck for a special purpose, which was strictly political, as shown by certain results and events connected with the last Democratic Presidential campaign.

As a direct result of my business association with Viereck, I was enabled to aid the Government in effecting a wide entrance to an avenue that led directly to the German propaganda in this country. I turned over to the then proper Government agency, the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives, the copy of a communication known as the "leak note" and which led directly to the raid on Viereck's offices by another proper agency of the Government.

At no time was my association with Viereck the secret it has been misrepresented as being. At no time was I conscious of being in any sense connected even remotely with what was known as the German propaganda. My chief objective was to render what aid I could to the movement to keep the country out of war, and to the support of the Democratic party and President Wilson through the so-called German-American vote, and the so-called Pacifist vote, of which elements were striving to maintain our neutrality. As concrete evidence of my political purpose I point to several actions and undertakings in association with certain officials of the Democratic National Committee. For example:

1. I arranged a political conference between George Sylvester Viereck and Postmaster General Burleson at the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee.

2. I induced Viereck to withhold from publication a vicious and untruthful attack upon United States Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, which might have cost his reelection and the loss of the electoral vote of Missouri to President Wilson.

3. I aided in arranging the conference between the late Senator Wm. J. Stone and a crowd of leading Germans. This became known as the all night secret conference between Senator Stone and the German leaders at Terrace Hall, New York. Among the Germans present at that conference was George Sylvester Viereck.

4. At the instance of James C. McGuire and George Sylvester Viereck, both pro-Germans, I negotiated with Chairman Vance C. McCormick of the Democratic National Committee a plan for the publication simultaneously in The Fatherland and The Irish World an article of great importance dealing with the so-called Irish-Catholic vote. Chairman McCormick expressed eager willingness to have his article so published until he was informed that an effort was to be made to induce Wm. Jennings Bryan to father the article.

I was acquitted months ago, both by Maj. General Frank McInerney, Assistant Chief of Staff, and Brig. Gen. M. Churchill, chief of the Military Intelligence Division of the General Staff of the Army, of any act or intent of disloyalty to the country.

As soon as it became evident that the country was going into the war, I strove earnestly to be permitted to rejoin the combat forces of the Army, where I served during the Spanish-American War, a considerable part of that time in Cuba. As a result of medical examination, I was deprived of this privilege, and was finally commissioned for service in the military censorship and military intelligence service. My only son was among the first to enter the Army as a volunteer, and for eighteen months he has had continuous and unbroken service in France.

Senator NELSON. In what line?

Mr. DICKINSON. My son, sir, is a captain of Engineers in the United States Army in France; and permit me to say, Senator Nelson, with all the calmness I can, that these charges have reached France, and my son, among his splendid activities, is being told I was plotting with Germany to have him murdered. He volunteered, and after a very strict examination he was made first lieutenant, and on his captaincy after arduous service in France. I did not put that in the statement.

Senator NELSON. Is he in the branch that is building railroads here?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. The transportation lines?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; the 17th Engineers, railway. He has not been confined wholly to that, sir.

I sought and obtained service under the direction of the State Department in an effort to uncover the secret activities of George Sylvester Viereck and his associates against this country after we had entered the war. For this work I declined to accept any pay. I also worked on a collateral branch of the Viereck matter for the Department of Justice. For that effort I also refused to accept pay.

Capt. Lester omitted to inform your committee that while I still wore the uniform of an officer of the United States Army, and was subject to summary trial by court-martial, I asked the Commanding General of the Southern Department and Maj. Gen. Frank McIntyre to order a court of inquiry, as the Viereck matter came up in form of rumors putting me in an improper light. Capt. Lester did state to you that no action of any kind had been taken by the War Department after a thorough investigation by it; so that out of all this maze of absurd suspicion and misrepresentation, the sole fact that remains is that before the United States went to war, I wrote several letters a week to Viereck in New York, giving him my views as to the probable policy of this government which at that time was observing strict neutrality. For this I have no apologies to make to any one, but I have no intention of having that fact distorted for the purpose of reflecting upon my loyalty and patriotism.

Capt. Lester stated to you under oath that I fraudulently obtained and betrayed the confidence of public men and other persons. I challenge Capt. Lester to produce one single witness or fact in substantiation of this charge.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you a question right there.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do you claim that Viereck's Fatherland was a neutral paper?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I do not.

Senator NELSON. Well, you intimated something to that effect. Is that not so?

Mr. DICKINSON. I said, Senator, that while we were in a condition of neutrality I represented Viereck here with the distinct purpose of trying—

Senator NELSON. You knew that he was not neutral?

Mr. DICKINSON. He was pro-German; intensely so, but antiwar. It was in that sense that I meant.

Senator OVERMAN. In the evidence that Capt. Lester gave, he was asked to tell what was on the files in his department?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think he swore to anything himself. He was only speaking from documents.

Mr. DICKINSON. From documents? There are no documents on file in his department, I am bold to say—

Senator OVERMAN. He can not produce them, but—

Mr. DICKINSON. If you will be good enough to produce the original record, I will read from it.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you through with your statement?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like very much to elaborate every statement that I have made, and to be quizzed by you and the prosecution to the utmost.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you through with your statement?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am through with that formal statement, but I hope you have not finished with me. I want to be questioned more closely.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you proceed, Maj. Humes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Are you or Capt. Lester going to conduct the examination, Major?

Senator OVERMAN. I have just asked Maj. Humes to conduct the examination.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Dickinson, referring to the compensation that you received. I just want to refresh your recollection from my understanding of the transaction, because I assume that, while it is not especially important——

Mr. DICKINSON. I have been very careful about that statement, for an object which will appear later.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not $40 continuously?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; it was not. If you have the checks you will see that they came from Frederick F. Schrader, my connection with whom I would like to explain, in due time.

Maj. HUMES. We will get the checks.

Mr. DICKINSON. Some checks came from Viereck, when I was representing the other service—$40 checks.

Maj. HUMES. Your compensation, then, came from Schrader?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. For how long a period of time?

Mr. DICKINSON. Down to the time I was transferred from Viereck's to the Trans-Ocean News Service, about which everybody knew in Washington.

Senator NELSON. Who was this man Schrader?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will tell you about him if you want me to——

Senator OVERMAN. He has asked you the question. Just answer the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. What is the question?

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Nelson asked you who Schrader was. Let me tell you something: I want you to answer the questions that are asked here.

Mr. DICKINSON. Shall I answer the Senator's question?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; answer the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right.

Senator OVERMAN. Do not talk too much.

Mr. DICKINSON. Frederick F. Schrader was a man that I had known for more than 20 years. He had been an active newspaper man in the West and——

Senator NELSON. Where did he live? Here?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will tell you about him.

Senator NELSON. Do not go into all the circumstances. Just answer my question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well, sir. Frederick F. Schrader, an old acquaintance of mine, through whom I made this connection with Viereck for the purpose I have stated——

Senator NELSON. Where was Schraeder?

Mr. DICKINSON. He was coming here every week-end.

Senator NELSON. Where was he from?

Mr. DICKINSON. New York, then, but he had lived here many years.

Senator NELSON. Was he a German, or of German descent?

Mr. DICKINSON. I realized it after he became obsessed of the Teutonic furioso, and——

Senator OVERMAN. That is all you need answer.

Senator NELSON. You need not go any further.

Maj. HUMES. You were employed originally by Schrader?

Mr. DICKINSON. For Viereck.

Maj. HUMES. For Viereck.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; for Mr. Viereck's Fatherland.

Maj. HUMES. About when was that?

Mr. DICKINSON. That was some time in March. I have some evidence of it here, if you will permit me to produce it.

Maj. HUMES. Then you wrote several letters that were published in the Fatherland?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes; I have one of them here.

Maj. HUMES. You wrote those letters under the nom de plume of Josiah Wingate?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; for the deliberate purpose—

Maj. HUMES. Under what circumstances was that name adopted?

Mr. DICKINSON. Do you want me to tell those circumstances?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Primarily, so far as they were concerned, it was for the well-known purpose, common to journalism, to use a nom de plume in order to arouse curiosity as to who the author was. That was the primary object—just as our delightful friend, Reilly Grannon, does here, now, occasionally. But the specific object, if you will permit me to explain it, gentlemen of the committee, as evidenced by this clipping—the only scratch of the pen that I have—the specific object, since I had failed, after earnest efforts, to get before the country Mr. William J. Bryan's course and conduct, as I had failed utterly, nobody would listen to me, I embraced this opportunity, knowing, of course, that in a German paper it would be discounted, but I have been in the newspaper business all my life, and I knew the force and effect of the printed word, as illustrated here—I started in, deliberately and cautiously, to present Mr. Bryan's attitude and course, with which I was as familiar as anybody alive.

Senator NELSON. Do you mean Secretary Bryan?

Mr. DICKINSON. He was then ex-Secretary.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, I shall have to go back in order to explain that feature of it.

Either in the late fall of 1913—I was then associated with Mr. Bryan at the State Department—or the early spring of 1914, so far and fair a periodical as the Saturday Evening Post contained the most violent and vicious attack on Mr. Bryan that I had ever read, and I have read God knows how many of them; and it was written by a friend of mine by the name of Henry Beach Needham, who was killed—Lord help his soul—in an aeroplane accident in Europe soon after the war started.

I sat down at my desk in my office opposite Mr. Bryan's and started to prepare an article which I was to take over to Mr. Lorimer, under whom, years ago, I did a great deal of work.

But I carried it over to Mr. Bryan, and I said: "Mr. Bryan, this is a vicious attack, and I am simply going to state the plain facts about it. I know that Mr. Lorimer, when he is enlightened, will publish it." He said: "Sit down. I want to lay down one rule to you now, in your relations to me"—everybody knows they are close, and as confidential as anybody has confidential relations with

Mr. Bryan—God bless him, he has no secrets; but he said: "If you should write that thing, everybody knows the relations between you and me, and they would say that I had inspired it, and it would do no good. Can't you see that?" "Well," I said: "From that viewpoint I can." He said: "Do not do those things for me. People will say that I have inspired you."

So that I was starting this work under that nom de plume, to make it more effective.

Maj. HUMES. That was as a result of a discussion you had had with Secretary Bryan?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Bryan knew nothing about my working for Viereck. Please do not misunderstand that.

Maj. HUMES. No, but—

Mr. DICKINSON. Away back in 1913 or 1914—

Maj. HUMES. But I am trying to gather together your statement now.

Senator OVERMAN. I am going to insist on your answering the questions, Mr. Dickinson.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well, sir. I will respond as quickly as I can.

Senator OVERMAN. When you answer the question, if you then desire to make an explanation, I will let you do so.

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall do it.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand, you state that the nom de plume "Josiah Wingate" was decided upon as a result of some talk, formal or informal, that you had with Secretary Bryan on your writings that might be of interest to him; is that correct?

Mr. DICKINSON. That talk antedated this transaction fully two years, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Is that when you adopted this nom de plume of Josiah Wingate?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. Chairman, may I please get that straightened out so that Mr. Bryan will not be misrepresented? Mr. Bryan knew absolutely nothing of my connection with Mr. Viereck.

Senator OVERMAN. You have already indicated that.

Mr. DICKINSON. But the Major was sort of confused.

Maj. HUMES. The only thing I am concerned with is how this nom de plume was adopted and when.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have already explained my adoption of the nom de plume specifically, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You wrote a letter on July 29, 1918, to Gen. Churchill, of the General Staff?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. I hope you will read that letter, Maj. Humes.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to one sentence in that letter, with reference to this nom de plume:

"After my first letter had reached Viereck's offices at 1123 Broadway, New York, I received a letter from him suggesting that I adopt the nom de plume Josiah Wingate."

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

As he thought it would be better to surround the correspondence with some curiosity as to the real author of the letters. To this proposition I assented.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Having refreshed your recollection, I ask you again: Was this nom de plume decided upon because of some understanding or conference that you had with Mr. Bryan, or because of the suggestion which you had received from Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, please let me protect myself and Mr. Bryan, there. He says, as a result of Mr. Bryan's direction, Mr. Bryan had nothing to do with it, absolutely.

Senator OVERMAN. Was it at the suggestion of Mr. Viereck? He asked you that question.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was a suggestion brought about through Mr. Schrader, with all the art I could bring to bear on it, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Well, then, Viereck did suggest this nom de plume?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will not say positively that he did, but it was agreed upon.

Maj. HUMES. Your statement in this letter is correct?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. I hope you will read it all.

Maj. HUMES. You also say you originally received $30 and then $40 a week?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to another statement in the letter:

I think that sometime in the month of March, 1916, I was approached in Washington by Mr. Frederick F. Schrader and asked if I would represent Washington the Fatherland, which was owned and edited by Mr. Viereck; I accepted this employment. The employment contemplated the writing of a letter by me for publication in each weekly issue of the Fatherland, for which I was to receive a weekly compensation of $40.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. I will explain that to you. It will be a little embarrassing to Mr. Schraeder, but I will do it. The compensation agreed upon was $40 a week. Your files, if they are complete, Mr. Humes, will show you that I received each week, from Mr. Schrader, a check made out by him for $30.

I said nothing about it. I have explained to you that I was not looking for the money. But when I was transferred to the Trans-Ocean News Service, to the embarrassment of Mr. Schrader, and to his wrath—and he has been down on me ever since—it was supposed that he was holding out $10 a week on me; against which I never complained, until it came to another point; and naturally I was embarrassed. He told me that he was using it in another way in Washington. I never objected to it, and said nothing about it until another event that you will run across there. Your check will show that Mr. Schrader's check came to me for $30 a week.

Maj. HUMES. The original employment contemplated the writing of a weekly letter to be published in the Fatherland. How many letters were published in the Fatherland?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think as many as three; certainly as many as two. You must have them.

Maj. HUMES. Either two or three?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. After that your communications were never printed in the Fatherland, were they?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Then there must have been a modification in the original agreement which you entered into with Mr. Schrader. What was that modification that was made in that agreement?

Mr. DICKINSON. I tried not to encumber that letter with too much detail. Either in a conversation with Mr. Schrader here or in New York—I was going to New York frequently on other business, and as a matter of fact I recall distinctly the event—the first time I met Mr. Viereck was at lunch with Mr. Schrader in the Fifth Avenue building. I had then been in his service for a month, and at least the letter had been withheld from publication, and either Mr. Schrader or Mr. Viereck said to me: “Now, our paper is small. Mr. Schrader is our regular correspondent. He goes there at heavy expense to the paper, once a week, to gather up data and material to write for the paper. We do not want to lose your services. If you will be good enough simply to write us informal letters out of which we may, on occasion, make a letter for publication, and hence continue your nom de plume of ‘Josiah Wingate,’ because I have not told the office, for obvious reasons, who you are, and some of my assistants might, at some time, put your name at the head of an article.” That was the end of the transaction, sir. I did not want to encumber that letter with all details of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. And it was felt that your services would be more valuable if you would write these personal confidential letters on political subjects and upon the foreign situation?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. To Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then, as though you would write letters to be published in the Fatherland?

Mr. DICKINSON. To write more freely, if you please, yes; out of which he might take several for publication.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you were to communicate, in these letters, confidential information that could not properly be published?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is strictly a conventional term, Maj. Humes, that is used in journalism, and used by lawyers—by yourself and many others. I had no confidences. I will show you that, directly. I sought no confidences.

Maj. HUMES. Then you did, when you commenced writing these purely personal letters, continue to use the nom de plume of “Josiah Wingate”?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did.

Maj. HUMES. Even though the letters were not to be published?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was the necessity, and how was a curiosity aroused by the use of the nom de plume “Josiah Wingate” in personal and confidential letters that you were sending to Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. I just explained that, I thought: That Mr. Viereck said that most any time he might make up out of these various letters a letter for publication, and that he did not want the assistants in his office to know who I was. I will explain after awhile. I know why he did not want the assistants in his office to know who I was, and if I signed my name his assistants might put the name on the letter for publication.

Maj. HUMES. Then it was not an open secret that you were the author of these letters?

Mr. DICKINSON. It was an open secret so far as I was concerned.

Maj. HUMES. So far as you and Viereck were concerned?

Mr. DICKINSON. And gentlemen have come to me since this thing came up and told me that I told them.

Permit me to say this. Even Capt. Lester has stated that I was a secret German agent, or posing as a secret German agent. A secret agent does not pose.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first meet Viereck after this arrangement was made?

Mr. DICKINSON. I met Mr. Viereck possibly three weeks, or possibly a month, after I was in his service.

Maj. HUMES. In New York or in Washington?

Mr. DICKINSON. In New York, at luncheon with Mr. Schrader at the Fifth Avenue Building.

Maj. HUMES. You went there to confer over the general employment?

Mr. DICKINSON. I had gone over there on some other matters. I called on Mr. Viereck, and I first called up Mr. Schrader, and he said: "I am glad you are here. I want you to meet Mr. Viereck. We will have lunch, and talk over things."

Maj. HUMES. Did you at any time during your employment concern yourself with reference to legislation pending or to be introduced?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not much.

Maj. HUMES. In which Mr. Viereck was interested?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not much.

Maj. HUMES. To what extent?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not recall to any extent, because Mr. Schrader had cut out that end of the work for himself. I am a lazy fellow and I rarely ever come up on the Hill.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a telegram dated April 1916, addressed to George Sylvester Viereck, and signed J. J. Dickinson. It follows:

Your splendid resolution received. Probably will be introduced by Senator Chamberlain, which will make it invincible. Senator Stone so advises. Look out for extensive newspaper publication within next few days. White House probably informed of it to-night.

What was the resolution and who finally introduced the resolution referred to?

Mr. DICKINSON. May I see that?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; here it is.

Mr. DICKINSON (reading):

Your splendid resolution received. Probably will be introduced by Senator Chamberlain, which will make it invincible. Senator Stone so advises. Look out for extensive newspaper publication within next few days. White House probably informed of it to-night by Stone.

I have absolutely no recollection of the subject or of sending such telegram, sir.

You can produce the original in my handwriting, I suppose. It is with the Western Union. The Western Union keeps its files very carefully. I have absolutely no recollection of the incident.

Senator OVERMAN. That is a photostat, is it?

Maj. HUMES. A photostat of the original; yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. A photostat of the original from the Western Union files?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Here in Washington? I have absolutely no recollection of it.

Maj. HUMES. You do not know what the resolution referred to?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was Mr. Viereck interested in that might be made the subject of a resolution about that time?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know, sir. I had absolutely no connection with Mr. Viereck at the time; absolutely no connection with Mr. Viereck at the time. Was that 1917?

Maj. HUMES. April, 1916.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, April, 1916?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. That was about a month after—

Mr. DICKINSON. I have no recollection of it, sir. That was April, 1916? I thought it meant 1917. I may have sent it, but I have absolutely no recollection of it. I must have conferred with Senator Stone about it. It was one of those instances, evidently, when Schraeder was not here, and Mr. Viereck wanted some action.

Maj. HUMES. Was there more than one such instance?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not recall any others. There may have been. That was all evidently for peace, yes; and while we were entirely neutral.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Dickinson, how frequently did you come in contact personally with Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is a hard thing to say. Whenever I would go to New York, nearly always I called on Mr. Viereck. For the three months during which I was connected with the Democratic National Committee, I saw him anywhere from one to three times a week, either in his office, the Democratic headquarters, or at the Manhattan Hotel where I was living.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Dickinson, did you ever meet him at 1123 Broadway?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, frequently, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That is where his office was?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is where his office was.

Maj. HUMES. And Dr. Fuehr's office was there?

Mr. DICKINSON. I knew nothing about Dr. Fuehr until you will come to it there, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first meet Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. I met Dr. Fuehr probably three days after the presidential election of 1916. My purpose was, as I knew that I had accomplished all that I could, to quit Mr. Viereck's service and I had indicated to him. Mr. Viereck called me over the telephone—it is as I described in that letter, sir—and asked if I would please come to his office. He knew that I was returning to Washington. Of course I went to his office. I was there presented to a splendid looking chap, a man of very high culture, as Dr. K. A. Fuehr. Mr. Viereck said: "I suppose you know Dr. Fuehr is at the head of the great Transcendental News Service." I said: "I never heard of him." And he said, then: "Oh, they have beautiful offices up at Fortieth Street and Fifth Avenue." Well, that was interesting. Dr. Fuehr then said to me with some fulsome flattery, that he had kept in close touch with me through Mr. Viereck, and that I had been very helpful to him in the Trans-Ocean News Service; that the war would soon be over and that he would like very much indeed for me to take over—that when this $40 business came out—that he would like very much for me, now, to take over regularly the Trans-Ocean News Service; that he regretted that his financial arrangements were such that he could not, at the moment, offer me more than the $40 a week that I had been getting. I spoke up and said: "I have been getting $30 a week"; and there was great confusion in Mr. Viereck's face in his manner, and he said: "Well, Mr. Schraeder will explain that to you." He has been holding out $10 a week on you to use for some party down in Washington that I knew nothing of." "Oh," I said, "that is all right."

So he said: "When this war is over, and I shall go back home, I would like to have you become our American manager."

Senator OVERMAN. That is what Dr. Fuehr said?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is what Dr. Fuehr said.

I said: "That is entirely legitimate, Doctor. Of course, the war will soon be over. He kept us out of the war. The American people have decided on that." The armies, then, were at least at stalemate on the western front, and I believe that the consensus of public opinion was that the war was hurrying very rapidly to a close.

He said: "I shall not be in the city a great deal. I frequently go out. Mr. Viereck is my assistant, and I wish you would continue under the present arrangement of sending your letters whenever you have one to write to Mr. Viereck so that he may handle whatever value there may be in them over the wires to Germany, to Berlin."

I said: "All right."

He said: "Now, since this arrangement is under your name, just continue that and there will be no confusion here, in Mr. Viereck's books"; and I very foolishly accepted that, without any suspicion in the world of what, ultimately, they were up to, which I found out long afterwards, which I hope to explain to this committee.

That is that transaction, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say that up to this time you had no knowledge of the commission which had brought Dr. Fuehr to this country?

Mr. DICKINSON. Absolutely none. I never heard of the matter before, and permit me here, if you please, to interject this. Capt. Lee said that I went to New York to meet Albert and others. I never saw Dr. Albert in my life.

Maj. HUMES. But you did meet Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did meet Dr. Fuehr on this occasion that I told you of and met him twice after that.

Maj. HUMES. Dr. Fuehr and Dr. Albert occupied offices in the same quarters practically?

Mr. DICKINSON. I knew absolutely nothing about it, sir.

Maj. HUMES. But you did meet Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did meet Dr. Fuehr under the circumstances that I have mentioned.

Maj. HUMES. Had you not met Dr. Fuehr prior to that time?

Mr. DICKINSON. I never had met Dr. Fuehr, though Mr. Viereck said to me, in the introduction: "You have met Dr. Fuehr once or twice before"? I said: "I do not remember meeting Dr. Fuehr, here."

Maj. HUMES. And from that time your employment was from Dr. Fuehr, but the arrangement was that the letters were to be addressed to Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And by Viereck delivered to Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. To be handled—yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. If your employment was from Fuehr, and Fuehr wanted the information——

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). Why was it addressed Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. Because he explained to me, sir, that he was out of the city a great deal, and Viereck was associated with him in the Trans-Ocean Service, and if he was out of the city Mr. Viereck would know what to do with whatever information of value there might be in the letters.

Maj. HUMES. When did you next see Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. I can not recall, exactly. I remember a rather sensational meeting I had with him. I saw him once or twice in his offices at Fortieth Street and Fifth Avenue, magnificent offices with a sign on the door "Trans-Ocean Service," I think I saw him twice, until my final meeting with him.

Maj. HUMES. For what purpose did you go to see him?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was in New York, and naturally went around to see him. He was not only a very pleasant gentleman, but the man whom I was serving.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not meet him at his request, for the purpose of taking matters up with the Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; I met him at his request to take up with Secretary Daniels—which I did—the liberalizing of the Sayville wireless station.

Senator OVERMAN. Taking up what?

Mr. DICKINSON. The Sayville wireless station. The German newspaper representatives in this country, so it was represented to me, were using the Sayville wireless station under very strict censorship of the Navy Department, to get news to Germany, and Dr. Fuehr and Viereck asked me if I would not take it up with Secretary Daniels. That, by the way, was the only time they paid my expenses for going to New York and coming back to Washington. I took the subject up with Secretary Daniels, telling him I was the representative of the Trans-Ocean News Service. I have forgotten what Secretary Daniels concluded.

Maj. HUMES. What was the character of information that you were to furnish to Mr. Viereck and Dr. Fuehr, under your arrangement?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, anything that I regarded as of any sort of value; and I sat down and wrote a lot of rot. I used many foolish expressions. You have all those letters there. I wish you would read them. I turned those letters up to the Government myself.

Senator OVERMAN. You say that you wrote a lot of rot?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, Senator, I used, naturally, in writing of sort, a lot of foolish expressions about men and measures. I am American. I have been a man of free habits and free speech my life.

Maj. HUMES. When did you deliver those letters to the Government, and to whom did you deliver them?

Mr. DICKINSON. Do you want me to tell that? Shall I tell here?

Senator OVERMAN. Answer the question asked.

Mr. DICKINSON. Various questions—when the so-called leak investigation was up—do you want me to introduce this here, then?

Maj. HUMES. Answer the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. When various persons were accused by the papers of the land of being the author of what became known as a leak note, among the persons so accused were Mr. Joseph P. Tumulty, the President's confidential friend and secretary, and the President's own brother-in-law. I can not recall the host of names that were mentioned, now, of those who were then accused. I sat around hearing and watched that thing for some time.

Senator NELSON. Was not Mr. Baruch one of them?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; I will come to Mr. Baruch presently. I watched them some time, and they were not getting anywhere. I said to myself, "I wonder"—sometimes I have saved copies of things if there happens to be a black sheet near my typewriter at home. Usually I do not. Well, I rooted around and rooted around, and could not find it, and I said, "I will go to Bob Henry, anyhow."

Senator NELSON. To whom?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Henry, who was then chairman of the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, which committee was then investigating the so-called leak matter.

I went to Henry first at his home in the Burlington apartment house. He looked at me in amazement. He said, "Dickinson, is it possible you did that?" I said, "I did, and I wrote it on the 15th of December, and the President's peace note was written on the 15th of December." He said, "That is most remarkable." He said, "Can you find a copy?" I said, "That is it, Bob; I do not know where I can or not." I remembered then that I had written to Viereck two forms of notes. One was not satisfactory; it may have been a little too positive or not positive enough, and I shoved one of them off. I wrote out—which note you must have there, sir, if you have both of them; and in rooting around in an old drawer at home where I kept my old typewriter, thank God, I found that note. I did not take it directly first to Mr. Henry. I took it first to Tumulty in the White House, who was then smarting under the sting of the accusation. With great agitation and gratitude he said, "Of course you are going to turn that up." I said, "Yes, I am; I am going to turn it up right now, because I went to him last night and told him about this."

I went up to Henry and I handed him the copy and I said to him, "There is absolutely nothing legitimate in this note. I figured it out, just like Mr. Barney Baruch says he doped it out. I am on the stand and I will testify to that, and maybe that will save me from unjust accusation." He then put me in conference two lawyers, Mr. Whipple, of Boston, and his young assistant. I said, "There it is."

I have never heard from that note from that day until this, until I heard that Viereck's offices had been raided. That is the note that I am accused of boasting about.

I wrote the same note to a Wall Street client of mine. I shall give that name here to the committee if the committee wants to know it, and investigate it. If I connect it here, the newspaper press will say that those great financiers, patriotic American citizens, were part of the German spy system with me. So that is the history, gentlemen, of the so-called leak note.

Senator NELSON. Who was the German banker you referred to?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not a German banker, sir. On the contrary, not a German financier.

Senator NELSON. Who was he?

Mr. DICKINSON. Must I tell it here?

Senator OVERMAN. Answer the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. John F. Harris, of Harris, Winthrop & Co., 55 Wall Street. I represented them here, sir, legitimately. I wrote him the same note, expecting as the result of it, if it was true, that he would get rich.

But now let me tell these circumstances, which I know will be testified to if you want that. The peace note of the President was delivered December 18, before the Congress of the United States. Wednesday evening was December 11. That is the way I can accurately fix the date in my mind. On that occasion there was dining with me a gentleman who was then of the grade of commander in the United States Navy. He is now a captain. His name is Charles Conard, and he is stationed at the Washington Navy Yard. I had contact with him in a telephone call. I do not say anything about that, although in another statement I made a mistake, and stated it was Viereck, but it was not Viereck that I called up, it was John F. Harris, as Capt. Conard will testify. I was uneasy lest I had gone wrong. I had gone around town that day, and I could not get any hint that the President was going to deliver his peace note the next day. As soon as I got home I put in a telephone call to Mr. John F. Harris at the Plaza Hotel in New York, and in my eagerness I would go to the telephone once in a while, in the presence of Capt. Conard, and ask if they could find Mr. Harris. He kept quarters in the Plaza in the winter. They could not find him. The best information they could give was that he would not be there that night. I then told Conard what I had done. I said to him, "I am afraid John Harris will bust himself. I must call him up some way, and let him exercise his own judgment."

The next day Conard ragged me all over the club because I had said the note was going to be delivered by the President, and I got cold feet.

Senator NELSON. What was the interest in the peace note?

Mr. DICKINSON. Wall Street was not interested in the peace note. Mr. Bernard Baruch testified, like the man he was, before the leak investigation, that he reasoned it out along the lines that I did, apparently, and that he made out of steel stocks alone $500,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was it that ragged you about that?

Mr. DICKINSON. Capt. Conard. He was joking me about it in that way; that if I had stood pat I would have been a rich man.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Baruch reasoned that out?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; he just exercised his judgment on it.

Senator NELSON (continuing). That it was coming, and he made half million dollars out of it?

Mr. DICKINSON. He so testified before the leak investigating committee.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know; he did not say how much he made in other stocks. My recollection is that he made it out of steel and iron. That is the note that Capt. Lester says I boasted about. I would you would call Capt. Conard, if you have any doubt about my word. I told him about it. I have not seen him or spoken to him about it. I have seen nobody since I returned to Washington, under this disgraceful and wholly unfounded charge.

Maj. HUMES. That is the one letter you delivered, then, to the Government; the only letter, about the leak investigation?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; will you let me explain why I delivered it?

Senator OVERMAN. I think you have fully explained why you delivered that?

Mr. DICKINSON. It dawned upon me then that that Viereck crowd had been using me, without my knowledge, for the purpose of financing their criminal German propaganda through Wall Street; so there was a double reason I had for turning it over to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, which was investigating the leak.

Senator NELSON. Was there a leak?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I merely doped it out, to use a common vulgar expression. The note will show for itself. The gentlemen have all those things.

Senator NELSON. You represented that there was a leak; but as a matter of fact, there was not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not use the term——

Senator NELSON. You used the term "doped."

Mr. DICKINSON. I used the very common and vulgar word "doped."

Senator NELSON. What was it you doped out?

Mr. DICKINSON. I simply reasoned it out that the President was going to act along that line, and Congress then was adjourning. I see——

Senator NELSON. You reasoned it out, just like Baruch did?

Mr. DICKINSON. Just about, sir. I claim no credit for that.

Senator NELSON. You and he were reasoning on parallel lines?

Mr. DICKINSON. It seems so. I had no relation with Mr. Baruch. I only knew him in a casual way.

Senator NELSON. But you were both good guessers?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; it turned out that way.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the day that you turned this leak over?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not, sir. It was in the midst of the so-called leak investigation, and that investigation was in March.

Maj. HUMES. Did you take this matter up with Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I did not take it up with Mr. Viereck.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not call up Mr. Viereck on the telephone and discuss with him the question as to whether or not you had communicated with him on this subject?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I did not. I will show you the only other communication I had directly or indirectly with Mr. Viereck presently. The telegram must have come in midweek, if I sent it when Fuehr was not there. I have absolutely no recollection of the incident.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter addressed to you at the National Press Club, at Washington, D. C., from Mr. Viereck, dated February 6, 1917, which reads as follows:

FEB. 6TH, 1917.

MY DEAR MAJOR DICKINSON: You told me over the phone to-day that you may be called as a witness in the "leak" inquiry and asked me if I remembered our having informed me of the President's action. I have no recollection of our having given me any specific information on the subject whatsoever.

I am glad to be of service to you and if this letter will be of any assistance you have my permission to use it.

Sincerely, yours,

Major J. J. DICKINSON,
National Press Club,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not remember ever receiving any such letter. I may have received it. I had no telephone communication. It is the most obvious thing in the world why I should not have telephone communication with a man like him.

Maj. HUMES. You have no recollection of having called him on the telephone?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Viereck wrote me many curious letters; letters that are curious in the light of this development.

Maj. HUMES. Now what other letter did you turn over to the Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the only one I recollect, sir; the only letter I have of any value.

Maj. HUMES. If this letter was written by Mr. Viereck and if you did call him on the telephone——

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not remember receiving it at all.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). You called him at a time that you were in the employ of Fuehr rather than Viereck, did you not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was in the employ of Fuehr in March? No, sir; I was not.

Maj. HUMES. That is February, 1917?

Mr. DICKINSON. This is February, 1917. I was not even in his employ then.

Maj. HUMES. In December, when this alleged "leak" occurred, you were in the employ of Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; yes, sir; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In order to refresh your recollection, I show you what purports to be the last check you received——

Mr. DICKINSON. Signed Viereck?

Maj. HUMES. From Mr. Viereck, dated February 5, 1917.

Mr. DICKINSON. $40, I suppose that was.

Maj. HUMES. That was the end of your employment?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. I will tell you about that, too, if you want to know. It is all set forth in the letter to Gen. Churchill.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to photostats of what purport to be the letters, or at least a portion of the letters, that you wrote to Mr. Viereck.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, probably there will be some of these letters here after awhile.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Mr. Dickinson, I ask you to look them over and tell us whether or not those are the letters which you wrote.

Mr. DICKINSON. That I can say offhand. This letter sounds like me. I want to say here that every letter I wrote to Viereck, with the possible exception of one or two hurriedly scribbled notes, were written either on my own typewriter at home, a Royal typewriter, or a Royal typewriter at the National Press Club—or whatever typewriter may be. Sometimes the Royal typewriter was not to be had there, and I would pick up the first I could get hold of.

I am charged here, however, gentlemen, in your records, with having written all these letters to Viereck in a crumpled, disguised handwriting. I could not hope to inflict a greater punishment upon my worst enemy than to write him a long letter in longhand and force him to read it. It is in the record that I wrote all these letters in a crumpled, disguised hand. Give me your letters.

Maj. HUMES. You have replied to it; and if it is so, we are not to say it is not correct, they were not written in a crumpled hand, and if such a statement is in the record it is there from inadvertence or error.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; I should say it was in error. I will have my own official record here to show you that it was said, that all these letters were so written by me.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is of no particular consequence.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think it is of great consequence to me, sir.

Maj. HUMES. The fact is they are not written in your own handwriting.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. But it was stated that I had written them in a crumpled, disguised longhand, and that statement was made for an object.

Maj. HUMES. We will look that up at our leisure. As I understand it, the National Press Club was your headquarters in connection with this matter, where you got your mail and wrote these letters.

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir, it was not my headquarters. I received some letters there and some at my house and some at another place which I belonged to, which you are trying to get me in dispute with.

Maj. HUMES. I notice that the letters are, many of them, on the letterhead of the National Press Club.

Mr. DICKINSON. The paper and the typewriters are there for the use of its members.

Senator NELSON. In your letter of June 4, of which I have a copy here—

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON (continuing). It begins with this statement addressed to Mr. Viereck: "Please note by the above that I am now receiving my mail at the National Press Club instead of the Army and Navy Club as heretofore."

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. "The reason being that I find it more convenient to use the first-named club, in doing my work, than the latter."

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; because the typewriters are there. There are no typewriters at the Army and Navy Club, sir. And they are loyal typewriters there; yes, sir. That explains, then, why communication thereafter came to the National Press Club.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Dickinson—

Mr. DICKINSON. Senator Nelson seems to have a question, sir.

Senator NELSON. Oh, no; I am through. Go ahead. I am just adding for my own information.

Maj. HUMES. What were the sources of information that you relied yourself of in order to write these letters?

Mr. DICKINSON. My own head and judgment, sir, mainly.

Maj. HUMES. Entirely speculation?

Mr. DICKINSON. Very largely, and intended so to be.

Maj. HUMES. It was not based upon personal interviews and—

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, some of them may have been.

Maj. HUMES. Possibly confidential information?

Mr. DICKINSON. I had no confidential sources of information, sir. You charge the Government with a very foolish criminal act when you say I had confidential sources of information. I may have inquired of them that I got this in confidence—a very common thing for a newspaper man to do.

Senator NELSON. Your statement here, in your letter of June 4th, is not true, "I had a long talk, somewhat startling, frank, this morning, with a cabinet officer on this whole subject."

Mr. DICKINSON. I may probably have had a talk and may not have had, sir. If you will read the full context of the letter—

Senator NELSON. It is a long letter. I simply refer to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I may have had and may not have had.

Senator OVERMAN. You would not have stated it if you had not had it?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, for some purpose of getting the confidence of Viereck, which I was always trying to get, to find out what he was up to; he was too shifty for me.

Maj. HUMES. You got the man's confidence?

Mr. DICKINSON. I never did get his confidence. He was too crafty for me. Schrader was my man, whom I had, because I had the most confidence in Fred Schrader. I do not know whether the Government has gotten after him or not.

Maj. HUMES. In view of your statement you made a moment ago, that is my recollection—and if I am not right we can determine that later—that the testimony to which you refer with relation to the handwriting was that the letters were signed in a crumpled handwriting?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will read from the official record.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to this letter of October 24, and ask you if you would not call that signature somewhat crumpled?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. I write a crumpled hand.

Maj. HUMES. And it is signed Josiah Wingate?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. I do not know whether that is my letter or not. I have not read it. They put over a lot of letters on me, for a purpose, that I will develop pretty soon, sir. I am not denying letter. I did not even know its contents or its date.

Maj. HUMES. I understood you to identify these letters.

Mr. DICKINSON. For your purposes I will identify them all ahead; and then when they come up if I can not prove to you was a letter put over on me, I stand guilty.

Maj. HUMES. I do not propose to read these to you one after other. I want to identify them all, and I wish you would look over and advise us as to whether or not those are your letters.

Senator OVERMAN. Look them over carefully.

Mr. DICKINSON. It will take me some time. Yes, that letter I have been mine, this letter telling him of the change of my address. Here is another letter signed in typewriter.

There is a matter that I remember writing about, and I want to tell you and the committee about that directly—that name I have been able to recall it before, sir.

(Mr. Dickinson turned over a number of letters and in so doing made the following statements:)

Yes, sir. I must assume that everything on National Press paper was written by me.

Some of them necessarily are not written by me.

I know what has been going on about me since this thing.

Maj. HUMES. We have no desire to use any letter that we are sure is your letter, Mr. Dickinson.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

This looks like mine, from the correction I have made—that mine, sir. It looks very much like my typewriting. And so is this. I do not know what it is. Yes, sir. Yes, sir. Yes, sir. I wrote this party anyway. Expressed my sentiments. I hope will read it.

Maj. HUMES. I have. Your wish has been gratified.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. I remember those letters now.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Dickinson, would you go over with Maj. Humes all these letters and identify them, that is, those that you

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Major, I am going to adjourn this committee for the reason I have to be in the Senate about 12 o'clock, until past 2. You may go ahead now with anything else until that

Maj. HUMES. You have identified them?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, up to this point. I am not denying. I only looking them over in a general way.

Senator NELSON. You can go over the whole of them now, until we meet again.

Maj. HUMES. He is practically through with them. We will be through in a little while.

Mr. DICKINSON. That looks like my scratching.

This looks like my erasure.

Senator OVERMAN. I am going to leave the stenographer here with Maj. Humes and let you identify all these letters, or refuse to identify them as you may, and then we will meet here at half past 2, then we will proceed with this investigation. The committee is adjourned now until half past 2.

Mr. DICKINSON. This looks like my writing. What is that?

other possible purpose that I may have to resort to here. This is a letter—

Senator OVERMAN. Show the letter to Maj. Humes before you read it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. [Handing the letter to Maj. Humes.]

Maj HUMES. This is a letter of good will, really, and of personal confidence, I assume.

Mr. DICKINSON. Of course I have many friends who have written to me in a similar vein to this. I do not introduce this in the hope that it will be bolstering up my character, which has been attacked, but for another purpose which it may be necessary to resort to in this proceeding.

The letter reads:

[Duval West, Judge, United States District Court, Western District of Texas.]

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS,
December 14, 1918.

December 13 the attack was made on me. [Reading:]

Major J. J. DICKINSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DICK: I see by the San Antonio Express this morning, from the Associated Press wires reporting statements made before a committee of inquiry before Congress, that your name figures as that of one who assisted Viereck in German propaganda. This has distressed Mrs. West and myself greatly, more because it will prove a source of worry and annoyance to Mrs. Dickinson than for any effect it might have upon you otherwise. Of course, for those who know you as I do, the vague and shadowy insinuations, appearing mostly in the headlines, are not worthy of the slightest consideration. I assume that you do care for the opinions of those who know you, and it is only for that reason that I am taking the first opportunity of mentioning the matter. For those who don't know you, and never will, you probably don't give a continental.

You will, of course, perceive that the main purpose of this letter is to advise you of a very unnecessary thing—that is, that the friendship of a lifetime and my intimate knowledge of your generous characteristics and unbounded patriotism prompt me to take my stand by your side when unjustly accused, and to authorize you to use my name without reservation and without limit, in full voucher for you as a man and an American.

I hope you will not take this matter too much to heart, or let it worry you, and in the meanwhile let me know in what way I can serve you.

Yours always,

. DUVAL WEST, District Judge.

I say I introduce that merely to lay the groundwork for another matter that it may be necessary to bring out.

Maj. HUMES. I believe you have stated that all of the money you got came from Mr. Viereck; that is, your regular stipend, your weekly stipend, came from Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. I said it came from Mr. Schrader. I knew it was Mr. Viereck's money—that is, I assumed it was.

Maj. HUMES. But the checks are Viereck's checks?

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask you, Major, if you have no checks at all?

Maj. HUMES. I have.

Mr. DICKINSON. I received checks from Viereck only after I took over the Trans-Ocean News Service, and had a row about that.

Maj. HUMES. To refresh your recollection, I show you a number of checks in January and February, 1917.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir, that is when I was representing the Trans-Ocean News Service, and getting the checks.

Maj. HUMES. They are all from Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. I got one from Viereck, over which I had a note.

Maj. HUMES. If you were an employee of Dr. Fuehr and the Trans-Ocean News Service, did you not think it was strange that this indebtedness was being liquidated by Mr. Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. In the light of developments it does seem strange. I tried to explain this morning why it was Viereck and not Schuler who was thereafter to send me the checks. If I have not made that plain, I will restate it. I think if you get hold of my record and do not want to encumber it too much——

Maj. HUMES. I think you stated the reason why you sent the letter to Mr. Viereck, but you did not state why you received the checks in this manner.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am very glad of the opportunity to explain that, although I am confident I did it this morning. In my arrangement with them, Dr. Fuehr—whom I had never seen until that occasion—said that he was out of the city a great deal, that Mr. Viereck was associated with him in the Trans-Ocean News Service, that Mr. Viereck was the judge of the news value of whatever I should send them, and that Mr. Viereck should exercise his judgment when he was not there, in order that the stuff might be expedited. Dr. Fuehr was out of town. I said that this morning, and I repeat it.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first discover that Dr. Fuehr was a representative of the German Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. I discovered it when I saw his name in the list of those persons who left this country, I think with Ambassador von Bernstorff.

Maj. HUMES. Did it occur to you when you went to Secretary Daniels to undertake to straighten out the Trans-Ocean News Service and the regulations of the Sayville station, that you were doing that at the request of a representative of the German Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. It did not, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a sentence from the letter which you addressed to Gen. Churchill, and to which you referred this morning.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. Please let me get that letter.

Maj. HUMES. Paragraph 15 of that letter. I read the following——

Mr. DICKINSON. Paragraph 15?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I read as follows:

On two or three occasions I now realize Viereck subtly invited me to assure him that I could be entrusted implicitly to work with him for the German cause.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. If this was purely a private enterprise, why was Mr. Viereck asking for assurance of loyalty in supporting his effort to help the German cause?

Mr. DICKINSON. The statement explains itself, if you will be good enough to read that whole paragraph; the context explains it. Shall I read it?

Maj. HUMES. You can read it if you so desire.

Mr. DICKINSON. Paragraph 15?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; that is the one I was referring to.

Mr. DICKINSON (reading):

I recall an occasion, I think during the presidential campaign, when St. John Gaffney, who had been removed as U. S. Consul at Munich because of his pro-Germanism, left Viereck's office just as I entered. I had known Gaffney for good many years, but when I hailed him as he was doing out a side door he either did not hear me or pretended not to hear me and did not respond to my salutation. I remarked upon this to Viereck, and he told me that Gaffney had been telling him for some time not to trust me too far, that I was probably assigned by the State Department to spy upon Viereck and his confreres. I laughed at this, and after I left Viereck the statement as to Gaffney's assertion caused me to reflect upon the habitual attitude of Viereck and others under him toward me.

Permit me to remark, there, that Mr. Schrader's attitude never was that way. [Continuing reading:]

I realized then that I was distinctly distrusted. On two or three occasions I now realize Viereck subtly invited me to assure him that I could be trusted implicitly to work with him for the German cause.

I realized that after I began to summarize my relations with the man. That is what, of course, that means. [Continuing reading:]

Where he approached me in this manner I always repelled him, coupled with the assurance that I was neither pro-German nor pro-Ally in the factional sense; that I was merely pro-American and believed that President Wilson could keep us out of the European war.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not, in that letter, say that you came to that realization the day that you met Gaffney at Viereck's office?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is what called it to my attention.

Maj. HUMES. And at that time you realized that Viereck had been asking you to assure him of your loyalty to the German cause?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not say "assure." Shall I read it again, sir, so as to be perfectly clear? I assume the record will have the thing literally, however?

Maj. HUMES. Well, "trusted," to work with him in the German cause is the word that you used.

Mr. DICKINSON (reading):

He pretended not to hear me, and did not respond to my salutation. I remarked on this to Viereck and he told me that Gaffney had been telling him for some time not to trust me too far, that I was probably assigned by the State Department to spy upon Viereck and his confreres.

If you will permit me, I will explain, there. Obviously Gaffney was still under the impression that I had some connection with the State Department, which I did not have at that time. [Continuing reading:]

I laughed at this, and after I left Viereck the statement as to Gaffney's assertion caused me to reflect upon the habitual attitude of Viereck and others under him towards me.

I remarked here this morning that I was always trying to get the man's confidence. I would not insult the intelligence of this committee by saying that I was not suspicious at the last.

Maj. HUMES. You did know, at that time, that Viereck's cause was the German cause, did you not?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; and we were at peace.

Maj. HUMES. And you were proposing to help Viereck in every way that you could?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was proposing to help Viereck preserve the peace, as I have said here. I told you that.

Maj. HUMES. Preserving the peace at that time was working for the German cause, was it?

Mr. DICKINSON. From his viewpoint it was working for the German cause, yes; as well as ours.

Maj. HUMES. And the German propaganda, at that time, was to keep the United States out of the war?

Mr. DICKINSON. So far as any propaganda I am aware of, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, I call your attention, also, to paragraph 13 of this letter:

I have realized that they were attempting to use me for a sinister purpose.

Mr. DICKINSON. Paragraph 13, you say?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; the third line I am reading from:

I did not realize it at the time, though frequent suspicions would arise in my mind.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, with your recollection refreshed in that particular, do you still say that you did not know that Dr. Fuehr was an official representative of the German Government at the time he had these negotiations with him?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Or at least that you were not suspicious that he was so connected?

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not, sir; and I think in fairness that I should be permitted to read that full paragraph. Will you permit me to do so?

Maj. HUMES. Very well.

Mr. DICKINSON. Paragraph 13 reads:

In view of the events that have followed my relations with Viereck through Viereck with Dr. Fuehr, I regret very much that I ever had any connection with them. I have realized that they were attempting to use me for a sinister purpose. I did not realize it at the time, though frequent suspicions would arise in my mind. In the light of the revelations showing the amount of money that Viereck must have had at his disposal I confess that I reflect upon the small compensation I received, that I feel as if I were not only a fool but a veritable "piker."

I meant, gentlemen, that I now realized it in the light of developments.

Maj. HUMES. You did have suspicions at the time, did you not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would not try to insult the intelligence of anybody by saying that I did not have suspicions latterly.

Maj. HUMES. Did you make any inquiry or investigation to verify those suspicions?

Mr. DICKINSON. I depended wholly upon Fred Schrader as a man of honor, and he was always assuring me that his money was in the Fatherland and that it was intended to be a permanent publication.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever ask Schrader who Dr. Fuehr was?

Mr. DICKINSON. I had never known Dr. Fuehr until I met him on that occasion, and I do not think I have ever seen Schrader since that time to talk with him, except when he was very angry with me.

Maj. HUMES. Then from whom else did you undertake to secure information when you became suspicious?

Mr. DICKINSON. Nobody at all.

Maj. HUMES. Then your suspicions were not sufficient to move you to any action?

Mr. DICKINSON. Except to keep a wary eye out, yes.

Maj. HUMES. What did you think this Trans-Ocean News Service was?

Mr. DICKINSON. Is that the end of your question, now?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Trans-Ocean News Service was represented to me as the American end of what was being quoted always as the Over-Seas News Agency. It figured in our Associated Press dispatches, and in all dispatches from Europe. That is what it was represented to me to be.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that they had the wireless station at Sayville?

Mr. DICKINSON. I had always been told that every wireless station was plugged up tight, and under the very strictest surveillance of the Navy Department.

Maj. HUMES. Why was that done? Why were these wireless stations closed?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have no idea, sir. The official mind understood that.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Dickinson, besides writing these letters giving Mr. Viereck certain information, did you interest yourself in the course that should be pursued by Viereck and by those that Viereck was associated with in a public, political way?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, I naturally did, to some extent, sir. I used obvious methods, though, to arrive at that result.

Maj. HUMES. On June 23, 1916, you close a letter by saying:

Let us do something to reveal this whole damnable business—and do it quickly. I am willing and anxious to serve in this cause in any capacity to which I may be assigned.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What does that mean?

Mr. DICKINSON. If you will please read the letter, I will tell you.

Maj. HUMES. I will read the whole letter, then.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well; I hope you will.

Maj. HUMES. The letter is as follows:

THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB,
Washington, June 25, 1916.

DEAR MR. VIERECK: I suppose that you have inferred from my last letter that I am crazy, and that this accounts for my not having heard from you. I still believe, however, that the H. G. Wells book could be used to excellent advantage in the way of checking what I perceive to be a drift, backed by the most powerful political influences in America, toward a break with Germany. In Wells's "New Worlds for Old" and Howe's "Socialization of Germany" there are plain statements of actual facts which would define to the average American intelligence in sharp outline the differences in the two peoples and civilizations in such a way as to cause a shifting about of relations in this country. We Americans are not the fools the financiers and politicians take us to be.

As further evidence of my conviction of a shrewdly devised scheme to tie us to the body of a corpse—England—is the propaganda started by the Wilson forces to place the blame for the extremely embarrassing situation in Mexico upon Germany. For several days I have observed the growth of this movement, and I now predict confidently that within a short time the whole press will take up this foolish cry. I am prepared to believe that naturally German diplomacy has concerned itself sharply over the situation in Mexico and of its relations and purposes. But that Germany has contributed to the danger of the crisis that now confronts the Administration I do not and cannot believe. The Administration has only its own incompetency to blame for this. But, of course, if Germany can be made the scape goat it will serve to bolster up the hyphen plank of the St. Louis platform.

Keep your eye on the dispatches from Washington in the newspapers for a week or two, and then tell me if you think I am crazy or not.

If the hyphen does not see what is threatening him and this country is blinder than I had thought him to be.

Let us do something to reveal this whole damnable business and do it quickly. I am willing and anxious to serve in this cause in any capacity in which I may be assigned.

Faithfully,

JOSIAH WINGAT

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. I dare say I wrote that letter, and made it so vehement for a purpose.

Senator NELSON. What was the damnable purpose you refer to?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not remember just what it was. Something was going on at the time. I was never pro-British in my life.

Senator NELSON. Was it going on here or elsewhere?

Mr. DICKINSON. It must have been going on here or elsewhere. I was never pro-British in my life. I am more nearly pro-British now than I ever was.

Maj. HUMES. You also communicated to Mr. Viereck activities of the War Department along preparation lines, did you not?

Mr. DICKINSON. I expect I did. The newspapers were doing so every day.

Maj. HUMES. Was that information that was publicly announced from the War or Navy Departments?

Mr. DICKINSON. No more than it was in the daily newspapers. I had no inside information.

Maj. HUMES. If it was publicly announced in the newspapers, was it necessary for you, under this nom de plume, to communicate to Mr. Viereck, who already had the information?

Mr. DICKINSON. That answers itself. Because I wanted to do something probably, and had nothing else to write about. Are those the letters that I have identified?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I just hurriedly looked over them and saw that they were my typewriting.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I am confining it to the letters that you have identified.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You also communicated on July 20 with Mr. Viereck, and told him that the American Navy had secret orders, secret instructions, to work against Germany, did you not—against the central powers?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not remember any letter of that sort, and I doubt exceedingly that I wrote any.

Maj. HUMES. This is one of the letters that you identified this morning.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would have had no information as to secret orders of the American Navy. I would have had no access to such information.

Maj. HUMES. I will read it to you.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish you would read it out.

Maj. HUMES (reading) :

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. VIERECK : Nothing of the same relative importance has occurred since the opening of the war in Europe as the U-boat inquiry at Baltimore promises. If the Deutschland shall be captured or destroyed by a vessel of the Allied powers, the fault will be ours. No sophistry of international comity can relieve of this responsibility.

I wonder if you have thought of this? I also wonder if your associates have given the subject such careful thought as may result in a just judgment of our obligations?

Who were Mr. Viereck's associates that you referred to?

Mr. DICKINSON. Schrader and others; his editorial advisers.

Maj. HUMES. What is "and others"? Who were the others? Dr. Huehr, was he one of them?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir. Mr. Coleman, formerly the financial writer on the New York Herald, associated there with me, Schrader, Coleman, and Viereck.

Maj. HUMES. I proceed with the letter [reading] :

Our Navy has been secretly instructed to work against the interest of the Central Powers. A considerable element of the Navy, whom I happen to know personally, is opposed to discrimination between the nations; but most of this element is favorably inclined toward the Teutonic element.

If we can arrange to get together the various elements, which in detail may be opposed to the British programme but which may endorse our general programme without admitting that they do so, I am confident that we may accomplish something worth while.

Faithfully, yours,

JOSIAH WINGATE.

Mr. DICKINSON. "Something worth while" to prevent war. I dare say I wrote that letter. "Something worth while" to prevent war.

Maj. HUMES. You undertook to communicate with Mr. Viereck what purported to be secret orders to the American Navy?

Mr. DICKINSON. I can not imagine that I said "secret orders." If I did it was a slip of the typewriter. I had no information as to secret orders affecting the Navy.

Maj. HUMES. Then that is an erroneous statement on your part, and you had no fact to base it on?

Mr. DICKINSON. Obviously not. I must have had an impression of some kind, if I wrote that letter, and it sounds like me.

Senator NELSON. A sort of a prediction of the weather?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. On June 14, you wrote a letter to Mr. Viereck in which you said, among other things:

In this connection it is interesting to note that by order of the President the War Department is preparing advertisements for nine thousand army trucks in addition to the two thousand already to be bid for at the Depot Quartermaster's headquarters in New York June 30th. This is one of the most positive signs observable of Wilson's purpose to do something sensational before the Presidential campaign closes, etc.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is probably referring to Mexico. That was in all the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. Why was it necessary, then, to call it to Mr. Viereck's attention?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was doing it all the time.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you get the information that was as a basis for that?

Mr. DICKINSON. Where other newspaper men got it.

Senator NELSON. It was a sort of what they call among theatrical people "stage thunder"?

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, sir, if that is your definition of it. It has been a matter that was being written about in the public prints and so forth.

Senator OVERMAN. You say you got it where other newspaper men got it?

Mr. DICKINSON. Unquestionably.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know where other newspaper men got it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know where they got it. It was a matter of public notoriety, or I would not have known of it.

Maj. HUMES. In your letter of August 20, 1916—

Mr. DICKINSON. Where was that from?

Maj. HUMES. From the National Press Club, Washington.

Senator NELSON. What year, 1916?

Maj. HUMES. 1916; yes, sir. I note the following:

I confess that although I have been some closer to the throne than you here in Washington and have discussed our foreign affairs, in their general specific aspects, with many men who are supposed to have had to do with shaping, I do not know what it all means, whither we have drifted or drifting, and what finally will come of it all. I do know that the whole of our European policy since the war began has been away from the Central Powers and toward the Entente Allies and that is about all I do feel concerned about. I know, furthermore, that the Administration is anxious to catch Germany in a trap on the submarine question, and that we shall probably have a great deal on this question before the votes are cast in November.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; as I say, I wrote that.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; and at that time you say you were in close touch with foreign affairs.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, that is a conventional expression. I might have said that I was in close touch with foreign affairs.

Maj. HUMES. And that there was an effort to entrap Germany in the submarine controversy?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. Senator Stone and myself were long friends. I used to talk to him very plainly about it, when he was in the Senate—what he was doing trying to prevent this war.

Senator NELSON. That word "throne" is simply a figure of speech of Mr. Hughes? It might cover the White House, or it might cover Capitol Hill, or it might cover the buildings down on the White Lot.

Maj. HUMES. I also in the same letter call your attention to this sentence:

An interesting incident connected with the conference at the White House yesterday between Wilson and the big railroad managers seems to have escaped the newspapers.

You were not confining yourself in your letters to Mr. Viereck matters printed in the public prints, were you?

Mr. DICKINSON. No. Probably that was an interesting thing that I happened to hear about from some source, and I was telling about it. I don't even recall any conference between Wilson and the railroad men. There must have been one.

Senator NELSON. I think Viereck and the Fatherland got the worst end of this thing?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Here are these letters, and if it is the desire of the committee to have them put in the record in connection with this testimony—

Senator OVERMAN. What letters?

Maj. HUMES. The letters that we have had here that you have looked over. He has identified all of these letters.

Mr. DICKINSON. In a general way, I identified them.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think they ought to go in?

Maj. HUMES. In connection with the testimony, I think it would explain and complete the testimony, and I think in fairness to the record already made up that it would only be proper to make them a part of the record, in order to justify the testimony that has been presented.

Senator OVERMAN. Let them go in.

(A letter referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. VIERECK: I think your treatment of the Presidential campaign the last Fatherland was just about right. It harmonizes very well with what I perceive to be the situation and the hyphen's proper attitude. I account myself a sort of hyphen on the German question and believe, egotistical as it may sound, that the views I have expressed to you will finally prevail with the American people.

There are low rumblings at the White House premonitory of happenings of interest affecting the British question. I have been unable as yet to get an accurate line on what they mean. I doubt not, however, that the President will make plain his meaning before he formally breaks diplomatic relations with Mexico preliminary to a declaration of war. There is much being said, too, concerning the reports of the advent of a new German submarine in American waters, coupled with the assertion in some quarters that its real destination is Mexico. All assertions of this character of course, come from sources hostile to the continuance of good relations between us and Germany, rather hostile to the restoration of those relations. Whether or not these reports are affecting the Presidential mind or purpose I do not know, but I strongly suspect that they are being made chiefly with this object in view.

Three leading Missouri Democrats today, among their number being Senator Boone, told the President that Missouri at this time was strongly against him and that they would be unable to check this drift until he helped them by making a vigorous declaration on the British question. One of them told me that he had informed the President that because of the generally accepted attitude of the Administration toward German-American sentiment Missouri is today a much more doubtful state even than New York. I look for representations of this sort by his friends to produce the desired effect upon Wilson's mind, and this is what is strengthening my belief in his purpose soon to give us something that will put aggressions of English navalism in the same category from his viewpoint with many phases of the German issue.

Faithfully,

JOSIAH WINGATE.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Dickinson, I ask you to look at that signature, and tell us whether that is your signature.

(A paper was shown to the witness.)

Mr. DICKINSON. If that were my signature, let me ask you, Would you want to say "Signed, Josiah Wingate."?

Maj. HUMES. I am not being examined.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask, Is the letter signed in that way, or attested?

Maj. HUMES. That is a photostat of the letter.

Mr. DICKINSON. That was written October 24, 1916. I never wrote that letter. I can not see any harm in it. If it has been written and put over on me, not by you, but by Mr. Viereck—I never had occasion to write such a letter; I never wrote such a letter.

Maj. HUMES. This letter that the witness fails to identify is very important in this particular, that it is one of the photostat letters that were a part of the Military Intelligence that was used in accordance with the theory of the committee as the basis of the testimony that was presented here, and is authority for certain statements that were made. In fairness to the witness who appeared in behalf of the Military Intelligence, it strikes me that it is only fair that this matter should go into the record to show his justification.

Senator OVERMAN. Was the statement of Capt. Lester in respect to such a letter?

Maj. HUMES. He referred to this letter in connection with his testimony, and it was his authority for making certain statements that he did make.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in.

Mr. DICKINSON. Can not the letter be read?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Please read it. I never saw the letter before.
Capt. LESTER (reading):

October 24, 1916. My dear Mr. Viereck:—

Mr. DICKINSON. Where is that dated from?

Capt. LESTER. There is no place on it, Mr. Dickinson. [Reading]

OCTOBER 24, 1916

MY DEAR MR. VIERECK:

At Shadow Lawn last Saturday the President initiated a conversation with me about you, which at least I regard as curious, if not significant and of importance to you.

He started the conversation by asking me how long I had known you personally and how well I know you. I told him that while our personal acquaintance intercourse had extended over only two months, still I thought I knew you pretty well, mainly because I had for several years been very intimately associated with a German of your general type—the late Count Seckendorff—who temperamentally was a great deal like yourself, in that he was a man of punctillious honor and hence with strong inclinations always to be fair. The President asked me if I thought you were judicial-minded. I facetiously replied that you were a poet and that I had never known a poet of your mode.

He then inquired with very apparent interest about what he called “equipment.” I dwelt upon your culture in a broad literary sense. He replied that he did not mean that exactly, but that he used the word “equipment” rather in its pragmatic sense. I told him that I did not know that you had the experience that had equipped you pragmatically. There is an impression on my mind that he said in reply to this, that men of culture and of mental poise that tended to clear vision and fair judgment were unconsciously more pragmatic than they generally receive credit for.

While he was discussing your “apparent” sense of fairness, I related briefly the genesis of your statement for the press. I told him that you brought it to my office, that my first proposition was for our publicity bureau to distribute it, but that you had suggested that it might not be as effective through that distribution as it would be should you assume full responsibility for the distribution. This seemed to please him. I told him further that you had said to me that if I did not think it was strong enough and fair enough for me to make it stronger. I informed him that I declined to do this for that in my effort to strengthen it I might do him an injustice, besides which I thought it was strong enough. I told him that you had in the original statement this assertion: “an ounce of performance is better than a pound of proz-and that you had cited this without any request or hint from me. This obviously pleased him very much.

The foregoing is about all of his conversation concerning you that I can recall. It embodies all of the essential features of his inquiries and comments.

I infer—and my inference may be wide of the mark—that he either has determined to appoint some sort of neutrality board after the election to aid him in reaching some new judgment in regard to our international relation in order that he may act within the new lights which may be thrown upon the subject. I do not mean to say that he intimated any disposition to change his course. All I do mean to say is he left me under the impression that he is searching for the proper material to constitute such a board should he finally decide to appoint it.

I was strongly tempted, of course, to ask him what he had in mind, but you can understand the sense of delicacy I felt when that thought was evolved in my mind.

On the general subject of the hyphenates he seemed wholly at ease. He said he believed that a year ago that their blood had been so heated against him that they were violently against him en masse. He added, however, that he was convinced that their blood had cooled and that only their exclamatory leaders are in the main the only element that persistently took an unfair view of his conduct. He talked as if he were convinced that the poll in November would surprise the professional politicians in the large proportion of the so-called hyphenate vote that would be cast for him.

He had on his desk, while talking to me about you, a full copy of the statement you had prepared for the press in re the Ridder statement concerning Stone and Burleson.

He remarked upon the fairness of its tone as illustrated by your assertion that you did not regard his Americanism as inferior to that of Hughes. Before he left him he looked around and said that he was sorry no stenographer had been present while he was talking to me so that what I had said concerning you might have been taken down.

I remarked again that I was sorry he had replied at all to "that crazy man Leary," and he said that he had not dictated that statement in haste or heat, but that it was the result of very cool and careful thought on his part.

I had almost forgotten to tell you that during the conversation the President said in effect that he wanted to know about you and others, who like yourself have individualized themselves in these troublesome times, because you might be useful "when settlement time comes."

(Signed) JOSIAH WINGATE.

Mr. DICKINSON. I never wrote any such letter. Does the chairman want my theory about it?

Senator OVERMAN. No.

Mr. DICKINSON. It is very important, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Theory?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. No, I do not want to hear it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Who is the author of that letter?

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know who the author was?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think I know. I never saw the letter before.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know his name?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; I think Mr. Viereck himself wrote it in order to get more money out of what was developed to be the German propaganda, with a lot of money he was getting. That is my theory about it. I have never heard that letter before. I did not write it.

Maj. HUMES. Count Seckendorff was referred to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Count Seckendorff.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know him?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have nothing but the most delightful and pleasant recollections of him.

Maj. HUMES. You did know him?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was associated with him in this city in business for several years, on the New York Tribune bureau.

Maj. HUMES. The original of this, this being a photostat, is in the files of the Department of Justice.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is this that letter? [Indicating photostat.]

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not write it. If I had written it, there is no harm in it, but I did not write it.

Senator NELSON. You think Viereck wrote it, do you?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think Viereck wrote it himself, or some one around him.

Senator NELSON. You say he wrote it, you think, to work the Government in some way—for money?

Mr. DICKINSON. To work the Government? No, sir; to work for ever were his principals, evidently.

Senator NELSON. How.

Mr. DICKINSON. Whoever were his principals; the German propagandists.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you know Bernstorff?

Mr. DICKINSON. Bernstorff? No, sir. I attended a reception once at his house with probably two or three thousand other people.

Maj. HUMES. I also call your attention to a letter of January 1916.

Mr. DICKINSON. Have I identified that?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I call your attention to one sentence in the letter, which reads as follows:

I account myself a sort of hyphen on the German question, and a bit egotistical as it may sound, that the views I have expressed to you will prevail with the American people.

Are we to understand from that, that at that time you and Viereck were of the same view?

Mr. DICKINSON. As to neutrality?

Maj. HUMES. As to the foreign situation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. As to neutrality, yes.

Maj. HUMES. Was Mr. Viereck's interest one in neutrality?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; so he insisted, and so he wrote.

Maj. HUMES. He was not interested in the success of the German cause, but was only concerned with the neutrality of this Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. Of this Government; as far as I am aware.

Maj. HUMES. And yet in this letter to Gen. Churchill you say that because of the great sums of money which Viereck was getting for the German cause, you felt, owing to your small compensation, that you were a veritable piker?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not know at the time these negotiations with Viereck were going on, that he was getting these sums of money from the German Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I did not. At the time I wrote the letter he was just being exposed, having handled hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Maj. HUMES. In the summer of 1916 did not the papers of this country expose Viereck and his connection, and was it not the subject of one of the biggest exposés of the time preceding the war?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have no recollection of it.

Maj. HUMES (continuing). Or during the war? Do you not remember the publication of the Albert papers and the Albert exposé by the New York World, which was also carried in most of the papers of the country in one form or another?

Mr. DICKINSON. I remember the Albert exposé.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Do you not remember that Viereck was involved in that almost as largely as Albert?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not recall that.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know, as a part of that exposé, that Viereck and Albert were together at the time the papers were seized, grabbed, or stolen—whatever you choose to term it—by the people who afterwards turned them over to the New York World?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not remember Viereck's name in connection with it. If I had, then Schrader convinced me that Viereck was innocent.

Maj. HUMES. This morning you made a statement that you had been entirely acquitted of all of this matter by Gen. Churchill?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I do not care to put this in the record, and I suggest that you read it, and then, if you want to correct your testimony, so far as it affects Gen. Churchill, very well [handing paper to the witness].

Mr. DICKINSON (after examining paper). Do you want me to tell you what Churchill said to me?

Maj. HUMES. As I understand, you are willing to have Gen. Churchill's name stricken out of the record in the reference that was made this morning?

Mr. DICKINSON. With the statement that he told me, and let it stand that way; and that he changed his mind afterwards, unknown to me.

Capt. LESTER. He is in France. He is not here to speak for himself.

Maj. HUMES. The Military Intelligence wants the record to conform to the facts, and to the public records, and if you want a statement of that kind to go in, they ask to have the official record put in.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well; I will have to produce a letter in another case, then. All right, sir, if you want to fix it that way.

Maj. HUMES. I do not understand you to say that you have a letter from Gen. Churchill?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. You are referring to a letter from Gen. McIntyre?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. It is a part of this record, and I have no objection to our putting that in.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will have to read this, sir. It is about secret work I knew nothing of.

Maj. HUMES. If you want those two to go in, there is no objection to that.

Mr. DICKINSON. I did not write the Shadow Lawn letter. I will read Gen. McIntyre's letter, if I may be permitted to, and then I will have to tell this whole story. Shall I read Gen. McIntyre's letter, or do you want to read it?

Maj. HUMES. No, I have no desire to read it. If you desire to read the records all in, there is no objection to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. In justice to myself I must read Gen. McIntyre's letter.

Senator OVERMAN. Read it.

Mr. DICKINSON (reading):

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF MILITARY CENSOR
Washington, June 24, 1918.

DEAR MAJOR: I had intended writing to you today to tell you of the change in my own status here, when I received your telegram to which I have replied.

I, as you doubtless have been advised, am giving up the military censorship and the several duties connected with it, including that on the Censorship Board. All of the duties hereafter which I have been performing in this direction will be centered in the Military Intelligence Branch of the General Staff, of which Colonel Churchill is now the head. They doubtless will endeavor to retain two men on each of the Censorship executive committees, so that the change in the status of those that have been representing me will necessitate no follow. Of course, they may desire later to make certain changes in case they feel that the service can be improved thereby. I hope that this will not affect you.

I wanted, however, to call your attention to a little matter which has come up here and which I hope that I have put to sleep. You spoke to me before leaving here of the fact that you were being investigated by the Secret Service. It seems that they made a report to the Military Intelligence Branch, which discovered that you had been employed to write a weekly letter to Viereck, then publishing "The Fatherland." They secured copies of these letters, most of which were signed "Wingate" or "Josiah Wingate," and established pretty clearly—by testimony of Viereck himself and, I think, of his lawyer—the fact of such employment and the identification of these letters as yours. The papers were turned over to me with the suggestion that I take the necessary action.

I filed the papers, saying broadly that no action was necessary; that you were a newspaper man; that you were writing letters to "The Fatherland" and the editor of "The Fatherland" as a man of your profession would write them to a newspaper editor; and that this was hardly an appropriate time to waste time in discovering what your opinions may have been at that time, which was prior to our entry into the war and largely during a political campaign.

My successors may take a different view of this matter. I hope not. At least, I think that there is nothing that you can do at this time. It was for this reason that I desired a copy of the letter that you had sent me in which you mentioned Viereck.

With kind regards to Mrs. Dickinson, I am,
Very sincerely,

FRANK MCINTYRE

Capt. J. J. DICKINSON,
Calcasieu Building, San Antonio, Tex.

Shall I explain the origin of this letter?

Maj. HUMES. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. DICKINSON. June 24, 1918.

When I received this letter from Gen. McIntyre, I went forth with to Maj. Gen. W. A. Holbrook, the commanding general of the Southern Department, with headquarters at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Tex. I passed through the office of his adjutant general, Ralph Harrison, whom I have known many years, and who is now here on The Adjutant General's staff. Naturally I showed this to Harrison, and I said, "I don't know what it means, Harrison. I know they have had all of those foolish Viereck letters in mine up there for a long time; I caused them to get them, and I have never denied them, never had any disposition to deny them, and I don't know what they mean by it."

He read McIntyre's letter. He said, "It is very plain. It has been referred to Gen. McIntyre for necessary action, and he has taken the necessary action." I said to him that I was not satisfied with it, that I was going in to see Gen. Holbrook and ask forthwith for a military inquiry. Col. Harrison accompanied me to Gen. Holbrook's desk, and there I told Gen. Holbrook all about it, in the light of this letter, and he read it very carefully.

He said, "It would be very foolish for you to have a military inquiry: Gen. McIntyre and others have looked into that thing and acquitted you of any harm by intent or action. Now that the public mind is all inflamed it would cause you to be misunderstood." He said, "If you write up through the regular military channels I will see to it that you have a military inquiry," but he advised me against it.

I then asked Gen. McIntyre if I had better not have a military inquiry, that I knew something of the practice in these things, and he advised me earnestly against it, on the same grounds Maj. Gen. Holbrook did.

Col. Harrison is here in town, and if you want him I have no doubt he will come and testify to the vigorous action I tried to take.

Now that the Military Intelligence has made these reports against me I can see how the military mind has been inflamed. There is nothing against my loyalty.

Maj. HUMES. On June 24 you got the letter of Gen. McIntyre, and on July 29, more than a month after that, you addressed a communication to Gen. Churchill, then Col. Churchill?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. That is your letter, is it [handing a letter to Mr. Dickinson]?

Mr. DICKINSON. This is the communication.

Maj. HUMES. That is the communication?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. Shall I tell about that?

Senator NELSON. What is there in that communication?

Maj. HUMES. This is the letter in which he tells the whole story about his connection with Viereck, a month or more after the letter of Gen. McIntyre was written.

Mr. DICKINSON. On Gen. Holbrook's assurances.

Now, I suppose I had better explain the history and cause of this letter that he has been reading from here. I have a copy of it which explains this very fully.

Not long after this incident connected with the McIntyre letter and my request to Gen. Holbrook for a prompt military inquiry, I was summoned by the chief military intelligence officer of the Southern Department, a certain Maj. Barnes, to his office. I was busy, naturally, in asking what it was about. "Oh," they said, "it is to close up this Josiah Wingate matter with the military intelligence. Naturally my feelings were again hurt and I went to see both Col. Harrison and Gen. Holbrook before I went to see Barnes. They assured me that it was a mere form, that they wanted to complete their record there so as to save me from any trouble. So I made a statement to Maj. Barnes; a very brief one. Of course, the thing kept gnawing at my mind. Whereupon I sat down and wrote Gen. Churchill himself this long letter lest Barnes would not in his haste cover it thoroughly. That is the reason I wrote this long letter.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want that to go in the record, Mr.

Maj. HUMES. I think in view of the statements that have been made that the letter should go into the record, and also the communications of Gen. Churchill subsequent to the date of the letter of Gen. V. Intyre.

Senator NELSON. They had better all go in, had they not?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, just those two. The letter has gone in; it has been read and therefore it is in. And we submit these communications.

(The letters here referred to are printed in the record as follows.)

Military Intelligence Division.

In replying refer to

MID-10679-7

K. C. C.
(D. C. C.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.
Washington, October 18, 1918.

Memorandum for the Chief of Staff:

Subject: Captain Jacob Johnson Dickinson, Signal Corps, U. S. Army.

1. Captain Jacob Johnson Dickinson, S. C., U. S. Army, was commissioned January 25, 1918. Previous to this service he had served as a Major of the Missouri Volunteer Infantry from July 20, 1898, until his Regiment was mustered out May 10, 1899.

2. Captain Dickinson was employed by one George Sylvester Viereck, editor of "The Fatherland," a notorious pro-German publication of New York City, from some time in March, 1916, until after the Presidential election the following year. Shortly after the election in 1916, he started to work for a Dr. F. C. Fuehr, a notorious German propagandist in the United States, and was employed by him until some time in February, 1917. The correspondence that Captain Dickinson carried on with these two men, was under an assumed name, and that part of it that was published in "The Fatherland" was under the nom de plume as used in the letters. For this work Captain Dickinson received regular pay and was to report intimate and executive affairs in Washington.

3. On the War Department Information Blank that Captain Dickinson filled out when he made application for commission, no mention is made of either of these employments, although he was required to report his last employment next to last, etc., and the statements he made were subscribed and sworn to as being correct.

4. During the time that Captain Dickinson was a regular correspondent for Viereck and Fuehr, he was very critical of the President, of the Administration, and approved of things German. In one of his letters he reported a confidential interview with the President, which was a flagrant violation of decent professional courtesy.

5. While Captain Dickinson has been on duty in the Censor's Office at San Antonio, Texas, his services have not been competent. One of the officers under whom he served reports on him as follows:

"I have no reason to think that his presence on the Committee at San Antonio has been anything but a handicap to the work of the Committee. I suggest to you the advisability of relieving him of any duties in connection therewith."

6. Captain Dickinson was relieved from duty in the office of the Military Censor, San Antonio, Texas, on August 17, 1918, and was directed to report in person to the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for instructions, and to go on duty in the latter's office.

7. The Military Intelligence Division is of the opinion that Captain Dickinson should be discharged from the service by direction of The President, under the provisions of Bulletin 32. It is not deemed to be to the best interests of the service to bring Captain Dickinson to trial for these offenses. Although the evidence is clear and conclusive, the production of it before a Court-Martial would be detrimental to the work being performed by the Military Intelligence Division.

8. Action recommended is contained in a memorandum herewith for the Adjutant General of the Army.

9. The office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army (Brigadier General Saltzman) has been consulted and concurs.

M. CHURCHILL,
*Brigadier General, General Staff,
Director of Military Intelligence.*

EXECUTIVE POSTAL CENSORSHIP COMMITTEE,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
San Antonio, Tex., July 29, 1918.

From: Captain J. J. Dickinson, San Antonio, Texas.

To: Col. M. Churchill, Chief Military Censor, M. I. B., General Staff, Executive Division, Washington, D. C.

Subject: George Sylvester Viereck, Dr. K. A. Fuehr and myself.

1. Recent newspaper exposures of the use by George Sylvester Viereck of a large amount of money obtained through German sources for propaganda uses in the United States suggest to me the advisability of my submitting somewhat in detail business relations that for several months I held with Viereck and later during that period through Viereck with Fuehr.

2. I think it was some time in the month of March, 1916, that I was approached in Washington by Frederick F. Schrader and asked if I would represent in Washington "The Fatherland," which was owned and edited by Viereck. I accepted this employment. The employment contemplated the writing of a letter by me for publication in each weekly issue of "The Fatherland," for which I was to receive a weekly compensation of $40. After my first letter had reached Viereck's offices at 1123 Broadway, New York, I received a letter from him suggesting that I adopt a nom de plume—"Josiah Wingate," as he thought it would be better to surround the correspondence with some curiosity as to the real author of the letters. To this proposition I assented.

3. My recollection is that only two of these letters were published in "The Fatherland." I then received word, either in writing from Viereck or through Schrader, that as "The Fatherland" was cramped for space and as Schrader was making a weekly trip to Washington to write a long weekly letter, my services would be more valuable if I should write two or three informal letters to Viereck consisting of comment and opinion upon current events affecting our foreign relations, particularly as to Germany, and dealing in general with larger phases of politics. I was to sign those letters in the nom de plume that had been agreed upon for the published letters. This I did under the original arrangement until sometime after the Presidential election in 1916.

4. A day or two after the election in 1916, I was summoned to Viereck's offices from the Manhattan Hotel, where I had been living through the campaign. A few minutes after I arrived in Viereck's offices a person introduced to me as Dr. K. A. Fuehr made a rather theatrical entry. I was told by Viereck following the introduction that Dr. Fuehr was the General Manager in America of the Trans-Ocean News Service, which was the American end of the Overseas News Agency of Germany. I was then reminded by one or both of them that I had met Dr. Fuehr in Viereck's offices previously, but I did not then remember that I had ever met him before. Dr. Fuehr then told me that he had been reading all the correspondence that I had been sending to Viereck and that it had been of much value to the Trans-Ocean News Service, adding that he would be pleased if I would continue it at his expense and that in a short time he would see to it that I was more liberally compensated. Viereck suggested that I continue sending the letters addressed to him, as Dr. Fuehr frequently was out of the city and that by addressing the letters to him he could see to it that whatever of news value might be to them would be taken up by the Trans-Ocean News Service. To this arrangement I agreed.

5. About this time, so I was told at the interview here mentioned, Dr. Fuehr had fitted up offices in a new building at the southwest corner of 5th Avenue and 40th street. I was left under the impression that prior thereto he had occupied offices in the same building with Viereck. It was represented to me that the Trans-Ocean News service was intended to be developed into the greater German news assembling and distributing organization of America and that at the close of the European war I was to succeed Dr. Fuehr as General Manager provided my services should prove acceptable. To this I readily agreed.

6. Until the occurrence of the events above narrated I did not even know of the existence of Dr. Fuehr or of his relation with Viereck. Until I was on the occasion referred to I did not know there was an organization such as the Trans-Ocean News Service. In the first talk I had with Dr. Fuehr I was most favorably impressed with his culture, refinement of feeling, and pragmatism. I recall his telling me that he had been in the German diplomatic service at various capitals, and particularly at Tokio.

7. About the last of November I was called to New York by Dr. Fuehr through Viereck for consultation pertaining to the liberalizing of the Sayville Wireless Station and its relations to the German Press in general and particularly to the Trans-Ocean News Service. Frequently prior to this Viereck had mentioned that subject to me and I had taken it up once or twice with Secretary Daniels. When I returned to Washington from this consultation I took the subject up again with the Secretary of Navy, telling him that I represented the Trans-Ocean News Service, that Dr. Fuehr had big offices at 40th street and 4th Avenue, that he was trying to provide the German press with a comprehensive and impartial news service from America and that he was entirely willing that all of his matter to be closely censored by responsible authorities at the Sayville Wireless Station. I do not recall now what the result of my interview with Secretary Daniels was upon this subject.

8. The most notable service I performed while thus engaged was the furnishing to Dr. Fuehr through Viereck of an elaborate forecast of a speech that would be made by the late Senator Wm. J. Stone, in which the then Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations essayed the task of defining what was regarded as the possible terms of peace, and particularly of America's attitude toward the war. As I recollect, Dr. Fuehr had called me on the long distance telephone and asked if I could obtain this forecast.

I immediately went to Senator Stone's office in the Capitol and told him what I wanted, and what I wanted it for. He unhesitatingly turned over to me a copy of his speech, saying that he realized that it would have some influence in Berlin and that he only regretted that I had not been instructed to have the entire speech cabled over. As I recall the events at that time, von Bethmann-Holweg, then German Chancellor, delivered a speech in Berlin that anticipated the Stone speech, which was delivered a few days afterwards, I think in St. Louis. Senator Stone read the cable synopsis of the German Chancellor's speech before he left Washington to deliver his own speech, in St. Louis. He congratulated me and the Trans-Ocean News Service upon what he characterized as a fine bit of international journalism.

9. Sometime in December of 1916, to the best of my recollection, I wrote a letter to Dr. Fuehr through Viereck, forecasting with startling accuracy the date upon which the President either in a speech before Congress or a statement to the public made clearer the definition of our attitude toward the war. I am unable to recall now in what form the President made this declaration. I realized that it would have great influence upon the stock market, and I wrote the same letter substantially to a Wall Street client who is at the head of one of the biggest banking and brokerage establishments in the country. It was remembered that the so-called leak investigation followed the break in the market in Wall Street and that Bernard Baruch testified before the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives conducting the investigation that he had learned about one-half million of dollars in steel stocks by anticipating the break. I thought that my Wall Street client would reward me by carrying a large amount of steel stocks for me based upon this information. This he did not do.

While the so-called leak investigation was in progress I turned over voluntarily to Chairman Robert L. Henry of the Rules Committee a copy of the letter I had written to Viereck. I told Mr. Henry at the time that I believed my letter to Viereck not only was the principal source of the so-called leak, but that I strongly suspected the Germans had used it in stock speculations for the purpose of financing their propaganda in the United States. I told Mr. Henry that I would be very glad to respond to a subpoena as a witness in order to verify the copy of the letter which I had turned over to him. I was not called by the Rules Committee to testify, and that was the last I heard of my so-called leak letter. Just before I turned a copy of this letter over to Chairman Henry I took it to the White House and showed it to Secretary Tumulty. Who expressed interest in it, especially the remarkable accuracy which which I had forecast the President's action. I told him that I had obtained no direct information from any sources on the subject, but that I had merely put it out.

10. I recall that on the Wednesday evening before the break in Wall Street which I have referred occurred, Pay Director Chas. A. Conard of the Navy, was dining with me in my apartment house, The Toronto, 20th and P Streets W., Washington, D. C. Before Conard arrived at my apartment I had put a long distance call to New York for Viereck. While Conard was in my apartment the telephone response came from New York saying that Viereck could not be found. I then told Commander Conard about the letter, and explained to him how and why I had written it. When I last heard of Pay Director Conard he was stationed at the Washington Navy Yard.

11. A week or ten days before our diplomatic break with Germany, which I believe was in February, 1917, a long distance telephone call from New York reached me late one afternoon at the National Press Club. I could not tell whether the voice at the New York end of the wire was that of Fuehr or Viereck; the tone of their voices was very similar. I was told that a secret order had been given by the Navy for an important movement of one of our little fleets and I was requested to get all the information on that subject I could and send it over to New York with all possible speed. In response to this I said that the thing had gone too far, that I could not be used in such a manner and that I would be in New York the next morning to sever my relations with the Trans-Ocean News Service, Viereck et al. I went to New York on the midnight train, and the next morning called at Viereck's offices. He expressed great surprise when I told him what had brought me to New York and denied that he had talked to me over the telephone the afternoon before. When I told him it was either he or Fuehr, he called Fuehr by telephone down to his office. Fuehr denied with as much feigned surprise as had been simulated by Viereck. This made me angry and I denounced them both very harshly. After that occurrence I had no business or other relations with either of them.

12. Soon after I returned to Washington I received a letter from Viereck enclosing a weekly check, and saying that in view of the probability of an early diplomatic break with Germany he regretted that my services could no longer be employed.

13. In view of the events that have followed my relations with Viereck and through Viereck with Dr. Fuehr I regret very much that I ever had any connection with them. I have realized that they were attempting to use me for a sinister purpose. I did not realize it at the time, though frequently suspicions would arise in my mind. In the light of the revelations showing the vast amount of money that Viereck must have had at his disposal I confess when I reflect upon the small compensation I received that I feel as if I were not only a fool but a veritable "piker."

14. A part of the Viereck propaganda through "The Fatherland" and other means at the time I was played by F. F. Schrader and a man named Collman. I had known Schrader for many years as a newspaper man, first in the west, then in Washington and finally in New York. I was on the staff of the New York Herald when Collman was one of the financial writers on that paper.

15. I recall an occasion, I think during the Presidential campaign, when St. John Gaffney, who had been removed as U. S. Consul at Munich because of his pro-Germanism, left Viereck's private office just as I entered. I had known Gaffney for a good many years, but when I hailed him as he was going out the side door he either did not hear me or pretend not to hear me and did not respond to my salutation. I remarked upon this to Viereck, and he told me that Gaffney had been telling him for sometime not to trust me too far, that I was probably assigned by the State Department to spy upon Viereck and his confreres. I laughed at this, and after I left Viereck the statement as to Gaffney's assertion caused me to reflect upon the habitual attitude of Viereck and others under him toward me. I realized then that I was distinctly trusted. On two or three occasions I now realize Viereck subtly invited me to assure him that I could be trusted implicitly to work with him for the German cause. Whenever he approached me in this manner I always repelled him, coupled with the assurance that I was neither pro-German nor pro-Ally in the factional sense; that I was merely per-American and believed that President Wilson would keep us out of the European war.

16. I am sending this long communication in the hope that it may aid the Government in its further investigation of Viereck and his activities. There is, of course, a multitude of details which I cannot summon to memory off-hand, but which might be of value to investigators if I could be with them for a few days.

J. J. DICKINSON,
Captain Sig. R. C., Military Censor.

Mr. DICKINSON. Here is another letter from Gen. McIntyre

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 29, 1901.

DEAR MAJOR: I have your telegram and have replied that I would not see your coming to Washington at this time.

The matter mentioned in my letter of the 24th seems to be quietly sleeping here for the present and I do not see what could be accomplished by bringing it up. If the matter should come up in any way I should try and secure a hearing.

Very sincerely,

FRANK McINTYRE.

Capt. J. J. DICKINSON,
Calcasieu Building, San Antonio, Tex.

Maj. HUMES. During the time of your employment with V were you representing any other newspaper?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What other newspaper had you represented previously at that time?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was brought to Washington soon after the close of the Spanish-American War, where I was serving in Cuba as an editorial writer on the old Washington Times. By the "old Washington Times," I do not mean the Times that started this morning. It was owned by the late Stilson Hutchins and was under the general management of his very able son, Mr. Walter Hutchins. I did not like the confinement of editorial work, and I soon worked out of the office and wrote a column of news for both editions, afternoon and morning. Then I became associated with the late Count Seckendorff, a man than whom nobody stood higher in Washington.

Senator NELSON. Was he in the diplomatic service here?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir. He had been for 20 years here the representative of the New York Tribune, and Mr. Reed's personal representative, together with the Mills' interests. I was the assistant man in that bureau, doing this work under Mr. Hutchins at that time on the Washington Times. Then Mr. Seckendorff made an engagement with Frank Munsey, who in the meantime had bought the Washington Times from Stilson Hutchins, to become his general editor. I went to the Washington Times with Mr. Seckendorff as the managing editor under him. I maintained the closest personal relations with Mr. Seckendorff for many years, even after he quit Munsey service.

Then I became, soon thereafter, an editorial and political writer on the Washington Post, under the late John R. McLean. Mr. McLean had me as his representative between himself and the man who was then President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. If you look back over the files of the Washington Post you will see my name in big black letters, that Mr. McLean himself used to put there simply as "Dickinson," not as "Mr. Dickinson." I used to talk with nearly every body who knew Mr. Roosevelt and frankly. I never betrayed a confidence. Thereafter I went in with the establishment of the Washington Herald, but on account of its failure. I then went to the that over a year, and for the purpose of benefiting myself financially went into the Hearst service; I was there five years. Then I came back to Washington with Mr. Bryan in 1913, at Mr. Bryan's solicitation. I never sought any office; I held no regular office then.

Maj. HUMES. Then, as I understand it, major, during the year 1916 your only regular employment was the employment from Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir. I was doing many things of a business nature.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that when you made application for commission in the Army you failed to make any mention of your employment by Mr. Viereck, and did you not say that your last employment had been with some one other than with Viereck?

Mr. DICKINSON. I may have done that, never considering the Viereck employment in that sense. I simply overlooked it. Gen. McIntyre knew about it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever in your application for a commission state that you had been in the employ of Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir, I do not suppose I did.

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact that the reason that that statement was not included in your application for a commission, was that you felt that it would interfere with the issuing of a commission?

Mr. DICKINSON. It never entered my mind, sir. I knew very well I had turned up all those letters, along with this leak note; knew they were here.

Maj. HUMES. Where did you turn them up?

Mr. DICKINSON. I don't know who turned them up. I know what I did with the leak note.

Maj. HUMES. That is, the only one you turned up was the leak note?

Mr. DICKINSON. Very soon thereafter. It was the only thing I had, of any value, of a documentary nature.

Maj. HUMES. And all of your letters were in Dr. Fuehr's office, and that is where they were secured?

Mr. DICKINSON. They were in Viereck's Office, because I sent them to him.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; but they were sent to Viereck for delivery to Fuehr?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And they were found in Dr. Fuehr's office?

Mr. DICKINSON. They were found in Dr. Fuehr's office?

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know that, sir. They were addressed to Viereck, and I assume naturally they were in his files. I told you that was his arrangement.

Maj. HUMES. That is all, major.

Senator OVERMAN. Anything else, Major?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to be asked any questions you please.

Senator NELSON. I would like to ask a question or two. When did your employment with Fuehr and Viereck terminate?

Mr. DICKINSON. Just about the time our diplomatic relations were broken.

Senator NELSON. What did you do after that?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was representing this Wall Street house, among other things that I told you about, striving all the time to get into the Army.

Senator NELSON. What other activity were you engaged in?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have been trying to fix a date—I thought it was in May, but anyway in April, I went to Mr. Frank Polk of the State Department. My eyes were then being opened to Viereck, possibly what he had done in spite of the innocent assurance of Fred Schrader, and I had a short talk with Mr. Polk, and told him that I had had this connection with Viereck, that I had already turned over this leak note; that I had reason to believe they had raided his offices, and that I believed I could be of some service. Mr. Polk agreed to it, asked me if I knew Mr. Leland Harrison, whom I did not know.

Senator NELSON. Were you then employed by the State Department?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir; I was not.

Senator NELSON. Were you employed by Mr. Bryan?

Mr. DICKINSON. My termination at the State Department was about June, 1915.

Shall I proceed now, Senator, to tell you what I was doing?

Senator NELSON. I wanted to know what your activities were after that.

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall tell you all of my activities, sir.

Senator NELSON. Go on.

Mr. DICKINSON. And Mr. Polk turned me over to Mr. Leland Harrison, telling me that Mr. Harrison had charge of that work—you can call it secret work if you please. I went over, under Mr. Harrison—of course he suggested compensation, and I told him no. I was not a sleuth, I was not a detective, and that I did not want any money for that; that if he would simply pay my expenses it would be sufficient; to which he readily assented.

So that I went to New York—I thought it was in May, but I have a document here now indicating that it must have been very soon after we entered the war; but I thought it was in May.

Of course my policy then was to renew as close relations as I possibly could with Viereck, for the purpose of finding out, if I might, what he had done and what he was up to.

He is a crafty little fellow, and——

Senator NELSON. You were then trying to get information in favor of the United States Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. For the Government; yes.

Senator NELSON. From him?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

He is a crafty man, and I got nowhere with him.

By the way, I just looked around a while ago and I see a witness in this room, unless he has gone, to that activity of mine. Mr. Alec Vest, of Missouri, sitting back there. I did not tell him all that I was doing in New York, but he was a delightful companion and I took him with me to live at my hotel with me.

I left him one morning, the only time I saw Viereck, when I went up on the elevator to Viereck's office—I never told Mr. Vest what he was up to; I tell him now, if I have not told him since then.

But I could not get next to Viereck.

Then I worked around on the case in New York two or three days and came back and reported to Mr. Harrison. Should I send a written report? No; he said: "It is an interesting sidelight you have thrown on it. I am much obliged."

A day or two after that I met Mr. John Suter, who was then, as now, the Attorney General's private secretary, and I do not know whether it was he or I who brought up the subject of working along his line. As a result, however, of our conversation, he asked me if I would not go to see Mr. Bielaski in reference to taking up a collateral branch of this work—a thing I had run across quite incidentally while I was working on the Viereck case. Of course I would. I had never seen Mr. Bielaski. A Mr. Underhill—I do not now his given name—a very high-class gentleman, received me, and, of course, proposed pay. I told him no; that was not my work; that I would do the best I could with it. And I went over for about two weeks.

Senator NELSON. Over where?

Mr. DICKINSON. Over to New York, to work on a collateral branch—I should hardly call it a collateral branch, but it was an accident that grew out of my efforts to trail Viereck that I met some other parties who were suspicious. I met those parties and worked with them, and came back, and then turned in an oral report on that.

Senator NELSON. Did you get anything substantial then?

Mr. DICKINSON. I thought I did. I got very little on the Viereck matter; but on this other matter I thought I got some very substantial things.

Senator NELSON. Go on.

Mr. DICKINSON. That ends about my activities, sir, except that I was engaged in private business thereafter, striving all the while to get into the Army and finally succeeding.

Senator NELSON. In what branch of the Army did you go?

Mr. DICKINSON. I was commissioned in the Signal Corps, with assignment to the postal executive committee at San Antonio, Tex., and as representative of the chief military censor. Under directions of the Military Intelligence Branch, a copy of which order I have here, I made a very extended and careful inspection from Brownsville, Tex., to San Diego, Cal., in the name of the Intelligence—it was then known as the Military Intelligence Branch.

Thereafter I stayed at my post in San Antonio, and this horrible thing came up, through Gen. McIntyre, in his kindly way.

Senator NELSON. Are you still in the service?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, sir. I resigned from the service, to take effect November 15, and it took effect actually on November 20, as I recall it.

Senator NELSON. I do not know as I want to ask anything more.

Maj. HUMES. Maj. Dickinson, the raid on Viereck's office, I assume, called your attention to this matter, and then you became interested in further investigation of Viereck; is that correct?

Mr. DICKINSON. Not at all.

Maj. HUMES. I understood you to so state.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; not at all. At that time I did not know that Viereck's offices had been raided.

Maj. HUMES. When you saw Viereck, did you make an effort to get the letters, then, that you had written to him?

Mr. DICKINSON. I made no effort to get the letters, sir. In the first place, it never occurred to me that he had kept them, and if he did keep them I did not care.

If you will permit me, now, to suggest to you why I had such suspicions that, following this leak note that I turned over to the chairman of the Rules Committee of the House and about which I never heard again—I turned it over with an explanation to Herr—was that if the raid was made, doubtless you would find a lot of stuff in there from me. That was the reason I had strong suspicions, almost convincing suspicions, that the raid had been made on turning over this leak note.

When I came back from New York on this assignment from the Department of Justice, Mr. Underhill seemed delighted because I had turned in some new names, and very important ones, and I was associated with those persons and had learned a great deal about them. Mr. Underhill, then, making a summary at his desk, said: "Well, I do not think you have quite closed up these matters. What do you think?" I said: "I have not. You wanted me to stay a week and I have stayed a week, and come back." He then said: "I wonder if you hadn't better go back there." I said: "I expected to; had; on the very same terms."

While I was in my apartment that night Mr. Underhill telephoned me that I need not go back to New York, but I could turn in my expense account. I thought that was rather brash, to say the least of it.

Then it was that I became convinced that the suspicious Mr. Elaski had run across those letters of mine, with the result that he did not want me to go back there any more to work on it. That is the reason I say I am convinced that it was the leak note that led to the discovery of these letters.

Maj. HUMES. What was the date of that?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will see, here.

Maj. HUMES. Approximately. I do not mean the exact date.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, you want to be exact. I will read you the exact date. This is from the Attorney General. On April 17, 1917, I went over there, and I returned April 25. His records will show it.

I have not yet been able to receive the official record at the State Department by reason of the fact that Mr. Leland Harrison, with whom I did this work, is in Europe, and he is the only one, so far as I am aware, who knows of my activities in that line. I thought it was in May, but I see it was in April.

Senator NELSON. You worked, then, both for the State Department and for the Department of Justice?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. In following up the German propaganda?

Mr. DICKINSON. Following up Viereck particularly.

Senator NELSON. In other words, you turned a straight sumbuult from being a promoter and backer of Viereck in his propaganda and you became an opponent of his and a friend of the Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. That was only when I was convinced, sir, that Viereck all the time had been intending to misuse me. I was convinced, for the first time, that Viereck was a party to German propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Well, I can see how you could undergo a change of heart.

Senator OVERMAN. Are there any other questions? .

Maj. HUMES. I have nothing else.

Senator OVERMAN. Stand aside, Mr. Dickinson. Call your next witness, Maj. Humes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to say now that I feel that I have a public duty to perform, but I prefer to submit this stuff to the committee in executive session and let it pass its judgment upon it, and then, possibly, you will be able to account for this vicious attack that was made upon me. I think it is a matter of very high public consideration.

Senator OVERMAN. You desire to have us take that up in executive session?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes. I would prefer to submit it in private, and let you pass your judgment on it. I have the absolute official record on the matter, and I feel it my duty to the country and to the committee to submit it.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. We will take that up in executive session.

Mr. DICKINSON. If you do not want to do it now I will come back at any time.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take it up in executive session now. (Whereupon the committee went into executive session. At the expiration of 10 minutes the committee resumed its open session.)

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any other witness ready, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I will call Mr. Kennedy.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JACOB M. KENNEDY.

(The witness was sworn by the Chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Where do you live, Mr. Kennedy?

Mr. KENNEDY. In Montana.

Maj. HUMES. Did you live in Montana in 1916?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state if you were in any way connected with an organization which was engaged in a wet and dry fight in Montana at that time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; I was secretary of the Montana Commercial and Labor League, and the executive officer; an organization of business men and laboring men formed for the purpose of defeating prohibition in the State of Montana.

Senator NELSON. Where were your headquarters; at Helena?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In conducting the activities of that organization, did you come into contact at any time with either the United States Brewers' Association or the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. When did you come in contact with them?

Mr. KENNEDY. They sent a representative named James B. Kennedy from Minneapolis or St. Paul, presumed to have been the credited agent of the National Brewers' Association, who came to Montana about the commencement of the year 1915. He was there nearly two years.

I also met Mr. John A. McDermott, who, I understand, is the manager of the National Brewers' Association.

Maj. HUMES. In your negotiations, or conferences, with the representatives of the United States Brewers' Association, was any discussion or any arrangement made by which they were to aid, or lend any assistance to, the fight in Montana?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What was that arrangement?

Mr. KENNEDY. They promised to the antiprohibition fight in excess of $100,000. The National Brewers, my memory is, agreed to put in $50,000 and the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers amount something in excess of that. I am not sure, but I think was about $75,000, probably.

Maj. HUMES. Was this money to be expended by them directly, was it to be contributed to the local organization?

Mr. KENNEDY. It was to be expended under the direction, as I understood it, of the State liquor dealers' association; and the State liquor dealers' association there included the wholesalers, the retailers, and the brewers.

Senator NELSON. In Montana?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. In carrying on their activities, did they send organizers or speakers into the State?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Whom did they send?

Mr. KENNEDY. During the period that I was connected with Maj. Humes, I could only give you a part of the names, because I resigned my position about the 1st of September, and the speakers that came after that I kept no track of, particularly.

They sent Clarence Darrow, of Chicago, and Mr. Paul S. Conway, I think, of Kansas City, and a number of others I can not recall.

Maj. HUMES. Did they send any one into the State with a special view of organizing the German vote of the State?

Mr. KENNEDY. I beg your pardon, Major. I should have recalled Julius Moersch.

Senator NELSON. Julius Moersch, of St. Paul?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; Julius Moersch, of St. Paul. He was sent to Montana.

Senator NELSON. He was the president of the German Alliance in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Go on.

Mr. KENNEDY. They sent Mr. Julius Moersch, of St. Paul, and Mr. Gustav—I think it is Gustav—Frankel, an attorney, who was supposed to represent the Minnesota Brewers' Association.

Mr. Moersch came into Helena with a letter to me from Mr. McDermott. He was introduced to me by Mr. Kennedy, the brewer.

gent in the State. He told me that he was sent there for the purpose of helping in the fight against prohibition and was prepared to make any number of addresses, but he desired to speak before the German societies of the State, and he was going to organize the National German Alliance in the State, as his principal mission.

Senator NELSON. What was he going to organize that for?

Mr. KENNEDY. He explained to me, at my first interview with him, that it was purely a fraternal organization that had been chartered by Congress, and he showed me the literature of the organization. I had heard of it, of course, but I had made no inquiry into it, or its purposes.

He said the intention was to organize a branch of the National German-American Alliance in all of the important centers of the State, and that these organizations would cooperate in the effort to defeat prohibition.

Maj. HUMES. Did Mr. Moersch make speeches throughout the State?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What kind of speeches? What was the nature of his activity while he was there?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Moersch—who, by the way, appeared to be a man of a good deal of intelligence and capacity—addressed several German meetings in Butte, Billings, Helena, Kalispel, Missoula, and other important cities.

I was not at any of the meetings, but the information was carried to me in my office daily that Mr. Moersch was carrying on a political propaganda; that very little of his conversation, private or public, was directed to the question of prohibition; that most of it was a denunciation of President Wilson, of ex-President Roosevelt, and a denunciation of Judge Hughes, a denunciation of Senator Myers, one of our United States Senators, who was then coming up for reelection, for his attitude on prohibition in Congress, and the President's attitude on the German question.

Senator NELSON. You mean he was carrying on a German propaganda?

Mr. KENNEDY. He was inciting, Senator Nelson, the German residents of our State to activities against President Wilson and the administration of this country.

To these activities I took exception. He was cooperating with a Dr. Karl Weiss, who came to Montana a few months before from Germany, and he was editing a German paper in Helena printed in the German language, called the Montana Staats Zeitung. Dr. Weiss was notoriously pro-German; a man of a good deal of ability.

Senator NELSON. Was this in 1916?

Mr. KENNEDY. 1916, yes, sir; starting on the 4th of July, 1916. The meeting was held in the city of Helena on the 4th of July, 1916.

Maj. HUMES. You say that Moersch was attacking President Wilson?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. On what issue; the foreign issue, the question of the attitude toward Germany?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir. In his private conversations with me, and in conversations he had with others in my presence, he was very virulent and vicious in his denunciation of the attitude of this administration.

Senator NELSON. And of Roosevelt too?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; he was violently bitter against President Roosevelt. Mr. Moersch was very vicious concerning the attitude of the administration, in his criticism of the attitude of the administration, for permitting the allies, and not the central powers, to get food and ammunition and supplies from this country. He criticised the administration's attitude very severely in the effort to avoid the blockade which Germany had established on the seas. In a word, it was a pronounced pro-German propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Rather more than a liquor campaign?

Mr. KENNEDY. And they lost sight, in almost every instance, of the purpose for which we supposed they came into the State.

Maj. HUMES. As a result of his activities did you take any action?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; I reported to the committee of gentlemen, business men of the State, who acted as the executive committee of our organization, men of high standing in the business world. That was our original policy and determination was to avoid all complications in politics and religion, in ulterior questions, except the question of prohibition, and I thought that it was very bad politics, and I thought that it was injurious to the purpose for which we were struggling, to have these fellows carrying on that kind of propaganda in the State. My executive committee agreed with me, and we demanded the recall of these men from the field.

Senator NELSON. You demanded it from whom? From the Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. KENNEDY. From Mr. James B. Kennedy, representing the United States Brewers' Association; Mr. Frankel—I personally presented the matter to Mr. Frankel in my office, and I think I wrote him a letter, but I am not certain—and from Mr. McDermott. I asked that these people be taken out of the field because our people were in rebellion against them.

Maj. HUMES. In addition to this alliance with Moersch and the German-American Alliance, were there any other alliances entered into in that fight?

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, an effort was made by the campaign managers of the Socialist party of the State of Montana to have our organization engage their principal speakers to make addresses against prohibition in the State, notably—

Maj. HUMES. What I mean especially is this, were there any other alliances that were inspired or advocated by either the United States Brewers' Association or their representatives, or the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would not say there was; no, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Did Kennedy undertake to make any alliances?

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, we thought he did, sir, but I have not absolute proof. He was charged with it, but I have no proof of it.

Maj. HUMES. I understood there was something in connection with the I. W. W. element.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was about to say—notably the Socialist party of the State of Montana had as leader the Rev. Lewis J. Duncan. He was then mayor of the city of Butte, the principal city in our State.

He was the mayor of our city, when much property and some lives were destroyed by riots. Mr. Kennedy thought that I was in error, and not showing good judgment by not accepting the offer of the manager of the Socialist party in the State.

Senator NELSON. Was he the manager—the mayor?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. James B. Kennedy, Senator Nelson, was the man that I referred to as representing in the State of Montana the National Wholesale Brewers' Association.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but I mean the manager of the Socialists?

Mr. KENNEDY. No; the campaign manager of the Socialist party in the State of Montana was named Albert Messner. I have his written communications offering the services of Mr. Duncan as one of our speakers—the Socialist candidate for governor that year.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you right there—excuse me for interrupting you: Was there an affiliation between what you call the I. W. W.'s and the Socialists in your State?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Duncan was elected openly by the I. W. W.'s in Butte.

Senator NELSON. And he was a Socialist?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; he proposed all their meetings, carried on all their campaigns, and is now one of the national organizers in South Dakota of the Nonpartisan League.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Kennedy thought that it was a mistake for us not to engage Mr. Duncan, who is a very eloquent and brilliant man, a minister of the Gospel—or had been—to aid us in our campaign. Mr. Karl Weiss made objection to my attitude in refusing to employ Mr. Duncan as a campaign speaker for us, and went to my executive committee and complained that I was doing a good deal to throw the race.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Weiss was the publisher of the German newspaper?

Mr. KENNEDY. He was the publisher of the German newspaper, the Montana Staats Zeitung, that subsequently was suppressed.

Senator NELSON. For disloyalty?

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, the State Council of Defense, Senator Nelson, felt it wise to suppress the publication of that and other newspapers in foreign languages during the war.

Maj. HUMES. You are connected with the State Council of National Defense, as I understand?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; I am the chairman of my county council of defense, and I was appointed by the governor, Gov. Stewart of Montana, early last year as the representative of the State government and the State council of defense in the field for the purpose of making addresses in the industrial centers of the State urging industrial harmony and the cooperation of all the elements of our commonwealth in behalf of the Government's war activities.

Senator NELSON. May I ask you one or two questions, Mr. Kennedy, for my own information?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Was there, during this period or before, any effort to organize the Nonpartisan League? You know what that organization is in your State?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. And was there any affiliation between the Nonpartisan League and the Socialists and the I. W. W.'s?

Mr. KENNEDY. Answering directly, at Great Falls, on the 6th day of February, a year ago, there was held a mass meeting, called a Farmers' Cooperative Congress, to which we invited, as speaker, Gov. Frazer, of North Dakota, who headed the list; the leader of the I. W. W. organization in the city of Butte——

Senator NELSON. What is his name?

Mr. KENNEDY. His name is William F. Dunn. He is a somewhat notorious man in our part of the world. He is the editor of a newspaper called the Daily Bulletin.

Senator NELSON. Published where?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Daily Bulletin is the organ of the I. W. W. element in the State of Montana and is published in Butte, a publication that the national authorities took occasion to suppress, and the State Council of Defense ordered suppressed for sedition. Mr. Dunn is now awaiting trial in the city of Helena on a charge of sedition.

Senator NELSON. These were all gathered at Great Falls. Now go on and tell us more about that.

Mr. KENNEDY. To be brutally frank about it, Senator Nelson, it was just a real Bolshevick picnic. They lambasted everybody that had much interest in our part of the world. They resolved to take away from the people that had two shirts, one of them, and give it to people that had one, and they did the usual things, much the same as they did in Chicago the other day, with about the same class of results.

Senator NELSON. Did they succeed in organizing many of the Nonpartisan Leaguers there?

Mr. KENNEDY. In the eastern part of the State of Montana they succeeded in getting several of the agricultural counties overwhelmingly into the organization, but in the western part of our State they made but little progress. In some of the counties of the State—in my county, for instance—we probably violated all the constitutional provisions of State and Nation, but we refused to allow them to hold meetings under our organization, the Council of Defense, and ran the organizer out of the county.

Senator OVERMAN. What county is that?

Mr. KENNEDY. County of Lincoln. He cranked up his Ford and went.

Senator NELSON. You did credit to the name of Lincoln.

Senator OVERMAN. What is the county seat?

Mr. KENNEDY. Libby.

Senator NELSON. Was there any affiliation or cooperation, direct or indirectly, between these Nonpartisan Leaguers, the Socialists and the I. W. W.'s in your State?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; there has been a close affiliation between the I. W. W. and the Nonpartisan League people in our State.

Senator NELSON. What was their tendency as to loyalty or disloyalty? You know what I mean?

Mr. KENNEDY. Disloyalty, sir.

Senator NELSON. Disloyalty?

Mr. KENNEDY. Unhesitatingly.

Senator NELSON. And that was the disposition of the leaders of the Nonpartisan League, in your State?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would not like to say that, sir. The men that they sent into the State of Montana for the purpose of organizing the Nonpartisan League were men who were tainted or branded with disloyalty in other parts of the Nation.

Senator NELSON. Do you remember the names of any one of them?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Will you state them?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. D. C. Dorman. He is the State manager now. His voice was never heard through all this great struggle that this Nation has just passed through in favor of any activity of this Government, but there was a constant wail about the hardships that were imposed upon the struggling farmers who were only getting $2 a bushel for their wheat.

Senator NELSON. Who else?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Mills, who was at one time—I recall hearing him years ago—a very clever lecturer on Socialism, was a national organizer for the National Socialist Party. My memory is that he appeared in the western country with Mr. Debs when Mr. Debs was candidate for the Presidency at one time.

Mr. Martin, Mr. Robert Bruce Martin, whose utterances were so violently opposed to this Government that the mayor of the substantial city of Lewiston, Mont., served notice upon him that he could not appear at a public meeting there and make an address. The citizens of Columbus, in Stillwater County, without regard to party affiliation or standing in the financial world, assembled and notified Mr. Martin that he could not come into that town and make an address. He persisted in coming and he went and got a minister of the gospel who was in sympathy to go with him, and the citizens ran him out of town.

Senator NELSON. He was one of the organizers of the league?

Mr. KENNEDY. He was one of the organizers. In truth it might safely be said that most of the men who were sent into the State of Montana for the purpose of organizing the Nonpartisan League were men who had distinguished themselves conspicuously, some of them nationally, by their opposition to this Government during the war.

Senator NELSON. Major, I diverted Mr. Kennedy from your line of argument. I turn him over to you.

Senator OVERMAN. It was very interesting matter that you brought out.

Senator NELSON. Yes; very good matter. What disposition did these Nonpartisan Leaguers, the leaders and the leaguers—that means the leaders and the privates—manifest on this question of prohibition? What was their attitude?

Mr. KENNEDY. There was no public declaration, Senator Nelson, so far as I know. The individuals were largely of the agricultural class, and they are largely in favor of prohibition, as the vote shows in those sections. However, it is fair to say that the Nonpartisan League membership in Montana, by a very large percentage, consists of good, clean, industrious, decent citizens.

Senator NELSON. Misled by the leaders?

Mr. KENNEDY. The contention that I make, and some of the men in Montana who take the attitude that I do, is that these men are in bad company, led by men who are adventurers in the political world and designing to make for themselves a comfortable living at the expense of the farmer, who has substantial grievances.

Senator NELSON. There is no doubt that your diagnosis is correct.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Kennedy, as I understand it, the money that was spent by the United States Brewers' Association in Montana was largely spent directly in their own way, either through the German-American Alliance or in such manner as Mr. Kennedy might designate?

Mr. KENNEDY. That is true.

Maj. HUMES. It was not spent through your organization?

Mr. KENNEDY. Not one dollar.

Maj. HUMES. And in that fight they were blinded to every issue except the vote on that one question, and to accomplish their purpose in that they entered into alliances with the disloyal, seditious elements of the community in order to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. KENNEDY. Maj. Humes, that states very clearly what was the result, but I am not prepared to say that that was designedly done.

Maj. HUMES. Well, that was the effect, anyway.

Mr. KENNEDY. That was really the effect. The singular fact is that the records show that the men that they allied themselves with were men like those I have described, like Moersch and Weiss—men of that character. These were men that were apparently spending money in the State of Montana in the prohibition fight.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all.

Senator NELSON. And they seemed to be more concerned—Moersch and others—about what we would call the German propaganda than anything else.

Mr. KENNEDY. These representatives, Senator Nelson, yes; but of course that was not with the design of the brewers.

Senator NELSON. No; I mean these representatives.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you continue your connection, after that, with the organization?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I objected to some of these activities so strongly that I became annoyed and disgruntled, and I refused to continue in the fight, and about the first of September I quit the campaign and went to my farm.

Senator OVERMAN. We are much obliged to you.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am much obliged for the courtesy.

Senator OVERMAN. Your name is?

Mr. KENNEDY. J. M. Kennedy.

Senator OVERMAN. The other man's name is—

Mr. KENNEDY. I regret to say that his name is James B. Kennedy.

Maj. HUMES. No relation.

(Thereupon, at 4.40 o'clock p. m., the committee went into executive session, at the conclusion of which the committee adjourned on Tuesday, January 21, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

REWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in Room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman residing.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The subcommittee will come to order.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what I conceive to be the great delinquency of the newspaper reporters, or the newspapers, I do not know which, in regard to what occurred at our last meeting. Most important testimony was taken on that occasion, that of Mr. Kennedy in reference to transactions in Montana, and scarcely a mention of it was made. I have looked through the leading New York papers and found nothing in regard to it there. Whether there was any mention of it by the Associated Press I do not know.

I think it is too bad, for the public and for this committee, that when we get important evidence like that, it should be utterly ignored.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not think that any of our newspaper men are Socialists or Bolsheviki?

Senator NELSON. I do not know whether that delinquency is chargeable to the reporters present at these hearings, or to the newspapers. I make no charges against anybody, but I say it is too bad that the most important evidence we have had given here for many days was utterly neglected and not referred to in the public press.

Senator OVERMAN. And furthermore, I recall that Senator Nelson, at the time, called attention to the fact that this was very important testimony just at this time.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator KING. I have had a number of letters, Mr. Chairman, complaining of the newspaper reports, and also stating that there seemed to be a disposition on the part of Congress, as well, to minimize the activities of the Bolsheviks and sinister influences in this country; sort of looking with toleration upon the I. W. W. and the destructive and revolutionary influences in this country.

Senator OVERMAN. I have had presented to me a paper in which was paraded over this country, "The War Is Over. Now for the revolution!" All people ought to be informed about that and know what is going on in this country. There is a great placard here right now of that kind. I do not know whether we can go into this question right now, under our resolution, and investigate Bolshevism, etc. That is a question.

TESTIMONY OF MR. THOMAS J. TUNNEY.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Tunney, what is your business?

Mr. TUNNEY. I am an inspector of police, attached to the police department of the city of New York.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state if, at the outbreak of the war, or prior thereto, you were detailed for duty to Military Intelligence.

Mr. TUNNEY. I was; not at the outbreak of the war, but shortly after the outbreak of the war and the declaration of war against Germany by the United States.

Maj. HUMES. And when you were detailed to Military Intelligence, under whose orders did you operate?

Mr. TUNNEY. Col. Van Deman.

Maj. HUMES. He was the chief of the Bureau of Military Intelligence?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was.

Maj. HUMES. And did you afterwards operate under instructions from Gen. Churchill and Col. Biddle in charge of the New York office?

Mr. TUNNEY. I did.

Maj. HUMES. What particular work did you have charge of in Military Intelligence?

Mr. TUNNEY. To visit and attend the various police chiefs throughout the United States, police officials at conventions, police officials attached to railroads, and to get their active cooperation with the War Department in aiding the Government in the production and the manufacture of munitions and other essentials for the active prosecution of the war.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, in connection with your work, have any connection with the investigation and discovery of crimes and violence, or attempted violence, on the part of persons unfriendly to the United States?

Mr. TUNNEY. I did.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Inspector, will you outline to the committee in your own way, the activities in which you engaged in that line and the discoveries which you made of acts of violence or attempted violence on the part of persons whose interests were adverse to those of the United States?

Mr. TUNNEY. I will. Prior to the United States declaring war on Germany and after the European war broke out, I was in charge of what was known as the neutrality and bomb squad. I was assigned by Col. Woods, former police commissioner of the city of New York.

One of the first cases in which a German was involved in connection with committing outrages was that of a man by the name of John Holt, otherwise known as Eric Meunier, a professor of German at Columbia University. In July, 1915, he planted a bomb in the Capitol Building, here in Washington, and the following morning he shot Mr. Morgan in his summer home at Glen Cove, Long Island. When questioned as to why he placed the bomb in the Capitol he said he wanted to show this country how dangerous dynamite was, and the only place in which he could plant it so as to awaken the people of the United States was in the Capitol Building, and that the small amount that he used there would show them how dangerous it would be when a large amount was used under similar circumstances. He said his purpose in placing that bomb there was to prevent the shipment of explosives to the allied governments; that if the United States stopped the shipment of munitions and supplies, the war would stop, that Germany would win, and there would be no more to it.

The next case in which Germans were involved——

Senator NELSON. What did he have to say about shooting Morgan, if anything?

Mr. TUNNEY. Oh, yes; he said that he did not intend to shoot Morgan; that he intended to make his family hostages until such time that Morgan would go out and pledge to him that he would stop, or help stop, the shipment of supplies and munitions to the allied Governments.

The next case was that of a lieutenant, known as Robert Fay. Fay was a lieutenant in the German Army, and came out here in April, 1915. He said that he had been excused by his Government, after the battle of the Marne, in which he had participated, as he would be more serviceable to the German Government in the United States in stopping the shipment of arms, supplies, and munitions to the allied Governments. He said that he got in touch, in Germany, with a German secret agent named Jonnarson, who gave him $4,000; and that after he came here he reported to Capt. Von Papen and Capt. Boy-Ed.

In October, 1915, he was apprehended by members of my squad and myself. He had four mines already made. He had several hundred pounds of explosives. The mines were to be attached to the rudder posts of ships in New York Harbor, and by a mechanism he had attached to those the mine was to explode after the ship was several days out, through the movement of the rudder of the ship. He was to have them covered with rubber gaskets, to make them water-tight. He had the firing pins and clockwork and rifle cartridges all fixed in place and ready, so that when the spring would be released the whole machine would explode. He said his intention was to just blow off the rudder and the propeller of the ship. But the lieutenant from our Ordnance Department said it would blow off the whole stern of the ship and that it would sink immediately. Fay said he could put 91 pounds of T. N. T. in each infernal machine, and the American lieutenant who testified for the Government said that the United States only used 100 pounds in mines to blow up a breadnaught, 15 feet under the water.

Associated with Robert Fay was his brother-in-law, a man named Valter Scholz, another man known as Paul Daesche, and also Max breitung.

Senator NELSON. He was a Michigan man, was he not?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; he was a German.

Senator NELSON. I know, but was he not located in Michigan?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was in Michigan and Chicago and came on New York at the time of the arrest of the others and was apprehended. Then there were also Dr. Herbert Kienzle and Ed Bronkhurst. Kienzle was connected with the Kienzle Clock Co. of New York and Berlin, and he supplied the springs for the bolts. Fay said that if he had not been apprehended at the time, he guaranteed that not one ship would leave New York Harbor, and that he would then strike the seaport towns, Boston, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and the Great Lakes, Chicago on the one side and Buffalo on the other, and that then he was going to the Pacific coast. He was very anxious at that time that it should not become public. He wanted to bribe one of the officers. He said there was no amount fixed, but that any amount could be had "if you will wait until the banks open to-morrow morning, fifty or one hundred thousand dollars."

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever pursue that man Jonnarson who gave Fay those instructions?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; we never could locate him. He was in Germany and he was a German agent.

Senator OVERMAN. He was in Germany?

Mr. TUNNEY. In Germany; yes. I think Fay subsequently made his escape from Atlanta prison.

Senator NELSON. What is that?

Mr. TUNNEY. Fay escaped from Atlanta prison. He had been convicted and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment.

He was finally located in Spain and brought back to the United States. He said that Capt. von Papen had supplied him with money here, and that the 25 pounds of trinitrotoluol that he was going to secure before he was apprehended was for von Papen to blow up some munitions plants in New York; that he was not going to use that in the mines.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you find out where he got the trinitrotoluol—or however you pronounce it?

Mr. TUNNEY. It is usually known as T. N. T.

Senator OVERMAN. Where did he get it?

Mr. TUNNEY. He got that down at Perth Amboy. That was resupplied, after he had made an arrangement to secure it, by one of my men, who went down there to find out what he was going to do with it, and in that way he was trusted, and he took some of it over into the woods at Fort Lee to test it with the fulminate of mercury caps, otherwise known as detonators, and while testing it he was apprehended, and his associates afterwards.

The next case was of a man known as Paul Koenig. That was December, 1915. He was connected with the Hamburg-American Line, and has a distant relative by the name of George Fuchs.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was Koenig's position with the Hamburg-American Line, do you remember?

Mr. TUNNEY. He had the employment of men to watch and clean up anything connected with the line.

Maj. HUMES. He was the head of the intelligence department of that line, was he not?

Mr. TUNNEY. At that time, but he was subsequently made head of the secret service of the German Government, according to a note in his memorandum book made after the European war broke out.

Maj. HUMES. All right. Proceed.

Senator OVERMAN. The head of the secret service in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. In this country; yes.

On December 30 he went to Niagara and he sent Fuchs over to Canada to get a line on the locks of the Welland Canal, to find out exactly where they were located and how they were guarded, with a view to blowing them up. He also had in his employ a man named Frederick Schlendel, who was a German reservist. He was employed in the National State Bank in New York. Some time previous to his meeting Koenig he reported to the German consul's office in New York as a German reservist, giving his full name, the regiment that he was previously attached to, where he was living, where he was employed, and the kind of employment he was working at. Some time thereafter a German met him, one day after he left the bank, and told him to report to a German friend in a hotel on Forty-second Street. He went there and he met Paul Koenig under the name of Hansen. Koenig instructed him that he should procure the cablegrams that came there from the various allied Governments, find out exactly what they were purchasing and from whom they were purchasing, also a copy of the express receipts when the munitions and other supplies were delivered on the pier for shipment. This he did for several months, until he was apprehended. He also kept dynamite and other explosives in the National City Bank, which he brought in there in a dress-suit case.

Senator NELSON. He was an employee of that bank?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was in the foreign department. He said that dynamite was given to a Russian named Schwarz, also known as Mizius, who was born in Riga, of German parents, and that he was to take that to blow up munition plants. He did not know exactly which plants he blew up, but he commenced to cry and thought that he blew up the Dupont's plant, down in Delaware, in which 19 men were killed. We have been unable to locate Schwarz up to the present time. Paul Koenig was known as Triple-X and had about 10 aliases. In making appointments with these men he had a code. If he said he would meet them at the Pabst Hotel it meant the Manhattan Hotel, and so on. He used to change that regularly. He was known under a different name to each of his operators.

Senator NELSON. Did you, in your operations, come in contact with Detective Burns?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; I did not. I might also add that Schlendel said they kept a cache—in which he said all kinds of explosives were kept—in the woods in Tenaflly, N. J. I went there with him and we found a rock in which there was a cave, and did not find any explosives. He said they must have removed the explosives after his arrest. I might add at this time there was a man named Franz Schulenburg—I did not know his name at this time, but I subsequently ascertained his name in San Francisco, Cal. Fuchs told me that he followed (with two other men) a man, a German, from the German club in New York one night, to Meyers Hotel, in Hoboken, and they were told to search him and take papers he had away from him and deliver them to Paul Koenig. He described this German as a man about 45 years of age, with a blonde vandyke beard, and a blonde mustache.

Two years later, in December, 1917, Schulenburg was arrested by the police and Military Intelligence at San Jose, Cal. I was out at that time testifying in the German and Hindu plots, and I took him in the Military Intelligence office there, and spoke to him. Lieutenant Barnetz, who was with me, and who made the investigation at that time, remembered his description as supplied by Fuqua, and I spoke to him along that line and he finally admitted that he got $4,000 from Von Papen, in Seattle, to buy a ton of dynamite, rifles, and 50 silencers, in the spring of 1915. The dynamite and rifles he had delivered to a Hindu named Ram Singh, who was to meet him with 200 other Hindus at a place called Sumas. Was right on the Canadian border.

Ram Singh shot and killed Ram Chandra in the United States courthouse in San Francisco. He said that when he went to San Francisco he bought about 500 sticks of dynamite, 3 rifles, and 3 silencers, and that he received a letter from the German consul there to wait for further orders. He became intoxicated, and somebody stole some of the money. Then he went back to the German consul's office in San Francisco, and wanted some money, and Von Brinken, attached to Von Bopp's office there, gave him $110.

He went from there to the German consul's office at Seattle, where he originally met Capt. Von Papen, and he received another $110 there, and he says that he then went on to New York.

That was in December, 1915.

He said he could not see Capt. Von Papen in the German consul's office there, so he went to the German club, and there he saw Capt. Von Papen, but Capt. Von Papen refused to talk to him except in public, and he said he left there and went back to Meyer's Hotel in Hoboken, when three men followed him into the room and searched him, and said they were secret service detectives, one of them speaking German to him, and he said they offered him $5,000 if he would give them anything on Von Papen or Von Bernstorff. He said he could not tell them anything, and that he did not tell them anything.

He said the next day a German came in, that he did not know, and gave him a ticket to Mexico, and $5 to buy whisky, and that he went to Mexico, and from there that he went to California, and was around there for about two years with a horse and wagon carrying the dynamite and the rifles and silencers, until he was apprehended.

The next case in question was that there were numerous accounts in the newspapers of bombs being found on steamships leaving New York Harbor, and sometimes the steamships went on fire in the harbor, and sometimes they went on fire at sea, and sometimes at piers in France and in England.

There was one account, particularly, about some bombs that failed to go off that were found at Marseilles, France, on a steamship that sailed from Brooklyn, N. Y.

Commissioner Wood, at my request, sent a cablegram over to the French police at Marseilles to send back one of the containers, and also an analysis of the ingredients, in order to aid us in the investigation of those crimes.

That was returned in about two months and sent to the French ambassador, and from him turned over to the State Department, and from the State Department sent to the mayor of New York, and from the mayor of New York to the police there, and from the police to me.

That came in very handy here afterwards, and was used as a connecting link in apprehending about 12 or 15 of those men who were responsible for these crimes and convicting them.

There was a man named Charles von Kleist that one of my men who spoke German and was a German himself became acquainted with. He was very anxious to notify von Igel that a man, a doctor known as Walter Scheele, did not treat him right, although he had rendered valuable service to the Fatherland. This detective, Barth, told him that he was a German agent, and that he would be glad to bring all the information to von Igel and see that he was properly treated.

He finally told him about placing bombs on various steamships, and brought him one of the containers that he had buried in his own yard. He said Scheele had received $10,000, he thought, from Capt. von Rintelin.

He then went into details, showing that the bombs were made on the steamship Friederick der Grosse, the North German Lloyd Steamship Co.

He said the chief electrician there, known as Ernest Becker, made the bomb containers, and that he made several hundred of them, and that he brought them, from time to time, to Scheele's laboratory in Hoboken, where Scheele filled them with a powdered substance and a liquid substance. The bomb itself was made of lead, with a zinc compartment in between. The sulphuric acid that he used would have no effect on the lead, but it would, in the course of time, burn through the zinc partition, coming in contact with the explosive powder on the other side and setting it on fire and destroying the bomb itself in the flames, leaving no trace whatever of what caused the fire.

At that time Capt. Wolpert, superintendent of the Hamburg-American Line, or the Atlas Line, which was a subsidiary of the Hamburg-American Line in New York—the bombs used to be delivered to him by Becker, after Scheele filled them.

Another captain, called Eno Bode, who was the superintendent of the Hamburg-American Line in Hoboken; Karl Schmidt, the chief engineer of the Friederick der Grosse; William Paredis, Frederick Barbade, and George Pradel, three of the four engineers on the Friederick der Grosse, were all apprehended, and they were all subsequently convicted.

The bombs continued after the arrest of Fay, and after the United States declared war on Germany there were still some bombs placed on ships, and through a memorandum book found in the possession of Paul Koenig, which contains the names of various of these bomb lotters, we found a man by the name of Bonford Boniface.

I sent for him and brought him in, and he told me that he was employed by Karl Schimmel, who had a law office at 51 Chambers street, and if I could get in touch with him and with a lawyer named Martin Illson, on the New Yorker Herold, that he could supply me, he thought, with information about a man that would connect with some remaining bomb plotters. Bonford said he got $25 a week from Schimmel. The money was paid to Schimmel by von Rintelen.

He said that von Rintelen gave Schimmel the money and that it was simply to look after the sailings of the ships, and the kind of munitions or supplies that they carried, and reported it back to Schimmel.

Illsen supplied me with the name of a man named Uhde, who he claimed was very friendly with Schimmel, but he did not know where he lived, but that he was a lithographer by trade. A couple of men in my squad, after several months, located him in a furnished room in Brooklyn, and he then supplied the name of Eugene Reister who ran the restaurant in the labor lyceum in Brooklyn, and afterwards owned the German Masonic temple in New York. Reister said the original conspiracy was hatched in Schimmel's office, in which it was arranged to destroy ships and cargoes by placing bombs on board. Von Rintelen, at that time, was indicted in connection with them; and in October, 1917, Bonford Boniface, Eugene Reister, Walter Uhde, and a man named Peter Zeffert. Von Rintelen was tried again with the other defendants and they were all convicted.

Senator OVERMAN. Von Rintelen was convicted a second time?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was not tried the first time in this case. He was tried the second time.

There was a man known as Sternberg, who came to this country with Capt. Rintelen, who was also indicted, but he is now in Germany. He escaped from here in disguise, I understand. He brought over some glanders germs at the time he came here with Rintelen and a man known as Herman Ebling—who is now interned, was arrested at that time—became a witness for the Government, and said that Capt. Wolpert gave him the glanders germs and told him to shove them up under the nose of every third or fourth horse he would see on the stockades and along the ships or water fronts. This, he said, he did not do, because he did not like the idea and he threw it overboard.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was the man who gave him the glanders germs—Capt. Wolpert?

Mr. TUNNEY. Capt. Wolpert, who is one of the defendants in this case, and was the superintendent of the Atlas Line, a subsidiary of the Hamburg-American Line.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever ask him about it? Did he deny it?

Mr. TUNNEY. He admitted that he got the germs from Capt. Wolpert, but he said that he did not use them but threw them overboard.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Capt. Wolpert ever admit that he gave them to him?

Mr. TUNNEY. He refused to make any statement from the time that he was apprehended until he was tried, except that I said to him: "Why do you Germans use this country and violate our laws here, creating a lot of prejudice against yourselves by planting bombs on ships and destroying property and probably destroying life?" He said: "You know, these bull-headed Dutchmen want us to do things, but I quit this work altogether last June." I said him if he knew Fay and he said yes; that he met him once with Rintelen. I said: "Isn't his name 'von Rintelen'?" And he said: "There is no 'von' about it. He is just Rintelen." He said he met him once. I said: "Fay told me that while he did not know the men who were putting the bombs on the ships, he knew the men who were putting up the money for the bombs, and that they were not sufficiently effective, and that was why he came here from Germany, was to make real bombs." He made no reply to that.

Senator STERLING. He was the man, was he not, that was to make the real bombs?

Mr. TUNNEY. Fay; yes. He was going to make the bombs that would blow up the stern of the ship. He had them made, in fact, and he said that he guaranteed no ship would leave this country after he got through, unless he was apprehended.

There was a man known as Ernest Schiller, who was what they called the pirate-ship man.

He went on a ship in Hoboken in April, 1916, and after it passed Sandy Hook he held up the captain and the crew; and seized the ship and stole the ship's papers and the money, demolished the wireless, and made them put him off off the Delaware coast.

He had planned with two other Germans—but they failed to show up—to seize another ship. Then he went on board the ship and remained locked up or under the canvas of a life boat for four or five days, until the ship pulled out. He was subsequently tried and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Senator NELSON. As a pirate?

Mr. TUNNEY. As a pirate; yes.

There were two other Germans planning to blow up Black Tom a second time. They were apprehended before the conspiracy was carried out, and they were both convicted.

Senator OVERMAN. They were planning to blow up Black Tom, you say?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; that is a port in New Jersey, from which they used to ship these high explosives. It was blown up once and they were planning to blow it up a second time. I do not know whether the first blow up was an accident, or whether it was caused by other causes.

The next case in which I became interested was that of the Hindus. We received information of a man known as Dr. Chandra Chakraborty. On looking him up we found that he had no high explosives, but he did say that he had been over in Germany, and was sent over here to confer with the German oriental minister, and he spoke to Dr. Zimmermann and the oriental minister named Wiesendrank, and also with the Hindu German committee there; that he received a thousand dollars in United States currency there to come back here. He went over on a Persian passport and he came back the same way on the Norwegian-American Line.

When he returned he received $60,000 from Von Igel, to be used for organizing the Hindus here in a movement against the British Government in India.

He said a German named Sekunna used to go down there to get the money, $5,000 from time to time, as it would be suspicious to see him go down to Von Igel's office, he being a Hindu.

He said he did not have any direct connection in the shipment of arms and ammunition from here to the coast, but that Capt. Tarscher attended to that, Von Igel and von Papen, and that the German consul, Bopp, and Ram Chandra, attended to it in San Francisco.

The arms and ammunition that were sent out there to the Albatross were subsequently returned to New York and placed in storage. They could not reach the German raider with it.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the purpose of sending the explosives to the western coast?

Mr. TUNNEY. They were going to load it on the steamship Marinka, a German raider, to be sent into India by way of the South Sea.

Another Hindu was apprehended at the same time, named Haramba Gupta, who was a student in Columbia College. He had received $16,000 from Von Papen and tried to arrange there to ship on some ammunition from there to India. He said that Capt. Von Papen told him that he would help him out by sending arms and ammunition by way of the South Sea from the United States.

Chakerverty was subsequently tried and convicted in San Francisco, and Gupta was subsequently tried and convicted in Chicago, with some German agents who had arranged at that time to meet Capt. Cook, the North Pole explorer, and assassinate him there and take his papers, and pass off as him.

They met in the Philippine Islands for that purpose, but they never carried that out.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the name of this fellow who killed somebody in the courthouse out on the Pacific Coast?

Mr. TUNNEY. That was Ram Singh. He was the man who the man Schulenburg thought von Papen gave the money to, to receive the dynamite and the silencers and the rifles at Sumas, Wash.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was the man he killed?

Mr. TUNNEY. He killed Ram Chandra, another Hindu agent. Why he killed him I do not know, but one of the rumors was, if I may say so—I do not like to talk about the rumors—

Senator OVERMAN. It is just for my own information.

Mr. TUNNEY. He thought that he got away with too much money and appropriated it to his own use.

There were 29 convicted in San Francisco, at that time, I think, and 5 in Chicago, in connection with those plots.

Senator OVERMAN. Germans and Hindus?

Mr. TUNNEY. Germans and Hindus only. One of the Hindus in this case was named Har Dyall, in this plot, and when Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman were arrested in June, 1917, for conspiring to defeat the selective draft act, a letter was found in Berkman's office in One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, wherein Dyall wrote asking him to supply, to be sent to Holland, some anarchists that he wanted to use them. He mentioned particularly a fellow named Frank Tannenbaum, who had been convicted in New York for raiding churches, going around with the I. W. W. element there, and mentioned the number he was going to send, but put a couple of naughts after the number to throw off suspicion, and said that he was going to pay all their expenses, and pay them well.

He said if Berkman did not know the names of the leading anarchists in England, France and Italy, Germany and Austria, to go

Emma Goldman and procure the names, and to send him letters of introduction to them; that he was going to use them along his line of work.

We apprehended and secured evidence against Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, and they were subsequently convicted for trying to defeat the selective-draft act.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you find a list of those people?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; we found this original letter that was used in the testimony in the Hindu case in San Francisco, and was also used against Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman in the trial in New York.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is Emma Goldman now?

Mr. TUNNEY. She is in prison, at Jefferson City, Mo.

Senator NELSON. In a safe place?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes. She was ordered by the trial judge to be deported after her term expires—both she and Berkman.

Senator OVERMAN. What is her native country?

Mr. TUNNEY. I think she is a native of Russia.

Senator OVERMAN. She is ordered by the court to be deported after her term is up?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; that was ordered by the trial judge, with regard to both Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman. There was some doubt as to whether she was married to an American citizen or not.

Senator OVERMAN. What age woman is she?

Mr. TUNNEY. She is a woman about 46 years of age; a very able and intelligent woman and a very fine speaker.

Senator OVERMAN. I know something about her, of course. How long has she been in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. Nearly 30 years.

Senator OVERMAN. She is a fine speaker, you say?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; she is a very fine speaker.

Senator NELSON. She speaks good English?

Mr. TUNNEY. She speaks English very fluently. In fact, I have heard newspaper men say that she is a master of the English language. She and Berkman defended themselves on their trial, and they put in a very able defense, and their cross-examination of the prospective jurors was particularly noticeable.

Senator OVERMAN. Is she a handsome woman?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; she is not. I would not call her a very homely looking woman, either. She was a rather good-looking woman when she was young. She is a very stout woman.

Leon Trotsky, before he left New York, was a great associate of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the Russian leader?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

He called a meeting of the German socialists and Russians at the Harlem River Park Casino, at One hundred and twenty-second street and Second Avenue, on the night of March 26, 1917, after the breaking off of the diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany, and he spoke in both German and Russian that night, and this was the substance of his speech.

Senator STERLING. Who is that?

Mr. TUNNEY. Leon Trotsky.

Senator OVERMAN. The foreign minister of the Bolsheviki.

Mr. TUNNEY. He said: "I am going back to Russia"—he was going the next morning with about 35 or 40 of his associates, the names of whom, I believe, the Military Intelligence has. There was a report submitted to Gen. Churchill, and previous to that to Col. Van Deman. He said:

I am going back to Russia to overthrow the provisional government and stop the war with Germany, and allow no interference from any outside governments.

And he said:

I want you people here to organize and keep on organizing until you are able to overthrow this damned, rotten capitalistic Government of this country.

He did leave, the next morning, with his followers, on the Norwegian-American Line; and from that date until June 1, about 40 Russians left with various leaders, and they also went back there to roast the American commission that was over there at that time.

Two of the men who are now in the Government over there were connected with newspaper publications in New York. One of them was named William Schatoff, and is commissioner of railroads.

Senator NELSON. Commissioner of railroads where?

Mr. TUNNEY. In Russia, now. Also, I understand, he is the executioner there in the place of Uritski, who was assassinated by a woman sometime ago in St. Petersburg.

There were some American boys coming out of St. Petersburg and one of them told me that he came up to them and spoke English to them, and said to give his regards to Broadway, and had the train go back to St. Petersburg, and kept them there until the next morning.

The other fellow, Wallen, was connected with the publication of Novymir and Golatruda, Russian publications.

Senator NELSON. Russian publications in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Who else, may I ask, inspector, accompanied Trotsky at this time?

Mr. TUNNEY. I can not tell you the names, Senator, but the Military Intelligence has a complete list of them, or a copy of them. You can get a copy if they have not, from New York.

Senator STERLING. Did Lincoln Steffens accompany them?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; no Americans accompanied them at that time. They were all Russians, but they were well-known anarchists, well-known to some of my men.

Senator OVERMAN. I wish you would repeat the statement that Trotsky made to them before he left this country.

Mr. TUNNEY. He said to keep on their organization here, and they would overthrow the Government of this country.

Senator NELSON. And knock out the capitalists?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes. He called it the "damned, rotten capitalistic Government." Those are the words that he used.

Senator OVERMAN. Capitalistic Government?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether they followed his advice, or whether they are going on with that work?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes. I would not say that it is very effective, but that is the talk amongst a lot of the same followers now, sometimes in public and sometimes in secret conferences that they have.

Senator NELSON. You have a nest of those anarchists yet in New York, have you not?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes, Senator; there are a lot of them there yet. I might say that five of them were, subsequent to the conviction of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, apprehended for abusing the President and the Government of the United States, and in June they were convicted of violating the espionage act; and they were followers of Emma Goldman and were sentenced to 20 years apiece. That was just a few months ago.

Senator OVERMAN. What was Trotsky doing in this country before?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was always talking to the Russians on organization. He was connected with that newspaper publication, the Novy Mir, and was very often delivering lectures both to Russians and Germans on anarchy while he was here—radical socialism. He believed in the overthrow of all governments.

Senator NELSON. He spoke German as well as Russian?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; very fluently.

Senator NELSON. What was his nationality?

Mr. TUNNEY. He is a Russian.

Senator NELSON. Was he a Slav or a German?

Mr. TUNNEY. He is a Russian.

Senator NELSON. A Russian?

Mr. TUNNEY. A Russian Jew; but they do not believe in any religion, of course. They are just as much opposed to the Jewish religion as any other. They call themselves "Internationalists."

Senator OVERMAN. Did he speak English as well as Russian and German?

Mr. TUNNEY. He spoke very little English.

Maj. HUMES. You say that these followers of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman were convicted and sentenced to 20 years?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember what the sentence was that was imposed on Emma Goldman and Berkman?

Mr. TUNNEY. They were sentenced to two years each, which was the maximum sentence under the law at that time, the espionage act not being at that time in effect.

I also remember that the sentence imposed on the bomb plotters was a year and a half each, which was the maximum sentence under the law at that time; and then it was a subterfuge to get to try them under that, because it was never intended for criminals, but for legitimate shippers of explosives—in other words, that they should certify the common carriers that they were shipping explosives and comply with the Federal laws on that subject.

Maj. HUMES. They were prosecuted under the act prohibiting the shipment of explosives in interstate commerce?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That was the only act under which they could be prosecuted at that time?

Mr. TUNNEY. That was the only act under which they could be prosecuted at that time.

Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman were convicted under the old conspiracy act, which was the only one under which they could be convicted.

Maj. HUMES. Section 37 of the Criminal Code?

Mr. TUNNEY. I think that is the section, yes; but I am not sure.

Maj. HUMES. That was before the espionage act went into effect.

Mr. TUNNEY. It was.

Maj. HUMES. That would be the situation that would exist in this country at the termination of the war, with the lapse of the espionage act?

Mr. TUNNEY. It would.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. Proceed.

Senator OVERMAN. Your opinion is, then, that after the present war is over and after the expiration by limitation of the espionage act, this country would be practically helpless against anarchists?

Mr. TUNNEY. Except for the State laws.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. TUNNEY. Now, in New York, in regard to explosives, there is a very good law there; that is, with reference to the use of explosives in attempts to destroy property, the offense being punishable by a maximum imprisonment of 25 years.

Senator OVERMAN. That is under the State law. But that is not the Federal law.

Mr. TUNNEY. That is not the Federal law; and in fact there is no law at all outside of the espionage act. That imposes a maximum imprisonment of 20 years and a fine of $10,000.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed.

Mr. TUNNEY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have pretty nearly told you all I know. There is one other case I will mention, that of a man known as Capt. Fritz du Quesne. He was a Boer by birth, born in South Africa. He went from the United States to Brazil in 1913. He was previously in the Boer war and was made a prisoner by the British, and escaped from Bermuda. He went there with two men, a man by the name of Thwaites and—I just forgot the other man's name—supposedly to take moving-picture films in South and Central America. While down there he met Lieut. C. Martin, who was the military attaché of the United States embassy assigned to the Brazilian commission. Sometimes du Quesne tried to pass off as an American secret service detective and sometimes was dressed up in an American naval uniform. He went down there and he had some films insured for $80,000, and while there he sent a telegram to the Associated Press that Capt. Fritz du Quesne, Thwaites, and his other associates were murdered by hostile Indians. He signed that "Frederick Frederick." The Associated Press went back for confirmation and he confirmed it himself, again signing "Frederick Frederick." [Laughter.]

In February, 1916, he hired some natives from a place called Bahia to carry these films. His two associates were killed down there, but not he. He hired some natives to carry these films to:

report in Brazil, and he discharged them about a mile from there and he put the alleged films aboard the steamship Tennyson, of the Lamport & Holt Line, and after that steamer was three days out there was a time bomb exploded and killed three sailors, and they had to put back to port. Then his wife went and filed a suit for $80,000 for the films.

In the meantime he came back to the United States again and went over and lived in Jersey under the name of Fordham. He was supposed to buy some films under that name in Brooklyn and put them in a storehouse. Instead of that he put some chalk statuary there, and he tried to bribe the watchman to let him get in, and he could not let him in and finally the storehouse was burned down, films and all. He commenced suit for $30,000 for the films.

He had a letter from the German consul in Brazil, claiming that he had rendered valuable service to the Fatherland on several occasions, giving him a great send-off from Brazil.

My apprehensions began to be aroused because he was dressed up, and around collecting money for the Red Cross and other societies, as a captain of the Royal Austrian Light Horse Artillery. He had four stripes on his arm that he claimed were for wounds that he had received in France and Belgium; but he was doing more for himself than anybody else. He got acquainted with another captain who was a fake—said he was a British captain—and the funny part of the proceeding was that each one of them thought that the other fellow was on the level, and neither of them knew that they were both fakirs. [Laughter.]

So that Du Quesne came in one day, and he was all excited, and he says: "My God, somebody has been at my papers, and if German spies get at those papers they will have all the information, and every transport and every troopship that goes over will be sunk by the Germans."

The other fellow got a little alarmed and got in touch with my office, and then the whole story came out. He tried to fake that he was insane, and he was sent to the State Insane Asylum in New York, and they concluded that he was all right, and he came back again and plead guilty to the fraud charge, and he is now indicted and waiting extradition to England for murder in connection with the killing of the sailors on the steamship Tennyson.

I think that is all, gentlemen.

Maj. HUMES. You have referred to the activities of Walter Scheele. Do you remember the name that he used to use in New Jersey in connection with his operations?

Mr. TUNNEY. That is the name, Scheele?

Maj. HUMES. What company name did he adopt? Was it the New Jersey Agricultural Co.?

Mr. TUNNEY. New Jersey Agricultural Chemical Co.; that was the name.

Maj. HUMES. That was the name that he operated under in New Jersey?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes. They were first supposed to be shipping fertilizer, which was sent to neutral countries, and from there into Germany.

Maj. HUMES. What do you know about activities, since the armistice, on the part of these people, the anarchists and others?

Mr. TUNNEY. They are very active. They hold secret meetings and they plan to organize and disseminate propaganda by means of newspapers, small pamphlets, and letters, and later on adopt other methods, which they have not decided on up to the present time.

Senator STERLING. Is there evidence of renewed activity on the part of these anarchists, Mr. Tunney, since the armistice was signed?

Mr. TUNNEY. There is, Senator; there is evidence, but not sufficient to proceed against them up to the present time, without the right kind of witnesses. You sometimes get this information from a secret agent that you can not get him to testify to, because it takes years to get on the inside to find out certain things. I destroy his evidence after you use it in one case, and probably jeopardize his life. Sometimes people think a man's life does not amount to much if he accomplishes a whole lot of good; that is, a man is willing to give up his life for the cause of his country.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know anything about the activities of Lenin in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; I never found any of Lenin's connection here; but I do know about Trotsky and the other people.

Senator NELSON. How old a man was Trotsky?

Mr. TUNNEY. I should judge Trotsky was a man, when he left here, of about 35 years of age.

Senator NELSON. What was his appearance?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was a typical Russian; black, bushy, curly hair, and very radical looking in appearance as well as in speech.

Senator NELSON. Was he a tall man or a short man?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; he was of medium height. I should judge he was about 5 feet 6 or 5 feet 7.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he employed in the hotels?

Mr. TUNNEY. No. I have heard that story. He used to write articles and probably did take on different jobs. I think he used to write articles for various Russian newspapers here.

Senator OVERMAN. Did he have any other employment?

Mr. TUNNEY. Not that I know of.

Senator OVERMAN. How long was he in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. He was only in New York for a few months before he left. He had traveled somewhat through the United States. What he did in the other cities I do not know. I know only what he did in New York.

Senator STERLING. Did your activities lead you to investigate the newspapers in New York or anywhere else?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; no direct investigation. From time to time the foreign newspaper investigations were turned over to men who understood the language.

Senator NELSON. Did you see Viereck's "Fatherland"?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; I did not.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was connected with it?

Mr. TUNNEY. Weinstein. The name of Brailowsky.

Senator OVERMAN. Really the same man that owned it when Trotsky——

Mr. TUNNEY. Weinstein was associated with Trotsky in running it at the time Trotsky was here.

Senator OVERMAN. And he is now running it?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; he is now running that paper.

Senator STERLING. Did you at that time seize or take into your possession, Mr. Tunney, any material at newspaper offices which was meant for publication in newspapers of an anarchistic nature?

Mr. TUNNEY. You mean in the American newspapers, Senator?

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. TUNNEY. No; I did not, with the exception of Emma Goldman's "Mother Earth," and the "Blast," which were published in England—two anarchistic publications. In fact, I never found any of the American or the English papers connected with this movement at all.

Senator NELSON. Did Trotsky appear to be a man of education or ability?

Mr. TUNNEY. That was his reputation among the Russian people who speak English, that he was a man of ability among his own people, and quite a leader of men.

Senator STERLING. Did you ever hear him speak, yourself?

Mr. TUNNEY. I did not, Senator. I saw him, though. But this information, that I am testifying to, was by one of my own men, not a stool pigeon, but a policeman who secured this information that I have testified to, and upon which he based his reports at that time. That was turned over at that time to the Military Intelligence, shortly after he made his speech, and I think they turned it over to the State Department. That is on information, however. I do know Trotsky was taken off the steamer at Halifax and detained for a couple of weeks. And while he was detained there people in New York held a protest meeting and demanded his release, and I think they sent a telegram to the State Department in Washington at that time—some of the other radicals did—and some time subsequent to that he was released.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the size of the meeting, do you remember, that made the protest?

Mr. TUNNEY. There were about 400 or 500 present. It was in a place called the Lyceum, 64 East Fourth Street, New York. It was in April, 1917, after the declaration of war. But there were over 1,000 present at the meeting the night before he sailed from New York, at the Harlem River Park Casino. Emma Goldman and Berkman were also present that night and listened to him speak.

Capt. LESTER. Do you know how long Trotsky was in this country altogether?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; I know he was in New York only a few months. I do not know how long he was in this country altogether.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know who presided over that big meeting in which he made a speech?

Mr. TUNNEY. Who was the chairman, do you mean?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. TUNNEY. I really do not know, but I think it was a man named Abrahams, who was subsequently convicted and sentenced to prison for 20 years for violation of the espionage act. But I can find that out, I can get the names of those who were there.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you have occasion to investigate the I. W. W. any?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; in the early part of the European war they were making a bomb to kill a couple of men here in the United States—three of the I. W. W.'s. who were also associated with an anarchistic movement. Those men were Carron, Berg, and Harbo. While making this bomb it prematurely exploded and killed themselves, in an apartment house, One hundred and fourth Street. It blew the front out of the building and killed the three of them and killed a woman up on the next floor. I might add that the fellow Berg had a sister known as Louise Berg, also referred to as "Dynamite Louise," who went back shortly after Trotsky, with the other Russian bunch, to blow up some of the officials in Russia.

Senator OVERMAN. Berg was one of the three conspirators engaged in the manufacture of bombs?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes. There was a conspiracy to kill three prominent men in this country at one time, and as many thereafter as they could.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know who were the prominent men they had in view?

Mr. TUNNEY. I do.

Senator OVERMAN. Who were they?

Mr. TUNNEY. John D. Rockefeller, sr., and John D. Rockefeller jr. It was also discussed amongst them at that time that in order to wipe out families there was no good in killing one or two in a family, that they should kill them all, even to the children, and they used to talk from that time that the best way to do it was to get servants in the employ of the households of these prominent men, as to get a line exactly on what the family was composed of and what it consisted of.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you noticed the carrying of the red flag in New York?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; they stopped carrying that. They passed a local ordinance prohibiting its being carried. They used to carry it at all meetings.

Senator OVERMAN. What effect does that red flag have on a crowd?

Mr. TUNNEY. It has the effect of creating a feeling on the part of Americans that they would like to assassinate everybody carrying the red flag; or at least, a large number of them feel that way.

Senator OVERMAN. What effect does it have on the people who are in sympathy with carrying the red flag?

Mr. TUNNEY. It simply enthralls them, and they indulge in waving and waving it in the air.

Senator OVERMAN. It inflames them?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; and all those who are in sympathy with it. As soon as the carrying of the red flag was stopped they started to wear red neckties and sometimes red flowers in their button holes.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think that the carrying of the red flag tends to promote breaches of the peace?

Mr. TUNNEY. It does; because it antagonizes Americans who are opposed to them, and naturally there is a conflict right away. Americans claim they only want one flag here, and that is the Stars and Stripes.

Senator STERLING. The red flag is usually understood to be the emblem of anarchy?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; it is the emblem of anarchy. They sometimes call it internationalism. There are some modern Socialists who do not believe in the red flag. The radical Socialists do not believe in any form of government at all; their motto is, "Do as you like," and everybody do the same; they have no regard for law, and they do not believe in law.

Senator OVERMAN. One of their creeds is "Down with capital"?

Mr. TUNNEY. "Down with capital and Government." They claim capital is responsible for all Government. They blame the churches for standing in their way. They sometimes say they would like to destroy the churches. I met a man one night some time ago who claimed the only way to destroy every building was to blow it down with dynamite. There was another man present who said he did not believe in destroying buildings of art and science and where literature was kept, but all other buildings he would destroy. He differed to that extent from the other fellow.

Senator NELSON. How many of those anarchists and those radicals, W. W.'s and anarchists, have you in New York? As nearly as you can tell, how many are there?

Mr. TUNNEY. Do you mean, Senator, who belong to organizations or associations?

Senator NELSON. No; I mean that belong to such organizations or believe in that gospel.

Senator OVERMAN. Who sympathize with them.

Senator NELSON. Yes; who sympathize with them.

Mr. TUNNEY. I believe there are 12,000 or 15,000 in New York. I mean those who sympathize with the real radical movement. I would say we probably have 50,000 who more or less sympathize with them.

Senator NELSON. They are mostly foreigners, are they not?

Mr. TUNNEY. Mostly foreigners.

Senator NELSON. From what part of the old country?

Mr. TUNNEY. The three principal nationalities that they represent are Russians. Spaniards—I am talking now about the anarchist group—and the Italians, mixed up with some Germans. There are a few radical Irishmen and Englishmen, and a few Americans. There are very few of these English-speaking people with the exception of—well, there is a very small percentage of them that mix up with the real anarchistic groups.

Senator NELSON. Are there many Americans mixed up with them?

Mr. TUNNEY. Very few.

Senator STERLING. How about the Poles? Are there not a great many Poles?

Mr. TUNNEY. No; there are more Lithuanians. I classify them as Russians when speaking about them. But you can always get some people representing all races amongst them—always.

Senator NELSON. The Lithuanian language somewhat resembles the Polish, does it not?

Mr. TUNNEY. It does, but they say it is more difficult to understand than the Polish language.

Maj. HUMES. Inspector, can you give us any information as to the general activities of the Hamburg-American Line and their agents and representatives, and the groups through which they operate?

Mr. TUNNEY. Nothing more, Major, than what I have told; nothing that I could verify or substantiate other than what I have told. Of course, I did not go into all the details of it; I could not do that without comparing records. I have testified altogether from memory. I was in direct touch and had direct connection with what I have testified to myself.

Senator NELSON. One of their ships was a bomb factory?

Mr. TUNNEY. Yes; that was the North German Line. But the Hamburg officials were mixed up with them in the same proceedings.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know whether or not the Hamburg-American Line officials and agencies in this country, as well as the North German Lloyd Line, were used as one of the agencies of the German Government in carrying on the activities of the German Government?

Mr. TUNNEY. I do.

Maj. HUMES. They were semiofficial agencies of the German Government, were they not?

Mr. TUNNEY. They were. For instance, Koenig made a record of himself that he was employed as the American representative of the German Government, and he made several notes from time to time that he had, for instance, to meet some very confidential agent, and he refused to take a drink at his lunch here because his mind had to be very keen and active when he met this man afterwards, a man who was the agent of the German Government.

Maj. HUMES. The German Government, in other words, took over the organization of the Hamburg-American Line and the North German Lloyd Line for its own purposes?

Mr. TUNNEY. I would not say it took them all over, but it took various employees.

Maj. HUMES. I mean various employees that it could utilize effectively?

Mr. TUNNEY. It did.

Senator OVERMAN. This Frederick Der Grosse, where they made these bombs, that was an interned ship?

Mr. TUNNEY. It was not interned at that time. It was in neutral water, and it could not leave here; it was afraid to leave. It could have left before the country declared war, because it was a passenger ship. It was not a man-of-war.

Senator NELSON. That is one of the ships that they disabled before we took them over?

Mr. TUNNEY. It is.

Senator NELSON. And we took them into our service?

Mr. TUNNEY. That is right. This country got into the war and arrested a few in these bombs. They were pretty largely broken up.

Senator NELSON. Do you think they helped to break them up?

Mr. TUNNEY. It did.

Senator NELSON. Our legislation before that was entirely defective?

Mr. TUNNEY. It was. There were a number of defects.

Senator NELSON. I remember the case of that man that attempted to blow up the bridge at Vanceboro. I forget his name.

Mr. TUNNEY. Horn.

Senator NELSON. Yes. Now, he was simply indicted and tried for——

Mr. TUNNEY. The very same thing that the other men were tried for in New York, carrying bombs in violation of the interstate commerce act.

Senator NELSON. In violation of the law governing the shipment of dynamite and your testimony would indicate clearly that we needed such a law as the espionage law?

Mr. TUNNEY. In connection with explosives, Senator; in connection with people using explosives for unlawful purposes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think we need it in peace times as well as in times of war?

Mr. TUNNEY. We are not looking for war, but if we had another war, that would be a deterring fact if they knew the punishment was 10 years.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose no war broke out, but we had Bolshevism in this country?

Mr. TUNNEY. That would prevent it. You have a law for the safe-keeping of explosives, and that would be a good thing to continue.

Senator OVERMAN. You think that ought to be continued?

Mr. TUNNEY. I think so, Senator, because in one State you would have no explosives law at all and in another State you would have, and all they would have to do would be to have some explosives in Jersey and carry them over to New York.

Senator OVERMAN. If the law is repealed, you might have trouble about explosives?

Mr. TUNNEY. There might be, Senator. I do not want to be optimistic about these things.

Maj. HUMES. Inspector, have you any knowledge as to the number of German agents that were active in and about New York during the period just prior to the entrance of the United States into the war?

Mr. TUNNEY. Well, if there was anyone that we could secure any evidence against, we apprehended him, and I think my squad apprehended about 75 of the German agents or men working under their supervision just prior to and shortly after the United States entered the war.

Senator OVERMAN. Are there any people in this country now advocating the use of dynamite and other explosives?

Mr. TUNNEY. No, Senator. They sometimes talk about it in secret. There is no conspiracy to do anything with explosives, although they have done something in Chicago in connection with the I. W. W. activities. Although they talk about it, we have no conspiracy.

Maj. HUMES. You can not discover any evidence of a conspiracy?

Mr. TUNNEY. Not in New York. They have not had any in New York for some time. We have had no explosions in New York for some time in connection with the anarchist movement. I have pretty good means of finding it out if there were going to be. The number has been reduced from three or four hundred cases a year among the so-called black-hand element, to two or three. I remember the time that we had a couple of bombs, and know that they were planted by the Italian black-hand element for extortion purposes. In 1915 they were blowing up churches. They claimed that the reason was—they commenced with the Catholic Church, then they would strike the Episcopal Church, and in that way they thought they would destroy the Government. They were the protectors of the Government—the capitalist Government. That was the defense on one trial for blowing up St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York.

Senator NELSON. Has the Federal explosives act aided in keeping track of and suppressing bomb plots?

Mr. TUNNEY. It has, very materially. In fact, it could have been improved on and made more stringent. The penalty is a year and a half. I think it should be more stringent, because if men are out for violating that particular act and they do not mean to commit crime, still they can get away without permits. It really puts a check on it in the United States, in every State, and particularly around where quarrying is going on, where they are excavating, and other places of that kind where there was no attempt made at all to restrict it and miners could carry it away with their bags and bring it to New York; and now that provision prevents a whole lot of the carrying away of explosives. Under that law you can make it very difficult for people of criminal intent to get possession of dynamite.

Senator OVERMAN. We are much obliged to you.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Stevenson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON.

The witness was sworn by the chairman.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Stevenson, you reside in New York?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do.

Maj. HUMES. What have been your activities in connection with agencies of the Government since the entrance of this country into the war, and possibly prior to that time?

Mr. STEVENSON. For about a year and a half I have been interested in studying the various phases of propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. Have you been connected with any of the departments of the Government during that period of time?

Mr. STEVENSON. I became chairman of the committee of aliens of the Mayor's Committee of National Defense of New York, under Mayor Mitchel, and that committee established the first translation bureau of the foreign-language until the 1st of January, 1918, the Department of Justice, Bureau of Propaganda there, and later I became vice-chairman.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Stevenson, you analyzed the relation that exist between these groups in this country prior to a

Mr. STEVENSON. I have attempted to do so.

Maj. HUMES. Will you outline to the committee your analysis of the propaganda groups and the interlocking relation that exists between the several groups and several organizations that have been established?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will try it. It is a rather large subject.

I do not know whether the committee has attempted to define "propaganda" or not in its more modern sense. It is rather helpful—

Senator OVERMAN. We should like to have your definition.

Mr. STEVENSON (continuing). To have a definition of that kind. In the first place, we found it convenient to think of propaganda as a weapon of offense and defense, and we therefore defined it as the instrument employed to form, influence, guide, and direct public opinion with a view to controlling public sympathy and action.

We divide propaganda into two major classes, propaganda by the use of words, written and spoken arguments, and propaganda by deed, a term which we borrow from the radical groups. Inspector Munney has described to you the phases of propaganda by deed to a certain extent.

The propaganda in general in this country can best be divided into several phases, one the prewar phase, one during the period of—

Senator NELSON. You speak of the prewar phase as the time before we got into it?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; before there was any war. The second is the period of American neutrality; third, the period of our belligerency; and fourth, the post-armistice period.

Now, in each one of these periods, the purposes and character of the propaganda varied, because the objects sought were different. Therefore, I found it necessary to try to analyze the purposes of the propaganda during those particular periods.

During the first phase it was not altogether important. In that prewar period the propaganda consisted of encouraging the organization of the German element in the United States. We had a great period of organizing the German-American Alliance, German-American clubs, turnvereins. It was carried on also by an attempt to stimulate interest in kultur, exchange of professors from German universities, the encouragement of American students to study in German universities, and that is particularly interesting in its subsequent effect on the propaganda, because we have found that a very large number of American citizens who have become engaged either directly or indirectly in one phase or another of the propaganda here have been students in German universities and have taken their admiration for that civilization while there.

During the period of American neutrality—

Senator STERLING. May I ask, before you proceed with that, about when did that prewar propaganda begin?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I could hardly answer that, because it runs back over a very long period.

Senator NELSON. I can tell you when I first saw the signs of it. You remember there was quite a feeling in this country in reference to the action of Admiral Dietrich in Manila Bay against our fleet and Admiral Dewey. There was quite a feeling in this country, and after that I noticed the activity of the German consuls through the West in getting up meetings among Germans, especially to test their great loyalty and interest in this country. It seemed to spring up all over in order to overcome the feeling that had been created in this country against Admiral Dietrich and the German fleet and the German fleet.

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that is true.

Senator NELSON. It was clear to me at that time.

Senator OVERMAN. Has it been estimated how many organizations there were that you spoke of—musical organizations and other organizations?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I do not think there has been any attempt to figure that out. That would run into thousands.

Senator OVERMAN. Thousands of them?

Mr. STEVENSON. Absolutely.

Senator OVERMAN. Every town, every community, had its German organization?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have here somewhere in the suit case a German-American handbook that gives a list of a large number of organizations.

Senator STERLING. The German-American National Alliance was organized about 1900, was it not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator STERLING. But prior to that there were State German-American alliances?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

I think, too, we might consider as a part of the propaganda of the period the visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to this country.

Senator NELSON. He came after that Dewey incident.

Mr. STEVENSON. All of that propaganda we felt was directed to consolidate the German-American element here and create sympathy among the Anglo-American element of the American people for German culture. When war broke out in 1914—

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you there? We hear so much of German kultur. Have you undertaken to define German kultur. Can you tell us what this kultur is that we hear about? What does it consist of, besides sympathy for Germany?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I really do not know.

Senator NELSON. The term "kultur," as they call it, has a much broader significance than we give the English word "culture."

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. von Mach had the idea.

Senator STERLING. It is almost coincident with "power," and "times."

Senator OVERMAN. And "education" and "intelligence."

Mr. STEVENSON. It is rather Mach. One of the papers, a German paper, offered a prize to write the best letter explaining the war, and the prize was awarded.

Coming to the second paragraph's neutrality and the the occupied territory created can press and in the Amer one of the propagandists was that of self-justification, and we see that running through the early pages of such periodicals as The Fatherland—George Sylvester Viereck's—and The Vital Issue, a paper with which he was also connected, and The International Monthly.

Senator NELSON. For instance, they attempted to neutralize the effects of the German invasion of Belgium by claiming that France and England had really gone into that matter long before?

Mr. STEVENSON. As a matter of fact, they issued copies of a large number of secret orders which are believed to have been forgeries, although no proof has been obtained.

Senator NELSON. They claimed that they discovered papers there in the Belgian archives that demonstrated that there was a plan between the English and French in case of war to take possession of Belgium.

Mr. STEVENSON. The second matter which caused a great deal of effort to be put forth by the German propagandists was to stir up a feeling or sentiment in the United States against the shipment of munitions of war.

We also find in the beginning of 1915 the first indication of the encouragement of radicals, the purpose being to stir up labor disturbances. Every cause of discontent that they could find in the American public they seized upon. For instance, they assisted the Irish element in their attacks upon Great Britain. They also attempted to create a defeatist opinion in this country with a view to keeping us out of the war.

The third phase——

Senator STERLING. That defeatist idea was that Germany was sure to win in this war?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; exactly. And they used all sorts of propaganda. In that connection they used commercial propaganda and financial propaganda, showing the wonderful strength of the Central German financial institutions, and also pointed out the weaknesses of Great Britain and France in that regard.

Senator NELSON. Did they not have two other propagandas, one to breed hostility against Great Britain?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And then another to keep up a Japanese scare?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; they did that, too. But they did that later. That was largely brought about immediately prior to our entrance to the war.

Well, I might say that in the second period there was also the beginning of the great pacifist movement, which reached astonishing dimensions in this country.

During the third period, that of the United States belligerency, the first thing was to keep American troops and munitions at home; the second was to hamper recruiting; the third to prevent the passage of conscription acts, to keep up the pacifist propaganda, to continue the defeatist propaganda, and finally to stimulate the revolutionary propaganda.

And the fourth period is that of post-armistice propaganda, a matter which is very little understood and is a very elusive subject. There are, however, indications that an attempt is being made by a number of instrumentalities that were at work prior to the armistice to stimulate a public opinion favorable to soft and easy terms for Germany. I hope to be able to bring out that phase a little later.

Consequently, looking on this whole propaganda as a single subject, we have what we may call pro-German propaganda which involved anti-English and anti-Russian and other similar phases; second, the pacifist movement; and third, the radical, which is to me the most important subject, I think, that is before the Nation.

Now, that is in brief the scope of the subject. I do not think I can add very much to what has been testified to here with regard to German propaganda, although I do not believe that the matter of the activities of Karl Fuehr, who was really the chief propagandist in this country, spreading his propaganda to South America, has been brought out. Has it, Senator?

Senator OVERMAN. Not very much.

Mr. STEVENSON. Karl Fuehr's office was first located at 1123 Broadway, New York City, and later at 280 Madison Avenue, as a Tribune Ocean News Co. He was intimately connected with, and we have evidence that he assisted in the financing of, the German information service of Matthew D. Claussen. They got out periodically a sheet giving news. Some of it was written in the office of Fuehr, although it was alleged to have been sent by wireless from Germany. Material similar to that was sent by Fuehr to a man by the name of Martin Jurist at Panama for distribution to South America, and it is quite interesting to know that in the period immediately preceding our declaration of war—that is in January and the first two weeks of February—he expended about $140,000 for cable tolls alone to the Mexican Telegraph Co. I brought down his original check books.

Senator OVERMAN. Fuehr?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. $140,000?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. I brought down his original check books and some photostats that were taken of his books. I do not know whether they would interest you gentlemen or not.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you found out what was the nature of the communications?

Mr. STEVENSON. They were propaganda articles similar to those that were sent out by Matthew D. Claussen of the German information service, including commercial propaganda and self-justification and the general run of material such as you would find in the Faustland, The Vital Issue, or the New York Staats Zeitung, or any one of the other papers that were participating in the propaganda at that time.

Is there any other particular you want in reference to that?

Maj. HUMES. Any information you can give the committee as to those activities the committee will be glad to have—the South American activities.

Mr. STEVENSON. It was simply that these telegrams were distributed to Peru, Chile, Argentine, and Colombia.

Maj. HUMES. How were they distributed; sent for publication in the newspapers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; for publication in the newspapers, always

Maj. HUMES. Sent by wireless?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; they were sent by wire.

Maj. HUMES. I mean by wire.

Mr. STEVENSON. By wire, through the Mexican Telegraph Co.

Senator NELSON. I should like to hear you about the activity of the German propaganda prior to the time the war began in Europe, until we got into it. That is the most critical period.

Maj. HUMES. The analysis of the interlocking relations that existed between all those groups, that I understand you have given consideration to—suppose you outline that to the committee first.

Mr. STEVENSON. The financial man representing the whole propaganda system, of course, was Dr. Albert. Through him the sinews of war came; and for a time Dr. Dernburg was a leader of the literary propaganda. The media employed by the propagandists were newspapers—German language newspapers that were here.

Senator NELSON. Did they not employ English papers, too?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I was coming to that—the American newspapers that had German alliances; and if it became necessary, of course they purchased newspapers, but still there was a great deal they wanted to say that they could hardly get into the regular channels. They would send a great many articles to the regular newspapers like the Times, the Post, of New York, the various Washington newspapers, from regular news service. So they organized papers like the Fatherland, of Viereck's, and the Vital Issue.

Senator NELSON. And bought the Mail?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. They organized Issues and Events, a monthly paper, and Karl Fuehr, when he came over here with Dr. Mecklenberg from Japan, established this Trans-Ocean News Co. that had about 20 or 30 employees, transmitting articles received from Germany by wireless, writing others, and furnishing these articles to Viereck, to the Mail, of New York, to the Fatherland, the Vital Issue, and other similar papers.

Senator NELSON. Did they get many of their articles into the regular ordinary American English papers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; they got a great many of them. They had particularly long series of articles in the Current History of the New York Times, the monthly magazine of the New York Times. Practically all the papers took a great deal of their material at that time in the attempt to present both sides of the argument.

The internal arrangement of Fuehr's office was rather interesting, showing the detailed care with which the Germans operated. They kept an index of every article which they put out, indicating what papers had used it, how it had been sent, when it had been sent, and all these documents are now in the possession of the Department of Justice in New York City and are extremely interesting. They then put the clippings out of the various newspapers and indexed those back to correspond with the entries which they had made as to the original articles.

The most interesting, to my mind, and the most important thing, to bear in mind in connection with this propaganda is the fact that it seemed like poison gas; that after the attack is made the effect continues and extends. Consequently when we took up the pacifist movement, which developed and was stimulated by the Germans in the period of our neutrality, we found that it extended to American citizens.

Senator NELSON. Native-born citizens?

Mr. STEVENSON. Native-born American citizens. One of the interesting illustrations of a German organized movement for peace which had for its purpose the prevention of the shipment of arms was a mass meeting in New York—I think it was on June 24, 1917, called by the Friends of Peace. I have here a program. I want to call particular attention to the organizations under whose auspices this meeting was held. You will find the German-American Alliance of Greater New York, the United Irish-American Societies, the American Truth Society, the American Independence Union, the American Humanity League, the American Women of German Descent, German-American Peace Society, Star-Spangled Banner Association, American Continental League, Clan-Na-Gael, German Catholic Federation of New York, United Austrian and Hungarian American Societies, and many other societies.

Senator STERLING. What can you say of the American Continental League and its membership?

Mr. STEVENSON. That was made up largely of American citizens. I believe that organization was organized abroad, in Germany, by American citizens who were either living over there or married there when the war first broke out.

Senator OVERMAN. Was this gotten up and financed—have you any evidence that it was financed—by Germans, Dr. Fuehr, or anyone else?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; but there was evidence in Dr. Fuehr's program that he played a very big part in the organization of this thing. I might call attention to the fact that the man who introduced the speakers of the evening, Mr. George Von Skal, was a paid agent of Capt. von Papen and was working in his office.

Mr. Henry Weismann, the chairman of that meeting, was president of the German-American Literary Defense Committee, which had for its purpose the preparation of a large number of pamphlets and articles for distribution.

They had their offices in No. 150 Nassau Street, New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. We have had some evidence of a man named Weismann, have we not, who was it with Trotsky, was he the man?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; that was Gregory Weinstein. This is a very interesting group of people. You find Jeremiah O'Leary as one of the speakers. There were also John Devoy and Rev. G. C. Bermeier, who was outspokenly German, of course. The resolution was particularly interesting as giving the general character of the peace propaganda of that period. I think it is rather interesting, although it would be rather long to read into the record.

Senator STERLING. Can you say anything about the connection of any of the members of the executive committee whose names are given here? There is quite a list of members of that committee, "Executives," as they are called in this program.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. John Devoy has been extremely active in the Sinn Fein movement, and I believe was the man who led the Fenian raid on Canada in the sixties. He is a very old man at this time.

Jeremiah O'Leary is now under indictment for treason, and was the president of the American Truth Society, which was made up of Irish and Americans.

Mr. Bernard H. Ridder is the editor of the New York Staats Zeitung.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Miss O'Reilly?

Mr. STEVENSON. She is an Irish agitator.

Morris Cukor is an Austrian who has been an agitator.

Rev. G. C. Berkemeier is the head of the Watburg Orphan Asylum of White Plains, N. Y., and was the speaker at various meetings throughout the country during this period for the German cause.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was Henry Vollmer.

Mr. STEVENSON. He is a Representative in Congress, I believe.

Senator NELSON. Vollmer was a Member of Congress from Iowa.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. The whole list on page 9 is interesting. Dr. Hugo Schweitzer was a man very active in the German propaganda circles, and he was the president of a company that was to purchase German newspaper.

Senator OVERMAN. Were all these speakers there at that meeting?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir; they were.

Senator OVERMAN. Including Mr. O'Brien and Frank Buchanan and Richard Bartholdt, and others you have mentioned?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; they were there.

Senator NELSON. You say that these resolutions which are printed here are the ones that were adopted?

Mr. STEVENSON. They were adopted and printed.

Senator NELSON. Those resolutions might well go into the record, think.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think they are extremely interesting, because they practically epitomize the whole theory of the pacifist propaganda from the German point of view at that period.

Senator NELSON. There is no need of reading them. We can have them put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Let them go in.

(The resolutions referred to are here printed in full in the record as follows:)

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT A MASS MEETING OF FRIENDS OF PEACE IN MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1915.

Whereas there is being enacted in the Old World an appalling tragedy of bloodshed, unparalleled in human history; and

Whereas there is manifest a sinister determination on the part of advocates of one of the parties to the conflict to involve the United States in its horrors; Now, therefore, this mass assembly of American citizens, met together in the love of liberty and in the reverence of the forefathers, on the happy soil of a land untouched by the cataclysmic agony that has engulfed half the world, Resolve and declare it to be their sense, and, in their belief, the sense of a vast majority of their fellow countrymen:

I. That the people of the United States demand the maintenance of peace with all the world.

II. That they demand the maintenance on the part of the Government and the people of the United States of the strictest neutrality with respect of the warring nations—a neutrality not of profession alone, but likewise of practice; not of formal legality alone, but likewise of actuality and practical effect.

III. That they denounce, with all the strength of heart and soul with which outraged people can speak, the reckless war propaganda which, under the mask of patriotism, and in the abused name of humanity, has been, and is being, carried on in this country by those who see money in war.

To awaken prejudices which had been laid down on the threshold of America every immigrant worthy to become a citizen of a nation whose every citizen of himself or through his ancestors, an immigrant, is an act of public immorality; to fan forgotten antipathies into hatreds which may burn deep into the life of a nation whose foundations are laid in a concord of elements gathered from all the world and whose strength abides only in a union of racial talents, gifts, and temperaments of derivation as varied as the lands of the earth. Is a colossal civic crime; to seek to induce such a nation to take sides in a war between countries from one or another of which every one of its citizens drew its origin is to conspire against its unity and its life.

IV. Especially does this assembly denounce the treasonable activities of a large section of the newspaper press which within the past six months has done its utmost to drag the Nation to the brink of war. That a press dominated by financial interests could carry on for months a campaign of public demerit, seeking to provoke a peace-loving people to war, by the setting afloat of malicious rumors, by the encouragement of agents' provocateurs, by systematic and persistent invention, perversion, and suppression, by deliberate, contrived and never-repented falsification, would be unbelievable except for the experience through which the American public is now passing.

We affirm that these newspapers in no degree represent or reflect the sense of the mass of the people of the United States, the expression of whose real sentiments they constantly seek to throttle by denouncing as traitors any who question their own violent and pernicious opinions. This assembly, representing many hundred thousands of the citizens of New York City alone, nevertheless dares to serve notice that the masses of the people of the land, without a press faithfully seeking to voice their interests and the interests of the country, do not confess their reason intimidated nor their tongue silent.

Be it furthermore, as the sense of this assembly,

Resolved, V That, in its dealings with the Governments of Great Britain and of Germany, the United States should firmly insist upon the right of neutral ships to sail the seas upon peaceful errands, delivering lawful cargoes to their intended destinations without interference save as provided by international law as set forth in the declaration of London, 1909;

VI. That it should insist upon full respect for and protection of the rights of American citizens lawfully traveling on peaceful business;

VII. That with the duty of the American Government to protect its citizens while abroad goes hand in hand the corresponding duty of citizens to refrain from reckless adventures likely to embroil the Government endeavoring to protect them;

VIII. That no American has a right to offer his body as a shield to one of the belligerents by embarking as a passenger on a vessel carrying munitions of war; and that the United States Government owes it to its citizens to protect them against so doing;

IX. That the interests of the people of the United States and of her demand the cessation of the exportation from our shores of arms and munitions for the warring nations of Europe.

To pervert the strength and skill of American workmen, and to divert American capital from peaceful, natural, wholesome, wealth-creating industries to the manufacture of instruments for the slaughter of human beings, and the destruction of property is an economic folly and a moral crime.

We reject as unworthy of a great nation the specious disclaimer that the State is devoid of power to alter its laws of export because of the exigencies of the war now to be going on. Not a shred of international law, no analogy can be cited in support of the insufferable and pernicious fiction, foisted upon the public by the capitalized money interests, that an argument vitiated by the attitude of the present question of war supplies for the Mexican belligerents, Mexican war was going on.

The paramount duty of a nation is to the imagined opinions of its citizens. The accord and tranquillity of the nation and the favor of foreigners is to be desired. Nationalities are to be consulted. Nations whose fathers, brothers, and neighbors are usually and inevitably be far more numerous than those whom we may decline to

During nearly a year of war the United States has continued to supply munitions with weapons against its own people. It suggests that it would be unwise to exhaust its resources after a year of export

1917
1918
1919
1920
1921
1922
1923
1924
1925
1926
1927
1928
1929
1930
1931
1932
1933
1934
1935
1936
1937
1938
1939
1940
1941
1942
1943
1944
1945
1946
1947
1948
1949
1950
1951
1952
1953
1954
1955
1956
1957
1958
1959
1960
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965
1966
1967
1968
1969
1970
1971
1972
1973
1974
1975
1976
1977
1978
1979
1980
1981
1982
1983
1984
1985
1986
1987
1988
1989
1990
1991
1992
1993
1994
1995
1996
1997
1998
1999
2000
2001
2002
2003
2004
2005
2006
2007
2008
2009
2010
2011
2012
2013
2014
2015
2016
2017
2018
2019
2020
2021
2022
2023
2024
2025
2026
2027
2028
2029
2030
2031
2032
2033
2034
2035
2036
2037
2038
2039
2040
2041
2042
2043
2044
2045
2046
2047
2048
2049
2050
2051
2052
2053
2054
2055
2056
2057
2058
2059
2060
2061
2062
2063
2064
2065
2066
2067
2068
2069
2070
2071
2072
2073
2074
2075
2076
2077
2078
2079
2080
2081
2082
2083
2084
2085
2086
2087
2088
2089
2090
2091
2092
2093
2094
2095
2096
2097
2098
2099
2100

and her confederates is to confess a partiality which discredits all our professions of neutrality, which the common sense of the world can not but penetrate, and which the better sense of the plain people of the United States, truly desirous to be humane as well as impartial, will not brook.

We demand that the Government of the United States place an embargo on the exportation of arms and munitions of war, thus giving the world an exhibition of practical wisdom, of humanity of spirit, and of the completest possible fulfillment of perfect neutrality.

This assembly, under a deep sense of the gravity of the hour, renewing its devotion to the principles of American liberty and consecrating anew its members and those they represent to the cause of freedom of opinion and of speech, justice, and humanity, upon which the American Nation was founded, lifts its high and solemn protest against the evil machinations which seek to destroy its unity and its peace.

Mr. STEVENSON. The interesting feature of this movement at this time was that it stimulated interest——

Maj. HUMES. In that connection suppose you call attention to the press committee. Of whom did the press committee consist, and who were they?

Mr. STEVENSON. The press committee consisted of George von Skal, who, as I said, was formerly the managing editor of the New York Staats Zeitung and later a paid agent of Von Papen; Herman Alexander; Alfred Bernheim; Joseph Brucker; John Devoy, who is the editor of the Gaelic American—owner; Francis J. L. Dorl, who was the editor and publisher of the Vital Issue, a German propaganda magazine, and of Issues and Events—he is now interned; Robert Ford; Dr. Ed. Pollack; Victor F. Ridder, who was formerly the treasurer of the Staats Zeitung in New York; Arthur Schoenstadt; Dr. George Rodemann; Otto von Spengler; Theodore Sutro; George Sylvester Viereck; and C. B. Wolfram.

Senator STERLING. Do you know Theodore Sutro?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Is he an attorney?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I think he is a banker. I am not sure.

Senator STERLING. Do you know of his connection with the German-American National Alliance?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; he was a member.

Senator STERLING. He was a member?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And a prominent member?

Mr. STEVENSON. A very prominent member. I think he was an officer, although I am not certain. We have carded about 10,000 persons who have participated in one way or another in this propaganda, and it is very difficult for me, without preparation, to connect these people.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know who Arthur Schoenstadt is?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know particularly about his connection.

Senator STERLING. I will simply say that the Sutro of whom I have a little knowledge was Mr. Sutro, of New York, who appeared as the attorney of the National German-American Alliance before the subcommittee who had under consideration a bill to revoke the charter of that organization.

Mr. STEVENSON. We know him more in connection with the voluminous articles and the many pamphlets which he wrote, which were spread broadcast through the country, as an American citizen of German birth, taking the view that America should be neutral in word and in deed and should not participate in——

Senator OVERMAN. They seem to have had on the committees and reception committee a thousand at least.

Mr. STEVENSON. They had.

I mentioned a while back the plan to start a daily paper in New York, and I referred to an advertisement which appeared in Fatherland, Volume II, No. 13, May 5, 1915.

It reads as follows:

The propaganda for the publication of a new daily in New York, "absolutely impartial, doing justice to the German cause, above all American, free of any but American influences, and determined to impart the information to be had" is proceeding vigorously.

It is reported that over 200 organizations in New York, chiefly German-American, and 100 of them in Brooklyn, have elected committees to aid in the sale of the stock of The Printers and Publishers Association (Inc.), at $100 share to those who believe in the importance of publishing this paper.

The officers of the association are Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, the well-known writer, speaker, and chemist, president; Emil Kipper, a prominent New England manufacturer, vice president; Max W. Stiehr, treasurer, a large textile manufacturer; and Henry Weissman, the well-known attorney, secretary, who at the beginning of the European war has been widely known as a speaker on this subject, and as president of the German-American Literary Defense Committee.

He has appeared here as the chairman of the Friends of Peace. It says of him here:

Henry Weissman, the well-known attorney, secretary, who since the beginning of the European war has been widely known as a speaker on this subject, as president of the German-American Literary Defense committee.

(Continuing reading:)

Among the honorary vice presidents of the association, who constitute the advisory board, are the following well-known men:

Prof. Hugo Muensterberg, Harvard University; Prof. William R. Shepherd, Columbia University; Dr. Edmund von Mach, Cambridge, Mass.; Prof. A. Faust, Cornell University; Rev. Thomas C. Hall, Union Theological Seminary; Prof. Frederick Hirth, Columbia University; Arthur von Briesen, New York; Dr. Franz Kornfeld, New York; John H. Meyer, New York; Wilhelm Schuler, New York; Dr. B. Sacks, New York; County Judge J. H. Tleman, Suffolk Island; John F. Becker, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. Russell S. Fowler, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. Jacob Loch, Brooklyn, N. Y.; County Judge John F. Hylan, Brooklyn, N. Y.; August F. Schurmann, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Frederick E. Hertmann, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. F. H. Wilhelm, Kingston, N. Y.; Rev. I. Hass, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Robert Patchke, Troy, N. Y.; John Diehl, Schenectady, N. Y.; W. Miester, Syracuse, N. Y.; W. Kuelmling, Utah, N. Y.; Dr. W. L. Wisbelaner, Paterson, N. J.; Prof. Faust C. De Walch, New York City College; Leonard M. Brooklyn, N. Y.

You know that Dr. Hale has remained in Germany during the war? Senator NELSON. He remained in Germany during the war?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. His sympathies were entirely with Germany.

Arthur von Briesen was the president of the Legal Aid Society until the war broke out.

I have prepared a memorandum of this pacifist movement. I think I might be shorter and briefer if I follow along with that, that is your pleasure.

Senator OVERMAN. You have a statement prepared?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. STEVENSON. Referring to the propaganda about which I have just spoken, this pacifist propaganda organized distinctly by the Germans, I say:

The effect of this propoganda was to encourage American citizens of pacifist tendencies to organize and cooperate for the same purpose.

Senator OVERMAN. Naturally, there may have been a great many patriotic, loyal Americans who were against going into the war, what you might call pacifists. You are speaking of the people that were connected with these organizations gotten up by the Germans, are you?

Mr. STEVENSON. We are treating of pacificism, the whole subject of pacificism, and in naming these people I do not want to imply that a large number of them may not have participated in these movements with perfectly honorable and honest intent.

Senator OVERMAN. I see the name of William Jennings Bryan in there. Naturally, he was against war, but do you mean to say that he attended these meetings by reason of some instigation of a German propagandist? Do you say he was a German propagandist?

Mr. STEVENSON. The reason why we have been interested in propaganda is because it is an instrument that can be used which will go beyond the actual starting point. In other words, if there are men in the community who are sympathetic to the particular line of argument used by the propagandists from another motive, the fact is that the German propagandist has started a movement and these other men join him and, without intention in a great many cases, are aiding in producing the effect which the Germans desire.

Senator OVERMAN. Many of these men, you say, were perfectly innocent in attending these meetings?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think a good many of them were.

Senator OVERMAN. They were true American citizens?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think they were.

Senator OVERMAN. You mentioned Mr. Hylan. Is he the mayor of New York?

Mr. STEVENSON. He was not at that time. He is now.

Senator OVERMAN. I mean he is the Mr. Hylan who is now the mayor of New York City?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You mentioned Mr. Bryan, and you mentioned others here that it strikes me are not German propagandists. You do not class them as German propagandists, do you?

Mr. STEVENSON. No. I would say in connection with that thing that I just read, that there was a movement which was intended to state Germany's position, and avowedly sympathetic to the German side of the subject. I believe at that time those men named on that list were sympathetic to Germany; otherwise they would not have participated on the advisory board of such a paper. That, however, does not affect a man's loyalty to the United States after the United States went into the war.

Senator OVERMAN. That was all before we declared war? There were a great many men who might have gone to these pacifist meetings and made speeches, or who might have been on resolution committees and other committees, who, after we got into war, were just as loyal as any American?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely. That has been the case many times. But the point is, on this subject of propaganda—and that is where its danger lies—that men whose opinions are similar to those of the particular campaign being launched by the Germans, aided and assisted the Germans, unintentionally, and gave force and effect to their propaganda campaign.

Senator WOLCOTT. If I understand you correctly, Mr. Stevenson, the idea, as I would put it, is something about like this: The Germans found in a community, or in the country, a certain honest sentiment existing amongst very thorough-going Americans, and in a very clever way they, so to speak, misapplied that sentiment to their own ends, and directed it to purposes which those who entertained the sentiments did not at all sanction?

Mr. STEVENSON. That was the case in many instances.

Senator WOLCOTT. Therefore, in the instances of many of the very loyal Americans, they were made the unwitting tools, from the German point of view, of the German propagandist?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is your point, is it?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is my point. That is why I conceive propaganda to be one of the most dangerous instruments, and, in some cases, it has been the most successful weapon, that has been employed.

The series of pacifist organizations, which I would like to moderate, consisted almost wholly of American citizens. It has interested, however, because, although it started among the most conservative Americans having pacifist leanings, it wound up in contact with the most violent radicals and merged directly into the present radical movement.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you proposing to read those names?

Mr. STEVENSON. If you wish them read.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, I do not know. What do you think about it, gentlemen of the committee, bringing a man's name in here who may be a perfectly loyal and honest pacifist—if you call him such—a true, loyal American; should we put his name in here? As for most of the names that have been put in here it has been argued by others that if a man's name goes into this record it damns him and disgraces him, humiliates him, and is a reflection on him. I do not know the names that Mr. Stevenson has, there, but you say you have there, Mr. Stevenson, the names of a number of men who are perfectly loyal. Do you think those names should be read into this record. I do not know who they are. I have not seen them.

Senator NELSON. I do not think they should be, if they are loyal—if we have reason to believe they are loyal—but I do not see why we should leave out the disloyal ones.

Senator OVERMAN. I think a statement of the fact is sufficient, without putting the names in. We do not want to damn a man who is perfectly innocent and loyal in an inquiry like this, and probably we might do that if we put his name in here. Why put the names in? How does that add to it or detract from it?

Maj. HUMES. Can you make that statement, Mr. Stevenson, referring to the organizations as organizations rather than to the individuals that organized the various associations or organizations' activities?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can certainly name them.

Maj. HUMES. I mean can you, in the statement that you are about to present to the committee, confine that statement to the names of the organizations, eliminating the individuals?

Mr. STEVENSON. I feel this, with regard to that whole movement: do not think it is a matter for publication at all, but I think that for your own information you would understand the movement better, you would understand the force of it more, if you knew yourselves who were behind it, and the various changes that have taken place in the type of people that went into it.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not state it without naming the individuals, just stating the type of people at the different stages of the movement, who entered it? In other words, I can not see how calling man's name is necessary to describe the activities.

Mr. STEVENSON. We are not calling anybody any names, Senator. I mean, it is simply the purpose, the way I have this here, to give a statement of the activity. This was not made for publication.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand.

Mr. STEVENSON. It absolutely was not made for publication.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not mean any reflection on you, at all.

What do you gentlemen of the committee think about it?

Senator WOLCOTT. I am averse to letting names go into the record. I think the fact can be described without the employment of names. That is the meat of the thing—the method of operation. For instance, the witness could mention the fact, which all of us know, that there were many pacifists in the country, and describe how the Germans organized those pacifists, or tried, rather, to appropriate their pacific sentiments to the interest of Germany, and organized societies to cultivate the sentiment developed and to spread it. That does not necessitate the naming of individuals at all, and yet it gives us the method of German operation.

Mr. STEVENSON. I can try to do it, and then if you want any further amplification, I shall be very glad to give it to you.

I might say that these pacifist organizations grouped themselves into those which grew out of the American League to Limit Armaments, which was organized in New York City in 1914 and had its offices at 43 Cedar Street, New York City.

Senator WOLCOTT. In what part of 1914 was it organized?

Mr. STEVENSON. December 18, 1914. The purpose, as given in their literature, was as follows:

The American League to Limit Armament is organized to combat militarism and the spread of the military spirit in the United States. It will use its influence to promote a sane national policy for the preservation of international order with the least reliance upon force, and to secure the efficient use of the moneys appropriated for that purpose. Any person in sympathy with these purposes will be eligible to membership without payment of dues.

At a meeting of the organizers of the league, held on December 18, 1914, at the Railway Club, 30 Church Street, New York City, it was—

Resolved, That the true policy of this country is not to increase its land and sea forces, but to retain for productive and humanizing outlay, the vast sums demanded for armaments, and to wait steadfastly for the day we may render our disinterested aid in helping the nations of Europe, crippled by excesses of militarism, to free themselves and the world from the waste and terror of armed-up instruments of destruction.

The head of that league was a well-known college president, a man of force and dignity, and whose opinion carries considerable weight.

He expressed himself in his speech at that time along that vein. He had been educated in Germany and was the possessor of a decoration—the Order of the Prussian Red Eagle—and was extremely sympathetic to Germany before the outbreak of the European war. I do not mean to imply by that that he may have had any sympathy for Germany afterwards, but his speech was almost identical with the general type of literature which we have found issued by the German propagandists.

I might mention one name here, because I believe that there is a very grave question—two names I will use here because of their subsequent activities as being among the organizers. One is Mr. Morris Hilquit, who is one of the leaders of the radical movement in this country to-day, and the other is the Rev. John Haynes Holman, who is pastor of the Church of the Messiah in New York City, and who has been identified with every one of these movements, and whose sermon on pacificism was employed by the German general staff in distributing it over our trenches to weaken the morale of our troops.

Senator STERLING. When was that sermon delivered?

Mr. STEVENSON. That was delivered last April, I believe—a long time after we had entered the war.

Senator OVERMAN. His is one of the names that should be mentioned, I think.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. It is names like that that we want to go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Surely. We do not object to that—men who showed by their activities afterwards that they were German sympathizers.

Mr. STEVENSON. The men who were named in this original organization, and persons who have continued, even after we entered the war, to back their purposes, I think might properly go into the record.

Senator NELSON. You mean those who have continued their activities since we entered the war—since our country entered the war?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

One is a lawyer in New York City, with offices at 20 Nassau Street. L. Hollingsworth Wood. Another is Oswald Garrison Villard.

Senator STERLING. What have they done since we entered the war to indicate their German sympathies?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have continued the pacifist movement. They have been on boards of organizations which attempted to block the passage of the conscription act; and in one or two instances, organizations of which they were members attempted to bring about disobedience of military orders among drafted men.

Senator STERLING. Have any charges been brought against them?

Mr. STEVENSON. The matter has been in the hands, in one instance, of the United States attorney in New York. I do not know what disposition has been made of it.

Senator OVERMAN. We have a very important bill up this afternoon in the Senate, and we will have to continue this matter until tomorrow, although it is very interesting.

We will take an adjournment at this point until to-morrow morning at half past 10.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 22, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

REWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10.45 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator William H. King residing.

Present: Senators King, Wolcott, and Nelson.

Senator KING. The committee will be in order. Proceed, Maj. Humes.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask Mr. Stevenson to proceed with the analysis he was making yesterday.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON—Resumed.

Mr. STEVENSON. At yesterday's hearing we had just mentioned the first of a series of pacifist organizations, the American League to Limit Armaments. This organization had in its membership men of conservatism with pacifist leanings, as well as some of the men who have since developed into violent radicals.

Senator NELSON. This American League to Limit Armaments was distinct from the matter of the embargo on the shipment of arms, was it not? It embraced a different subject?

Mr. STEVENSON. They participated in that, however.

Senator NELSON. But this arose before?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; this arose in December, 1914.

Senator NELSON. Yes. It was in opposition to any increase in our Army or our Navy?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator KING. Of course, there were connected with that, however, many who were strongly anti-German.

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes. Some of the men who were in that movement have since become extremely chauvinistic and have entirely changed their point of view. For that reason it does not seem wise to name the membership in the old committee.

Senator NELSON. We came to the conclusion yesterday, I want to say, that we would not give the names of all, but only of those who continued to be vicious.

Senator KING. Is the claim made, Mr. Witness, that Germany, directly or indirectly, was responsible for this organization?

Mr. STEVENSON. There were some members of this organization who were connected with the German propaganda and had written propaganda sheets.

The claim is made that propaganda, being a peculiar instrument, can direct a movement by inspiring a sentiment in the country, that will bring to that movement people who are not in any way connected with the propagandist. That has been shown in all our analyses that we have made. In other words, that is the fruit of the propaganda.

I did mention, however, as being members of this organization, Mr. L. Hollingsworth Wood, a lawyer in New York, because of subsequent connections with most of these organizations, and Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, for the same reason, and Mr. M. Hillquit.

Senator NELSON. A noted socialist?

Mr. STEVENSON. A noted socialist; and John Haynes Holmes.

The members of the executive committee of this organization felt that the scope was not wide enough, and therefore the antipreparedness committee was formed, which later became the American Union Against Militarism, with headquarters at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and offices in the Munsey Building in Washington.

The American Union Against Militarism was a national organization, having branches in various cities, and which maintained an office in Washington. It was engaged in issuing propaganda literature, in circulating petitions, and in attempting to influence Members of Congress on the subject of preparedness and antiwar.

Senator NELSON. They were against war?

Mr. STEVENSON. They were absolutely against war.

Senator NELSON. Under any circumstances?

Mr. STEVENSON. Under any circumstances.

Senator NELSON. And against any increase in our Army or Navy?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely. That was during the period of neutrality. They continued after we entered the war, and opposed conscription and issued literature calculated to discourage recruiting.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were they ever arrested for that?

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Senator NELSON. This was before we passed our spy law. It was during the period of neutrality?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; but after that also.

Senator WOLCOTT. After we got into the war, the witness said they issued literature which was designed to discourage recruiting.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did they keep that up after the espionage law was passed?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yet they were never arrested for it?

Maj. HUMES. That is the organization that Roger Baldwin was connected with?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Roger Baldwin has been convicted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; but on another count.

Maj. HUMES. But he was convicted because of his antiwar activities——

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Maj. HUMES. It may not have been that this particular charge was in the indictment.

Mr. STEVENSON. He was convicted on his own confession, or on his refusal to submit to physical examination when he was drafted under the selective-service law.

Senator WOLCOTT. After we got into the war, did they continue to agitate against war?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And also, at the same time, agitated against recruiting, or against conscription?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. I will mention also the following: As one of the men connected with this organization who has since been connected with a large number of other organizations of a similar nature, Amos Pinchot; Max Eastman, who has been indicted several times for violation of the espionage act, but the jury disagreed—that was in connection with the Masses case in New York City; Roger Baldwin, who is now serving sentence for violation of the selective-service act; L. Hollingsworth Wood, whom I have previously mentioned as one of the executive committee of the American League to Limit Armaments; Scott Nearing, who is now under indictment for violation of the espionage act; Oswald Garrison Villard; Max Eastman, who is the brother of Crystal Eastman, and the editor of the Masses, which is now known as the Liberator, and continues publication along the same line; Rev. John Haynes Holmes; Rev. Frederick Lynch; Prof. Emily Greene Balch, of Wellesley—I believe she was dropped from Wellesley on account of her activities in these organizations.

The executive committee of this union then organized a separate bureau which was entitled "The civil liberties bureau."

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you, there, is that the organization that is looking after these conscientious objectors?

Mr. STEVENSON. That was the original organization that began to do that.

Senator NELSON. There is an organization now, because I have been getting some literature from them lately.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will mention that in just a moment.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Mr. STEVENSON. Because that was a development from this civil liberties bureau, the American Union Against Militarism.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. In this civil liberties bureau Roger Baldwin was the director; L. Hollingsworth Wood, Normal Thomas, a minister in New York, Amos Pinchot, and Rev. John Haynes Holmes, were on the directing committee, among other people.

They continued an agitation against the draft, encouraged conscientious objectors, and issued a considerable amount of pacifist literature.

Senator KING. Amos Pinchot was quite conspicuous in that propaganda, was he not?

Mr. STEVENSON. He was, and still is, in regard to similar propaganda.

They found that the demands on their organization became so great that they organized a separate organization known as the National Civil Liberties Bureau, and that is the bureau to which Senator Nelson refers.

Senator NELSON. That is now looking after the conscientious objectors?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

I might say that this National Civil Liberties Bureau was a national organization and had attorneys representing them in all parts of the country. They agitated against the conscription act.

Senator KING. Even after it had become a law?

Mr. STEVENSON. After it was passed.

Senator KING. Did they not arrest some of them?

Mr. STEVENSON. You mean——

Senator KING. For trying to prevent the execution of the law and conspiring to defeat the execution of valid laws of the Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Their offices have been raided, and their documents seized by the Department of Justice, and the matter, I believe, is now pending in the United States attorney's office.

Senator NELSON. They have prosecuted some of them.

Senator WOLCOTT. What matter is pending—some indictment on the legality of the seizure of the papers?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; the legality of the seizure is not questioned, I think.

Maj. HUMES. You mean that the investigation is still pending?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; they have the papers still and, so far as I am personally acquainted with it, I do not know that any indictment has been brought in.

Senator NELSON. I know of a case in Minnesota where they have tried a man and convicted him, and given him four years, and this case is before the Supreme Court to-day to be argued.

Senator KING. If Mr. Pinchot, or this organization, tried to obstruct the draft law and the proper execution of the laws of Congress, I do not see any reason why they should not be prosecuted, the same as other people have been prosecuted. Is there any reason?

Mr. STEVENSON. Our bureau, Senator King, has been confined solely to the examination of the papers and the preparation of the relationship of these various organizations. We, ourselves, have not looked into the motive of any of these people and have had nothing to do with the preparation of any cases.

Senator KING. Indeed, there would be less excuse for men of intelligence to obstruct the execution of the laws of Congress, which laws were passed for the purpose of saving our Nation and civilization, than for ignorant men to do so.

Mr. STEVENSON. The National Civil Liberties Bureau not only undertook this matter, but attempted to assist any violators of the laws passed by Congress or the various States relative to the war. It took a very active part in assisting at the trial of the I. W. W. in Chicago.

Senator WOLCOTT. On the defense side, of course?

Mr. STEVENSON. On the defense side; yes. They issued a large amount of propaganda in the form of articles, leaflets, and books to justify the position and activities of the I. W. W.

Senator KING. Who were the chief officers of the organization you are now describing? Were they the same persons whose names I mentioned a few moments ago?

Mr. STEVENSON. Practically. I will give you those.

In November, 1917, the officers were: L. Hollingsworth was chairman—you can see the line coming together as the thing develops—the Rev. Norman Thomas; Helen Phelps Stokes, who the sister-in-law of Rose Pastor Stokes; Albert De Silver, a lawyer in New York; William G. Simpson; and Walter Nelles, counsel.

On the directing committee we find Rev. John Haynes Holmes and Judah L. Magnes.

By the way, it is rather interesting to note that Judah L. Magnes was mentioned by Von Bernstorff in one of his aerograms to the foreign office dated 9th month, 8th day, 1916; and the aerogram was No. 381, eastbound, saying that "Magnes belongs to circles very friendly to us."

That may have no particular bearing on the proposition, but it is interesting in this connection.

Crystal Eastman was also a member of the directing committee.

This was after Baldwin had been sentenced to one year in prison.

To give an illustration of the sentiments entertained by the members of this committee, I have personally talked with a number of them, and if you will permit me to quote from the statement of Roger Baldwin himself to the trial judge at the time of his sentence——

Senator Wolcott. He was sentenced, then, for declining to perform military service, was he not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. He says:

Though at the moment I am of a tiny minority, I feel myself just one protest in a great revolt surging up from among the people, the struggle of the masses against the rule of the world by the few, profoundly intensified by the war. It is a struggle against the political state itself; against exploitation, militarism, imperialism, authority in all forms.

That is pure anarchy. [Continuing reading:]

It is a struggle to break in full force only after the war. Russia already stands in the vanguard, beset by her enemies in the camps of both belligerents. The central empires break asunder from within. The labor movement gathers revolutionary force in Britain; and in our own country the nonpartisan league, radical labor, and the Socialist Party hold the germs of a new social order. Their protest is my protest.

The American Union Against Militarism organized another organization known as the Collegiate Anti-Militarism League, which had representatives from all the universities and colleges in the United States and worked for the same purpose.

Senator NELSON. When was that organized?

Mr. STEVENSON. That was organized in the fall of 1915 and continued active up until a few months ago.

Senator KING. Let me interrupt you for a moment. Have you discovered that in many of these universities of the United States there were professors who subscribed to these dangerous and destructive and anarchistic sentiments?

Mr. STEVENSON. A very large number.

Senator KING. And participated in this class of revolutionary and bolshevik meetings and organizations?

Mr. STEVENSON. Quite a large number of them, mostly among professors of sociology, economics, and history.

Senator KING. It seems to me this is a good time for the States and those who control the universities to look into that matter.

Senator NELSON. I should like to get a list of those professors.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have here a "Who's Who," that I prepared, giving a brief biographical sketch of them.

Senator NELSON. When you get to them, give it to us. I think the American people ought to know those professors.

Senator KING. It is a remarkable thing, Senator—I have made some investigation myself, and it is a remarkable thing—that in the universities there has been a festering mass of pure atheism and the grossest kind of materialism, and teachings destructive to our form of government and the civilization which a Christian nation recognizes.

Mr. STEVENSON. An examination of the records, Senator KING, shows that that is very widespread.

Senator KING. We ought to weed it out and drive out of the universities these pernicious teachers.

Mr. STEVENSON. These national organizations were cooperated with by local organizations in different places. In New York there was the New York Bureau of Legal First Aid, which later changed its name to the Bureau of Legal Advice. The purpose of this bureau was to assist draft evaders and men who were conscientious objectors or those opposed to doing military service.

Senator NELSON. They called themselves "first aid," using a medical term?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; in Chicago they had an organization known as the American Liberty Defense League. In Boston, they had the League of Democratic Control. A separate group which was very closely identified with these movements consisted of such organizations claiming a religious attitude. One of these was the Fellowship of Reconciliation, which was a branch of an organization of a similar name in England, and was established in this country by the Rev. H. D. Hodgins, of Devonshire House, London.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were these organizations of which you were just speaking organizations with some past history, some years of life behind them, or were they mushroom things that were nurtured during the war, and the prospect of having to go into the military service?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not at all familiar with the English branch of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, but there was never such a thing in this country before the war; and this same group of people who were active in these other organizations were the ones who developed it here.

Senator WOLCOTT. What did they call it?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Senator WOLCOTT. I wonder how they hit on that name?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is beyond me, Senator. They published a paper entitled "The World To-morrow," which is still being published. It is an extremely radical sheet. It was opposed to militarism, opposed to conscription; opposed to war; and is now taking up the economic questions of the day along similar lines.

Senator NELSON. Is it still carrying on its propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. I have with me some of the copies of the paper, which will perhaps give you an idea of what sort of a sheet it is, in case you should like to look at it afterwards.

Roger Baldwin was connected with Garrison Villard, John Hay,
I could go down the list; the Senator NELSON. The same.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; the ka.

n. a.
—
cer.

The Church Peace Union, which is an organization founded by Andrew Carnegie, and, I believe, a very conservative and excellent organization, was used by its secretary to gather information for the use of the National Civil Liberties Bureau on the question of pacifism and the question of conscription; in other words, the secretary of that Church Peace Union issued letters to the pastors and rectors and clergy asking them to express their opinions on the question of conscription and conscientious objection; and the results of that canvas were turned over for the use of the National Civil Liberties Bureau and their propaganda literature.

The socialists, gaining some strength among certain of the clergy, have organized two organizations known as Christian Socialists; one is the Christian Socialist Fellowship, which was organized in Louisville, Ky., in 1906, and the Church Socialist League in America, which was organized in 1911.

Senator NELSON. All that would imply that there are heathen socialists, too?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. They took a very strong position on the question of the war, and a good many of their officers——

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "the war"? Do you mean the European war——

Mr. STEVENSON. No; our war. A number of their officers also participated in these other organizations that I have mentioned.

Senator WOLCOTT. You employ the pronoun "they." By that do you mean the socialists that were identified with these two organizations?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. And only those socialists?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is all I am speaking of at the present moment.

Senator WOLCOTT. As I recall, there was quite a violent split amongst the socialists over our war?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will bring that out in the political parties that participated in the pacifist movement. I have tried to separate these things.

Senator KING. Is it your contention, Mr. Stevenson, that all of these organizations to which you have referred, and others to which you may refer, were controlled more or less by or in association with Germany?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not exactly, Senator. What I do contend is that they were encouraged by the Germans. They were hailed with enthusiasm by all of the German propaganda sheets, and given publicity.

Senator KING. Is there anything to show that they knew that their propaganda was regarded by Germany as helpful to Germany and its interests and hurtful to the United States and its interests?

Mr. STEVENSON. That would require a deduction, Senator. We have, for instance, in the Issues and Events, which was a distinctly German propaganda magazine, created by the Germans for the purpose of influencing public opinion in this country, a continuous series of articles giving publicity to the activities and approving in every way of the activities of these organizations.

Senator KING. What I have in mind is this: We can conceive of a person doing an act which is treasonable, and yet, because of lack of intelligence, or because of some peculiar mental quirk, he does not conceive it to be treasonable, and we can conceive of another person who might do the same act with an intent to do a treasonable act.

Mr. STEVENSON. We have tried to treat propaganda as a separate and distinct subject. The Germans launched the attack, created public opinion, and the consequence of that attack is the fruit. The success of it depends upon whether they have encouraged a certain sentiment in the people of the United States.

During the early period of the war we found a concerted action on the question of pacifism engineered by German agents—meetings, and thousands of articles in newspapers, thousands of booklets and pamphlets.

From that we find a strong pacifist movement growing up in the United States, carrying out exactly what the Germans wished, though we do not say what the motives of the people are: we do not know. But we believe that an analysis of the situation will convince anyone that it was the result of German propaganda.

Senator KING. Can there be any question but what the activities of these organizations to which you have referred contributed to the cause of Germany, and was harmful to the United States and the morale of the American people?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think there can be no question of that.

Senator KING. And is it apparent from the records which you have, and from the examination which you have made, that the members of these organizations of this sort, who were connected with them, were cognizant of the fact that they were helping the enemy and hurting the United States, and perhaps affecting the morale of some of the people in the United States?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, Senator, that would call for a conclusion. I think that a reasonable man is supposed to know what are the reasonable consequences of his acts.

Senator KING. That is the implication of the law, that a man is presumed to know the consequences of his act.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have been very careful to emphasize, throughout this whole proposition, that we are not going into the motives of anybody who has participated in the propaganda campaign. We have tried to confine ourselves solely to the facts, and let the facts speak for themselves.

Senator KING. When your country is at war, fighting a war that is determined to destroy your country and civilization, the only one conclusion that I can draw from the activities of any person if those activities in any degree help the enemy and hurt their country, and that is that they are enemies to their country. Properly.

Mr. STEVENSON. In connection with this, the American Friends Service Committee, of Philadelphia, which was made up wholly of Quakers, participated in the pacifist propaganda, and some of its members assisted the National Civil Liberties Bureau in the particular work in which it was engaged, which was a little beyond what the Society of Friends would ordinarily have done.

The matter of the International Bible Students' Association—they were known as the Russellites—was an extremely interesting case of propaganda carried on by a quasi-religious organization.

The people who participated in that have been convicted and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment. It was a very widespread movement.

Senator NELSON. What was the organization called?

Mr. STEVENSON. The International Bible Students' Association.

Senator NELSON. And some of those Bible students have been locked up, have they?

Mr. STEVENSON. All of the leaders.

Senator WOLCOTT. Except Pastor Russell, and he is dead, is he not?

Mr. STEVENSON. He died.

Senator NELSON. I suppose the Government is providing them with Bibles where they are now located?

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope so, Senator.

A very interesting phase of the pacifist movement was initiated with the Ford peace mission, and is particularly interesting because that commission was really inspired by Rosika Schwimmer, who was undoubtedly a German agent.

Senator NELSON. Where was she living?

Mr. STEVENSON. She was an Austrian journalist.

Senator NELSON. Where was she living?

Mr. STEVENSON. She just came over here, I believe, to start this movement, and she did not come back to the United States after she went over.

The result of that is interesting. Mr. Ford's peace secretary at that time was Louis P. Lochner, and it is interesting to bear his name in mind, because it continues over into the radical movement of to-day.

Mr. Benjamin W. Huebsch, a publisher in New York City, was also one of the members of the party, and Rebecca Shelley.

Huebsch was connected with the German propagandists in this country, and has published a large number of books on pacifism and antimilitary subjects, and has been connected with a number of pacifist organizations.

Prior to the entrance of the United States into the war, and subsequent to the Ford peace commission, there was organized a national association entitled the Emergency Peace Federation, of which the most prominent members were Mrs. Henry Villard, who was the mother of Oswald Garrison Villard, Emily Greene Balch, and Louis P. Lochner.

Senator NELSON. The same men you referred to before?

Mr. STEVENSON. The same men that I mentioned before.

Lella Faye Secor I will speak of later; also Rev. Frederick Lynch, who was connected with the Church Peace Union; Rebecca Shelley, and a number of others who were, in one way or another, connected with the other organizations.

This organization was designed to start propaganda to bring about peace at the time. It was after one of the German peace balloons went up that this organization was formed.

Another organization, participated in by a number of these people was the American Neutral Conference Committee.

In this committee there were a number of prominent men. A good many of them were educated in German universities, and undoubtedly had German leanings at that time, which it was no crime to have prior to the entrance of the United States into the war; but it is interesting to note, in connection with the other movement, that we find this Prof. Emily Greene Balch again, George W. Kirch of Columbia University, Rebecca Shelley—she was the secretary—and the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, the publisher of Benjamin W. Huebsch, Rev. Frederick Lynch, Lella Faye Secor, and others.

Senator WOLCOTT. How were all of these organizations financed? These people seem to have done more in the way of forming committees, bureaus, and so forth, than anything else.

Mr. STEVENSON. They published a large number of pamphlets. This organization also issued petitions, and so on.

Senator WOLCOTT. But it takes money to run all these things. It takes money to print. How did they get their money?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is a phase of the matter, Senator, which I have not gone into.

Our committee has simply been studying the phases of the propaganda. We have not gone into the financial side at all. That is something that it may yet be found wise to investigate.

Senator KING. It may have been done by other branches of the Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. It may have, though I am inclined to doubt it. I am not sure.

Senator KING. How late were those organizations of which you have been speaking actively engaged in their work or propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Emergency Peace Federation and the American Neutral Conference Committee are both defunct, and became defunct before the United States entered into the war.

Senator KING. Did any of them continue their activities after we went into the war, and were any of them organized after our country went into the war?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am coming to some that were organized afterwards. The American Union Against Militarism continued after we entered the war, and the Fellowship of Reconciliation is still continuing. The National Civil Liberties Bureau is still continuing and has continued during our participation in the war.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is the one that is nursing the conscientious objectors.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the place of residence of all of these organizations? Where is their habitat—in New York City?

Mr. STEVENSON. The American Union Against Militarism's habitat now is the Munsey Building, I believe, in Washington here.

The National Civil Liberties Bureau is now located at 41 Union Square, New York City.

The Fellowship of Reconciliation headquarters is 118 East Twentieth Street, New York City.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were not any of them located at 70 Fifth Avenue?

Mr. STEVENSON. Most of them were, until the owner of the building evicted them.

Senator WOLCOTT. They had a very expensive layout there, did they not, in the way of offices?

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes—well, they were sufficient for their need.

Senator WOLCOTT. The rent, I should think, would be pretty high here. Did they subsequently buy any property?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not that I know of, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. The Y. W. C. A. in New York City—where is that located; on Fifteenth Street, I believe?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; the Y. M. C. A. building—

Senator WOLCOTT. The Y. W. C. A. building.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. You do not know about that at all?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I do not know about that.

With the declaration of war by the United States the raison d'être for the Emergency Peace Federation and the American Neutral Conference Committee ceased to exist, and they became defunct.

However, the movement continued to become more radical, and on August 4, 1917, the People's Council of America for Democracy and Peace was organized, with offices at 2 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

Among the officers and executive committee are found Louis P. Lochner, Lella Faye Secor, Rebecca Shelley, Scott Nearing, Jacob Panken—who, by the way, is an extremely radical speaker, and a judge of the municipal court in New York City; Algernon Lee, socialist alderman, New York City; Max Eastman; Emily Greene Balch; Judah L. Magnes; Morris Hillquit; Eugene V. Debs, who is now serving a sentence for violation of the espionage act; Irving St. John Tucker, who was just convicted with Victor Berger for violation of the same act; and the treasurer of this organization is David Starr Jordan.

The advent of this organization was hailed with enthusiasm by the German propagandists, and wide publicity was given to it in the German organs, such as Issues and Events, The Fatherland, etc.

The object, of course, was to discourage the military activities of the United States and to bring about peace.

In a telegram which was sent by Lella Faye Secor to President Wilson they stated that their membership is 1,800,000.

Senator NELSON. Evidently these organizations were all in opposition to Gen. Pershing's organization over in France?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is certainly the impression that one might get, Senator.

This telegram to President Wilson states:

The organizing committee of the People's Council of America, now representing 1,800,000 constituents, believe that a combination of world events makes it imperative that Congress speak in no uncertain terms on the question of peace and war.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the date of that telegram?

Mr. STEVENSON. This was in August, 1917.

Senator NELSON. After we entered the war?

Senator WOLCOTT. After Congress had spoken.

Senator NELSON. Yes; we spoke in April, did we not?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON (continuing reading):

The eminent position of our country among the allies and the democratic members of our Government, and the lives and the future happiness of the young manhood of our Nation all demand that Congress should no longer remain silent and inactive on what is now the supreme interest of mankind—how to bring a just and lasting peace into the world. * * *

The Russian people are united for peace, based on the formula which is gaining acceptance everywhere: No forcible annexations, no punitive expeditions, and free development for all nationalities. * * *

Senator Wolcott. They might also have added: "And victory for Germany"?

Mr. STEVENSON (continuing reading):

Thus we have the representative assemblies of Russia, Germany, and England debating peace terms while only the American Congress remains silent in this fateful war.

Forward-looking men and women throughout the world are looking expectantly to Congress. Democracy is shamed by your silence.

That was a telegram addressed by this organization to President Wilson personally. This organization is still in operation, and they held a dinner last Monday evening in New York City, at which Scott Nearing presided, and they determined to flood the country with handbill propaganda, because their literature has been denied the use of the mails.

Senator Wolcott. What have they in mind now? What is the nature of their propaganda now?

Mr. STEVENSON. They are taking up the league of nations. They are seeking the amnesty of all political prisoners. They do not want any military establishment here. It is a very mixed type of propaganda. I do not know exactly what they are doing.

Senator King. It is practically the overthrow of our republican form of government, and the establishment of a—Senator Nelson. Bolshevik government?

Senator King. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. There are a large number of persons connected with this organization that sympathize with the Bolshevik or Soviet form of government.

Senator King. Class government is what they want.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think we shall have to wait until we see the propaganda before we know exactly what they are doing.

Senator Wolcott. There is no telling what they are going to do.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think so.

The outgrowth of this People's Council was the Liberty Defense Union, with offices at 138 West Thirteenth Street, New York City, in which there is a curious mixture of intelligentsia and anarchist radical socialists and—

Senator Wolcott. What do you mean by "intelligentsia"—intellectuals?

Mr. STEVENSON. Intellectuals.

Senator Nelson. Senator, it means those anarchists who conduct their operations to brain storms and not to physical force.

Mr. STEVENSON. Among the members of this organization were Rev. John Haynes Holmes; Scott Nearing; Elizabeth Gurley Fitch, who is well known as an I. W. W.; Max Eastman; Kate Richards O'Hare—and, by the way, there is an extremely interesting collection tion. Kate Richards O'Hare is now serving a sentence for violation of the espionage act, but she was an associate of Nicholas Lenine in the International Bureau, the People's House, in Brussels before the war, in 1914.

Senator WOLCOTT. This question has been running through my mind, Mr. Stevenson: Is it not a fact that these people, after all their efforts and agitation and the expenditure of a great deal of labor and emotional energy, after all did not make any kind of an impression at all on the plain, common-sense American people—speaking by and large, I mean; they did not make any dents, did they?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think if you really mean the American people, I should say no, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is what I mean. I mean the ordinary American citizen.

Mr. STEVENSON. But it is a fact that—

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, they can make some trouble here and there in spots; but, taking the great body of the American people, were they not too level headed to be influenced by this outfit?

Mr. STEVENSON. We must remember, Senator, that the American people—and by that I mean really American people—are not present in very large numbers in our industrial centers. They have made a very great impression on the foreign element, which we will develop in the progress of the radical movement.

I have brought in this pacifist movement in this way because of its direct connection with the subsequent radical movement, which is the thing which is of most importance before the country to-day.

In connection with this Liberty Defense Union, Amos Pinchot was also a member; Eugene V. Debs; Henry Wadsworth Dana, a late professor of Columbia University; David Starr Jordan; Abram Shiplacoff, a Socialist assemblyman in New York; James H. Maurer, of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor; and a large number of other persons of similar character.

The result of the Ford peace mission was the establishment of an international committee of women for permanent peace, which was organized at The Hague in 1915. They organized a special branch for the United States and that branch had a subsidiary in New York City, which is now known as the Women's International League.

It is rather interesting to note that at a meeting held on the 28th of November in New York City by this league, among the other literature which was disseminated was a pamphlet by a man known as Louis T. Fraina, entitled "Bolshevism Conquers," and the meeting resulted in a riot by some unattached soldiers that did not like the general tenor of the meeting.

Senator NELSON. They broke it up?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mrs. Henry Villard, the mother of Oswald Garrison Villard, was the honorary chairman; Crystal Eastman was the chairman; and Prof. Emily Greene Balch was also a member of that organization.

There was another rather interesting organization gotten up by the younger element of this group, called the Young Democracy, which was a radical organization, designed to promote antimilitaristic ideas and to overthrow the wage system and similar social reforms, but its activities were considerably hampered by the seizure of documents and other things by the Government authorities.

Senator NELSON. They were a group of socialists, were they?

Mr. STEVENSON. I presume you might call them socialists. I don't know that they would strictly come under a definition of socialism, but they had socialist leanings.

There were a large number of other smaller institutions which were considerably active, one of which was the No-Conscription League, with offices in One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, New York City. That was organized by Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, the well-known anarchists, and they distributed vast literature against conscription and against the prosecution of war.

A little later I can give you that.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you for just a moment, Mr. Stevenson? You referred to these organizations as being in New York, Louisville, or some other place. By that, as I understand it, you mean the headquarters of the organization? They were national in their scope, and sent their literature all over the country, and had branch organizations in different parts of the country, did they not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; that is correct.

Senator NELSON. Have you got anything pertaining to the Nonpartisan League, or the leaders of the league?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am mentioning that among the groups of political organizations, Senator.

Senator NELSON. You are coming to that?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am coming to that.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Mr. STEVENSON. There was an organization among the Hebrews of the East Side in New York, and at one time they claimed 25,000 members, entitled "The League of Conscientious Objectors"; but it only created a rather violent agitation for two or three months; then, because of lack of leadership, it petered out.

There were three principal parties, quasi-political parties, which participated in this pacifist movement. The first was the Socialist Party of America. At the convention in St. Louis on April 7 to 10, 1917, the party was captured by the more radical or revolutionary wing under the leadership of Kate Richards O'Hare, Morris Hillquit, and Victor Berger.

It was then that the famous St. Louis platform was adopted, which was opposed to war, and was an extremely radical and revolutionary stand.

The Socialist Labor Party was another quasi-political party which took a similar or even more violent stand on the question of war, and finally the new creation, the Nonpartisan League, was formed, and I might quote from the platform of that party, as follows:

We therefore demand that our Government, before proceeding further with its support of our European allies, insist that they, in common with it, make an immediate public declaration of terms of peace without annexation of territory, indemnities, contributions, or interference with the right of any nation to elect and manage its own internal affairs.

We demand the abolition of secret diplomacy.

To conscript men and exempt the blood-stained wealth coined from the labor of humanity is repugnant to the spirit of America and contrary to the ideals of democracy. We declare the freedom of speech to be the bulhuman liberty, and we decry all attempts to muzzle the public press or individuals upon any pretext whatsoever. A declaration of war does not repeal the Constitution of the United States, and the unwarranted interference of military and other authorities with the rights of individuals must cease.

It is rather interesting to call attention at this time to the fact that the league was financed by dues paid by members. I believe they paid these dues in the form of notes.

Senator NELSON. Some cash and some notes?

Mr. STEVENSON. Some notes. When it came to securing funds they went to a man in New York City to advance them money.

Senator NELSON. $20,000?

Mr. STEVENSON. $20,000.

Senator NELSON. What was his name?

Mr. STEVENSON. Rudolph Pagenstecher, of New York City.

Senator NELSON. He was a German banker?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, he was a manufacturer.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. He is an American citizen, of course; American born. But you will find his name in that Friends of Peace organization.

Senator NELSON. They put up these farmers' notes as security?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Who were the main men in that organization?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am sorry that I have not with me the complete list of that organization.

Senator NELSON. Have you any list?

Mr. STEVENSON. I only happen to have it mentioned here. We have a list in our office in New York.

Senator NELSON. What have you here?

Mr. STEVENSON. I simply have the mention of Representative John A. Baer, of North Dakota, who was elected; that is all.

Senator NELSON. Have you not anything about Townley?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not anything specifically about him, although he has been very active in it.

Senator NELSON. He is the leader of it?

Mr. STEVENSON. He is the leader of it; yes.

In reference to the pacifist movement in general, there were a large number of books published independently; a vast number of articles written by various authors, and circulated by German organizations. For instance, the concern that published The Vital Issue and Issues and Events kept a book store from which were sold all sorts of anti-military and pro-German and pacifist books, so that the public reached in this movement was extremely large. We have enumerated here about 52 organizations, with the directing committees, amounting to probably over a thousand persons, most of them people of education and ability, so that the magnitude of that movement can not be over-emphasized. There were a large number of conferences and conventions held—organized—by these various organizations, which were designed to promote propaganda activities. I have prepared here a "Who's Who" of some of the principal persons connected with these various organizations, which shows their relationship to all of them, which it might be interesting for you to look over privately. [Indicating list.]

The connection of the pacifist movement with the radical movement, which we considered the most important of all the propagandist developments, has been slightly indicated. You notice the trend of these organizations to become more radical. The German propaganda magazines began to show an interest in radical movements at about the time that the United States began to ship munitions and war materials to the entente. The purpose of the propaganda during that period was to stir up the radicals to create disturbances. Later, after we got into the war, their purpose was the same, but there was, in addition, a desire to stir up a revolutionary spirit in the radicals in this country, the same thing that had been done in Russia with such great success, and a thing which had nearly succeeded in Italy at Caporetto, and a thing which very soon bore fruit through the Bolshevism in France.

Before going into the radical movement, I think it might be well to define the three principal kinds of radical thought which make up the radical movement and which are merging in the development of Bolshevism. If you would care for me to give a theoretical analysis, I will do so.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but be brief.

Senator KING. Yes; I was just asking a member of the committee here whether that would be relevant to the issues which we were investigating. Would the radical movement now have anything to do with the German propaganda or the investigation of the activities of the brewers?

Senator NELSON. I think so. I think they are still carrying on propaganda now.

Senator KING. If that is traceable, of course, to the German propaganda, or is a part of the German propaganda, I think that would be relevant. Otherwise, I do not see its relevancy.

Let me ask you, Mr. Stevenson, is it your contention that this is a part of the German propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it is a result of the German propaganda. I call your attention to these numbers of Issues and Events. This is a propaganda magazine. They begin to give publicity to Leon Trotsky here. [Indicating.] There is a history of Leon Trotsky in this magazine.

Senator KING. For the present, I think we will defer further testimony relative to that matter, Mr. Stevenson. The subcommittee executive session, will consider whether that is relevant. Have you anything else to offer?

Maj. HUMES. Can you, in connection with German activities—German newspapers, tell us anything of the activities and financials of German newspapers?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can tell you something in reference to that which I had reserved that.

Senator WOLCOTT. Here is a letter from Mr. I. N. Stevens of Denver, whose name was mentioned by the witness Smith in connection with the Colorado Chieftain. Mr. Stevens would like to have an affidavit, which he has forwarded, inserted in the record in answering Smith, and he requests that it be given the same publicity as was given the statement made by Smith. I glanced through it, and, so far as I have read, it seems to me highly proper to give is request that it go into the record. Of course, as to our giving publicity to it, we have no control over that. The newspaper men might look at it.

Senator NELSON. The question is, when a witness testified here before committee under oath, and we could cross-examine him, whether a man can meet that with a simple affidavit. We will have no opportunity to cross-examine this man.

Senator WOLCOTT. He sets out in his affidavit the reasons why he is not here and can not come here now.

Maj. HUMES. Senator Overman fixed last Tuesday as the time for his appearance, and he was to be here.

Senator KING. Where is he now?

Senator WOLCOTT. He is in Denver. He has had a death in his family—it is stated somewhere in the affidavit or in the letter which accompanies it—which explains his inability to come here; and he asks that this affidavit be inserted in the record.

Senator KING. I suggest that the document be handed to Maj. Humes to look over, and if he decides that cross-examination is absolutely necessary, we will then determine what ought to be done.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is to say that it be inserted in the record, and if we want him as a witness we will send for him at a later date?

Senator KING. No; I thought we would have Maj. Humes look at the affidavit, and then when we reconvene at 2.30 o'clock we will determine whether the affidavit shall go into the record, and if cross-examination is necessary you will advise the committee, Major.

Maj. HUMES. All right.

(Thereupon at 12.10 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met pursuant to the taking of the recess, and at 4.10 o'clock proceeded.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Thomas has asked me to read into the record, and give to it the same publicity as was given to the testimony of Austin J. Smith, the statement which I have in my hand from Mr. J. W. Stevens, in order that the newspaper men may hear it and use such parts of it as they want. I will ask Capt. Lester to read the statement of Mr. Stevens.

Senator KING. Can it not just be handed to the newspaper men instead of reading it?

Senator OVERMAN. Have you read it, Senator?

Senator KING. Yes; I have glanced at it hastily here.

Senator OVERMAN. I have not read it. Senator Thomas asked that it be read.

Maj. HUMES. It is a pretty long document, and would take about half an hour to read.

Senator NELSON. I suggest that it be printed in the record.

Maj. HUMES. The newspaper men tell me that there is a copy of it over in the press gallery, and they have all seen it.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. Let it go in the record, then.

(The document just referred to is here printed in the record full as follows:)

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

County of Philadelphia, ss:

I. N. Stevens, being duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says:

That, he is a resident of Denver, Colorado, and has been such resident thirty-eight years.

That he has read the testimony of Austin J. Smith, given on the 14th of January 1919, before the Committee of the United States Senate investigating German propaganda in the United States.

That he has been most desirous of attending in person the sessions of the Committee to answer the testimony of said Smith, but the death of a niece a week and the death of another niece last night makes such attendance impossible within suitable time to make proper answer to the allegations of said Smith and therefore he has carefully prepared the following statement as a full and complete answer to the charges, insinuations and allegations of said Smith and prays said honorable Committee to make such statement a part of its report in the premises and to give such statement the same degree of publicity as was given to the testimony of said Smith.

That each and every allegation and matter and thing in the following statement is true as this deponent verily believes.

I. N. STEVENS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me a Notary Public within and for the County and State this 21st day of January A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.]

GEORGE MARK,
Notary Public

Com. Expires 4/19/19.

GENTLEMEN: I desire to assure you that were it not for the character which this distinguished Committee gives to the testimony of Austin J. Smith, I should not deign to appear here to answer anything he might say about either me or anyone else.

It is only through such a respectable tribunal as is your Committee that it would be possible for his obvious falsehoods, his absurd lies, his malicious insinuations to obtain publication in any honorable newspaper in the land.

A man without a fixed, or certain domicile, kept moving by the legal activities of the country, whose photograph is in the rogue's gallery of the Secret Service in Denver, who offers telegrams to this Committee that are confessed forgeries by the man who helped him prepare them in the city of Los Angeles could not by his own efforts get any space in a single reputable newspaper in America for the publication of such a serious charge against citizens of standing, as Smith has made to this Committee, at least without such news ascertaining his antecedents.

Therefore, I shall studiously avoid trying to improve the odor of the matter while I do my best to assist this Committee in its work and to make clear the truth which is as old as time: That slander cannot cloud nor malice defame an honorable name.

In carefully reading and rereading his testimony as given to this Committee I cannot find a single assertion that is the truth.

Mr. Smith says he was advertising and circulation manager of the Chieftain in Denver. He never was. He was one of several solicitors.

Mr. Smith speaks of my affairs as if he knew them intimately.

I have never had over a dozen talks with him in my life and those incidental.

He says I owned and managed the Chieftain in 1915 and 1916.

I neither owned nor managed the paper during any part of either year.

He says Mr. Swain leased the paper from me in 1916.

Mr. Swain never at any time leased the paper from me.

On the 6th of December, 1915, I sold outright and delivered to a Trust the purchasers every share but one of my holdings in the Chieftain Printing Company (the owner of the Pueblo Chieftain) to Mr. Granville G. Wilder and Mr. Walter L. Wilder of Pueblo and Mr. Alva A. Swain of Denver. Mr. Wilder was made General Manager and Managing Editor and Mr. W.

has made President and Business Manager, positions which they have held ever since. Mr. Swain was an editorial writer for the paper and Manager of the Denver business office.

Smith says he (Smith) was advertising and circulation manager from 1913 to January 1917.

Smith's work as solicitor for subscriptions and advertising was wholly terminated early in 1916.

I gave no instructions to Mr. Smith about the circulation of the paper at any time or at any place, and I never heard of Count Von Bernstorff or the German Consul or German propaganda in connection with Smith's position until the summer of 1916, when Smith tried to blackmail me.

Neither Smith nor anyone else during 1915 or 1916 ever paid to me one penny of any money received for circulation or for other purposes for the Chieftain except my fixed income on the lease.

Smith says part of his arrangement with Swain and myself was that the paper was to oppose Roosevelt and favor Hughes and fight Wilson. Aside from the absurdity of such silly statements concerning an alleged bargain made in 1915—long before Candidates for the Presidency were seriously discussed—I would say that I have always supported Roosevelt and did so very vigorously in 1916 for the Republican nomination. I went with Roosevelt in 1912 into the Progressive Party and was a member of the resolutions Committee from Colorado in the Progressive National Convention. I ran on the Progressive Party ticket that year for the U. S. Senate, against Hon. Chas. S. Thomas on the Democratic ticket and Hon. Chas. W. Waterman on the Republican ticket and always have been proud of the fact that against two such able and popular opponents I received in Denver, where all three of us lived, over twice as many votes as Mr. Waterman received and within two thousand of as many as Mr. Thomas received.

In 1916 I took the lead in getting as many delegates to the Republican National Convention as possible for Roosevelt, and he received a majority of the Colorado delegation.

As an illustration of the control I have had over the policy of the Pueblo Chieftain since 1911 I would tell you that in 1912 the paper supported Taft, while I supported Roosevelt, and the paper supported Waterman, the Republican nominee for the Senate, as against myself, the Progressive nominee.

In 1914, while I was City Attorney of Denver, I ran for the Republican nomination for Senator against Dr. Hubert Work of Pueblo and the Chieftain supported Dr. Work. In relation to the policy of the paper it is interesting to note the opinion of this subscription solicitor as to what the paper should have done on the Lusitania and other grave questions. If any subscriber dropped the paper on the strength of the Lusitania editorial he must have been the German employer of Smith's—about whom he boasted as being ready for bomb operations—as I shall presently tell you.

Meantime let me read you a few sentences from the Lusitania editorial. I will also offer the entire editorial as an exhibit to my testimony. Inasmuch as you are investigating German propaganda and not whether Mr. Smith alone under our guidance buncoed the unsophisticated Ambassador Bernstorff out of a few hundred dollars (for boiled down that is all there is to Smith's testimony) I urge you to have the files of the Chieftain carefully read for the years 1915 and 1916 and ascertain whether or not they really contain any propaganda of any kind. These files are in the Congressional Library quite close by, and I offer them as an exhibit to my testimony and I offer to pay any expense incurred in making such an examination if we can jointly agree on some capable person for such work.

Smith's sole purpose in giving this testimony could only be that of showing that Mr. Swain and myself were mercenary scoundrels placing our own gain, and that of our newspaper property, above all thoughts of duty to others.

Under the law we had a perfect right to do all that he says we attempted to do, but it would have been unfair to the Allies in Europe and of course degrading to ourselves.

But people do not ordinarily degrade themselves through playing the rôle of senseless business idiots, and we certainly would have been that if we had attempted any of the business operations outlined for us by Smith, and Smith's old friend Bernstorff would have gotten less for his money than from any other scheme he ever promoted or permitted any person to goldbrick him into subscribing to.

Smith says that the Germans insisted that the Chieftain should be sent all over the Western United States and Bernstorff pointed on a map to Colorado, New Mexico and Utah as being the territory to be covered first. Smith says that they were to pay $20,000 in equal installments, and the first payment was $1080. That would take 18½ months and at the regular subscription price (60 cents per month) of the Chieftain (and Smith says that the price was to be charged to make the transaction perfectly proper on its face and that this increase of circulation was a testimonial for the propaganda editorials already being run) the paper would be enabled to increase its circulation by the immense total of 1800 copies. You can easily see how this would be to the German Government—to have these 1800 papers sent to the population of Colorado, New Mexico and Utah and eventually California too, with German propaganda. Of course, it would have created such a tremendous sentiment that America never would have gone into the war.

Now about the publishers.

Every newspaper man knows that no daily paper in Colorado during the war could possibly be printed and circulated at a profit at two cents per copy—that any such profit would have to come from the increased advertising of the paper on account of such additional circulation.

As a matter of newspaper fact such circulation is not permitted to obtain advertising and thus Smith's statement ends along this line with an immutable logic—that we were willing to smear our characters with the use of these dirty dollars at no possible profit to ourselves or the paper for the sake of giving him a goodly commission.

No—Gentlemen—his statement would justify the hold which he has established along the lines of his chosen profession, for both sides of such business arrangement might as well be gold-bricked by Smith and ruin of all finances at once as to try to navigate any legitimate business deal with such theories.

This matter, along with other connections which Smith says he had with German Agents in this Country, has been examined into by the Federal Bureau in Denver; by some of the officials of the Council of Defense in Denver; by U. S. State Dept. officials (so I am informed); and by the Secret Service Bureau, and nothing has been found to sustain the charges or any of them.

I have the following information in a telegram from Denver, dated Jan. 10, 1918: "Roland K. Goddard (head of the U. S. Secret Service in that city) has partially made the following public statement last night:—'Smith was given every opportunity to prove his charges but he was never able to do so. A large number of the telegrams alleged to have been received from Bernstorff were written in the rear of a Denver Drug Store on telegraph blanks belonging to an old operator.'"

At no time have Smith's charges been the same. A few days after the United States entered the war, Smith and a pal of his went up and down the streets of Denver saying that Stevens and Swain ought to be interned for they had received $50,000 from the German Government in the Mexican affair and $20,000 from Bernstorff in the Propaganda matter.

The pal, with much gusto, would relate how, when Smith took the case of Godfrey Schirmer, President of the American Trust Co., Schirmer exclaimed: "Mein Gott! Twenty thousand dollars. I cannot cash that without responsible endorsement." And then seeing my name on the back, according to this Denver Crook, Schirmer threw out his chest and added, "I. N. Stevens! Well! Well! Here is your money!"

Unfortunately Colorado has no criminal law for Slander and both of these blackmailers are judgment proof.

Shortly after we entered the war, Smith went to the Manager of a very large manufactory in Colorado and told him that he, Smith, was in the employ of the German Government and had been for two years. That he had done most important work for Bernstorff, quite aside from publicity promotion, which was a mere incident in his duties, and he (Smith) knew that the plant of the company represented by Smith's auditor was to be blown up and if this man would give him $3000 he would come east and get the job detailed to him (Smith) of blowing up the plant, and thus he could get these people out of the tolls of the law. The Manager referred Smith to the Attorney and the Attorney was called into Conference to hear the story of Smith. They concluded Smith was either having nightmares in the day time or was in some illegitimate enterprise and they dropped him.

In a talk with one of these persons, Smith insisted on the importance of his employment by saying: "I am very solid with all the German officials in the East and particularly with Bernstorff"—and displayed these forged telegrams. Then Smith added "I know well the man who manages all these bomb plots and I have his full confidence for he thinks I am one of them."

Then the gentlemen said: "And you have placed yourself in the position of being a traitor to your country?"

Smith replied: "Oh, yes. Of course they think I am a traitor to my Country, but they pay me well for it."

In the latter part of 1916 Smith got $300. from a Denver man by showing him these bogus telegrams from Bernstorff and telling him that Bernstorff owed him (Smith) $3500. balance for work he had done for the Germans and if this man would let him have $300. for his trip East he would refund the money with a handsome present to the lender for the favor. Needless to say the friend never got any part of the $300. or any present except his experience.

And now, gentlemen, it must be in your mind as to why Mr. Smith is here.

It certainly is in my mind and I can scarcely solve the mystery. So long as I thought there was a chance to work some of us for money there could be no surprise at the publicity of his lies. But this is a deliberate attempt to degrade and besmirch and to injure without any ground for hope that any of the persons attacked will come through with cash.

It is certain that Smith is not voluntarily here without being rewarded for his service. For sometime I have been diligently investigating to ascertain just who is financing Smith. I get these infamous lies in new garb at various places and at various times.

I am glad that a chance for public exposure has arrived and however long it may take I intend to see that Smith and his Confederate or Confederates are brought to the bar of justice.

Now I will tell you what I know about Smith.

First let me tell you briefly about my newspaper career, for you cannot possibly understand what follows without knowing that.

I am an Attorney by profession, but in 1900 to gratify a desire to continue literary work, which I had done more or less all my life, I dropped a large law business in Denver and bought the controlling interest in the Colorado Springs Gazette, a morning daily newspaper. At the end of three years we had built the institution up so that we were offered almost two for one of what it had cost. We accepted the offer and on the day I parted with possession of the Gazette, I took possession of the Pueblo Chieftain, which I had meantime purchased. I managed this property myself from 1903 until 1909 when my wife died—and I left the property in the care of others and went on a long trip to Europe and spent seven months wandering over the north of Europe as far toward the pole as Iceland and Spitzbergen. In 1911 I received a substantial payment on the purchase price and leased the paper at a fixed percentage of income on my investment and with an agreement for an annual payment on the purchase price. I immediately left for a trip around the world and I was not back in Colorado again until the summer of 1912, when I ran for the Senate on the Progressive ticket. In the Spring of 1913 Denver went under the Commission form of Government and I was made City Attorney, which position I held until June 15th, 1915. and on July 1st, I went to Philadelphia to become President of the Commonwealth Casualty Company which my brother, who had recently died, had established many years before and which was somewhat of a family institution in its controlling ownership.

While I was City Attorney, the leasing contract which I had made in 1911 was forfeited and the Pueblo Chieftain came back to my ownership December 1st, 1914. On the day I received the property, I entered into a leasing-selling contract with Walter L. Wilder, who took possession of the property. He held this way until December 6th, 1915, when he exercised his option to purchase, as I have stated before, and took the other gentlemen in as partners.

Two or three times during 1915 Mr. Wilder consulted me about various matters connected with the Chieftain, but the policy and management were always his and he exercised his control. Once when he was ill in 1915, I attended to the circulation statements for him necessary to be filed.

Mr. Alva A. Swain had been with me all the years I owned the Gazette and Chieftain up to 1911 and he remained with the new management as Denver representative.

My private office in Denver was in a suite of rooms occupied by the Chief Clerk and Mr. Swain.

Naturally, he would consult me when I was around, which was seldom, as the City Attorney's office was three floors away and I was pretty thoroughly tied down with my duties there until I left for Philadelphia, July 1st. After that I was occasionally in Denver and of course saw Mr. Swain and went to my office there.

When the Chieftain came back to me in December 1914, it was carrying were called the "Sayville dispatches"—that is, they came to the wire station at Sayville from Germany and were then the only official communication on the war from Germany.

Possibly three hundred people were taking the Chieftain on account of carrying these "Sayville dispatches"—which were afterward superseded by the Associated Press carrying the German War office's version of the war.

Mr. Smith was a circulation solicitor employed by the old management of the paper and was kept by the new management. In my talks with Wilder and Swain they told me that Smith strongly favored a campaign to get subscribers on account of the Chieftain being the only daily paper in Denver that carried these dispatches. During the years I managed the paper it had a daily circulation of from six hundred to one thousand in Denver. In 1913 that circulation had fallen down to about three hundred. Denver circulation was valuable indirectly to advertise the paper, for many Denver papers carried advertising in Southern Colorado newspapers. Then Denver was the State Capital and much political advertising came from that city.

Mr. Smith was set to work on a subscription campaign—so I was to Wilder and Swain—but he got rather indifferent results.

I remember only once of discussing the Denver circulation with Mr. Swain in the presence of Mr. Smith, and then I expressed myself rather emphatically about the small circulation then compared with what we had in 1908 but I never entered into any of the details of their plans and knew nothing about them. I think once Smith asked for suggestions and also for an introduction to the Secretary of the Republican City Committee. During the time Wilder was in Denver I may have taken the matter up for him (Wilder) with Swain. This was while I was City Attorney and prior to July, 1915.

In November 1915, I went from Philadelphia to Denver to close my deal with Wilder on the purchase of the Chieftain, for his option expired on December 1st, and I had another prospective buyer in the person of Mr. Henry W. B. of Raleigh, N. C., who came out about that time to examine the property.

On December 8th, I closed my deal with Wilder and Withers and Swain and went back to Philadelphia.

In January or February, 1916, the Agent for our Commonwealth Company in Denver was taken seriously ill and had to go South and Mr. Swain agreed to look after his affairs for me—but when he did not return Mr. Swain wrote me to employ Smith as he thought he would get good results and that he was no longer working for the paper, and I did so.

Smith really got good results for the first few months and along in the summer he came East and said he desired to make some suggestions that thought might be useful to the Company in Colorado. Smith wired from Buffalo a few days after this that his mother had died there and he would be delayed. I wired and asked him to see me in New York as I was going through there on business. This he did.

He told me what he had in mind was to open Company offices on the top floor of the Colorado National Bank Building—a beautiful new, marble building, then just completed, and to go after business vigorously—advertising. I told him it would be folly to go to too much expense for offices until a real business was established, for people had to be visited and very little business was ever obtained voluntarily at the office.

He then said, "Now, I know I can't clear these off for me, they can take all in square again." We had air and I told him we would advance undivided attention to this work. I subsequently paid to him and his name was inserted in the record and attached

(COPY)

Revenue
Stamp

DENVER, COLORADO August 4th, 1916.

On or before one year after date I promise to pay to the order of Commonwealth Casualty Company Six Hundred-----Dollars at the Company's principal office in Philadelphia, Pa

THIS RECEIVED with interest at 6% per annum.

I hereby agree that the Company shall have monthly on or before the 20th 33-1/3 per cent of all my commissions until this note is paid in full (Signed) A. J. SMITH.

A few weeks after this I saw in Denver—where I had stopped on my way to San Francisco to attend a meeting. He called me into my private office one day and closed the door and with a great air of mystery he said; "I tell you, I have been having a h—l of a time with an English detective who is following me day and night." Of course he waited for the proper questions, which I provided, for really he was very dramatic and I expected almost any crime to be confessed.

"Don't you know that I am in the employ of Bernstorff?" he exploded. "I haven't you been told that I have been doing all kinds of work for Bernstorff and how worried I am over these English detectives? Don't you know I received $700 last Fall from Bernstorff and I have a photograph of the man and the English detective has offered me $35,000 for all the information I possess."

"Well," I said, "What is the work you have been doing for Bernstorff?" He smiled a sickly, mysterious smile—looked at the ceiling and said, "I carried an important package for him from Washington to the West. I didn't know what was in it, but I suspect now what it is, and it would throw this country into war instantly if the English should get hold of it."

"If it is that important," I said, "By all means you should give the information to our own Government. If you have been doing anything that is unlawful, you had best tell the U. S. Authorities at once."

"Presently he said: "If it wasn't for a friend of mine, I'd tell in a minute; you see I would have to give up that Photograph of the draft and it would be h—l with him and he has been good to me and I owe him a lot of money." I said "I don't see how it can affect your friend, if your transactions have been legitimate, were they."

"Oh, yes!" he hastened to add.

"$35,000, is a big temptation," he mused. "I think if I were you I would tell it," I suggested, looking him straight in the eye. "I believe I will"—he picked up his hat to go, then stopped.

"If I had a thousand dollars to clean up my debts to this man and to all his associates, I would drop the English and the Germans forever and work like the dog for the insurance company. That's what my wife and my father both want me to do."

"Nothing doing", I rather shouted at him "You promised to work like a dog for the insurance company when I advanced the other money to you and now it is time you were doing so or there will be a good case around here of obtaining money under false pretenses," I hotly said to him, and he left the room. On my oath, this is the first time I ever heard of Bernstorff or any other German in Smith's deals.

I went immediately to my old friend and my Deputy District Attorney in Denver when we were both young men—Thomas Ward, Jr., who had recently been U. S. Attorney for Colorado, and I told him the whole story.

"Blackmail" he exclaimed.

"Undoubtedly", I said, "but you must help me get to the bottom of the matter and find out about Smith whom I don't know for I have been away from Denver so much for the past ten years."

"I agreed to do this, but he wanted to see Smith, whom he did not recognize. I took him into our offices and Smith was still there. I introduced them and then went into Ward's office with him. "Stevens, I have run across that fellow somewhere and I think it was when I was U. S. District Attorney. You wait here until I return."

Half an hour he was back and with a loud laugh he said, "Oh h—l, I found him in the rogues gallery in the U. S. Secret Service office and I prosecuted him for impersonating a U. S. Officer and he was acquitted on a technicality. They have had a lot of trouble with him and twice he had gone to Washington to complain about them."

So we investigated Smith and a lot of things in this Statement. As a result of such investigation, we are still at it and that is the reason I cannot give you more complete in the detail of names, etc.

We also found that Smith was in the background of a dastardly scheme worked up on five prominent men of Denver about 1912.

Of course, I summarily dismissed Smith from all services but had a job to get him to take down the Company sign from his office door. I found that while he was supposed to be representing my company exclusively, he had a half dozen licenses to represent rival Companies. Other rival Companies were evidently also buncoed.

I have gone thus fully into these matters that the facts might all be before your honorable Committee. I beg your co-operation in not only to undo the damage his vile statements have done me personally, but I beg your earnest help in bringing this deliberate perjurer to the bar of justice. The countenance given to Smith at this hearing has been more damaging to anybody could possibly presume. One of the biggest and fairest New York newspapers published Smith's statement in much detail in its midnight edition last Tuesday, and not one of the denials of myself, Wilder, Swain or Swann was there to contradict the story. Such denials were in the regular edition but none appeared in the country edition, which is the one circulated in Philadelphia, where I do business. Neither did Senator Thomas's vigorous denunciation of Smith appear in any edition of this same newspaper, so far as I have been able to ascertain. It certainly was not in the early edition. The oversight, course, was only an oversight, but it shows how hard it is to catch up with

Senator KING. Before we resume, Mr. Chairman. I recall reading some time ago one or two articles by the editor of the Providence Journal, appearing in World's Work, as I recall, in which the writer claimed that he had done a great deal of work to expose German propaganda, and that it was his activity that had resulted in work by the Department of Justice in finding out the German intrigues and German agents in this country; and I notice in the Providence Journal Almanac of 1919 the following:

In April, 1915, the Providence Journal exposed the German Embassy in Washington to discredit the Washington administration by means of false affidavits of neutrality violations in favor of British men-of-war getting supplies in this country. Beginning with this exposure the Journal began its series of articles concerning German government plots in this country, which focused the attention of the whole civilized world on this newspaper and its exposure.

And so forth.

I suggest to Maj. Humes that Mr. Rathom, the editor of the Providence Journal, be subpoenaed as a witness. Those articles that would indicate a great deal of knowledge on his part of German propaganda. I suggest to Maj. Humes the propriety of having Mr. Rathom appear here as a witness to testify.

Senator NELSON. Capt. Lester, I gave you a letter yesterday asking about that man Anderson?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You are clearing that up?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. We had a great deal of information about that man, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else before we proceed to Mr. Stevenson?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir; we are ready to have Mr. Stevenson proceed with his statement.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON—Resumed.

Mr. STEVENSON. The corollary of the propaganda which was mentioned this morning, and in which a large number of the persons engaged in the pacifist organizations have taken part and now take part, is what may be generally classified as the radical movement, which is developing sympathy for the Bolsheviki movement, and which in many quarters constitutes a revolutionary movement among the radical element in this country.

Senator KING. Your contention is that this is the result of German propaganda, had its origin in Germany, and therefore would be properly investigated under the resolution of this committee?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. The Bolsheviki movement is a branch of the revolutionary socialism of Germany. It had its origin in the philosophy of Marx and its leaders were Germans.

Senator KING. And is this German socialism of this country and Bolshevism of this country the product of or taught by these organizations to which you referred this morning, in part?

Mr. STEVENSON. The membership of those organizations was in large part made up of persons either members of the Socialist Party or in sympathy with it.

Senator NELSON. You mean that the German socialism was imported into this country by these men?

Mr. STEVENSON. By some of these men.

Senator NELSON. That is what I mean.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

In order to have a clear conception, however, of the radical movement, I might say that there are three principal currents of thought that go to make it up, one of which is the syndicalist, which is represented in this country by the I. W. W., and the Socialist Labor Party—

Senator NELSON. They are in favor of what I would call sabotage?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. If you will permit me to read briefly a little memorandum that I have here, I will read it more rapidly.

The word "syndicate" is the French equivalent of our trade-union, but syndicalism has a decidedly revolutionary flavor, and must therefore be understood to mean revolutionary trade-unionism. This does not mean, however, that syndicalism is merely a fighting trade-unionism, although it originated from the cooperative or trade-union movement. It goes much further, and demands that wealth, productive and distributive, be controlled by the various trade-unions to the exclusion of the capitalists and the State. It believes that the railways should be controlled by the union of railway workers; that the coal mines should be controlled and operated by the miners' union, etc. Capitalists have no place in this scheme, save that experts in finance, engineering, and technology may be hired by the union. No central authority is contemplated, and national industry must be carried on by agreements made between various groups of workmen. This form of economic program has accordingly been termed "group anarchism." With syndicalism is coupled "propaganda by deed" or "direct action"; that is, the tactics of general strike and sabotage.

Senator OVERMAN. Are they in favor of legislative bodies?

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Senator OVERMAN. Or executive officers?

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Senator OVERMAN. They are in favor of a sort of mob rule?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is group anarchism.

Senator NELSON. Each group of workmen, for instance—in the case of miners, each group of miners—is a law unto itself, a government to itself, and each group of railroad men would run the railroads, and so on?

Mr. STEVENSON. The syndicalists believe society is divided into two sharply defined groups, the producers, usually interpreted as manual laborers, and nonproducers; and among the latter are capitalists and employers.

Between the exploited—namely, the workers—and their exploiters—namely, the employers—the syndicalist recognizes a state of continuous warfare, which is known as class struggle.

Syndicalism was developed in France in comparatively recent times.

Trade-unionism in France was not permitted until 1884, and, as in Russia, the workmen had to organize in secret. This made them law breakers and developed their antagonism to the government authorities.

The propaganda of socialists, anarchists, and other revolutionary bodies stimulated their revolutionary principles, and the employment of the regular armed forces of the French Government to break up strikes developed among some of these French trade-unions a pronounced militarist and antipatriotic character.

This attitude was aggravated through the propaganda of Gustav Hervé and others, who skillfully exploited the circumstances surrounding the strike of Longwy in 1905.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know to what extent these groups have gone in the different nations—England and Italy and our other allies?

Mr. STEVENSON. They were quite extensive, only with varied forms. Each country modifies rather the theories of the different groups, but almost identical with the French syndicalist is the I. W. W. in the United States.

The I. W. W., because of its activities—

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know but I have seen it in the record, but I will ask you to state now just what you mean by the I. W. W.

Mr. STEVENSON. Industrial Workers of the World.

The Industrial Workers of the World, which, because of its activity, has attracted wide attention, has been the subject of various prosecutions for violations of the Federal and State laws and has aroused the sympathy and engaged the support of a large number of organizations and individuals who have acted against the interests of the United States during the war. For instance, the National Civil Liberties Bureau, which was most very extensively in the preparation and tactics of the I. W. W., and in every way cooperated to assist bail for William D. Haywood and, indicted in Chicago.

Senator NELSON. That bail went blow up the courthouse.

Mr. STEVENSON. The I. W. W. movement began in the fall of 1904, and at a secret conference in Chicago, Ill., on January 2, 1905, the industrial union manifesto calling for a convention to be held in Chicago on June 22, 1905, was drawn for the purpose of launching an organization in accordance with the principles set forth in the manifesto, which were distinctly syndicalist.

The work of circulating the manifesto was handled by the executive committee of this conference, the American Labor Union, and the Western Federation of Miners.

After several modifications, the preamble of the I. W. W., which is now in force—that is, the preamble of their constitution—was adopted at their fourth convention and is as follows:

The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. There can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among working people, and the few who make up the employing class have all the good things of life.

Between these two classes a struggle must go on until the workers of the world organize as a class, take possession of the earth and the machinery of production, and abolish the wage system.

We find that the centering of the management of industries into fewer and fewer hands makes the trade unions unable to cope with the ever growing power of the employing class. The trade unions foster a state of affairs which allows one set of workers to be pitted against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby helping to defeat one another in wage war. Moreover, the trade unions aid the employing class to mislead the workers into the belief that the working class have interests in common with their employers.

These conditions can be changed and the interest of the working class upheld only by an organization formed in such a way that all its members in any one industry, or in all industries if necessary, cease work whenever a strike or lockout is on in any department thereof, thus making an injury to one an injury to all.

Instead of the conservative motto "a fair day's wages for a fair day's work," we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword "abolition of the wage system."

It is the historic mission of the working class to do away with capitalism. The army of production must be organized, not only for the every day struggle with the capitalists, but also to carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown. By organizing industrially we are forming the structure of the new society within the shell of the old.

The methods employed by the I. W. W. to carry out their purposes are described by Vincent St. John, who was one of the defendants in the Chicago trial. In a pamphlet entitled "The I. W. W., Its History, Structure, and Methods," published by the I. W. W. Publishing Bureau, 112 Hamilton Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, we find the following statement of their methods and tactics:

As a revolutionary organization, the Industrial Workers of the World aims to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The tactics used are determined solely by the power of the organization to make good in their use. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us.

No terms made with an employer are final. All peace so long as the wage system lasts is but an armed truce. At any favorable opportunity the struggle for more control of industry is renewed. * * * No part of the organization is allowed to enter into time contracts with the employers. Where strikes are used, it aims to paralyze all branches of the industry involved, when the employers can least afford a cessation of work—during the busy season and when there are rush orders to be filled. * * * Failing to force concessions from the employers by the strike, work is resumed and sabotage is used to force the employers to concede the demands of the workers. The great progress made in machine productions results in an ever increasing army of unemployed. To counteract this the I. W. W. aims to establish the shorter working day and to slow up the working pace, thus compelling the employment of more and more workers. * * * Interference by the government is resented by open violation of the government's orders, going to jail en masse, causing expense to the tax payers—which is but another name for the employing class.

In short, the I. W. W. advocates the use of "militant direct action" tactics to the full extent of our power to make good.

That is their own statement of their methods of action.

Shall I refer to some of the matters that were spoken of in the executive session, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; those connected with this propaganda ought to be mentioned.

Mr. STEVENSON. I mean in reference to the attempt to quash the indictment in the case of the United States against William D. Haywood et al.

Senator NELSON. Those connected with the I. W. W.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The indictment of the I. W. W. leaders and their subsequent trial in Chicago, namely, the case of the United States against William D. Haywood et al., attracted wide attention. Defense committees were organized for the purpose of raising money to carry on the expense of the defense and to issue propaganda designed to lead the public to believe that the I. W. W. was a labor organization whose sole purpose was to better working conditions.

One of the organizations most active in assisting the defense committee, both in the matter of raising funds and securing bail for William D. Haywood and in carrying on a widespread publicity campaign, was the National Civil Liberties Bureau, of 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

A very careful examination was made of the files of the National Civil Liberties Bureau relating to the I. W. W.

Mr. Roger N. Baldwin, director of the National Civil Liberties Bureau, in a letter to Justin Ebert, 223 Richmond Street, Brooklyn, dated November 8, 1917, speaks of the proposed pamphlets against "The silly and outrageous indictments against the I. W. W."

Senator OVERMAN. Is that organization now existing in New York?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Is Baldwin still president of it?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; Baldwin is now in jail.

A further examination of these files indicates that a movement was set on foot about this time to exert influence upon officials and others to quash the indictments in this case, and on December 2, 1917, Mr. Frank P. Walsh, at that time cochairman with ex-President Wm. H. Taft, of the Industrial Relations Commission, addressed a letter to the National Civil Liberties Bureau, introducing J. A. Law and L. T. Chumley, both members of the defense council of the I. W. W. Thereafter Mr. Chumley took up his offices with the National Civil Liberties Bureau and worked with them in the plans for raising funds for the I. W. W. defense and in putting out propaganda literature justifying the position of the I. W. W.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was either of those men among the I. W. W. defendants?

Mr. STEVENSON. Jack Law was.

On January 11 Mr. Baldwin sent to Clarence Darrow, at 140 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., a copy of the minutes held in Wash-ton relative to the I. W. W.'s on January 12, 1918. Copies of this report were sent to Gilbert E. Rowe, George B. West, Jack Law, Lawrence Todd, and others. The report says: "No action taken in absence of Messrs. Walsh and Darrow."

A letter was received from L. T. Chumley, of 1001 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., by the National Civil Liberties Bureau, sending material for a pamphlet under separate cover and saying: "Frank Walsh will do the same," and asks suggestions as to how to raise $1,000 bail for Haywood.

As an illustration of the type of propaganda put out by the National Civil Liberties Bureau, I offer as an exhibit this pamphlet, "The Truth About the I. W. W."

Senator WOLCOTT. That is an I. W. W. pamphlet?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; that is a pamphlet justifying the I. W. W. the National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Senator WOLCOTT. I mean the National Civil Liberties Bureau put out this pamphlet, which is really I. W. W. propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; it is propaganda, precisely.

The mailing list of the National Civil Liberties Bureau was put at the disposal of Wm. D. Haywood, who, in a letter, addressed to them May 21, says that he has engaged Harrison George to write letters to be sent to the National Civil Liberties Bureau mailing list.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that one of the organizations—that National Civil Liberties Bureau—whose officers you were going to enumerate for me, or not?

Mr. STEVENSON. We enumerated the principal ones this morning, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. That had slipped my mind.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Scott Nearing assisted in the preparation of material for the defense and Mr. Charles W. Erving, 440 Pearl Street, New York City, socialist candidate for governor at the last election in New York, received $400 for reporting the I. W. W. trial.

The danger of the sympathy which was raised by the I. W. W. is illustrated by an advertisement which appeared in the New Republic on June 22, 1918.

Senator NELSON. Where is that published?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is published in New York. It is a magazine.

Senator NELSON. Is it a monthly magazine?

Mr. STEVENSON. No. It is a weekly magazine.

Senator NELSON. Who are the publishers of it?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Walter E. Weyl is the editor of it.

Senator NELSON. But who owns it?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the main backer of it was Willard D. Wright. This advertisement appeared on June 22.

Senator NELSON. This last June?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; June, 1918. [Reading:]

Never mind what you think about the I. W. W. They are at least entitled to a fair trial and an open-minded public hearing. That is a primary American right.

One hundred and ten of their leaders are now before the Federal Court at Chicago, charged with conspiring to obstruct the war. But the trial involves essentially the activities of the I. W. W. as a labor organization.

The I. W. W. are entitled to the best legal defense they can make. They will bring scores of witnesses long distances. The trial will probably last months.

The Department of Justice, the Court, and the jury can be relied on to deal effectually with any criminal acts that may be disclosed. It is for us, we can liberals to make it financially possible for the defense to present the industrial evils underlying the I. W. W. revolt against intolerable conditions of labor.

Such a labor trial is of necessity enormously expensive. It will cost $100,000. Of this about $50,000 has already been raised from the members alone. But it is impossible to raise the entire fund from the members.

The whole sum needed can not be secured without the liberal financial support of those Americans who believe in the right of a fair trial, even for the I. W. W.

The undersigned therefore appeal to all liberals for financial help. It should be made out to Albert DeSilver, treasurer, 2 West 13th St., New York City.

ROBERT W. BRUEBE.
JOHN DEWEY.
JOHN A. FITCH.
PERCY STICKNEY GRANT.
CARLTON J. H. HAYES.
INEZ HAYNES IRWIN.

HELLEN KELLER.
JAS. HARVEY RICE.
THORSTEIN VEBLEN.
GEORGE R. WEST.
WALTER E. WEYL.

By the way, Albert De Silver was a member of the directing committee of the National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Mr. George P. West is the editor of The Public, a magazine.

Mr. Zeblen is one of the editors of The Dial.

Mr. John A. Fitch is the industrial editor of The Survey—they are rather liberal magazines.

Mr. Walter E. Weyl is the editor of The New Republic.

I might call attention to one of the newspapers issued by the I. W. W., entitled "The Labor Defender, an organ of revolutionary unionism."

There appears on the back page a rather inconspicuous cartoon. This is the issue of December 15, 1918. The title of this cartoon is Every strike is a small revolution and a dress rehearsal for the big one.

Here is the paper, if any of you gentlemen would like to look at it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Stevenson, my recollection is that the National Civil Liberties Bureau was organized primarily to protect conscientious objectors from service in the Army and to oppose the idea of fighting. Is that correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. The National Civil Liberties Bureau was an outgrowth of the Civil Liberties Bureau of the American Union Against Militarism, made up of persons in sympathy with the pacifist movement. It then branched out into the protection of liberties in war time; in other words, the right of free speech, the right of peaceful assembly, "liberty of conscience and freedom from unlawful search and seizure."

Senator WOLCOTT. That is, the right of a conscientious objector not to serve.

Mr. STEVENSON. That was one of the main features.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did I, in the main, correctly describe its purposes as twofold, first, against fighting, and, as a corollary to that, to protect everybody in all his activities of a nature designed to promote the idea of opposition to fighting?

Mr. STEVENSON. The literature issued by that bureau was calculated to instruct a man how to be a conscientious objector, if he did not know what a conscientious objector was.

Senator OVERMAN. It was a suggestion to him to keep from fighting.

Mr. STEVENSON. It can be so construed.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that general description that I have given there fairly accurate.

Mr. STEVENSON. Fairly accurate, yes; but they also attempted to protect everybody who was indicted under the act of Congress or of the various States.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am just coming now to this thought: This organization, which seems to be animated by a very violent opposition to the idea of fighting, at the same time, from what you have just been saying, seems to have been quite in love with fighting as that idea was applied to these I. W. W.'s, because it was rendering assistance to them in their defense and was circulating their pamphlets?

Mr. STEVENSON. While they did not say that they justified the ends or methods of the I. W. W., yet they claimed that civil liberties were being infringed upon by that prosecution.

Senator WOLCOTT. But they also circulated a pamphlet by the I. W. W. laying out its propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. They did.

Senator WOLCOTT. That I. W. W., as I understand it, is an organization which recognizes as one of the legitimate weapons the institution of revolution—violence?

Mr. STEVENSON. They certainly recognize violence.

Senator WOLCOTT. But this peaceful and pacific organization which was called the National Civil Liberties Bureau found violence as applied by the I. W. W. quite acceptable to them; whereas violence as applied by the armies of a free people was unacceptable to them? Is that correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. Apparently, that would be the conclusion.

The influence of the I. W. W. is steadily growing. Their propaganda is extensive. I have here several of their publications, which may be of interest. The New Solidarity, published in Chicago, is an interesting sheet. Here is one of its issues.

They also publish the California Defense Bulletin, in San Francisco; the Defense Bulletin of Seattle, Wash.; and a very large number of books, pamphlets, and other propaganda. Here are samples of the newspapers just mentioned.

The danger of this organization is that it captures other unions or labor organizations by peaceful penetration. I might give as an illustration the federation of hotel workers. The exact name is the Federation of Workers in Hotel, Restaurant, Club, and Catering Industry, which has its headquarters at 158 West Forty-sixth Street, New York City.

The preamble of this organization is almost identical with that of the I. W. W., and is as follows:

The workers of the Hotel, Restaurant, Club and Catering Industry have organized this Federation with the intention to give an opportunity to all workers employed in the industry to improve their conditions according to the necessities and conditions of life.

Taking into consideration the fact of past experience that it is impossible to accomplish anything worth while by following the old system of craft or trade unionism, we have come to the conclusion that in order to cope with the present situation successfully, the workers must organize and combine industrially on the economic field, on the field of the class struggle. In advocating these principles, we again recognize the necessity for the workers to fight continually to shorten the work day, to increase the pay according to the conditions of pay where they live, and to cooperate with all other workers who struggle for the abolishment of the wage system for the complete emancipation of labor. We therefore unite under the following constitution.

An examination of the minutes of the convention at which this constitution was adopted, on July 12, 1918, shows the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That our present and future officers shall see that our members will be instructed in the Class Struggle that is leading all to a great crisis which will occur in the near future. Therefore it is necessary for all workers to be prepared to show their solidarity in the final overthrow of capitalism.

Among the documents found on the premises were copies of the Almanacco Sovversivo (Almanac of the Revolution), an Italian publication of a very revolutionary and incendiary character. These were taken from the headquarters of this organization.

Posters were found upon which were printed:

We, the New York waiters, shall stand on the principles of the Bolsheviks.

There was also a volume of Mentana's Faccio a Faccio Col Nemico (Face to Face with the Enemy), a revolutionary novel designed to instruct its readers in the manufacture of bombs at home.

This federation publishes an organ, a newspaper, in which articles appear in various languages. Its editor is Vincenzo Vacirca, who was a collaborator with Arturo Giovannitti, the well-known I. W. W. agitator.

The danger of such an organization as this is shown by the number of strikes which it has called in the last year; and in this connection an article appearing in the New York Tribune, November 1, 1918, of interest:

Dr. George W. Kirchwey, Assistant Federal Director in this State, of the United States Employment Service, obtained last night, pledges of assistance directing strikers into government service from every member of the executive committee of the Waiters Union. The conference was held at 158 West 46th St.

"The story being spread that the government or the employment service is against the strikers is false," said Dr. Kirchwey. "The truth of the matter is that we wish to obtain better positions for the strikers in war industries."

When we consider that the strikers belong to an organization which advocated violence, we see how dangerous it is to introduce them at munition plants and war activities.

Another one of the agencies holding the syndicalist doctrine in this country is the Socialist-Labor Party, and that is illustrated by their platform adopted on April 30, 1916, as follows:

We hold that the true theory of economics is that the means of production must be owned, operated and controlled by the people in common. Man cannot exercise his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness without ownership of the land and tools with which to work. Deprived of these, his life, his liberty and his fate fall into the hands of that class which owns the essentials for work and production.

We hold that the existing capitalist appropriation of the products of natural and social opportunities—dividing them between the capitalist class and the working class, the class struggle and perverts government.

Thus labor is robbed of the wealth it produces, of self employment and, by compulsory idleness, of the necessities of life.

Against such a system the socialist movement is organized and demands the unconditional surrenplace of such a system the socialist labor party aims to substitute a system of social ownership of the means of production, industrially administered by the working class—the workers to assume control and direction as well as management of their industrial affairs. This fellowship of necessity requires the organization of the working class as a class upon revolutionary, political and industrial lines.

We therefore call upon the wage workers to organize themselves into a revolutionary political organization under the banner of the socialist labor party; and to organize themselves likewise upon the industrial field into a revolutionary industrial union in keeping with their political aims.

Senator NELSON. In all these documents to which you are referring they make two broad general divisions of workmen and capitalists, but they have not a word to say about a big class between the two, and that is the consumers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, they are as much opposed in theory to the bourgeoisie as they are to the capitalists.

Senator NELSON. To the consumers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. This party is extremely active in the spread of its propaganda. Over a million and a half leaflets were distributed during the year, not including those distributed by the local sections.

The party publishes the following weekly papers: The Weekly People, its official organ in English, of which I have a copy here.

Senator OVERMAN. Here is an exhibit that you put in, Mr. Stevenson, called the California Defense Bulletin, the issue of December 1918. It says:

THE SPREAD OF BOLSHEVISM.

Great things are about to happen. In fact something has happened that has given a thrill of joy through the heart of every true internationalist.

Germany has followed the example set by Russia; the Kaiser and his military gang have been pulled down from their high horses, and the workmen and soldiers have taken over the reins of the government.

The inspiring news was flashed through the world that the soldiers and workers had joined the revolution, thus avoiding a bloody and long-drawn civil war. It is apparent that the Russian Bolsheviks had carried on an agitation among the German soldiers as well as among the civilian population, and the results are such that we feel inclined to tip our hats to the Bolsheviks and exclaim: "Well done, brave soldiers of the class war."

Bolshevism is contagious. It is now reported that a revolution is brewing in Holland. There have been strikes and riots in Switzerland and in Copenhagen, Denmark. In Sweden there has been a manifesto issued calling workers and soldiers to unite and organize along the same line as in Russia.

The writer is acquainted with conditions, and is aware of the sentiment among those opposing the Swedish Army, and it is safe to predict that the transformation, or rather the revolution will be accomplished without much bloodshed. Our Swedish fellow workers have for years carried on a systematic agitation against militarism, and have gone into the barracks and training camps distributing literature—and that they have been successful nobody who knows the real state of affairs can deny. It is only a question of time, and may be nearer than we can realize when the Swedes will straighten up and throw the profiteers and militarists off their backs. They are slow in starting, but when they set out to do anything, they usually do a perfect job.

Let the "patriotic profiteers" howl and shout themselves hoarse. Let them summon all their stony-faced judges and their hypocritical pulpsters—it will be of no avail. They can not stop the onward march of labor. The day of industrial freedom is drawing near. Get ready and do your part to speed the day.

Does that indicate, taken in connection with what you have referred to in these other publications, that there is an organization in this country, now, to bring about a Bolshevik revolution?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that is the desire of a number of leaders. I would not want to say it as definitely proved.

Senator OVERMAN. These papers indicate that that is going on now?

Mr. STEVENSON. All of these papers seem to indicate that.

The other publications of the Socialist Labor Party are the following newspapers: Arbetaren (Swedish), Volksfreund (German), Arbeiter-Zeitung (German), Proletarets (Lettish), A Munksgård (Hungarian), Radnucka Borba (South Slavonian).

I believe they are also planning to have a Jewish paper.

Senator NELSON. They are all carrying on this propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. So that it looks as if it were nearly worldwide—this socialism and Bolshevism and syndicalism. This is to show that this propaganda is prevalent throughout the world, advocating a revolution in every country in the world—in Sweden and Switzerland?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

The prosecution of the I. W. W. enlisted the sympathy and support of the Socialist Party of America. This was shown by a protesting leaflet printed in Yiddish, which was picked up in the I. W. hall, 74 St. Mark's Place, New York, in the middle of December year. The translation of it is as follows:

Socialists attention:

The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party not long ago at a session that "the socialist party repeat the declaration of support of economic organizations of the working class and declares that listings, tortures and persecutions of the I. W. W. constitute an attack upon every working man.

And we call attention to the fact that the charges against the I. W. W. ground that they burnt crops and forests and destroyed a lot of property been submitted to a legal test turned out to be all lies.

The socialist party has always lent its material and moral support to organized labor everywhere, and whenever attacked by the capitalistic class, it was the character of the organizations. We therefore pledge ourselves to support the I. W. W.'s who are to be tried at Chicago and other places, ask for a fair trial and without prejudice, and we ask our members to do everything in their power to help the I. W. W. by informing the public of the true facts, also to refute the falsehoods and misinformation wherewith the capitalists poison and prejudices public sentiment against these workers who are for destruction just as other workmen and leaders have been repeatedly to destruction by the same capitalists.

Socialists collect funds and send to the I. W. W.

Bring the matter up in your local organizations and branch meetings, and ask them to send two delegates to the I. W. W. Defense Committee that meets Sunday at 3 p. m. 74 St. Mark's Place, New York.

All contributions are sent by the above mentioned address to the general office at Chicago.

I. W. W. Defense Committee, 1001 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

All checks to be made payable to W. D. Haywood, general secretary.

Greetings of the I. W. W. Defense Committee of New York.

That centers attention on the Socialist Party in America and on socialism in general.

I should like to point out that socialism may be divided roughly into two principal kinds, one of which is the conservative evolutionist branch, which is sometimes known as the opportunist or pragmatist, which desires to bring about its purpose through parliamentary means and the power of the ballot. The second branch, which is the ary socialism, otherwise called impossibilist, is the official German alism, and is the father of the Bolsheviki movement in Russia, and equently the radical movement which we have in this country ay has its origin in Germany.

Senator NELSON. Is that a part of their kultur?

Mr. STEVENSON. It was one of the manifestations of their kultur, I ve.

Senator OVERMAN. You used the word "impossibilist." Why do call it that?

Mr. STEVENSON. Because they found it impossible to cooperate with ing forms of government.

Senator OVERMAN. And they wanted to tear down the existing n of government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

he capture of the Socialist Party in America in April, 1917, by revolutionary socialist element is of particular interest because members of the committee which brought in the majority report, committee on war and militarism of that convention, had for its er Kate Richards O'Hare, and Mr. Victor Berger was a member that committee. Both of these persons were delegates from the ed States to the International Socialist Bureau at Brussels, h carried out its world-wide propaganda from the People's se in Brussels. Representatives from other countries were Nicho-lenin, the leader of Russian Bolshevism, and Rosa Luxemburg.

Senator NELSON. Lately deceased?

Mr. STEVENSON. Lately deceased; who was one of the leaders of German Bolshevist element known as the Spartacus group, and Liebknecht.

Senator OVERMAN. He is also deceased?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; he is also deceased.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Berger in the same convention with Lieb-ht and Rosa Luxemburg?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; he was a delegate to the same bureau, and esented the United States.

Senator NELSON. Oh, he belonged to the same group.

Senator OVERMAN. I know he did; but I did not know that he had ded the convention over there with them.

Mr. STEVENSON. The adoption of the majority report of the com-ee on war and militarism at that convention resulted in the withal from the party of the conservative element, or the evolution-socialists, such as Charles Edward Russell and John Spargo, have since done valuable service to the Government in the prose-on of the war.

Senator OVERMAN. Where was that convention held?

Mr. STEVENSON. At St. Louis.

Senator OVERMAN. When?

Mr. STEVENSON. April 7 to 14, 1917.

Senator OVERMAN. Messrs. Russell and Spargo quit when they ted those resolutions?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And did valuable service for the Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

At this convention the following resolution was adopted:

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the socialist party being the party of the working class in its fight for industrial freedom, and its power mainly in its clear-cut, specific declaration of political and economic principles, rather than in the number of votes passed for party candidates, the purpose of the socialist movement being the emancipation of the workers from economic servitude, rather than the election to office of candidates, therefore, declared to be the sense of this convention that all state institutions facing the solution of this question be urged to remember that compromise is to be swallowed up and utterly destroyed; that we be urged to maintain the revolutionary position of the socialist party and to maintain in the utmost possible vigor the propaganda of socialism, unadulterated association of office seekers, to the end that the solidarity of the workers and the principles of international socialism may continue to lay the foundation for the social revolution.

The social revolution, not political office, is the end and aim of the party. No compromise, no political trading.

That is a clear statement of the position of the party. The party has become the most active propaganda organization in the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. That is this Socialist Party with which I was connected?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Have you any idea of the number of these papers?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; but you might possibly gauge it by the number of papers.

Senator NELSON. How many papers have they?

Mr. STEVENSON. There are probably more than 250 newspapers.

Senator NELSON. What proportion of them are foreign-language papers?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have never calculated that.

Senator NELSON. The greater proportion of them are foreign-language papers, are they not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I should say they were, although there is a very large number of papers published in the English language and have quite a number of them here.

Inspector Tunney rather gave the impression in his testimony here that the number of people interested in this movement was limited. However, if we take the newspaper circulation as any index of the interest manifested in this movement, you will find the number is extremely large. For instance, the Forward, a paper published in Yiddish in New York, has a daily circulation of something over 200,000. The New York Call, a Socialist organ published in English, has a very large circulation, and also there are a number of smaller publications of purely socialistic type.

Senator OVERMAN. Do those papers openly advocate revolution?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, they hint at it, Senator. I will show you a few of them here to show you their character, if you would look them over. I do not know whether it is necessary to put them in the record.

Senator NELSON. You might put the names of them in the record. Have you a list of them?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have a partial list of them here. I have a complete list of them.

Senator NELSON. I think that list ought to be put in the record. Mr. Chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; put that list in the record.

(The list is here printed in the record, as follows:)

The Social activities of the part facilitate contact with other radical organizations. As an illustration we quote from the issue of the Labor Defender, the official organ of the I. W. W., issue of December 15, 1918, as follows: (P. 2, col. 5.)

"They say there'll be 10,000 at the New Years Eve ball of the Rand School in Madison Square Garden. Lets make it 11,111, if only out of appreciation for the friendship the Socialists have shown during our trials and tribulations."

In addition to the publication and dissemination of books, pamphlets and leaflets, the Socialist propaganda is carried on by a thoroughly organized press, of which the following newspapers are the more prominent:

Arizona Bulletin, 38 So. 4th Ave., Phoenix, Ariz.

People's Friend, Rogers, Ark.

California Social Democrat, 1307 W. 45th St., Los Angeles, Cal.

The World, 581 13th St. Oakland, Cal.

The Vorwaerts, 141 Albion St., San Francisco, Cal.

Western Comrade, Llano, Cal.

The Critic, 620 Main St. Grand Junction, Colo.

The Citizen, Box 135, Los Angeles, Cal.

International Socialist Review, 341 East Ohio St., Chicago.

Social Demokraten, 2003 N. California Ave., Chicago.

Examiner, 551 Newfield St., Bridgeport, Ct.

Svenska Socialisten, 2003 N. California Ave., Chicago.

Rovnost Indu, 1825 S. Loomis St., Chicago.

Proletareo, 4006 W. 31st St., Chicago.

Radnicke Strass, 830 S. Racine Ave., Chicago.

American Socialist, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago.

La Parola Dei Socialisti, 803 W. Madison St., Chicago.

Arbeiter Zeitung, 1642 N. Halsted St., Chicago.

Naujienos Lithuania, 1841 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

Sziennik Ludowy, 939 Milwaukee Ave., Chicago.

Spravedlnost, 1825 S. Loomis St., Chicago.

Muscatine County Socialist, Box 52, Muscatine, Ia.

The Chronicle, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kansas.

Dexter Dispatch, Dexter, Kansas.

St. Louis Labor, 966 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Russkaya Sjizn, 215 Elfred St., Detroit, Mich.

Der Herold, 96 Brush St., Detroit, Mich.

New Times, 5202 34th Ave., So. Minneapolis, Minn.

Two Harbors Socialist, Two Harbors, Minn.

Gaa Paa, 2301 7th St., So. Minneapolis, Minn.

The Social Revolution, 703 Pontiac Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Montana Socialist, Box 147, Butte, Mont.

Lalsve, 183 Roebling St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Solidarity, 2A Foxhall St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Novy Mir, 40 E. 4th St., New York.

New Review, 256 Broadway, New York.

New York Call, 444 Pearl St., New York.

Intercollegiate Socialist, 70 5th Ave., New York.

New York Volkszeitung, 15 Spruce Street, New York.

Gleichelt, 16 W. 21st St., New York.

Forward, 175 E. Broadway, New York.

Glas Svobody, 502 E. 75th St., New York.

Elore, 5 E. 3rd St., New York.

The Citizen, 851 Albany St., Schenectady, N. Y.

The Masses, 91 Greenwich Ave., New York, now known as "The Liberator."

The Iconoclast, 110 W. 3rd St., Minot, N. Dak.

Socialist News, 737 Prospect Ave., Cleveland, O.

Cleveland Citizen, 125 Oregon St., Cleveland, O.

Miami Socialist, 25 No. Main St., Dayton, O.

Robitnys, 2335 W. 11th St., Cleveland, O.

Ashtabula County Advance, 326 Harbor St., Conneaut, O.

Hamilton Socialist, Hamilton, O.

The Tenant Farmer, Kingfisher, Okla.

Oregon Bulletin, 231½ Oak St., Portland, Oregon.
 Toveritar, 131 24th St. N. E., Portland, Ore.
 Toveri, 10th & Dusne Sts., Astoria, Ore.
 Tageblatt, 803 Calowhill, Philadelphia, Pa.
 Labor Advocate, 436 Washington St., Reading, Pa.
 Kova, 226 N. 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
 L'Union Des Travailleure, Charleroi, Pa.
 Labor Advocate, Box 570, Providence, R. I.
 The Commonwealth, Mitchell, S. Dak.
 The Rebel, Hallettsville, Texas.
 Union Starr, Brookneal, Va.
 Washington Socialist, 612 California St., Everett, Wash.
 The Party Builder, Box 91, Everett, Wash.
 The Daily Call, 74 Pike St., Seattle, Wash.
 Wheeling Majority, 41 Market St., Wheeling, W. Va.
 Labor Argus, Charleston, W. Va.
 Vorwaerts, Brisbane Hall, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Tyomles, Box 553, Superior, Wis.
 Milwaukee Leader, Brisbane Hall, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Daprsod, 532 Chestnut St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 The New Age, 616 E. Genesee St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. STEVENSON. Another significant resolution adopted at the St. Louis convention had reference to the relations of the Socialist Party to labor organizations, in which the following paragraph may be found:

It is the duty of the party to give moral and material support to the labor organizations in all their defensive or aggressive struggles against capitalist oppression and exploitation, for the protection and extension of the rights of the wage workers and the betterment of their material and social conditions. It is also the duty of the members of the socialist party who are eligible in unions, to join and be active in their respective labor organizations.

That is rather an interesting suggestion.

Senator NELSON. That would indicate that one of their plans is to get control of labor organizations?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is their plan.

I might say further that the Socialist Party is carrying on a large number of meetings at the present time. For instance, in the neighborhood of New York City there are probably 100 meetings a week in various sections immediately around New York City.

Senator NELSON. Are their meetings on the street corners or in buildings?

Mr. STEVENSON. They are in halls, mostly, at this time of the year. They are in the halls which are the headquarters of the various district clubs.

Their propaganda is carried on by means of social intercourse among their members. They give dances, balls, at which their literature is distributed and at which radical speeches are made.

They have also undertaken the education of children and young people, and have organized the Young People's Socialist League, and conduct so-called Sunday schools, the purpose of which is to educate the youth in radical thinking.

I do not know whether it would be appropriate to add a list of the national committee of the Socialist Party and the list of the State secretaries or not.

Senator NELSON. I think that would be appropriate. Mr. Chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Let that go in.

(The list is here printed in full, as follows:)

EXHIBIT BB.

International Secretary, Morris Hillquit.
 Nat'l Exec. Secretary, Adolph Germer.
 Nat. Exec. Committee: Victor L. Berger, Anna A. Haley, Morris Hillquit, Armour Stedman, John M. Work.

STATE SECRETARIES.

Alabama, A. L. Feunberg, 1724 Third Ave., Birmingham.
 Alaska, R. E. Hegner, Seldovia.
 Arizona, Alice Eddy, 38 So. Fourth Ave., Phoenix.
 Arkansas, Freda Hogan, Huntington.
 California, Cameron H. King, 670 Page St., San Francisco.
 Colorado, Jennie H. McGehe, 1122 33rd St., Denver.
 Connecticut, Martin P. Plunkett, 23 Wallace Bldg., Wallingford.
 Delaware, Robt. Thompson, 702 Market St., Wilmington.
 Dist. of Col., Julian I. Pierce, 811 E St. NW., Washington.
 Florida, E. H. Lavender, Highway P. O., Jacksonville.
 Georgia, Mary Raoul Millis, 229 E. 10th St., Atlanta.
 Idaho, Myrtle Mauritz, Acting State Secretary, Box 458, Nampa.
 Illinois, O. C. Wilson, 802 W. Madison St., Chicago.
 Indiana, Wm. H. Henry, Mansur Block, Indianapolis.
 Iowa, I. S. McCrillis, Park Avenue Station, Des Moines.
 Kansas, Ida Beloof, 304 Stewart St., Winfield.
 Kentucky, J. L. Stark, 715 So. 6th St., Louisville.
 Louisiana, J. R. Jones, Georgetown.
 Maine, Fred E. Irish, 57 Chestnut St., Bath.
 Maryland, Karl Hartig, 1463 Andre St., Baltimore.
 Massachusetts, James Oneal, 885 Washington St., Boston.
 Michigan, John Kerscher, 512 Dix Ave., Detroit.
 Minnesota, A. L. Sugarman, Room 1, 424 Second Ave., So. Minn.
 Mississippi, Ida N. Raymond, R. R. No. 3, Jackson.
 Missouri, W. L. Garver, Route 3, Neosho.
 Montana, Mabel Porter, 1144 Sampson Ave., Butte.
 Nebraska, Mary N. Axtell, Voigville.
 Nevada, Justus E. Taylor, P. O. Box 6, Reno.
 New Hampshire, Fred E. Irish, 57 Chestnut St., Bath, Maine.
 New Jersey, Milo C. Jones, 124 Market St., Newark.
 New Mexico, Walter B. Dillon, Box 574, Albuquerque.
 New York, U. Solomon, People's House, 7 East 15th St.
 North Carolina, Roy Swain, 2376 Sunny Side Ave., Winston-Salem.
 North Dakota, H. R. Martinson, Box 717, Minot.
 Ohio, A. Wagenknecht, 1921 Cook Ave., Lakewood.
 Oklahoma, H. M. Sinclair, Scott Thompson Bldg., Oklahoma City.
 Oregon, O. G. Johannessen, Acting State Secty., 231½ Oak St., Portland.
 Pennsylvania, Robert B. Ringler, 628 Walnut St., Reading.
 Rhode Island, John Bradbury, 391 Lonsdale Ave., Pawtucket.
 South Carolina, Wm. Eberhard, 257 King St., Charleston.
 South Dakota, R. F. Atwood, Sisseton.
 Tennessee, G. L. Braun, 897 New York St., Memphis.
 Texas, W. T. Webb, Cisco.
 Utah, C. T. Stoney, 713 First Ave., Salt Lake City.
 Vermont, David B. Smith, Websterville.
 Virginia, C. S. Rab, 76 Poplar Ave., Norfolk.
 Washington, Emil Herman, Box 491, Everett.
 West Virginia, Edwln Firth, 1513 Seventh Ave., Huntington.
 Wisconsin, Louis A. Arnold, Acting State Secretary, Brisband Hall, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming, D. A. Hastings, 2302 Bent St., Chicago.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is mentioned there from North Carolina?
 Mr. STEVENSON. Roy Swain, 2376 Sunny Side Avenue, Winston-Salem.

Senator NELSON. Who is there from Minnesota?

Mr. STEVENSON. A. L. Sugarman, 424 Second Avenue South, Minneapolis.

You will find that a very large percentage of these are German names.

Senator NELSON. My impression is that that man has been in for disloyalty and tried and convicted.

Senator OVERMAN. You have not got the post-office addresses, do you?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is Swain from—the North Carolina man?

Mr. STEVENSON. 2376 Sunny Side Avenue, Winston-Salem.

Senator WOLCOTT. Who is mentioned there from Delaware?

Mr. STEVENSON. Robert Thompson, 702 Market Street, Wilmington.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the Socialist Party of America has developed into a revolutionary organization, seeking to undermine the rights of property and to develop class consciousness among the proletariat.

There are a number of publications that are not identified with the Socialist Party as such, but are advocating everything that is advocated by the Socialist Party, or the syndicalists, the I. W. W. or the anarchists, such as the Liberator.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us a list of those?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think I have a complete list of them.

Senator NELSON. Give us the list of what you have. I think it would be well to have that in the record, do you not, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Just put into the record the name of each publication.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a quarterly entitled "The Radical View," devoted to the critical investigation of scientific Socialism.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we will take an adjournment until tomorrow afternoon at half-past 2.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt just for two minutes, Mr. Chairman, so that we may hear Mr. Bowen and let him go? It will not take more than two minutes.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM A. BOWEN.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bowen, are you acquainted with John A. Arnold?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How long have you known him?

Mr. BOWEN. About 10 years.

Maj. HUMES. You are the editor of the Farmers' Fireside Bulletin?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Of Arlington, Tex.?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. State if you have any knowledge of any kind of propaganda being carried on by Mr. Arnold.

Mr. BOWEN. Well, there were a good many articles submitted to me and I had some conversation with some of his folks about them and had been publishing very largely the Commercial Secretaries first work, which was statistical and industrial, when they were first started, and they began to change over onto those other matters and I quit it; and naturally some questions were asked, they wanted to know why I would not use any more of their stuff, and it led to my looking into the matter pretty considerably, because they involved the Farmers' Union folks in it and my paper had been selected by the Farmers' Union for them to publish their official matter for their membership in because of the policies that I had pursued for a long number of years with reference to farmers.

Mr. Arnold, of course, is somewhat of a sphinx. In that respect he is very much on the Ed. House style of interlocutory building.

I interviewed Mr. Radford about it. Mr. Radford has been president of the Farmers' Union, and when I began to get some of his propaganda, and this distillers' and brewers' matter, I was a sort of a red-hot fanatic on the other side, or whatever they call me, and I would not use it. I asked him about it one day, why he continued to send it, and he suggested that was not his line, that Mr. Arnold had charge of it.

When I was in Chicago in 1915 the editor of a farm paper in Iowa, Mr. Jarnagin, of the Iowa Farmer, asked me about Mr. Radford and this propaganda, and asked me if I had any data that he was getting money, or somebody was getting money, from the brewers and other big business, and exploiting it through alleged articles furnished to the farm papers.

I told him no. I had no data on that, but that I had my surmises, and had picked up a few hundred odd ideas that I had tried to put together, but that I had no absolute facts about it. He said that he did.

I then said "I would like to have that information, because I am looking for that sort of thing myself, to find out who is doing this and why."

He told me that when he got back home he would send me some pretty interesting and authentic data on that, and the facts, which he did.

Senator NELSON. What were those data?

Maj. HUMES. Have you the data that he sent to you?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes; I have a letter from him. I filed it away because it was interesting sort of stuff to me to find out how men were doing these things.

Maj. HUMES. Was there a good deal of this free plate matter sent out on the brewery and distillery propaganda?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes, sir; there was a great deal of it; a very great deal.

I kept a lot of it until the Western Newspaper Union was importunate about my keeping it, and wanted me to send it back, as I did not use it. I kept some proof sheets of it and sent it back to them, in the usual way, unused.

All the information I got from it—I could see it in a great many papers, of course. I had a list of smaller papers, several hundred of them, all over the United States, that carried it pretty regularly, and I knew the propaganda was going on, and I was not using any of the stuff. I have this letter here from Mr. Jarnagin.

Maj. HUMES. Let me ask you this, Mr. Bowen: Was Mr. Arnold working for Mr. Radford, or was Mr. Radford working for Mr. Arnold?

Mr. BOWEN. Well, it was generally understood that Mr. Radford was working for Mr. Arnold.

That was the time when Mr. Radford—well, to be specific about it, it is the absolute fact that while the Commercial Secretaries were conducting an industrial propaganda, getting up facts, it is irrelevant for me to state that I had some idea, however, of the thing; I was secretary of the chamber of commerce of San Antonio for three years, and I did a very great deal of work in that line. I was the originator of the first railway advertising train in the world, through the late Mr. Allan Manville, president of the Santa Fe Railway system for a great many years, up to his death. I got into that industrial development, and my slogan was to tell nothing but the truth about Texas, and allow no landmen or sky-blue people to tell anything but the truth about it, and to keep everything in that out, in the train. I got Gov. Hubbard for the orator of the train.

That attracted my attention to the work that they were doing and it was really a magnificent work. The business men followed the slogan that the very Nation depended upon the producer, and that we must stand by the producer more than we had; and a group of men that were my assistants and advisers were standing by the farmers and the producers against everything and everybody. One, Sheb Williams, of my State, who is a farmer, and was chairman of the Democratic executive committee of the State—I mention that because he is a man of prominence, a man of initiative and force—my brother, R. D. Bowen, of Paris, Tex., who had considerable farming interests and been a business man in New Orleans there for twenty odd years, were intensely interested in the interests of the farmers and a group of men like that, a dozen or so, had been assisting me in carrying on this propaganda for the business men to stand by the farmer, instead of just using him as a convenience to bring stuff and levy on the proceeds.

Mr. Radford stood back of that, and had a conference with the business men of the State, and got the bankers to put up $40,000 at 6 per cent for the farmers to finance their cotton on.

Mr. Radford, in order to carry this on, not having a fund in the Farmers' Union that would always be at hand for expenses, the business men agreed that they would pay his expense; that is, they would contribute to the Farmers' Union, or to him, $125 a month, and he would put that into the treasury, and he drew his $1,500 a year, which the constitution of that body allowed him to use, and they paid his expenses; and it was while this work was going on that this other propaganda began to creep in. There was a big row about it, of course. People began to catch on, and the press and interest parties, and they formed, in the Commercial Secretaries Association, the Farm Life Commission, and they made Mr. Radford chairman of that, the head of that, the farmer end of it. I always regard Mr. Radford as sincere in this work.

Then, after the brewery explosion occurred, as I call it, because it was practically the explosion of their propaganda, excepting a little echo of it, in the late gubernatorial race, when Gov. Ferguson was impeached and put out of office on account of receiving brewery money——

Senator NELSON. Who?

Senator OVERMAN. Gov. Ferguson.

Mr. BOWEN. James E. Ferguson.

This Farm Life Commission took the place of the other organizations for the farmers.

Mr. Radford was no longer president of the Farmers' Union, and Mr. Barrett, who had started a paper in Atlanta, Ga.—Chas. S. Barrett, president of the National Farmers' Union—appointed Mr. Radford one of the lecturers of the National Farmers' Union, and they changed the name of that bureau to the Farmers' Union—what was the name of it?

Maj. HUMES. Press Bureau?

Mr. BOWEN. Press Bureau. The idea was, of course, that it was to furnish news. That is at the time things began to change from the industrial development to this special business propaganda and brewery and brewery letters, and advocating antiprohibition.

I asked Mr. Radford one day about it. I had been receiving a lot, and I asked him—I said: "It is useless for you to have that stuff sent over to me, from you or from anybody else. You know that I am not going to use it." He said, "Well, by golly, I had nothing to do with that." He said that he had enough of his own to answer for, and that Mr. Arnold and the balance of them sent those things out.

So then I got this letter, and looked around to see how they got that money.

Maj. HUMES. This is the letter from the American Press Association, with reference to Mr. Arnold's activities?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes; that is the one that Mr. Jarnagin told me in Chicago he would send me.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask Capt. Lester to read that.

Capt. LESTER. The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION,
DES MOINES OFFICE,
July 1, 1915.

Mr. JARNAGIN,
Iowa Farmer, Des Moines, Iowa.

DEAR MR. JARNAGIN: Supplementing our telephone conversation on the subject of the Peter Radford matter, would say that we are by this mail sending you several copies of the American Press containing interesting matter in relation thereto.

A considerable number of Iowa papers, as we presume in other states, are publishing this matter without due consideration of its character and of the vast imposition that is being made upon the people of this country as well as the publishers.

Our president, Mr. Courtland Smith of New York, makes the following statement:

"Mr. Arnold, of Texas, the man who is the promotor of the National Farmers' Union and allied concerns, and who writes some of the matter appearing under the name of Peter Radford, visited General Office and tried to interest us in sending out the matter. We refused to have anything to do with his proposition unless the real interests back of his concern were frankly stated, and then we would have handled the matter only with the understanding that proof sheets would be sent to the publishers and their orders solicited, and plates shipped only to those publishers who desired the matter. He would not consent to such conditions, and the matter he is now sending out shows why he could not. The order was then given to the Western Newspaper Union."

We hope that the Iowa newspapers may not only become wise to this scheme but that they will take pains to let the interests behind the scheme know their opposition. It seems that some of the publishers ought to "speak in meeting" and tell what they think.

Very truly, yours,

AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION
GEORGE MARCELLUS.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Bowen, do you know of any other organization or any newspaper or newspapers in Texas that have gotten money from brewers for propaganda purposes?

Mr. BOWEN. No, sir. I have no way of knowing, excepting Mr. Barrett—this is not in the State of Texas, but it occurred there—when Mr. Barrett was reputed to have gotten the $3,100 from Mr. Bradford, through him, and he did get $500 out of the treasury of the farmers' union for a farmers' union paper at Atlanta, Ga. It was generally understood that the $3,100 that Mr. Radford gave Mr. Barrett—Mr. Radford was not a man of means at all—came through Mr. Arnold.

Maj. HUMES. $3,100?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes; I think that was the amount that we understood.

Maj. HUMES. You do not know whether that was brewery money or railroad money, or what?

Mr. BOWEN. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever talk with Mr. Arnold about the matter of brewery propaganda?

Mr. BOWEN. No, sir; not specifically. I merely told him that we were getting on a line that he knew I would not stand for. Mr. Cain, president of the Business Men's Association, who is vice president of the Texas, Gulf & Western Railway, and manager of it, a life-long friend of mine, and a strong friend of the farmer, a good man, wrote me a long letter protesting and asking me why I had changed, and so on.

Senator OVERMAN. It was generally understood that a great deal of brewery money was used there in the elections?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes. We brought that out and showed it unquestionably. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how much?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes—not how much, but several hundred thousand dollars was used down there in Texas. That was shown up. I know. The governor got $156,500 at one whack.

Senator NELSON. The governor did?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes. And that is what put him out. Of course, when the exposure came I suggested to some of them if they would put Mr. Adoue on he would tell the whole truth about it; that Mr. Adoue would lie about anything; and just before he died they did put him on, and he told all about it. They let the governor have the money, and charged it off to profit and loss, and that was the end of it, to them. They were not worrying about that, except that they were worrying over the row about it. That worried them, of course.

Senator NELSON. Do you know where Mr. Arnold got his money for his activities?

Mr. BOWEN. No, sir; excepting that, of course, I naturally have an interest in finding out what I could find. The nearest I find was that a meeting was held in New York—I got this from another party; I was not there—but a friend of mine who was there said that one of the Harvard college students who was paying his way and was a waiter was at a big supper that they had with a lot of business men there one night, and Mr. Arnold was up there and represented to them that he really controlled the Farmers Union, and——

Senator NELSON. He testified here that he was drawing a salary of $500 a month, and he had a woman assistant that was getting $250 a month.

Mr. BOWEN. Yes; that was Mrs. Darden, I guess. She did the writing, and was a wonderfully able and fluent writer. She did the literary millinery in dressing up the crudities of the staff.

Senator NELSON. I was a little curious to know where all the money came from.

Mr. BOWEN. He visited the business men of New York who had business interests in Texas and then branched out into business interests generally, and finance. Mr. Courtland Smith throws light on that. Shortly after Mr. Smith wrote this letter and made this protest that he refused to handle this plate matter——

Senator OVERMAN. Why did he refuse to handle this plate matter?

Mr. BOWEN. There are two concerns in the United States, or were, up to this trouble, which probably exploded it: The American Press Association furnished plate matter exclusively, but did not furnish what is called "patent insides." The Western Newspaper Union does both—furnishes plate matter, and to that extent was a rival of the American Press Association.

Courtland Smith refused to issue this plate matter or do anything with it at all unless Mr. Arnold told him who the parties were and for what purpose they were putting up this enormous amount of money, a contract involving $100,000 or $200,000 under one contract; and he refused to do it.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Arnold carried on his propaganda through his publicity bureau not only for the brewers and for the wets but also for other matters, did he not?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. For the railroads?

Mr. BOWEN. Yes. His articles involved all of those.

Senator NELSON. Did he carry on any activities that we might call pro-German?

Mr. BOWEN. No, sir; I do not think he did. The only thing that might have been pro-German would also have been pro-American—a free sea for shipping for our producers, too. That was at the time that we were not at war.

Some of those articles deal with the open-sea question, the same thing that carried us into the row with England in 1812, and up to the present date.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else?

Maj. HUMES. That is all.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take an adjournment until half-past 2 o'clock to-morrow.

(Whereupon, at 5:45 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 23, 1919, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

REWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 2.30 o'clock, in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman and Nelson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Stevenson, will you now resume, please, where you left off last night?

Mr. STEVENSON. If I remember correctly, I was just giving an illustration of the socialist expressions from the Radical Review of July 1918.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is that magazine published?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is published in New York, Senator, by the Radical Review Publishing Association, 202 East Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. Has it a large circulation?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know what the circulation of it is. It is gotten up in very good style and has no advertisements. It is circulated at all of the radical meetings. At any of the meetings you attend you will pick up a copy of this magazine.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know who is financing all of these associations of the Bolsheviki, the Socialists, and so on?

Mr. STEVENSON. I was coming to that with regard to the Bolsheviki, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. All right; do not let me anticipate, then. Just go ahead.

Mr. STEVENSON (reading):

True to the dictate of necessity, it flies the red flag of international socialism—

This is referring to the Socialist Party—proclaiming the identity of the workers' interests the world over, recognizing only one enemy, the international bourgeoisie, and substituting the national particularism of an obsolete competitive capitalism with the international solidarity of socialism.

Senator OVERMAN. It seems that they have a common flag, and that is the red flag. That is the I. W. W. and the socialists; have they all a common flag?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have.

Senator OVERMAN. And that is the red flag?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the red flag.

Senator OVERMAN. Each one of these organizations carries the flag?

Mr. STEVENSON. All of them.

And here is the epitome of the whole thing:

The red flag of the Industrial Republic is expressive of all the strong and vital forces in society making for progress and true civilization, a banner proclaiming and symbolizing the noble ideal of social fraternity and industrial equality. The ultimate triumph of the proletarian armies under the red flag, therefore, marks the dawn of the universal brotherhood of the cooperative commonwealth.

Senator OVERMAN. That shows it up pretty well.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am sorry that I did not come prepared with a complete list of various radical publications. There are quite a number. I can not state exactly how many of them there are.

Senator OVERMAN. Can you not put in a list right at this point, or just furnish to the stenographer a list of the leading ones?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, there is the Liberator, which is the champion of the Masses——

Senator OVERMAN. You need not do it now, but hand it in later. It will be put into the record at this point.

Mr. STEVENSON. I can do that, I think, afterwards; yes.

We covered briefly yesterday the first currents of the radical movement. There is one other principal one, namely, anarchism.

Anarchism is defined in the literature which is disseminated in this country by Emma Goldman and Berkman, who are the leaders of the movement here, as the "philosophy of a new social order based on liberty unrestricted by man-made laws, the theory that all forms of government rest on violence, and are therefore wrong, harmful as well as unnecessary."

I might point out that theoretical anarchism is opposed to violence, and is a Utopian dream, but the picture of a society free of all restraints has won to the ranks of the anarchists all those who want liberty transformed into license and to indulge their passions without incurring the penalties imposed by an organized government.

Senator OVERMAN. I notice in reading from this Radical Republic, Mr. Stevenson, that what you read about the red flag here is an article signed by K. D.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. That is Karl Danenburg.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what he says it is, or that is what they preach?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is what they preach. The anarchist movement was imported into America in the seventies by a German anarchist named Johann Most, who established the first anarchist paper in America, called the Freiheit.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he driven out of Germany?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes—well I am not sure whether he was driven out of Germany, but he was driven out of England. He attended while in England, to cause trouble in the army, and served 18 months in prison, and then came over here and established his paper. His agitation led up to the well-known Haymarket riots in 1886.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. What year was that?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Haymarket riots?

Senator OVERMAN. I mean when Herr Most came here? I remember that.

Mr. STEVENSON. In the seventies. I do not know exactly.

Senator NELSON. It was between 1870 and 1880?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; some time.

Senator OVERMAN. I think I was at college then.

Senator NELSON. I was a Member of the House at that time, but I do not remember the date.

Senator OVERMAN. I remember all about that.

Senator NELSON. They hung some of them?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Anarchist element in this country has always been a small one, but a very active and violent group.

They came into prominence again with the declaration of war by the United States and participated in the pacifist movement.

They organized the No Conscription League, with headquarters at 100 East One hundred and twenty-fifth Street, New York City, and from that league they issued the most violent propaganda opposed to conscription. I should like to submit one or two of their leaflets to the record.

A large number of anonymous leaflets were distributed, which were signed "Anarchist," and by the underground pass. Among the assistants of Emma Goldman and Berkman were M. Elinore Fitzgerald, Carl Newlander, Walter Merchant, and W. P. Bales.

I might say that the official publication of the Anarchist was Mother Earth.

Senator OVERMAN. Where was that published?

Mr. STEVENSON. In New York City.

Senator NELSON. What is the title of that—Mother Earth?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mother Earth.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the editor of that magazine?

Mr. STEVENSON. Emma Goldman. It is still being published, although it is not coming out now in regular issues. She is confined in prison for the violation of the espionage act, I believe.

Senator OVERMAN. Was she tried under the espionage act after she was tried under the conspiracy act?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

The anarchists have organized a school known as the Ferrer Modern School, with headquarters at Stelton, N. J., but they have branches in most of the cities of the United States.

In connection with this school, I must call attention to the organization of a school for children now being conducted. The head of this movement is Mr. Leonard D. Abbott.

On the trial of Emma Goldman and Berkman, Mr. Abbott was called to testify as to the character of Emma Goldman and Berkman, and in the course of the examination he was asked:

Q. Does the Ferrer School teach children to disobey the laws of the country?

To which he replied:

It teaches them to criticize all laws, and to prepare themselves for a free society.

Q. When you speak of criticizing laws, do you include the laws of this government?

A. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What is the extent of those schools?

Mr. STEVENSON. They are carrying on these schools in a great many centers.

Senator OVERMAN. Are they night schools?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; that particular school is a colony, to which these children go.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand they have other schools?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have courses of lectures.

One New York branch of the Ferrer School has its headquarters at Pythian Hall, 1914 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Senator NELSON. I suppose they have night schools for adults?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; the school is a regular school for teaching anarchy to children as well as adults.

Senator NELSON. I mean, they have night schools for adults—that line?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not sure whether the Ferrer School has. I am sorry to say that I can not enlighten you on that point, but I can give a series of lectures.

It might be of interest to give you a few of the titles:

On November 17, 1918. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn lectures on "Economic reconstruction." She is an I. W. W., as well as a sympathizer of the "Anarchist."

On Sunday, November 24, "The spirit of the mob, a factor in revolution," by J. Edward Morgan.

December 1, "The anarchist's relation to the law," by Lola Ridge, and similar lectures are carried on in New York.

Senator OVERMAN. Are any of these people educated people?

Mr. STEVENSON. One of the lecturers here is Hutchins Hapgood, who is a brother of Norman Hapgood.

Senator NELSON. He is one of their lecturers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

The interesting feature of the anarchist movement is that it was originally associated with Karl Marx in the First International, which was the International Working Men's Association, which was the first attempt to gather the radicals of all countries into one organization which would direct the movement in foreign nations and which would attempt to bring about the results sought.

The anarchists were admitted to that movement. As time went on, however, the socialists rather got away from the radical theories of the German official socialism, and finally the anarchists were expelled, in 1872.

An interesting feature of the International, however, at the present time, is that when the war broke out in 1914 the International Working Men's Association broke up, because a number of the socialist groups in their respective countries supported their governments; notably the German socialists; and, for a time, it appeared that the socialist movement had received its death blow. But the length of the war, the extraordinary sacrifices of the peoples, and the economic burdens that have been imposed, have revived socialist movements, and consequently we find the Bolsheviki of Russia setting for themselves the task of reconstructing the International.

The Bolsheviki are simply the modern manifestation of old German socialism, to which has been added some of the principles and tactics of syndicalism.

Senator OVERMAN. And they carry the red flag?

Mr. STEVENSON. And they carry the red flag.

The interest of Russia to the United States is the fact that they have determined to revive the International, and that means that they are sending their missionaries into all parts of the world.

It was through their influence that the German Spartacus group, headed by Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, got their start.

Their activities in Argentine have been prominent in the daily papers.

It is particularly interesting to note, also, that a very large area

Mexico is now in control of the Bolsheviki—a matter which, I think, has not been generally known—and that the propaganda of the Industrial Union of North and South America, which it is called, is being circulated in New York City and in other cities of the United States, printed in Russian for the benefit of the Russian immigrants and Russian Jewish immigrants to this country.

I have a translation of this. It is written by John Sennzott. It sounds rather German to me, but I do not know anything about him.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; it sounds German rather than Russian.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What parts of Mexico do you refer to, Mr. Stevenson?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yucatan and the adjoining States.

Just to illustrate what they are telling these people in this country, quote:

When a man wants a house, he goes to the Building Committee. Possibly he is told there is an empty house at such and such a place. If he does not like it, he is registered, and when his turn comes, he is built a house according to his wishes.

In other words, they do not use any money, and everything is done on a cooperative basis.

Senator NELSON. By the government?

Mr. STEVENSON. By the Soviet government.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The interesting feature of the Bolsheviki movement is that every one of these currents that we have spoken of is now cooperating with the Bolsheviki emissaries. We have several avowed agents of the Bolsheviki government here—avowed propagandists.

Senator NELSON. In this country; operating here?

Mr. STEVENSON. In this country; operating to-day.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us the names of them?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. Two of them are American citizens. One John Reed, a graduate of Harvard University.

Senator NELSON. You don't say?

Mr. STEVENSON. And, by the way, he is a descendant of Patrick Henry. He is now under indictment, but has not yet been tried, for violation of the espionage act.

I will read from some of his speeches to give you an illustration of the type of propaganda which he is spreading.

Senator OVERMAN. Are these people financed by the Russian Bolsheviki?

Mr. STEVENSON. I might say that we have found money coming into this country from Russia. Money has come into this country to the head of the Finnish country, Sanitori Nourati money has come in from o now being investigated, and of the people or the matter

Senator OVERMAN. You Reed, who is the other?

Mr. STEVENSON. One is Williams.

Senator OVERMAN. Where

Mr. STEVENSON. He is from where he came from; he is newspaper man. I believe we entered the war. I offer published by The Rand S Williams, entitled "The B exposition of the splendid form of government.

The Russian Bolsheviki literature, of which an example from the Socialist Soviet published by The Socialist Brooklyn, N. Y., in December working men to straighten and to join the ranks of the of Social Science has published by Nikolai Lenin, entitled extremely interesting document

A large number of documents Finnish, and the various other groups of our foreign immigrants this, we find that the Social courage and support this movement

Senator OVERMAN. Would such papers and pamphlets

Mr. STEVENSON. It would place, the means of the (books, pamphlets, etc., are are scattered all over the United

Senator OVERMAN. Is an South?

Mr. STEVENSON. Why, no to our attention. I might call published in Boston and I which has an interesting article ism fast tottering to fall—their crowns as soon as the contracted by the American people's hour has arrived."

Senator OVERMAN. Where

Mr. STEVENSON. That is sorry that I can not call you in these various papers.

Senator NELSON. Have you got any Finnish paper there?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have. Here is a Finnish paper [exhibiting].

Senator NELSON. Where is it published?

Mr. STEVENSON. Published in Astoria, Oreg. It is a very prosperous-looking paper, published in three sections, and the name is Toveri. It has in English in the upper right-hand corner "The circulation of the Toveri is greater than the combined circulation of all other newspapers printed in Astoria." It is a very substantial sheet.

Senator OVERMAN. Is it printed in English?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; that is Finnish. I submit now copies of various Socialistic newspapers from various parts of the country. You might be interested to look some of those over. Now, here is a paper in English, entitled International Weekly, with a subheading "Organ of the social revolution." That is published in Seattle, Wash. Another one is entitled "Seattle Daily Call. To carry truth to the people."

Senator OVERMAN. Is that in English?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; that is in English. I am only bringing these to your attention as scattered illustrations of the type of publications printed.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us any information about the activities of these extreme radicals in this country; where they have operated, and what they have done, or undertaken to do?

Mr. STEVENSON. Up to the present time, so far as actual proof is concerned, their activities are largely propaganda, the holding of large numbers of meetings, and the distribution of radical literature.

Senator OVERMAN. Pamphlets and newspapers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Pamphlets, newspapers, books, and hand bills. For instance, one of the methods was to print a leaflet calculated to disturb the mind of the reader, which was put into the mail boxes of a very large number of tenement houses—stuffed in the various mail boxes—entitled "Why you should be a socialist," by Theresa S. Malloch, who, by the way, was a member of several of the pacifist societies at we spoke of yesterday.

Immediately after the signing of the armistice there was a tremendous outcropping of this propaganda. The number of meetings multiplied, and one of the first meetings of interest was held on November 15, 1918, by the Yorkville agitation committee (Yorkville being a part of New York City). Comrade Patrick Quinlan, who is known for his connection with the I. W. W., and who has served a sentence for his activities with the I. W. W. in Paterson, N. J., made a speech that night, in which he said:

"Do not allow the capitalists to keep the Army in Europe for the purpose of shooting down your fellow laboring men in Germany and Russia. Do not trust Lloyd George any more than you trust the Professor. The red flag is flying over nearly all of Europe; it will soon fly in France, and spread across the English Channel, and eventually will fly over this city and the White House. The Republic of Labor of the World is proclaimed."

At a meeting held on January 10, 1919, at the Labor Lyceum, 949 Milloughby Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., Mr. John Reed, who is the—— Senator OVERMAN. The Harvard graduate?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; the Harvard graduate, and who is in this country as the consul general of the Soviet Republic, stated, among other things——

Senator OVERMAN. That is not recognized, though?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; not recognized. He says:

My family came to this country, both branches, in 1607; one of my ancestors was Patrick Henry, who signed the Declaration of Independence; another ancestor was a general under George Washington; and another a colonel on the northern side in the Civil War. I have a brother, a major in the Army Corps, now in France, and I am a voter and a citizen of the United States. I claim the right to criticise the government as much as I please. I criticise the form of it because I claim that it is not a democratic enough government. I want a more democratic government. I consider the Soviet government in Russia a more democratic government at the present time than our government.

He goes on in a very long speech, the tenor of which is to justify the position and the activities of the Soviet government, and to be pressing the highest praise for it. He goes on further to say:

Now, this war, which is supposed to have been finished up now, was supposed to be a conflict between two ideas—democracy and autocracy. Now the war is finished, comrades, and where in Hell is the democracy? Now, in New York City free speech is suppressed; Socialists are not allowed to meet; the red flag is banned; periodicals are barred from the mails, and all the evils of Prussianism appear.

I might point out another dangerous feature of this thing.

Maj. HUMES. I would suggest that the whole speech be put into the record. I have glanced over it myself. It has only been referred to, but I believe it is an interesting outline of the whole plan of the activities.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in.

Mr. STEVENSON. The thing that I was going to mention is that a lot of educated people, particularly a number of educated and cultured women, who have taken an interest in what is known as "general ideas," have, as a form of entertainment, the inviting of J. Reed and others to come and address them on afternoons.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the man who made this speech?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

(The speech referred to is here printed in the record, as follows.)

Comrades and friends: I am just told that there is an order from the United States Government that we are not to criticise at this meeting the United States Government or its Allies. Now I was arrested and indicted some two months ago for criticising the intervention of the Allies in Russia. Since that time not socialist but bourgeois papers, the Nation, the Dial, the Public, and the New Republic, the Evening Post, Jane Addams, Senator Hiram Johnson, Senator Burton, and other members of Congress have said a damned sight worse things than I have, and nobody dared either arrest or indict them. I am obliged to you from that that these persecutions are directed against socialism. It is evidently has not come to the attention of the gentleman who gave that order from the police that according to my information the Attorney General of the United States has ruled that criticism of the allies does not come under the Espionage Act, for the simple reason that we have no treaties of alliance with any European power at the present moment, and the foreign nations, we may criticise them all we please.

Now, I am an American, and my family has been here a good deal longer than the families of any police. My family came to this country, both branches, in 1607. One of my ancestors was Patrick Henry, who signed the Declaration of Independence. Another of my ancestors was a General under George Washington, and another a Colonel on the Northern side in the Civil War. I

France, and I am a voter and a citizen of the United States, and I claim the right to criticise the government as much as I please.

I criticise the form of it. I criticise the form of it because I claim that it is not a democratic enough government for me. I want a more democratic government. I consider the Soviet Government of Russia a more democratic government at the present time than our own government, and Col. William Boyce Thompson, who is a millionaire, said the same thing three months ago, and nobody dared touch him. Now I charge agencies of our government with keeping from the people of the United States the truth about Russia, and Senator Hiram Johnson said the same thing the other day in Congress. We have also agencies of our government which have not only kept the truth from our people, but they have given out information about Russia which is not true, and I refer here to the Sisson documents particularly, proving that Lenin and Trotzky received German gold, and I tell the people in this hall assembled, and the people of the United States, and the Senate of the United States, that proof will be offered in Congress within ten days, and it is there now, that proof will be offered that the Sisson documents are largely forgeries. I claim that the statement of our government, which was given by Chairman Hitchcock to the United States Senate, to the effect that our troops were welcomed by the people at Archangel and Vladivostok is false, and the agents of our government know that it is false. We were not welcome in either Archangel or Vladivostok and I don't mean only our own troops but all the Allies, and I say here that the Allied troops, British, French, and Japanese, when they landed at Vladivostok they shot in the streets hundreds of Soviet troops, blew down buildings, put the Soviet government in jail; that when it was over a funeral procession of the working people, 20,000 strong, went through the streets carrying the coffins containing their dead, which they laid down in front of the British Consulate, from which machine guns had played on the people. They made speeches saying they would never forget their dead, and there, surrounded by machine guns and artillery, they were about to leave.

There were American cruisers in the harbor. It was the 4th of July, and the American cruisers flew the American flag. One of the speakers said to the people: "See; to-day America celebrates the anniversary of her independence. Let us go and appeal to America so that the Americans on this, their day of independence, will recognize that we are struggling for freedom." And they carried those coffins up the hill and laid them down on the sidewalk in front of the American Consulate, and asked that we say a word for them. And five days later the United States Marines landed and three weeks later they were shooting down Russians without a Declaration of War.

I want to point out another thing, and charge, as Johnson has charged in the Senate of the United States—as Senator Hiram Johnson has charged in the Senate of the United States—and the Dial, the Nation, the Public, the New Republic, and the Evening Post have charged the same thing, that our government in sending troops to Russia without a declaration of war has violated the Constitution of the United States and has committed an illegal act, and I charge that same thing here tonight.

Now I want to point out to you what is being done in the Baltic provinces by the Allies, particularly by the English. The English have taken under their protection the so-called governments of the Baltic provinces. Those governments which were set up by who? By the people of the Baltic Provinces? No. By the officials of Kaiser Wilhelm; and those are the governments that the British government is taking under its protection.

I also want to call your attention to the despatches which have been coming through and which have not been denied, that the British authorities have told the Germans to resist the onward march of the Bolsheviks, the Lettish, the Estonian, and the Lithuanian people who are trying to win back their own country from the tyranny of German barons who have terrorized the Baltic provinces for centuries. There is a very important thing for you to remember, and that is that what the Allies are doing at the present time in the Baltic provinces—and I don't say our own government, because our government has nothing to do with this—but what the Germans, the English, and the French are doing is carrying out the provisions of the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk which the Germans imposed upon the Russian Baltic provinces—a treaty at which the whole allied world, including us here in America, threw up its hands in horror, such were the conditions imposed upon the Baltic provinces. And now the Allies, without any further delay at all, are imposing these same conditions, or trying to impose them, upon the Baltic provinces, and the only reason they not do so is that there is an international red army of Estonians, Lithuanians, and Russians, who are resisting them to the last.

Now this war, which is supposed to have been finished by now, was supposed to be a conflict between two ideals, democracy and autocracy. Now war is finished, comrades, and where in hell is the democracy? Now New York City free speech is suppressed, Socialists are not allowed to carry a red flag is banned, periodicals are barred from the mails, and all the evils of Prussianism appear. I want to ask you, if you know anything about Germany, if you had ever been to a meeting in Germany, a political meeting. Absolutely the same phenomenon is here. The Chief of Police comes to a meeting and you can't talk about so-and-so, and 100 cops in the hall! Is that so?

Now the war is ended, but a new war is begun, and this time it is between two ideas for the first time in history. Those two ideas are: There are two parties. On one side is private property and nationalism; the other side is property for the people and internationalism. Now the era of civilization, comrades, under which we live, is bankrupt at the present. It hasn't got a leg to stand on. It doesn't dare to permit democracy because if it did it would be voted out of existence. It rests, of course upon force, which do not mean what they say, and upon force.

Now in this connection I want to call your attention to a statement by Nikolai Lenin's, which he spoke in the third congress of Soviets at the disposal of the Constituent Assembly, when the other members were accusing the Bolsheviks of using force. Lenin stood on the platform and said, "We are accused of using force. We admit it. All government is merely organized force in the hands of one class against another; but now, for the first time in history, this organized force is being used by the working class against the capitalist class."

On the night of second Congress of Soviets in Petrograd, when the Bolshevik insurrection broke out and the Provisional Government fell. The Bolsheviks were in session in a great hall like this one, the Smolny Institute. Through the windows came the sound of cannon fire, and as the evening came and the success of the Bolshevik insurrection became apparent, all the other political parties in that convention began to walk out. One after another the leaders walked out and their delegates followed the leaders. And those who noticed that among the Bolshevik delegates who were in the majority, there were a number of delegates who seemed uneasy and wanted to see all the other parties leaving, went to the front platform and said, "The compromisers go; they are just so much garbage which will be swept into the rubbish-heap of history."

But what I want to tell you most of all is this, that when those compromiser parties walked out of the Congress of the Soviets and left the balance to the Bolsheviks, greatly reduced, here and there a man would stand up. One said, "I am for the Estonian Social Democracy; I demand a place on that platform." Another said, "I am from the Lettish Social Democracy; I demand a place on that platform." A third said, "I am from the Lithuanian Social Democracy; I demand a place on that platform." And so it finally came to pass that representatives of the working class from all over Russia came and joined hands with the Bolsheviks and that was the beginning of the Russian International, which was the beginning of the third international of the world's workers.

I was in the Lettish country just after the fall of Riga. I was at the front and saw the Lettish soldiers, who alone of all the 12th Army stood against the Germans, and stood against the Germans until they were cut down, were reduced from 3000 to 18, and the reason they stood against the Germans was not because they didn't like the Germans, but because they were revolutionaries, and they saw immediately that the Germans were the representatives of a militarist imperialism advancing on Russia. The reason I know that was why they stood against the Germans is that when the Allies landed at Archangel and Vladivostok, the Corps of the two revolutionary armies sent against the Allies was composed of Lettish soldiers, which race had already sacrificed their lives so bravely.

On the 10th of November the Bolsheviks controlled the City of Petrograd. Their headquarters was in Smolny Institute, and they were organizing the defence of the City against Kerensky from the South. They were cut off from the South. They were cut off from the country. The reactionary central committee, the telephone workers, and the rail workers, and the Bolsheviks in the Smolny Inwith the rest of Russia and the world. They didn't know how the army would do. Of course they knew the condition of mind of the army. They knew they had the masses of Russian people with them, but didn't know how the thing was actually working out, and couldn't get any information.

In the Duma—on the Nevsky Prospect the Duma was forming what they called Committee for the Salvation of Country and Revolution. It was composed of the anti-Bolshevik forces and included the compromising socialist party. This Committee for Salvation was in communication with Kerensky and with the rest of Russia and was trying to rouse it against the Bolsheviks. I was in the Duma that afternoon. I left the Smolny about noon. There one man was doing the work of ten, and people were falling down from fatigue, sleeping three or four hours, getting up again and working, and everyone was gloomy and depressed. When I got to the Duma everybody was feeling fine; they thought the Bolsheviks would only last about three hours. We sat there for a while and suddenly I looked out the window down the Nevsky Prospect, and saw coming up a double file of soldiers on bicycles, and I said to myself, "Here is the army, the loyal regiments coming in to crush the Bolsheviks," and I went down. All the town had come out. The soldiers stopped and lined up for a moment's rest in front of the Duma, and after a while people began to ask questions, "What are you?" "Oh, we are the Lettish sharp-shooters." "Where do you come from?" "We come from the front." "What are you going to do here, capture the Smolny Institute and kick out the Bolsheviks?" One Lett said, "Hell, no, we are here to support the Soviet; you go back to the Duma if you want to."

Mr. STEVENSON. An extremely interesting bit of propaganda, and one which has been used by all of the Bolshevik newspapers, is a letter addressed to President Wilson from the Russian Soviet Government, and signed by the "People's Commissary of Foreign Affairs, Tchichtherin," which was delivered through the Norwegian Embassy to President Wilson October 24, 1918.

Senator NELSON. Is it a long letter?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is a very long thing, but it is a matter of great interest. It is an extremely well-written document, and extremely insidious, and for that reason it has been used by the Bolsheviks in this country. It was designed, when sent, to be used as propaganda, and it is interesting that the first English publication of it was in the Nation, which is owned and edited by Oswald Garrison Villard. It was not given out by the Government of the United States. I do not know whether you would like to have that go into the record or not.

Maj. HUMES. It is a matter which I think should go into the record. It gives their view of our form of government, and outlines what they concede to be their plan of government.

Senator OVERMAN. Contrasting theirs with ours?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Put it in the record.

(The letter referred to is printed in the record as follows:)

To the President of the United States of North America, Mr. Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. PRESIDENT: In your message of January 8th to the Congress of the United States of North America, in the sixth point, you spoke of your profound sympathy for Russia, which was then conducting, single handed, negotiations with the mighty German imperialism. Your program, you declared demands the evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her political development and national policy, and assure her a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. And you added that "the treatment accorded to her by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good-will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy."

The desperate struggle which we were waging at Brest-Litovsk against German imperialism apparently only intensified your sympathy for Soviet Russia for you sent greetings to the Congress of the Soviets, which under the threat of a German offensive ratified the Brest peace of violence—greetings and assurances that Soviet Russia might count upon American help.

Six months have passed since then, and the Russian people have had sufficient time to get actual tests of your Government's and your Allies' comprehension of their comprehension of the needs of the Russian people, of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy. This attitude of your Government and of your Allies is shown first of all in the conspiracy which was organized on Russian territory with the financial assistance of your French Allies and with the diplomatic co-operation of your Government as well—the conspiracy of the Czechs and Slovaks to whom your Government is furnishing every kind of assistance.

For some time attempts had been made to create a pretext for a war between Russia and the United States of North America by spreading false stories to the effect that German war prisoners had seized the Siberian railway. Your own officers and after them Colonel Robbins, the head of your Red Cross Mission, had been convinced that these allegations were absolutely false. The Czecho-Slovak conspiracy was organized under the slogan that unless the misled unfortunate people be protected, they would be surrendered to Germany and Austria; but you may find out, among other sources, from the letter of Captain Sadoul, of the French Military Mission, how unfounded the charge is. The Czecho-Slovaks would have left Russia in the beginning of the year, had the French Government provided ships for them. For several months we have waited in vain that your Allies should provide the opportunity for the Czecho-Slovaks to leave. Evidently these Governments have very much preferred the presence of the Czecho-Slovaks in Russia—the results show what object—to their departure for France and their participation in the fighting on the French frontier. The best proof of the real object of the Czecho-Slovak rebellion is the fact that although in control of the Siberian railway, the Czecho-Slovaks have not taken advantage of this to leave Russia but by the order of the Entente Governments, whose directions they follow, have remained in Russia to become the mainstay of the Russian counter-revolution. Their counter-revolutionary mutiny which made impossible the transportation of grain and petroleum on the Volga, which cut off the Russian workers and peasants from the Siberian stores of grain and other materials and condemned them to starvation—this was the first experience of the workers and peasants of Russia with your Government and with your Allies after your promises of the beginning of the year. And then came another experience: an attack on North Russia by Allied troops, including American troops, their invasion of Russian territory without any cause and without a declaration of war, the occupation of Russian cities and villages, execution of Soviet officials and other acts of violence against the peaceful population of Russia.

You have promised, Mr. President, to co-operate with Russia in order to obtain for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her political development and her national progress. Actually this co-operation took the form of an attempt of the Czecho-Slovak troops and later, in Archangel, Murmansk and the Far East, of your own and your Allies' troops, to force the Russian people to submit to the rule of the oppressing and exploiting classes, whose dominion was overthrown by the workers and peasants of Russia in October, 1917. The revival of the Russian counter-revolution which has already become a corpse, attempts to restore its force its bloody domination over the Russian people—such was the experience of the Russian people, instead of co-operation for the unembarrassed expression of their will which you promised them, Mr. President, in your declarations.

You have also, Mr. President, promised to the Russian people to assist them in their struggle for independence. Actually this is what has occurred: while the Russian people were fighting on the Southern front against the counter-revolution, which has betrayed them to German imperialism and was threatening their independence, while they were using all their energy to organize the defense of their territory against Germany at their Western frontiers, the were forced to move their troops to the East to oppose the Czecho Slovaks who were bringing them slavery and oppression, and to the North—against your allies and your own troops which had invaded their territory, and against the counter-revolutions organized by these troops.

Mr. President, the acid test of the relations between the United States and Russia gave quite different results from those that might have been expected from your message to the Congress. But we have reason not to be altogether dissatisfied with even these results, since the outrages of the counter-revolution in the East and North have shown the workers and peasants of Russia the aims of the Russian counter-revolution, and of its foreign supporters, thereby creating among the Russian people an iron will to defend their liberty and the conquests of the revolution to defend the land that it has given to the peasants and the factories that it has given to the workers. The fall of Kazan, Ymbyrsk, Syzran, and Samara should make it clear to you, Mr. President, what were the consequence for us of the actions which followed your promises of January 8th. Our trials helped to create a strongly united and disciplined Red Army, which is daily growing stronger and more powerful and which is learning to defend the revolution. The attitude toward us, which was actually displayed by your Government and by your Allies could not destroy us; on the contrary, we are now stronger than we were a few months ago, and your present proposal of international negotiations for a general peace finds us alive and strong and in a position to give in the name of Russia our consent to join the negotiations. In your note to Germany you demand the evacuation of occupied territories as a condition which must precede the armistice during which peace negotiations shall begin. We are ready, Mr. President, to conclude an armistice on these conditions, and we ask you to notify us when you, Mr. President, and your Allies intend to remove troops from Murmansk, Archangel and Siberia. You refuse to conclude an armistice, unless Germany will stop the outrages, pillaging, etc., during the evacuation of occupied territories. We allow ourselves therefore to draw the conclusion that you and your allies will order the Czecho-Slovaks to return the part of our gold reserve fund which they seized in Kazan, that you will forbid them to continue as heretofore their acts of pillaging and outrage against the workers and peasants during their forced departure (for we will encourage their speedy departure, without waiting for your order).

With regard to other peace terms, namely, that the Governments which would conclude peace must express the will of their people, you are aware that our Government fully satisfies this condition, our Government expresses the will of the Councils of Workmen's, Peasants' and Red Army Deputies, representing at least eighty per cent of the Russian people. This cannot, Mr. President, be said about your Government. But for the sake of humanity and peace we do not demand as a prerequisite of general peace negotiations that all nations participating in the negotiations shall be represented by Councils of People's Commissaries elected at a Congress of Councils of Workmen's, Peasants' and Soldiers' Deputies. We know that this form of Government will soon be the general form, and that precisely a general peace, when nations will no more be threatened with defeat, will leave them free to put an end to the system and the clique that forced upon mankind this universal slaughter, and which will, in spite of themselves, surely lead the tortured peoples to create Soviet Governments, which give exact expression to their will.

Agreeing to participate at present in negotiations with even such Governments as do not yet express the will of the people, we would like on our part to find out from you, Mr. President, in detail what is your conception of the League of Nations, which you propose as the crowning work of peace. You demand the independence of Poland, Serbia, Belgium and freedom for the peoples of Austria-Hungary. You probably mean by this that the masses of the people must everywhere first become the masters of their own fate in order to unite afterwards in a league of free nations. But strangely enough, we do not find among your demands the liberation of Ireland, Egypt, or India, nor even the liberation of the Philippines, and we would be very sorry to learn that these people should be denied the opportunity to participate together with us, through their freely elected representatives, in the organization of the League of Nations.

We would also, Mr. President, very much like to know, before the negotiations with regard to the formation of a League of Nations have begun, what is your conception of the solution of many economic questions which are essential for the cause of future peace. You do not mention the war expenditures—this unbearable burden, which the masses would have to carry, unless the League of Nations should renounce payments on the loans to the capitalists of all countries. You know as well as we, Mr. President, that this war is the outcome of the policies of all capitalistic nations, that the governments of all countries were continually piling up armaments, that the ruling groups of all countries pursued a policy of annexations, and that it would, therefore, be extremely unjust if the masses, having paid for these policies with millions of lives and with economic ruin, should yet pay to those who are really responsible for the war a tribute for their policies which resulted in all these countries' miseries.

We propose therefore, Mr. President, the annulment of the war loans as the basis of the League of Nations. As to the restoration of the countries which were laid waste by the war, we believe it is only just that all nations should aid for this purpose, the unfortunate Belgium, Poland, and Servia, and how poor and ruined Russia seems to be, she is ready on her part to do everything she can to help these victims of the war, and she expects that American capitalism which has not at all suffered from this war and has even made many billions of profits out of it, will do its part to help these peoples.

But the League of Nations should not only liquidate the present war, but make impossible any wars in the future. You must be aware, Mr. President, that the capitalists of your country are planning to apply in the future the same policies of encroachment and of super profits in China and in Siberia, and fearing competition from Japanese capitalists, they are preparing a military force to overcome the resistance which they may meet from Japan. You are doubt aware of similar plans of the capitalists ruling circles of other countries with regard to other territories and other peoples. Knowing this, you will have to agree with us that the factories, mines and banks must not be left in the hands of private persons, who have always made use of the vast means of production created by the masses of the people to export products and capital to foreign countries in order to reap super profits in return for the benefits forced on them, their struggle for spoils resulting in imperialistic wars. We propose therefore, Mr. President, that the League of Nations be based on the expropriation of the capitalists of all countries. In your country, Mr. President, the banks and the industries are in the hands of such a small group of capitalists that, as your personal friend, Colonel Robbins, assured us, the arrest of twenty heads of capitalistic cliques and the transfer of the control, which is characteristic capitalistic methods they have come to possess, into the hands of the masses of the people is all that would be required to destroy the principal source of new wars.

If you will agree to this, Mr. President—if the source of future wars thus be destroyed, then there can be no doubt that it would be easy to remove all economic barriers and that all peoples, controlling their means of production, will be vitally interested in exchanging the things they do not need for the things they need. It will then be a question of an exchange of products between nations, each of which produces what it can best produce, and the League of Nations will be a league of mutual aid of the toiling masses. It will then be easy to reduce the armed forces to the limit necessary for the maintenance of internal safety.

We know very well that the selfish capitalist class will attempt to create this internal menace, just as the Russian landlords and capitalists are attempting with the aid of American, English, and French armed forces to take the factories from the workers and the land from the peasants. But the American workers, inspired by your idea of a League of Nations, will crush the resistance of the American capitalists as we have crushed the resistance of the Russian capitalists, then neither the German nor any other capitalist will be a serious menace to the victorious working class, and it will then suffice, if every member of the commonwealth, working six hours in the factory, spends two hours daily for several months in learning the use of arms, so that the whole people will know how to overcome the internal menace.

And so, Mr. President, though we have had experience with your proposals we nevertheless accept as a basis your proposals about peace and about the League of Nations. We have tried to develop them in order to avoid proposals which would contradict your promises, as was the case with your promise of assistance to Russia. We have tried to formulate with precision your proposals on the League of Nations in order that the League of Nations should not turn out to be a league of capitalists against the nations. Should you agree with us, we have no objection to an "open discussion of your proposals."

rms," as your first point of your peace program demands. If you will accept our proposals as a basis, we will easily agree on the details.

But there is another possibility. We have had dealings with the President of the Archangel attack and the Siberian invasion and we have also had dealings with the President of the League of Nations Peace Program. Is not the worst of these—the real President actually directing the policies of the American capitalist government? Is not the American Government rather a Government of the American corporations, of the American industrial, commercial and railroad trusts, of the American banks—in short, a Government of the American capitalists? And is it not possible that the proposals of this Government about the creation of a League of Nations will result in new chains for the peoples, the organization of an International trust for the exploitation of the workers and the suppression of weak nations? In this latter case, Mr. President, you will not be in a position to reply to our questions, and we will say to the workers of all countries: Beware! Millions of your brothers, thrown at each others throats by the bourgeoisie of all countries are still perishing on the battlefields, and the capitalists leaders are already trying to come to an understanding for the purpose of suppressing with united forces those that remain alive, when they call to account the criminals who caused the war!

However, Mr. President, since we do not at all desire to wage war against the United States, even though your Government has not yet been replaced by a Council of People's Commissaries and your post is not yet taken by Eugene Debs, whom you have imprisoned; since we do not at all desire to wage war against England, even though the cabinet of Mr. Lloyd-George has not yet been replaced by a Council of People's Commissaries with MacLean at its head; since we have no desire to wage war against France, even though the capitalist Government of Clemenceau has not yet been replaced by a workmen's government of Merhelm, just as we have concluded peace with the imperialist government of Germany, with Emperor Wilhelm at its head, whom you, Mr. President, hold in no greater esteem than we, the Workmen's and Peasant's Revolutionary Government hold you, we finally propose to you, Mr. President, that you take up with your Allies the following questions and give us precise and business-like replies: Do the governments of the United States, England and France intend to cease demanding the blood of the Russian people and lives of Russian citizens, if the Russian people will agree to pay them a ransom, such as a man who has been suddenly attacked pays to the one who attacked him? If so, just what tribute do the governments of the United States, England and France demand of the Russian people? Do they demand concessions, that the railways, mines, gold deposits, etc., shall be handed over to them on certain conditions, or do they demand territorial concessions, some part of Siberia or Caucasia, or perhaps the Murmansk coast?

We expect from you, Mr. President, that you will definitely state what you and your Allies demand, and also whether the allowance between your government and the governments of the other entente powers is in the nature of a combination which could be compared with a corporation for drawing dividends from Russia, or does your government and the other governments of the entente powers have each separate and special demands, and what are they? Particularly are we interested to know the demands of your French Allies with regard to the three billions of rubles which the Paris bankers loaned to the Government of the Czar—the oppressor of Russia and the enemy of his own people? And you, Mr. President, as well as your French Allies surely know that even if you and your allies should succeed in enslaving and covering with blood the whole territory of Russia—which will not be allowed by our heroic revolutionary Red Army—that even in that case the Russian people, worn out by the war and not having sufficient time to take advantage of the benefits of the Soviet rule to elevate their national economy, will be unable to pay to the French bankers the full tribute for the billions that were used by the Government of the Czar for purposes injurious to the people. Do your French allies demand that a part of this tribute be paid in installments, and if so, what part, and do they anticipate that their claims will result in similar claims by other creditors of the infamous Government of the Czar which has been overthrown by the Russian people? We can hardly think that your Government and your allies are without a ready answer, when your and their troops are trying to advance on our territory with the evident object of seizing and enslaving our country.

The Russian people through the People's Red Army, are guarding their territory and are bravely fighting against your invasion and against the attack of your Allies. But your Government and the Governments of the other powers of the Entente undoubtedly have well prepared plans, for the sake of which are shedding the blood of your soldiers. We expect that you will state your demands very clearly and definitely. Should we, however, be disappointed should you fail to reply to our quite definite and precise questions, we will draw the only possible conclusion—that we are justified in the assumption that your Government and the Governments of your Allies desire to get from the Russian people a tribute both in money and in natural resources of Russia and territorial concessions as well. We will tell this to the Russian people as well as to the toiling masses of other countries, and the absence of a reply from you will serve for us as a silent reply. The Russian people will understand that the demands of your Government and of the Governments of your Allies are so severe and vast that you do not even want to communicate them to the Russian Government.

PEOPLE'S COMMISSARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS
TCHICHERIN.

Mr. STEVENSON. The principal publications of the Bolsheviki in New York City are the Novy Mir—

Senator NELSON. In what language is that?

Mr. STEVENSON. Russian. The Workman and Peasant.

Senator OVERMAN. What does "Novy Mir" mean?

Mr. STEVENSON. The New Era or New Life. These are the accredited official organs in this country of the Bolsheviki government.

The Bolsheviki have organized in this country soviets. Each industrial center in the United States now has its soviet.

Senator NELSON. Is that so?

Mr. STEVENSON. And, of course, the plan of the propagandists is to extend their influence until they can take on the functions of government.

Senator NELSON. What is their system of organization in each case?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is merely the election of delegates to a central committee. That is what the soviet is.

Senator NELSON. Have they not local organizations? Have they not a local government?

Mr. STEVENSON. The central committee is the governing committee; it acts as the government.

Senator NELSON. Consisting of delegates from these various points?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. The idea, then, is to form a government within this Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator OVERMAN. And to overthrow this Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely. I think that the record should contain a copy of the constitution of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic.

Senator OVERMAN. Will you give us the names of some of the heads of this soviet government?

Mr. STEVENSON. In this country?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Those are largely foreigners. They are largely Russians over here now.

Senator NELSON. That constitution ought to go in, Mr. Chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. Let me see that.

Mr. STEVENSON (handing paper to the chairman). You will find some extraordinarily interesting matter there. The disfranchisement of all persons who employ anybody or pay anyone any wages; anyone who does that can not vote in the soviet government. You will find some very interesting political ideas there.

Senator NELSON. I think that would be a good thing to go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; this will go in.

(The constitution referred to is printed in the record, as follows:)

[Outside of front cover.]

CONSTITUTION OF THE RUSSIAN SOCIALIST FEDERATED SOVIET REPUBLIC.

Since intelligent judgment on the complex problems of Russia requires some knowledge of the purpose and methods of the Soviet Government (which is one of those rare things—a new event in history), we believe that our readers will be glad to have this opportunity to study critically an English translation (taken from a recent issue of the New York 'Tribune') of the constitution of the Soviets. It has been generally recognized in America that so much progress has been made in Russia in working out this new conception of the state and its government. Even if the present Soviet Government should fall, or should learn by experience to modify some of its methods, the ideas embodied in this document are from henceforth a mighty force to be reckoned with in the world; and the document itself may well come to rank with the great declarations of history. 1918.

[Inside of front cover.]

Read the following books:

The Soviets at Work, by Nicolai Lenin.

Political Parties in Russia, Nicolai Lenin.

Our Revolution, Leon Trotzky.

On Behalf of Russia, Arthur Ransom.

The Soul of the Russian Revolution, by M. Olgin.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE RUSSIAN SOCIALIST FEDERATED SOVIET REPUBLIC.

THE SOVIET CONSTITUTION AND DECLARATION OF RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF LABORING HUMANITY.

[Approved by the Commission of the Central Committee for Drafting the Constitution of the Soviets.]

We, the laboring people of Russia, workmen, peasants, cossacks, soldiers and sailors, united in the councils of the Workmen's, Soldiers', Peasants' and Cossacks' delegates, declare in the persons of our plenipotentiary representatives, who have assembled at the Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets, the following rights and duties of the working and despoiled people:

The economic subjection of the laboring classes by the possessors of the means and instruments of production, of the soil, machines, factories, railways, and raw materials—those basic sources of life—appears as the cause of all sorts of political oppression, economic spoliation, intellectual and moral enslavement of the laboring masses.

The economic liberation of the working classes from the yoke of capitalism represents, therefore, the greatest task of our time, and must be accomplished at all costs.

The liberation of the working classes must and can be the work of the classes themselves, who must unite for that purpose in the Soviets of the Workers, Soldiers', Peasants', and Cossacks' delegates.

In order to put an end to every ill that oppresses humanity and in order to secure to labor all the rights belonging to it, we recognize that it is necessary to destroy the existing social structure, which rests upon private property of the soil and the means of production, in the spoliation and oppression of the laboring masses, and to substitute for it a Socialist structure. Then the whole earth, its surface and its depths, and all the means and instruments of production, created by the toil of the laboring classes, will belong by right of common property to the whole people, who are united in a fraternal association of laborers.

Only by giving society a Socialist structure can the division of it into hostile classes be destroyed, only so can we put an end to the spoliation and oppression of men by men, of class by class; and all men—placed upon an equality of rights and duties—will contribute to the welfare of society according to their strength and capacities, and will receive from society according to their requirements.

The complete liberation of the laboring classes from spoliation and oppression appears as a problem, not locally or nationally limited, but as a world problem and it can be carried out to its end only through the united exertions of workingmen of all lands. Therefore, the sacred duty rests upon the working class of every country to come to the assistance of the workingmen of other countries who have risen against the capitalistic structure of society.

A Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

The working class of Russia, true to the legacy of the Internationale, overthrew their bourgeoisie in October, 1917, and, with the help of the poorest peasantry, seized the powers of government. In establishing a dictatorship of the proletariat and the poorest peasantry, the working class resolved to wrest capital from the hands of the bourgeoisie, to unite all the means of production in the hands of the Socialist state and thus to increase as rapidly as possible the mass of productive forces.

The first steps in that direction were:

Abolition of property in land, declaration of the entire soil to be national property, and the distribution of it to the workmen without purchase money upon the principle of equality in utilizing it.

Declaration as national property of all forests, treasures of the earth and waters of general public utility, and all the belongings, whether animals or things, of the model farms and agricultural undertakings.

Introduction of a law for the control of workmen and for the nationalization of a number of branches of industry.

Nationalization of the banks, which heretofore were one of the mightiest instruments for the spoliation of society by capital.

Repudiation of the loans which were contracted by the czar's government upon the account of the Russian people.

Arming of the laborers and peasants and disarming of the propertied classes.

Besides all this, the introduction of a universal obligation to work, for the purpose of eliminating the parasitic strata of society, is planned.

As soon as production shall have been consolidated in the hands of the working masses, united in a gigantic association, in which the development of every single individual will appear as the condition for the development of all men; as soon as the old bourgeois state with its classes and class hatreds is definitely superseded by a firmly established Socialist society which rests upon universal labor, upon the application and distribution of all productive forces according to plan, and upon the solidarity of all its members, then, along with the disappearance of class differences, will disappear also the necessity for the dictatorship of the working classes and for state power as the instrument of class domination.

These are the immediate internal problems of the Soviet republic.

The International Policies of the Soviet Republic.

In its relation to other nations the Soviet republic stands upon the principles of the first Internationale, which recognized truth, justice and morality as the foundation of its relations to all humanity, independent of race, religion or nationality.

The Socialist Soviet republic recognizes that wherever one member of the family of humanity is oppressed all humanity is oppressed, and for that reason it proclaims and defends to the utmost the right of all nations to self-determination and thereby to the free choice of their destiny.

It accords that right to all nations without exception, even to the hundreds of millions of laborers in Asia, Africa, in all colonies and the small countries who, down to the present day, have been oppressed and despoiled without pity by the ruling classes, by the so-called civilized nations.

The Soviet republic has transformed into deeds the principles proclaimed before its existence. The right of Poland to self-determination having been recognized in the first days of the March revolution, after the overturn in October the Soviet republic proclaimed the full independence of Finland and the right of the Ukraine, of Armenia, of all the people populating the territory of the former Russian empire, to their full self-determination.

In its efforts to create a league—free and voluntary, and for that reason all the more complete and secure—of the working classes of all the peoples of Russia, the Soviet republic declared itself a federal republic and offered to the laborers and peasants of every nation the opportunity to enter as members with equal rights into the fraternal family of the Republic of Soviets (through action taken) independently in the plenipotentiary sessions of their Soviets, to any extent and in whatever form they might wish.

The Soviet Republic's Basis of Peace.

The Soviet republic has declared war upon war, not only in words, but also in deeds; and in doing so it formally, and in the name of the working masses of Russia, announced its complete renunciation of all efforts at conquest and annexation, as well as all thought of oppressing small nations. At the same time, the Soviet republic, to prove the sincerity of the purposes, broke openly with the policy of secret diplomacy and secret treaties, and it proposed to all belligerent nations to conclude a general democratic peace without annexations or indemnities, upon the basis of the free self-determination of peoples. That standpoint is still firmly adhered to by the Soviet republic.

Compelled by the policy of violence practised by the Imperialisms of all the world, the Soviet republic is marshalling its forces for resistance against the growing demands of the robber packs of international capital, and it looks to the inevitable rebellion of the working classes for the solution of the question of how the nations can live peacefully together. The international Socialist rebellion alone, in which the laboring people of each state overthrow their own imperialists, puts an end to war once for all, and creates the conditions for the full realization of the solidarity of the working people of the entire world.

The Rights and Duties of the Workers.

Taking its stand upon the principles of the Internationale, the Soviet republic recognizes that there can be no rights without duties, and no duties without rights, and, therefore proclaims at the same time, with the rights of the working classes in a rejuvenated society, the following outline of their duties:

To fight everywhere and without sparing their strength for the complete power of the working classes, and to stamp out all attempts to restore the dominion of the despoilers and oppressors.

To assist with all their strength in overcoming the depression caused by the war and the opposition of the bourgeoisie, and to cooperate in bringing about as speedy a recovery as possible of production in all branches of economy.

To subordinate their personal and group interests to the interests of all the working people of Russia and the whole world.

To defend the republic of the Soviets, the only Socialist bulwark in the capitalist world, from the attacks of international imperialism without sparing their own strength and even their own lives.

To keep in mind always and everywhere the sacred duty of liberating labor from the domination of capital, and to strive for the establishment of a world-embracing fraternal league of working people.

In proclaiming these rights and duties the Russian Socialist Republic of the Soviets calls upon the working classes of the entire world to accomplish their task to the very end, and in the faith that the Socialist ideal will soon be achieved to write upon their flags the old battle cry of the working people.

Proletarians of all lands unite!

Long live the Socialist world revolution!

II.

GENERAL PROVISION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE RUSSIAN SOCIALIST FEDERAL REPUBLIC.

The fundamental problem of the constitution of the Russian Socialist Federal republic involves, in view of the present transition period, the establishment of a dictatorship of the urban and rural proletariat and the poorest peasantry, the power of the pan-Russian Soviet authority, the crushing of the bourgeoisie, the abolition of the spoliation of men by men and the introduction of Socialism in which there will be neither a division into classes nor a state authority.

The Russian republic is the free Socialist society of all the working people of Russia, united in the urban and rural Soviets.

The Soviets of those regions which differentiate themselves by a special mode of existence and national character will be united into autonomous regional associations ruled by the sessions of the Soviets of those regions and their executive organs.

The Soviet associations of the regions participate in the Russian Socialist republic upon the basis of federation, at the head of which stands the pan-Russian session of the Soviets and, in periods between the sessions, the pan-Russian central executive committee.

III.

CONCERNING THE RUSSIAN SOVIETS.

The right to vote and to be elected to the Soviets is enjoyed by the following citizens of the Russian Socialist Soviet republic of both sexes who shall have completed their eighteenth year by the day of election:

All who have acquired the means of living through labor that is productive and useful to society and are members of the trades associations, namely:

(a) Laborers and employees of classes who are employed in industry, trade and agriculture.

(b) Peasants and Cossack agricultural laborers who hire no labor.

(c) Employees and laborers in the offices of the Soviet government.

(d) Soldiers of the army and navy of the Soviets.

(e) Citizens of the two previous categories who have to any degree lost their capacity to work.

The following persons enjoy neither the right to vote nor to be voted for even though they belong to one of the categories enumerated above, namely:

Persons who employ hired labor in order to obtain from it an increase of profits;

Persons who have an income without doing any work, such as interest from capital, receipts from property, and so on.

Private merchants, trade and commercial agents;

Employees of communities for religious worship;

Employees and agents of the former police, the gendarmerie corps and the Ochrana; also members of the dynasty that formerly ruled Russia;

Persons who have in legal form been declared demented or mentally defective and also deaf and dumb persons;

Persons who have been punished for selfish or dishonorable misdemeanors.

IV-VII.

PRINCIPLES FOR THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE RUSSIAN STATE.

The government is based upon the smallest settlements (villages and hamlets), the inhabitants of which may elect one representative to each 25 persons.

The rural Soviets are under the authority of the Soviets of the Wolosts (districts), and these latter under the Soviets of the Ujesd (larger regions).

The urban and Ujesd Soviets elect delegates to sessions of the government or Oblast Soviets. Each of these bodies chooses independently its own executive committee.

VIII.

CONCERNING THE PAN-RUSSIAN CONGRESS OF THE SOVIETS.

The Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets consists of representatives of the urban Soviets (one delegate for each 25,000 voters) and representatives of the government congresses (one delegate for each 125,000 voters).

The Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets will be called together by the Pan-Russian central executive committee at least twice a year.

The extraordinary Pan-Russian Congress will be called together by the Pan-Russian central executive committee upon its own initiative or upon the demand of the Soviets of districts embracing at least one-third of the entire population of the republic.

The Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets elects the central executive committee of not more than 200 members.

The Pan-Russian executive committee is responsible to the Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets.

The Pan-Russian Congress of Soviets is the highest power in the republic. In the periods between its sessions that power is represented by the Pan-Russian central executive committee.

Eleven Administrative Departments.

It is further provided that the central executive committee shall be divided into 11 colleges for administrative functions. There are:

- Foreign policies.
- Defense of the country (army and navy).
- Social order and security (militia), census of the people, registration of societies and associations, fire department, insurance, organization of the Soviets.
- Justice.
- Public economy (with subsections for agriculture, industry and trade, finances, railways, food supply, state property and construction).
- Labor and social welfare.
- Education and enlightenment of the people.
- Public health.
- Post, telegraph and telephone.
- Federal and national affairs.
- Control and auditing.

Mr. STEVENSON. One could continue to give illustrations of the speeches made, and illustrations of the character of the propaganda; but I hardly think it will be necessary to cumber the record with repetition.

Senator NELSON. So far, with the exception of a few cases, they are all confined to foreigners, are they not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Except that the Socialists approve of that form of government in a great many instances.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. And express sympathy for it in their publications, and are cooperating with the Bolsheviki. A casual glance at some of the Socialist papers will satisfy anyone that that is the case.

Senator NELSON. There is a community of interest?

Mr. STEVENSON. Distinctly. I think that the interesting point about the Bolsheviki, which might be brought out, is that prior to their propaganda we had these different branches of radical thought, having somewhat conflicting principles so that they could not cooperate.

Senator NELSON. Do you mean by that that instead of having all these organizations of various kinds that we have had in this country, the Bolsheviki in Russia have succeeded in concentrating all the lye, one might say, into one system?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely, and for this reason, that all of the radical people believe that everyone should belong to the proletariat.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Bolsheviki say "Everything should belong to the proletariat; the proletariat should take control now, and will work out our theory afterwards." That makes a common platform for all of these radical groups to stand on, because the anarchist feels that if the proletariat gets control he can effect his theory. The same is true of the various other groups of radical thinkers.

Senator NELSON. Then they have really rendered a service to the various classes of reformers and progressives that we have here in this country, have they not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Apparently.

Senator NELSON. In concentrating their doctrines into one formula?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Stevenson, have you seen any evidence of propaganda of any kind since the signing of the armistice, especially in the foreign-language newspapers and German newspapers?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that there are evidences of post-armistice propaganda, designed to create a sentiment which will be favorable to Germany, and which will lead to the adoption of less harsh terms for her. What appears to me to be a typical example of that is an editorial which was printed in the evening edition of the New York Staats-Zeitung, December 7, 1918, which I would like to read in the record.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The title of the editorial is "Between the Moselle and the Rhine":

Hundreds of thousands of our boys are standing now over there in the home-land, which for 19 months was enemy country and is that still so, which, as President Wilson promised, will soon be a land (country) of peace again, rich (plentiful) in diligent work, rich in true and good people and rich in songs, ringing from the wine-covered hills, from river and field, through the high trees of green golden glittering woods and from the beloved old homes imbedded in light and fragrance; where the people looks with clear eyes into the far distance into the wealthy, blessed land; where the ridges, (summits and peaks of the Alps (mountains) do not strive powerfully skywards, but are modestly and solidly placed upon the earth, surrounded by a fragrance as warm and heavy as lilac in May, as roses in June and as the sweet blossoming wine.

Our boys passed over these mountains and found out that people are living behind them (mountains) too; that the green crop-fields there are also covered by a sky, bright in sunshine, clouded or sultry.

That the man there, also loves his neighbor, obeys the law and knows a secret who weighs the most secret thoughts.

And, as the blacksmith forges iron after iron, as the peasant, with a scythe pipe between his defective teeth, walks heavily over the brown field, behind a plowing team holding the handle with a strong arm, as the children run about on the streets, laughing and singing, and as a merry laughter and clinking of glasses and plates is audible from a saloon (bar)—as the whole happy life of this blessed region presents a picture of peace and contentment, he wondered whether his men (Germany) at home, long ago, had not been his cheeks and anger for the doubtful sources, branded a war murderers of children and children.

And whether he (the American) in his heart to combat (deny) again and to tell the truth about it.

Reports from abroad have been in a more un-mannered ways. Who is su surely no one, who knows this country (Germany) and its people. Because the German does not carry on war in a peasant's garb and a peasant's hat. The scandalous manners of the Franc-tireur is not in his blood, which is also the reason why he, as a soldier, combats it (the Franc-tireur doings) with such barbarian harshness.

"Many of them want to come over to us after peace is signed," writes a correspondent who is with our boys. It is possible but not very probable, because the experience of their kinsmen over here, through four long years, full of grief and sorrow, were too bitter as to entice others so quickly. But still, it would be good if they would come, as every exchange and every becoming acquainted is good.

It is perhaps our own fault that those over there (Germans) did not know this country, that they were criminally misled, and had challenged to battle this huge, inexhaustible power awakened suddenly from a deep, bloody, dream, they will realize now the great truth, when it is too late, that in this time of selfishness and greed for profit, there is still a people on this earth which is ready to fight for higher things than money and land possessions, sacrificing thousands of their sons in order that the children of the "enemy" may live happy in freedom and peace.

And, in the same way, the majority of the people here did not know land and country against which it carried on war in hate and contempt, for 19 months.

Our boys are now on their way to discover the real Germany as it lives in our heart, in the heart of those who were born on Germany's soil. May they return, enlightened and make the truth known. Because war and hate grow only where two do not know anything or do not want to know anything of each other. But peace reigns where one knows the other and respects him as a human being.

I consider that as typical of a post-armistice propaganda, of which there have been a number of instances.

Maj. HUMES. That was published in the Staats-Zeitung?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. As a further evidence of the activity and interest of that paper, can you outline the method by which it was financed, and the sources which displayed interest in the publication of the paper after the war broke out, after the European war started? I do not care about the ancient history of it.

Mr. STEVENSON. The New York Staats-Zeitung is a daily publication printed in New York City, and is the leading German-language newspaper in the United States.

The owner of the paper was Mr. Herman Ridder, who died some time in, I think, the spring of 1915.

At the time of his death his estate was very much involved, and the Staats-Zeitung was indebted in a sum of money amounting to over $300,000.

The entire stock of the newspaper was owned by Mr. Ridder, and apparently has been pledged as collateral to various private loans.

At the request of the Military Intelligence, the Attorney General of the State of New York, Mr. Merton E. Lewis, began an examination of the financing and the character of the Staats-Zeitung, and appointed Nathaniel Elsborg as special deputy to carry on the examination.

The entire record of that examination is here, and it does not disclose that any proof was submitted that any German money was paid into the Staats-Zeitung, with the exception of $15,000, which was advanced by Dr. Dernburg, through Mr. Adolph Pavenstedt, of Amsinck & Co.

A very interesting thing appeared, however, in the testimony of Mr. George von Skal, who was in the employ of Capt. von Papen at the time, and who had formerly been the managing editor of the Staats-Zeitung. He stated that he had seen cablegrams—I will read this from the record in question and answer form:

Q. Did you ever hear that von Papen or any one else connected with the German authorities in this country had been besought to make a contribution or otherwise to finance it—the Staats-Zeitung?—A. Yes.

This is the testimony of George von Skal.

Q. When was that?—A. Well, I don't know who it was; I only saw the telegram that went to Berlin.

Q. Now, you saw a telegram that went to Berlin; who signed that telegram?—A. I don't know; I only saw a copy in von Papen's files.

Q. Will you tell us what that telegram said?—A. The telegram said that the Staats-Zeitung was about to fail, or something like that; that they had—I don't know whether the name of the creditor was mentioned, I don't think so, because I would remember it—that they had to have near half a million dollars immediately if it should not fall into the hands of people who would use it against Germany, I think, something like that.

Q. Now that was about when, if you remember?—A. It must have been December, 1914, or January, 1915. I can place the limits in this way: It was after the German fair that we held in the 71st Regiment Armory and which closed in the first week of December, if I remember; and it was before a dinner which took place in the German club at the end of January when Mr. Pavenstadt invited me and talked about the Staats-Zeitung, and when he said it had all been arranged.

Q. What had all been arranged?—A. The financial matters of the Staats-Zeitung.

Q. You mean at this dinner in which you saw Mr. Pavenstadt which was in January, 1915, he told you that the matter had been arranged?—A. Yes.

Q. You were present at that dinner?—A. Yes.

Q. That was held where, did you say?—A. In the German Club.

Q. In Fifty-ninth Street, here in New York?—A. In Fifty-ninth Street, yes.

Q. Now, to come back to this telegram or cable, you say you saw that in the files in von Papen's office.—A. I saw it in the files in von Papen's office, in fact, the papers away.

Q. You remember who signed that telegram?—A. I think that telegram—I won't say that, because I am not sure of it; I think it was Hatzfeld.

Q. He was the counsel of the German Embassy, was he, Prince Hatzfeld?—A. Yes.

Q. To whom was it addressed, if you remember?—A. Well, to the Foreign Office, I think.

Q. To the Foreign Office.—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see any answer received to that cable?—A. Yes, I saw an answer to that cable.

Q. The answer was received shortly after the sending of the cable?—A. Well, I don't know when it was received, I saw the papers in the files, filing them away.

Q. What did the answer contain?—A. The answer was that the Legation was authorized to pay the money if necessary.

Senator OVERMAN. What are you reading from now?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am reading now from the testimony taken before Nathaniel A. Elsborg, special deputy attorney general of the State of New York.

Senator NELSON. What was the name of the witness—von Skal?

Mr. STEVENSON. George von Skal.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, Mr. Stevenson, I want to ask you a question: You said you were going to come to it, but you have not yet, and I want to ask you how these people got their money to carry on the propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. I said that we had discovered money coming in this country from Russia.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Which was to be employed to carry on this propaganda—part of it.

There is reason to believe that a large amount of other money has come in that has escaped notice.

Senator NELSON. From other sources?

Mr. STEVENSON. Largely from Russia, I believe.

Other people who are interested in this sort of thing may contribute.

There is one thing certain, that a very vast amount of money is expended in the printing and publishing and distributing of all this mass of literature. You will notice that practically none of these things carry any advertising to speak of, so that they must be financed in some outside way.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you ever trace any bank where they had their banking business?

Mr. STEVENSON. We have only been studying propaganda as propaganda, and have not gone into the other phases of the question. What is proper for some other branch of the service, or of the Government.

Maj. HUMES. To go back to the Staats-Zeitung matter, was there not a voting trust created?

Mr. STEVENSON. A reorganization was effected by which the capital was increased through the issuing of 200,000 preferred shares. The underwriting was made by Chandler & Co.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean $200,000 or 200,000 shares?

Mr. STEVENSON. $200,000.

Senator NELSON. $200,000 of preferred stock?

Mr. STEVENSON. $200,000 of preferred stock, which was underwritten by Chandler & Co.

Maj. HUMES. Who were the people who were concerned in the voting trust?

Mr. STEVENSON. I forgot to describe that the common stock had been pledged for a very large amount of money. Money had to be raised to redeem that stock, and consequently a holding company, known as the New York Staats-Zeitung Holding Co., was organized. The shares of that stock were issued to the sons of Herman Ridder, who are now the editors and managers of the Staats-Zeitung, and bonds were issued to those who either held the stock or who advanced money to redeem the stock which had previously been pledged.

The holding company held the controlling interest in the Staats-Zeitung Publishing Co., the original company that published the newspaper.

The common stock of the holding company was then put into the hands of voting trustees, and the interesting feature there is that the voting trustees—the chief voting trustee was Adolph Pavenstedt, whom you know in connection with the Bolo matter.

The names of the other voting trustees were Julius Sternburg, Fritz Achelis, one of George Ehret's sons-in-law named Burghardt, and William J. Amend.

So that these voting trustees controlled the majority of the Staats-Zeitung and, consequently, could put in those directors that they wanted, and were practically in the position of owners of the paper.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any person or concern engaged in the brewing business that was largely interested in this transaction—financially interested?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. George Ehret.

Maj. HUMES. To what extent?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think that he put in $50,000. That is my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Were there any other brewers, or persons engaged in the brewing business, in the list of contributors?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that there were.

The estate of Jacob Schwartz, and George E. Ruppert; I believe those are the only ones that were connected with the brewing interests that participated in this refinancing.

Maj. HUMES. Just tell us the others who participated in the refinancing of the company.

Mr. STEVENSON (reading):

Achelis.

George Ehret.

E. Erbslch.

Henry H. Dyrsen.

David E. Freudenberger.

Henry Heide.

William Knauth.

Adolph Pavenstadt.

Adolph Kuttroff.

William H. Mulligan.

Albrecht Pagenstecher.

George E. Ruppert.

Estate of Jacob Schwartz.

Mrs. Anna Woerishoffer.

William J. Amend.

Maj. HUMES. You have outlined in a general way the activities of the radical groups in this country, and from your study of the cases advocated by the radical groups in this country that you have referred to and what they are contending for, and your knowledge of the soviet government in Russia and the activities in Russia, is it or is it not a fact that the elements that you have referred to in this country are the same elements that are now at war with and fighting in the field against American soldiers in Russia?

Mr. STEVENSON. They are the same element.

Senator NELSON. They are not exactly the same crowd, but they have the same gospel?

Mr. STEVENSON. They are even the same crowd, Senator, because John Reed is the accredited representative of that government.

Senator NELSON. In this country?

Mr. STEVENSON. In this country; and Albert Rhys Williams admits that he is a propagandist for that government in this country.

Senator NELSON. Is Reed the official representative here?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Has he knocked at the door of the State Department?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that he tried to. I am not sure. I know that among his effects, however, he had the official forms supplied by the Soviet government for Soviet marriages and divorces, and that sort of thing.

Maj. HUMES. What are the forms and the requirements for marriages and divorces under the Soviet government in Russia.

Mr. STEVENSON. Simply a statement before the proper commissary that they want to be married, or that they want to be divorced.

Senator OVERMAN. Do they have as many wives as they want?

Mr. STEVENSON. In rotation.

Maj. HUMES. Polygamy is recognized, is it?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know about polygamy. I have not gone into the study of their social order quite as fully as that.

Senator NELSON. That is, a man can marry and then get a divorce when he gets tired, and get another wife?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator NELSON. And keep up the operation?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether they teach free love?

Mr. STEVENSON. They do.

Maj. HUMES. Can a divorce be secured upon the application of one party to the marriage, or has it to be by agreement?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think by one party.

Maj. HUMES. By either party?

Mr. STEVENSON. By either party.

Maj. HUMES. They can renounce the marital bond at will?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know whether or not the element that is active in this country is advocating the same thing here in their public speeches, or their literature?

Mr. STEVENSON. In considerable of the literature some of the element has done so. I will not say that all have.

Maj. HUMES. The committee asked you yesterday to rearrange the "Who's Who." Has that work been completed so that it can be submitted to the committee?

Mr. STEVENSON. It has been practically completed, Major.

Maj. HUMES. You have not fully completed it?

Mr. STEVENSON. We will have it completed very shortly. It is more of a task than I realized at first.

Maj. HUMES. But it will be completed for submission for the record later in the day?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all I have to ask, unless the committee has something further.

Senator OVERMAN. You think this movement is growing constantly in this country?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think so.

Senator OVERMAN. Rapidly or slowly?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it is growing rather rapidly, if we can judge it by the amount of literature that is distributed and the number of meetings held. It is a very indefinite sort of thing. It is extremely difficult to state how effective these sheets are.

Senator OVERMAN. You have not discovered that it is growing among the American population; it is more among the foreigners, is it not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, the Rand School of Social Science publishes a lot of these works, like the Letters from Lenin, and that sort of thing, and that is made up very largely of American citizens, such as Charles Andrew Beard, Henry Wadsworth Dana, Algernon Lee, and Scott Nearing.

Senator NELSON. Do you regard this propaganda as a menace to our country?

Mr. STEVENSON. Decidedly. I conceive it to be the gravest menace to the country to-day.

Senator OVERMAN. Your idea is that these people are conducting in this country an organization within this country for the overthrow of its Government, carrying the red flag, and with the cry "Down with capitalists" as the principal teaching?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is true.

Senator NELSON. You have given us a good diagnosis. Now, do you give us any remedy or suggest any remedy for it?

Mr. STEVENSON. It strikes me, Senator, that there are several things which might be done.

In the first place, I think that the foreign agitators should be deported. I think the bars should be put up to exclude seditious literature from the country. There is practically no way now to stop this material from coming in.

I think that American citizens who advocate revolution should be punished under a law drawn for that purpose.

Senator OVERMAN. Then you will hear somebody in the Senate talking about freedom of speech, will you not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; but revolution is somewhat different from freedom of speech.

I think, however, that that would not be sufficient. I think that one of the things that must be carried on is a counter-propaganda campaign.

Senator NELSON. An educational campaign?

Mr. STEVENSON. A campaign of education. I think that you must employ the same weapons that they employ.

The thing that has impressed me more than anything else is that you see all of these papers, all of these documents, and you hear all of these speeches and meetings, and you do not see a scratch of a pen that reaches these people, hardly, to disprove the arguments which are put forth by these papers.

Senator NELSON. But do you find much in our public press, our daily press, the weekly press, or our monthlies, that calls the attention of the American people to these things and points out the danger of them?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not until very recently, Senator. We have seen this movement grow up for the last year and a half in the foreign language press, and now it has extended to all these other papers. It seems to me that our teachers in the public schools should be trained to combat this thing; and still further, I think if you go back to history you will find a very interesting parallel in the United States to the condition which we find here now. You will remember that in about 1791 or 1792 or 1793, somewhere along there, we had a great whisky rebellion in western Pennsylvania. That whisky rebellion was brought about through the agitation of civil liberties bureaus, which were the reflex of the Jacobean clubs in France. As in the Life of Washington by John Marshall, he makes a very interesting observation on the fact that as soon as Robespierre was guillotined in France, and the Jacobean clubs lost their power, immediately in the United States there came the dissolution of these democratic societies. And it seemed to me that there was a lesson for us to-day in that: That so long as the Bolsheviki control and dominate the millions of Europe, so long that is going to be a constant menace and encouragement to the radical and dissatisfied elements in this country.

Senator NELSON. They will be a nursery for them that will extend to our country?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator NELSON. In other words, you practically recommend three classes of remedy:

First, the exclusion or deportation of these people from the country.

Second, the exclusion of their publications—the suppression of them.

Third, what you call an educational campaign.

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely.

Senator OVERMAN. A propaganda by Americans for America?

Mr. STEVENSON. Exactly.

To illustrate what we have to contend with in New York City, we have 4,000,000 persons that are either foreign born or the children of foreign-born parents. We have 500,000 adults that do not speak the English language, and that condition is typical of practically all of our industrial centers.

We have allowed these people to pick up their patriotism, what little they have, on the streets, and the American has not helped in any way to frame the thought of those people. They are fed by these radical papers and by these radical speakers.

Senator NELSON. The seat of the difficulty is in these large cities here in the East, and in the manufacturing centers, is it not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Exactly.

Senator NELSON. And the mining centers?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; any industrial center.

Senator OVERMAN. How would the establishment of schools for foreigners by Americans, teaching them the English language, tend to remedy the situation? How would it do for the Government to take charge of that?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the question of how to conduct the counterpropaganda campaign or the educational campaign is one concerning which our educators ought to advise, but I think their attention should be directed to it.

Senator NELSON. Would you not stir up some of these college professors that you have referred to?

Senator OVERMAN. Are the States doing anything toward overcoming this trouble?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe that there are a few of the States that are passing laws assisting in Americanization campaigns.

Senator NELSON. Have they any laws in New York and Pennsylvania for the compulsory attendance of children in English schools?

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes; for the children.

Senator NELSON. They have?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Do they enforce those laws?

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes; I think they are enforced quite. But, at the same time, the public schools are not wholly free of this doctrine.

Maj. HUMES. They are enforced in Pennsylvania, Senator.

Senator NELSON. What is that?

Maj. HUMES. The compulsory attendance laws are enforced in Pennsylvania, quite stringently.

Senator OVERMAN. How about the teachers? Do they have American teachers teaching Americanism?

Maj. HUMES. They have American teachers, Senator. I am in a position to say what they teach.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you think about our immigration laws, Mr. Stevenson? Do you not think they should be more stringent?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think they ought to be very much more stringent.

Senator OVERMAN. And stop these people from coming here?

Mr. STEVENSON. Precisely. I think we have got to have an opportunity to digest the mass of people we have here now, before dilute Americanism any further.

Senator NELSON. But you can not base exclusion altogether on mere educational lines. Some of these fellows that come here can read and write and yet they are anarchists and Socialists.

Mr. STEVENSON. As a matter of fact, these people who are coming over here are, in many instances, very extraordinarily well-educated people.

Senator NELSON. They are well educated?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And an educational bar would not exclude these people?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not at all.

Senator OVERMAN. Would it do to pass a law that no person should enter this country unless he is a white man—an Anglo-Saxon—for the next 10 years?

Mr. STEVENSON. If it could be done I think it would be a good thing.

Senator OVERMAN. You think that would be a good law to pass?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. So do I. It would affect the brown man, the yellow man and the black man.

Mr. STEVENSON. As a matter of fact, I think this whole subject has only been examined very cursorily. I think that it is sufficient grave to justify a thorough-going investigation.

Senator NELSON. Would it not be a good plan to get all the fellows that get up these Chatauqua lecture programs to take up these questions and instruct the people from the platform?

Mr. STEVENSON. It seems to me, Senator, that anything that would be of very great benefit for the country would be to have appointed a commission, made up of investigators and educators, who would collect the material which could be gathered, and determine and appraise the importance of these facts, and advise some method of coping with them, because there is no agency of the Government that I am acquainted with that has been able to examine or follow all of papers, or to follow the meetings in order to have the entire data in hand.

Senator NELSON. You are aware that we have big constitutional lawyers here, and that in carrying on these reforms that you suggest we would run up against the gospel of free press and free speech? You are aware of that fact, are you not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Indeed, I am; but I do think that a man who advocates force to overthrow the Government is going a little bit beyond the limits of free speech.

Maj. HUMES. The present immigration laws exclude men of that kind, do they not?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; but those men do not say that when they are coming in through Ellis Island.

Maj. HUMES. The same immigration law authorizes the deportation of those who advocate it after they come to the country, too.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is the Immigration Commissioner now?

Mr. STEVENSON. Frederick C. Howe.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what his teachings are?

Mr. STEVENSON. Somewhat radical.

Senator OVERMAN. Is he in sympathy with this Soviet, or Bolsheviki, movement?

Mr. STEVENSON. I would rather not express an opinion, Senator, on what his sympathies are. I have never had the pleasure of talking to him.

Senator NELSON. Is he inclined to be a Socialist, or does he belong to one type of Socialists?

Mr. STEVENSON. He belonged to a number of the pacifist societies which were mentioned yesterday.

Senator OVERMAN. Is he not generally regarded as a Socialist?

Mr. STEVENSON. That I do not know, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Have we many Socialists here among the officials of the Federal Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. That also is a question that I would rather not answer, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Let me put the question in another form: Do you not think that a good many Socialists have crept into the army of officeholders in this country?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think that is undoubtedly true.

Senator NELSON. How would you reach those fellows?

Mr. STEVENSON. Now you are asking me a very difficult question, Senator.

Senator NELSON. I was just reading in the paper to-day that 123 conscientious objectors had been discharged. You took pains the other day to explain the propaganda that was carried on in behalf of those fellows. Evidently the propaganda has been successful, because I noticed in the morning paper that 123 of them had been discharged. Did you observe that?

Mr. STEVENSON. I saw that; yes.

Senator NELSON. They had evidently carried on a successful propaganda?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think possibly they did.

Senator OVERMAN. You have given some very interesting testimony, Mr. Stevenson, and we are very much obliged to you.

Senator NELSON. This all puts us in mind of the old hymn, "The Lord moves in a mysterious way."

Senator OVERMAN. This may be one way of getting all this testimony out to the American people and letting them know what is going on in this country.

Senator NELSON. Yes; it is a very good thing for their education.

Senator OVERMAN. German propaganda has gone over the wall and now we are up against a worse propaganda than that. I believe that is all now, Mr. Stevenson, unless Maj. Humes has something further.

Maj. HUMES. I have nothing else to-day. I would suggest that we adjourn to meet at the call of the chairman, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. You have nothing for to-morrow?

Maj. HUMES. Nothing.

Senator OVERMAN. We will adjourn indefinitely, subject to the call of the chairman.

(Whereupon, at 4.15 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourns subject to the call of the chairman.)

(The list of names mentioned and submitted by Mr. Stevenson is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

Jane Addams: Chairman, Woman's Peace Party; vice chairman, American Neutral Confer. Committee; exec. comm. Amer. Un. Ag. Militarism; Council of Fellowship of Reconciliation; Amer. League to Limit Armaments.

James J. Bagley: President of Franklin Union, No. 23, Inc., New York; member org. comm. People's Council; exec. comm. Peace Without Victory League; speaker at conference of Young Democracy. May 1918; exec. comm. Young Democracy.

Henry J. Cadbury: Professor Univ. of Penna.; exec. comm. Young Democracy; Amer. Friends Service Comm.; Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Edmund C. Evans: Architect, Philadelphia; org. comm. People's Council; exec. comm. Fellowship of Reconciliation; exec. comm. Natl. Civil Liberties Bureau; active in Young Democracy.

Harold Evans: Lawyer, Philadelphia; atty. for Civil Lib. Bureau of Amer. Un. Ag. Mil.; gen. comm. Liberty Defense Union; exec. comm. Fellowship of Reconciliation; Amer. Friends Service Comm.; exec. comm. Young Democracy.

Kuno Francke: One time prof. Harvard; Amer. Neutral Conf. Committee; Intercol. Socialist Soc.; Knight Royal Order Prussian Red Eagle and Order of Crown.

Prof. William F. Bade, Berkeley, California: Studied University of California 1905-06; prof. at University of California 1902; member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Prof. Emily Greene Balch: Economist; studied with Profs. Schmoller and Wagner; prof. of political economy and social science Wellesley; American Neutral Conference Committee; People's Council of America; Liberty Defense Union; Woman's Peace Party of New York City; Emergency Peace Federation; American Union Against Militarism; Collegiate Anti Militarism League; Woman's International League; Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Roger N. Baldwin: Now serving sentence for violation of Selective Service Act; former instructor of sociology at Washington University St. Louis; member of National Civil Liberties Bureau, American Union Against Militarism, Liberty Defense Union, Collegiate Anti-Militarism League, Fellowship of Reconciliation, Bureau of Legal Advice, League for the Amnesty of Political Prisoners, National Conference of Labor, Socialist and Radical Movements.

Prof. Charles A. Beard: Formerly of Columbia University; Member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society; Lecturer at Rand School of Social Science.

Prof. Sophonisba P. Breckinridge: Asst. Prof. of Household Administration, University of Chicago since 1908; American Union Against Militarism; Woman's Peace Party.

Prof. Frederick A. Bushee: Studied in Berlin; Prof. at Colorado College; Member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Evans Clark: Formerly Instructor of Economics at Princeton University in Economics; Head of Bureau of Research and Lecturer at Rand School of Social Science; Member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Lindsay T. Damon¹: Prof. at Brown University; Member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Henry W. L. Dana: Former Prof. of English at Columbia University; Member Peoples Council of America, Collegiate Anti Militarism League, the Young Democracy, Nation Conference of Labor, Socialist and Radical Movement.

John Lovejoy Elliott: Educator; Ph. D. from Halle University, Germany; Member American Union Against Militarism; Liberty Defense Union, Bureau Legal Advice, National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Elizabeth Freeman: Born in England; exec. sec'y Peoples Council; advisory board League for Amnesty of Political Prisoners; comm. League of Small and Subject Nationalities.

Elizabeth Gurley Flinn: I. W. W. for last 10 years; under indictment for violation espionage act; exec. comm. Liberty Defense Union.

Thomas C. Hall: Professor and theologian, studied in Germany, connected with Union Theological Seminary; member Intercollegiate Socialist Society; on Reception Comm. Friends of Peace; org. Comm. of German Univ. League in this country; wrote many articles for "Fatherland"; decorated by Kaiser with the Order of the Crown. Now living in Germany.

Morris Hillquit (originally Morris Hilkowist): Born in Russia; org. comm. Peoples Council; atty. cooperating with Nat'l Civil Liberties Bureau; Amer. League to Limit Armaments.

John Haynes Holmes: Clergyman; exec. comm. Amer. Neutral Conf. Comm.; exec. com. Amer. Union Ag. Mil.; Civil Liberties Bureau; dir. comm. Nat'l Civil Liberties Bureau; vice-pres. Liberty Defense Union; edit. board "World Tomorrow"; of Fellowship of Reconciliation; Amer. League to Limit Armaments.

Frederick C. Howe: Lawyer, Commissioner of Immigration at New York; studied in Germany; gen. comm. Amer. Neutral Conference Comm.; pres. League of Small and Subject Nationalities; Member of League of Free Nations Ass'n advisory board Brown Open Forum.

Jessie W. Hughan: professor, Barnard College; adv. board, Collegiate Anti-Militarism League; council, Fellowship of Reconciliation; exec. board, Woman's International League; sec'y N. Y. State Branch of Woman's Peace Party; exec. comm. Intercollegiate Socialist Society; member, League of Conscientious Objectors.

William I. Hull: professor Swarthmore; studied in Germany; gen'l comm. Amer. Mutual Conf. Comm., member council, Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Paul Jones: bishop; org. comm. People's Council; council, Fellowship of Reconciliation; interested in Young Democracy.

Rufus H. Jones: professor, Haverford College; on editorial board, "World Tomorrow"; council, Fellowship of Reconciliation; Amer. Friends Service Comm.

David Starr Jordan: chancellor, Stanford Univ.; Amer. Mutual Conference Comm.; exec. comm. Amer. Un. Ag. Militarism; gen'l comm. Liberty Defense Union; adv. comm. Collegiate Anti-Mil. League; comm. Amer. League to Limit Armaments, People's Council of Amer.

Lindley M. Keasbey: professor, Univ. of Texas; studied in Germany; member org. comm. People's Council of Amer. & in charge of org. work in southern states.

Geo. W. Kirchwey: formerly dean of Columbia Law School; Amer. Neutral Conf. Comm; member Civic Club of N. Y., a meeting place of radicals; member adv. board Brown Open Forum.

Edward Krehbiel: professor, Stamford Univ.; member League to Enforce Peace; gen. comm. Amer. Neutral Conference Comm.; Civil Liberties Bureau of Amer. Union Ag. Militarism; member League of Free Nations Ass'n.

Agnes Brown Leach, of New York: exec. board Woman's International League; treas. N. Y. State Branch of Woman's Peace Party; treas. Woman's Peace Party of N. Y. City; exec. com. Amer. Union Ag. Mil.; dir. comm. Nat'l Civil Liberties Bureau; interested in Young Democracy; member Civic Club of N. Y.

Louis P. Lochner: pers. representative of Henry Ford on Ford Peace Mission; exec. sec'y People's Council of Amer.; member Liberty Defense Union; org. comm. Nat'l Conference of Labor, Socialist & Radical Movements.

¹ See testimony of Prof. Damon beginning on p. 2787 post.

Frederick Lynch: clergyman exec. comm. Amer. Neutral Conference Committee; treas. Emergency Peace Federation; exec. comm. Amer. Union Ag. Militarism; interested in Nat'l Civil Liberties Bureau; connected with Leagues of Nations & Subject Nationalities.

Judah L. Magnes: rabbi; org. comm. People's Council of Amer.; dir. Nat'l Civil Liberties Bureau.

Theresa T. Malkiel, of New York: Exec. board Woman's Internat'l League; member, N. Y. State Branch of Woman's Peace Party; exec. com. Liberty Defense Union.

James H. Mamer: pres. Penn. Federation of Labor; org. com. People's Council of Amer.; exec. com. Amer. Union Ag. Mil., gen'l comm. Liberty Defense Union.

Miss Tracy Mygatt, of New York: Member Overflow Meeting Committee; Friends of Peace; exec. comm. Bureau of Legal First Aid; assoc. editor Young Democracy.

Scott Nearing: formerly asst professor of Univ. of Penn.; exec. com. Amer. Union Ag. Mil.; Liberty Defense Union; org. comm. People's Council of Amer.; Intercollegiate Socialist Society; indicted under espionage act.

Kate Richards O'Hare: Was chairman of comm. on War and Militarism at nat'l convention of Socialist Party held in St. Louis, Mo., Apr. 7/14; which reported the anti-war resolution; represented Amer. in Intern'l Socialist Bureau at People's House in Brussels; member of exec. comm. Liberty Defense Union; now serving term of imprisonment for violation espionage act.

James P. Warbasse, M. D.; Brooklyn N. Y.: Member American Union Against Militarism, National Civil Liberties Bureau, Peace Without Victory League.

Harry F. Ward, Union Theological Seminary, New York: Member of Collegiate Anti Militarism League, Fellowship of Reconciliation, Liberty Defense Union.

Donald Winston of New York: Member National Committee of Collegiate Anti Militarism League, Executive Committee Fellowship of Reconciliation. Active in organization of Young Democracy; Connected with Union Theological Seminary.

L. Hollingsworth Wood: Lawyer, New York City; Treas. of American Union Against Militarism; Chairman National Civil Liberties Bureau; Treas. Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Eugene V. Debs: Socialist; Now serving Sentence for Violation of Espionage Act; Member Organizing Committee, Peoples Council of America, General Committee Liberty Defense Union; Member of National Conference of Labor, Socialist and Radical Movements.

Prof. Harry A. Overstreet: Prof. in College of City of New York, Philosopher; Member of Emergency Peace Federation, Collegiate Anti Militarism League, Intercollegiate Socialist Society, League of Free Nation's Association.

Judge Jacob Panken: Judge Municipal Court, New York City; Pres. of "Forward," radical Jewish Newspaper; Member of People's Council of America; National Conference of Labor, Socialist, and Radical Movement.

Elsie Clews Parsons (Mrs. Herbert), of New York: Member Peoples Council of America, American League to Limit Armaments.

Amos R. E. Pinchot: Lawyer; Member American Neutral Conference Committee, American Union Against Militarism, Liberty Defense Union, National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Gilbert E. Roe: Lawyer. New York City; Atty. for National Civil Liberties Bureau. Interested in Peoples Council of America.

Rev. Harold L. Rotzel, Boston, Mass.: Member of League of Democracy; Control, Fellowship of Reconciliation, League for Permanent Peace; Interested in defense of I. W. W.; Connected with National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Rev. John N. Sayre, Suffern, N. Y.: Member of Fellowship of Reconciliation; National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Joseph Schlossberg: Sec'y of Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; Member Peoples Council of America, Liberty Defense Union, National Conference of Labor, Socialist and Radical Movements, Young Democracy.

Nathaniel Schmidt: Prof. Cornell University; Studied in Germany; Member of Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Vida D. Scudder: Prof. at Wellesley College; Member American Neutral Conference Committee Intercollegiate Socialist Society; Writer on Socialism & Literature.

Prof. Clarence R. Skinner: Prof. Tufts University; Member of Collegiate Anti-Militarism League; On Editorial Staff Young Democracy.

Helen Phelps Stokes, of New York: Treas. National Civil Liberties Bureau; Vice Chairman Liberty Defense Union; Member of Council of Fellowship of Reconciliation; Executive Committee Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Rev. Sidney String, Seattle, Washington: Member of Peoples Council of America, Liberty Defense Union, Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Rev. Norman M. Thomas, of New York: Member American Union Against Militarism, National Civil Liberties Bureau, Liberty Defense Union, Fellowship of Reconciliation; Editor World Tomorrow; National Conference of Labor, Socialist and Radical Movements.

Alexander Trachtenberg, of New York: Member of Collegiate Anti-Militarism League; Director of Dept. of Labor Research Rand School of Social Science; Contributor to The Liberator, successor to "The Masses."

Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker: Clergyman and Editor, Chicago, Ill.; Managing Editor "Christian Socialist"; Member of Peoples Council of America; Chairman Peoples Council of Chicago; Convicted of Violation of Espionage Act.

Oswald Garrison Villard: Born in Germany; Editor of "The Nation"; Member American Neutral Conference Com., American Union Against Militarism, American League to Limit Armaments, Fellowship of Reconciliation; Interested in National Civil Liberties Bureau.

Lillian D. Wald: Sociologist, of New York; Member American Neutral Conference Committee American Union Against Militarism; Civil Liberties Bureau, American League to Limit Armaments, Woman's Peace Party of New York.

(The following letter from Mr. Stevenson is here, by order of the chairman, printed in the record, as follows:)

[Hart, Stevenson, Walton & Senior, counselors at law. Merwin Kimball Hart, Archibald Ewing Stevenson, Daniel Day Walton, Abram Griffith Senior, William Orcutt Hubbard, Lemuel Bannister. Warren C. Tucker. Cable address, Senhart. 20 Nassau Street.]

NEW YORK CITY, January 31, 1919.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman of the Sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee of Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: I noted with some embarrassment a statement published in the New York papers attributed to Secretary of War Baker relating to my relations to the Military Intelligence Division, United States Army. In order that the record may contain a statement of my relations I wish to state the following facts: At the request of Lieutenant Colonel Nicholas Biddle, in command of the New York Office of Military Intelligence, and after conferences with Major Hughes in Washington, a propaganda section was established in New York on the 28th day of October, 1918, which was known as a subdivision of M. I. 10. A commission of captain in the Military Intelligence was offered me but with the signing of the armistice I never filed my application for a commission; however, I was duly appointed an agent of Military Intelligence and received a certificate to that effect signed by Brigadier-General Marlborough Churchill, Director of Military Intelligence. The number of this card was 650, to which was attached my photograph and the seal of the War Department. A brief history of the origin and activities of this section may be found in the files of the Military Intelligence at Washington, D. C.

Yours very truly,

ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON.

AES:A Enc.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at the call of the chairman at 3.15 o'clock, p. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

President: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

TESTIMONY OF PROF. LINDSAY T. DAMON, BROWN UNIVERSITY, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. Well, sir, we will be glad to hear whatever you want to say.

Mr. DAMON. If I, gentlemen of the committee, seem to show some warmth in the form of my statement, I think you will understand that the situation calls for some warmth if one is unjustly on the list.

Whatever is done here to-day, the black mark that has been put against me can not be permanently erased everywhere. It may be wiped out in certain places. Assuming as I do that I shall go from this room with a statement that I am not properly on such a list, it is yet impossible for me to escape the consequences in whole, in their entirety, of having once been associated with that list.

Senator NELSON. Associated with whom?

Mr. DAMON. These pacifists, whose names you have published.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you, for the information of the committee. A careful search of the record of the committee fails to disclose the name of Prof. Damon any place. We can find no mention of his name. I feel safe in saying, from the careful search that has been made, that his name has not been mentioned in connection with these hearings. We have at least been unable to find anything of it in the record, and it is not on the list that was submitted by Mr. Stevenson at the request of the committee.¹

Senator WOLCOTT. How did you get the impression, Professor, that you were on the list?

Mr. DAMON. I was on the list as published in the newspapers. There is no doubt about that. I am here in Washington, I may say, in the employ of the War Department, and have been in the employ of the War Department for some five months.

¹ See p. 2783 for name of Mr. Damon in list.

After a hard day's work with my committee, I went home and tumbled into bed, and found this telegram from the Providence Journal:

Will you wire us at our expense to-night statement concerning inclusion of your name in Stevenson's list. We have protest signed by Brown faculty headed by Dr. Faunce.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

I got up and went over to the Cosmos Club, and hunted up the paper of the day, and sure enough my name was there, along with the name of Mr. Debs and a gentleman now in prison named Baldwin. I was listed with the others, and under my name was one statement: "Lindsay T. Damon, professor, Brown University, Intercollegiate Socialist Society."

I wrote a telegram to the Journal, which, if you care to hear it, I will read, and went home considerably wrought up, and the next day chased into other newspapers and found the list was there; including my name—that is the point, of course. My name is in the public print all over the country as a part of the group that you have been investigating and on whom the claim lies not only of pacificism, but of pacificism during a time of war, and presumably with the pro-German taint. Against them that charge lies in effect whether it was intended or not.

Senator OVERMAN. They had you as charged with being a member of some secret society?

Mr. DAMON. They did.

Senator OVERMAN. Intercollegiate what?

Mr. DAMON. Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

Senator OVERMAN. You do not belong to any such society?

Mr. DAMON. I did 8 or 10 or 15 years ago. I joined such a society because of my interest in what we may roughly describe as social betterment.

I have no apologies to make to this body or to any other body for the kind of ideas on social organization that I have. They are my own affair. But, as a matter of cold fact, I have had no connection with that society, practically at all. I never attended a meeting. I can not remember ever having paid dues, and the last time I saw anybody connected with that society was when he came into my office about 1915, and asked if I would support the Socialist principles and the Socialist ticket in the coming presidential campaign. I told him that I certainly would not, and that for various reasons I was through with that kind of endeavor. I do not suppose it is necessary to go into my reasons, though, if you care to have them, you can. At any rate, there ends the story—the full story of my association with that particular society.

Senator NELSON. Did you publish or write a book during the period of our neutrality?

Mr. DAMON. The only time that my name came into print during the time of our neutrality, so far as I know, was when Dr. Morton Prince, of Boston, tried to get a list of New Englanders—well, who are in some degree known—to sign an address of sympathy to the French people. I am one of the signatories of that document. I know you will remember that it went as far as one could go without violating the laws of neutrality; and immediately scurrilous con-communications from Germans, anonymously, began to appear in my mail. So far as I know that is the only time that my name has appeared in print, with anything above my signature, since 1914.

Senator NELSON. Some gentlemen you know there are, connected with our colleges, who have published books that have been of a mixed character and that got them into trouble.

Mr. DAMON. I am not of that class. As a matter of fact, Senator Nelson, I am convinced that we must have a large military establishment in this country, and at this moment there is in Senator Chamberlain's office, unless it was lost in the mails, a long letter from me advocating the future use of the American colleges in the training of large numbers of officers. My record is perfectly definite on that point. I wish we might have a league of nations, with the force to enforce its decrees, but I do not believe we shall get it. In the meantime I believe that this country should stand armed. If you can make pacifism out of that, why, you are welcome to.

Senator NELSON. You believed, then, from the beginning, that the war on the part of the Government was a just war?

Mr. DAMON. Senator, if you will examine my classes at Brown University you will find that from the beginning of the war I preached in season and out of season that it was our duty to go into the war, and that life was hardly worth living if the German hordes conquered; that it was our duty to go in at once.

Senator NELSON. And help France and England and Belgium?

Mr. DAMON. Exactly. I suffered some shame at our failure to go in the first two years of the war. That is demonstrable by proof. It is further demonstrable by proof that a very large number of men who came in my hands immediately volunteered for military service when we did go to war, and that previously many had gone to France.

Senator NELSON. My understanding is that your institution was on the right side, on the Lord's side, all the way through.

Mr. DAMON. I believe it was, sir. For my own personal record, he does not like to say that he tried to enter the military service and was turned down, but it is true in my case.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, there is no charge against you except that you were in the papers as a member of some society. That is all that was said.

Mr. DAMON. Well, that was all that was said, but I was in a list headed "Pacifists," and we know what "pacifist" means in the country to-day. It means a man, presumably, who discredited the course of the country in the war, or its entry into the war, and presumably with a taint of pro-Germanism.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the record that was submitted to us, the typewritten copy of the hearing as submitted to us by the reporter, is not a correct copy of the list that was submitted by Mr. Stevenson. In the list submitted by Mr. Stevenson this name does appear: "Lindsay T. Damon, member of Intercollegiate Social-ist Society."¹

That is all that appears there. In the transcript of the proceedings that was accidentally omitted by the reporter, and that is why we could not find it.

¹ See p. 2788 for name of Mr. Damon in list.

Maj. HUMES. It has no heading at all.

Senator OVERMAN. What is just preceding his name?

Maj. HUMES. The record of another man, "Evans Clark: formerly instructor of economics at Princeton University; head of Bureau of Research, and lecturer at Rand School of Social Science; member Intercollegiate Socialist Society" and then follows LITTON T. DAMON, and so forth, and following that, "Henry W. L. Damon."

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything said in the record to the effect that he was a pacifist?

Maj. HUMES. No mention except that Mr. Stevenson was requested to prepare a list of the organizations with which these various persons, and especially persons connected with educational institutions, were connected.

Senator OVERMAN. That is my recollection, that professors of colleges were put in there at the request of some member of the committee, and those connected with certain societies, the societies named, not saying that they were pacifists or anything else. This is how, I suppose, Mr. Damon's name got in there.

Mr. DAMON. Well, pardon me, Senator, if I do not quite see the fact that I belong to this or that society should be brought up in any public inquiry. I do not really see why I should be subject to any inquiry on the basis of a membership in any such society or that. And I feel—I say it quite respectfully—that had due care been exercised in the process, there should not creep from the purview of the investigation the name of a man who so far as he could has tried to do his whole duty by the United States. My name has been brought forward in an association which has, very frankly, done me some injury, and I feel that I am entitled to ask from this committee a definite statement on the record that my name is not in the records of this committee as one subject to a charge, or implied charge, from this committee. I feel that I am entitled to have a record of that vote, and I feel that I am entitled to ask that so far as possible the same publicity be given to the defense as was given to the charge. I submit that this is ordinary business justice which I am entitled to.

Senator STERLING. I do not know whether a motion is in order. I have heard Prof. Damon's statement, and I have been so convinced with it, and so convinced of the fact that he is free from pro-Germanism or pacifism, that I move that it is the sense of this committee that Prof. Damon is not subject to any such charge.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would not oppose that motion. I am frank to say that if I had had my name appearing in that list I would think it would be very reasonable for me to ask for judgment of the committee on it. But I want to call your attention to this fact. We are about ready to get ourselves into a great deal of difficulty. If we undertake to pass judgment on one man in this list, we must, under such circumstances, when called upon, be ready to pass judgment on every other person. Now, when this list was suggested, members of this committee may recall that I had great doubts of admitting such a list, anticipating such a dispute in an individual instance, and we were assured by the witness, Mr. Stevenson, as I recall, that the appearance of a name on that list argued nothing so far as any interest hostile to the United States or dis-any wise to the United States could be involved. That list has gone out to the country, I think, with an atmosphere of misapprehension and misunderstanding about it. It was never meant to be a list to cast disrepute upon anybody, I think. The point I make is that if such a motion is passed, we would have to argue out each individual case. How many names are there in that list?

Maj. HUMES. 62.

Senator STERLING. I was not here at the time that list was introduced in evidence. I do not know what names it included, and I have not heard the testimony with reference to any particular one.

Senator WOLCOTT. It may be remembered by those members of the committee who were here that there was a suggestion emanating from some source that the names that were objectionable might be taken out. But it was finally decided to leave them all in, with the understanding that it meant nothing disloyal or hostile to our interests.

Senator OVERMAN. In the morning when this matter was proposed, I ruled these names out, but after coming here in the afternoon Mr. Stevenson began to discuss these different societies, referring especially to the college professors, and it was understood that there was no charge against anybody; that there was no charge made against any of these societies.

It was felt that the pacifist societies and socialists and I. W. W. societies should be published with the names of members, and we decided to do that, without making any charge against anybody. Whether they were disloyal citizens or not, they were members of certain societies. I suppose Mr. Stevenson just put in the name of Mr. Damon because he was a member of the socialist society. I suppose that must be the reason, and he has never charged you with disloyalty.

Mr. DAMON. Not in set terms, Senator, but in actual matter of fact everybody knows that the term pacifist has to-day a very different significance than what it did have.

Senator OVERMAN. There is no charge of your being a pacifist in this record.

Mr. DAMON. It is in the papers.

Senator OVERMAN. I read what was said there. They did not charge those men with being pacifists. They are members of certain societies in this country, college professors and others, members of socialistic societies, whether they are against the Government or for it. They just published the name; that is my recollection of the record—that you were a member of a society—and it seems that you were a member of that society. They are not charging you with anything.

Mr. DAMON. I must confess that that seems to me to be an avoidance of responsibility, Senator. Pardon me if I put it this way, but I am the man who is injured. I am the man who has got to stand in the future the results of this thing. I am the man who in a doubtful case will be subject to the statement that "this man was in the list of pacifists and pro-Germans," and that came to the public in some way from this committee. And you say that you do not wish to pass judgment. You did pass judgment when that list was given out.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are entirely mistaken there. This committee undertook to steer a course that would prevent it from passing judgment on any man, and if you will read the record when it is published you will see that it was the understanding that these names—that the publication of this Stevenson list—should have no significance at all so far as any hostility to the country or anything favorable to Germany might be concerned.

Mr. DAMON. Was that rubric put out with the list? It was in the papers.

Senator WOLCOTT. You must understand that the committee did not put this list out. The newspapers may have gotten a misapprehension—I do not know—but the committee has not condemned anybody, and the understanding was when this witness Stevenson commenced to testify that nothing was to be inferred from the mention of a name as he went along.

Now, I quite sympathize with your position. If I were in your position I would want the same vindication, I confess, at the hands of this committee.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what has been said by Senator Wolcott in regard to the motion and the possible effect of a motion such as I have made, and because of that, I think I shall withdraw the motion and content myself with the expression of my individual opinion in regard to it.

Senator NELSON. That is what I had made up my mind to do. I have thought it to be a good plan for each of us to express our opinion on the record and let it go at that.

Senator OVERMAN. Professor, I think giving a statement by each member ought to be satisfactory. We do not want to do anything but justice.

Mr. DAMON. Well, I confess I am not satisfied. I did not intend to bring this point out, but we might as well go into the matter. I am at present a responsible agent for the United States Government in settling claims accruing against the Government from New England colleges on account of the S.A.T.C. If you bring me with a smirch on my character, how can I handle those matters with propriety, not in good standing in those colleges?

Senator STERLING. Professor, with the statement here a matter of record giving the opinions of the members of the committee, I think ought to be sufficient, it seems to me. I made the motion on the impulse of the moment because I was impressed with your statement, but I can perceive the difficulty suggested by Senator Wolcott, namely that there have been a great many names brought before this committee, and the condition described might arise at any time with reference to anyone and the committee would have to go into the matter again and again, receiving testimony.

Mr. DAMON. Senator, I see your difficulty in point of lack of time.

Senator STERLING. But now it seems to me that with your statement made clear as it is, and I think convincing, that a statement of the members of the committee is as far as we should go. I think this because I introduced the subject.

Mr. DAMON. I thank you for introducing it. Personally I think that if any individual is aggrieved by having his name on that list, this committee can hardly escape the responsibility of hearing.

rebuttal. I do not see how you can escape that, however much me it takes.

Senator WOLCOTT. The committee is perfectly willing to hear everything you want to say and have it spread on the record.

Mr. DAMON. And may I have a copy of it?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAMON. Can there not be incorporated in that a statement that the Captain made that my name never was in that record?

Senator OVERMAN. He made a mistake about that.

Capt. LESTER. The name was not mentioned in the official record returned to us. It now appears that it was on the hand-written list that was prepared by Mr. Stevenson and given to the stenographer, who left the name off the list.

Mr. DAMON. He looked for the name and could not find it?

Senator WOLCOTT. The point is that the witness Stevenson prepared this list in longhand, and he handed it to the stenographer, and the stenographer wrote up on the typewriter the official record of the testimony, and in copying that list the stenographer apparently failed to copy your name from the list.

Mr. DAMON. Failed to expunge it from the official list?

Maj. HUMES. He did expunge it. Your name is not in that list.

Capt. LESTER. That is, the list the stenographer sent up.

Senator OVERMAN. Your name is on the original list, but the stenographer omitted to copy your name.

Mr. DAMON. I see.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now the newspaper reporter took his copy of the list from the longhand sheet, which contains your name.

Mr. DAMON. In short, the Senate Committee had my name, and had dropped the name, but by some lack of clerical care the name remained in such a form that it got to the reporters as well as the objectionable persons. That is it, is it not, Senator?

Senator OVERMAN. No, that is not it. Mr. Stevenson handed in the list of names and your name was on the list.

Mr. DAMON. Can I make myself clear? I am boiling with indignation that Mr. Stevenson ever used my name at all in any connection here. Is it not possible for me to say, with due respect to everybody concerned, that if this kind of inquiry into private names is permitted, in the last analysis there is the deepest kind of danger to freedom of thought and freedom of speech in the United States. There is more at stake than the fortunes of an individual man.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand from that that your position is that this committee can not with propriety inquire into these actions of individuals or groups whose course is one of antagonism to the form of Government in this country? In other words, that this committee can not with propriety question the activity of the anarchists or bolshevists, that advocate violence?

Mr. DAMON. Certainly not. Those things are too destructive of the fundamental law in the United States, and a discussion that contravenes the fundamental law of the United States, or that results from a lack of loyalty to the institutions of the United States, should in my judgment not be tolerated, but I have never taken part in any such discussion at any time, at any place, in my life.

Maj. HUMES. Those are some of the private opinions that you have, but the committee has no right to inquire into.

Mr. DAMON. Possibly I went further than I meant. But there is a very deep question involved there, Major. I am sorry I brought it in in that way, in that form. Gentlemen, I am suffering somewhat under this matter, and I may have expressed more than I meant. I wish a clean record in this matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are entitled to an expression in some form, I think. I do not know but that it would be well for this committee to go into executive session and see if we can not do something to straighten this list out that is disturbing people so much. I have some suggestions that I would like to submit to the committee now, and it is not worth while to do so in open session.

Senator OVERMAN. We will have an executive session. Have you anything more to say?

Mr. DAMON. I should like to know the outcome. May I stop now if the session is over?

Senator OVERMAN. As soon as the session is over we will have an open session.

(Thereupon, at 3.50 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee went into executive session.)

At 4 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee resumed its open session.

Senator OVERMAN. Professor, in the opinion of this committee there is nothing in this record that shows that you are a pacifist, that you are a disloyal citizen, or in any way un-American.

Mr. DAMON. I thank you, Senator, very deeply. May I have my record to that effect?

Senator OVERMAN. You will have a copy of the record when it is published.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean a copy of the stenographic record or a copy of the record when it is printed?

Mr. DAMON. I should like a copy of what the Senator has just announced, and the withdrawal of my name from the list. I understand that it was the committee's intention to have my name in the list, and it was a stenographic error that I was not in the list.

Maj. HUMES. That was the explanation I made, that it was a mistake of the stenographer in copying it.

Mr. DAMON. Now, I should like my name withdrawn from the list.

Senator OVERMAN. Why are you not satisfied?

Senator NELSON. You are asking too much.

Senator OVERMAN. You ought to be satisfied with that statement.

Mr. DAMON. Yes; I will be satisfied. I do not want to make a trouble. If that may be spread on the record and given as much publicity as the other statement.

Senator OVERMAN. I hope the newspaper men will publish it, and it will be printed in the record, certainly.

Mr. DAMON. And if I may have a copy of the record of my vote—

Senator STERLING. What vote?

Mr. DAMON. Of the statement that the committee has just made to me.

Senator NELSON. The stenographer will give you a copy of the statement.

Mr. DAMON. That is what I should like.

Senator WOLCOTT. The stenographer can make a certificate for you that that is a correct copy of the record.

Mr. DAMON. I should like to have it.

Senator WOLCOTT. You can arrange that with the stenographer.

Mr. DAMON. Thank you. I understand the matter is over so far as I am concerned.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. DAMON. I thank you for your courtesy.

Senator OVERMAN. Are there any other witnesses?

Maj. HUMES. We would like to submit for the record some data in connection with the Hans Liebau Labor Bureau which we discovered, and copies of the cablegrams showing that it was financed by the German Government to the extent of $25,000.

Senator NELSON. What is that, Major?

Maj. HUMES. The Hans Liebau Labor Bureau, the purpose of which was to get men employment outside of munition factories, and to keep them from taking employment in munition factories, and these reports cover the history of the organization.

Senator NELSON. They show where the money came from?

Maj. HUMES. They show where the money came from. Also we submit a letter that was captured, a letter of Capt. Boy-Ed's, showing his connection with this organization in the United States, and dismissing it and several other of his activities while in this country.

(The documents referred to are here printed in the record as follows:)

DOCUMENT No. 8.

TRANSLATION.

Document: To The Royal Prussian War Ministry, War Bureau, Berlin.

Date: 29/12/1916.

Captured.

Under the circumstances, the considerations are decisive which induced me to bring the "Labour Reference for German subjects" ("Arbeitsnachweis für Reichsdeutsche"), now "Worker's Help" ("Arbeiterhilfe") into being.

During the transformation which took place in the Spring of 1915, in the American industry, when it became a war industry of every branch, which only worked for the Entente, it seemed worth giving German subjects a "Labour Reference" to industries which worked entirely for peaceful objects.

This step was at one time desirable upon purely moral grounds as it paved the way for return to the "Heimat" (? Home interests) which was de jure possible when actively engaged upon war consignments for the enemy.

Moreover—and that was the principal aim—under the name of "Labour Reference," it was possible to carry on an extensive propaganda in the war industry, and thereby withdraw from these industries many useful and good sources of labour.

As also communicated to the Imperial Ambassador, the value of the undertaking lies in the positive numbers of the workers taken over in the enemy industries, than in the fact that the Imperial Government has thoughtfully considered the members of its State, in the conflict of conscience between maintaining their living and their national obligations, also in times of serious tension with the Union.

In this matter, I have on several previous occasions ventured to report that the brusque contrary attitude taken by the Imperial General Consulate, New York, was always incomprehensible to me.

The proof that the undertaking has found the approval of a wide circle of German-Americans, is seen by the forthcoming voluntary contributions.

It is very regrettable, that the prospect of the assistance of the Imperial and Royal Government offered me at one time by His Excellency von Dumba, has not been rendered.

Some of the reasons for the "Workers Help," mentioned at the outset—especially for propaganda—cease to-day on political considerations. To-day the measure is without influence on the war industry.

Therefore the K. M. should have no interest in the maintenance of further payments.

On the other hand, I embrace the opinion of the Imperial Ambassador, that it is highly desirable to continue the enterprise in a "philanthropical sense," so that the Government should further place at disposal the small resources required. K. M.—Kriegs Ministerium?

DOCUMENT No. 9.

BERLIN, 2nd January, 1917

DEAR PAPEN:—Many thanks for your last letter, which I have not seen at the moment, and may consequently omit to answer single points. From the standpoint of the Foreign Office and the Imperial Chancellery, with regard to the action for defamation nothing has meantime altered or will alter, as I have just learned from Count WEDEL. I think it is therefore best for both of us, anyhow for the present, to refrain from any action, especially as the chief culprit is at the moment unattainable, and the letter has not yet reached those, whom it had any prospects of reaching.

It would very much interest me to see A's (Albert) letter if you see it. I received yesterday officially an essay of his on the method of conducting the U-boat war together with an appreciation from him to his present Chief.

With all my friendly respect for A. which you are aware of, I could not divest myself of a feeling of distress as I read. The appreciation and the work, which covers the whole question from the purely naval side in a casual, unprofessional fashion, made—I cannot help myself—an impression of armchair criticism.

He lauds himself, flatters his new Chief, and praises even the Chief of the staff, whom he so often advised in Washington!

With particular humour, did I notice in the work, the sentence "that soon as a war with Germany had been decided upon in the United States the German-Americans would be the first to assure the Government of their absolute loyalty."

A. calls himself at the beginning of the letter an absolutely trustworthy citizen of the State, unprejudiced by American circumstances. On the other hand you will remember that our mutual friend K. (Koch) who with his adherents also purported to know the United States most accurately, told a revolution in the event of a declaration of war! I personally always took men and things with a very large grain of salt as you remarked in New York, and shall continue on this principle—as I flatter myself—in the interest of the affair.

It was perfectly natural that the Entente declined the peace offer. Their acceptance would unquestionably have been regarded as an admission of defeat.

It is also psychologically clear and proper that they refused the offer harshly and brutally, for otherwise the Entente Governments could not have faced their own peoples.

They were obliged to resurrect an anger, by fresh incitements of words and lies, which cannot be as in the case of our own people, as one, because the inward moral incentives thereto are lacking.

It is a matter for delight to me that one can regard with great confidence both our land and naval conduct of the war—gladly though I should have seen the war speedily ended.

Heartiest greetings to you and your splendid troops for the New Year. I hope you will be able to carry out your intention of coming home next year.

Always your,

(Sgd) Boy-E

P. S.—I enclose a copy of the "Berliner Neuester Nachrichten" on account of the article by Otto Eichler.

DOCUMENT No. 15.

Abschrift zu No. 219.17. Geh. A. 8.

answartiges Amt

640 II.

Nr. 2142.

auf das Schreiben vom 5. d. M.

v. 14. 17. geh. A. 8.

BERLIN, DEN 27, JANUAR, 1917.

TRANSLATION.

The Imperial Ambassador in Washington has been empowered to remit support for the second year out of the funds of the Foreign Office to a total value of $25,000 to the "ARBEITERHILFE" ("Workmen's Aid") of New York and in the neighbouring places.

Report made by L. S. Perkins; place where made, New York City; date when made, May 21, 1917; period for which made, May 21, 1917.

Title of case and offense charged or nature of matter under investigation: In re Hans Liebau, German and Austro-Hungarian Activities—Translations.

Statement of operations, evidence collected, names and addresses of persons interviewed, places visited, etc.:

Copy of this report furnished to New York Office.

On April 7, 1917, the files of the Austro-Hungarian and German Labor Bureau of Hans Liebau, 136 Liberty street, were brought to this Office for examination. At the request of Division Superintendent William M. Coffey I have carefully gone over these papers and translated such as seem to be of any importance in the investigation as to the methods pursued in running said Bureau. Between 1,000 and 6,000 letters and similar papers, mostly in German, were read; a number of applications were in Hungarian, Croatian and Ruthenian, and a few in Polish and Rumanian, but in each case a translation in German had been provided, except that the answers of the Bureau in Polish were not translated. These answers, however, were all very brief and appeared to be of a perfunctory character not important to this Office. The examination included all of the correspondence of the various branch offices at Pittsburgh, Bridgeport, Chicago, etc.

This examination shows that Liebau, or his subordinates for him, started out with the intention of coercing German or Austro-Hungarian subjects, working in munition factories on material intended for the Entente Allies, to leave such employment by threatening them with punishment under the German Imperial Criminal Code, but this period of coercion was of short duration, apparently not extending beyond the fall of 1915. Then "moral suasion" was tried. The letters indicating coercional methods are translated first, and especial attention is invited to the letters to "Mrs. Stuhl," Nos. 32 and 366, August 1 and September 7, 1915, in which an evident attempt was made to frighten a munition worker away from the factory where he was employed, the second letter following his failure to leave his work or respond to the first warning. Liebau's letters to Philip Probstel (485) and to Erich Pohl (450) are in the same strain, but milder, as are also letters 552 to Eugene Schmieder, and 461 and 491 to same, and 570 to Rudolf Schmiedes. Numerous letters of Liebau to publishers of Hungarian, Ruthenian and Polish as well as German newspapers show his activity in advertising the work of the Bureau and the attitude of the Central Powers toward work in the munition factories here by subjects of those governments.

Hundreds of letters from applicants for positions or from contributors of funds showed that "Fatherland," George Sylvester Viereck's publication, has given them the first information as to the activities of the Bureau and of the "treasonable" character of work in the American munition factories. The New York "Staats-Zeitung" was a close second as a quoted authority on these matters.

The "Rundschreiben" of Captain von Papen, or circular letter designed to promote the work of this Bureau, referred to by Liebau in his statement to me, cannot be identified among all this mass of papers, unless it is the long letter which appears to the number of perhaps more than 100 copies, in English and German, which in the first paragraph states that working for the factories for material for the Allies is high treason, etc. This circular is generally sent to large firms with the request that they come to the aid of the bureau with contributions of money. Many letters accompanying large and small contributions of money were found, from large firms in New York and elsewhere. Liebau seems to have kept strict account of receipts and disbursements, although this point can best be covered by an investigator familiar with that sort of business. The connection of von Papen and Bernstein as well as that of Dr. Karl O. Bertling, with this Bureau, is fully established in these papers. Several large contributions entered in the receipt book as "anonymous" indicates the actual participation of still others of prominence.

The following letter (No. 150), addressed by Liebau under date of August 18, 1915, to the Cushman Chuck Co., Hartford, Conn., is one of more than 100 appearing in the files as having been sent to prominent firms, and sets forth the objects of the Liebau Bureau and the methods employed in its work.

"By a recent communication of the Imperial German Government attention of German subjects in foreign countries was called to the fact that participation by them in the manufacture of war supplies for the enemies of Germany constitutes a criminal offense; which circumstance led to the establishment of this Office with a view of trying to find employment for those who have given up or will give up their situations in munition factories, in order to keep their conscience clean and honor bright.

"Aware of your well-known attitude in the question involved, we believe you will also take an interest in such workingmen as will not lend themselves for the purpose of prolonging the present war.

"A great number of applications already received show the urgent necessity of finding work for numerous well-trained men, principally mechanics of all kinds.

"As our mediation is rendered free of charge to employers and employees, you may be sure of obtaining any number of well qualified men by letting us know how many and what kind of vacancies you may wish to fill.

"Under the circumstances the munition factories are paying very high wages, a fact which will be sure to induce many men to shift over to them, thereby creating vacancies which should appropriately be taken up by those who resign from plants producing war materials.

"Hoping to be honored by your assistance of this humane and excellent enterprise, I remain, Sirs, etc."

LIEBAU TO STUHL.

(Letter 32.)

N. Y., Aug. 11

Mr. STUHL,

Care of Caloris Co., Millville, N. Y.

It must have been unknown to you heretofore that by remaining in the employ of the Caloris Company, where glass tubes are made for the manufacture of war material to the enemies of Germany, under paragraph 89 of the Imperial Criminal Code you are guilty of high treason and subject yourself to severe penalties, as was stated by the Imperial Chancellor in his recent pronouncement." Letter to Stuhl closes by calling attention to the establishment of the free employment bureau and to a question list enclosed. Stuhl is promised a position of which he "need not be ashamed."

A letter of the same purpose was on the same date (No. 33.) was sent to Franz Eck of the same place. On September 14, 1915 another letter was sent to Eck, then at 4422 6th ave., Brooklyn, telling him that he need not be concerned about the fact that he formerly worked for the Caloris Company.

On September 7/15 Liebau sent another letter (366) to Stuhl, in which reference was made to "your former fellow-workman, F. Eck, who gave up work at once when he discovered that the glass tubes he was making could be used in transporting gunpowder to the enemies of Germany," and the fact that said Eck had at once found another good position. The following paragraphs close the letter to Stuhl:

"As we have thus far had no answer to our letter of August 11, we call your attention to the seriousness of your position, and emphasize the fact that in entirely ignoring such warning you will subject yourself to serious trouble if you should ever return to Germany.

"We hope that you will now at once get in communication with us, unless you have in the meantime taken other steps to sever your connection with the Maloris Co.

"We assume that the other German subjects who have been working in the factories there have realized the sordid nature of your (their?) actions, and will report here as soon as possible. We will do all we can to provide other employment."

"FATHERLAND."

Reference was made to the issue of September 1, 1915, of "Fatherland" in which there was an advertisement about the provisions of the German Criminal Code covering the making or helping to make anything injurious to Germany or its allies.

LIEBAU TO ACKERMANN.

N. Y., Sept. 2, (1915).

Mr. JOSEPH ACKERMANN,
Providence, R. I.

In response to your letter of August 31, we call your attention to the fact that through continuing to work in a factory in which war materials are made for the enemies of Germany, you are unquestionably rendering yourself punishable, especially when another position is offered you from here.

We remind you that in the homeland, as here, all are compelled to make sacrifices that are not trifling, of which accepting temporary employment at reduced wages is among the smallest.

We will try to get you a situation in or near New York. In any event, it would be well for you to come and see us as soon as possible.

LIEBAU TO POHL.

Under date of September 19, 1915, Erich Pohl of No. 2640 East 55th Street, Cleveland, Ohio, wrote to Liebau that he was working for Van Dorn & Dutton of that city on automobile trucks intended for the Allies, and stated that he would like to know whether he was committing a criminal offense in so doing. At the top of this letter, in red pencil, is the notation: "Punishable; question-sheet," evidently made in Liebau's office. Under date of Sept. 21 the following letter (450) was sent to Pohl by Liebau:

"We have your communication of the 19th instant, and inform you that your activity brings you in conflict with the criminal code. Kindly fill out the inclosed question-sheet and return it to us. We will then do our best to secure a suitable position for you as soon as possible.

"In any event, by filing your application with us you are protected from all future unpleasantness."

Two other letters were sent by Liebau, under dates of Nov. 3 and 9, to Pohl, saying: "As I have heard nothing further from you, I assume that you have changed your employment. If this should not be the case, and you require assistance in this matter, please apply to our branch office, Mr. Fritz Baumgaertner, 9511 Euclid avenue, referring to me, whereupon every possible assistance will be given you."

(See also letters 461, 491, and 552, Sept. 21, Sept. 27 and Oct. 7/15, to Eugene Schmierer, Saginaw, Mich., and letter 570, Oct. 11/15 to Rudolf Schneider, 437 West 13th street, N. Y. City, all of the same character as the one to Pohl.)

LIEBAU TO PROBSTEL.

Sept. 24, 1915, Liebau wrote to Philip Probstel, 409 Heinrod street, Brooklyn, N. Y. (No. 485 letter) as follows:

"As we have heard that you are employed in one of the many factories which deliver war material to the enemies of Germany, we wish to call your attention to the fact that, according to the notice published in many newspapers, under Section 89 of the German Criminal Code you are guilty of treason if you are a German subject.

"This Bureau is ready to furnish other positions to those who voluntarily and through conscientious scruples give up such criminal and sordid employment."

LIEBAU TO WIENER.

(Letter 65.)

Aug. 13 17

Mr. FRANZ WIENER, 896 Congress ave., New Haven, Conn.

In response to your communication of the 8th instant, we inform you that the manufacture of guns which are not intended for the enemies of Germany, as, for example, sporting rifles, is of course to be regarded as high treason. But as you are evidently in uncertainty as to whether you are really engaged in harmless work, the propriety of your stay in the gun factory would appear at least to be doubtful. Inclosed find question-sheet, etc.

LIEBAU TO BANNER.

(Letter 540.)

Oct. 6 17

Mr. OTTO BANNER, Chief Eng. Turbine Dept.,
Ingersoll Rand Co., Phillipisburg, N. J.

Liebau told him he supposed he was familiar with Section 89 of the Imperial German Criminal Code, etc., as to the criminal responsibility involved in aiding the enemies of Germany and as to the exemption attached to an individual workman who does not aid such enemy by personally, directly or indirectly assisting in making war materials. Attention also called to the moral aspect of the situation.

Same to Otto Berner, 154 Washington st., same town, Letter 554, Oct. 7 17

LIEBAU TO LINDENHAYN.

(Letter 423.)

SEPT. 16 17

In the first paragraph of a letter to Lindenhayn of the Bosch Magnet Co. Brooklyn, it is stated that "in our lists we find that a mechanic, Franz Schmitt, has been employed on experimental work for the Sperry Gyroscope Co. Brooklyn at $25 per week. Of course it is very desirable to find another for this man."

LIEBAU TO VOGELSANG.

(Letter 280.)

Aug. 26 17

Ludwig Vogelsang, 14 Chestnut street, Fitchburg, Mass., was informed by Liebau that in working in the lathe factory of Manning, Maxwell & Moore as an Austrian subject he was as amenable as a German subject to punishment for treason.

LIEBAU TO ECKARDT.

(Letter 569.)

Oct. 11 17

Franz Eckhardt, Box 185, Stiles, Pa., is told that he does not, under present circumstances, have to give up his position; "but this situation," continues Liebau, "would of course be changed as soon as your factory makes horseshoes again for the Allies."

LIEBAU TO MRS. BURLINGAME.

Carbon copy of a long letter in English, initialed "H. L." but not dated, to Mrs. Burlingame, Huntington, W. Va., describing as "high treason" the employment of Germans in factories where munitions of war are made for the Allies.

The foregoing are about all the letters found to have been written by Liebau savoring of coercion. The following communications indicate connections of Liebau with officials of the German government; also with Dr. K. O. Bertling and Dr. R. W. Kiessling, two Germans now interned on account of their activities. Dr. Bertling is known to have been very active in lecturing and canvassing for funds for the Bureau conducted by Liebau.

LIEBAU TO BERTLING.

(Letter 2585.)

Oct. 18/16.

Thanking Dr. K. O. Bertling, 43 Gramercy Park, for his valuable services in getting subscriptions for the Bureau, and especially for $250 from Mr. Ahnelt. Tells Dr. B. he can help further in that way if he goes armed with a personal introduction from the Ambassador.

BERNSTORFF TO BERTLING.

Under date of November 20, 1916, Dr. K. O. Bertling, who then gave his address as No. 137 east 21st street, wrote to Director R. Christians (supposedly of a German theater) at No. 105 east 15th street in regard to some theater tickets, and added:

"I quote from the following personal letter of introduction from our Ambassador:

" 'IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
" 'Washington, Nov. 4, 1916.

" 'Hereby I permit myself most warmly to recommend to you Dr. Karl O. Bertling, Director of the Amerika-Institute in Berlin. Dr. Bertling will take the liberty to lay before you some matters pertaining to the activities of the Central Bureau for German and Austro-Hungarian Workmen. This work, as well as the collection of funds for its further extension, are worthy of all sympathy.

" 'Dr. Bertling is authorized to receive contributions in any amount. Checks are to be made payable to "Hans Liebau, Treasurer."

" 'Yours, with special respect,

" '(Signed) J. VON BERNSTORFF.'

"As you will see, there is in this letter not a word about 'munition workers'; it relates solely to help for those workers (and through them their families) of the Central Powers who are in straitened circumstances, from the mechanic up into the ranks of the college-bred technician, engineer, etc.

"I deem it proper to bring this to your attention, in view of our previous efforts. Besides, I am proceeding on the proposition that in matters of this kind we should work together.

"(Signed) DR. BERTLING."

The foregoing letter was marked in the files as a copy.

GERMAN CONSULATE TO LIEBAU.

A number of letters from the German Consulate to Liebau arranging for places for Germans looking for work outside of munition factories.

PRINCE HATZFELDT TO LIEBAU.

November 7, 1916, Prince Hatzfeldt of the German Embassy wrote to Liebau asking him to find a young German (man) typewriter operator, efficient and reliable to work in the Embassy at $75 a month, and offering to pay his fare to Washington. In another letter to Liebau, dated Nov. 23, 1916, Prince Hatzfeldt promised him to speak to "Herr Heleine" in New York about three candidates for work.

VON PAPEN CIRCULAR.

Under of August 18, 1915, (letter 168) Liebau wrote to the German Club, Pittsburgh, Pa., saying: "The Central Station, undersigned, sends you herewith a communication from the Imperial German Military Attaché" relating to finding vacancies for workmen, etc., and asked for its distribution as widely as possible.

KIESSLING TO LIEBAU.

On August 27, 1915 Dr. Kiessling wrote Liebau as follows: "Dear Mr. Liebau: I introduced myself to Herr von Papen this forenoon and the matter has satisfactorily been put under way. Again I thank you for your kindness. Very respectfully, (Signed) Dr. R. W. Kiessling."

On Aug. 17 Dr. Kiessling wrote to Liebau asking for a position since he had been employed as clerk and chemist by the Dupont Powder Co. for years, but gave up the place; he knows 5 languages and worked in laboratories and patent attorneys' offices in Germany. He gave his address as No. 134 east 58th street.

On July 7, 1916, Dr. Kiessling, then at No. 489 Wilmot ave., Bridgeport, Conn., wrote to Liebau asking for employment, and in the opening paragraph of his letter, said: "In September of last year you were kind enough to put me in touch with Captain von P., after whose departure I worked here for Mr. Tauscher. This assignment closed on July 1." The remainder of the letter refers to the desire of Kiessling to find another position. Liebau referred him to Dr. Mannheimer, 41 west 51st street, and the latter referred him to Dr. Eckstein of the Prudential Co. of Newark.

TAUSCHER TO LIEBAU.

The following letter, dated July 7, 1916, written by Hans Tauscher to Liebau, throws an interesting side-light upon a Government witness who has been depended upon to give material evidence in the Tauscher case:

"The bearer, Mr. Wilhelm Schroeder, a German subject, was a Government witness against me at my trial, and because of the long investigation had lost his former position and all his means.

"As the statements of Mr. Schroeder have made a good impression on me and I am unable to give him a position, I will be very much obliged if you can help him in securing a suitable place as soon as possible. H. Tauscher."

Under date of July 12, Liebau wrote Tauscher that Schroeder had made a very good impression there, and he had placed him in touch with a contracting firm engaged in road building, where he would start in at $100 per month with a prospect of promotion to $150 per month, starting in within a couple of weeks. Liebau added—that in the meantime he had secured a place for Schroeder as cashier in a restaurant on Broad street. "So that Mr. Schroeder has been cared for temporarily in every possible way."

PRELEUTHNER TO LIEBAU.

On July 18, 1916, Julius von Preleuthner wrote from Bridgeport, Conn. to Liebau to secure him a position at $3,000 and upwards" per annum. Liebau wrote again on October 20 of that year, that he wished to see Liebau regarding the former's differences with the Bridgeport Projectile Co. Liebau wrote him that he would see him on Sunday, October 22 at his (Liebau's) private residence, 300 west 49th street, Apartment 610. (Preleuthner was called upon by this Office to explain his connection with von Papen, which he did so in a statement made here to me soon after the outbreak of war between the United States and Germany. Nothing was developed where it could be held.)

UNVERZAGT TO LIEBAU.

April 26, 1916, Charles H. Unverzagt, who gave his address as 103 Fifth Avenue, wrote to Liebau that "I belong to one of that branch of German-Americans who are much more pro-German than those who speak German." Investigation by this Office has shown that Unverzagt has been running German propaganda at the above address under the fictitious name of D. F. Penington."

BRUNO ERLER TO LIEBAU.

Bruno Erler, who may be the same "Herr Erler" mentioned in the Sander-Wunnenberg correspondence as one who solicited funds for German propaganda, wrote to Liebau under date of February 23, 1917 from 32 Harrison Street, Port Richmond, N. Y. that his (Erler's) wife was suffering from pneumonia and asked for the loan of $25; a request which Liebau promptly declined. From papers found in the Sander-Wunnenberg investigation, it would seem to be important to keep track of this man Erler.

LIEBAU TO BRUMDER.

(Letter 2597.)

Oct. 19/16.

Liebau wrote to William C. Brumder, Germania Building, Milwaukee, Wis., about Mr. Botschen, a young German from Milwaukee who twice tried to get to Germany as a stow-away, but was discovered each time. Liebau wished to secure a good and suitable position for the young German for the duration of the war "here in New York where he can in other ways be active in the service of the Fatherland," and desired to know of Brumder whether Botschen was an honest and unobjectionable man when he knew him. Liebau said he had convinced Botschen that any further attempts on his part to get to Germany would not be best for the German interest.

LAUTER TO LIEBAU.

Felix Lauter, in charge of the Bridgeport branch of the Liebau Bureau, wrote to Liebau on April 7, 1916 that he had made a contract with one Ludwig Wittig, an escaped Siberian prisoner, to give lectures in the Hungarian language about his experiences in Russian prisons, as he claimed to be the sole survivor among twelve fugitives who crossed the ice-fields of Siberia. Later correspondence showed that engaging Wittig was a mistake, as he had failed to turn over 35 per cent. of the proceeds of his lectures to the Bureau, as stipulated in the contract. In a former letter, written March 31, 1916, Lauter wrote to Liebau at follows: "A native American, Johnston M. Morrison, who had served in the United States Marine Corps and later worked on merchant ships plying between South America and England, as well as on ships for the British government, came to this office and said that he had been deported from England to America because he complained that on his last trip, on the high seas, cannon were mounted and he did not want to risk his life for England's 'insidiness.' A workman visited our office and complained that he had applied to certain firms for employment, but was always rejected when he told his name, which was KAISER. (It seems natural to us that certain business men should feel 'goose-flesh' at the sound of this name.)"

ZACHARIAS TO LIEBAU.

The letter from W. Zacharias, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of Liebau's Bureau, written to Liebau on May 7, 1916, evidently refers to one of a group of pro-German Hindus of this city, of whom Chandra Chakraborty and others have been apprehended in connection with pro-German plots. In one paragraph Zacharias said: "As a curiosity, we have to report that during this month a genuine Hindu, a student of medicine and hater of England, applied to our office for aid in his studies. He delivers lectures about his native land, illustrated with lantern slides, and because of the fact that in these lectures he shows up the dark side of British rule in India in lurid colors, the assistance formerly given him from that country has been cut off. If you can find a series of openings for this gentleman to give some lectures, it would please me personally to hear of it."

Correspondence in these files shows that Liebau gave notice to the various branches about February 6, 1917, that owing to the political situation between Germany and the United States, the Bureau would be closed.

Report made by L. S. Perkins; place where made, New York City; date when made, May 22, 1917; period for which made, May 19/17.
 Title of case and offense charged or nature of matter under investigation: In re Hans Liebau, German and Austro-Hungarian Activities.
 Copy of this report furnished to New York office.
 Statement of operations, evidence collected, names and addresses of persons interviewed, places visited, etc.

On April 7 of this year, Hans Liebau made a statement to me of his work in organizing and conducting his "Arbeiterhilfe" or workingmen's aid for German and Austro-Hungarian subjects who, through fear of punishment by their home governments or through conscientious scruples, left munition factories where they were employed in making war material for the Entente Allies. In his statement he mentioned the aid given him by R. H. Otto, former German Consul at Kingston, Jamaica, in raising funds to carry on the work of the Bureau. Said Otto was visited by me to-day at his home, No. 1152 Martine Ave. Plainfield, N. J., and interviewed about the matter. He frankly stated he has been all along suspected, that nearly all of the money given by him to the Bureau came from the German Government, and was given him by Heinrich F. Albert, privy councillor of the German Government and fiscal agent for said government in this country. I took along Liebau's book of cash receipts and disbursements and called his attention to each item wherein his name appeared, and he declared it to be a correct record of his dealings with the Bureau.

R. H. Otto is a man of breeding and intelligence, intensely pro-German in course, and very likely did not tell me all he knew about this Bureau. He admitted personal acquaintance with von Bernstorff, von Papen and others, but denied that they had made contributions to the Liebau fund. Liebau says that "first and last Otto gave him between $7,000 and $8,000 for the Bureau. The said cash book shows Otto's name opposite sums aggregating $19,000. Otto says that the money accredited as having been given by the German Government as well as other sums, passed through his hands, making near $25,000 which he handled for the Bureau. His statement follows:

"My full name is Rudolf Heinrich Otto; I was born at Pernambuco, Brazil, where my father was German Consul at the time, on March 25, 1888. I was taken to Germany when seven years old and raised and educated at Lübeck; traveled in England, Australia and the South Sea Islands; in 1898 settled in Jamaica; was appointed Austro-Hungarian Consul at that place in 1900, and German Consul in 1910, at Kingston. On the outbreak of the European War in August, 1914 I was interned in my own house for a month, and through the influence of the American Consul and the State Department I was released, and arrived in New York City in September. I came to Plainfield, New Jersey soon afterward and have remained here ever since except that my summers were spent at Deal Beach, N. J.

"I think it was early in August, 1915 that the German Government came to be published here its laws relating to German subjects who worked in munition factories on material for the Allies. As a guest of the German Club in New York City, 59th street, I was seated one day at a table when a discussion arose as to how to meet this situation of the German workers in munition factories, and how to help them. Dr. Heinrich F. Albert, agent of the German Government, was there, as well as other leading Germans of the City. I remember stating that I, as a guest of the United States, unalterably opposed to any course of action that was against the laws of this country, and that if a campaign were started to get these munition workers out of factories they must be allowed to get out of their own free will according to the dictates of their own conscience, and not through any coercion on our part. I do not recall that Dr. Albert or any one else of high authority in German matters expressed any opinion in the matter then. Yes, I remember Capt. von Papen was there then; don't think Capt. Boy-Ed was. I talked with Von Papen about this matter afterward and he agreed with me when I told him that for my own protection I absolutely would not undertake to run the Bureau myself, nor would I have anything to do with it unless it was square with the United States. No, von Papen did not suggest any other method.

"The way the Bureau for the relief of munition workers was started was this: I wrote to the president of the Technischer Verein (Society of German Technicians) asking him to select some suitable person to conduct a labor bureau, on a humanitarian basis only, for the Germans and Austro-Hungarians. He came to No. 141 Broadway where I had desk room. Mr. Lempke, the wireless man, to attend to my personal affairs, and brought with him Mr. Hans Liebau, the treasurer of the Society, whom I never before met. After a short conference, Mr. Liebau declared he was ready to undertake the management of such a Bureau. A sum amounting more than $1,000 had been promised me at the German Club, to start the Bureau. A few days later Treasurer Kuhlenskampf of the Club handed me the money, and I turned it over to Mr. Liebau. He asked me to look for a place, 136 Liberty street, which he had selected for an office, and I agreed to the location, but was never there again. Mr. Liebau came regularly to my office at 141 Broadway, reported progress and received funds from me. He ne a German journalist named Albrecht had been employed by him, on a commission basis, to solicit or raise funds for the Bureau; and that his cousin Dr. Karl O. Bertling, was also thus employed.

"It became evident that the voluntary contributions which were coming in would not suffice to carry on the work of the Bureau, and I was convinced that it was doing a good work, and that it should be carried on, even after the close of the war, to take care of the German unemployed; I also saw that it was relieving the German consular service of a great deal of labor and annoyance in looking after such people as had left the munition factories. So I wrote to the German Embassy, covering the whole matter, pointing out the relief afforded to consular officers, etc., and suggesting that the German Government subsidize the Arbeiterhilfe (workingmen's aid) by regular contribution of funds. I heard nothing of it for months, but one day received a telephone message from Dr. Heinrich F. Albert to see him at his office, No. 45 Broadway. When I arrived there he told me the German Embassy had authorized him to supply our Bureau with funds up to $2,000 per month. He then gave me $2,000 in greenbacks, mostly in $100 bills, and I have him a receipt therefore, for the Arbeiterhilfe," or Workingmen's Aid. Whenever I learned from Mr. Liebau that money was needed for the Bureau, I gave Dr. Albert twenty-four hours' notice and went and got the money from him. It was always a cash transaction; no checks were given by Dr. Albert for the Bureau. Albert seemed to take no interest in the Bureau itself.

"I think I received the first money from Dr. Albert in April, 1916. His last payment to me was $2,000 on January 31, 1917. Very soon afterward came the break of relations with Germany, and Mr. Liebau and I discussed the matter of closing the Bureau. We both decided that under the circumstances we could not properly continue the work. Soon afterward I saw Dr. Albert and told him that owing to the condition that had arisen, complications and difficulties would result from operating the Bureau, and he agreed with me. I never saw him again.

"Liebau assured me, at the outset, that he had given managers of branches of the Bureau instructions that no coercive methods were to be used with munition workers, and made it plain to all his subordinates that they must not foment strikes. I told him I would not have anything to do with the enterprise if it were not run rightly and legally.

"In all, I must have turned over to Liebau between $24,000 and $30,000. Other contributors besides the German Club whose funds were handed to me for the Bureau, because they knew me, were those of Otto Pollack-Parnegg and Paul Strauss of about $1,000 each.

"I have no records pertaining to the Bureau run by Mr. Liebau, and have nothing to conceal from the United States Government. Yes, I was well acquainted with Capt. Boy-Ed and Capt. von Papen; met them both at Kingston, Jamaica, before I came to the United States, but only in a social way. I never had any business dealings with them. I am a subject of the German Emperor, and have never made application for naturalization in the United States or any other country. Under the German law, subjects who are absent from that country a certain number of years automatically expatriate themselves, but I have taken legal steps to retain my German citizenship. At the same time, being a guest of this country I respect its laws and people, and have never done anything to their detriment."

Mr. Otto spoke of his anxiety relative to getting a permit to move around a title so that should he accidentally come within half a mile of an armory or commit other possible trespass against the regulations governing alien enemies, he would not be taken to an internment camp. I advised him to see the United States marshal at Jersey City or Newark.

(Thereupon the committee at 4.05 o'clock p. m. went into executive session, at the conclusion of which it adjourned until Saturday, February 1, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

REWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, at the call of the chairman, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226 Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman residing.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.
Senator OVERMAN. I think we had better proceed.

TESTIMONY OF MR. FRANCIS H. KINNICUTT.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Capt. LESTER. Where do you reside?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I reside at Far Hills, N. J.

Capt. LESTER. Are you connected with any Government agency of the United States?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir; I am assistant to the War Trade Board.

Capt. LESTER. How long have you occupied that position?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Since November, 1917.

Capt. LESTER. Have you made an investigation of the affairs of the Transatlantic Trust Co.?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have, sir, partly representing the War Trade Board, alone, and later, in cooperation with the Military Intelligence.

Capt. LESTER. Have you the permission of your superiors to come here and testify before this committee?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have.

Capt. LESTER. Have you in your possession various documents obtained from this Transatlantic Trust Co.?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have.

Capt. LESTER. Will you state to the committee the result of your investigation and such facts as you think are material with reference to the affairs of the Transatlantic Trust Co. from the time of its incorporation down to the present time?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

The Transatlantic Trust Co. received its certificate to do business as a New York banking institution on May 2, 1912. It was organized partly in 1911. In July, 1911, Baron Kornfeld, who was submanager of the General Creditbank of Budapest, came over to New York representing his bank and two other large Hungarian banks, the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of Discount and Exchange, of Budapest, and got in touch with certain New York banking interests, and they had a preliminary agreement. That was followed up by another preliminary agreement in Budapest on December 4, 1911. I want to be sure and get this exactly right, so I will refer to my notes here.

The preliminary agreement in New York said that it was proposed to establish a banking company known as the Hungarian General Trust Co., with the object of developing the commercial, industrial and financial interests between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Hungary; with the principal office in New York, and with such branches as should be from time to time decided on, especially it was to have an agency in Budapest, and it was stated that among the purposes was the furthering and protecting of the interests of Hungarians who may hereafter arrive in the United States, and that with this end in view the trust company was to be established throughout the United States and Canada, as many branches and representatives as could legally be done; that its business methods were to conform to business customs and usages among the Hungarians as far as possible, and it was to engage agents and employees who were conversant with the Hungarian language; that it was to aid in the protection of the legal rights of Hungarians in the United States, and where the persons were poor, that they would do it without fees; that it was to make arrangements to procure steamship tickets for Hungarians who were intending to return to Hungary at the lowest possible rate, and to make arrangements whereby Hungarians in the United States and Canada should be able to obtain Hungarian articles of merchandise, likewise Hungarian books and calendars. Five of the fourteen directors of the trust company were to be named by the Hungarian General Creditbank, and one director to each subscriber to the agreement.

This was a sort of a sketch. After this came an agreement between the founder banks in December at Budapest and then came the agreement of January 20, 1912, with the American stockholders, signed in New York.

Senator NELSON. The same year?

Mr. KINNICUTT. It ran over after the first of the year. This was January 20, 1912.

I will refer to this contract—it is very important—this contract signed on January 20, in New York.

Senator NELSON. 1912?

Mr. KINNICUTT. 1912. This was entered into between three Hungarian banks and the different American interests, and I will show you them if you want them.

Senator NELSON. Who are the American interests?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The American interests are Speyer & Co., A. Belmont & Co., Hallgarten & Co., and the United States Mortgage & Trust Co., each of which had 400 shares. H. Rieman Duval had 100 shares, and Walter G. Oakman, 100 shares, James G. Cannon, A. G. Gerster, Gustav Leve, and Morris Cukor, and Arnold Somlyó, each 10 shares. The majority of stock was held by these three Hungarian banks, the General Creditbank, 2,983 shares, the Hungarian Commercial Bank of Budapest, 1,269 shares, and the Hungarian Count & Exchange Bank 878 shares.

Senator NELSON. What was the aggregate amount of the stock?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Seven thousand shares.

Senator NELSON. And the par value?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The par value was $150 per share.

Senator NELSON. Seven thousand shares at a par value of $150 per share?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Capt. LESTER. Was there not some stipulation in the contract which put a limitation upon the amount of American capital to be invested at any time in the company?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes. In the agreement which I shall refer to in moment it is stated that at no time should the American holdings exceed 30 per cent.

Senator NELSON. Was this formed into a corporation under our laws in this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes; New York State law.

Senator NELSON. What was it called?

Mr. KINNICUTT. It was finally called the Transatlantic Trust Co.

Senator NELSON. At that time?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Well, they had two names. They were calling the Danube Trust Co. and the Hungarian General Trust Co.

Senator NELSON. What name did they finally give it?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They finally gave it the name of the Transatlantic Trust Co., but in these agreements it was referred to by different names.

Senator NELSON. And it was incorporated under the laws of New York, was it not?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Capt. LESTER. Have you the date of the incorporation there?

Mr. KINNICUTT. No; I have not. I have never seen the certificate of incorporation, but I have seen the certificate of the superintendent of banks allowing it to begin business, and that bears date May 2, 1912.

Senator NELSON. Have you looked up the question whether they had a right to be incorporated under the laws of this country, where only 30 per cent of the stock was owned by people here, and the rest of the stock was held over in Hungary? Have you examined that question, whether they had a right to incorporate under those conditions?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have not examined that question, sir. I do know that there was a petition made to the attorney general of the State of New York shortly after the bank began business, claiming that it was an illegal corporation, organized for anti-American purposes, and after consideration that petition was dismissed by the attorney general.

Senator OVERMAN. When was that filed?

Mr. KINNICUTT. That was in 1912.

Senator OVERMAN. Before the war?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Oh, yes, before the war; in 1912 or 1913.

Senator OVERMAN. When did they actually begin business?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They began business May 2, 1912.

I want to refer briefly to certain other matters in this American stockholders' agreement. The signers of this agreement undertook, not legally, at least as a matter of good faith between themselves, that it was their intention that none of the following transactions should be undertaken by the trust company without the consent of the three founder banks in Budapest.

Senator NELSON. That was not a trust company any longer!

Mr. KINNICUTT. It was not incorporated yet. It was a stockholders agreement.

Senator NELSON. Go ahead.

Mr. KINNICUTT. They were not to do various things, such as to undertake new and special branches of business.

Senator NELSON. To come down to the purposes of the corporation, what was the purpose as outlined in their articles of incorporation? What was their business?

Mr. KINNICUTT. If you will pardon me, sir, I have already said. Shall I repeat it?

Senator NELSON. That related to those preliminary agreements. I mean when they really incorporated in this country, what was the business of the corporation to be, as explained in the articles of incorporation?

Mr. KINNICUTT. It was to be just a trust company under the laws of the State of New York, the same as any other trust company.

Senator NELSON. It is a trust company?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. And it was called one?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The Transatlantic Trust Co.

Now, it was stated right in this stockholders' agreement that the three founder banks—that the object was to further the business that the business of the trust company was the enforcement and protection of the interests of Hungarians who then resided or who hereafter arrive in the United States of America or Canada. It was understood that so far as this could legally be done, there were to be appointed agents and correspondents of the trust company.

Senator NELSON. You have given that.

Mr. KINNICUTT. That was in response to your request. In order to cover the expenses—this I have not given—in order to cover expenses growing out of the purposes for which the trust company was reorganized, and the expenses connected with the organization, the founder banks assumed the obligation either to deposit with said trust company the sum of 4,000,000 crowns in Hungarian money for four years without interest, or at the option of the bank to pay said four years to pay to said trust company interest at 4½ per cent on the said $800,000.

The banks further obligate themselves, so far as this may be legally done, to secure a contract between the said trust company and the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, according to the terms of which the said trust company shall be appointed general agent in the United States and Canada for the said postal savings bank from the date of the organization.

Now, the terms of the contract between the said trust company and the Postal Savings Bank and the terms of the contract between the said trust company and the savings bank, subject to the approval of the United States Treasury, was to deposit with the said savings bank, within four years the sum of 4,000,000 crowns (American money), at only one

I may say here, though it is not in this contract, that there was another such agreement, by which this $800,000 had to be invested in Hungarian Government bonds, which was done, but the trust company got back the interest from those bonds, so that it was the same thing as if they had it on deposit, except that they were compelled to invest in that way.

Senator NELSON. What operations did they carry on in this country?

(At this point the witness made a statement to the committee which the reporter was directed not to take down.)

Mr. KINNICUTT (continuing). This contract of December 4 is entered into between the founder banks and those which have been mentioned above, and it is also in the evidence, and that is also in the nature of a preliminary agreement. It is nothing final, and it provides substantially that cognizance is taken of the memorial to be presented to the Hungarian department of finance and the Hungarian royal department of commerce and the subparticipation to be permitted out of the shares of the banks to be established in America by the founding institutions. These three banks already mentioned, of Budapest, are to allow a certain subparticipation, and among these, without going into them in detail, is a subparticipation by the Hungarian Agrarian Revenue Bank and the Central Creditbank, the Hungarian money institutions, and then it says that in giving these subparticipations they shall only be good for 10 years, and that the principal banks are allowed to subdivide them, are allowed to retain the voting power, and are to be allowed to give certain participations to American institutions with what is called a block arrangement for four years—I suppose they meant they could not sell the stock for four years—and it provided that the sum of these subparticipations should not exceed 30 per cent of the total number of shares of the company.

According to an agreement with the Hungarian royal department of finance, if the American institution did not take up the 30 per cent, it goes on to provide that the founder banks would have the same privilege of giving subparticipations for not longer than four years.

Then this preliminary agreement mentions that a deposit free of interest is to be given by the Hungarian royal department of finance to the Hungarian General Creditbank to be distributed between the founding institutions in proportion to their quotas, and then it was to be handed over—not handed over as a deposit—to the American bank, but they were to allow the full 4½ per cent interest to the American bank. As a matter of fact what happened was, it went through the books simply as a deposit and then went back again.

Then this agreement goes on to provide how the board of directors in America is to be constituted. This is all before the stockholders' agreement. It was provided that Morris Sukor, Sam Konig, Dr. J. J. Gerster, Consul General Alexander Nuber, Leo Frederick, and Istav Leve were to be on the American board, and then there was to be a local committee in Budapest, which was to have certain powers, not defined, of regulation; and among its members were to be various members of these different founder banks and certain Government officials such as the Government emigration commissioner, and also the director of the Hungarian Royal Museum, which is an intelligence office for commercial purposes at Budapest.

The officials of the bank were to be appointed partly out of officials of the founding institutions, and partly on the spot, and said that the main office of the bank was to be in New York, banking district, and they were to have a branch office in the Hungarian colony, between Sixtieth and Seventieth Streets. As a matter of fact the branch office was finally established farther down Seventh Street and Avenue A, which is also a Hungarian colony.

After that in date comes the American stockholders' agreement that I have already mentioned, but I have taken this order because I wanted to give the two Hungarian contracts together.

Now comes the main Hungarian document, and the title is significant. It says it is called an agreement subject to the approval of the royal Hungarian ministers of commerce and the interior and of finance, between the Royal Hungarian Savings Bank on the one hand and the founders of the Hungarian financial institution to be established in the territory of the United States of America, namely the three Hungarian banks. Under the terms of their agreement the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank was to constitute the bank to be established in America as its exclusive representative in the United States of America for 10 years from the organization of the bank, but the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank is entitled to give instructions from the Royal Hungarian Government to give immediate notice of the discontinuance of this agreement at any time.

The contract goes on to provide that the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank will support the new bank against unfair competition of other firms or private firms who are engaged in the business of money remittances of immigrants, and will on request of the proposed bank in case of necessity exclude from its check and clearing business such firms, and to the same end will raise the permanent deposit required of competitors.

The founder banks agree that the proposed bank in America shall make the remittances of immigrants through the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, unless the transmitter otherwise expressly agrees.

(At 11.15 o'clock a. m. the subcommittee took a recess for 10 minutes. At the expiration of the recess the subcommittee reconvened.)

Senator OVERMAN. Try to hurry on.

Mr. KINNICUTT. These contracts are very involved. I am continuing on this agreement between these Hungarian banks and the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, which later was a part of the Government, just like our postal savings bank, the share-stock being owned by the Hungarian Government.

It provided for certain commissions that the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank was allowed to receive for forwarding money. The contract goes on to provide that the bank in New York will get these remittances from the bank in Budapest, which was to be established in Hungary. The bank was to collect the money in the different languages, showing the bank in New York was to be established in Hungary. The bank in New York was to collect the money in the different languages, showing this money-forwarding business.

Senator OVERMAN. The purpose was to get all the immigrants' money out of this country into Hungary, was it not?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir. And the founding banks agreed that the new bank should attend to the collection of saving deposits for the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank so far as permitted by American law, so that they were handling not only the ordinary remittances for immigrants, but also deposits for the National Postal Savings Bank in Hungary.

They agreed that the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank could deposit this 4,000,000 crowns for the purpose of this business, that is to stimulate and aid it, during the term of the contract, which amount was to be raised to 5,000,000 crowns if the total yearly turnover of the new bank with the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank should reach more than 40,000,000 crowns. It actually reached 8,500,000 in one year, in the banner year, which was 1916.

Senator OVERMAN. What connection are you going to show with German propaganda?

Mr. KINNICUTT. This company was organized to take care of this money forwarding business, and stimulate it in every way, and it is also very clear in these preliminary agreements that it was to serve other purposes. The matter of buying steamship tickets for immigrants and encouraging remigration is expressly mentioned. It is mentioned repeatedly that it was to look after the Hungarians in all kinds of ways in the United States, but the real character of the institution came out when it began to operate as soon as the war broke out.

Senator NELSON. Tell us that and do not read all that matter. We are busy men and we can not afford to stay here.

Mr. KINNICUTT. I beg your pardon.

Senator NELSON. Tell us in your own way.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes; I am all through with the papers. They started out from the beginning to be very active to aid the central powers, in helping them to get subscriptions to their war loan bonds. They also acted as the agent for Germany under direct instructions from the German Embassy, and the German consulates were ordered to refer to the Transatlantic Trust Company, as were all the Hungarian consulates all over the country, and they were urged all the time to do this very thing, which was the original intention of the bank, to get all the savings of the immigrants over, that they possibly could. Pirnitzer wrote to Zweidenek, the counselor of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, and asked him to have a definite order to all the consulates all over the country to encourage this money-forwarding business on the ground that it was a national interest of Austria-Hungary in the war to get every cent they could over to that country, which request he complied with, and issued an official order to all the consulates throughout the country; and letters from these consulates show that they obeyed these orders with great enthusiasm, and got an enormous amount. And besides that they were very active in helping the Austro-Hungarian Government to get subscriptions to the war loan bonds.

I just want to read this one sentence in a letter written by Pirnitzer to Hossenfelder, July 26, 1911:

Accept my sincere thanks for your kind offer to further the aims and the purposes of my bank.

He states that his company is—an establishment of Austrian and German principal banks, and that it is entirely in the service of the central powers.

Capt. LESTER. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. KINNICUTT. July 26, 1916.

Capt. LESTER. Who was Pirnitzer?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Mr. Pirnitzer was the president of this bank. He had been a commercial attaché in Hungary, and had represented the Government in China, Alaska, and Russia, and was at one time in the ministry of commerce. He was also a reserve officer in the Austrian Army. He is now interned at Oglethorpe, since the Alien Property Custodian took charge of the trust company in July. Pirnitzer was interned as the result of the investigation of Mr. Sprague of the Alien Enemy Bureau, and his secretary also was mentioned together with a man named Steer, said to have been formerly private secretary of the Emperor Francis Joseph. He was in the employ of the Transatlantic Trust Co., and the employees of the trust company were largely Hungarians.

Now, Pirnitzer was undoubtedly employed to give information of all kinds to the Austrian Government, outside of these functions of the bank as a whole, to promote this export of savings, to help in war-loan bonds, to promote remigration to Hungary. Pirnitzer and possibly some subordinates were also very active in the interest of the Austro-Hungarian Government. They prepared all kinds of reports to Dumba and Zweidenek; for instance, on the loans that were made by the United States to the entente powers; and he gave accurate advice as to how to float their war-loan bonds, discussed political questions, such as the sinking of the Lusitania, and advised the embassy pretty generally, continuously.

Senator NELSON. Well, did they succeed in floating much of the Austro-Hungarian loan and the German loan in this country through this bank?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The figures were not very startling. They were about fourteen millions, or something like that.

Senator NELSON. Fourteen million dollars or kronen?

Mr. KINNICUTT. If you will allow me, that is right in my report. I will get that figure. It is $14,000,000, I think. The total export of savings was about 135,000,000 kronen during the first three years of the European war.

Senator NELSON. What is the normal rate of the kronen compared with our money?

Mr. KINNICUTT. It was 20 cents just before the war. It went down to about 10 cents.

Senator NELSON. About 20 cents; about equivalent to a franc?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Before the war?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir. I may say that some of these letters show that Mr. Pirnitzer was in close touch with von Rintelen. One of the letters is in regard to a war invention that a certain man named Gates wanted to sell. Pirnitzer was told by the Austrian Embassy to take care of one of those men, a man named Fetter who was trying to show that munitions and guns were being carried on the Lusitania, and the Austrian Embassy said that man had been giving them a lot of bother, and that he had not produced anything, but to be very careful in handling him not to give him anything unless he gave information of value. So that it is fairly obvious that Pirnitzer was used by the embassy as a political agent or intelligence officer.

Senator NELSON. Did they carry on any activity, this trust company, in connection with Hungarian employees in munition plants and other plants, industrial plants in this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. In one of Pirnitzer's reports he states that he did not think it was worth while to get employment for Hungarian immigrants except those who had left employment in munition factories, but there were several particulars in which the trust company, after the war, probably violated the enemy-trading act. I am speaking now of the period before the Government took charge of the institution. They continued to pay interest on these war loan bonds to Germany after we were in the war. They also allowed some of the German war loan bonds to be sold.

Senator NELSON. After we entered the war?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, and issued new certificates; they necessarily representing in some way the foreign powers, or they would not have had the authority to issue new certificates; and they did that after we were in the war.

Senator NELSON. When did the Government take over the trust company?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Five directors were appointed by the Alien Property Custodian some time in March, 1918, and several more, giving a majority of the board, were appointed in May, and in July, 1918, the Alien Property Custodian took over the business, and it was shortly after that that Pirnitzer was interned.

Senator NELSON. It is now in the hands of the custodian?

Mr. KINNICUTT. It is now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian and is being liquidated.

Another thing that the trust company did was to renew and also make some new loans after we were in the war, on the collateral of these enemy war loan bonds.

One or two things in connection with this transmission of emigrant savings touched the propaganda question. Another thing is the effort they made to uphold the loyalty of the immigrants to the old country. They even went so far as to get the dean of the subsidized Hungarian Church in this country to send out a circular letter to all of these clergymen in this country, who received part of their salaries from the Austrian consul, to speak to their congregations from the pulpit urging them to send remittances to the Transatlantic Trust Co., putting in that it was for the sake of the poor war sufferers in the land of their birth.

(One of the letters referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

REFORMATUS HIRADO.

OFFICIAL PART.

Dr. Zoltan Kuthy, Dean of the Eastern Diocese has addressed this week the following letter to the congregation and ministers of the American Eastern Diocese:

OCTOBER 27, 1914

69/1914

Circular letter to the congregations and Reverend Corps of Clergymen of Eastern Diocese.

Reverend Ministers,

I request you and instruct you officially that you read my following proclamation during church services next Sunday, November 1, forenoon from church pulpit.

I report to the congregation that the Dean of our Diocese the Very Reverend Dr. Zoltan Kuthy, sent to me the following official letter to be read in church:

Beloved Brother Co-Religionists:

Your Superior Church Authority sends you a message, the Dean of your Diocese. He sends you the message that our sweet Hungarian Fatherland is in danger. All her arm bearing sons have enrolled under the flag and if 100,000 are awaiting him, he takes his healthy life with determined readiness into the fire of the battle with this exclamation: We will either triumph or we will die for the Fatherland! But, out in the battle only men fall. They left at home wives, children and old people must live, and they, perhaps are starving because the bread-winner has gone to heroic battle—for all of us! But sorrow and poverty are at home. Children's lips are asking bread from mothers. Is it not true that you who are at home and can give enough bread to your children are happy in the thought? O, do you hear across the sea how great the ocean is, that many hundred thousands of poor Hungarians are exclaiming to you; Help us, you who are in America! Brothers! Those who have at home parents, children, brothers or relatives, in this far land do not forget them; send them money, the more munificently, the more quickly and the sooner, because he is not an Hungarian who in these awful days deserts his own people and allows his own blood relatives to be in misery. He who sends money home shall send it through The Transatlantic Trust Company, (207 Second Avenue, New York), the money sending blanks of which after this service, will be distributed at the church door, and which money substitution is in every respect reliable and which is officially recommended also by the support of our churches by the Most Reverend and Right Honorable Presidency of the Conventus. Brothers! Hear my words, and then act! Send money home through the Transatlantic Trust Company to members of your families in Hungary, to your relatives and every cent and every dollars of yours will be blessed!

All of you are greeted with love by:

DR. ZOLTAN KUTHY,

The Dean of the American Eastern Reformed Diocese

Mr. KINNICUTT. In one letter Pirnitzer writes to the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank or to the minister of finance—he reported both—recommending ways and means for stimulating this particular money-forwarding business among a particular class of Hungarians, namely the Croats. He said the way to do that is to subsidize Croatian newspapers, wherever they can be bought up. The second way is to reorganize the clergy in the United States to see that disciplined monks are got to work over there, among the immigrants who will get the savings over in the way that they want.

As to subsidization of newspapers, Pirnitzer himself admitted in my examination that a small paper called the Krajan, which is a Roumanian paper, received a subsidy at his bank of $50 a month. He also admitted that in 1913 he was instructed by the Hungarian Government to try to purchase the Szabadsag, which is the most important Hungarian paper in the United States (except possibly the Nepszava), published in Cleveland, but he found they asked too much for it and did not purchase.

I have several telegrams here from the Austrian Government to Pirnitzer and a letter in reply from Pirnitzer in which he said:

had not been able to make the financial arrangements with the Szabadsag that he was instructed to, because somebody representing the Szabadsag had gone over to Hungary, but Pirnitzer says the negotiations there fell through and the thing was left in the air, and we have simply Pirnitzer's statement that no control ever was brought.

Senator NELSON. To sum up, the activity of this company can be summed up under two heads: First, it was to gather up the savings of Hungarians in this country and send them over to the old country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. And the next thing was to float as much of the loans of the central powers, the bonds of the Germans and Austro-Hungarians, as they could in this country

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Those were the main activities?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. You stated just now that they had taken all the churches, and certain preachers were preaching and were paid by the government, or the government paid the salaries of the preachers?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The evidence is that the salaries came through Consul Nuber and the consulate at Pittsburgh. But I want to be perfectly fair there. There is some evidence by these gentlemen that the money really came from the Conventus, which is the executive body of the Calvinist Church of Hungary. It is stated, however, that the Calvinist Church, like all other churches in Hungary, received a subsidy from the government. It is supposed to be for educational purposes.

Senator OVERMAN. This church is under control of the government?

Mr. KINNICUTT. No; apparently only under the control of what is called the Conventus, which is the executive body of the Calvinist Church.

Senator OVERMAN. And the government controls that?

Mr. KINNICUTT. How far the government controls that we do not know.

Senator OVERMAN. How many ministers do they have in this country, do you know?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They sent over and established about 38 of those churches under the direct jurisdiction of this Calvinist Church. Before that time the people were getting along very well with establishing their own churches. Then a certain man named Count Degenfeld in 1904 decided to separate these Hungarians who had either established their own churches or gone in with the Presbyterians or other Protestant denominations, and established new churches under the direct jurisdiction of the Conventus, and those are the clergymen whose salaries were paid in part by the government.

Senator OVERMAN. The Conventus is a church organized in Hungary?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. And to some extent that is controlled by the government?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Well, we know that these gentlemen here had to make reports—at least there is evidence that they had to make reports—to the government, although they deny it. Count Degener was closely related to the late prime minister of Hungary, Tisza; there is evidence also that Consul Nuber stated at one time to a man named John Scotti, who was one of the employees of the Transatlantic Trust Co., that the government was interested in the clergymen.

Senator NELSON. These Hungarian churches come under the auspices of the Hungarian Government. The independent churches are all Catholic, are they not?

Mr. KINNICUTT. No, sir; on the contrary, this particular body of churches I am speaking of is Calvinist—Protestant.

Senator NELSON. In this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes. There are also, of course, a great many Hungarians who are Catholic.

Senator NELSON. But the church in the old country, under the auspices of the government, is Catholic?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The established national church is Catholic.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is what I mean.

Senator OVERMAN. Then this Calvinist Church has no connection with the government?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Only in the sense that all churches of any description or denomination are to a certain extent regulated by the government in Austria-Hungary. They all get subsidies for educational purposes, and wherever they have a bishop, the bishop sits in the House of Lords. There is a certain connection, but I would not say they are absolutely controlled.

I want to say one word more about the priests. The Transatlantic Trust Co. used them like drummers, and paid them a commission on the immigrant savings for export.

Senator NELSON. Will you state how many millions of dollars of bonds they floated in this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have got a paper here, but I have misplaced it with a memorandum of that.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us how many millions of dollars they sent back to Austro-Hungary under the auspices of this bank?

Mr. KINNICUTT. In savings?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. KINNICUTT. How many, until the government took possession of them, from the time they were organized?

Senator NELSON. From the beginning.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes; from the time they were organized; I have it here. I have it by years, I admit.

Senator NELSON. Give it by years.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Shall I give it by millions?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; give it that way.

Mr. KINNICUTT. In 1912, 2,000,000 kronen; in 1913, 19,000,000; in 1914, 14,000,000; in 1915, 52,000,000; in 1916, 68,000,000; in 1917 it dropped to 8,000,000. The amounts as to Germany were very small amounts until after the beginning of the war, when in 1916 they sent over 2,000,000 marks to Germany; but relatively they were small. In 1917 it was 1,000,000.

Senator NELSON. I wish you would have your clerk add that up so that we can get the total amount.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. The total amount of Hungarian and the total amount of German money.

Mr. KINNICUTT. That can very readily be done.

Senator OVERMAN. That makes 163,000,000 kronen.

Senator NELSON. Divide that by 5 and it will give the amount in dollars.

Senator OVERMAN. It is about $30,000,000, then.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Would it interest you to know what profits they made on this, I mean during the war?

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know what we have to do about profits.

Mr. KINNICUTT. The trust company always maintained that they were a great boon to the immigrant because they shut out these private banks; but the evidence shows that in the war they were charging just what everybody else was, and they were making very handsome commissions, sometimes over 10 per cent. They would make $1 on 100 kronen.

Senator OVERMAN. What did they do with the profits? Did they declare dividends?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They declared dividends at times. They did not in the first two or three years, but they declared dividends at one time. There was always a fight going on about that. First, they always wanted to refrain from declaring dividends, and always wanted to build up the business; and here is a very important thing, that the minute this money forwarding business was stopped, then the bank was nothing. They began to lose money at the rate of $60,000 a year, and Pirnitzer said he had a hidden profit out of the money forwarding which was about $300,000, which would be enough to tide them over for two or three years; and in the meantime the policy was to make the Hungarians, who had formerly used the trust company only as a conduit pipe in transmitting the money deposited in the bank, make deposits in the trust company, giving them the understanding that they would forward the money as soon as they could after peace was declared, and in that way they did get a considerable accumulation, about $3,000,000 of deposits, just while they could not send the money over; and he says at the end of the war the accumulated savings of the Hungarians will reach about $100,000,000, and the flow will begin again with redoubled vigor; and he prides himself, in the reports to the minister, on having reassured the immigrants here when they were worried, in the first part of the war, about sending their savings over, that by getting an official statement from the ministry in Hungary it reassured them, so that the flow could continue during the war and be redoubled after the war.

Senator NELSON. Do you know what those people are doing with their money?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The evidence is, I believe, that they are beginning to deposit in American banks, which is a very desirable end.

Senator NELSON. These deposits that were made during the war, were they taken over by the Alien Property Custodian, too?

Mr. KINNICUTT. No; the deposits were not touched. They are now being distributed. The bank is in process of liquidation and the depositors are drawing out their deposits. There is evidence that movement is starting up all over the country among the private bankers and all kinds of banks, getting ready for this rush of immigrants' money to Europe as soon as the bars are let down; and I add, Pirnitzer refers to the situation after the war, and he tries to induce the authorities, instead of disrupting this institution which was absolutely controlled by these Hungarian banks, to let it live and to Americanize it, and he said, instead of using it as an instrument to promote remigration and the taking up of the savings in Europe, to use it as an American concern to prevent remigration instead of promoting remigration from America, but he did not explain how it was going to be done, how he was going to get around the fact that the stock would still be owned under these binding contracts by the three Hungarian banks, and all coupled up with the Austro-Hungarian Government. It was that which decided that it must be liquidated.

Senator NELSON. They have, then, liquidated a foreign institution under American garb?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Absolutely.

Senator NELSON. Seventy per cent of the stock being owned by foreigners?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And only 30 per cent owned by the people of this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. What was the ruling of the Attorney General when the petition was made to dissolve it on the ground that it was only 30 per cent American owned?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I do not know that that evidence was before him, and I do not know on what grounds it was dismissed; but the subsidy is the thing I really have not touched on sufficiently. The subsidy was $1,600,000 American money.

Senator NELSON. From the Government?

Mr. KINNICUTT. From the Hungarian Government; and I have the proof that every cent of that was a real subsidy; that it was not a loan. Pirnitzer pretended at first, a lot of Hungarian banks who were putting capital in American banks; not at all. I am not, of course, referring to the capital stock, but I am referring to the $1,600,000, half of which came from the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, a share of the stock of which is owned by the Government, and the other half from the ministry of finance; and through all these arguments goes the fact that they are to do certain things in consideration of these sums, and it is to promote the forwarding of the immigrants' savings.

The next most important thing was to promote remigration. There is a very clever essay by Pirnitzer on this subject, how Hungary is to stimulate remigration after the war, and making the very canny suggestion that they had better not put up the bars preventing immigration into this country right away, because there is a vast number of Hungarians who seek to remigrate, and it is much better not to put up the bars and not let them go back than they get here than it is to put up the bars first. He said if you put up the bars first that they will fear to be caught over there and consequently will not go over.

I want to bring out about the remigration. That was a very important function of the Transatlantic Trust Co. He was told to send over a list of all these Hungarians, not only for the purposes of the business of money forwarding but so that they would have them there to sell land to these Hungarians and induce them to send over deposits to buy that land, from America. And they had certain semi-Government institutions and credit associations and banks, which were organized by the Government for the purpose of promoting that.

Pirnitzer says in this report, when there were hard times over here and the immigrants did not come over, that the Hungarian Government did not manage the situation very cleverly; that the land had gone up materially, and peasants could not get land as they hoped to do, and the peasants came back to America. He said, "This time we will not make that mistake. We will use them in the mines, etc.; but we have got to see that they have such things as they have become accustomed to in America. They like the newspapers and the social life, and we have got to provide those things so that they will be satisfied, and we will hold on to them."

Senator NELSON. I gather from your statement that the prime object of this institution was to get all the money that the Hungarians earned in this country and saved, sent over there to the old country to be utilized?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Instead of being utilized in this country?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes.

Senator NELSON. To have it all go over there as fast as they earned it and could save it?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes; that was merely accentuated by the war conditions. That was always the purpose of it.

Senator NELSON. And they succeeded in getting most of it, did they not?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They were wonderfully successful. The methods were extremely objectionable. They not only used these priests—who were paid by the consuls, wherever the money came from—but they used the most offensive kind of propaganda. Pirnitzer says that in one year he spent $120,000 in advertisements in foreign-language papers and in printed circulars in the foreign languages in the different dialects they had, just in circularizing; and in 1915, as he says in one of his official reports, they already had 1,005 "confidential agents," as he calls them, and these men spread themselves out through the Hungarian colonies all over the United States. They were not all traveling agents. Most of them were located in some colony, but there were also traveling agents. One of those agents was arrested at Elyria, Ohio, and was arrested because—and I have plenty of proof of it here—he was persuading Hungarians to sell Liberty Bonds and send the money to the Transatlantic Trust Co. to be held until after the war, when, he assured these people, it would be sent over to Hungary; and he was caught getting money out of good American banks and putting it into the Transatlantic Trust Co. He was quoted as saying that that was the safest place for it, because Germany and Austria were going to win the war, intimating that it would not be safe in that case in American banks; that you could not tell what was going to happen to an American bank. The evidence on that was so strong that he was interned. There is correspondence between this man and John Scotti, and while Scotti is a minor character in this drama, he was a pretty active individual.

He was head of their business development department, and was around seeing all these priests, and getting new agents everywhere all over the country, and he was very closely in touch with the consulates, and he admits the fact that after we had had the break with Austria, after we had gone into the war with Germany and broken off diplomatic relations with Austria, he received $1,000 from the Austrian consulate. He said that was for giving information about immigrants, but there was not any immigration at that time and he undoubtedly furnished a great deal of information to the Hungarian consulates and embassy, such as they desired, whatever it was, and he was one of the instruments in establishing this army of confidential agents, because he certainly knew his subject, he knew the habits of the Hungarian immigrants and knew how to get at them, and he was very active in this way.

Senator NELSON. And these agents were to solicit money to be sent to Hungary?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir. That was their sole purpose. They got a commission of 25 cents on 100 kronen; every 100 kronen they got 25 cents; so that that proves that it was not expressly for the trust company; but on this propaganda alone he admits that in 1914 they spent $50,000, and in 1916 they spent $120,000, which included written propaganda for the war loans as well as the money for forwarding; but they were handling both together.

Senator NELSON. Were they engaged in any activity of mobilizing the Hungarian labor in this country in any shape?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have no evidence of that.

Senator NELSON. What?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have no evidence that they were doing that. As I have already stated, President Pirnitzer made formal reports on this political question to the embassy, and he continued to write to Dr. Dumba after Dumba had gone back to Vienna.

Senator OVERMAN. He was acting as a spy. He was giving information to the enemy?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I can only say that the evidence was sufficient to send him to Oglethorpe.

Capt. LESTER. Have you stated the bond subscriptions obtained by the Transatlantic Trust Co. for Germany and Austria?

Mr. KINNICUTT. No; that is the figure I will have to get. It is not very large; not as large as some of the others.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else, Capt. Lester?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; that is all.

Mr. KINNICUTT. Mr. Steiner has a suggestion to make.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else you want to state, Mr. Kinnicutt?

Mr. KINNICUTT. That is only a circular sent out for the purpose of liquidating the trust company [indicating paper]. I have said all the time, and I simply want to say this, that I feel that a company that is organized by a foreign Government in this way, particularly a banking institution, is a very grave danger whatever it is.

subsidized in this way, because you have the great power of a bank combined with the great power of a foreign Government, and the Government goes on forever, and the bank goes on forever, and every year they want to do one thing and another year they want to do another; and I sincerely hope that this bank will be dissolved legally and finally before peace is declared and before the bars are let down.

Senator NELSON. It seems to me that they could not have been legally incorporated in this country.

Mr. KINNICUTT. You mean with reference to the stock?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. KINNICUTT. I have not the least evidence, Senator.

Senator NELSON. Under what law were they incorporated; the laws of the State of New York?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Under the laws of the State of New York.

Senator NELSON. Have you looked up those laws, and do you know whether foreigners can incorporate under them? Can a corporation be formed where the stock is owned by foreigners?

Senator OVERMAN. I think it is against public policy under the constitution.

Mr. KINNICUTT. With reference to the 30 per cent and 70 per cent stock ownership, it was my impression that there was no law preventing that.

Senator OVERMAN. Does Mr. Steiner want to tell anything?

Mr. STEINER. Indeed, I do.

Mr. KINNICUTT. I should say that Mr. Steiner has been tremendously interested in the immigration question, and he might perhaps like to be guided as to what you want. I think he ought to be made to understand that it is in relation to this trust company, probably, if you want information, because he has so much information and such valuable information that it might branch out into other subjects. If you will give a little direction as to exactly where he is to draw the line I think it will be a good idea.

STATEMENT OF MR. LAJOS STEINER.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Mr. STEINER. There has been systematic work conducted in this country as to immigrants, and it is being conducted so now, not only during the war but at least during the last three decades, 30 years, ever since our newly arrived immigrants have consisted largely of tillers of the soil.

Senator OVERMAN. How long have you been in this country?

Mr. STEINER. Twenty-seven years.

Senator OVERMAN. You are a naturalized American citizen?

Mr. STEINER. I was naturalized at the earliest possible moment.

Senator NELSON. Where do you live?

Mr. STEINER. In Chicago, Ill.

Senator NELSON. Where were you born, in Germany?

Mr. STEINER. I was born in Hungary.

Senator NELSON. Are you a Hungarian?

Mr. STEINER. I am an American.

Senator NELSON. I mean by birth; are you a German by birth or a Hungarian?

Mr. STEINER. Hungarian; Magyar.

Senator NELSON. Hungarian is your native language?

Mr. STEINER. That is my native language.

Senator NELSON. Go on.

Mr. STEINER. Ever since we have been receiving peasant immigrants from Europe, systematic work has been conducted to prevent the Americanization of this sort of people, and induce them to compel them, to export their savings habitually, immediately at pay day. They are induced to return to their native countries to engage in agriculture. These tillers of the soil, most of whom are Hungarian, Italian, and Slav peasants, realize that industrial work will not provide for them in old age.

The bad example furnished by the American land sharks has scared away the bulk of such immigrants from agricultural ventures in the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. What has scared them away?

Mr. STEINER. They came to believe that it was impossible to engage in agriculture in the United States and survive. They are mercilessly exploited.

Senator OVERMAN. Who did that?

Mr. STEINER. Steamship agents, exploiters, land sharks, men interested in getting the money of these people; and they in the same form have been so treated for many years.

Senator NELSON. When these people go back there with their savings, is there any way in which they can buy land, acquire it and become owners?

Mr. STEINER. This is really the main reason—

Senator NELSON. Is it not a fact that most of the land in Hungary is owned in large estates, and that the common laborer has no opportunity or no chance to buy land?

Mr. STEINER. That is one of the great troubles over there: it is congested; the land is in the hands of large owners and mighty land is available; and through this influx of American money into Hungary and into several other such countries that furnish us with the newly arrived immigrants, conditions became such that land which sold 25 or 30 years ago for $50 an acre is selling, or was selling just before the war, for $500 an acre; but such is the hunger for land that the immigrant returning, having no choice, is compelled to avail himself of that and will buy one or two acres of land, and it will produce almost enough food for him to live on, and then he will hire out as a day laborer to earn enough cash to buy his clothes. Many of the remigrants are deprived of their American savings; they find out that conditions are just as intolerable as they were when they first became induced to emigrate, and they come back to the United States, deprived of their savings, discouraged and penniless.

Senator NELSON. What interest do they pay them over there on the savings that are sent over?

Mr. STEINER. A nominal interest, but very much better interest than our American Postal banks pay, however. The immigrants have no choice. Banks are not liberal for immigrants. Most of these immigrants work in our coal mines and at lumber, railroad and other camps, labor in various places distant from banks, or work out of town factories, and they can not go during business hours.

big cities to deposit their savings in our banks. The private banks, as well as the steamer ticket agents, masquerading as banks, systematically work to have these men export their savings, and have them buy a steerage ticket and remigrate.

Senator NELSON. Before this trust company was started there were a lot of private Hungarian concerns here, individuals and partnerships who made a business of collecting the savings of Hungarians, and buying them tickets, and all that, were there not?

Mr. STEINER. There were, and there are at the present time; thousands of them.

Senator NELSON. And this big trust company was formed to sort of freeze them out, was it not?

Mr. STEINER. If you please, I ought to know that, because I am the man who made this trust company. I have presented to the Mutual Life Insurance Co. statements telling them what intolerable conditions exist, how immigrants are exploited, and how they are defrauded.

Senator NELSON. Then you are in favor of the trust company and freezing out these private concerns?

Mr. STEINER. If you please, inasmuch as in those days it was considered impossible ever to establish in the United States postal savings banks, and inasmuch as in those days it was considered to be impossible to secure in the United States legislation for the supervision and regulation of these private bankers, therefore we agreed on this method of trying to protect these people by the establishment of an international bank.

Senator NELSON. Then you favored the idea of this trust corporation in the first instance?

Mr. STEINER. In those days I did. There was no other way out of it.

Senator NELSON. In order that it should freeze out these private concerns?

Mr. STEINER. In order that it might permit an immigrant to keep his money in the United States, protecting him and facilitating him to get on an American farm. Overcongested Europe can not satisfy the hunger for land with his savings of the present day, and at the present purchasing power of money, while along the lines of the Union Pacific and Santa Fe and the Northern Pacific there are vast areas where whole nations can be placed in the United States, and to promote the general welfare by creating crops and traffic; and these people could very well become Americanized, and their children will become loyal Americans.

After working for years and spending all the money I had, I was discouraged because it was considered that the business of these trust companies should not be the correction of the evil which I intended that it should correct, but the making of money. This trust company, as well as innumerable other institutions all over the United States, wherever immigrants earn wages, was in the deal with certain forces to conduct systematic work for the prevention of immigrants from becoming Americanized and for inducing them to habitually export their savings. The first of these factors are the respective embassies and consulates. They are instructed by their governments how to go at it. They are shrewd. They have numbers of lawyers to advise them; they have an unholy amount of money to spend, and they do spend it, for propaganda—they use it—to assist in successfully conducting this work. For instance, a tremendous amount of money, amounting to about $400,000 each normal year, is allegedly sent to “needy relatives.” These moneys are really sent to the respective postal banks and other banks of the respective countries, until a competency is secured, where the immigrant is induced to remigrate and, and is robbed over then of all sorts of colonizing schemes.

The second of these factors is that of the trans-Atlantic steamship companies, with their thousands of agencies. The steamship companies do not want their boats to return empty to Europe, and they realize that if these seventeen and a half million immigrants already present in the United States become Americanized, they will stay here, do good and their returning boats will return to Europe empty or nearly empty. You must realize that two steerage passengers pay as much as about, as one cabin passenger, and that there are 90 steerage passengers to about 10 first-cabin passengers; and if you consider at the moment what the first-cabin passenger has for his money and what the steerage passenger receives for his money, you can readily see where the profit of the steamship companies is coming from. It is coming from the steerage. Therefore their various agents will do heaven and earth to keep things going.

Senator OVERMAN. You say this propaganda is to get these people to save their wages until they get a competency, and then repatriate themselves and become again citizens of Hungary?

Mr. STEINER. It is to have a man, from the day of his arrival, habitually export his savings. Where his treasure is, there is his heart. If he is habitually exporting his savings twice a month to Italy or Russia or Hungary, then that person will have no desire to learn our language. He will not acquire a knowledge of our customs and institutions, and he will not avail himself of American opportunities.

Senator OVERMAN. You say his heart is where his money is?

Mr. STEINER. That is the idea, sir, exactly.

Senator NELSON. These steamship companies are interested in having, first, a flow of immigrants coming to this country?

Mr. STEINER. Coming to this country.

Senator NELSON. And then they want them to flow back again?

Mr. STEINER. To flow back again; and after the export of savings, remigration follows.

Senator NELSON. They are anxious to send them over here for a few years to earn money and come back with it?

Mr. STEINER. And come back with it; yes, sir.

The third potent factor in this matter is the foreign language newspapers. There are about 1,650 of them in the United States, and I am sorry to say most of them are un-American and many of them are anti-American. They have conducted a pro-Kaiser propaganda. They ought to support Americanism.

Senator NELSON. How many of those foreign language newspapers are there in the United States?

Mr. STEINER. About 1,600.

Senator NELSON. How many Hungarian newspapers are there

Mr. STEINER. About 25.

Senator NELSON. They have two languages in Hungary, have they not?

Mr. STEINER. They have a number of languages. The national language is the Hungarian.

Senator NELSON. I mean written languages, book languages?

Mr. STEINER. Hungarian.

Senator NELSON. That is a little akin to the Finnish language?

Mr. STEINER. It is related to that language.

Senator NELSON. Well there are a great many Germans in Hungary, are there not?

Mr. STEINER. There are a number of them in Hungary. However, the commercial class speaks German.

Senator NELSON. There are a great many German Hebrews in Hungary?

Mr. STEINER. Quite a number.

Senator NELSON. Do they speak the Hebrew language or do they speak the Hungarian language?

Mr. STEINER. They speak the Hungarian language, but most of them speak also German.

Senator OVERMAN. Here is the information about the bonds.

Mr. KINNICUTT. It amounts to about $7,000,000.

(The statement referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

TRANSATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY,
67-69 WILLIAM ST.,
New York, May 13, 1918.

Mr. F. H. KINNICUTT,
War Trade Board, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation on Friday, the 10 inst., I take pleasure in giving you herewith the data you have asked for:

1 Sales of War Loan Bonds of the Central Powers:

Austrian, 4,491,400 Kronen-----	}	$4. 079, 857. 50
Hungarian, 15,646,100 Kronen-----
German, 14,383,100 Marks-----
		3. 453, 177. 80
		7, 533, 035. 30

2 Money forwarding business:

Austria-Hungary:		Kronen.
1914-----	14, 310, 401. 89
1915-----	53, 223, 719. 87
1916-----	68, 746. 636. 69
1917-----	8, 454. 917. 04
		$29, 323, 457. 85
Germany:		Marks.
1914-----	12, 706. 21
1915-----	163, 993. 28
1916-----	2, 273, 949. 32
1917-----	1. 037, 352. 24
		830, 144. 25
		30, 153, 602. 10

The normal parity of Exchange between this country and Austria-Hungary is $20.26 per 100 Kronen; between this country and Germany, $23.80 per 100 Mark. Since the outbreak of the European War the value of the Exchange of the Central Powers has been almost continually declining. The present parity is about $12.50 per 100 Kronen, and $19.00 per 100 marks.

In further pursuance to your request, I beg to enclose a list of local banks and bankers who, previous to the declaration of war against the Central Powers, were actively interested in the money forwarding business to Austria, Hungary and Germany.

Again assuring you of my readiness to give you any further information at my command, believe me

Very sincerely,

J. PIRNITZER.

P. M.

Senator OVERMAN. You say that all of these foreign papers, so far as you know, especially Hungarian papers, have been un-American?

Mr. STEINER. I will not say that all of them, because I do not know all of them. A few of them are, I hope, honest and loyal Americans.

Senator OVERMAN. So far as you know a majority of them are un-American.

Mr. STEINER. Un-American, and numbers of them anti-American.

Their larger share of income is derived from the advertisements of steamship companies, and the bankers who are exporters of gold.

Senator OVERMAN. Are these foreign newspapers subsidized?

Mr. STEINER. In certain cases they are; in certain instances.

Senator OVERMAN. By the Government?

Mr. STEINER. President Pirnitzer, of the Transatlantic Trust, once wrote about subsidies, and he requested the Hungarian Government to furnish a great amount of money to buy some of these papers.

Senator OVERMAN. These same papers are being circulated by means of subsidies from the steamship companies, and from these advertisements. That is the way they live and have their being? They could not live by the subscriptions made to them by the subscribers, could they?

Mr. STEINER. They could not enjoy their lucrative position if they would not be dined and wined in Europe at their frequent visits over there, and they would not have the importance which they derive this way.

There is another thing. These foreign-language papers, which are published so that the immigrant would be Americanized, would learn English sooner or later, would read the American papers, and thus he would lose his subscriber and probably also much advertising.

Senator OVERMAN. They would lose the advertising?

Mr. STEINER. Yes.

The fourth and a most important factor is the clergy. The priests and monks speculate upon remigration. They are afraid that the members of their congregations will join American churches, and thereby lose in their power to preach old-country traditions, and keep alive the love for the Fatherland. Many draw salaries from their respective Governments, and we have found instances where it was possible to buy a church outright, because those loyal American immigrants have established the same and were well to do and prosperous, and did not want to come under the jurisdiction of the government from which they departed to come to the land of freedom. In every locality where a competing church would be erected in the very same locality, a subsidized or salaried clergyman was put in charge, so as to combat Americanism, and a school has been established and maintained, with a salaried teacher who will preach only traditions of the old country, and will teach only the history and the geography of the respective countries from which they originally came, and only the national anthems of the respective European countries are sung, and Americanism is combated in those schools.

The fifth factor is the worst of all. This consists of those local men who come in daily contact with the immigrants, who pose as bankers.

More than a dozen years ago I originated legislation, and a bill was in an amended form enacted in New York State, and other States followed. We have at the present time legislation in five of our States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Ohio. The aim of this law was to prevent the embezzlement of immigrants' money. The other 43 States have no legislation along these lines, and in Chicago, for instance, bad conditions exist. About two years ago we had a regular epidemic of private bank failures. Anybody, a crook or ex-convict, may engage in banking, rent an office, and get some second-hand furniture, represent himself as a most reliable banker, and exploit the immigrant. And this is the worst feature of it, that so many factors work for the alienation of the immigrant for preventing him from becoming Americanized and making him export his savings, but nothing practical is done for his Americanization. There is no money in it, but there is lots of money on the other side of the fence.

Senator NELSON. What was the attitude of the Hungarian population here during the war?

Mr. STEINER. I am glad to say that almost without exception they were loyal to this country.

Senator NELSON. Were there any of the professors and educators or leading editors that were pro-German?

Mr. STEINER. With hardly any exception all were proally and against the Germans. We have in evidence large numbers of articles, however, which prove that a propaganda upon a most intensive plan has been conducted by certain editors and others for the Kaiser.

Senator OVERMAN. Did not Mr. Creel organize some league for the Hungarians to see that they were for the allies?

Mr. STEINER. I am awfully sorry that that bureau did more for the Europeanization of the immigrant than his Americanization. The old country was glorified and its national anthem was sung. Finally, I requested that somebody say a word for our liberty bonds, and afterwards, in a half-hearted way, some talk was made about our liberty bonds.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know Konta?

Mr. STEINER. I am sorry to say I do. Still he is not half as bad as Hammerling.

Senator NELSON. Did the Creel bureau subsidize any of the Hungarian papers?

Mr. STEINER. No.

They turned loose Mr. Konta, who has asked everybody to contribute a dollar for a sort of certificate or card, loyalty card, without investigating whether he was loyal or not, whether he was an ex-convict or not, whether he was a Hungarian or not. The money collected that way was used for stuffing the respective Hungarian newspapers, and they received big advertisements, well paid for, and a number of their own people had been paid to travel around the country. The better element of Hungarian immigrant considered it a monumental humbug, I am sorry to say.

The State legislation in the five States tries to prevent dishonesty as far as banking is concerned, but the propaganda for the exportation of the savings has never been obstructed, and as far as the support itself is concerned, it may probably be best for the United States not to obstruct it directly, but the solicitation, this propaganda, this going to extremes, should somehow or other be regulated and supervised. It should not be permitted for the banker to stop an immigrant on the street and say, "I have not seen you for the month. You are not exporting your savings, are you? If you do not, I will have you fired from the factory where you work. To-day's agent I am paying 25 cents on every hundred kronen, and I guarantee you that you would not get another job in another factory if you lose this one. You might migrate to another State, but I will bother the life out of you." This sort of propaganda should be stopped by Federal legislation. It is an interstate and international matter. Immigrants are really loyal, and without this agency they would become good Americans. Pirnitzer, of the Transatlantic Trust Co., in spite of having the embassy and his organization, has to expend, according to his own figures, $254,000 for propaganda with the foreign-language newspapers.

Really the Transatlantic Trust Co. has never been a bank in the proper sense of the word. It was a pumping system whereby the savings of the Hungarian have been sucked out. He had to have the savings of immigrants, otherwise he could not have survived in business.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your remedy for stopping the export of these savings abroad?

Mr. STEINER. I would propose, Senator, that the bill introduced by Senator King day before yesterday should be enacted, to the effect that those persons, firms, unincorporated associations, or corporations which are engaged in the exportation to Europe of sums of a hundred dollars or less should be licensed. It provides that any person or branch of a concern engaged in this sort of business should pay a license fee of $1,000 a year for each and every one of its branches and that they should be compelled to deposit at least $10,000 in securities or in cash in our Treasury so as to guarantee honest dealing with the immigrants, which minimum amount should be increased in proportion to the month's export. And I would recommend that they shall be prohibited from carrying on propaganda and soliciting the savings of immigrants for export by oral, written, or printed advertising and in any other shape, manner, or form. If any immigrant wants to send his savings, let him do so, but get rid of the propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Has the Creel bureau done anything to stop the exportation of funds to Hungary?

Mr. STEINER. Not that I have ever heard of.

Senator NELSON. Are you acquainted with Mr. Creel?

Mr. STEINER. I have spoken to that gentleman two or three times.

Senator NELSON. Is he of Hungarian extraction?

Mr. STEINER. I do not think so.

Senator NELSON. You are sure about that?

Mr. STEINER. I am not sure about it. I am under the impression that he is a native American.

Senator NELSON. A native American of Hungarian origin?

Mr. STEINER. No. I am morally certain that he is not.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your business, Mr. Steiner?

Mr. STEINER. At present I am employed by the War Trade Intelligence. Before that I was employed by the Alien Property Custodian, and I induced them, after much talk, to conduct the investigation of the Transatlantic Trust Co., and I have conducted that investigation. Before that I was employed by the Union Pacific System. I tried to colonize these immigrants on American farms, and I have been employed years ago in the New York State Department of Agriculture for the same purpose. I am a student of social-economic matters and a writer.

Senator OVERMAN. I am glad I asked the question so that we may have it on the record who you are.

Mr. STEINER. I believe, Senators, that the immigrants would be glad to become Americanized and stay here, and if any members of their families are still in Europe to get them here. The Nepszava, one of the worst Hungarian daily newspapers in the United States, just before the war, about two years ago, it is reported, made a sworn statement to the Post Office Department that they had some 47,000 subscribers. Then this artificial propaganda had to stop on account of the war, because patriotism flamed up in the breast of every immigrant to such an extent that if they had continued their pro-Kaiser policy they probably would have been lynched. Therefore the propaganda stopped to an extent, and some three months ago the same newspaper, which for certain reasons is much more interesting now than it ever was before the war, reports a total number of subscribers in its sworn statement of some 17,000, in two and a half years being reduced from 47,000 to 17,000.

In Chicago there is one of these Hungarian Calvinist churches, the clergyman of which was paid a monthly salary by Hungary, which just before the war had some 250 members. At present it has only about a dozen, so I am told. The salaries of the clergymen were cut off, of course, during the war.

Senator OVERMAN. Has any work ever been done by the I. W. W. among these Hungarians?

Mr. STEINER. There is some work conducted, but I want to hope that most immigrants will not lend ear to these evil tenets. Still it is an undeniable fact that among these immigrants there is quite a deal of agitation at the present time for carrying on Bolshevism, anarchism, and all kinds of other tenets, in certain sections, especially in the east side of New York City, and on the Pacific coast, and in other industrial centers.

Senator NELSON. Is there quite a smattering among the mining population?

Mr. STEINER. Some of them, but not to a very large extent, I want to hope.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know how they regard the red flag; whether they have it in any of their meetings?

Mr. STEINER. Most of these immigrants are loyal to America. They are not anarchists. If only their hunger for land could be satisfied in the United States they would become responsible citizens.

Senator OVERMAN. Why do you not take some means to get them on farms?

Mr. STEINER. My bill introduced January 19, 1918, in the House of Representatives by Mr. Lobeck, and a few days later by Senator Lewis in the Senate, provides for putting those who are qualified to be they immigrants or natives or soldiers or marines, on farms in the United States, to be paid for by the settler, out of the crops raised by them. This sort of work has been successfully conducted by the British in Canada and also in Australia. It has been successfully conducted by other Governments. It is no more an experiment. I feel sure that if that bill were enacted, it would better condition.

Senator NELSON. Is not one trouble this, that many times the immigrant stops here in the big cities in the East, and in the manufacturing centers, and does not go West? We have one class of migrants that do not stay in these manufacturing centers, but go West and get land.

Mr. STEINER. The Scandinavians, Hollanders, and Bohemians.

Senator NELSON. Yes; and these others stop in the big centers. I do not know of a single Hebrew farmer in the State of Minnesota, and we have plenty of good land, plenty of good farming land. I have not come across a single Hebrew farmer. Can you account for that?

Mr. STEINER. They are a nonagricultural race.

Senator NELSON. That is it.

Senator OVERMAN. I know two organizations in my State, organized to make money, I suppose. One of them organized a colony and took them to about the poorest land in the State, and sold it to them at enormous prices. But they went to work and built houses and paid for the land, and it is now the most prosperous section of the State. They have built a cotton mill, their own schools, their own churches. I passed by on the Fourth of July and saw a flag on every house. They are Waldensians, from northern Italy.

Senator NELSON. They are the original Protestants.

Senator OVERMAN. There is another colony down in the eastern part of the State. They have done splendidly. They have paid for their farms in about four years.

Senator NELSON. Some of the best farmers we have in the West are Bohemians.

Mr. STEINER. They are good farmers.

Senator NELSON. They are good farmers, but they drink a little whisky. They are among our best farmers—industrious. They get land that is poor and in a few years they become well off, and have raised good big families.

Mr. STEINER. I might tell you also that this Transatlantic Trust Co. has been a governmental institution. I have located, among the papers, a letter of Prime Minister Tisza, of Hungary, giving orders to establish branches under the jurisdiction of the Austro-Hungarian consulates, and branches were established in St. Paul, New Orleans, and other places, and I have also seen the reply in which it is stated that the orders are being carried out so as not to interfere with the American laws. The branch banks have been called correspondents of the Transatlantic Trust Co. The Transatlantic Trust Co. has never been a bank, really, but was only an exporter of goods. That is proved.

Senator NELSON. You are aware, Mr. Steiner, of the fact that Jews are handicapped in this country; that we have no law for the tion of Federal corporations. All these corporations that we have established in this country are incorporated under State laws, with the exception of our national banks and a few railroads that got land grants. With those exceptions, they are all under State charter, and it is a pretty difficult thing to reach them by the Federal Government.

Mr. STEINER. There is also my bill before Congress proposing that our United States postal savings banks shall be made efficient, to raise the rate of interest, and increase their number. I would have a branch postal savings bank at each and every one of those sections where there are a great number of employees, for both immigrants and natives are in need of such trustworthy depositories. Then, also, the offices of employers of a great number of laborers could be fitted out, and have a postal savings branch. Instead of that our postal banks are inferior to those of European countries, and the number has decreased from 13,000 to about 6,700.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know the total deposits in the postal savings banks?

Mr. STEINER. About $175,000,000, while the normal export of savings amounts annually to about $400,000,000. I know that, for instance, the Hungarian royal postal savings banks have more than 1,400,000 depositors.

Senator NELSON. The postal savings interest is only 2 per cent.

Mr. STEINER. That is all, and they have an impractical system of receiving deposits, and withdrawing, and they are not available for a great number of those who should use them.

Senator NELSON. If the interest rate were increased to 3 per cent that would help?

Mr. STEINER. That would help.

An aggressive campaign for getting the deposits of these immigrants has been disclosed during the last few months, first of all by the Transatlantic Trust Co. This company, after it became impossible to export savings, instituted the so-called kronen deposits, and dollar deposits, which are simply a subterfuge to handle money, and have it ready for export at the end of the war. As soon as the Transatlantic Trust Co. stopped the exportation of savings in April, 1917, it had a deficit of over $6,000 a month.

Senator OVERMAN. This bank to get these deposits was organized and established after our postal-savings banks were established. Was not that done in order to compete with the postal-savings system?

Mr. STEINER. It was, but before this Transatlantic Trust Co. established its present bank, the Hungarian-American State Bank had been established by some of the same people, and by the Government in Hungary.

Senator OVERMAN. That has been established in New York City since the signing of the armistice?

Mr. STEINER. No; before the establishment of the Transatlantic Trust Co.; I believe about two years before the establishment of the Transatlantic Trust Co. The Hungarian Government had the idea of competing with our postal system, and to keep the immigrant away from everything American, and they carried it so far, as our records prove, that even the second generation, the American-born children, are being preserved for the old country with a view to remigration.

Senator OVERMAN. Do they discourage the teaching of English in our schools?

Mr. STEINER. They do. One of the gentlemen, Maj. Crockett of the Military Intelligence, has been conducting an investigation and has obtained much evidence. He wrote to me about six weeks ago that they had got hold of a prayer book printed by this congregation, which is subsidized by the Hungarian Government, and that the prayer book urges parents to keep their children out from American public schools, because otherwise they will become a loss to Hungary, and the respective section was finished with the sentence

The parent who sends his children to the American public school shall be hanged.

Senator NELSON. Is that practice general, of keeping the children away from American schools?

Mr. STEINER. It is practiced in a good many instances in different sections. Even in quite a number of the Bohemian settlements in the West they do not speak the American language, and they discourage the speaking of the Bohemian language and the Bohemian language only.

It is an established fact that in a good many States there are German schools in which the American language is not spoken, but German history, German poetry, and German literature prevail to recent time.

I should like to call your attention also to the following fact: during the last few weeks while in the Middle West we found that the immigrant during the war had earned much higher wages than ever before, but that the immigrants had not been exporting their savings as in normal times, and that our American banks had not got that money. We believe that that money is hoarded, and in a great many instances we were furnished information corroborating this statement. It is estimated that an amount not less than $15,000,000 is hoarded by immigrants in belts, in stockings, and in crevices of floors and walls, and this is being held by the immigrants with the intention of exporting it after the war.

An unscrupulous element is telling them that any number of widows will be ready for the returned able-bodied men, and going to the limit of bestiality, they are saying that there are large numbers of orphan children that can be robbed because their parents have died in the war. It is said that about 5,000,000 resident immigrants are ready to return immediately to Europe when transportation can be possible, and I believe every effort should be made to make stimulation of remigration impossible. They are hungry for money in the United States, and if they could engage in agriculture in the United States and be furnished a reliable depository where they could accumulate their savings and not be compelled to export to Europe, they would keep their savings here. Obviously, a system should be found for inducing them to settle down here for good. The export of their savings would be stopped automatically then.

The Transatlantic Trust Co. is being liquidated at the present time, though it is not being done at a very rapid rate. After having done all that it was possible to do to induce the Alien Property Custodian to disseminate proper information among the dependents and to consummate liquidation, on the 6th day of January, 1919, the Transatlantic Trust Co. has disseminated a circular of which this is a part.

Senator NELSON. What year?

Mr. STEINER. This year, 1919. January 6, 1919.

Senator NELSON. But it is in the hands of the Government?

Mr. STEINER. Yes. This is signed by the president appointed by the Alien Property Custodian:

Your money will be safely kept for you until commercial relations are resumed with Hungary, Austria, and Germany. and payment can then be made either with kronen or in marks.

That is the way they liquidate.

Senator NELSON. That is, he will keep it so that it can be sent to Hungary?

Mr. STEINER. That is the Alien Property Custodian's letter.

Mr. KINNICUTT. That is in connection with the request that they withdraw their deposits; that the bank is being liquidated. I think the rest of the letter should be read. That portion read gives a wrong idea. The point is that they do not need to take out their money, as it is not going to be lost.

Senator NELSON. So that they can send it to the old country after the war. That is what it is.

Mr. STEINER. It is a plan to keep this bank intact and keep a trained force and organization together, so that after the war is over they can do business again, whether the Kaiser is back or not, and hand the business back again to anti-American interests to be conducted under another name.

(The letter referred to is here printed in the record, as follows):

[Branch: To be discontinued Jan. 18, 1919. 109 Avenue A, corner Seventh Street.]

TRANSATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY,
67 WILLIAM STREET,
New York, January 6, 1919.

To the Depositors of the Transatlantic Trust Company:

The Officers of the Transatlantic Trust Company appointed by the Alien Property Custodian to liquidate its affairs, sent you on November 30, 1918, a circular letter, advising that the business of the Company would be wound up and the Company liquidated and dissolved.

A large number of depositors have already closed their accounts, and in order to facilitate the closing of the affairs of the Institution and completing its liquidation, we are sending this second notice to those who have not withdrawn their balances.

The Directors have agreed, for the present, to continue the rate of payment on Kronen Deposits at $10.00 per 100 Kronen, and on Mark Deposits, at $15.00 per 100 Marks.

The representatives of the Alien Property Custodian desire to know whether you have received this letter and if you desire to close your account on the terms suggested.

If you desire to now take advantage of these rates you are urged to send in your passbook, pursuant to instructions, at an early date. If you do not at this time wish to withdraw your funds, kindly advise us by returning to us the enclosed card, provided with your signature and correct address, and then, your money will be safely kept for you until commercial relations are resumed with Hungary, Austria and Germany, and payment can then be made either in Kronen, or in Marks.

The representatives of the Custodian, however, are anxious to close the business of the bank, and will appreciate your cooperation for that purpose.

Yours truly,

B. S. FREEMAN, President.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is this man Freeman?

Mr. STEINER. He is the president at the present time of the Transatlantic Trust Co., appointed by Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer.

Senator OVERMAN. Of what nationality is he, do you know?

Mr. STEINER. I believe he is a native American; so I was told.

Senator NELSON. His name indicates that.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. KINNICUTT. He wrote a letter, made a report, or something on his behalf, recently, showing that the deposits had all been dated to a very large extent, I think over 50 per cent, and the bank is now in process of liquidation.

Senator NELSON. That means the depositors are going to get their money?

Mr. KINNICUTT. They have taken out several millions of dollars.

Senator OVERMAN. What effort has been made to keep that money in our own banks?

Mr. KINNICUTT. I think I can give you some information on that. I happened to see a gentleman in charge of the international money service in the post office the other day and he stated that Freeman himself has recently given him a list of the depositors who had withdrawn their money, with a view of getting them to deposit it in the postal-savings bank. I have always recommended it. I believe Judge Delehanty recommended the same thing.

Capt. LESTER. It is a fact, is it not, that all these correspondent or branch banks were dissolved; that is, they no longer form a part of the Transatlantic Trust Co.?

Mr. KINNICUTT. The Trust Co. never did establish a legal branch in any State. They tried to in Cleveland, and they ran up against legal difficulties, but they found they got along perfectly well when we call them correspondents, because it was not a banking business—merely collecting money orders to send to New York.

Senator NELSON. To send it to them in New York?

Mr. KINNICUTT. Yes, sir. Mr. Pirnitzer says in his report to the minister that they will pose as correspondents.

(Matter later submitted by Mr. Kinnicutt was ordered inserted in the record and is found on pp. 2866-2899 post.)

Senator OVERMAN. Are you through, Mr. Steiner?

Mr. STEINER. I would like to request that systematic work be conducted not only among the immigrants but also men released from the Army and Navy. It is only a question of time before the problem must be solved, and I would recommend that remedial measures be taken to make the postal savings provide a better depository; measures be taken to prohibit the artificial stimulation of the immigrants to export their savings; and, finally, make it possible for immigrants to settle down in the United States and acquire a home in an agricultural community, with the land around them, with schools, churches, and all the other things that are found in a village system of Europe.

Senator OVERMAN. What language newspapers?

Mr. STEINER. The best thing to do is to conduct them in both languages. That arrived immigrants to learn the English language. Bear in mind that during the last four years we practically received no new arrivals. Therefore this is the time to act. The resident immigrants have learned some of our language.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Steiner, I see you are a very intelligent man and have studied these questions. What is going to happen after the war; do you think we will have an influx of immigration in this country?

Mr. STEINER. I think Europe will prohibit emigration for at least 10 years, as far as able-bodied men are concerned. I was told that as far as Austria-Hungary is concerned, about two years ago they had a bill ready whereby it is prohibited to emigrate under the penalty of court-martial and having all their property, including cash in the banks, confiscated.

Senator OVERMAN. So you do not look for much immigration?

Mr. STEINER. I do not look for any immigration at all from Europe.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you think will be the desire of these people—to emigrate back to Europe?

Mr. STEINER. These people have no choice. They realize that industrial life will not provide for them wages in old age, and they calculate that if they have a little money—$800 or $1,200—that would not last them long for food, shelter, and clothing in the United States. But if they return with it to the old country, it will be possible to acquire, say, a quarter of an acre of land, and on that they can eke out a living.

Senator OVERMAN. If they took that $1,200, they could buy 25 acres of land in this country with it.

Mr. STEINER. Senator, I think that it is a problem to be solved by the Government, and it would be one of the best investments made by the United States. At the present time it takes about $5,000 to equip a farm, to have lands and buildings and two horses and a cow and two pigs and a few dozen chickens, a wagon, a plow, a harrow, and a cultivator.

Senator NELSON. You are too extravagant. I have known men to start out with much less and make a success. I have known men to start out with one cow, one pig, and a pair of steers and nothing else, and they have turned out to be our best and most well-to-do citizens. You would spoil them if you would start them out in that way.

Mr. STEINER. The average twentieth century man is not inclined to go out in the wilderness and be isolated, with no churches, no schools, no social life, and starve to death. Our history proves that usually it was the second generation that succeeded in farming.

Senator NELSON. You are way wrong. They go out there on the frontier and take out their homesteads, and they will establish schools and roads and build churches right away. That is about the first thing they do—establish churches and the schools. They do that; they do not wait for the second generation.

Mr. STEINER. Senator, it is the history of the West——

Senator NELSON. You come out to Minnesota and I will show you.

Senator OVERMAN. This colony that I was telling you about, I do not suppose they had more than one pig, one cow, or more than one horse. It is the richest part of my State. These people have made money and got a big cotton mill. A man came to see me the other day from this community that has established this cotton : and it is paying 25 per cent.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Steiner, the men that came with the money to start with were the ones that made a failure. They were uneasy until they had spent the money, and they did not get at all. The first thing they did in the way of farming was mortgage the land.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to ask you this: Have you any have you made any estimate, of how much money there is now deposit in Hungary by these Hungarians now in this country, over by the Hungarians from this country?

Mr. STEINER. It is very hard for me to tell. Hungary received about a hundred million dollars during the past, in normal years, how much has been withdrawn for all kind of land schemes—they are regularly fleeced with all kinds of land schemes—

Senator OVERMAN. The same as here?

Mr. STEINER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Could you approximate it? It must be hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. STEINER. I could not approximate on that, but I could give you some interesting information about the other finances of Austria-Hungary, taken from the New York Times, in which it says: Austria-Hungary absolutely depends upon the exportation of goods. Otherwise she is bankrupt.

In the New York Times of June 28, 1918, this appeared:

AUSTRIA APPROACHING FINANCIAL COLLAPSE—ISSUES OF PAPER MONEY COLLOSSAL—LOOKS TO SUBJECTS HERE FOR AID AFTER THE WAR.

By JULIUS WEST.

[Copyright 1918, by the New York Times Company. Special cable to the New York Times.]

LAUSANNE, June 25.—Last night I was to attend the meeting of the Statistical and Economic Club. The speaker was an Austrian, Dr. Hertz. His subject was, "The Financial Position and Prospects of Austria-Hungary." The audience numbered barely a couple of dozen, but as the members were mostly bankers the matter was hotly argued by those present.

It was obviously the lecturer's business to show matters in a rose-colored light. Dr. Hertz did his best for an hour and a half, but as the audience was mainly made up of financial experts, excessive use of the imagination was clearly inadvisable.

The total debt of Austria and Hungary now exceeds £4,000,000,000. Paper money issues are colossal and prices are soaring accordingly. And what hope is there of ever getting rid of this debt?

Some solution had to be put forward, and Dr. Hertz was ready with one. After the war, he said, the Czechs and Southern Slavs, now in America, will resume the habit of sending home remittances. This will rectify existing conditions, and if only the emigrants pay up the arrears, due from their relatives at home, all will be well.

The bankers of Basle, men mostly of German blood and by no means Anglophobes, shook their heads sadly.

An Austrian, who recently arrived in Switzerland after a short stay in Berlin, said that there was an extraordinary difference of feeling between Vienna and Berlin. In the former city everybody wanted peace; in the latter nobody. While the German war party was led by the Emperor, the Austrian peace party was led, though less ostentatiously, by the Empress.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you, Mr. Steiner, do the farmers in the Hungarian system live in villages or do the men live on the farms?

Mr. STEINER. The peasants live in a village and have little plots of land outside the village.

Senator NELSON. They live in little villages and then they go out into the country and till their plots of land?

Mr. STEINER. Exactly, that is so; while the landed and aristocracy have got big estates, with servants, married and single servants, living together. My grandfather and father have been farmers, what you would style a gentleman farmer. They had a number of servants, married and unmarried. My father rented 40,000 acres, which would be equivalent to about 50,000 acres here.

Senator OVERMAN. He had his tenants?

Mr. STEINER. No tenants, but servants; married and single servants. There were half a dozen overseers looking after these servants.

Senator OVERMAN. Did they live in a little village or in one place?

Mr. STEINER. In a single village. Such men as the shepherds would be in one place, while the pigs and their herders would be in another, and those men who do the plowing are in still another place, and the horses and cows with their attendants are again separated, and there is the barnyard, and the vegetable garden tenders who live on the estate.

Senator OVERMAN. They had an overseer on your place?

Mr. STEINER. Yes, sir. The overseers would be in charge of everything, each having two or three assistants. But that is on the great estate, while the peasants live in villages.

Senator NELSON. How do they pay these hundreds of servants?

Mr. STEINER. Very, very poorly. They can hardly earn enough to satisfy their hunger. A Hungarian peasant after having served three years in the Army returns home, and will somehow manage to buy one dark-blue woolen suit, a suit that he will wear all his life, and be buried in. He wears it only on Sundays during winter. You can see him stand before his house. He will not sit down because he could wear it out.

Senator NELSON. What are the houses built of?

Mr. STEINER. Sometimes mud walls.

Senator NELSON. And thatched roofs?

Mr. STEINER. And thatched roofs. And they are all hungry for land, and they all are engaged in some sort of agricultural work.

Senator NELSON. There is no show for the poor people to buy land?

Mr. STEINER. Take a woman, for instance, who has a dozen and a half boarders, of which nine will sleep in three double beds by night, and another nine by day, and she has to do all the cooking, and stand for much trouble. But after a while she gets tired of it and would like to have her own home, and the man is tired of being ordered around by the foreman at the factory. He finds it impossible to get home here and finds it impossible to acquire land in this country, and finding it impossible to satisfy his hunger for land, they emigrate.

Senator OVERMAN. We are very much obliged to you, sir. Your testimony has been very important and interesting.

(Thereupon the committee, at 1.15 o'clock p. m., adjourned until Tuesday, February 4, 1919, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to the call of the chairman, in room 226 Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. At the request of Senator Thomas of Colorado, order the following letters to be put in the record.

(The letters referred to are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO,
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY,
Boulder, Col., January 26, 1919.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the papers that my colleague Dr. Frederick A. Busbee has mentioned before The Senate Investigating Committee by Mr. Stevenson as a pacifist and radical of a presumably dangerous type.

It happens that Dr. Busbee is a neighbor of mine whom I have known for seven years. Upon the basis of personal knowledge I can state that the charges are utterly false. He has been in full sympathy with the cause of the allies since the outbreak of the European war and can not, on any basis whatsoever, be considered disloyal or lukewarm in his loyalty. Nor is he a thinker of the type referred to. The charges of Mr. Stevenson are not only groundless but foolish.

If it is in your power to do anything to get Mr. Stevenson to prove his charges or retract them you will be doing only justice to Dr. Busbee.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) JAMES G. WILLARD.

UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO,
Boulder, Colo., January 26, 1919.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I was much surprised to see my name included in the list of persons holding "radical or pacifist views," which Mr. Stevenson presented to the Senate Committee. Permit me to say that there is absolutely no reason for such a charge against me. I consider it a slander, and I want the matter made right. As Mr. Stevenson cannot substantiate such a charge with any reasonable evidence he should publicly retract his statement. I have been strongly pro-ally from the beginning of the war and have been an ardent supporter of the war, and shortly after we entered the contest I offered my services to the government. As to the question of radical views I hold just about as radical views as President Wilson does. I voted for President Wilson and have actively supported him throughout his administration; and when Mr. Stevenson puts my name in a list of suspected persons he does not know what he is talking about. The senate has no business to permit names to be printed as suspicious when they know no more about them than I evidently do about me.

I have written a letter of protest to Mr. Stevenson but to my protest to you I should like to add that the administration is not itself any, nor is the Democratic party improving its position by dastardly attacks like this on its friends and supporters. To quote an impartial man out here: "Such tommy-rot as that is simply making a lot of Republicans. People here think it ridiculous that my name should be in any such list.

I ask that you investigate this matter and if possible have my name removed from the list and set the matter right before the public. The error is to do me and the University of Colorado much harm.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) FREDERICK A. B.

Senator OVERMAN. I have received a letter here from Mr. De Ford, general counsel for the Hearst corporations and newspapers. Mr. De Ford was approached and asked that Mr. Bradford E. Merrill might come here and bring some newspaper editorials and other things to be put in the record, after examination and a statement of Mr. Merrill. Mr. Merrill has concluded that he would not come, so that Mr. De Ford brought these exhibits here. One is entitled "Critics' Exhibits." Mr. De Ford has sent a copy for each member of the committee. It is proposed to bring these exhibits here. One is entitled "Critics' Exhibits." that it would cost the Government a great deal of money.

Senator NELSON. We can not put them in the record. You know there was the same sort of thing gotten up about the Chicago Tribune, and we did not put that in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. These cartoons would cost the Government a great deal of money, and all these exhibits here, and editorials. That I suggested to Mr. De Ford that if they would furnish them to us, they would be filed, but we would not put them in the permanent record, which seemed to be satisfactory to him, and he wrote me this letter.

Senator NELSON. If this were filed, I should ask to have Mr. De Ford's lecture on the subject put in as a counter irritant.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. De Ford's letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1917

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary,

United States Senate

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to the arrangement made with you in our conversation this morning, I herewith transmit (to be incorporated in the record of testimony taken by your committee) the following self establishing exhibits:

(1) A pamphlet entitled "Critics' Exhibits" containing complete graphic copies of all the editorials and cartoons offered in evidence before the Committee, but, in some cases quoted or offered in part;

(2) A pamphlet entitled "Hearst's War Policies," containing photographic copies of articles and cartoons from the Hearst papers before and after the United States entered the war.

I should like to have these pamphlets printed at large as a part of the record of the evidence taken by your committee; because if it is right that they should be received in evidence, it is right that they should be printed as a part of the evidence taken.

If your committee should deem it inexpedient to print the exhibits herewith enclosed as a part of the record of your proceedings, I shall be glad to have the Committee bound volumes containing the pamphlets to be received by the committee as a part of the permanent records of its proceedings.

With great respect,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) Wm. A. DeFord

General Counsel Hearst Corporation & Newspapers

I suggest, gentlemen, that these exhibits be filed and not printed in the record, being filed as exhibits as part of the records of the committee, and if they desire to send bound volumes instead of the exhibits in their present shape, we would be very glad to have the bound volumes to be filed with the committee.

Capt. LESTER. That pamphlet of Mr. Beck is The Evidence in the Case, is it not, Senator?

Senator NELSON. No; not The Evidence in the Case. That is his big book. This is a pamphlet, a lecture, where he summarizes Hearst's attitude in the papers.

Capt. LESTER. Is that the lecture that he gave at Cardigan Hall?

Senator NELSON. I forgot whether it is or not. I had it from the Congressional Library, and sent it back again. I do not remember the exact title. It is just a small pamphlet.

As I understand this matter, Critics' Exhibits does not go into the record?

Senator OVERMAN. No; it is to be filed as a part of the records of the committee.

Senator NELSON. If it is filed as a part of the records, then I want to file Mr. Beck's lecture on the same subject, relating to the same subject matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. I object to that. Is that an argument and comment on Hearst?

Senator NELSON. No; it cites quotations from his papers.

Senator WOLCOTT. Does it discuss those quotations and comment on them?

Senator NELSON. Yes; the same as this [indicating the Critics Exhibits].

Senator WOLCOTT. No; I object to that.

Senator NELSON. Then I object to these going into the record.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think that any editorials very properly should go in, but as I understand—I have not looked at this—this is not a copy of editorials, and comments thereon. This is just the bare editorials, which speak for themselves. Now, if there are any editorials that anybody has to suggest, from Hearst's papers, that are offered to go into the record, I would not object; but if we are going to have editorials together with comment and argument thereupon, that does not seem to me to be in reply to these editorials.

Senator NELSON. Please enter my objection to these going into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. We will just leave this matter open until we get the full committee together.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. My theory is that when we let in an argument in these editorials, we have then got to hear somebody on the other side, if they offer themselves, and there will be a protracted argument as to what they mean.

Senator NELSON. Why should we put them in the record?

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not understand that this pamphlet here, Critics' Exhibits, constitutes an argument, but that it is only the editorials from the papers, and if there are any editorials that seem to go contrary to these, I would not have any objection to that at all. I think they would be pertinent. It is the matter outside of the editorials that I am objecting to.

Senator NELSON. Yes. Well, this is something that they have picked up and sent over here.

Senator OVERMAN. Are there any more letters you have there, Mr. Lester? I gave you a lot of correspondence. If any of it shows up in the record, let us have it. I want to get through with this.

Capt. LESTER. There is one letter here from Mayor Hylan, which he takes exception to the fact that his name is in the record. His name came in in conjunction with an association. The chairman of the committee tells me that he has written him explaining it.

Senator NELSON. What is the use of going on, anyway, with this investigation after the Secretary of War has issued his order?

Senator OVERMAN. If the Secretary refuses to send us what we want, what is the use of going on? Senator Sterling, you saw the general order that the Secretary of War issued about furnishing papers?

Senator STERLING. No; I think not.

Senator OVERMAN. These departments of the War Department were ordered not to furnish any papers except with the consent of the head of the department.

Senator NELSON. The Secretary of War is assuming that he is the judge, and not the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. The United States Senate, you know, when they want any papers, in asking for them always put in the resolution with the proviso, "If not incompatible with the public interest." The Secretary of War may think it is not compatible with the public interest to furnish papers, and withhold them, as all the departments do, and also the President. That is in the text of every resolution that passes the Senate or the House asking for papers. They are requested, if it is not incompatible with the public interest.

Senator WOLCOTT. Has it ever been recognized that a committee of Congress could not summon a witness out of the department and examine him?

Senator OVERMAN. Never in the world.

Senator WOLCOTT. And have him tell out of his head what he knows?

Senator OVERMAN. Never.

Senator WOLCOTT. I know that during the Civil War days they yanked generals right out of the field and brought them before committees of Congress and had them testify.

Senator OVERMAN. They can do that, and the Secretary recognizes they can, but with regard to his papers in his office——

Senator WOLCOTT. I think we can call the Secretary himself before the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. We can. We can call him right down here and he recognizes that.

Maj. HUMES. Pardon me, but the order goes further than that. It prohibits any one in the Intelligence Department from imparting information that has come to his knowledge.

Senator OVERMAN. It does?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is that order?

Senator STERLING. I have it here. Shall I read it?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I wish you would.

(Senator Sterling read the order aloud. The order referred to appears in full on pages 2922-2923.)

Senator NELSON. In view of this letter of the Secretary of War, I do not see any use of proceeding further with this investigation.

Senator STERLING. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully dissent from that.

Senator WOLCOTT. There is dissent in my mind, too.

Senator NELSON. I want the public to know that the Secretary of War is putting a veto here, and embarrassing this committee in securing information. I want the public to know that fact.

Senator OVERMAN. I think, Senator, that the Secretary would send any papers down here that we requested, or give us the right to summon anybody. Of course we have the right to summon whom we please. He has no right to interfere with us, and he recognizes that; but as to papers in his department, he contends, as I understand his position, that if there are any papers there that it would be incompatible with the public interest to furnish this committee, he has a right to deny them and not send them, just as any other department does. That has been recognized in the departments for a hundred years, and by Congress.

Senator NELSON. Let me call your attention to this first clause—

Senator OVERMAN. I sent a letter to him asking that certain papers be sent to the committee yesterday or day before. I received a letter from Gov. Mann of South Carolina and ex-Senator Benet stating that there was a man down there by the name of F. J. H. von Engelken, who had been chairman of the Farm Loan Board there, and that he was pro-German, making serious charges against him, and asking us to investigate him. In response to their request, coming from ex-Senator Benet and ex-Gov. Mann, of South Carolina, I wrote a letter.

Maj. HUMES. That is a copy of the memorandum, and indorsed on that was the request that the papers in connection with that matter be furnished to the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. I sent a letter to him to furnish these papers. Here is the memorandum received [reading]:

JANUARY 31, 1919.

Memorandum for Senator Overman.

Subject: F. J. H. von Engelken, President, Federal Land Bank, Columbia, South Carolina.

1. In connection with the attached communications we beg to advise that the Military Intelligence Division has a great deal of information on von Engelken in its files. The information can, no doubt, be obtained upon application to the Military Intelligence Division, if the committee desires to go into the matter further.

Captain, U. S. Army.

So that, in response to that communication I sent him. I have gotten a reply which I have sent for and a copy of which will be here in a few minutes.

Senator NELSON. I call your attention to the first words of this order:

The Chief of Staff directs that all officers, employees or persons in the Military Intelligence Division be informed that the information in their custody is confidential, and can not be released to Senators, Congressmen, Congressional Committees, &c.

Now, any information these gentlemen may have gathered here, from any source, is confidential, and they can not give it to us without permission of the War Department. That, it seems to me, is an end to our functions.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we can make a test of it. This letter really has made a test of it here; that is, not intentionally making a test, but it is here.

The question is, if we do want any more papers; and if we can make a test of it.

Senator STERLING. I think we should have the specific cases, Mr. Chairman, and make a test of it.

Senator OVERMAN. If there is anything that we want to put up with him.

Senator WOLCOTT. Maj. Humes, as I read this order, it seems to be an order forbidding officers in the Military Intelligence Division, and employees, to give any information to this committee; that is to say, it seems to be a muzzling order, that they can not tell, they are not allowed to tell, this committee, or to disclose to the representatives of this committee in advance of the hearing, any information that they might have. That is to say, the order seems to be one that closes up one of our sources of information. That is your construction of it, is it not?

Maj. HUMES. That is my understanding of it. My understanding is that it prohibits anyone in the Military Intelligence from advising with us and giving us information as to the nature of information which may be available in the files of that department.

Senator WOLCOTT. With that order confronting you, would it be at all possible for you to form any kind of intelligent idea of what you would want to prove by any particular witness?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. You would just be probing around in the dark for instance?

Maj. HUMES. It would be absolutely impossible for me to determine whether or not there was information available on any particular subjects in the files of the Military Intelligence.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that the effect of the order is not only to protect from the public those papers and that information which it would be incompatible with the public interest to disclose, but, as a practical proposition, it keeps from the public everything?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I would not presume to say what the purpose of the order is, but that is the effect of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is the effect of it?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. It not only keeps from the public those things that it would be incompatible with the public interest to be known, but it also keeps from the public those things which it would be quite compatible with the public interest to know, if those things are in the possession of the War Department?

Maj. HUMES. Well, I do not know—

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not ask you to express an opinion on that. You have a uniform one.

Maj. HUMES. I am in the embarrassing position that I do not feel justified in expressing my opinion.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am very frank to say that that is my opinion of it.

Maj. HUMES. That is the way it strikes me.

Senator OVERMAN. You, as an officer here, would not feel justified in conveying what you know?

Maj. HUMES. Personally, the order does not affect me. I am not connected with the Military Intelligence. But it does affect Capt. Lester, and it affects the officers from whom we have secured information, as to the availability of information which is in the files of the Military Intelligence, and I would not, under that order, feel justified in asking Capt. Lester or any other officer in the Military Intelligence to impart to me or to this committee any information as to what was contained in the files of the Military Intelligence.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think it is probably true that we have gotten almost everything we want from the Military Intelligence Division. That is probably true. This order in all probability would not result in holding back anything we want; but there is another very serious feature to it, and that is whether this thing should be allowed to go as a precedent. It certainly can not be that members of Congress and committees of Congress are forbidden to receive information from a man in the War Department. Now, that is a dangerous precedent to ever permit to go by unchallenged.

Senator OVERMAN. While we are waiting for the letter of the Secretary of War to be sent over from my office, is there anything else you desire to say about this matter, gentlemen?

Senator NELSON. Senator Sterling, you spoke about something the other day that you wanted to put in the record.

Senator STERLING. Yes; I have something here. I have not got it all here. I am waiting for a certified copy of a judgment. It is in the city, but I have not yet received it.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you a witness this morning that you want to put on the stand?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir; there is a witness here. Are you ready to examine him?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; proceed.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CLYDE B. STEEN.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. You reside in New York?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Are you connected with the city editors' association?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What is the exact name of that association?

Mr. STEEN. The National Association of City Editors.

Maj. HUMES. What is that made up of?

Mr. STEEN. It is composed of city editors, telegraph editors, and desk men, copy readers, of daily newspapers of the United States.

Maj. HUMES. What is the membership of the association?

Mr. STEEN. The membership is approximately 2,000.

Maj. HUMES. All over the country?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. What is your position with that association?

Mr. STEEN. I am president of that association.

Maj. HUMES. When was that association organized?

Mr. STEEN. Last May; the 17th and 18th of last May, in Indianapolis, Ind.

Maj. HUMES. State if, in connection with the organization and work of that association, you have had any occasion to inquire or investigate the foreign-language newspaper situation in the country?

Mr. STEEN. We have; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. How many foreign-language newspapers are there approximately?

Mr. STEEN. As near as we can compile a list, about 1,300.

Maj. HUMES. That is, just the newspapers themselves?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. It does not include foreign-language periodicals which belong in another classification than newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. Can you give the number of newspapers published in each language; that is, of each nationality?

Mr. STEEN. I could not, exactly, without going into the list. I have a list from which that could be gotten.

Maj. HUMES. You can compile it, possibly, and put it in later—list of each nationality.

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you hand me that list as soon as you can get it?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Are these absolutely foreign-language papers and do they have American newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. They are absolutely all in foreign languages.

Senator NELSON. For instance, will you put in the list so many Bohemian papers and so many Italian papers, and so on?

Mr. STEEN. Yes; we have the list classified that way now, so that it is a very easy matter.

Maj. HUMES. Have you, during the last year, observed the attitude and activities of those newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. We have; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Will you state to the committee, in a general way, what the attitude and effect of these foreign-language newspapers has been, if you have observed it?

Mr. STEEN. The attitude of the majority of these papers during the war, and even since the war, has been exceptionally fair to the Government. However, the papers which are classified as social and labor papers have contained more or less agitation; that is, according to reports made to our headquarters by our members. I have not seen all of these papers myself, nor have I had translations of them; but, from the reports of our members, they have contained articles which were more or less in agitation to labor, especially.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "agitation"?

Mr. STEEN. Agitating labor to the fact that conditions were as they should be, and that they should ask for improvement in them; and along that line.

Senator WOLCOTT. Improvement in labor conditions?

Mr. STEEN. Yes; that is, generally speaking. Of course, some articles were different.

Maj. HUMES. What has been their attitude with reference to advocacy of violence or changing the form of government?

Mr. STEEN. That has been contained in several instances, I am told, by the members, in the Russian papers in particular.

Senator NELSON. Are there many Russian papers?

Mr. STEEN. Yes; there are probably approximately 150 Russian papers.

Senator NELSON. In this country?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to raise the question. I do not know what this witness is expected to testify to, what line of his testimony he is supposed to develop. I see two objections to the testimony: First, fundamental, that the witness is undertaking to appraise the sentiment of a large body of newspapers. We have not the newspapers before us. We have not the articles before us. We are taking, so to speak, testimony of this witness as an expert, who assumes to testify concerning the spirit of this press. Now, that is not a field for expert testimony at all; that is a field for the judgment of any man who will pass upon the facts when the papers are in front of him. That is the fundamental objection to this line of testimony.

Second, the witness has not even read the papers. He is speaking from reports handed in to him by "our members." Who they are we do not know. What might be their motives or interest we do not know. That does not seem to me to be a proper line of testimony. It is rather fancy that every one of those newspapers would have a right to come down here, if this testimony goes along, with all their files and ask this committee to look and pass judgment. We are getting into a field that is almost inexhaustible, and I do not think it is proper testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think he ought to state anything that somebody stated to him they thought the policy was. If he knows himself, has read the papers himself and knows, he might give his opinion for what it is worth. But to state what somebody has said to him about a newspaper and its policy, I do not think that is competent. What do you think about it, Senator Sterling?

Senator STERLING. I hardly think so.

Maj. HUMES. As the result of a communication addressed to Senator Nelson, to the effect that Mr. Steen and his association had given some attention to this situation, Mr. Steen was asked to come down and give the committee such information as he had on the subject.

Senator OVERMAN. If he has the information himself, I do not object to his stating it. He is going now to state what somebody has told him. That is not competent, clearly.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now, for instance, I gathered when Mr. Steen started off here that there was a large body of these papers that was favorable to the Government. There were others—I forget what his language was, but the inference indirectly from his statement was that there were others that were not favorable to the Government. They were Socialist papers and labor papers; and he said that they were agitating. When I asked how the labor papers were agitating he said it was in this way, that they were saying that the conditions were not what they ought to be and they wanted change and improvement in the labor conditions. Now, if that was the situation in those papers, it does not mean that they were hostile to the Government, necessarily. I can conceive how some labor agitation would be hostile to the Government, but I can conceive how some other could not be; agitation to improve labor conditions. Now, that one little circumstance indicates the uncertainty and rather indeliberate worth of this sort of testimony.

Senator OVERMAN. They could agitate for better conditions of labor and still be as loyal Americans as anybody.

Senator WOLCOTT. Certainly they could.

Senator OVERMAN. I think it should be confined to what he himself knows, and what he has read. He can state that, but not what anybody told him.

Maj. HUMES. I understand that Mr. Steen has an analysis of editorial and newspaper policy of these newspapers that he has outlined, based upon translations and editorials, but I find that he has not got that to-day. I have never had a chance to talk with him until just to-day.

Senator STERLING. These are all foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. Yes. If the committee please, this association wishes to aid this committee and the Government in every way possible in this situation, and for that reason I brought this list along which I am willing to turn over, and other matters that I have here I am willing to turn over, that they may be used as you may see fit.

Senator NELSON. Have you quotations from these newspapers here with you?

Mr. STEEN. I have copies of some papers, that we made. Of course, I have not the translations of them, but copies, which I am told contain articles in them.

Senator NELSON. You have those papers here?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir [indicating papers].

Senator OVERMAN. Can you read them?

Mr. STEEN. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. How many languages do you read?

Mr. STEEN. I speak one language, the English language.

Senator OVERMAN. Therefore you have not read these papers yourself?

Mr. STEEN. No, sir; they are merely called to my attention by members.

Senator STERLING. Have they been translated to you by any of them—the articles in any of them?

Mr. STEEN. We have a number of translations on file in our headquarters, but they were all of articles which were not in any way detrimental to the Government.

Senator STERLING. Have you any translations here that are detrimental to the Government?

Mr. STEEN. No; I have not.

Senator NELSON. Have you any of these articles here in foreign languages that you claim are hostile to the Government?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. In what languages are they?

Mr. STEEN. They are in Hungarian and Jewish and Italian.

Senator STERLING. Could you procure translations of those?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. I think those would be proper, with the translations.

Senator OVERMAN. I would be very glad if you would furnish those. How long would it take you to get the translations?

Mr. STEEN. It would only be a matter of a day if I am back in New York.

Senator NELSON. He could send them.

Senator OVERMAN. Could you have them translated and sent in to the committee?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir; I would be very glad to do so.

Senator OVERMAN. We would be very glad if you would do so, and let the committee judge for themselves.

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Translations of any papers that you think are of that character.

Mr. STEEN. I will send the papers in, too, because a number of them have cartoons, too, you see [indicating papers].

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Have you any papers that you have been informed are advocating Bolshevism and anarchy?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. And "Down with the Government." Have you any of those things?

Mr. STEEN. That is exactly what I referred to. These papers advocate certain forms of anarchy.

Senator OVERMAN. You can furnish translations of those articles and send them to the committee?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. We will be very glad if you will do so.

Senator NELSON. They advocate syndicalism and sabotage and matters of that kind?

Mr. STEEN. Well, generally speaking.

Senator NELSON. Clippings from those papers, I should think, Mr. Chairman, would be proper.

Senator OVERMAN. We would be very glad to have them. He says he will furnish them.

Mr. STEEN. We will furnish you with the papers with the articles marked and the translations attached.

Senator OVERMAN. We will be glad to have them.

Senator WOLCOTT. And also papers that have manifested hostility to the Government in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is proper testimony. Send the articles themselves.

Senator NELSON. Yes; the articles themselves with the translations.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Steen, your association is made up of State associations, is it not?

Mr. STEEN. Of course, as I said, we have a new organization. We are forming branches in the States. We have about 14 States organized now.

Maj. HUMES. Has your organization in its regular meetings had up for discussion and consideration the foreign-language press of the country?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And been giving attention to it?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. And your association has taken action with reference to their view of the desirability and effect of certain foreign language newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. They have.

Maj. HUMES. I do not know whether the committee would be interested about the action taken by the association or not.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you passed any resolution on that subject?

Mr. STEEN. The last resolutions that were passed were at the convention, in Cleveland, Ohio, January 18 and 19.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, last month. I have here a copy of the resolutions.

As a result of the consideration that was given to the foreign language press of this country, what was the action of the association on that subject?

Mr. STEEN. That the association went on record as favoring Federal law forbidding the printing of any newspaper in the United States in other than the English language; or, as a compromise, that all foreign-language newspapers be required to file a complete translation in English, accompanied by an affidavit, of every issue that goes through the Post Office Department. That was, in effect, the extent of the resolutions.

Senator STERLING. A translation of a complete issue of the paper.

Mr. STEEN. And of the contracts of the paper. At the present time the order is during the war that they must file a translation of such articles as pertain to the war.

Senator STERLING. And your association passed resolutions to that effect?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why should not that be put into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. I want it in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Have you a complete copy of those resolutions?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Read them. I want to hear it.

Mr. STEEN. Of course, there are other matters in here. This is a complete set of the entire resolutions.

Maj. HUMES. Read that portion of the resolutions referring to that matter.

Senator OVERMAN. You can put in the whole of the resolutions but read that portion of them.

Mr. STEEN (reading):

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association, at its fourth annual convention, assembled at Cleveland, Ohio, January 18 and 19, 1919, does hereby go on record as opposing vigorously all forms of premeditated anarchy or its causes such as may be possible with the sudden throwing out of employment the national body in opposing munition, and that we urge the Government and by every other means possible, sudden unemployment, so that it be used to effect a readjustment of the sudden stoppage of war industry to enact improved permanent traffic and that employment in employed men.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association go on record as favoring a Federal law forbidding the printing of any newspaper in the United States in any other than the English language.

Resolved. That the Ohio City Editors' Association favors the elimination of all legal advertising in the German newspapers of the State of Ohio and that a copy of this resolution be sent to all other State associations of city editors, as well as a copy to the Governor of Ohio and to the auditor of state; that said association believes the elimination of such legal advertising in German newspapers a step toward the final extermination of such periodicals.

Senator STERLING. That is a resolution passed by the City Editors' Association of the State of Ohio?

Mr. STEEN. Yes; which is a branch of our national association.

Senator STERLING. Do you mean your national association of foreign-language newspapers or national association of newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. The National Association of City Editors. The Indiana association, which met at the same time, passed resolutions, of which I have not the exact wording, but which declared in favor of requiring all foreign-language newspapers to file with the Post Office Department copies in English of all articles published, and we have since been urging that, and will take action on it.

Senator NELSON. What is the business purpose of that organization?

Mr. STEEN. It is merely a cooperative organization among the editors of newspapers.

Senator NELSON. Cooperating in what?

Mr. STEEN. To exchange ideas; and we issue a publication which gives them instruction and—

Senator NELSON. Do you have any income?

Mr. STEEN. We have no income other than the dues from membership and from advertising in our publication.

Senator NELSON. What is the average? What are the dues on the average?

Mr. STEEN. $3 a year.

Senator NELSON. And what else did you say, outside of that, you derive revenue from?

Mr. STEEN. We publish a monthly publication known as the City Editor.

Senator NELSON. Does that bring you any revenue?

Mr. STEEN. That brings us a revenue in advertising and circulation. There are copies of the paper, and the subscription price of the paper is at this time $1 a year.

Senator STERLING. Are you connected with the Association for the Publication of Foreign Newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. I am connected with no foreign language newspaper association; no, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. You are president of this association?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. There has been some agitation for legislation to stop the publication of foreign-language newspapers in this country, and I understand your idea is that instead of stopping the publication, with each issue a copy of each issue in English should be furnished the Postmaster General. Is that what you advocate?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Instead of abolishing the paper and not permitting the publication of the paper, that a copy of each issue in English should be furnished the Postmaster General?

Mr. STEEN. That is our request, that there be some order or law passed by which they must file an affidavit in the presence of witnesses, with a true translation in English of the entire paper.

Senator STERLING. I understood you to say a while ago that it was either your idea or the idea of your association that publication in a foreign language should be prohibited, or as a compromise—I think that is the term you used——

Mr. STEEN. Yes; that is correct.

Senator STERLING (continuing). There should be a translation of the entire publication?

Mr. STEEN. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. That, you could see, would not be practicable in a daily paper.

Mr. STEEN. Well, that is a question.

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with a man by the name of Berko?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What paper is he the editor of?

Mr. STEEN. It is the Amerikai Magoyer Nepszava.

Maj. HUMES. Where is it published?

Mr. STEEN. In New York City; a Hungarian paper.

Maj. HUMES. There has been a good deal of testimony in regard to Berko, in the testimony of Konta and in the testimony of Hamling. You are acquainted with him, are you?

Mr. STEEN. Yes; I am.

Maj. HUMES. Has he come to you with any suggestion with reference to foreign-language newspapers, lately?

Mr. STEEN. He has.

Maj. HUMES. What is he contending for on behalf of the foreign-language newspapers?

Mr. STEEN. He suggested to me in my office that the National Association of City Editors start a movement to stop the filing of translations in English of any articles published at the present time regarding the war, such as has been done, under the order of the Post Office Department, declaring that the war was over and that it was not necessary now, and that they should be able to say what they think.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, the trading-with-the-enemy act and the required translations has made it impossible for the foreign-language newspapers to say what they thought?

Mr. STEEN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And that, of course, was not compatible with the policy of your association, and therefore you were not in sympathy with it?

Mr. STEEN. No.

Maj. HUMES. I think that is all, except those translations, and I wish you would prepare that schedule of the foreign-language newspapers.

Mr. STEEN. I would be very glad to turn this over to the committee, with the number of each nationality.

Senator NELSON. And the circulation, if you can give it.

Mr. STEEN. I can not give you that.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you a statement that you can furnish the committee now, and have it put in the record? If you have, just give it to the stenographer.

Mr. STEEN. Here are these resolutions.

(The resolutions referred to are here printed in full in the record as follows:)

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE OHIO CITY EDITORS ASSOCIATION IN CONVENTION
AT CLEVELAND, JANUARY 18-19, 1919.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association, at its fourth annual convention, assembled at Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 18 and 19, 1919, does hereby go on record as opposing vigorously all forms of premeditated anarchy or its uses, such as may be possible with the undercurrent of feeling among men who may be suddenly thrown out of employment, and further that this association joins the national body in opposing any such tendency that may arise in any community, and that we urge the members of our association to fight editorially and by every other means possible this great menace, and its underlying principles, sudden unemployment, social injustice and that legislation or other means be used to effect a readjustment of present chaotic conditions caused by the sudden stoppage of war industries, and that we further recommend legislation to enact improved permanent highways to stand increased motor truck freight traffic and that employment in building these highways be given these unemployed men.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association go on record as favoring federal law forbidding the printing of any newspaper in the United States in any other than the English language.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association favors the elimination of all legal advertising in the German newspapers of the State of Ohio and that a copy of this resolution be sent to all other state associations of city editors, as well as a copy to the Governor of Ohio and to the Auditor of State; that this association believes the elimination of such legal advertising in German newspapers a step toward the final extermination of such periodicals.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association extends sincere thanks to the city of Cleveland and its representatives for the splendid welcome accorded during the fourth annual convention, as well as the treatment received here; that we appreciate the support and co-operation given by the newspapers of the city, as well as the Cleveland Museum of Art and the Newspaper Enterprise Association for the opportunities to revisit these institutions.

Resolved, That this convention does unanimously agree to hold the 1920 meeting in Cincinnati, Ohio, at the same time the national meeting is held, providing same is set for Cincinnati, and that the change in location gives added new attendance and membership each year.

Resolved, Further that the government adopt a policy of promoting publicity through a system of paid advertising, which can be handled equitably and fairly through any national advertising agency.

Resolved, That this association co-operate with everything that tends to develop and broaden the good roads movement in the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the Ohio City Editors' Association in convention assembled extends to our president Clyde P. Steen, sincerest congratulations in his work of reconstruction of getting together the City Editors of the nation. We heartily endorse his every activity in this connection and hope that the persistency that he has always displayed will be emulated by every other city editor.

H. A. AMOS, News, Sidney, Chairman.

C. F. RIDENOUR, Gazette, Xenia.

GEO. F. SMITH, Free Press, Leipsic.

W. A. RITZEL, Chronicle, Warren.

Mr. STEEN. Is it the desire of the committee to have the names of all these foreign-language newspapers?

Senator OVERMAN. We do not care for that. What we want is a list of the names.

Maj. HAMES. That is prepared, as I understand.

Mr. STEEN. The list is all prepared.

Senator NELSON. I think that would be proper in that connection if he has got it ready.

Senator OVERMAN. If you had that other statement ready with it it would be all right to put it in, I think.

Senator NELSON. You could not give approximately the circulation of each paper?

Mr. STEEN. No; I could not.

(The matter referred to was later submitted by Mr. Steen and inserted in this record on pages 2899 to 2922.)

Senator OVERMAN. Has this order of the Secretary of War been put on record?

Maj. HUMES. Senator Sterling has read it into the record. [The order referred to appears in full on pages 2922-2923.]

Senator OVERMAN. I want to say that I have asked the Secretary of War to send me a copy of the letter that he wrote me in regard to my request to furnish certain papers, and he says he will send it down right away. Without thinking, I sent the original of his letter to ex-Senator Benet in South Carolina, who had requested that an investigation be made, together with ex-Gov. Mann, and I think it ought to be in the record, since we have had this discussion this morning, and I would like for the committee to meet here at 6 o'clock this evening to discuss that matter in executive session. The letter, of course, is public.

(The letter above referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington, February 1, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: Major Humes has conveyed to me your request that the Military Intelligence Division file with regard to F. J. H. von Engelken, President of the Federal Land Bank, Columbia, South Carolina, be introduced before the Judiciary Committee. Your request is obviously based on the suggestion of Captain George B. Lester which is herewith returned to your files.

Some time ago Senator Fletcher brought Mr. von Engelken into my office to see me, and I at that time went through the entire subject. It seems that the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department have both repeatedly and thoroughly investigated Mr. von Engelken. The Military Intelligence Division file is made up largely of copies of documents supplied by the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department. There is nothing in our file in any way connects Mr. von Engelken with any German propaganda, or propaganda of any kind. The conclusions of the Military Intelligence Division are stated as follows:

"The conclusions of this office are that subject is loyal to the United States and that his conduct prior to the entrance of this country into the war, as well as since, has caused him to be a much criticized man at his home in Florida, as well as at Charlotte, North Carolina. * * * The entire file is one devoted solely to the personal investigation of this one subject. There are no collateral leads, connections or indications that subject was in any way connected with organized German propaganda in this country, or, in fact, propaganda of any variety."

When Senator Fletcher brought Mr. von Engelken to me it was to request that he be commissioned an officer in the Army for the sole purpose of restoring his reputation which both Mr. von Engelken and Senator Fletcher felt had been clearly and unjustly damaged by repeated investigations into his life. Senator Fletcher tells me that Mr. von Engelken was formerly Director of the Mint, later President of the Federal Farm Loan Bank at Columbia, South Carolina; that he is a man of high business reputation for integrity and honesty; and that the distrust which has apparently grown up about him among his friends and neighbors is due, in part, to his name and, in part, to expressions by him prior to America's going into the war which were in vative in their condemnation of Germany to satisfy his more ardent neighbors.

I desire to place at the disposal of the Senate Committee every scrap of evidence in the custody of the War Department which can in any way aid the committee in its inquiry. Frankly, I do not think the von Engelken file would afford the slightest assistance. If you desire to go over it, or to have Major Humes go over it, I will be glad to bring it to you. I do not send the file but rather take this course, because I know you want to protect an apparently innocent man from further notoriety when it is already believed by earnest and responsible men like Senator Fletcher that his business and social standing have been gravely injured by undeserved suspicions already caused by the activities of Government agents who have repeatedly investigated Mr. von Engelken, but whose investigations have brought to the surface nothing to his discredit.

If you will indicate your feeling to me in this matter I will be most happy to cooperate.

Cordially yours,

(Signed)

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. Nothing else, except to put in the record that compilation.

Now, I have gathered together, not entirely digested, but requiring only a few hours' time to complete, a great many translations from foreign-language newspapers, especially since the armistice was signed, and more of a bolshevik nature than of a pro-German nature, and I wondered if it was the desire of the committee to put any of that matter into the record. It is almost an inexhaustible subject. You can put a few samples in or you can put an enormous amount of that stuff in.

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that you select those that you think ought to go into the record and put them in.

Senator NELSON. Select just a few of the most pronounced and put them in the record, and scatter them over the country, if you wish—I mean, in different localities.

Maj. HUMES. You mean, make it an assortment—a geographical assortment?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Put in something from every paper you have, of this nature, showing the distribution about the country.

I have had a large correspondence and have given Maj. Humes the letters to read, asking that they be put in the record.

I gave you a letter, Major, that you might read to the committee. It is a long letter from Mr. Bowland, protesting against the testimony of Mr. Stevenson, and wanting to cross-examine him.

Maj. HUMES. Here is a telegram which there is no request to put in the record, with reference to one of the organizations that has been mentioned, addressed to Senator Overman, and signed by Harry W. Widler, secretary of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society. It reads as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., January 27, 1919.

Senator OVERMAN,
Chairman Senate Investigating Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the list of alleged pacifists and radicals submitted by the Military Intelligence Bureau to the Senate Committee the names of several college professors were included and after their names the words Intercollegiate Socialist Society. In most instances the only connection that these men had with the society has been as endorsers of the society's stated object to promote an intelligent interest in socialism among college men and women. The society is an educational not a political propagandist organization. It has been organized to throw light on the world wide movement toward industrial democracy known as socialism in the belief that no intelligent college man could be ignorant of the movement and that no one can intelligently support or intelligently oppose socialism unless he understands its ideals and aims.

HARRY W. LAIDLER,
Secretary of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society,
70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Maj. HUMES. That is the defense that is offered for the organization.

Senator OVERMAN. Let that go in the record.

I will put in the record also this letter of C. B. Richard & Co.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

[Established 1847. Oscar L. Richard, Leonard W. Simmons, Albert F. Egelhoff & Co., N. Richard.]

C. B. RICHARD & Co.,
29 BROADWAY,
New York, February 3, 1917

CHAIRMAN SENATE PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The New York Times of yesterday (Feb. 2) contained an extract of the testimony before your committee of one Lajos Steiner of Chicago.

I have had 46 years' experience in transatlantic passenger business as general agent of prominent lines and can definitely say that the statements made by you by Mr. Steiner are simply absurd, incredible, and untrustworthy.

1. There are not 25,000 foreign language newspapers printed in the United States, but only about 1,575.

2. In my long experience I never heard of a single newspaper being subsidized by any foreign steamship line; on the contrary, they have always tried to obtain a preferential advertising rate for their advertisements in the newspapers in which they did advertise.

3. It is not true that steamship lines or their agents systematically work to have immigrants export their savings and to have them buy a ticket to emigrate.

4. The statement that $400,000,000 are sent abroad in each normal year to needy relatives or to be deposited in banks there is equally grossly exaggerated.

5. It is an amazing statement and absolutely untrue that transatlantic steamship companies prevent immigrants from becoming American citizens in order not to have them remain here for good so they may fill their steamships on the return trip to Europe.

Yours, very truly,

O. L. RICHARD

OLR:AJW

Maj. HUMES. There are a number of just such telegrams as the last one, which there is no request to put in the record, and in many cases they are advocating the propaganda that has been under investigation here, and I did not assume that the committee would be so kind as to incorporate them in the record.

There is another letter here from the man who defended E. Goldman and Berkman, defending the cause.

Here is also a letter from John Reed. He is one of the bolshievers who is complaining about an improper classification of bolshivism.

Senator OVERMAN. I will hand the stenographer this telegram from Evans Clark. Let it be inserted in the record.

(The telegram referred to was read aloud and is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

BROOKLYN, N. Y., January 27.

SENATE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING GERMAN PROPAGANDA,

Washington, D. C.,

I wish to protest emphatically against the use of my name in any list connected directly or by implication with German propaganda my active connection with the Socialist party is the best proof I can offer of my unqualified condemnation of the kaiser's regime and my sympathetic support of the forces in Germany that have so completely overthrown it. The Socialist war against the kaiser began many years before nineteen seventeen and continued to the time of his abdication. The Socialist party is the only party in the United States whose leaders and followers have never been implicated by government exposures in embarrassing relations with German propagandists. Not one cent of German money has ever been nor can be traced into the coffers of the Socialist party. The real reason why Socialists appear on government proscription lists seems to be that they have not only fought autocracy in Germany but have openly and continually opposed it at home. Mr. Stevenson's index is a good example of the Prussianism that now exists in the United States. That Mr. Stevenson is under the orders of Secretary Baker is a commentary on the failure of so-called "Liberal" leaders in and out of the present administration.

EVANS CLARK.

Senator NELSON. That is what lawyers call a kind of a negative affirmative.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Rowland criticizes the committee severely in the Stevenson testimony. If you have any more letters there, Major, present them.

(At 11.30 o'clock a. m. the subcommittee adjourned until 4 o'clock p. m., when an executive session was held, at the conclusion of which the subcommittee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

(By order of the chairman, the following letter, the same being part of an editorial in the Lexington Herald of Lexington, Ky., of Tuesday, February 4, 1919, is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

LEXINGTON, KY., February 1, 1919.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR:—I have waited, hoping to see an official copy of the report of the proceedings of the Sub-Committee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate charged with the duty of investigating pro-German propaganda. I regret I have not received it.

In the Cincinnati Enquirer of Saturday, January 25, there is an account of the proceedings before the sub-committee in which there is what purports to be a copy of extracts from the official record. That account agrees so closely with what was published in the New York Times of the same date that I assume it is substantially correct. The list of names given in each account is identical. The statements made by Mr. Stevenson and members of the sub-committee clearly lead to the same implication.

Assuming the account of the Cincinnati Enquirer to be accurate, it increases the sense of indignation that so malignant an outrage should have been permitted or committed by a committee of public servants charged with so grave a duty as was the sub-committee of which you are chairman, and intensifies the mingled feeling of regret and shame that any sub-committee of the Senate should permit itself to be used as that sub-committee was used by an unknown and, according to the statement of the Secretary of War, discredited employe of any bureau of the Government. Keen as is my feeling of indignation at the outrage committed against the individuals whose names are contained in that list, my regret and shame that any committee of senators could be guilty of such an act are even greater.

As I stated and reiterated to you in the conversation I had with you in the Capitol Monday afternoon, January 27, I speak only for myself. I feel that for a few individuals to be selected from the membership of various organizations by an employe or voluntary worker of a bureau of the Government, and their names published with the intimation that after our entrance into the war they were not loyal to the cause for which we fought, is an illustration of a brutal bureaucracy which should not be permitted in a democracy. From conversations with other citizens in New York, Washington and on the train here, I know I voice the sentiments of all fair-minded citizens who have given consideration to the action of the sub-committee of the Senate.

You stated to me in the conversation I had with you that you had ruled the admission of this list, and been overruled by the committee. Further, as I understood you, that the list was published with the names of organizations to which the individuals belonged that the public might draw its own conclusions. If those organizations were disloyal they should have been disbanded. If membership in those organizations was evidence of disloyalty the names of all or none of the members should have been published. If any individuals were guilty of crimes that brought them within the purview of the law, they should have been indicted.

But for a sub-committee of the Senate to permit itself to be used by an irresponsible employe of any department of the Government to give publicity to a list of persons selected by that employe, with the intimation that they were censurable for any act, without an opportunity afforded them to have knowledge of the charges upon which such intimations are based, and without full evidence on the part of the committee, seems to me an outrage that takes from those guilty of it any claim to the respect of a fair-minded American.

In regard to the person in that list in whom I am most directly concerned, I know of no individual who rendered more effective work along more valuable lines after our declaration of war than did she. The fact that members of the sub-committee of the Senate are ignorant of that work, as it is inevitable that even such able and wise men must be ignorant of some facts, does not in any way minimize the result of that work nor justify the apparently malicious purpose of the individual who prepared the list and used the sub-committee of the Senate to give it national publicity.

I myself am not nor have I ever been a pacifist. I publicly declared in favor of war with Germany in August, 1914, and was consistent and persistent in my advocacy of war from that time until we entered the war. However, I belonged to some of the organizations that now meet the disapproval and receive the censure of honorable senators, joining such organizations under the misapprehension that they might be used to bring about a league of nations to destroy the economic and military power of Germany. I was a member of a committee that met in Washington in August, 1916, in an effort to induce the President to give his approval to a league of nations for such purpose. I found, however, that my fellow members of the committee were in favor of peace, and that the President did not at that time approve any league of nations. I was censured for not heeding the admonition to be neutral in word as well as even in spirit.

My sister, whose name is included in the list your Sub-Committee published, was in favor of a course she hoped would preserve peace for our country and restore peace to the world without the participation of this nation in the war. She agreed with many of the ablest and most patriotic citizens of America. Neither she nor I belong to a race or a class that characterize us by a victim at the pressing of a button or the pulling of a string. Her one aim was to bring peace with the least suffering to humanity. My one aim was to bring peace with the least suffering to humanity. We differed only in the methods by which this might be done. But after the declaration of war there is no person of whom I know, man or woman, who rendered more devoted service to this government and to the cause of civilization than she.

For men in high official position, who sat quiescent from August, 1914, to April, 1917, without other information than that furnished by an employe of some minor bureau, now to publish to the world, with the weight that comes from the position they hold, a list including her and others equal in patriotism and in service to her, and also including men indicted under the criminal law, seems to me the height of brutal as well as stupid misuse of power.

I have noted the Secretary of War repudiated Mr. Stevenson. I have noted that without defending in words the action of the committee, you attempt to justify it by placing the responsibility for Mr. Stevenson's appearance on a subordinate officer in the War Department. It is a matter of small consequence what Mr. Stevenson or the subordinate in the War Department, whose unrevealed, thinks or says or does. It is a matter of importance to Americans citizens that a sub-committee of the United States Senate was used as a channel by the individual in the War Department, through Mr. Stevenson as an instrument, to do gross and cruel injustice to men and women the full peer in intellect, character and patriotism of any member of the United States Senate.

You told me the Sub-Committee over which you preside would be glad to have a letter from my sister, or testimony as to her loyalty, I have no authority to speak for her, but I assume she does not care to submit a letter to your committee, looking upon the action of the Sub-Committee with tolerant though regretful contempt. There is no need for her to submit to your committee, or to any committee, testimony as to her loyalty to the cause for which the nation fought. Her life and her work prove that. When I intimated this to you, you said the committee would receive a letter from me. I avail myself of that statement to ask that you do me the favor to submit this letter to this committee.

Very sincerely yours,

DESHA BRECKENRIDGE.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1919.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman, King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. I have had some correspondence with ex-Senator Benet about this man von Engelken, in which Secretary Baker intimated that he would not end the correspondence, as the man had been acquitted; and Senator Benet is here, and came to see me about it, and I told him to come before the committee and make his statement, and we would be very glad, Senator, if you would make your statement now.

STATEMENT OF MR. CHRISTIE BENET.

Mr. BENET. This matter came up the first of last May or June, at which time the State Council of Defense of South Carolina took it up, and Gov. Manning called it to the attention of the Treasury Department that F. J. H. von Engelken, who was at that time president of the Farm Loan Bank in Columbia, S. C., was under suspicion in the community as being disloyal and pro-German.

Following that, certain affidavits were filed with the Treasury Department, and later the Treasury Department had a secret service investigation made. That record has been in the hands of the Treasury Department for a number of months, and in spite of all the efforts we could make to get a hearing in the matter, to be allowed to present other evidence if it was necessary, we could get no action whatever on the matter.

Senator NELSON. Would they not let you know what the report was?

Mr. BENET. No, sir.

Senator NELSON. They gave you no information?

Mr. BENET. No, sir. Gov. Manning, Mr. Coker, chairman of the State Council of National Defense, and myself had this matter up.

Finally, on the 16th of November a letter was written by Mr. McAdoo, to the President, a copy of which letter I have seen, which letter states, according to my recollection, that it would be an act of justice on the President's part to write to von Engelken stating that he had been investigated and that there was no foundation for the charges against him.

The President wrote von Engelken such a letter, my basis for that statement being that von Engelken published such a letter in the papers of South Carolina. I have never seen it, but I believe that that letter was written.

We feel that von Engelken was disloyal. It is proven by papers, copies of which I have here, and it was further proven by the secret service investigation. That investigation is in the hands of the Treasury.

We feel that at the time the matter came up von Engelken should have been handled; but that is an incident, it seems to us now, and we feel that this committee, if it can, should find out what influences prevented action in the Treasury Department on a report of that sort.

Senator NELSON. What do you say this man's name is?

Mr. BENET. F. J. H. von Engelken.

Senator NELSON. Had he not held a Federal office before this?

Mr. BENET. Yes; he had been Director of the Mint.

Senator NELSON. Where?

Mr. BENET. In Washington.

Senator NELSON. Director of the Mint here?

Mr. BENET. Yes. Then he came to Columbia as the president of the Federal loan bank. After we found this charge against him he was removed from Columbia, and we understood that he was to be discharged from the service; but some weeks later we were greatly surprised to find that he had been put in a more important position.

Senator NELSON. What position?

Mr. BENET. He was agent of the entire system of farm loan banks, trying to sell the bonds of the farm loan bank, as we understand; traveling extensively between New York, Washington, and Chicago, on that mission.

Mr. Coker and I were told by McAdoo, the day that Mr. McAdoo went out of office—we personally finally did have a conference with him, but that was after the President had written the letter to von Engelken, and Mr. McAdoo told us—that von Engelken was no longer in the service, but the newspapers of South Carolina had carried a statement that he was in the service. I do not know whether he is or not.

The record you gentlemen asked for the other day from Secretary Baker is not, in my opinion, the record you want to get. After von Engelken came to us, some time in the fall, he applied for a commission in the Army, and our information is that he was investigated by the Military Intelligence Section, and that is the record, I think, that Mr. Baker is speaking about.

Senator OVERMAN. He got no commission?

Mr. BENET. He got no commission. This article the other day if the armistice had not been made, the committee to get was made by the Secret Service record includes not only the affidavits which we filed in June.

Now I have copies of the papers here, the originals of which are on file in the Treasury.

Senator NELSON. What were the charges?

Mr. BENET. I would be glad to read a short statement from these papers, or I can state it if the committee prefers.

Senator NELSON. Either way.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to say that von Engelken telegraphed to me that he would like to have a hearing, and Senator Fletcher brought me the telegram, and I telegraphed him back that the committee had concluded to let this matter rest and not go into it further, as we could not try single individuals; and of course, now! Senator Benet comes out and tells what he does, I expect we will have to let him be heard. Go ahead, now, Senator, and answer Senator Nelson's question.

Senator NELSON. Tell us what the specific charges were.

Mr. BENET. The charges grew up from a variety of statements von Engelken was reported to have made, but the affidavits we filed show that in a group of men he justified the sinking of the Lusitania; he stated that the reason we went in the war was on account of the money interests, and that Morgan and Rockefeller forced President Wilson to go into war; further, that Ambassador Gerard's statements about atrocities in Germany were not correct; that the ambassador had fooled himself; that those atrocities were the result of newspaper propaganda. He justified the sinking of any ship that came in the zone, no matter who were on it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Regardless of nationality?

Mr. BENET. Yes. He refused to subscribe to the Red Cross, and was very insolent to some ladies who canvassed him for the Red Cross. He was very profane and violent in his statements about the Edith Cavell incident, in talking to a man on the train in connection with that, this man having said to him that he believed that the German high command was responsible and not the German people, von Engelken taking the position that the German people backed everything the German high command did.

During this time he was president of the farm loan bank in Columbia, the highest financial position in our State, and covering several other States, and our charges were simply this, that he was not giving any help in Government activities; that he was a hindrance rather than a help, and that we felt he should not be allowed to speak for the liberty loan. The specific act on which we finally filed charges was a statement sent from Washington that von Engelken was going out to speak for, I think it was, the second liberty loan—possibly the third liberty loan—and we wrote a letter then to the Secretary of the Treasury stating that the man was under suspicion in South Carolina for the reasons stated, and that he should not be allowed to speak for the liberty loan elsewhere; that he could not speak in South Carolina and he should not be allowed to speak anywhere else.

Now, that lay in the Treasury Department from May until November, and then he winds up with a letter from the President in his pocket indorsing his loyalty.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee request the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish us the report of this investigation that took place—the entire report.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there any objection? The chair hears none and the request will be made.

I think, gentlemen, now, since this matter has come up, Mr. von Engelken ought to be allowed to be heard.

Senator NELSON. After we have seen what is in that investigation after we have examined those files and got the data.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BENET. Gov. Manning and Mr. D. L. Coker, chairman of the State Council of Defense, desired me to say that they would be glad to come any time the committee desired them.

Senator OVERMAN. Do they know anything of their own knowledge except what you have stated?

Mr. BENET. No, sir; nothing.

Senator OVERMAN. Those papers are in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BENET. Yes, sir; they are on file in the Treasury Department.

Senator NELSON. Do they include everything that is on file in the Treasury Department?

Mr. BENET. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you leave those papers with Mr. Humes.

Mr. BENET. Very well [handing papers to Maj. Humes].

(The following copies and translations of letters, reports, and other documents were submitted by the witness, Francis H. Kirtland, in connection with his testimony, as true copies or translations of letters, reports, and other documents found by himself and other investigators of the War Trade Board and Military Intelligence among the papers of Julius Pirnitzer, of the Transatlantic Trust Co., and were ordered to be inserted in the record:)

EXHIBIT 1.

CIRCULAR OF THE TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO., SHOWING WHO WERE THE OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS, ETC., IN 1914, AND SHOWING THAT VON NUBER, AN AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN CONSUL GENERAL, WAS A MEMBER OF THE BOARD.

Transatlantic Trust Company, New York. Main Office, 67-69 William Street. East Side Branch, 207 Second Avenue. Capital and Surplus, $1,050,000. Depository: United States Postal Savings System, New York State and County Funds, Cotton and Coffee Margins, Trust Funds. Fiscal Agent, Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, Budapest.

Transatlantic Trust Company, New York. Condensed Statement. December 31st, 1914.

RESOURCES.

Cash and due from banks	$1,242,377
Public securities	717,227
Stocks and bonds	1,010,622
Loans	1,466,717
	4,436,983

LIABILITIES.

Capital	700,000
Surplus	350,000
Undivided profits	17,341
Reserved for taxes, etc.	53,296
Deposits	3,316,346
	4,436,983

OFFICERS.

Julius Pirnitzer, president.
H. B. Fonda, vice president.
H. L. Servoss, secretary.
Geo. Plochmann, treasurer.
E. S. Cubberley, asst. treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

H. Rieman Duval (chairman), president American Beet Sugar Co.
James G. Cannon, director Mechanics & Metals Nat. Bank.
John W. Platten, president U. S. Mortgage & Trust Co.
Calvert Brewer, vice pres. U. S. Mortgage & Trust Co.
Walther Luttgen, August Belmont & Co., bankers.
Henry H. Wehrhane, Hallgarten & Co., bankers.
Julius Pirnitzer, president.
Walter G. Oakman, president Hudson Companies.
Hon. Alexander von Nuber, consul general for Austria-Hungary.
Arpad G. Gerster, M. D., capitalist.
Gustave Leve, merchant.
Morris Cukor, counsellor at law.
Arnold Somlyo, Baldwin Piano Works.
H. B. Fonda, vice president.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENTS.

London: London County & Westminster Bank, Ltd.; Credito Italiano.
Paris: Banque Française Pour le Com. et L'Ind.; London County & Westminster Bank (Paris), Ltd.; Banque J. Allard & Cie.
Berlin: Deutsche Bank; National Bank für Deutschland.
Hamburg: M. M. Warburg & Co.
Vienna: K. K. Priv. Oest. Credit-Anstalt für H. und G.; Anglo-Oesterreichische Bank; Union Bank.
Budapest: Hungarian General Creditbank; Hungarian Commercial Bank of Pest; Hungarian Discount and Exchange Bank.
Petrograd: Russo-Asiatic Bank.
Bucharest: Banque Marmorosch, Blank & Co.

EXHIBIT 2.

COPY OF LETTER OF JULIUS PIRNITZER TO F. H. KINNICUTT, GIVING SUMMARY STATEMENT OF SALES OF ENEMY WAR LOAN BONDS AND AMOUNTS OF IMMIGRANTS' SAVINGS EXPORTED THROUGH TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO. DURING FIRST FOUR YEARS OF THE WAR.

Transatlantic Trust Company, 67-69 William Street, New York. Capital, Suplus & Reserves, $1,400,000. Julius Pirnitzer, President; H. B. Fonda, Vice-president; George Plochmann, Treasurer; E. S. Cubberley, Ass't Treas.]

MAY 13, 1918.

Mr. F. H. KINNICUTT,
War Trade Board, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation on Friday, the 10th inst., I take pleasure in giving you herewith the data you have asked for:

Sales of War Loan Bonds of the Central Powers:
A. Austrian-----	4, 491, 400 Kronen
B. Hungarian-----	13, 646, 100 Kronen
C. German-----	14, 383, 100 Mark
Money forwarding business:
A. Austria-Hungary—
1914-----	14, 410, 401. 89 Kronen
1915-----	53, 223, 719. 87 Kronen
1916-----	68, 746, 838. 69 Kronen
1917-----	8, 454, 917. 04 Kronen
B. Germany—
1914-----	12, 706. 21 Mark
1915-----	163, 993. 28 Mark
1916-----	2, 373, 949. 32 Mark
1917-----	1, 037, 352. 24 Mark

The normal parity of Exchange between this country and Austria-Hungary is $20.26 per 100 Kronen, between this country and Germany, $23.80 per 100 Marks. Since the outbreak of the European war the value of the Exchange of the Central Powers has been almost continually declining. The present parity is about $12.50 per 100 Kronen, and $19.00 per 100 Marks.

In further pursuance to your request, I beg to enclose a list of local houses and bankers who, previous to the declaration of war against the Central Powers, were actively interested in the money forwarding business to Austria-Hungary and Germany.

Again assuring you of my readiness to give you any further information at my command, believe me

Very sincerely,

J. PIRNITZER, President

SM.

EXHIBIT 3.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JOHN BIRO, A HUNGARIAN NEWSPAPER MAN, TO JULIUS PIRNITZER, SAYING THAT PIRNITZER IS SUSPECTED OF BEING IMPLICATED IN THE "WARM PLOT," THE EXPOSURE OF WHICH CAUSED THE DISMISSAL OF AMBASSADOR DUMBA.

[Hungarian Illustrated World.]

Confidential

CLEVELAND 0 Sept. 2:20

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I wish to inform you confidentially and urgently of the following a federal inquest was started in the Dumba affair. Yesterday I received a friendly call to go to the Post Office where also the Federal offices are located. There I had a hearing of two hours and was asked for information. I have the best of reputation here in Cleveland and the matter did not have the character of an examination. On the contrary the examining Judge told me of the results of investigation up to this time and here follows the matter which is in connection with you Mr. President. Someone in New York informed them that the idea of strike was first touched upon at the evening party given by you in honor of Mrs. Kohany during her well known stay at New York. He also knew the list of the guests present, but he was not right in the one thing that WARM also was present. I emphatically disproved this supposition. I told him that you Mr. President and WARM never have been in any connection whatever. On the contrary, that you always in your opinion concerning WARM and I accentuated what that opinion was. I further told him about WARM'S part (role) in the line of transmission of money and it is my most serious impression that they dropped every former supposition about you, Mr. President. As far as I know, the examining Judge is going to New York in a day or two, chiefly for the purpose to find WARM.

I considered it necessary to inform you of these things. I don't know what importance is ascribed to this matter by you, Mr. President. I have done my duty at all events and am in a hurry to let you know about the matter. At the same time I beg to inform you that the "Illustrated World" is a success unheard of and if signs are right I will have more subscribers in a year than any other daily.

Thanking you for your friendship and affections, I remain

Yours truly

signed: JOHN BIRO

EXHIBIT 4.

COPY OF LETTER FROM ELMER GATES TO JULIUS PIRNITZER, REGARDING SALE OF AN EXPLOSIVE DEVICE TO THE CENTRAL POWERS, SHOWING THAT PIRNITZER HAD CLOSE RELATION WITH THE ARCH SPY, VON RINTELEN.

For you and Mr. Rintelen only

SATURDAY

DEAR MR. PIRNITZER: I am favorably impressed with Mr. Rintelen and will give him my full confidence and I wish that on his "say so" you would ento get rid of my Canadian obligation and then made a demonstration of the explosive and Guidable, as soon as possible.

There are good sufficient reasons why I dared not disclose my secret to Dr. Frank and Prof. Brown and those others connected with the Siemens & Halske Co., and I will tell them to you and Rintelen privately and in confidence at any hour and place you appoint, preferable but not necessarily here in my room at the club. When you hear what I have to say you will agree with me, and it is important that you hear it as you will understand.

Just as I was leaving here yesterday to meet the 2 o'clock appointment with Dr. Frank, I received the enclosed telegram from my attorney, please return it, and besides there is a very important reason why I dare not disclose to Siemens & Halske. . . . If word should reach Canada before I pay off Pitt, and Mandam, I would be unable to life the Explosive and Guidable out of the list of War Inventions for /9800— I would not then be able to do it if I were to pay the whole half million or any sum, and by reason of my being at Dr. Frank's place yesterday, word may reach Canada because of one party who knew I was there, as I will explain. The success of my invention means the failure of that party's similar invention, etc.

I know what I am talking about. You are busy men, so am I, come here if you can, or both meet me at your office at a very early hours.

Truly yours,

ELMER GATES.

My telephone is Murray Hill 7400

Please do not discuss this with Dr. Frank or Siemens & Halske at least not until after you see me.

EXHIBIT 5.

(The following is a translation of a part of the report of Julius Pirnitzer President of the Transatlantic Trust Co. to the Board of Directors of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings bank, for the year 1916:)

Transatlantic Trust Company 67-69 William Street New York. Capital & Surplus $1,300,000 Cable Address "Tratlantic New York"]

JANUARY 1, 1917.

to the DIRECTORATE OF THE HUNGARIAN ROYAL POSTAL SAVINGS BANK, Budapest.

We beg to inform you in the following of our activity in business during the year of 1916, resulting from the connection with your hon. Institution.

The amount of our transmissions reached almost the sum of 75 million Kronen against the 61 million Kronen, transmitted in the year of 1915. Our traffic has therefore risen about 22%. The leading character of our Institution is the traffic of the Hungarian money forwarding business is becoming more and more prominent. At the time of our report almost 60% of the money sent home by the immigrants was sent to Hungary through our mediation. But in spite of the higher amount, the development of the traffic of transmissions is not so favourable as it was in 1915. Namely, as our traffic in the year of 1915 rose from month to month without interruption, the rising tendency in 1915 lasted only throughout the first quarter of the year. Starting in the month of April the traffic of transmissions fell off visibly.

In our report for the year 1915 we called your attention to the circumstance, that the development of our business of money-forwarding is in close connection with the maintaining of the postal-connection, the eventual ceasing of which would hurt same deeply. To our regret our supposition proved to be true to the fullest measure. The submarine warfare of Germany was avenged by England so, that it made the oversea-correspondence and package-mail-circulation with the countries of the Central States impossible. The neutral states protested in vain against this flagrant offence of the decree of the Agreement of Hague of the year of 1907: England partly delays the answers to such notes sent to her, partly uses all kinds of subterfuges and everything remains in the old way. At present we have to reckon with the absolute interruption of the postal-connection as with a fact. Under the effect of the forced circumstances we have to take particular measures—although in a smaller way—to maintain the traffic of money-forwarding, which is made our duty by the knowledge, that this is most important from the viewpoint of the State-Finance as well as Private-Economy that large amounts of money shall be sent home from America, the more so, the longer the war lasts.

We can assert with sincere satisfaction, that the largest part of our money containing money-forwardings, reached home safely. The Hungarian Postal Savings Bank acknowledged the receipt of 68½ million Kronen through wireless already. This items have been sent until the 16th of November. There are now only 6 million Kronen pending, the larger part of which is from the circulation of the last 6 months of this year and which as we believe probably reach home in the next future.

The German merchant U-boat "Deutschland" was a great help to us, as it took on both her journeys a large amount of lists and letters along. We received this favor by the special goodwill of the German Consulate of Washington which we earned through the selling of German War Loans and development of the German money transmission. All our endeavours, however, to get money for the transmitted amounts were made in vain. While we could find a way for the transmitting of money perfectly suiting the forms of laws of America it was impossible to bring over any mail. This situation forced us to keep the keeping at home of all the receipts, pass and share books, statements, and other notes, until it will be possible to send them over without danger. Our competitors here, the most of which carry on their business without scruple because they have nothing to lose, tried to get over their mail in spite of the laws of America, which clearly forbid it and were sometimes successful. Through the exaggerated advertising of such cases it was possible for us to lead our immigrants temporarily into a mistake and make them believe that they have the power to do something exceptional in the present difficult circumstances. The final result of this action will be the shaking of the faith of immigrants in those petty bankers, as it is unthinkable, that the mail will be brought over regularly at present times. We have to reckon, namely, not only with England, but also with the authorities of the U. S. who consider sending of mail by a private channel, according to an obsolete, but still existing law, as a punishable act. The origin of this conception dates back 60 years when the express companies of the far West, but in the first place Wells, Fargo & Co., were in competition with the mail of the United States.

Two of our formidable competitors here, the American Express Co. and C. F. Richard & Co., have altogether stopped the money forwarding to Hungary. One of them, Knauth, Nachod & Kühne, has limited it, so that it does not amount to much. The above-mentioned two concerns have yielded to the pressure of England, giving up this line of business, which served to benefit the Central Powers. The English authorities, namely, have threatened that they would make their connection with the countries of the Entente impossible if they also work in the interest of the Central Powers. The latter firm was on the black list of the English, which makes any dealing by them with Europe very hard. We want to remark here, that our firm was not put on the "black list," the reason of which lay in the fact, that the first black list, which consisted particularly of private concerns, caused a very energetic protest on the part of the Government of America. Therefore the second list, which would extend also to corporations was not published.

The ability of accommodating ourselves to the circumstances of war which manifests itself at home in the economical life in such a wonderful way, expresses itself also in the business-action of our Institution, but naturally in a much smaller measure. The war altered strongly the characteristic of the traffic of transmitting. The most apparent symptom is the mighty rising of the amounts intended for deposits in the Postal Savings Bank. We transmitted against the 4 million Kronen of the year of 1915 at the time of this report 11½ million, which success is in the first place the consequence of our widespread propaganda. Our immigrants, who at first were intimidated by the falling of the price of Kronen, got used to this and secured for themselves at present cheap prices these Kronen certificates, which they want to invest in Hungary after the war. The further phenomenon of the wartimes is the raising of the amounts intended for charity. We transmitted near 4 million Kronen for such aims at the time of this report as a result of here arranged charity-bazaars, collections and private-contributions. Our employees of Hungarian origin have personally taken part in all this charity activity. The circumstances, resulting from the war times have forced us to install the less-money-transmission, which system is very much favored among our immigrants. Under the very favorable earning circumstances, our immigrants do not mind the spending of the 2½ dollars, for the wireless money transmission.

they have the assurance, that their relatives at home receive the money quicker and surer. At first we were disposed to spare our immigrants if possible, this costly transmission, which according to our experience, do not give more assurance than the system adopted by forwarding of our money-transmitting-lists. Later though, we yielded to the wishes of all and started the wire-money forwarding and we had a very large traffic, especially before Christmas. Finally—also owing to the pressure of war times—we commenced to accept Kronen-Deposits, which line of business became unexpectedly and rapidly very popular. We collected near 10 million Kronen deposits in the last quarter of the year and it seems, that the traffic in this line will rise to a considerable degree. We hope to transfer the larger part of the Kronen-Deposits after the war into Postal Savings Deposits.

We sacrificed very much money in the year 1916 for the development of the money transmitting business, as well as for the placing of war-loans. For advertisement, postage and printings we laid out the Total of 120,000, two thirds of which served the interests of the purely Hungarian business. We hope, that this enormous sacrifice will prove to be an investment bearing its fruits, when, once again—circumstances shall become settled.— We have, however, brought out, that almost every Hungarian in this country knows our Institution, and we have customers also in the oversea-colonies of the U.S./ Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, Phillipini islands etc./ in Central and South America and in China. In adapting of outside propaganda we also made widespreading administrative arrangements for the developing of the Hungarian business. We have organized a separate propaganda-department, who's business was to come constantly in contact with the customers and to make the sentimental link, which—according to custom here—usually connects the banker with his customer, tighter.—We appointed our most intelligent customers for our confidential men, who's business was to inform the Hungarians living scattered about in little places, of our institution.— At the end of the year 1916 the number of our confidential men was 1005.— Furthermore our employees on long journeys have been in constant personal contact with the immigrants.—

The struggle, which the petty-bankers have openly and secretly conducted against our institution, did not cease at the time of this report. The attacks of newspapers, anonymous reports and the abetting among our immigrants are going on with just as much bitterness as before. The position of our institution to-day is nevertheless so powerful, that this attacks cannot stop the further development of same.— We can assert with calmness, that our Institution is now among the Hungarians of America the most important economic factor and we hope surely, that after peace is declared—which we hardly can await—our importance will yet be increased.—

According to the detailed lines of our business the traffic of our transmissions are as follows:

According to lists—item No.-----	199,272	the sum of K.	68,554,636.69
War-Loan-Subscriptions—item-----	3,888	the sum of K.	5,830,260.—
Special checks—item-----	890	the sum of	192,000.—
<hr/>
Total—traffic of the year 1916-----	204,050		K. 74,576,896.69
Total traffic of the year of 1915-----	261,434		K. 60,967,089.87

EXHIBIT 6.

COPY OF LETTER FROM BARON ZWIEDINEK, OF THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBASSY, TO JULIUS PIBNITZER AS TO PROPAGANDA BY CONSULATES IN AID OF TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO.

MANCHESTER, Oct 6, 1914.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Thanks for your letter of Sept 30th enclosed find copy of the order of this office to the consulates, which I hope will answer your intentions. I am asking myself, whether it would be advisable for the Transatlantic Trust Co. to send circulars in different languages to the offices announcing their money order service. The consulate could then spread them as far as possible. If this idea suits you, you perhaps can talk the matter over with Nuber, Attached thereto you'll find also a copy of a cipher-order of the Ministerium sent to the Embassy today. The telegram desired by you has been sent off on Sept 19 but no reply arrived as yet. Should there be no reply the Ambassador returns I expect him Thursday night. I would advise telegraph once more, I enclose a sketch of this telegram, kindly let me know once, whether you approve of it, or whether you suggest some change. In giving the cipher order I am under the impression, that it is hard to get the Consulate further instructions until the preliminary question is solved. What is your opinion?

Yours truly,

(signed) E. ZWILTMAYER

COPY

EXHIBIT 7.

ORDER TO CONSULATES TO ASSIST TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO IN FORWARDING OF IMMIGRANTS TO HUNGARY.

MANCHESTER, Oct. 5

No. X-109/xxlll Transmission of Immigrants' money.

To the I. & R. Consular Office at.....

The existing difficulty of transmission of immigrants' money to the East seems to be removed by the obligation entered into by the Trans. Tr. Co. at William St., N. Y. C. with the Royal Hung. Postal bank to the effect that the money order intended for transmission either will be delivered to the payee or returned to the sender. That the senders must expect delays in the delivery is a necessary consequence of the war, but the bank has done everything that its advantage is to get the money into the possession of the Royal Hung. Postal bank with all safety under present conditions. The money order service of Tr. Tr. Co. is available in Austria as well as Hungary. As far as the use and recommendation of the money order service of the Tr. Tr. Co. is concerned, the I. & R. Consular Office have to see to it that local banks should not have the benefit of it as the Tr. Tr. Co. itself would have to run the risk only.

It will, therefore, be the duty of the Consulates to encourage as far as possible the transmission of immigrants' money through the Tr. Tr. Co. for the support of family members as well as for savings. In the latter direction a danger exists that the immigrants, under present war conditions, will not deposit their savings here and will continue to do so even when normal conditions return. Owing to our state-finances this practice must be energetically counteracted.

For the I. & R. Ambassador:

EXHIBIT 7½.

[Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank Administration, Budapest.]

JULY 15th

The fortunate arrival of the first German Undersea-Boat awakens in us, that the mail communications which were broken off, will be restored. At present the ordinary mail can not be sent this way, but with the aid of our Embassy we did succeed in obtaining this exceptional favour.

We ask you respectfully that you should urge the competent German Authorities through the Hungarian Government and through the I. R. Foreign Office to grant to your institution, that your mail should be forwarded with the German Undersea Boats.

We do not feel the necessity of a regular connection, because we take the liberty to mention that we have received 1 billion kronen Hungarian currency and we hope to return home again as soon as undisturbed conditions return.

We offer our request intently and remain,

With eminent esteem

EXHIBIT 8.

Translation of a letter found among the papers of Julius Pirnitzer, from Count Tisza, late premier of Hungary to Adolph Ullman, manager of the Hungarian General-Credit Bank of Budapest, which was the largest stockholder in the Transatlantic Trust Co., regarding the extension of the activities of the Transatlantic Trust Co. in the United States.)

Ref. No. 7644

E. I. b.

Strictly Confidential Exclusively to his own Hands His Excellency the Director in Chief

The I. & R. Foreign Minister in his communication of Nov. 19th last /No. 1996/Sb/ sent me his report in regard to the use of the I. & R. Embassy at Washington and the Consulates in the U. S. and the Am. Hung. Press for the furtherance of the Trans. Tr. Co. also his report regarding the places to be considered in establishing branches and agencies of the bank respectively.

From these reports it can be learned that our competent foreign representative authorities deem it very desirable for the successful maintenance of the Trans. Tr. Co.'s activity, and in behalf of Magyar immigrants that the bank could establish branches and agencies respectively in several cities of the U. S. especially in places where our Magyar immigrants are settled in masses. Such cities would be the following:

In the official district of the Cleveland Consulate: Lorain, O Toledo, O. Youngstown, O. Ashtabula, O. Fairport, O. Niles, O. Hamilton O. Columbus, O. Dayton, O., Congo, O. Zanesville, O. Cambridge, O. Sandusky, O. Newark, O. Cincinnati, O. Detroit, Mich. Bridgeport, O. Steubenville, O. Kalamazoo, Mich. Iron, O., Martins Ferry, O., Grand Rapids, Mich., Dillonvale, O. Canton, O. Alliance, O., Barberton, O. Flint, Mich. Muskegon, Mich, Saginaw, Mich. /the underlined ones to be considered first/

In the official district of the San Francisco Consulate: San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Tacoma.

In the official district of the Chicago Consulate: Chicago, South Chicago, Milwaukee, Joliet, Whiting, Gary, and South Bend.

In the official district of the Charleston Consulate: Welch and Norfolk.

In the official district of the Pittsburgh Consulate: Pittsburgh Uniontown, Johnstown, and Sharon.

In the official district of the St. Paul Consulate: Hibbing, Chisholm, Eveleth, Duluth and Calumet. It is to be remarked however, that the latter are situated in the territory of the Minnesota and Michigan respectively, according to the laws of which foreign banks are not permitted to establish branch offices on territories of the said states. So, if the Trans. Tr. Co. wishes to extend its activity over the territories of these states it could do so only by evading the laws, and that in such a way that it would establish an independent bank in conformity with the intentions of the state or by buying stock from another bank /already existing there/ it could obtain decisive influence over its affairs.

In the official district of the Philadelphia Consulate: Philadelphia, So. Bethlehem, Allentown, WilkesBarre, Hazeltown, Scranton.

In the Official district of the N. Y. Consulate it would be necessary to establish such besides the correspondence-stations already existing, in the following cities: Buffalo, Schenectady and also in New Jersey.

I therefore respectfully ask your Excellency to kindly come in close touch with the management of the Trans. Tr. Co. in regard to the branches and agencies to be established in the places above named and inform me of the result of your procedure in due time.

According to the statements from our foreign representatives we can hope that the branches and agencies to be established will be a successful and profitable business enterprise for the reason that in each of the cities above named our Hung. immigrants of Magyar tongue are settled in masses.

Proper care should however be exercised that the branches and agencies in question acquire popularity within the zone of their immigrants, for the accomplishment of which purpose, I am told, the authoritative organs of the Amer. Hung. Press already have been won over.

But it would greatly aid the successful activity of the bank if the Hungarian Magyar Press also would give it a favorable criticism.

The benevolent attitude of the domestic Press, too, would produce an effect on Magyars living in America and call the attention of prospective immigrants in advance to this institution. I therefore would deem it advisable to direct Budapest papers as well as country papers, especially those mostly read by greater masses of immigrants—would publish articles informing them of the reliability of the bank and convincing them of the advantages of the same.

Regarding this matter I respectfully beg to ask your Excellency to call the attention of the Trans. Tr. Co.'s Budapest representative to the going. I simultaneously assure your Excellency that I shall do my best in directing the Hung. Press according wherever that is possible. On this occasion I also respectfully beg to ask Your Excellency to kindly call the attention of the Trans. Tr. Co.'s Budapest representative also to the fact that there shall hereafter to it that improper articles published in Hung. papers by reason of conditions, be rectified in proper way.

I respectfully ask your Excellency to kindly inform me of the results of valuable proceedings in this direction also.

Your Excellency will please accept the sincere expression of my esteem.

Budapest, Dec. 8th, 1913.

/signed/ T. T. Co.

To His Excellency ADOLPH ULLMANN member of the Upper House, Director-in chief of the Hung. General Credit Bank, Budapest.

EXHIBIT 84.

TRANSLATION OF LETTER EVIDENTLY FROM ULLMAN TO COUNT TISZA IN REPLY TO TISZA'S LETTER OF DECEMBER 8, 1913.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE PRIME MINISTER:

YOURS EXCELLENCY: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your esteemed communication of the 8th of December 1913, (No. 7644 § M. E. I. b) wherein you informed me of the contents of the Foreign Minister's letter of Nov. 12 (No. 82,996, b) relative to the furtherance of T. T. Co.

From the Director of the T. T. Co. staying here at present, I learn the institution already has representations mostly in places where the foreign authorities deemed it advisable to establish them.

I beg to submit a list of present representatives of the T. T. Co. and remark that the institution considers it as one of its chief tasks to extend present network and as already can be foreseen, the number of our representatives will be over 100 at the close of this year.

According to the banking laws of N. Y. State, the T. T. Co. cannot establish branch offices but its representatives will do all the work that otherwise would be the institutions' duty.

As to the proposition of the St. Paul Consulate that the T. T. Co. establish independent banks on the territories of the states of Minnesota, Michigan, or exercise a decisive influence on the affairs of another by buying a part of its stock, I beg to remark that the laws of N. Y. State absolutely prohibit a financial institution from holding over 10% of stock of a corporation, which legal provision entirely excludes the accomplishment of the purpose which the St. Paul Consulate had in mind.

I must especially accentuate it on this occasion that the laws of the State regulating the course of business are not to be evaded by the institution but the controlling authorities.

It is therefore necessary to handle the business affairs of the institution in such a way as to avoid any faction that the T. T. Co.'s may have as well as in all others.

As far as the use of the American language is concerned, I beg to refer to my letter of Nov. 12. I believe that the friendly relations between the Am. Magyar papers will become more and more possible after awhile service of the institution.

I accept with sincere thanks your Excellency's kind declaration to the effect that you will be kind enough to support the T. T. Co. in directing the Hung. Magyar press accordingly.

In conformity with this I have advised the management of said institution to submit from time to time, such communications to your Excellency as are for publication in metropolitan papers as well as in those published in the country, and call the attention of magyars intending to emigrate to Amer. to the institution and support it in the accomplishment of its aims.

Thanking you in conclusion for past favors shown to the Trans. Tr. Co. and being confident that the institution is worthy of same by its activity up to the present time, I beg to remain with the expressions of my highest esteem, Budapest, January 6th, 1914.

[No Signature.]

His Excellency,
COUNT STEPHEN TISZA,
Councilor, Hung. Roy. Prime Minister,
Budapest.

EXHIBIT 9.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIRNITZER TO THE GENERAL CREDIT BANK OF BUDAPEST, SHOWING CONNECTION BETWEEN THE TRANS-ATLANTIC TRUST CO., HUGO SCHMIDT, AND THE DEUTSCHE BANK.

S/S FREDERICK VIII,
Feb. 27, 1916.

HUNG. GENERAL CREDIT BANK DIRECTORIUM, Budapest:

We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 27th of Jan. last wherein you express your desire that we should advise all subscriptions to the German war loan received by us, to the Discount Society. As our action, started in behalf of the third German war loan and amounting to over 7 million Marks is already closed, this matter can again come up only at the issuance of a prospective 4th German war loan. In the meantime we most assuredly will have the Discount Society's letter containing its conditions which you kindly promised. It is understood by itself that we shall be willing to consider your demand in due time and will advise a part of the prospective subscriptions to the Discount Society. But we would not deem it fair to entirely discontinue our connections with the German Bank, for we are under great obligations to Mr. Hugo Schmidt, director of this institution, who is staying here since the outbreak of the war. We owe it to him that the German Embassy at Washington and the German Imperial Consulates all over the United States recommended our institution to prospective clients. It was also him who induced the German Bank to open an account with us. Otherwise we beg to mention that as far as we know, The German Bank too, as shareholders of the Pester Hung. Commercial Bank, is materially interested in our institution.

Allow us to ask you for a favor on this occasion: Kindly induce the Discount Society to open an account with us and to transact a part of its American business through our institution. We are willing to exercise reciprocation. Owing to the fact that German banks are rather ill disposed towards those N. Y. institutions that participated in financing the Anglo-French loan while we kept away from this business, it is to be hoped that your kind proceedings begun with the Discount Society, will have favorable results.

As to the rest of contents of your kind letter we beg to inform you that the larger one of the two bills in question is official, while the smaller one is of private character only. The undersigned is in close relations with the owner of the respective bills and is entirely confident of his correctness. Owing to the fact that the British Censor may eventually get information of the contents of our letters we deem it proper to abstain at present from further informations.

Respectfully yours,

President.

EXHIBIT 10.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIERNITZER TO HOSSENFELDER, GERMAN CONSUL,
NEW YORK.

JULY 28TH, 1917

DEAR MR. COUNSEL: I hereby take liberty in sending you six copies of last annual statement and beg to mention that my company is an establishment of German, Austrian and Hungarian principal banks and omitting all interests put itself since the outbreak of the war fully and entirely in the service of the Central Powers.

It is very important for us to enter into close relations with Germany in the United States as well as in Central and South America and aim is that we can give them the same facilities as any other bank of this country. Especially are we able to maintain even now, communication with Germany and the Monarchy.

Accept my sincerest thanks for your kind offer to further the aims and objects of my bank and be sure that it will always be a great pleasure for me to reciprocate your kindness.

Yours very truly,

JULIUS PIERNITZER

GERMAN CONSULATE N. Y.
HOSSENFELDER.

EXHIBIT 11.

COPY OF LETTER FROM H. F. ALBERT TO JULIUS PIERNITZER.

New York, Sept. 11th, 1917

H. F. ALBERT, 45 B'dway N. Y.

DEAR MR. PIERNITZER: Allow me to send you the enclosed copy of the letters of today's date to take notice of the addresses. If it suits you I will continue to send you similar letters in the future.

It would perhaps be advisable to destroy the letters personally that through publication of same by improper parties there should be no impression to the effect as if I would be officially active in the placing the loan. My activity, you know, is limited to the transmission of inquiries, received by me, to you. I hope that you will approve of this.

Yours truly,

ALBERT

Mr. J. PIERNITZER,
President Trans. Trust Co., N. Y.

EXHIBIT 12.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIERNITZER TO H. F. ALBERT.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1917

Mr. H. F. ALBERT,
45 Broadway, New York.

DEAR MR. COUNCILLOR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 11th inst. and thank you very much for the kind transmission of a copy of 2 letters which I have answered accordingly. I destroyed the letters myself.

You will greatly oblige me be assured that every inquiry
Very respectfully yours

COPY OF LETTER FROM

DEAR MR. PIERNITZER: Your attention from the Consulate at 5

Consulate to inform interested parties by wire that it places loans at the rate of 21.11 per 100 Marks and allows a commission of 25 cents per 100 Marks to Banks and Bankers.

The Consulate will do everything to further the matter. But the Consulate will avoid official action and will limit itself to inform in a suitable way and privately Banks and Bankers of the matter. This will be done. At the same time I am asking you to abstain in future from telegraphic communications with the Consulates. It would not be desirable that such telegrams become public and be taken advantage of against us in a manner well known. I do not wish to presume that it will be not necessary in future to communicate by wire.

It would also be advisable to send letters to Consulate in a plain envelope (without the firms' name). Letters to the Consulate at St. Paul are to be addressed:

St. Paul Arcade Co.
Secretary's Office, Room 216
St. Paul, Minn.

Respectfully yours

H. F. ALBERT.

EXHIBIT 14.

COPY OF LETTER FROM H. F. ALBERT TO JULIUS PIRNITZER REGARDING PROPAGANDA FOR GERMAN WAR LOANS.

H. F. ALBERT,
45 B'way New York.

NEW YORK, September 22nd, 1915.

DEAR MR. PIRNITZER: From Chicago the enclosed list of banks has been sent to you, which as far as could be ascertained there are chiefly controlled by German American capital and have a strong German clientship. These banks are to be considered in the first place for the sale of the war loan. I presume that you already know the banks and are in connection with them.

In Denver, Col the first class broker firm, Wilson, Cramer & Co., International Trust Bldg. 2 floor, declared itself willing to receive subscriptions to the loan, I advise you to enter immediate negotiations with the firm.

Furthermore the following is reported from Chicago: "on this occasion I would like to call your attention to the fact that the association of German farmers of the middle and northern West is going to have its convention at Dubuque, Iowa. on October 5th and 6th. Especially the small and smallest provincial newspapers will be represented there which are read by the German farming people. Mr. Matenaers personally known to me, co-worker of the "Evening Post" (Evening Mail) here and of the "Farmers Gazette" published at St. Louis, will take advantage of this opportunity to discuss the propaganda of greater size in favor of the war loan with the various editors. The editorials are furnished by Mr. Matenaers himself who is known here by his journalistic activity in the line of economy and agriculture. Mediation of announcements through a central to be established for all newspapers is also to be determined. In conclusion Mr. Matenaers intends to advise the various editors to aid the farmers in subscribing to the war loan in every possible way and to see to it that applications for subscriptions be forwarded to the Transatlantic Trust Co. thereby difficulties of correspondence with a bank unknown to the farming people will be avoided.

The opportunity of reaching large circles of German farming people and facilitating as far as possible their subscriptions to the loan, is, in my opinion, much more worth while as the farmers not only numerically represent a considerable part of the German population in this part of the United States, but also a pretty wealthy one, as shown, for instance, by the collections of the "Ostfriesische Nachrichten" (East Friesland News) in Breda Iowa. Besides the farmer in first place is in a position to invest money after having gathered in the crops in autumn. Supposal of carrying out this plan would, naturally, be an assurance to the fact that subscriptions to the war loan can be received till the middle, or if possible, till the end of October.

I sent notice there that the term for subscriptions is limited to October 31st. A further report from Denver, Col says, that the "Prescott Nat'l. Bank" of Prescott, Ariz. (President Mr. R. N. Fredericks) declared itself willing to receive subscriptions to the German War Loan under the condition that they will not be unnecessarily taken advantage of publicity.

Yours truly

ALLAN

EXHIBIT 15.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIENITZER TO ZWIEDINKE, COUNCILLOR OF THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBASSY.

Nov. 12th, 1914.

DEAR COUNCILLOR: I am in receipt of your message of today whereby informed me that the Lower Austrian Ezcompt Association has reduced rate of exchange to 4.96. I thank you very much for your friendly and am glad that this affair is finally almost settled. It is true that it is still $3\frac{1}{4}$ points higher than the market rate of June 30th and involves about \$70 in the amount of \$11,000. I believe that the bank would pay you eventually for a part even of this difference if a claim would be made that effect.

It is a great satisfaction to me to be able to inform you that we have today from the Roy. Hung. Postalbank receipts of all our money orders from here up to the 8th of Oct. inclusive, also payee's receipts of money up to Oct. 2nd inclusive, which not only proves the unobjectionable nature of this service but means a splendid success at that under the present conditions.

The warm interest you are showing toward the furtherance of the order business encourages me to submit to you the following petition.

The I. & R. Embassy should be kind enough to send a circular letter to subordinate consular offices wherein reference is made to the circumstances before mentioned and, owing to absolute reliability of the money order already proven, these offices should be requested once more to make proper in the most energetic way.

If we succeed to bring the money order business approximately to its former level, then one of the most acute state-financial questions is brought near its solution: namely, the creation of a fund for domestic orders of articles from the United States.

Accept my sincerest thanks for your kind cooperation in this matter as expression of my highest esteem, whereby I beg to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

JULIUS PIENITZER

To His Excellency BARON ERICK ZWIEDINKE VON SUDENHORST,
I. & R. Councillor of the Embassy,
Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT 16.

COPY OF LETTER OF EX-AMBASSADOR DUMBA TO JULIUS PIENITZER.

VIENNA, Oct. 24th, 1914.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: By this time I hope to carry through safely and assured the third version of my letter. Above all I thank you for the most interesting information of July, the contents of which were just as close available as the means of their transmission. There are again new great U. B. 58 style with most beneficial results. The war situation is good and is very favorable in Roumania conquered within the shortest time and the supplies of grain and in this especially where the Alpine provinces and also the Whether the Russians will be I do not know. I fear though go into further questions, on considering the appointment of that we will be granted some

And now I go over to the business part of my letter. I am sorry to say that we have to count upon a later end of the war and I would be very grateful to you for extending the advance payment business of £400 each by 2 more payments on April 1st and July 1st, 1917 respectively that would make then a total of my debt about 6 time $1950 equals $11,700 or 87,750 crs. at the rate of 7.50 cr. (per dollar). The 45 shares of Austro-Hung. Bank shares which I deposited as security are worth 95,000 crs. according to an inofficial quotation at 2150, to this are to be added 56000 crs. worth of coupons, that is over 100,000 crs. But should you think that this security is not sufficient I would gladly add, for instance 50 credit shares at 663 crowns each, to the deposit, but not 100,000 crs. war bonds, as suggested in my first letter, for the simple reason that I wish to keep these free to pay my taxes with. I would be very much obliged to you for an early reply. Kindly give my best regards to our many common friends, especially N. and his brave companions. For whom shall we be anxious on the 7th of November, for W. or for H? The election hurts me and I fear that it is the same thing with all German-Americans.

With best regards, I remain,

Yours truly,

C. DUMBA.

EXHIBIT 17.

COPY OF ADVERTISEMENT OF GERMAN, AUSTRIAN AND HUNGARIAN WAR LOANS.

[Facsimile of Imperial German Coat of Arms, Imperial Austro Coat of Arms, Royal Hungarian Coat of Arms.]

FIFTH

5% GERMAN WAR LOAN

at the price of $172.50 per 1000 Marks

References:

The Imperial German and the Imperial Royal Austro-Hungarian Consulate in San Francisco

5½% Austrian War Loan

at the price of $125.00 per 1000 Kronen

6% Hungarian War Loan

at the price of $130.00 per 1000 Kronen

The Bonds may be sold at any time and are quoted and handled daily

MONEY ORDER REMITTANCES

to Germany and Austria Hungary—directly to the house—without deduction under full guarantee at the following rates:

100 Marks $18.50 100 Kronen $13.00

There is no possibility of a confiscation at the forwarding

For every remittance receipt signed personally by the payee will be procured free of charge.

C. H. ZENTINE,

General Agent Transatlantic Co.

528 Santa Marina Building, 112 Market Street. Telephone Sutter 1954.

ADVERTISEMENT

Buy German, Austrian and Hungarian war loan at the Consularly recommended agency of the Transatlantic Trust Co., 112 Market Str., S. F., Cal.

EXHIBIT 18.

Copy of Letter from Baron Zwiedinek, Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires to Julius Pirnitzer, Pres. of the Transatlantic Trust Co. commenting on the "Lusitania."

WASHINGTON, May 8th, 1915.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am returning with great thanks the enclosure in your favor of the 3rd inst. Hope that I did not impose a heavy burden on you by recommending to you Mr. Elmer Gates. I knew too well from my own experience how hard it is to come to an understanding in such affairs.

The Lusitania episode will probably pass over without any serious complications and have a good effect as the means of frightening.

With best regards,

Yours truly,

E. ZWIEDINEK

EXHIBIT 19.

COPY OF LETTER OF JULIUS PIRNITZER TO BARON ZWIEDINEK.

MAY 3RD, 1915

DEAR COUNCILLOR: I acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 1st inst. I beg to inform you that in the meantime I received from Dr. Gates the enclosed letter which kindly return to me after perusal. Although the arguments therein contained do not seem to be absolutely plausible. I would not simply drop the matter owing to its great importance, and resumed negotiations. Dr. Gates bound himself by handshake not to offer for sale his inventions to any state at war with Austria-Hungary until we shall have passed definite decision. If in the course of negotiations something important occurs, I shall take liberty in informing you thereof.

Very respectfully yours,

JULIUS PIRNITZER

Encl.

To His Excellency Baron ERICK ZWIEDINEK VON SUDENHORST

I. & R. Councillor of the Embassy

Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT 20.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIRNITZER TO ZWIEDINEK REFERRING TO THE SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA.

MAY 10TH, 1915

To His Excellency Baron E. ZWIEDINEK VON SEIDENHORST

Counsellor of the Embassy,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COUNSELLOR: I acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 8th inst. and thank you very much for returning of Mr. Gates's letter who went back to Washington and from which I did not hear since.

I am very glad to hear that the sinking of the Lusitania will not result in further complications and hope that sensible business men here will be of the same opinion. It is deplorable that the newspapers seem to have shot far beyond the aim and as a result of their agitation there is still certain excitement noticeable among the broad circles of the population. Should it be possible to check the agitation of the press which eventually is being inspired from England, then all excitement will disappear.

With the expression of my sincerest esteem I beg to remain.

Yours truly,

JULIUS PIRNITZER

EXHIBIT 21.

COPY OF LETTER FROM PIRNITZER TO THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES REGARDING GATES' INVENTION.

APRIL 29TH, 1915

DEAR MR. CHARGE D'AFFAIRES: In connection with my respects of the 22nd inst., I beg to inform you that to-day I had a long detailed conversation with Dr. Elmer Gates and arrived at the opinion that the idea of acquiring his ventions could be met only by competent authorities at home. Dr. Gates was rather of a declining attitude towards my encouragement to go to Austria, although I made him the offer that I am willing to cover his travelling expenses. I have arranged for a meeting between Dr. Gates and the German Marine-Officer referred to in my former letter, and permit me to send you a further report concerning this matter to-morrow.

Yours truly

JULIUS PIRNITZER

To His Excellency
Baron Erich Zwiedinek von Südenhorst
Emp. & Roy. Charge d'Affaires
Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT 22-23.

COPY OF LETTER FROM ZWIEDINEK CLEARLY INTENDED FOR PIRNITZER, AMONG WHOSE CORRESPONDENCE IT WAS FOUND.

WASHINGTON, April 21st, 1915.

Yesterday Mr. Elmer Gates called on me and I remarked that it was ten o'clock P. M. He alleges that through the influence of common friends He has detected his German heart. He is namely American, but of German descent and his grandparents were yet called Goetz. The aim of his visit was to interest me for three of his inventions. One of them is supposed to be an instrument to increase (multiply) the power of explosives. The other an apparatus to direct bombs, thrown from a height, in their falling, so that they find their object for sure. The third one is an instrument for paralyzing the radio-waves in a radius of ninety miles. He alleges that the Newport News Co., respectively Mr. Fowler, the agent of the same and his good friend, want to induce him to sell his inventions through this firm to the state making the highest bid. But Mr. Gates says that he cannot make up his mind to do that, but would like to see us to have the benefit of it. He cannot hand it over to the Germans direct, he says, owing to some already existing obligations of his own business friends, but he would have no objections to it if we would only be strawmen in that business. But now immediately follows a little hitch. The instruments and outfits necessary for the demonstration would cost 30 to $60,000, and this demonstration as well as the financing of such demonstration must be done here. He stated though that experts already are convinced, by the explanation of the inventions, of their practical usefulness. To such an extent that the money can be considered as an excellent investment. Improbable as the whole thing is, I think that I should not simply refuse Mr. Gates, after having received information about Gates from our secretary Mr. Sobotka, that he is a well known scientist in physics and chemistry and was recommended to the Embassy by Mrs. Watson, a friend of Mme. Henglemüller. As Mr. Gates is going to New York I thought that the only possibility would be to advise him eventually to you. Should you be of the opinion that this man can be taken seriously you could perhaps cause him to meet the German Military and Naval attaché respectively, who know various experts, or perhaps you know some experts yourself. Or else you tell him in a quiet way that you cannot enter into any further negotiations. Mr. Gates goes to New York today and will stay at the Manhattan Hotel at least for two days. Would it be too much to ask of you to call him up by the phone and ask him when he would come to see you? I gave my card to Mr. Gates to introduce him to you which he will probably send in and which you better keep then. I would be much obliged to you for dropping me a line occasionally to that effect whether and how you have disposed of the matter. Begging your pardon once more for troubling you with this matter, I am

Very truly yours.

E. ZWIEDINEK.

EXHIBIT 24.

COPY OF LETTER FROM JULIUS PIRNITZER TO EX-AMBASSADOR DUMBA AS TO AUSTRIAN WAR LOAN.

NEW YORK, June 26th, 1915.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I received your favor of the 23rd inst. and feel myself honored by the kind words of your Excellency, devoted to my modest activity.

I appreciate the recognition rendered to me so much more as it comes from the most competent place and breaks the point of unfavorable criticism here.

I thank you for the opportunity of explaining the business policy of our institution regarding the sale of the Hung. War-loan and beg to be excused if explanations will be beyond the limit of a short report.

Among the three classes of buyers that can be considered in the Hung. War Loan only our immigrants can be taken seriously the American world shows an entirely reserved attitude, the intelligent class of our countrymen is not only small but also mostly poor, so that only the immigrants to whose patriotism and liberality we can appeal.

In the interest of success it was indispensable to draw into the action the greatest possible number of Hung, American country bankers, who enjoy the confidence of our countrymen. If our institution would have made appearance all alone then the malice of our competitors would have caused many inconveniences. A successful cooperation, with these elements was only possible after they were promised a reasonable reward. This was fixed at 75 cents per 100 Crowns nominal (value) which amount is somewhat higher than customary in domestic issues, but adequate to local conditions here. It must be namely considered that the character of a state loan is something strange to the immigrant and that there are lengthy discussions over each individual subscription in order to enlighten him and disperse his anguish. Besides the individual subscriptions are very small amounting as a rule a few hundred crowns only. I mention it here that New York bankers with whom we started the action jointly originally were asking a commission of 75 cents per 100 crowns, and the reduction to of same to 50 cents was only accomplished after lengthy discussions as a compromise for further favors.

There are two kinds of elements here to fix fundamental prices: interest and the rate of exchange. Coupons of the 6% Hungarian loan are due May 1st and Nov. 1st. Every year of course, the subscriber should receive the current interest until his subscription reaches home (abroad) after getting the full amount of the coupon on the first of November. Taking into consideration the low intellectual level of our immigrants and also that of our private bankers and having regard to their unexpertness in financial matters it would have been almost impossible to make them understand this way of counting interest. It was even to be feared that the immigrant whom they try to enlighten that now he has to pay interest and later on he receives interest would have such an idea of the matter that he not only lends his money to the State but has to pay interest thereon besides. This anguish was so much justified as it happens quite frequently that Hung. Amer. country bankers take deposits from our immigrant and instead of paying interest thereon charge a fee of 4% to 6% for keeping same. The rate at which the loan was offered to immigrants had to be fixed in such a way that it included the interest until the time when his subscription reached Budapest. As we receive subscriptions up to July 15, and expect the largest amounts just during the first days of July the rate of the loan had to be fixed with an addition of interest for 3 months. The domestic rate of the Loan 97.50 crowns per 100 nominal (value) the 6% interest from May 1, to July 31, is 1.50 cr. per 100 nominal (value) so that the actual cost of the loan here amounts to 99 cr. per 100 cr. nominal (value).

The second element of fixing the price is the rate of exchange. This was at the start of the action $15.50 per 100. cr. and successively came down to its present stand $15.20. We took an average rate of 15.30 at which a loan of 100 crowns including three months interest would be 15.16. to this must be added the agents commission of 50 cents whereby we come to the price of 15.65 per 100 crowns. As you know the loan is being offered to the public at $15.75 and the profit is 10 cents per K.100. We presume that we will be able to sell 3 million crowns worth of bonds (war bonds) which would make a profit of $3000 for us. But out of this we have to pay considerable expenses connected with the issue. I mention only two large items. Up to this time we have sent 50,000 circulars the postage for which amounts to $1000.—at 2 cents a copy. Advertisements in newspapers cost us so far $800.—we pay 66% of the costs and the rest is paid by the agents. And up to the 15th of July amount must be doubled. So those two items of $2600.—are to be deducted from the $3000.—profit the whole transaction would bring us a profit of $400.—out of which many smaller costs are to be paid. So we will get square in the whole transaction if the amount of subscriptions reaches 3 million crowns. We are also liable to lose something if this amount cannot be realized.

Besides these two elements some others more or less subordinate are to be considered which partly mean, or can mean, our own profit and partly our loss. To the first class belong the subscriptions received at our counters direct for which we get full commission. To the second class belong the commission of 5 hellers per 100 Crowns payable to domestic agents it is problematic whether we get it while we promised it to bankers cooperating with us at all events. In case we fail to get the domestic commission to which we have no proper claim according to the terms of subscription then we will have to pay the corresponding amounts from our own. Then we also have to figure on a raise of the rate which although not probable, always can come. We always have to keep an eye the low intellectual level of our immigrants among whom those subscribing later would consider a raise of the subscription price as an injury and we have to keep up the price of $15.75 per 100 crowns till July 15th regardless market fluctuations.

I tried to submit to you frankly our business policy but could not go into details which also factors of determination. I am afraid to have taken too much of your valuable time in an unbecoming way and beg to be pardoned for it.

Very respectfully yours

JULIUS PIRNITZER.

To. Dr. THEODORE CONSTANTIN DUMBA

I. R. Hungarian Austro Hungarian Ambassadors, Lenox, Mass.

EXHIBIT 25.

COPY OF LETTER FROM AUSTRIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES TO JULIUS PIRNITZER REGARDING ENEMY WAR LOANS, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9th, 1915.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We just received the following radio order:—"With regard to your considerations put forward by wire omit subscription for third war loan at consulates widest propaganda for both loans by Transatlantic Trust Co. sufficient it is understood that of the two loans none will be favored, payments for Austrian loan to be assigned from Trans. Tr. Co. to Kuhn Loeb to account of Austrian Government.

The Embassy of late sent out special order to Consulates regarding the loan by which they are called upon to do their best for a lively participation.

I ask myself whether the question of commission for the Transatlantic Trust Co. is adjusted, for your institution can not live on air.

Do not blame me very much for reminding you of your kind readiness to give an opinion regarding the English-French loan. I think this report should be sent off shortly. An opinion of the absorbing of the values by the public might be possible now. Upon this will depend the chances of a further similar loan. An improvement of the English note exchange seems not to have been accomplished either. Will the exchange of the bonds fall soon?

The most important thing really is not the past but the near future. How about further chances of the loan? In the papers I read about negotiations of English banks for credits of 100-300 millions against charging of American values. Of course such credits will be given to the allies as long as they are able to give values which can be charged but how long will the English people be willing to place the American securities at the disposal of the creditors? There really must be still an inexhaustible supply of good papers (values). Is it true about the Italian Loan of 28 millions and did Italy have to give security for it? And how about the Russian loan, for which as much as 9% was offered?

I would be very grateful to you if you would say something on all these points in your statement, but I think it must not be very detailed.

It would be very interesting to me to hear your opinion as to whether the monarchy should take special pains to get a loan here in America. Of course, the more money taken out of this country the less will be left for the purpose and purchase of allied bonds. But on the other hand our exchange now is very low and already thereby we are paying useror interest in dollar-countries and so much dearer also the redemption will be some day. I am asking this because I received a suggestion from St. Louis not long ago, but I do not know, however, whether the one referred to could really make a concrete offer. With best regards,

Yours truly,

ERICH ZWIDINSKY

EXHIBIT 26.

COPY OF CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE HUNGARIAN ROYAL POSTAL SAVINGS BANK

[Translated—June 14, 1918.]

HUNGARIAN ROYAL POSTAL SAVINGS BANK

2827/

1915

TO THE TRANSATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY

As representation of the Hungarian Royal Postal Savings Bank

NEW YORK

Facing those anxieties which in the circle of our countrymen in America might arise in relation to the safety of the money transmitted from Hungary, the Hungarian Royal Postal Savings Bank publishes the following.

Any amount be it small or large transmitted by the Transatlantic Trust Company and its correspondents will without delay be paid to the addressee that in cash and without deductions.

Proof of consummation of payment is the "verification coupon" received by the transmitter, upon which the addressee acknowledges with signature by hand, that the money was received.

If the "verification coupon" will for any reason fail to arrive in America, upon request we will commence investigation regarding the case of payment. If the correctness of payment we will have proved officially.

Budapest, August 6, 1915.

(signed)

HUNGARIAN ROYAL POSTAL SAVINGS BANK
BAROSS,

Ministerial Counsellor, Vice Director

EXHIBIT 27.

COPY OF LETTER FROM PIRNITZER TO AMBASSADOR DUMBA SHOWING FEAR OF INVESTIGATION OF THE TRUST COMPANY.

JULY 12TH 1915

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Enclosed please find an envelope which shows the letter sent to us from Rumania has been examined by the British censor. In my opinion it would be the best test to the state department's undertaking to maintain it. If you don't agree with this opinion as to whether it is the State Dept. in the name of the Trans. Trust Co., would be very respectfully yours

To His EXCELLENCY SR.
I & R Austro Hung

EXHIBIT 28.

COPY OF LETTER FROM PIRNITZER TO BARON PAP SHOWING CO-OPERATION IN PROMOTING RE-MIGRATION TO HUNGARY.

S. S. "SAN GIOVANNI, Oct. 10, 1914.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Upon the first news of the outbreak of European war the money order business suddenly came to a stop, for our immigrants were afraid that their money gets lost on the way, or that the Hungarian Government will use it for its own purposes. As a result of our propaganda, started jointly with our foreign representation here the money order business again set in during the past weeks, but its character got a radical change. For, while in former times a considerable part of the money, sent home, was intended for deposits and investments and consequently there were among the remittances sums exceeding 5,000 Crowns, the present remittances are intended for the relief of the immigrants' families left abroad and the individual items are rather small. Under such conditions I was unable to send you the list of names set together on the basis of the money order business, and I fear that for a long time we will have no material for such lists.

Under present circumstances it would have been purposeless to send you the list of such immigrants who might have been interested in the purchase of real estate abroad. There is no Hungarian immigrant in America at present who wants to buy property at home and no change of the situation can be expected before conclusion of peace. I will discontinue to collect the addresses of these people for the present.

We are anxiously awaiting the news coming from abroad; the cursed dissension among American Magyars came to a stop and all of them join in the prayer that the God of the Magyars may lead our arms to victory.

Very respectfully yours,

JULIUS PIRNITZER.

His Excellency BARON GEZA PAP
Gen'l Director of Hung. Credit Banks
Budapest.

EXHIBIT 29.

COPY OF LETTER FROM ZWIEDINEK, OF THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBASSY, TO JULIUS PIRNITZER, PRES. TRANS. TRUST CO., GIVING INSTRUCTIONS AS TO THE HANDLING OF THE NOTORIOUS RITTER AND PAYING HIM FOR STATEMENTS THAT EXPLOSIVES WERE CARRIED ON THE "LUSITANIA"

LENOX, MASS., July 19th, 1915.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT:—Your inquiry by telegraph concerning Ritter just received. The Embassy does absolutely not wish to have anything to do with Mr. Ritter and Consular offices also were notified to preserve the greatest reserve possible and give him no money in case he should call on them.

I wish to explain you the situation in a few words. Regarding his inventions we received from the Ministerium after repeated urgency the telegraphic advice "offer not accepted." From this I conclude that the Ministerium does not deem it necessary to bring any sacrifices in order to keep Ritter from selling his inventions to another power if they are worth anything at all. In case of emergency we could use against Ritter the material in our possession, as he expressly sold the invention for the sums already received and bound himself in the document, besides, to pay considerable damages in case he should communicate the secret to somebody else. But I think we do so much better if we don't attribute any value at all to this invention of his and let him do with it whatever he pleases.

As far as his statements regarding the shipment of explosives on the Lusitania and other passenger ships are concerned, whereof Ritter most assuredly has also told you, he succeeded in having found a believing heart with Consul Ludwig and had been travelling at the Consulate's expense to gather proofs. Consul Ludwig then surprised the Embassy with the report that quite a considerable amount has already been expended. I found it necessary to go to Cleveland personally and made out with the Consulates attorneys of that place that all further delays must come to an end and that Ritter, be requested to give an affidavit as well as to produce various evidences supposed to be in his possession. Ritter alleged for instance, to have a copy of a bill of lading regarding the shipment of 600 tons of gun cotton, which gun cotton is supposed to have been shipped them in barks from some place in Delaware direct to the pier of the Lusitania. This copy made the most incredible adventures and according to Ritter's statement, has always been just in some way he had to leave as surety in some hotel for lack of funds. As this proof never made real appearance, it was the same thing with the various witnesses named by him. Ritter was for instance, fresh enough to state with accuracy that one of these witnesses who can give prompt explanation of these shipments of explosives packed under the supervision of the British Military Attaché in Wilmington, is at present in Fremont, Ohio, where he was placed by Ritter in a chemical factory and now ready to testify in the matter. An employee of the lawyer's firm sent to Fremont found out that there was no employment in the chemical factory, and the alleged witness did not appear in Fremont at all. As the whole thing was rather a great net of lies, the Embassy has been reluctant in making any report to the Department of State and notified the German Ambassador to the effect that we are ready to drop the matter. But hereafter the Embassy received from the attorney in Cleveland the complete affidavit of Ritter which describes in the most explicit manner the alleged shipment of the explosives and wherein the various witnesses are named. The Embassy sent this affidavit to the Department of State but expressly accentuated to give no guarantee whatever as to the reliability and character of Ritter. Request was also made to treat the matter strictly confidential that the press should not learn of it, or else the Embassy would be attacked and motives attributed to us that were far from us. We also stated that Ritter himself, too, requested confidential treatment. We are hereby justified to deny any knowledge of Ritter's alleged statements should he ever try to refer to the Embassy or the Consulate. The only thing we could say for the present in case of emergency is that he offered us an invention of pretended military value and that we paid him various smaller sums in order to hinder him from giving it over to a third power, but now we were informed by our government that they have no use for his offer. As Ritter does not get anything more from us and Cleveland also received strict order to get rid of that man, he now alleges to have entered into negotiations with the German Embassy and been authorized by Ambassador Bernstorff as well as by military attaché Papen to continue his investigations in the matter. Under this pretense he already cheated Consul General von Grivicic of $25, and now he is trying to do the same again with you. And still it is evident that in case the German Embassy would employ him it would also give him the necessary funds. But after the reports I sent to the German Embassy, it is entirely improbable that they will enter into any negotiation with him. Ritter could have been accepted the position found for him by Consul Ludwig, and not to depend more on the income secured for him temporarily by his swindling proceedings. Instead of that he failed to accept the position and continues to try to make himself important alternately with the British and our own authorities and late also with the German authorities by entirely fabricated statements in order to cheat our some money. The continuous appearance of this individual in various offices could cause the most unagreeable misinterpretations and is therefore absolutely necessary to get rid of this man energetically. I request you to explain to Mr. Ritter, in a way which excludes every doubt, that the Embassy is not in a position to receive him any more. His trip to Washington behind the back of the Embassy, was most inopportune and we have nothing to do with the expenses in connection therewith. Should it appear by an investigation of the State Department that he told us the truth, we are ready to give him some money once more. But we ourselves, are firmly determined to do nothing until that time and to evade every appearance as if we would not authorize him to make any further investigations. By handing over the affidavit to the State Department we positively took our hands from that man.

With best regards,

Yours truly,

E. ZWIEDINE

EXHIBIT 30.

N. Y. July 21, 1917

DEAR COUNCILLOR: I acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 19th inst. and thank you very much for your extensive information regarding Dr. Ritter's personality. The impression this man made on me was anything but Consequently I had to be very reserved. When in spite of this I decided to telegraph to you I have only done so in order to avoid even the remotest possibility of neglect.

Ritter first made a complaint regarding the treatment given him of late by our consulate and as I did not heed it he referred to the support he receives from the German Embassy, and after he could not arouse my interest by this either he declared to go from me direct to the British Consul General to reveal there some alleged secrets.

As he was entirely without money—his cash being only about $1.00—I gave him $5.00 from my own pocket to rent a room in some hotel and to make a party meal with. Today he called me up again by telephone asking whether I already received instructions from Lenox or Cleveland and to my negative answer he said that later on he will call once more but he didn't.

The man seems to feel what I think of him and will hardly bother me any more. Should I however see him once more and find out that he intends to do something of any importance I shall not fail to report it to you.

Yours very respectfully.

To His Excellency

BARON ERICH ZWIEDINEK VON SEIDENHORST
I & R. Councillor of the Ambassador at present Lenox, Mass.

EXHIBIT 31.

SEPTEMBER 3, 1910.

Note by G. Radin, who assisted in the investigation by the War Trade Board of the Transatlantic Trust Co.: The following correspondence and the attached lists of names sent to the Transatlantic Trust Co. by or through the Imperial & Royal Austro-Hungarian Consulates of various parts of the United States shows the close connection between the Transatlantic Trust Co. and the Austro-Hungarian Consulates. Various correspondence, as the above mentioned shows, so the influence the Transatlantic Trust Co. had over the sub-divisions of the Imperial & Royal Austro-Hungarian Consulate.

807 SPRUCE ST.,
Philadelphia, Pa., January 19, 1918.

To the Honorable TRANSATLANTIC TRUST Co.,

67-69 William St., New York City.

In reference to your esteemed letter of the 26th of last month, we have the honor to place at your disposal a specification of the addresses of private bankers who reside within the small district of this office, also a list of private Notary Publics, Justices of Peace, Steamship-ticket agents and agents as far as they are known to this office, on account of many intermediaries who do not belong to the list of bankers, coming into the position of taking over remittances for our nationalities or at least giving advices in this respect.

In the opinion of this office, the consultation of the intermediaries named would be one of the most proper things, in order to extend remittance business, i. e., to make it more intensive. On the other hand, however, this is connected with a disadvantage, because several of the persons listed, if not trustworthy, can be of more harm than of benefit.

Therefore, this office cannot assume any responsibility whatever with regard to the trustworthiness of the intermediaries named, but it would be ready to answer inquiries from your esteemed institution, in order to procure information concerning the several intermediaries, and to advise the result in a confidential manner.

Finally we beg to inform you that at the same time the commissioners of the Imperial & Royal Consulate at Wilkes Barre, Pa. too were requested to compile a list of the private bankers, etc. in their district and to send same to your institution directly. With the expression of excellent esteem,

(Signature undeciphered)
Imperial & Royal Consul General.

4 Enclosures.

EXHIBIT 32.

COPIES OF LETTERS PASSING BETWEEN SKOTTHY AND LUSZTIG, EMPLOYEES OF TRANS-ATLANTIC TRUST CO.

" BUFFALO, N. Y. March 5, 1914

To the attention of Mr. JOHN SKOTTHY.

Enclosed I am sending a draft for $2.105 Liberty Bonds, $50.—each which was handed in by Alexander Ökrös. He is sending also $5.— so as to complete the round amount of $700.— If, however, this $5.— would not be enough, I kindly have the round amount credited to the said party just the same. I have the books sent to him because I shall collect the amount which may be short.

Yours sincerely

(Signed) IGNATZ LUSZTIG

To the above John Skotthy answered as follows:

" NEW YORK, March 6, 1914

Mr. IGNATZ LUSZTIG,
General Delivery, Buffalo, N. Y.

DEAR MR. LUSZTIG: With today's mail we received the money which you had sent to us. We shall sell at today's rate $450 Liberty Bonds and shall advise you how much more you will have to send in for Ökrös, so that the $700.— shall be completed. The $5.— sent is not enough in any case because Liberty Bonds are quoted very low today.

Yours very truly,

(Signature does not appear, but the letter was evidently signed by John Skotthy.)

EXHIBIT 33.

COPY OF LETTER FROM J. PIENITZER, PRESIDENT OF THE TRANS-ATLANTIC TRUST CO. TO THE THREE HUNGARIAN BANKS WHICH OWNED A MAJORITY OF THE STOCK OF THE T. T. CO. ADVISING SUBSIDIZING OF THE CROATIAN PRESS IN THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER PROPAGANDA TO INCREASE THE EXPORT OF IMMIGRATION SAVINGS.

S. S. ANTE ALLITHIELL
Feb. 27, 1914

HUNGARIAN GENERAL CREDIT BANK
PESTER HUNG. COMMERCIAL BANK
HUNG. DISCOUNT & EXCHANGE BANK } Directorium.
Budapest.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of Jan. 12th last where you were kind enough to inform me of negotiations held with representatives of Croatian-Slavonian-Dalmatian Government regarding transmission of money to Croatia-Slavonia-Dalmatia and have sent me a copy of the memorandum submitted to the said government. In conformity with your esteemed direction I beg to express my opinion of the plan in question as follows:

I wish to promise that the development of the money order business to Croatia always had our attention the same as the business to Hungary proper. Although we have no separate statistics regarding the Croatian business, it, nevertheless, can be determined and controlled at the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank that more than our existence about one quarter of the 170,000 items and more than 37,000 crowns respectively went to Croatia. The Hung. Roy. Postal Bank as well as we ourselves are using Croatian print in our Croatian money order business. Only regarding publicity here we made distinction so far inasmuch as at this time we did not avail ourselves of the Am-Croatian press for propaganda purposes. But there is a reason for this too; namely the majority of the Croatian Press is not only anti-Magyar, but it openly agitates against Hungary against the Monarchy and the dynasty. The advertising of our institution in the organs of said Press would have been equal to the approval of these state tendencies, if we would pass by these and advertise in one or two papers mentioned.

before dealing with the possibility of dividing the Croatian money order business between the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank and certain Croatian Bank I think it necessary to acquaint you in brief with our present money order system. Money orders received by us partly directly and partly indirectly, are being forwarded to the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank which sends each amount in a special order of payment to the addresses. Every payee gets a notice besides, with the request to return the identification slip, serving as receipt, to the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank which delivers same through us, to the sender. The acquisition of the identification slip is the trump of the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank's assigning system. As this can be had through us only, and as we appoint only reliable banks and bankers as our correspondents, after some time we will render impossible the activity of unfair elements who are not able to get the identification slip generally demanded by the immigrants. I wish to accentuate also on this occasion, that the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank is doing this hard work with unparalleled assiduity and in the most perfect manner. Private institutions are unable to get even the payee's receipt free of charge, nor can they pay the same attention to this almost unprofitable business as a state-institution can do it. Should, therefore, our money order business with its present system, be divided between the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank and certain Croatian Banks, we would then be obliged to give up the identification slip in part of our money orders, whereby the success of our business policy-existing on the ground of said slip, would be frustrated. Besides this the slower handling of money orders by private institutions would put our system now recognized as the most perfect one into an unfavorable light. Finally, even that is to be considered that the Croatian Government and the banks there would hardly approve of our connection with a certain Croatian bank—although to the detriment of our money order system's perfectness but we would stick to it that we should do business with more Croatian banks. This kind of division would result in the dissolution of a uniform system so indispensable in the money order business, it would extremely aggravate file-keeping and would cause much friction between the Croatian banks themselves as well as between them and ourselves. I, therefore would not deem it advisable to add also Croatian banks to our present money order system.

But it would perhaps be possible to coordinate Croatian banks to our present system and make them work parallel with us. This could be done by checks of which system for the time being is not unknown among the immigrants and which most assuredly can be made popular by proper propaganda. We would make an agreement with financial institutions to be indicated by the Croatian Federal government, according to which (agreement) they would immediately cash checks issued by our correspondents in their name and advised by us, and charge them in account of some of our founding institutions. We would make arrangements with the founding institutions that they, or their Croatian branches respectively credit these checks to the existing Croatian bank at the rate of the date of exchange. We would have to see to it that there should always be sufficient credit at our disposal in the founding institutions that the exchange can be effected without disturbance whatsoever. In order to prevent forgeries these checks should be printed on special paper, on so-called "safety paper" which erasures or manipulations with chemicals is impossible. In order to avoid forgery of the amount by writing a numeral to the check, the checks would have to be issued in certain series on each of which the maximum amount would be printed. Thus there would be separate series for 100, 200, 500, 1000 and 5000 crowns and checks. The printed text would be parallel English and Croatian, and in writing either in English or Croatian language could be used. On the back side of the checks a list of all Croatian exchange places could be printed, and a short direction in the latter, and in conclusion the remark. That all complaints connected with the exchange of these checks would be reported to the department of the Interior of the Croatian government, class 111. F. Regarding the Hung. stamp revenue on these checks the Hung. Roy. Ministerium of Finance surely would permit the payment of same in advance. We would distribute these checks to some of our correspondents of whom we know than in their place or in the neighborhood of same Croatian immigrants are living in masses whom we would instruct as to proper handling of the checks. In order to facilitate the going into effect of these checks we would allow our correspondents a corresponding commission the amount of which would increase with the quantity of business. In behalf of popularization of this system we would employ a traveling agent, devoting his time exclusively to the propaganda. In using this system the identification slip could be eliminated, for experience at that people at home inform the sender immediately upon receipt of the money. But taking into consideration that there are many analphabets among the immigrants and their relatives at home, we would furnish our correspondents with accompanying letters in Croatian language wherein we would state in a similar form that enclosed is a check which can be cashed in the way particularly described. The sender is asking the payee to acknowledge receipt of the money by signing or causing to be signed a slip attached to the bottom of the envelope which can be easily detached. Our correspondents would be instructed to attach the letters for those who cannot write and address the envelope as well as the return envelope. In each letter would be enclosed an envelope addressed to the sender that the above mentioned slip can be returned. We would insist to it that our correspondent always should have a sufficient amount of Heller stamps which can be pasted on the envelope by the immigrant. Experience proves it that the payee does not acknowledge receipt of the money for the simple reason that he is too stingy to spend money on stamps.

The advantages of the above system are that the payee is obliged to appear personally in some Croatian bank in order to cash the check where he often can be induced not to take the money due him but to deposit it in the savings department. It is understood by itself that by these checks also payments can be effected to any Croatian bank and deposits made respectively for which purpose the respective bank will have to be named as payee. Particulars may be mentioned either on the check itself or in the accompanying letter. This system can after a while stop wasting of Am. money in Croatia. It is a well known fact, that at this time a considerable part of the Am. Money sent to Croatia partly increases the use of liquor there. In Croatia places the excise revenue is growing in straight proportion with the increase of emigration and partly tends to satisfy the luxurious inclinations of the peasants. I cannot omit to mention that the accumulation in the banks of money sent home would also put the economical policy there on a sound basis.

As to propaganda I beg to propose: No matter in what form the arrangement between the Croatian government and the founding banks will be arrived at, it can be supposed at all events that the negotiations will last for a considerable time, while under present circumstances the starting of one kind of the propaganda is absolutely necessary. War conditions, the anti-state attitude of the majority of the Am-Croatian Press and official agitators paid by Russia by their activity disturbed the mind of Croatian immigrants to such an extent that they do not dare to send home any money at all, fearing that the government may confiscate it. It is understood by itself that we have done everything we could to paralyze these influences, but our activity can only be of what it ought to be under present conditions. The second part of the arrangement is up to the Croatian government which I beg to outline in the following:

The Croatian administrative authorities would have to be told as follows: The families having some emigrants in America that money can be sent from America with absolute safety. Whoever expects money from America should report the name and address of his relative there (in America) to the Croatian Department of Emigration which will see to it that the relative in America be instructed accordingly. The Croatian government will guarantee that such report will not be used for military or tax purposes. The department 111 F. of the Croatian government would inform our institution as quickly of the name and address of the reporting party which institution would bind itself to send proper circulars with a money order blank in advance, also with a postal money order and return envelope, so that the Croatian immigrants would have nothing else to do but to mail to us the money order intended for transmission abroad. I have no doubt that the American money order business would quickly and substantially be improved by this arrangement.

Besides these arrangements a propaganda scheme on a larger scale to be realized gradually should be taken into consideration. The first step should be the establishment of a separate Croatian department in our institution. The manager should be a man to be appointed with the consent of the Croatian government should have the right to delegate for this position its own representative who would be under our jurisdiction in the same manner as the manager is now. To control the activity of this department the Croatian government could at any time send over its representatives. The second step would be that the Croatian government would publish a guide to be drafted together with the use of the Croatian immigrants who would get some together with *amship tickets. The third step would be an agreement with the Amoatian press or with that part of it whose political creed can easily be bought th money in order to influence the immigrants. The founding of a new i-Croatian paper also should be considered the circulation of which would very easy on account of the address-material in our possession. I remark, ever, that the press action, although closely connected with our activity, ould be entirely separated from it, for the reason that collision with banking s here be avoided. The fourth step would be the employment of Croatian rks in all I. & R. Consulates in the U. S., also the establishment of consular ncies in territories inhabited chiefly by Croats. As fifth step can be sidered a radical reorganization of the clergy working among Croatian migrants in such a way that present priests of anti-state tendencies be re-ved and substituted by patriotic monks to be kept under strict discipline.

 e sixth step would be the influencing of Am-Croatian society life, partly by e press, partly by the clergy, partly by representatives of the Croatian vernment to be sent over from time to time.*

It is necessary that with the Croatian propaganda be connected the unre-ating prosecution of anarchistic papers in which action the U. S. Postal partment through the I. & R. Embassy at Washington, could render the most uable services.

I hope that this scheme will suit the competent circles of the Croatian gov-nment that a greater subsidy should be achieved on this basis. As to the e of this subsidy I beg to propose that the proportional number of Magyars d Croatian immigrants living in America be used as key which is about 3:1.
 e the subsidy to be asked from the Croatian government would be one-third the subsidy received from the Hung. Government in other words: It would ual to using a deposit of k. 300,000 without interest. But I would deem it more oper to grant the subsidy not in the form of deposit but allow an annual pport of $10,000 instead. I beg to propose that the agreement be made ectly between the foundling banks and the Croatian government and notice this binding agreement should be taken not by the institution as such that ly by myself personally. Hereby it would be possib'e that the subsidy to be ceived would entirely flow into the treasury of the founding institutions hich could use it for the covering of expenses incurred by the establishment our institution, as well as of those pending.

It should be understood, however, that my institution should only bear the penses closely connected with the business propaganda while the political opaganda would concern the Croatian government. Some allowance should e given though as the expenses of advertising in Am. Croatian papers paid by s, can be qualified as political influence of those papers.

I deem it my duty to refer to the fact that in conformity with § 4, of the greement between the Hung. Roy. Postal Bank and my institution we are liged to pay the moneys, sent by immigrants through us by checks of Hung.
 oy. Postal Bank and through the clearing House. You mentioned in your tter cited above that the Hung. Royal Postal Bank will cooperate to the effect at the business be divided between itself and the Croatian banks according to competent Key, I, nevertheless, would deem it advisable that the Hung.
 oy. Postal Bank should cause a change of the § referred to and to its best at the agreement with the Croatian government be made in due time.

Respectfully yours,

JULIUS PIBNITZER.

EXHIBIT 34.

COPY OF LETTER FROM AUSTRIAN CONSUL AT CHICAGO TO TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO.
 REGARDING PROPAGANDA AMONG POLES FOR TRANSMISSION OF MONEY.

I. & R. AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
 Chicago, Ill., July 12th, 1915.

Ref. No. 10051/C-675.

TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO.

67 William Street New York.

In reference to your favor of the 11th day of May regarding taking advantage of Polish countrymen in transmissions of money to the Fatherland, we eg to send you in enclosure a list of the most important Polish-American ewspapers.

SCHUSTER,

I. & R. Austro-Hungarian Consulate-General.

EXHIBIT 35.

COPY OF PRELIMINARY CONTRACT EXECUTED BY THE THREE HUNGARIAN BANKS WHICH BECAME MAJORITY STOCKHOLDERS OF THE TRANSATLANTIC TRUST

Protocol.

Taken up in relation of the matter of the Hungarian Money Institutions established in America at the conference on December 4, 1911.

1. Cognizance is taken of the memorials to be presented to the Hungarian Royal Department of Finance and Hungarian Royal Department of Commerce.

2. Out of the shares of the bank to be established in America the founding institutions in proportion of their mutual participation have the following sub participation:

To the Hungarian Mortgage-Credit Bank 7½%

To the Hungarian Bank & Commercial Stock Co. 5%

To the Hungarian Agrarian Revenue Bank 5%

Furthermore to the Central Credit Bank of Hungarian Money Institutions and to the six Rural Institutions represented by it 9.12%.

With regards to the agreements to be made with the Hungarian Royal Department of Finance these above mentioned institutions (with the exception of the Rural Institutions, which have undertaken 0.76% participation in the bank) will block for ten years the shares to be taken over on basis of their participation and are obliged to transfer to these founding institutions the right of vote from these shares. Besides it will be the right of each founding institution to hand down further sub participations out of its own participation with reservation of the right of vote and the obligation of blocking for ten years.

It is decided furthermore, that sub participations will be handed down to American Institutions and firms also: these institutions and firms, together with the gentlemen who are to travel to New York within the nearest future will on the basis of mutual understanding come to decision in relation to carrying into effect the foundation. To these banks respectively firms— inasmuch as it would not be possible with an obligation of blocking for ten years the shares will be handed down with an obligation of blocking for four years but the sum of these sub participations cannot exceed the 30% of the shares according to the agreement made with the Hungarian Royal Department of Finance. Inasmuch as the American Sub Participants would not take the share quantity amounting to 30% of the whole basic capital, then the institution will have the right to hand down sub participations with blocking for four years within the above mentioned limit out of its own participation. The right of vote from the shares to be handed down with blocking for four years is to be reserved also for the benefit of the founding institutions the right of the blocking possibly.

The total of the shares will be deposited by the founding institutions with the Hungarian General Credit Bank. Regarding the representation on the convention and the utilization of the right of vote at the convention in relation to the total shares at disposition, the quotas undertaken at the foundation shall be the standard, namely:

Hungarian General Credit Bank 45%

Hungarian Commercial Bank of Pest 32½%

Hungarian Discount and Exchange Bank 32½%

3. According to the agreement to be made with the Hungarian Royal Department of Commerce the founding institutions are responsible in union to the Hungarian Royal Department of Commerce: the founding institutions agreed, that among themselves, respectively towards each other they will have the responsibility in proportion of their quota.

To give notice to the Department of Finance that the to be made agreement will be ended, necessitates that two founding institutions shall decide by giving notice to quit.—Inasmuch however that founding institutions would desire to dissolution, the third however would desire the same, then the institution is obliged to offer to the other two institutions its share possible at par rates.—Inasmuch as the two other founding institutions would be willing to take over these shares, or would not make declaration within fifteen days, then the respective third institution will have the right to give notice to quit the contract to the Hungarian Royal Department of Finance: the two other institutions are obliged to accede to the dissolution of the contract.

This same decision is valid in relation of the liquidation of the bank, also, in this case however not the par rates, but the intrinsic value.

shares according to the balance made will appear as prize of offer for the realization of the desire for liquidation of the shares.

4. The deposit free of interest to be given by the Hungarian Royal Department of Finance to the Hungarian General Credit Bank will be divided for the time being among the founding institutions according to their proportion of quota. This deposit will not be handed over to the to be established American money institution for the time being as a deposit, but will be put to bear interest at 4½% for the benefit of the same up to further arrangements by the founding institutions.

Beyond the decided earnest money of 100% (which shall be used for the creation of a surplus for providing for foundation expenses amounting to K.250.000) trips to America, the sum payable to the Central Credit bank of Hungarian Money Institutions, etc., the part in proportion to each share shall be remitted out of the above sums. Inasmuch as these expenses for foundation should amount to more than K.250.000.—they shall be bearable by the new bank, inasmuch however that the expenses for foundation should not amount to the above sums, so the balance remaining shall be payable to the to be established bank for the purpose of defraying of expenses of foundation eventually arising or for the formation of a latent reserve.—

5. It is decided in relation of the board to be formed in America, that the same will be composed in part out of the representatives of American firm eventually participating in the foundation, and partly Hungarians living in America will be called upon to join the board.

For the time being out of the Hungarians living in America the following gentlemen will be requested to join the board:

Dr. Morris Czukor, Sam Konig, Dr. Arpad Gerster, physician, Consul General Alexander Nuber, Leo Friedrich and Gustav Love.

Each of the following institutions shall have the right to delegate into the Budapest Local Committee two members, The Central Credit Bank of the Hungarian Money Institutions together with the participating Rural Institutions two members (Messrs. Ladislav Voros of Farad, and Louis Zador have been nominated) and each of the Budapest sub participants one member each. Besides these:

Dr. Wm. Lers, Ministerial Counsellor

Dr. Alexander Halasy, a director of the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank,

Baron Dr. Frederich Koranyi, Ministerial Section Counselor,

Zoltan Jefelfalnssy, Emigration Government Commissioner,

Finally eventually Dr. Julius Kovacs, the director of the Hungarian Royal Commercial Museum will be requested to join the local committee.

The officials of the bank will be employed partly out of the officials of the founding institutions, partly though at the spot. In relation of the former the decision was arrived at, that each of the founding institutions will delegate one official: these official will be left to remain in the status of the founding institutions respectively in their pension fund.

As substitute director an American expert will be employed who thoroughly knows the New York market relations.

The main office of the founding money institution will be in the bank section of New York and for this purpose there is a prospect of renting at fair terms one of the localities at present standing empty of the Hungarian American Bank. In relation of these the general director of the Central Credit Bank was given oral option. It is planned furthermore to open a branch in that city part of New York where the Hungarians are especially densed in great numbers, around the 60 and 70 Streets. For the management of this branch Alexander Kremer is taken in view, who has had lengthy bank experience in American and whose employment the founding institutions have taken cognizance of approvingly. The compensations of Kremer have been decided at $130.00 per month and besides this the expenses of traveling out on 2nd class will be recompensated to him, provided that he will remain in the service of the to be established bank for at least three years.

It is decided, that for the performance of the necessary secretarial work Mr. Emil Zerkowitz will be employed to the Budapest Local Committee with the compensation of six thousand Kromen per year: this sphere of work of Mr. Zerkowitz will be decided upon in detail later.

HUNGARIAN GENERAL CREDIT BANK,

Signed ULLMAN KORNFIELD

HUNGARIAN DISCOUNT AND EXCHANGE BANK,

signed Dr. BECK BAROSS.

HUNGARIAN COMMERCIAL BANK OF BUDAPEST.

Signed LANCZY FEHER

EXHIBIT 36.

COPY OF THE SUBSCRIPTION AGREEMENT WHICH WAS ONE OF THE CONTRACTS BY WHICH THE TRANSATLANTIC TRUST CO. (HEREIN NAMED THE "DANUBE TRUST COMPANY") WAS ORGANIZED.

Protocol of an agreement arrived at between the undersigned (hereinafter called the "American Stockholders") and the Hungarian General Credit and Hungarian Commercial Bank of Pest, Hungarian Discount & Exchange Bank of Budapest, Hungary, (hereinafter called the "Banks") at the City of New York on the 20th day of January, 1912.

The "Banks" having undertaken to organize a Trust Company under the laws of the State of New York, to be known as the "Danube Trust Company" or some similar name, with the object of doing a general trust company business, and incidentally and in order to further the interests of said Trust Company, to develop the commercial, industrial and financial interests between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Hungary, the parties to the protocol have agreed as follows:

First: A Trust Company shall be organized under the laws of the State of New York, to be known as the "Danube Trust Company" or some similar name.

Second: The capital stock of said Trust Company is to consist of seven thousand (7,000) shares of the par value of One hundred Dollars ($100) each and the shares are to be issued at One hundred and fifty Dollars ($150) each so that the Trust Company will have a capital of Seven hundred thousand Dollars ($700,000) and a surplus of Three hundred and fifty thousand Dollars ($350,000).

Said shares have been subscribed for by the "Banks" but for the purpose of securing to themselves and said Trust Company the benefit of the experience, influence and knowledge of American conditions of the "American Stockholders" and in order to place the management of the said Trust Company in the hands of a Board composed, primarily, of Americans, the "Banks" have decided to cede from their subscriptions the number of shares to which the "American Stockholders" have respectively subscribed.

Third: Each of the subscribers to this protocol is to be bound by the terms hereof as a matter of good faith and is to subscribe to the number of shares of the capital stock of said Trust Company so to be organized, set opposite his name.

Fourth: The principal office of the Trust Company is to be located in the City of New York, and it shall have such branches and such agencies and representatives as shall, from time to time, be decided upon and as shall be practicable and feasible within the provisions of the laws of the State of New York. In so far as this may be feasible and legal, the Trust Company is especially to maintain an agency or representative located in Budapest, Hungary, with a view to facilitating the commercial, industrial and financial relations between Hungary and the United States, with a view of procuring business for the Trust Company and furthering its interests.

Fifth: The methods and character of business to be done by the Trust Company are to be such as are permitted under the laws of the State of New York and are, as far as may be necessary, to be set forth in the Certificate of Incorporation and in the By-laws of such Trust Company.

Sixth: The signers of this protocol, in so far as they may become directors of said Trust Company, agree, if not legally at least as a matter of good faith among themselves that it is their intention that none of the following transactions shall be undertaken by such Trust Company without the consent of the "Banks," so long as they are the holders of the majority of the stock of said Trust Company:

I. The purchase of real estate at a price exceeding the sum of Two hundred and fifty thousand Dollars.

II. The undertaking of new and special branches of business.

III. The undertaking of any business transaction that will involve the definite and long term investment of a sum exceeding Two hundred and fifty thousand Dollars ($250,000).

IV. The entering into of indefinite and long term contractual relations with other corporations or persons.

V. The granting of the power to sign the corporate name.

VI. The "Banks" obligate themselves morally, if not legally, at any meeting of the stockholders to support no proposition that has not been first sanctioned a vote of two-thirds of the Board of Directors; on the other hand, the Banks reserve unto themselves the right at such stockholders meetings to vote against any proposition of the Directors, if, in their opinion, they deem it advisable not to do.

Seventh: It is understood that among the purposes which the signers of this protocol have in view and with the object of furthering the business of the said Trust Company, are the advancement and the protecting of the interests of Hungarians who now reside or may hereafter arrive in the United States of America or Canada. For this purpose, it is understood that the said Trust Company, in as far as this may legally be permissible, will, as promptly as possible, appoint throughout the United States of America and Canada, agents representatives or correspondents.

Eighth: In order to cover the expenses growing out of the purposes for which said Trust Company is to be organized and the expenses connected with the organization of the Trust Company, the "Banks" assume the obligation either to deposit with said Trust Company the sum of Four Million Kronen (K.4,000,000.) Hungarian money, ($800,000.) or, from time to time, to deposit parts of said sum of Four Million Kronen (K.4,000,000.) ($800,000.) and to permit said sum to remain on deposit with said Trust Company for a period of four (4) years from the date of the organization of said Trust Company, without interest or, at their option, during said period of four years or until such sum of Four Million Kronen (K. 4,000,000.) ($800,000.) shall be deposited as aforesaid in whole or in part, to pay into the Treasury of said Trust Company interest on said sum of Four Million Kronen (K.4,000,000.) ($800,000.) on such portion of said sum as shall not have been deposited as aforesaid, at the rate of four and one-half percent (4½) per annum. Such interest shall be paid to said Trust Company half-yearly, at the end of each six months.

Ninth: The "Banks" further obligate themselves, in so far as this may legally be done, to secure a contract to be entered into between said Trust Company and the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, pursuant to the terms of which the said Trust Company shall be appointed the general agent, for the United States of America and Canada, of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank for a period of ten (10) years from the date of the organization of said Trust Company.

The terms of such contract shall be such as may be mutually agreed upon between said Trust Company and the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank: being understood that a preliminary arrangement has been made between the "Banks" and the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Banks subject, however, to the approval of the Minister of Finance of the Kingdom of Hungary, pursuant to the terms of which the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank agrees to deposit with the Trust Company, for a period of ten (10) years from the date of its organization, the sum of Four million Kronen (K. 4,000,000) Hungarian money ($800,000) against interest of one-half per cent per annum.

Tenth: Each subscriber to this protocol shall have the privilege to transfer a part of his subscription to others. The subscribers to this protocol and those to whom they may transfer a portion of their respective subscriptions, however, obligate themselves, as a matter of good faith, during the period of four (4) years from the date of the organization of the Trust Company, not to sell or transfer their names without first having offered to sell the shares they respectively desire to sell or dispose of to the "Banks" at the price and terms that they are respectively willing to sell such shares to others. At the expiration of each Four (4) years the stock shall be released from the terms of this Article, unless the same shall be continued for a further period by the unanimous consent of all the holders of such stock.

Eleventh: The affairs of said Trust Company shall be managed by not less than fourteen (14) directors. The "Banks" agree that each of the "American stockholders" shall have the right to designate two persons, who shall be named in the Certificate of Incorporation of said Trust Company, as against its first directors. The "American Stockholders" agree in so far as they may legally do so, to vote for the election of an active business manager or officers of said Trust Company to be designated by the "Banks" and likewise so to vote for Mr. Julius Plrnitzer as the first President thereof.

Twelfth: Unless this protocol shall be signed by the "Banks" and a copy hereof delivered, so signed, to each of the undersigned the "American Stockholders", on or before the 30th day of March, 1912, then the terms of this protocol shall thereafter be null and void and of no further force and effect: and likewise, unless said Trust Company shall be organized on or before the first day of June, 1912, the terms hereof shall thereafter be null and void and of no further force and effect.

Speyer & Co. 400 (say Four hundred) shares
 August Belmont & Co. 400 (say Four hundred) shares
 Hallgarten & Co. 400 (say Four hundred) shares
 H. Riegan Duval 100 (One hundred) shares
 United States Mortgage & Trust Company By Calvert Brewer. Vice Pres. 400 (say Four hundred) shares
 James G. Cannon Ten (10) shares
 Arpad G. Gerster Ten (10) shares
 Gustav Leve Ten (10) shares
 Morris Cukor Ten (10) shares
 Arnold Somlyo Ten (10) shares
 Walter G. Oakman One hundred (100) shares

EXHIBIT 87.

TRANSLATION OF A DOCUMENT IN THE HUNGARIAN LANGUAGE FOUND AMONG THE PAPERS OF JULIUS FIENITZER WHICH WAS ADMITTED BY HIM TO BE A SUBSTANTIALLY CORRECT COPY OF ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACTS UNDER WHICH THE TRANSATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY WAS ORGANIZED—NAMELY A CONTRACT BETWEEN THE THREE "FOUNDER BANKS" AND THE ROYAL HUNGARIAN POSTAL SAVINGS BANK.

AGREEMENT.

Concluded subject to the approval of the Royal Hungarian Ministers of Commerce, of the Interior, and of Finance, on the one hand between the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank on the other hand between the founders of the Hungarian Financial Institution to be established in the territory of the United States of North America, the Hungarian General Credit Bank, the Hungarian Commercial Bank of Post, and the Hungarian Discount and Exchange Bank. Financial Institutions in Budapest in reference to the entrusting of the representation of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank to the Financial Institution to be established.

1 § The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank entrusts her exclusive representation in the territory of the United States of North America and Canada to the Financial Institution to be established in case same comes into existence for 10, i. e. ten years figured from the date of founding. The Financial Institution to be founded will be entitled to use side by side with her own incorporated firm the following expression, "exclusive representation of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank in the territory of the United States of North America, respectively Canada," and to also transfer the use of this expression to her branches, agents and representatives.

The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank is entitled upon instruction of the Royal Hungarian Government to give one sided notice for the discontinuance of the Finance Agreement concluded with the Financial Institution to be established even within the above mentioned period of ten (10) years.

Such notice will immediately become effective.

2 § The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank will support the Institution to be established against the unfair competition of other American firms, private persons who are occupied in the mediation of money remittances of Emigrants, and will upon well founded request of the Financial Institution to be established—in case of necessity—exclude from her check and clearing business the firms carrying on such competition.

3 § In order to insure the ability of the Institution to be established to compete with American firms who are occupied in the mediation of money remittances of Emigrants, the owners of such check accounts in the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank will be entitled to transfer the same to the Institution to be established.

4 § The founding Financial Institution to be established will be entitled to send home through the check of the Hungarian Postal Savings Bank—if the sender so desires—the money of remitting the money. The R entitled to desire that such payments be made by cablegrams or cash letters be also effected through her mediation.

5 § The founding Financial Institutions bind themselves that the Financial Institution to be established will pay to the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank for the effecting of the payments mentioned in 4 §—besides refunding the actual postage and other expenses—up to the close of the first complete business year $\frac{1}{2}\%$ (per mill) supplementary fee in addition to the fees valid in the Domestic Postal Savings Bank check business. After the close of the first complete business year the commission due to the Postal Savings Bank will have to be agreed upon, taking into consideration the actual results of this branch of business of the Financial Institution to be established, such agreement will constitute the supplementary part of the contract concluded with the Financial Institution to be established.

The check account (or check accounts) opened for the purpose of this business for the Financial Institution to be established will not be debited by the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank with new fees besides the fees respectively, commissions, discussed in the previous paragraph.

6 § The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank cannot accept orders for remittances, respectively payments directly from the branches, agents and representatives of the Financial Institution to be founded.

7 § The Financial Institution to be established will effect her remittances through lists addressed to the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank or through checks drawn on the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank.

The Financial Institution to be established is entitled to sell these checks, at the same time advising the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, to her branches, agents and representatives, made out on blanks to be determined in agreement with the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank and to be produced by the Royal Hungarian State Press, for round amounts, but not more than Kronen 1000 (1000) each. Such checks however may not form the object of further sale or purchase among the branches, agents and representatives.

For the honoring of such checks the Financial Institution to be founded will pay to the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank up to the close of the first complete year of business the same fees and supplementary fees which are to be paid according to 5 § for the effecting of the payments. A new and separate agreement will be concluded in the manner mentioned in 5 § in regard to the commission payable after the close of the first complete year of business.

The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank and the Financial Institution to be established will work out in agreement regulations referred to the handling, guarding, and sale of these check.

8 § The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank effects the orders received by means of lists only if they are at the same time covered.

The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank pays the checks purchased by the Emigrants and payable to some definite address, in case same will be provided with a known signature of the Financial Institution to be established and in case the data of the checks correspond to the data communicated by the Financial Institution to be established, if the founded Institution place at the disposal of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank within 3 days, upon her request the adequate covering amount. Such request will have to be addressed to the Budapest representation of the Financial Institution to be established.

9 § The responsibility in regard to the checks discussed in the 7 and 8 § is determined in such a manner that the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank vouches for all abuses committed with these checks at her place respectively by her employees, whereas the Financial Institution to be founded vouches for all such abuses which are committed at her place, respectively by her employees, branches, agents or representatives.

The Financial Institution to be established assumes responsibility for such amounts which were paid in by the Emigrants against receipts properly made out and signed by persons entitled to receive the money in accordance with the regulations to be determined with the agreement of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, in case that it can be established that the paying in has actually taken place.

10 § The Financial Institution to be established is obliged to hang up in her own business offices, as well as in those of her branches, agencies and representatives in the various languages current among the Emigrants living there the following,

(a) specimens of the check blanks mentioned in 7 §.

(b) specimens of the receipt mentioned in the second paragraph of 9 § 1: the signature (signatures) of the person (persons) entitled to receive the money.

(c) the rate of exchange.

(d) all the expenses and commissions which may be charged under the title by the Financial Institution to be established, or by a particular branch, agency or representative.

11 § The founding Financial Institutions bind themselves that the Financial Institution to be established will within the limits permitted by the American Laws, regulations and local conditions collect savings deposits for the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank and that she will attend to the service of mediation in connection with this free of charge.

In case such savings deposits are effected by means of the checks mentioned in the 7 §, such checks are free of the commission mentioned in third paragraph of 7 §.

Within the limits of the law—decisions referring to it, the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank will keep the savings deposits collected by the mediation of the Financial Institution to be established invested on her account current with the founding banks subject to the contract conditions now valid up to the time when same will be used in part or in whole for the purchase of securities.

12 § The founding Financial Institutions bind themselves that the Financial Institution to be established will effect the payment orders of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank in the territory of the United States of America and of Canada against $\frac{1}{2}$ % (per mill) commission and against reimbursement of her actual expenses which arose in connection with postage, telegraphic expenses, or insurance of value. The detailed conditions will be determined in the final contract.

13 § The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank will on the day upon connection will start deposit with the Financial Institution to be established a current account to be kept in Kronen—or if desired in part in dollars—4,000,000 i. e. four million Kronen for the purpose of the payment business for the duration of the contract which amount is to be raised to 5,000,000 i. e. five million Kronen in case the total and yearly turn over of the Financial Institution to be founded with the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank exceeds 40,000,000 i. e. forty million Kronen.

For her credit balance and current account mentioned in the first paragraph the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank receives interest, the amount of which is fixed from case to case by mutual agreement between the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank and the Financial Institution to be established.

This rate of interest is fixed until further arrangement as $\frac{1}{2}$ % per annum.

For the credit balance of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank on the current account the founding Institutions vouch collectively.

14 § The specimen and text of all printed matters, circulars and signs to be used in connection with the present (business) relation is to be determined by agreement between the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank and the Financial Institution to be established. The Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank has prepared at her own expense the printed matters and circulars to be used in the territory of the lands of the Hungarian Crown and those check blanks which will be brought into circulation in the territory of the United States, North America and Canada. All other printed matters, circulars and signs are to be prepared by the Financial Institution to be established at her expense.

15 § In order to facilitate the organizing and business work of the Financial Institution to be founded, the founding Institutions bind themselves that, if desired, by commission of the founding Institutions, a person, given from case to case, to be named, for a fixed time one or several persons will continue to belong to the Financial Institution and will continue to receive the expenses of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank connected with his trip and his stay in the territory of the Financial Institutions or by the founding Institutions.

16 § The founding Financial Institutions bind themselves that the Financial Institution to be established will, in the territory of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, have her business relating to the

that she will give insight into all her relative business books, and documents of the employee (employees) of the Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank sent out.

EXHIBIT 38.

TRANSLATION OF THE COPY OF A LETTER FROM PIENITZER TO THE "FOUNDER BANKS" FOUND AMONG PIENITZER'S PAPERS.

[Translated on July 20, 1918.]

BUDAPEST, November 4, 1911.

HUNGARIAN GENERAL BANK,
COMMERCIAL BANK OF PEST,
THE DISCOUNT AND EXCHANGE BANK,
Budapest.

Regarding the agreement made today between you and myself in relation of my employment with the Hungarian money institution to be established by you in America. I take cognizance, that you, as the chief stockholders of the to be established bank, plan to appoint a Local Committee in Budapest, which will constantly control the matters of the bank and will reserve to itself the right of veto versus. "The Board of Directors" in the following questions:

- 1/. The Purchase of real estate.
- 2/. At the taking up of new business branches.
- 3/. At the permanent investment for a length of time of amounts exceeding $250,000.
- 4/. At the fixing of its dividends.
- 5/. At the making of contracts meaning to create permanent relations with third firms and persons, not meaning appointments respectively service contracts and other agreements connected with the transaction of business, (for instance agents, furthermore current accounts, normal credit matters, etc.)
- 6/. At the appointment and removal of manager.

At taking cognizance of these stipulations, I state on my own behalf bindingly, that I shall constantly inform the to be elected Budapest committee of the happening occurrences at the to be established bank and that I will subordinate myself in every respect for the full period of my contract to the wishes of this local committee indicated to me in writing—naturally presuming that the same will agree with the by laws of the company and the relative American laws.

Inasmuch as I should break this obligation of mine, than these above mentioned agreement made between us today shall lose its efficacy and you shall have right to remove me from my position at the to be created bank without time of notice respectively have me dismissed by the New York Board of Directors and for the case that this circumstance should come to pass I declare by this time, that I relinquish all my claims for final settlement and damages of all kinds. But should I come in contrast with the American Board of Directors as the outcome of my obligation undertaken in this letter and especially if I would be removed for this reason from my position, then you are under obligation to indemnify me for my losses ensuing out of this.

(The following submitted by Mr. Clyde P. Steen, at page 2856, was ordered inserted in the record:)

Complete list of foreign language newspapers in United States.

[Compiled by Clyde P. Steen, president National Association of City Editors.]

Albanian:

Massachusetts—

Dielli (Daily), Boston.
Yll'i Mengjezit (mo.), Non-pol., Boston.
Sazani (s-mo.), Natick.

New York—

Koha (s-mo.), Dem., Jamestown.
Albania, Albanian, New York.
Perparimi (mo.), Lit. & Comm'l, New York.

Arabic:

Massachusetts—

Fatat Boston, Ind., Boston.

Al-Insanyeh, Non-part., Fall River.

New York—

Al-Bayan (3 tl. a week), Ind., New York.

Al-Fatat, Syrian Int'sts, New York.

Al-Funoon (mo.), Lit., New York.

Al-Hoda (daily), Id., New York.

Ash-Shaab (daily), Ind., New York.

As-Sayeh (s-wkly), Gen. News, New York.

Eagle (daily), American Syrian Int'sts, New York.

Meraat-ul-Gharb (daily), Ind., New York.

Armenian:

California—

Asbarez, Non-part., Fresno.

Nor Giank, Dem., Fresno.

Siswan, Fresno.

Illinois—

Eritassard Hayastan (semi-weekly), Socialist, Chicago.

Massachusetts—

Azk (daily), Rep., Boston.

Bahag (s-weekly), Rep., Boston.

Hairenik (daily), Socl'st, Boston.

New York—

Gotchnag, Non-part., New York.

Belgian-Flemish:

Illinois—

Gazette Van Moline, Ind., Moline.

Michigan—

Detroit enaar, Belgian Affairs, Detroit.

Gazette Van Detroit, Ind., Detroit.

Bohemian:

Illinois—

Amerikan (s-weekly), Agric., Chicago.

Denni Hiasatel (ev. day.), Ind., Chicago.

Duch Casu., Lit., Chicago.

Hiasatel (s-weekly), Ind., Chicago.

Hospodarske Listy (semi-Monthly), Agric., Chicago.

Katolik (s-wkly), Cath. & Ind., Chicago.

Narod (ev. day), Cath. & Ind., Chicago.

Pritel Ditek, Relig. & Juv., Chicago.

Slavie (s-wkly), Ind. Dem., Chicago.

Sokol Americky (monthly), Athletic & News, Chicago.

Sotek, Humor, Chicago.

Spravedlnost (ev. day), Labor, Chicago.

Svojan (mo.), Free Thought, Chicago.

Svornost (ev. day), Ind., Chicago.

Vesmir, Free Thought, Chicago.

Zajmy Lidu (s-wkly), Labor, Chicago.

Zenske Listy, Fam., Chicago.

Organ Bratrstva (Bohemian-Slavonic) (monthly), C. S. P. S., Oak Park.

Organ Cesko-Slovanske Jednoty (mo.), Boehm. Slav. Union, Oak Park.

Svobodna Skola (monthly), Free Thought & Educ., Oak Park.

Iowa—

Listy, Ind., Cedar Rapids.

Sloan Americky (s-wkly), Dem., Cedar Rapids.

Maryland—

Telegraf, Ind., Baltimore.

Missouri—

Ceska Zena (s-mo.), Cath. Women, St. Louis.

Hlas (s-wkly), Cath., St. Louis.

Listy, Ind., St. Louis.

Nebraska—

Domaci Noviny, Ind., Clarkson.

Osvena Zapadu, Ind., Clarkson.

hemian—Continued.

Nebraska—Continued.

Zivot (s-mo.), Prot., Crete.
 Drubeznicke Noviny (monthly), Poult., Omaha.
 Hospodar (fortn'tly), Agric., Omaha.
 Komensky (mo.), Educ., Omaha.
 Kvetý Americké (fortn'tly), Lit. & Fam., Omaha.
 Nova Doba (s-weekly), Ind., Omaha.
 Pokrok (daily), Omaha.
 Pokrok (Sunday), Omaha.
 Pokrok Zapadu, Rep., Omaha.

New York—

Hlas Lidu (daily), Labor, New York.
 Listy (daily), Ind., New York.
 Nedelni Hlas Lidu, Labor, New York.
 Nedelni Listy, Ind., New York.
 Nonna (mo.), Lit., New York.
 Obrana, Soc'lst., New York.
 Vek Rozumu (mo.), Free Tht., New York.
 Volne Listy (Mo.), Soc'lst., New York.

Ohio—

American (ev. day.), Ind., Cleveland.
 Americke Delnicke Listy, Soc'lst., Cleveland.
 Svet (daily), Ind., Cleveland.

Pennsylvania—

Krestanske Listy, Presb., Pittsburgh.

Texas—

Vestnik, Frat., Fayetteville.
 Novy Domov (s-wkly), Cath. & Dem., Hallettsville.
 Texan, Dem., Houston.
 Texasky Rolnik (mo.), Agric., Houston.
 Svodoba, Dem., La Grange.
 Noviny, Sealy.
 Nasinec (s-weekly), Dem., Taylor.
 Noviny, Dem., West.

Wisconsin—

Vlastenec, Cath. & Ind., La Crosse.
 Domacnost, Fam., Milwaukee.
 Rovnost, Ind., Milwaukee.

Bulgarian:

Illinois—

Naroden Glas (daily), Ind., Granite City.

Chinese:

California—

Chinese Republic Journal (daily), San Francisco.
 Chinese World (daily), Com'l., San Francisco.
 Chung Sai Yat Po (daily), Ind., San Francisco.
 Young China (daily), Dem., San Francisco.

New York—

Chinese Reform News (s-wkly), Dem., New York.
 Chinese Republic News, New York.

Croatian:

California—

Dalnnacijska, Los Angeles.
 Jadran, Ind., San Francisco.

Illinois—

Balkan World (Croatian-Serbian), Ind., Chicago.
 United Serbian (Serbian-Croatian), Ind., Chicago.

Michigan—

Hrvatska, Ind. Rep. & Cath., Calumet.

Minnesota—

Radnicka Obrana, Non.-part., Duluth.

New York—

Jugostavenski Svijet (daily), Slav. Interest, New York.
 Narodni List (ev. day), Ind., New York.
 Osa (fortn'tly), Humor, New York.

Pennsylvania—

Hrvatski Glasnik, Ind., Pittsburgh.

Esperanto, etc.:

Massachusetts—

Amerika Esperantisto (mo.), Esperanto, West Newton.

Ohio—

World-Speech (mo.), Ro., Marietta.

Finnish:

Illinois—

Finska Missions Pos
(Swed.-Fin. (mo.), 1

Massachusetts—

Pohjan Tahti (North)
Rälväaja (daily), So
Sakenia (monthly).

Michigan—

Valvoja (s-wkly), Re
Amerikan Suometar
Aura (mo.), Agric., 1
Palmen-Sanomia, Re
Auttaja, Relig. & Re

Minnesota—

Industrialisti (daily)
Päivälehti (daily), 1
Siirtolainen (s-wkly)
Unsi Kotimaa, Rep.,

New York—

Finska Amerikanare
New Yorkin Uutiset

Oregon—

Sanomat (s-weekly),
Toveri (daily), Socia
Toveritar, Family, A

Wisconsin—

Lapatoosu (s.-mo.), S
Pelto ja Koti (mo.), .
Työmies (daily), Soc

French:

California—

Union Nouvelle (Frer
Echo del Ouest (daily)
Echo del Ouest, Prog.
Franco Californien (c

District of Columbia—

Bulletin de l'Union Pa

Illinois—

Courrier-Franco-Amer

Louisiana—

Interim (Eng. & Fr.)
Meschacebe (Eng. & I
Abelle (daily), Dem.,
Abelle, Dem., New O
Guepe, Ind., New Orle
Observateur, Ind., Res

Maine—

Justice de Biddeford,
Messenger (3 tl. a weel
Petit Journal, Ind., La

Massachusetts—

Independant (daily),
Independant, Rep., Fa
Citoyen, Ind., Haverh
Justice, Ind., Holyoke.
Courrier, Ind., Lawrer
Clairon, Ind., Lowell.
Etoile (daily), Rep., I
Lynnols, Ind. & Cath.,
Independant (daily),
Courrier, Ind., Salem.
Opinion Publique (dal

ench—Continued.

Michigan—

Courrier du Michigan (monthly), Ind., Lake Linden.

Minnesota—

Echo de L'Ouest, Ind., Minneapolis.

New Hampshire—

Avenir National (daily), Ind., Manchester.

Canado-American (mo.) (free to members), Ind. & Frat., Manchester.

Impartial (3 tl. a week), Ind., Nashua.

Progres, Le, Ind., Nashua.

New York—

American Furrier (Eng. French, Ger. & Russian) (monthly), Fashion, New York.

Amerique (mo.), Export, New York.

Courrier des Etats-Unis (daily), Ind., New York.

Courrier des Etats-Unis (Sunday), Ind., New York.

Courrier des Etats-Unis, Ind., New York.

Exporatateur American—see American Exporter, New York.

Rhode Island—

Jean-Baptiste (s-wkly), Rep., Pawtucket.

Tribune (daily), Rep., Woonsocket.

Union (mo.), Cath. Frat., Woonsocket.

rman:

Arkansas—

Arkansas Echo, Dem., Little Rock.

California—

California Post, Ind., Fresno.

Dutche Presse, Los Angeles.

Journal und California Zeitung, Ind., Oakland.

Nord-California Herold & Sacramento Journal, Ind., Sacramento.

Sud-California Deutsche Zeitung, Ind., San Diego.

Colorado—

Colorado Herold, Ind., Denver.

Connecticut—

Connecticut Staats-Zeitung (s-wkly), Ind., Hartford.

Hermanns-Sohn (s-mo.), S. of H., New Haven.

Illinois—

Cook County Herald (Eng. & Ger.), Ind. Rep., Arlington Heights.

Volksfreund (daily), Ind. Rep., Aurora.

Post und Zeitung, Rep., Belleville.

Abendpost (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Arbeiter-Zeitung (daily), Socialist, Chicago.

Bakers Journal and Deutsche-Amerikanische Backer Zeitung (Eng. and Ger.), Labor, Chicago.

Concordia (Eng. & Ger.) (mo.), Luth, Chicago.

Echo, Post und Beobachter, Ind., Chicago.

Fackel, Socialist, Chicago.

Illinois Staats-Zeitung (ev. day), cir. includes that of Presse, Ind. Rep., Chicago.

Katholisches Wochenblatt, Cath., Chicago.

Kirchenbote, Cong., Chicago.

Luxemburger Vereinszeitung, Ind., Chicago.

Presse (daily) for cir. see Illinois Staats-Zeitung, Ind. Rep., Chicago.

Sonntagpost, Ind., Chicago.

Vorbote, Socialist, Chicago.

Wahrheitsfreund, Menonite, Chicago.

Weser-Nachrichten (fortnightly), Ind., Chicago.

Wochenblatt, Ind., Chicago.

Herold und Zeitung, Neut., Danville.

Herold, Rep., Elgin.

Katholischer Jugendfreund (Eng. & Ger.) (monthly), Cath., Evanston.

General-Anzeiger, Ind., Joliet.

Post, Ind., Mendota.

Teutonia, Ind., Mount Olive.

Illinois Volksblatt, Rep., Nashville.

Post, Dem., Nashville.

German—Continued.Illinois—Continued.

Nachrichten aus Schleswig-Holstein (fortnightly), Fam., Oak Park
 Central Illinois Wochenblatt, Ind. Rep., Ottawa.
 La Salle County Herold, Rep., Ottawa.
 Sonne (daily), Rep., Peoria.
 Sonne, Rep., Peoria.
 Sonntags-Glocke, Rep., Peoria.
 Germania (daily), Ind. Dem., Quincy.
 Germania, Ind. Dem., Quincy.
 Staats-Wochenblatt, Dem., Springfield.
 Amerikanisches Familienblatt (mo.), Cath., Techny.

Iowa—

Ostfriessische Nachrichten (3 ti. a month), Non-pol., Breda.
 Volksfreund-Tribune, Ind., Burlington.
 Demokrat, Dem., Carroll.
 Journal, Ind., Cedar Rapids.
 Familien-Freund, Ind., Charles City.
 Iowa Volkszeitung, Dem., Clinton.
 Journal (3 ti. a wk.), Ind., Clinton.
 Freie Presse, Ind., Council Bluffs.
 Iowa Reform, Ind., Davenport.
 Herold, Dem., Denison.
 National-Demokrat, Dem., Dubuque.
 Presbyterianer, Presb., Dubuque.
 Herold, Ind. Dem., Manning.
 Jackson-Journal, Ind., Maquoketa.
 Herold, Ind. Dem., Muscatine.
 Courier, Ind. Dem., Sioux City.
 Volksfreund, Ind., Sioux City.
 Kirchen-Blatt (semi-mo.), Luth., Waverly.
 Phoenix, Dem., Waverly.

Kansas—

Vorwärts, Ind., Hillsboro.
 Zionsbote, Mennonite, Hillsboro.
 Cooper's International Journal (Eng. & Ger.) (monthly), Labor. K.
 sas City.
 Bethel College Monthly (Eng. & Ger.) (mo.), Coll., Newton.
 Herold, Ind., Newton.
 Herold, Ind., Wichita.

Kentucky—

Anzeiger (daily), Dem., Louisville.
 Anzeiger (Sunday), Dem., Louisville.
 Anzeiger—(see note in catalogue), Dem., Louisville.
 Katholischer Glaubensbote, Cath., Louisville.

Louisiana—

Southern Lutheran (Eng. & Ger.) (mo.), Luth., New Orleans.

Maryland—

Bayerisches Wochenblatt, Ind., Baltimore.

Massachusetts—

Germania, Ind., Boston.
 Herold der Christian Science (mo.), Chr. Sci., Boston.
 Turn-Zeitung (s-mo.), Ind., Boston.
 Biene, Labor, Holyoke.
 Neu England Rundschau, Ind., Holyoke.
 Anzeiger und Post, Ind., Lawrence.

Michigan—

Abend post (every day), Ind., Detroit.
 Herold, Labor, Detroit.
 Stimme der Wahrheit, Cath. & Dem., Detroit.
 Michigan Volksfreund, Dem., Jackson.
 Michigan Volkszeitung, Dem., Manistee.
 Journal, Ind., Saginaw.

Minnesota—

Freie Presse-Herold, Dem., Minneapolis.
 Unser Besucher, Rep., Mountain Lake.
 Amerikanische Turnzeitung, Turnerbund, New Ulm.

man—Continued.

Minnesota—Continued.

Freidenker, Radical, New Ulm.
 Post, Ind. Dem., New Ulm.
 Volksblatt, Rep., New Ulm.
 Nordstern, Dem., St. Cloud.
 Deutsche Farmer (s-mo.), Agric., St. Paul.
 Volkszeitung (daily), Ind., St. Paul.
 Volkszeitung, Ind., St. Paul.
 Wanderer, Cath., St. Paul.
 Hermannus-Sohn (mo.), S. of H., Stillwater.
 National Farmer (s-mo.), Agric., Winona.
 Westlicher Herold, Ind., Winona.

Missouri—

Volksblatt, Rep., Hermann.
 Cape County Post., Rep., Jackson.
 Missouri Volksfreund, Ind. Dem., Jefferson City.
 Presse, Ind., Kansas City.
 Herald (Eng. & Ger.), Ind., St. Genevieve.
 Volksblatt, Ind., St. Joseph.
 Abendschule (fortn'ly), Lit., St. Louis.
 Alma Mater (Eng. & Ger.) (mo.), Coll., St. Louis.
 Amerika (daily), Dem., St. Louis.
 Amerika (Sunday), Dem., St. Louis.
 Amerika (s-wkly), Dem., St. Louis.
 Arbeiter Zeitung, Soc'lst., St. Louis.
 Bote der Neuen Kirche (mo.), N. Jerusalem, St. Louis.
 Central Blatt and Social Justice, Social Topics, St. Louis.
 (Ger. & Eng.) (mo.), Cath., St. Louis.
 Friedensbote, Evan., St. Louis.
 Herold des Blaubens, Cath., St. Louis.
 Keryx. (Eng. & Ger.) (bi-mo.), Coll., St. Louis.
 Mississippi Blätter, Rep., St. Louis.
 Pastoral-Blatt (mo.), Rom. Cath., St. Louis.
 Westliche Post (daily), Rep., St. Louis.
 Wort (mo.), New Tht., St. Louis.
 Central Wesleyan Star, (Eng. & Ger.) (mo.), Coll., Warrenton.

Montana—

Hermanns-Sohn in Montana (mo.), S. of H., Helena.

Nebraska—

Cedar County Wachter, Ind., Hartington.
 Deutsch Amerikanischer Farmer, Agric., Lincoln.
 Freie Presse, Non-part., Lincoln.
 Welt Post, Ind., Lincoln.
 Westliche Rundschau, Dem., Norfolk.
 Tribune (daily), Ind., Omaha.
 Tribune, Ind., Omaha.

New Jersey—

Hausdokter (mo.), Hygienic, Butler.
 Freie Presse, Ind., Carlstadt.
 Camden County Journal, Ind., Camden.
 New Jersey Freie Zeitung (daily), Ind. Rep., Newark.
 New Jersey Freie Zeitung, Ind. Rep., Newark.
 Deutscher Evangelist (s-mo.), Presb., Orange.
 Passaic Revue and Paterson Journal, Ind., Passaic.
 Wochenblatt, Non-part., Passaic.
 New Jersey Staats Journal, Rep., Trenton.

New York—

Herold und Freie Blätter, Rep., Albany.
 Reform (Eng. & Ger.), Ind., Brooklyn.
 Technologist (Ger. & Eng.) (mo.), Scien. & Mech., Brooklyn.
 Aurora und Christliche Woche, Cath., Buffalo.
 Volksfreund (daily), Ind. Dem., Buffalo.
 Volksfreund, Ind. Dem., Buffalo.
 Wochenblatt (s-wkly), Ind., Lockport.
 Abendblatt—for clr. see Staats-Zeitung (daily), Ind., New York.

German—Continued.

New York—Continued.

- American Furrier (Eng., French, Ger. & Russian) (monthly), Ind., New York.
 Amerikanischer Botschafter und Deutscher Volksfreund (mo.), Ind., New York.
 Amerikansche Schweizer-Zeitung (Ger-Swiss), Ind., New York.
 Deutsch Amerika, Ind., New York.
 Deutsch-Amerikanische Apotheker Zeitung (mo.), Pharm., New York.
 Führer, F. & A. M. & I. O. O. F., New York.
 Herold (morn.), Ind., New York.
 Herold (evg.), Ind., New York.
 National Banner (s-mo.), Rep., New York.
 Schwäbisches Wochenblatt, Non-part., New York.
 Sonntags Blatt (Staats-Zeitung), Fam., New York.
 Staats-Zeitung (daily)—circ. includes that of Abendblatt, Ind., New York.
 Staats-Zeitung, Ind., New York.
 Abendpost (daily), Ind., Rochester.
 Abendpost (s-wkly), Ind., Rochester.
 Herold-Journal, Schenectady.
 Staten Island Post und Süd N. Y. Anzeiger, Dem., Staten Island.
 Union, Rep., Syracuse.
 Freie Presse, Rep., Troy.
 Deutsche Zeitung, Ind., Utica.

North Dakota—

- Tribune—see note in catalogue, Rep., Ashley.
 Staats-Anzeiger (s-wkly), Dem., Bismarck.
 Nord Dakota Herold, Cath., Dickinson.
 Nordlicht, Ind., Harvey.
 Herald (Ger. & Eng.), Ind., Hebron.
 Volksfreund, Cath., Richardton.

Ohio—

- Germania (daily), Ind., Akron.
 Mercer County Bote, Dem., Celina.
 Abend-Presse (daily), Ind., Cincinnati.
 Christliche Apologete and Hause und Herd., Meth., Cincinnati.
 Freie Presse (daily), Rep., Cincinnati.
 Freie Presse (Sonntags Blatt) (Sunday), Ind., Cincinnati.
 Sendbote (mo.), Cath., Cincinnati.
 Volksblatt (every day), Ind. Rep., Cincinnati.
 Volksblatt, Ind. Rep., Cincinnati.
 Westliche Blätter, Ind. Rep., Cincinnati.
 Christliche Botschafter, Evan., Cleveland.
 Deutsch Amerikanische Krieger Zeitung (fortnightly), Frat., Cleveland.
 Echo, Soc'ist, Cleveland.
 Evangelical S. S. Quarterly (quarterly), Evan. S. S., Cleveland.
 Evangelische Magazin (monthly), Evan., Cleveland.
 Evangelischer Missionsbote (mo.), Evan., Cleveland.
 Kirchenzeitung, Ref. Ch., Cleveland.
 Missionary Messenger (German edition) (monthly), Evan., Cleveland.
 Sendbote, Bapt., Cleveland.
 Siebenbuergisch Amerikanische Volksblatt, Non-part., Cleveland.
 Stimme der Wahrheit, Cath. & Dem., Cleveland.
 Wächter und Anzeiger (ev. day), Ind. Dem., Cleveland.
 Express, Rep., Columbus.

erman—Continued.

Ohio—Continued.

Putnam Co. Demokrat, Dem., Ottawa.
Miami Post, Dem., Plqua.
Demokrat (s-wkly). Dem., Sandusky.
Demokrat, Dem., Sandusky.
Express, Rep., Toledo.
Presse, Rep., Toledo.
Selbenburgisch Amerikanischer Bote, Rep., Youngstown.

Oklahoma—

Oklahoma Vorwärts, Ind., Bessie.
Oklahoma Staats-Zeitung, Ind., Enid.
Oklahoma Neuigkeiten, Ind: Dem., Perry.

Oregon—

Nachrichten, Ind., Portland.
Armen Seelen Freund (monthly), Cath., St. Benedict.

Pennsylvania—

Deutscher Volksführer, Ind., Altoona.
National Zeitung, Rep., Erie.
Tageblatt (daily), Rep., Erie.
Freie Presse, Ind., Johnstown.
Journal, Ind., Kutztown.
Chronicle and Brewery town Herald (Eng. & Ger.), Local, Philadelphia.
Deutsche Lutheraner, Evan. Luth., Philadelphia.
Gazette Democrat (daily), Rep., Philadelphia.
Nord Amerika, Cath., Philadelphia.
Sonntagsblatt, Ind., Philadelphia.
Tageblatt (daily), Ind., Philadelphia.
Vereins und Logen Zeitung, Soc'ties, Philadelphia.
Beobachter, Cath., Pittsburgh.
Kirchenzeitung (s-mo.), Evan., Pittsburgh.
Sonntagsbote, Neut., Pittsburgh.
Volksblatt und Freiheits Freund (every day), Rep., Pittsburgh.
Jefferson Demokrat, Dem., Pottsville.
Sonntagsgast (mo.), Fam., Reading.
Mennonitische Rundschau. Non-pol., Scottdale.
Journal, Rep., Scranton.
Wächter, Ind., Wilkes-Barre.

South Dakota—

Dakota Freie Presse, Ind., Aberdeen.
Dakota Volkszeitung, Rep., Aberdeen.
Rundschau, Ind., Eureka.
Deutscher Herold, Ind., Sioux Falls.

Texas—

Wochenblatt, Dem., Austin.
Texas Volksbote, Ind., Brenham.
Deutsche Rundschau. Ind., Cuero.
Nord Texas Presse, Ind. Dem., Dallas.
Anzeiger, Ind., Fort Worth.
Wochenblatt, Ind., Fredericksburg.
Deutsches Volksblatt, Ind., Giddings.
Lavaca Co. Nachrichten. Ind., Hallettsville.
Deutsche Zeitung, Dem., La Grange.
Zeitung, Dem., New Braunfels.
Freie Presse fur Texas (daily), Ind., San Antonio.
Freie Presse fur Texas, Ind., San Antonio.
Hermanns-Sohn in Texas (mo.). S. of H., San Antonio.
Zeitung, Ind., Seguin.
Herold, Dem., Taylor.
Post, Ind. Dem., Waco.

Utah—

Beobachter, Ind., Salt Lake City.

Virginia—

Anzeiger (daily), Dem., Richmond.

Washington—

Cherusker (mo.), S. of H., Seattle.
Washington Post, Ind., Spokane.
Wacht am Sunde, Ind., Tacoma.

German—Continued.Wisconsin—

Herold, Dem., Antigo.
 Montags-Blatt, News & Lit., Appleton.
 Samstags-Bote, Ind., Appleton.
 Volksfreund, Ind., Appleton.
 Wecker, Dem., Appleton.
 Herold, Dem., Eau Claire.
 Nordwestlicher Courier, Dem., Fond du Lac.
 Buffalo County Republikaner, Dem., Fountain City.
 Landsmann, Ind., Green Bay.
 Geflugel-Zuchter (mo.), Poult., Hamburg.
 Jefferson County Journal, Dem., Jefferson.
 Volksfreund, Ind., Kenosha.
 Kewaunee County Banner, Ind. Rep., Kawaunee.
 Morgenstern, Ind., La Crosse.
 Nordstern, Ind., La Crosse.
 Volks Post, Ind. Rep., La Crosse.
 Wisconsin Botschafter, Dem., Madison.
 Post, Rep., Manitowoc.
 Wahrheit, Ind., Manitowoc.
 Demokrat, Dem., Marshfield.
 Dodge County Pionier, Ind., Mayville.
 Waldbote, Ind. Dem., Medford.
 Columbia, Cath., Milwaukee.
 Deutsche-Hausfrau (mo.), Fam., Milwaukee.
 Excelsior, Cath., Milwaukee.
 Germania, Ind., Milwaukee.
 Haus und Bauernfreund, Agric. & Fam., Milwaukee.
 Herold (daily), Ind., Milwaukee.
 Landmann, Agric. & Fam., Milwaukee.
 Patriot, Cath., Milwaukee.
 Rundschau, Ind., Milwaukee.
 Seebote, Ind. Dem., Milwaukee.
 Sonntagsbote, Ind. Dem., Milwaukee.
 Sonntagspost, Ind. Rep., Milwaukee.
 Vorwärts, Soc'list Dem., Milwaukee.
 Green County Herold, Ind., Monroe.
 Deutsch-Amerikaner, Ind., Neillsville.
 Post (Eng. & Ger.), Dem., New Glarus.
 Wisconsin Telegraph, Ind., Oshkosh.
 Post (Weekly), Ind., Plymouth.
 Rundschau und Wecker, Rep., Portage.
 Zeitung, Dem., Port Washington.
 Caecilia (German & English) (mo.), Rom. Cath. Ch. Music, St. Francis.
 Pionier Presse, Ind., Sauk City.
 Volksbote-Wochenblatt, Ind. Rep., Shawano.
 Amerika (daily), Rep., Sheboygan.
 National Demokrat (s-wkly), Dem., Sheboygan.
 Zeitung (s-wkly), Rep., Sheboygan.
 Brüder Botschafter, Morav., Watertown.
 Weltbürger, Dem., Watertown.
 Wochenblatt und Pionier, Dem., Wausau.

Greek :California —

Greek Echo, Prog., Los Angeles.
 California, San Francisco.
 Greek Times Ind., San Francisco.
 Prometheus, San Francisco.

Illinois—

Aster, Rep., Chicago.
 Loxias, Dem., Chicago.
 Saloniki, Ind., Chicago.

Massachusetts—

Demonios, Lynn.
 People, Lit., Lynn.

Week—Continued.

New York—

Atlantis (daily), Ind., New York.
 Atlantis (mo.), Lit., New York.
 Epirus, New York.
 Kopanos, Satirical, New York.
 National Herald (daily), New York.
 National Herald (mo.), Lit. & Comm'l., New York.
 Olympia (mo.), Ind., New York.
 Satire, Satirical, New York

Utah—

Evzonos, Salt Lake City.
 Light, Non-part., Salt Lake City.

brew:

New York—

America (Spanish Dialect), Spanish-Jewish interests, New York.
 Halbri, Non-part., New York.
 Hatoren, Non-part., New York.

Pennsylvania—

Volksfreund (Yiddish & Hebrew), Jewish, Pittsburg.

Hollandish:

Illinois—

Onze Toekomist, Rep., Chicago.

Iowa—

Volksvriend, Rep., Orange City.
 Vrije Hollander (s-wkly), Ind. Dem., Orange City.
 Weekblad, Dem., Pella.
 Nieuwsblad, Rep., Sioux Centre.

Michigan—

Hollandsche Farmer (mo.), Agric., Grand Rapids.
 Huisvriend (mo.), Relig., Grand Rapids.
 Ideaal (mo.), Fam., Grand Rapids.
 Standaard (s-wkly), Ind., Grand Rapids.
 Wachter, Chn. Ref. Ch., Grand Rapids.
 Grondwet, Rep., Holland.
 Hope, Ref. Ch. of America, Holland.
 Hollandische Amerikaan (3 times a week), Rep., Kalamazoo.

New Jersey—

Oesten, Non-pol., Paterson.
 Telegraaf, Rep., Paterson.

Wisconsin—

Volksstem, Cath., De Pere.

Hungarian:

Connecticut—

Ebreszto (s-mo.), Wallingford.

Illinois—

Amerikai Figyelo, Non-part., Chicago.
 Otthon, Ind., Chicago.

Indiana—

Magyar Tudosito, Non-part., South Bend.

Michigan—

Dongo (s-mo.), Humor, Detroit.
 Magyar Hirlap, Ind., Detroit.
 Takarekos Haziasszony Ujsagja (mo.), Home Manag't., Detroit.

Missouri—

St. Louis es Videke, Rep., St. Louis.

New Jersey—

Magyar Hernok, New Brunswick.
 Szabad Sajto, Rep., Passaic.
 New Jersey Hirado, Ind., Perth Amboy.
 Fuggetlenseg, Trenton.

New York—

Amerikai Magyar Nepszava (daily), Ind., New York.
 Berko Kepes Ujsazja, Lit. & Comm't, New York.
 Elore (daily), Soc'lst, New York.
 Elore. Soc'lst, New York.
 Jo-Egeszeg (mo.), Hygiene, New York.

Hungarian—Continued.New York—Continued.

Magyar Banyaszlap, Mining & Labor, New York.
 Magyar Muskaslap, Labor, New York.
 Munkas, Socialist Labor Party, New York.

Ohio—

Akroni Hirlap, Non-pol., Akron.
 Szabadsag (daily), Ind. Rep., Cleveland.
 Amerikai Magyar Hirlap, Hungarian Interests, Youngstown.

Pennsylvania—

Hirado, Rep., Johnstown.
 Magyar Hirado, Ind., Pittsburgh.
 Magyar Vilag, Rep., Pittsburgh.

Italian:California—

Capitale, Ind., Sacramento.
 Colonia Svizzera (Swiss-Ital.) (s-wkly), Rep., San Francisco.
 Corriera del Popolo (s-wkly), San Francisco.
 Italia (daily), Ind., San Francisco.
 Sentinella (mo.), Rep., San Francisco.
 Tribuna, Ind., San Francisco.
 Voce del Popolo (daily), Ind., San Francisco.
 Agricoltore Italiano e Italo-Svizzero (mo.), Agric., Stockton.
 Solle, General News, Stockton.

Colorado—

Capitale, Ind., Denver.
 Nazione, Ind., Denver.
 Risveglio (daily), Labor, Denver.
 Roma, Ind., Denver.
 Unione, Ind. & Labor, Pueblo.
 Vindice, Ind., Pueblo.
 Corriere di Trinidad, Ind., Trinidad.

Connecticut—

Luce, Rep., Derby.
 Allabalonetta, Ind., New Haven.
 Corriere del Connecticut, Rep., New Haven.
 Tribuna, Rep., Torrington.
 Progresso del New England, Ind., Waterbury.
 Verita, Rep., Waterbury.

Illinois—

Cittadino di Chicago, Ind., Chicago.
 Idea, Chicago.
 Italia (daily), Ind., Chicago.
 Parola Proletaria, Socialist, Chicago.
 Tribuna Italiana Trans-Atlantica, Ind., Chicago.

Indiana—

United Mine Workers' Journal (Eng. Ital. & Slovak) (semi-mo.)
 Indianapolis.

Kansas—

Lavoratore Italiano, Labor, Pittsburgh.

Louisiana—

Italo-Americano, Ind., New Orleans.
 Voce Coloniale, Ind., New Orleans.

Massachusetts—

Gazetta del Massachusetts, Ind., Boston.
 Notizia (daily), Ind., Boston.
 Sig. Pungolo, Humorous, Boston.
 Eco Coloniale, Ind., Springfield.

Michigan—

Tribuna Italiana d'America, Ind., Detroit.
 Voce del Popolo, Gen'l News, Detroit.
 Minatore Italiano (daily), Ind. & Mining, Laurium.

Missouri—

Lega Italiana, Ind., St. Louis.
 Pensiero, Ind., St. Louis.

Nebraska—

Corriere del Popolo, Ind., Omaha.
 Stampa, Ind., Omaha.

Italian—Continued.

New Jersey—

L'Ora, Rep., Newark.
 Montagna, Ind., Newark.
 Rivista (Eng. & Ital.), Rep., Newark.
 Verita and Mount Carmel Bulletin (Ital. & Eng.), Cath., Newark.
 Messaggero, Ind., Paterson.
 Italo-Americano, Ind., Trenton.

New York—

Capitale, Rep., Albany.
 Italia in Albany, Ind., Albany.
 Messaggero, Rep., Amsterdam.
 Corriere Italiano, Buffalo.
 Cronaca Illustrata, Ind., Mt. Vernon.
 Araldo Italiano (daily), Ind., New York.
 Avvenire, Labor, New York.
 Bolletino della Sera (daily), Rep., New York.
 Carroccio (mo.), Lit. & Pol., New York.
 Cittadino, Ind., New York.
 Colonia, Rep., New York.
 Corriere d'Italia, Rep., New York.
 Corriere Tirolese (semi-wkly), Tyrolean Imigrants, New York.
 Eco d'Italia, Ind., New York.
 Fiaccola, Meth., New York.
 Follia di New York, Rep., New York.
 Giornale Italiano (ev. day), New York.
 La Cardegna, New York.
 Lavora, Labor, New York.
 Progresso Ital-Americano (ev. day), Ind., New York.
 Riforma, New York.
 Telegrafo (ev. day), Rep., New York.
 Domenica, Ind., Rochester.
 Tribuna, Rep., Rochester.
 Corriere di Schenectady, Rep., Schenectady.
 Gazzetta, Ind., Syracuse.
 Indipendenti di Syracuse and Risveglio Coloniale, Ind., Syracuse.
 Luce, Ind., Utica.

Ohio—

Voca Della Verita, Ind., Canton.
 Voce del Popolo Italiano, Ind., Cleveland.
 Messaggero, Steubenville.
 Cittadino Italo Americano, Ind., Youngstown.

Pennsylvania—

New Guide (Eng. & Ital.), Cath., Altoona.
 Gazzetta, Ind., Erie.
 Stella d'Italia, Ind., Greensburg.
 Luce, Hazleton.
 Patriot (Eng. & Ital.), Ind., Indiana.
 Forbice, News & Com't., Philadelphia.
 Italica Gente, Cath., Philadelphia.
 Libera Parola, Philadelphia.
 Mastro Paolo, Rep., Philadelphia.
 Opinione (ev. day), Rep., Philadelphia.
 Sigaretta, Humor., Philadelphia.
 Voce Bella Colonia, Rep., Philadelphia.
 I Nostri Templ, Ind., Pittsburgh.
 Trinacria, Ind., Pittsburgh.
 Minatore, Ind., Scranton.

Rhode Island—

Alba, Ind., Providence.
 Corriere del Rhode Island, Rep., Providence.
 Eco del Rhode Island, Rep., Providence.

Texas—

Tribuna Italiana, Ind., Dallas.
 Aurora, Non-pol., Houston.
 Italo-Americano del Texas (Ital. & Eng.), San Antonio.

Italian—Continued.

Utah—

Gazzetta Italiana, Ind., Salt Lake City.

Washington—

Corriere Italiana, Ind., Spokane.

Japanese:

California—

Japanese Daily News (daily), Ind., Los Angeles.

North American Herald, Hokubei Hochi Shinbun (daily), Ind., Los Angeles.

Sun (daily), Non-part., Los Angeles.

News (daily), Ind. Rep., Sacramento.

Japanese American News (daily), Ind., San Francisco.

New World (ev. day), Ind., San Francisco.

Colorado—

Colorado Times (daily), Ind., Denver.

Nebraska—

Nebraska Times (s-wkly), Scottsbluff.

New York—

Japanese-American Commercial Weekly (Jap. & Eng.), Jap. Com. New York.

Japanese Times (s-wkly), Ind., New York.

Oregon—

Oregon News (daily), Portland.

Utah—

Rocky Mountain Times (3 ti. a wk.), Ind., Salt Lake City.

Utah Nippo (daily), Salt Lake City.

Washington—

Great Northern Daily News (daily), Seattle.

Man-Ji-Ho (s-mo.), Gen. News, Seattle.

North American Times (daily), Ind., Seattle.

Lettish:

Massachusetts—

Amerikas Westnesis (s-mo.), Relig. & Dem., Cambridge.

Lithuanian:

Illinois—

Draugas (daily), Cath., Chicago.

Lietuva (daily), Non-part., Chicago.

Naujlenos (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Wytis (s-mo.), Chicago.

Massachusetts—

Atetis, Non-pol., Boston.

Darbininkas (3 ti. a wk.), Labor, Boston.

Kardas (mo.), Humorous & Satire, Boston.

Keleivis, Ind., Boston.

Sandara, National, Boston.

Amerikos Lietuvis, Non-part., Worcester.

New York—

Garsas, Frat., Brooklyn.

Laisve (s-wkly), Soc'lst., Brooklyn.

Vienbe Lietuvniku, Ind., Brooklyn.

Tevyne, Ind., New York.

Ohio—

Dirva, Ind., Cleveland.

Pennsylvania—

Saule (s-wkly), Non-part., Mahanoy City.

Zvaigzde, Cath., Philadelphia.

Norwegian & Danish:

California—

Bien, Ind., San Francisco.

Illinois—

Evangelists Sendebud, 7th day Advent Mis'n'ry, Brookfield.

Evangelisten, Relig. & Fam., Chicago.

Folke-Vennen, Relig., Chicago.

Kristelige Talsmand, Meth., Chicago.

Revyen, Soc'lst, Chicago.

Scandia, Ind., Chicago.

Norwegian & Danish—Continued.

Illinois—Continued.

Skandinaven (every day), Rep., Chicago.
 Skandinaven (s-wkly), Rep., Chicago.
 Social Demokraten, Socialist, Chicago.
 Verdens Gang, Ind., Chicago.

Iowa—

Dannevirke, Ind., Cedar Falls.
 Ungdom (s-mo;), Lit. & Juv., Cedar Falls.
 Kvinden og Hjemmet (mo.), Fam., Cedar Rapids.
 Posten og Ved Arnen (s-wkly), Fam., Decorah.
 Vagteren, Relig., Harlan.
 Skolen og Hjemmet (s-mo.), Fam., Story City.
 Visergutten, Rep., Story City.

Minnesota—

Vesterhelmen, Direct Legisla'n, Crookston.
 Skandinav, Ind., Duluth.
 Ugeblad, Ind. Rep., Fergus Falls.
 Familien Magasin (mo.), Lit. & Fam., Minneapolis.
 Folkebladet, Luth., Minneapolis.
 Folkets Ven (mo.), Temp. & Fam., Minneapolis.
 Gaa Paa, Soc'lst, Minneapolis.
 Illustreret Familie Journal (mo.), Fam., Minneapolis.
 Lutheraneren, Luth., Minneapolis.
 Lutherske Missionaer, Luth., Minneapolis.
 Posten, Ind., Minneapolis.
 Skandinaviska Good Templaren (Norwegian & Swedish) (mo.), I. O.
 G. T., Minneapolis.
 Sonner af Norge (mo.), Sons of Norway, Minneapolis.
 Tidende (daily), Ind., Minneapolis.
 Tidende, Ind., Minneapolis.
 Ugebladet, Rep., Minneapolis.
 Tidende, Ind. Rep., St. Paul.
 Evangelii Basun, Evan., St. Paul Park.

Montana—

Montana Skandinav (mo.), Helena.

Nebraska—

Danskeren (Danish), Ind., Blair.
 Danske Pioneer (Danish), Ind., Omaha.

New York—

Nordisk Tidende, Brooklyn.
 Nordlyset (Danish), Ind., New York.

North Dakota—

Normanden (s-wkly), Prog., Grand Forks.
 Nordvestern (Eng. & Norw.), Ind. Rep., Minot.

Oregon—

Pacific Skandinaven, Rep., Portland.

South Dakota—

Fremad, Ind., Sioux Falls.

Utah—

Bikuben, Morm., Salt Lake City.

Washington—

Vesten (s-mo.), Bellingham.
 Budstikken (s-mo.), Relig., Seattle.
 Vidnesbyrdet, Meth., Seattle.
 Washington Posten, Ind. Rep., Seattle.
 Skandinav (Nor. Dan. & Eng.), Ind., Spokane.
 Tidende, Rep., Tacoma.

Wisconsin—

Reform, Prohib., Eau Claire.
 Amerika, Rep., Madison.
 Folkets Avis (Danish), Ind., Racine.
 Tidende, Ind. Rep., Superior.

Persian:

New York—

Persian American Courier, Ind., New York.

Polish :Connecticut—

Przewodnik Katolicki, Cath., New Britain.

Delaware—

Kuryer, Wilmington.

Sztandar, Ind., Wilmington.

Illinois—

Bicz Rosy, Humorous, Chicago.

Cepy, Humorous, Chicago.

Dziennik Chicagoski (daily), Ind. Dem., Chicago.

Dziennik Ludowy (daily), Labor, Chicago.

Dziennik Narodowy (dly), Rep., Chicago.

Komoszka, Humor, Chicago.

Narod Polski, Ind., Chicago.

Nowy Swyat, Chicago.

Polonia, Non-part., Chicago.

Telegraf, Dem., Chicago.

Wiel, Polish Affairs, Chicago.

Zgoda (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Zgoda, Ind., Chicago.

Indiana—

Goniec Polski (s-wkly), Ind., South Bend.

Maryland—

Jednosc-Polonia, Polish Ind., Baltimore.

Massachusetts—

Kuryer Bostonski (daily), Ind., Boston.

Pobudka, Non-part, Boston.

Michigan—

Orzel Blaly, Bay City.

Sztandar Polski, Bay City.

Dziennik Polski (daily), Ind., Detroit.

Gazetta Handlowa (monthly), Commere'l, Detroit.

Ognisko Domowe, Cath., Detroit.

Polonia-Rekord, Ind., Detroit.

Rekord Codzienny (daily), Ind., Detroit.

Echo Tygodniowe, Non-pol., Grand Rapids.

Minnesota—

Nowiny Minnesockie, St. Paul.

Wiarius, Ind., Winona.

Missouri—

Polak Amerykan, St. Louis.

Przewodnik Polski, Ind., St. Louis.

Nebraska—

Gwiazda Zachodu, Ind., Omaha.

New Jersey—

Oseviata, Elizabeth.

Glos Narodu, Ind., Jersey City.

Goniec Hudsonski, Ind., Jersey City.

Kronika, Ind., Newark.

Przyjaciel Narodu, Passaic.

New York—

Czas, Ind., Brooklyn.

Dziennik Dla Wszystkich (daily), Rep., Buffalo.

Oswiatowiec (mo.), Rep., Buffalo.

Polak w Ameryce (daily), Ind., Buffalo.

Unista, Ind., Buffalo.

Motyl, Humor, New York.

Przegląd Codzienny (daily), New York.

Robotnik Polski, Socialist, New York.

Telegram Codzienny (ev. day), Ind., New York.

Wolna Polska (daily), Ind., New York.

Gazeta Tygodniowa, Rep., Schenectady.

Słowo Polskie, Ind., Utica.

Ohio—

Gwiazda Zjednoczenia, Cath., Cleveland.

Jutrzenka, Ind., Cleveland.

Narodowiec, Ind., Cleveland.

Polish—Continued.

Ohio—Continued.

Polonia w Ameryce, Rep., Cleveland.
 Wiadomosci Codzienné (daily), Ind., Cleveland.
 Ameryka-Echo (ev. day), Ind., Toledo.
 Ameryka-Echo, Ind., Toledo.
 Kuryer Katolicki, Cath., Toledo.
 Nowy Wiek, Ind., Youngstown.

Pennsylvania—

Gazetta Ludowa, Ind., Philadelphia.
 Gwiazda, Rep., Philadelphia.
 Jednosc, Rep., Philadelphia.
 Kuryer Fidełjski (3 ti. a wk.), Ind., Philadelphia.
 Patryota, Rep., Philadelphia.
 Gornik Polski, Socialist, Pittsburgh.
 Haslo Polskie, Ind., Pittsburgh.
 Sokol Polski, Frat., Pittsburgh.
 Wielkopolanin, Cath., Pittsburgh.
 Gazeta Readingska, Reading.
 Pensylwanski Gornik, Ind., Scranton.
 Straz, Labor, Scranton.
 Tygodnik Gorniczy, Ind., Shenandoah.
 Gornik, Ind., Wilkes-Barre.
 Praca, Ind., Wilkes-Barre.
 Republika, Wilkes-Barre.

Texas—

Nowiny Texaskie, Dem., San Antonio.

Wisconsin—

Kuryer Polski (daily), Rep., Milwaukee.
 Nowiny Polskie (daily), Dem., Milwaukee.
 Gwiazda Polarna, Ind., Stevens Point.
 Rolnik, Ind., Stevens Point.

Portuguese:

California—

Revista Portuguesa (monthly), Gen'l News, Hayward.
 O Nundo, Oakland.
 Uniao Portuguesa, Neut., Oakland.
 Imparcial, Ind., Sacramento.
 Liberdade, Rep., Sacramento.
 Journal de Noticias, Ind., San Francisco.

District of Columbia—

Boletim da Uniao Pan-Americano (mo.). Lit. & Comm'l., Washington.

Massachusetts—

Michaelense, News & Comment, Fall River.
 Novidades, Ind., Fall River.
 Vigilante, Comment, Fall River.
 Alvorada, Non-part., New Bedford.
 Independente, New Bedford.
 Popular, Ind., New Bedford.
 Portugal, Portuguese 'nt'sts, New Bedford.

New York—

Hacienda (mo.). Export, Buffalo.
 Exportador Americana.
 see American Exporter, New York.

Pennsylvania—

Revista Dental Internacional (quarterly), Dental, Pittsburgh.

Roumanian:

Illinois—

Roumania (mo.), Chicago.

New York—

Desteapate Romane, New York.

Ohio—

America (daily), Ind., Cleveland.
 Foala Poporului (tri-weekly), Local, Cleveland.
 Romanul (daily), Ind., Cleveland.

Russian:

Illinois—

Russkaya Sjizn, Ind., Chicago.

Russian—Continued.

New York—

American Furrier (Eng., French, Ger. & Russian) (mo.), Fashion.
New York.
Narodnaya Gazeta, New York.
Rodnaya Rech, Prog., New York.
Russian-American Industrial Journal (Eng., Russian.) (mo.), Foreign Trade, New York.
Russkoye Slovo (ev. day), Non-part., New York.
Russky Golos (daily), Prog. & Prohib., New York.
Svit, Russian Orthodox, New York.

Pennsylvania—

Amerikansky Russky Viestnik—see Slovak edition also. Greek Cath.
Homestead.
Narodna Obrana, Local, Homestead.
Pravda (semi-wkly), Non-part., Olyphant.
Russian Messenger (Russian Slavish), Prog., Pittsburgh.
Russian National News (mo.), Ind., Pittsburgh.

Serbian:

California—

Serbian Herald, Ind., San Francisco.

Illinois—

Balkan-World (Croatian-Serbian), Ind., Chicago.
United Serbian (Serbian-Croatian), Ind., Chicago.

New York—

Serbian Daily (daily), Non-part., New York.
Srobobran, New York.
Srpska Straza, Serbian Affairs, New York.

Pennsylvania—

Amerikanski Srbobran (daily), Dem., Pittsburgh.

Slovak:

Illinois—

Katolicke Slovenski Noviny, Cath., Chicago.
Ludovy Dennik (daily), Chicago.
Nove Casy, Chicago.
Rovnost L'udu, Socialist, Chicago.
Slovensko-Americky Dennik (dly), Chicago.

Indiana—

United Mine Workers' Journal (Eng., Ital. & Slovak) (s-mo.). Indianapolis.

New York—

Dennik (daily), Ind., New York.
Krojan, Ind., New York.
Slovak v Amerike (daily), Ind., New York.
Slovensky Pokrok, Non-part., New York.

Ohio—

Hlas (daily), Cleveland.
Hlas, Ind., Cleveland.
Hove Slovenske. Slovak League, Cleveland.
Obrana (s-monthly), Ind., Cleveland.
Slovenske Noviny, Ind., Youngstown.

Pennsylvania—

Orol, Cath., Barnesboro.
Lansfordcan, Local, Hazleton.
Nedel'a, Cath., Hazleton.
Udalosti Sveta (mo.), Amerikansky Russky-Viestnik—Russian edit:
also, Greek Cath., Homestead.
Sokol Sojedinenija, Gym., Homestead.
Jednota, Cath., Middletown.
Amerikansko Slovenske Noviny, Ind., Pittsburgh.
Narodne Noviny, Non-part., Pittsburgh.
Norodny Dennik (daily), Ind., Pittsburgh.
Slovensky Hlasnik, Luth., Pittsburgh.
Bratstvo, Ind., Wilkes-Barre.

Slovenian:

Illinois—

Cas (mo.), Chicago.
Glasilo K. S. K. Jednota, Frat., Chicago.

Slovenian—Continued.

Illinois—Continued.

Glas Svobode (s-wkly.), Ind., Chicago.

Proletarec, Soc'lst, Chicago.

Prosveta (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Amerikanski Slovenec (s-wkly.), Cath., Joliet.

Michigan—

Slovenski Novice, Ind., Calumet.

New York—

Ave Maria (s-mo.), Cath., New York.

Glas Naroda (daily), Ind., New York.

Ohio—

Clevelandska Amerika (3 ti. a wk.), Ind., Cleveland.

Enakopramost (daily), Rep. & Labor, Cleveland.

Sloga, Cleveland.

Wisconsin—

Slovenija, Ind., Milwaukee.

Slovenska Druzina (monthly), Slav. Rep., Milwaukee.

Spanish:

Arizona—

Internacional, Miami.

Justicia, en'l News, Phoenix.

Tucsonense (s-wkly.), Ind., Tucson.

Independiente, Dem., Yuma.

California—

Heraldo de Mexico (s-wkly.), Ind., Los Angeles.

Prensa, Ind., Los Angeles.

Hispano Americano, Ind., San Diego.

Hispano America (s-wkly.), San Francisco.

Colorado—

Aurora, Antonito.

Siser Republics (Eng. & Span.) (mo.), Export, Denver.

Heraldo del Valle, Rep., San Luis.

Anunciador, Dem., Trinidad.

Progreso (Span. & Eng.), Rep., Trinidad.

District of Columbia—

Boletin de la Union Panamericana (mo.), Lit. & Com'l, Washington.

Florida—

Florida, Ind., Key West.

Journal (Eng. & Span.) (daily).

Sunday edition, Dem., Key West.

Heraldo Dominical, Tampa.

Louisiana—

Mercurio (mo.), Export, New Orleans.

Mundo Azucarero (mo.), Sugar Int'sts, New Orleans.

Massachusetts—

Boot and Shoe Recorder (mo.), Shoe Trade.

(Spanish edition), (Export), Boston.

Reporter Latino-Americano (bi-mo.), Shoes & Leather, Boston.

Missouri—

Cosmopolita, Ind., Kansas City.

New Mexico—

Bandera Americana, Rep., Albuquerque.

Hispano Americana, Rep., Belen.

Union del Pueblo, Dem., Clayton.

Granja y El Hogar (s-mo.), Agric., East Las Vegas.

Voz del Pueblo, Dem., East Las Vegas.

Estrella, Rep., Las Cruces.

Independiente, Rep., Las Vegas.

Eco del Norte, Rep., Mora.

Independiente, Ind., Mountaineer.

Cometa (Span. & Eng.), Rep., Raton.

Nuevo Mexicano, Ind., Santa Fe.

Sun, Rep., Santa Rosa.

Voz Publica (Span. & Eng.), Santa Rosa.

Defensor del Pueblo, Dem., Socorro.

Heraldo, Rep., Socorro.

Revista de Taos, Rep., Taos.

Spanish—Continued.

New Mexico—Continued.

Taos Valley News and El Crapuscula (Eng. & Span.), Dem., Taos
 Nuevo Estado, Rep., Tierra Amarilla.
 Combate, Rep., Wagon Mound.
 Sentinel (Span. & Eng.), Wagon Mound.

New York—

Hacienda (mo.), Export, Buffalo.
 Inter-American (mo.), see note in catalogue, Pan-Amer., Garden City
 Revista del Mundo (quarterly), Latin-Amer. Affairs, Garden City America (mo.), Export, New York.
 America Futura (mo.), Lit. & Fam., New York.
 Americas, Las (mo.), Pan-Amer. Affairs, New York.
 Automovil Americano (quarterly), Auto. & Export, New York.
 Cine-Mundial (mo.), Moving Pictures, Span. American, New York
 Comercio (mo.), Export, New York.
 Empresa (mo.), Export & Financial, New York.
 Exportador American (see American Exporter), New York.
 Geyer's Revista Internacional Papellus, Imprenta y Accesorios para Oficinas (Geyer's International Review of Stationery, Printing - Office Supplies) (quarterly), Stationery, New York.
 Ingeniero y Contratista (mo.), Eng. & Contract'g, New York.
 Importers Guide (see note, in catalogue) (bi-mo.), Export, New York Norte Americano (mo.), Pan-Amer. Affairs, New York.
 Novedades, Ind., New York.
 Pictorial Review (5
 Prensa (daily), Ind
 Revista Americana
 Pharm. & Hospital
 Revista Internacional
 Revista Universal (1
 Vogue (mo.), Fashion

Pennsylvania—

America Comercial
 Shoe & Leather Factory
 Philadelphia.
 Revista Dental Interna

Texas—

El Paso del Norte (1
 Revista Catolica, Ca
 Revista Ilustrada, 1
 Revista Ilustrada (1
 Eco de Falfurrias (1
 Democrata Fronter
 Evolucion (daily), 1
 Obrero, Labor, Lare
 Fronterizo, Rio Gra
 Voz del Pueblo, Den
 Adelante (mo.), Agri
 Epoca, Comments &
 Imparcial de Texas
 La Defensa, Mex. In
 Prensa (ev. day), 1
 Prensa, Ind., San A
 Presente (ev. day), 1
 Revista Mexicana, 1
 Libertad, Rep., San

Swedish:

California—

California Vecoblad
 Vestkusten, Lib., Sa
 Missionstidningen, (

Colorado—

Svensk-Amerikanska

Connecticut—

Osterns Weckoblad,

Swedish—Continued.

Illinois—

Tidens Tecken och Slons, 7th Day.
 Vaktare, Advts., Brookfield.
 Bladet, Relig., Chicago.
 Epworth Kockan (s-mo.), Meth., Chicago.
 Finska Missions Posten (Swed. & Finn) (mo.), Bapt., Chicago.
 Forbundets Veckotidning, Evan., Chicago.
 Missions-Vannen, Evan., Chicago.
 Sandebudet, Meth., Chicago.
 Sondagsskolan Och Hemmet, Bapt. S. S., Chicago.
 Svenska Amerikanaren, Ind., Chicago.
 Svenska Kuriren, Rep., Chicago.
 Svenska Socialisten, Socialist, Chicago.
 Svenska Standaret, Bapt., Chicago.
 Svenska Tribunen-Nyheter, Ind. Rep., Chicago.
 Svenska-Amerikanska Familj Journalen (monthly), Lit. & Fam., Evanston.
 Svenska Posten, Rep., Rockford.
 Augustana, Luth., Rock Island.
 Ungdommens Sandebud (mo.), Luth.-Evan., Juv., Rock Island.
 Ungdomsvannen (mo.), Lit., Rock Island.

Iowa—

Qvinnan Och Hemmet (mo.), see Kvinden og Hjemmet, Cedar Rapids.
 Iowa-Posten, Ind., Des Moines.
 Svenska Monitoren, Rep., Sioux City.

Kansas—

Kansas Missions-Tidnings (mo.), Missions, Lindsborg.
 Posten, Luth., Lindsborg.

Massachusetts—

Nya Sverige (mo.), Temp., Worcester.
 Svea, Ind., Worcester.

Michigan—

Posten, Rep., Calumet.
 Medborgaren, Rep., Escanaba.
 Superior Posten, Rep., Ishpeming.

Minnesota—

Posten, Rep., Duluth.
 Svensk-Finska Sandebudet (mo.), Luth., Duluth.
 Forskaren (Mo.), Agnostic, Minneapolis.
 Missionstidningen (s-mo.), Missions, Minneapolis.
 Nordiska Hem (mo.), Lit. & Fam., Minneapolis.
 Nya Idun (mo.), Relig. & Lit., Minneapolis.
 Skandinaviska Good Templaren (Norw. & Swed.) (mo.), I .O. G. T., Minneapolis.
 Skordemannen (s-mo.), Agric.; Minneapolis.
 Svenska Amerkanska Posten, Ind., Minneapolis.
 Svenska Folkets Tidning, Ind., Minneapolis.
 Svensk Familj Journal (mo.), Fam., Minneapolis.
 Veckobladet, Swed. News, Minneapolis.
 Svenska Roman-Bladet, Fam., Red Wing.
 Minnesota Stats Tidning, Rep., St. Paul.
 Evangelii Trumpet (s-mo.), St. Paul Park.

Nebraska—

Posten, Agric. & Gen'l. News, Omaha.

New York—

Finska Amerikanaren, Lib., Brooklyn.
 Skandia, Rep., Jamestown.
 Vart Land (Swed. & Eng.), Rep., Jamestown.
 Arbetaren, Labor, New York.
 Nordstjernen (s-wkly.), Ind., New York.

Oregon—

Oregon Posten, Non-part., Portland.

Pennsylvania—

Svenska Veckobladet, Ind. Rep., McKeesport.

Texas—

Texas Posten, Lib., Austin.

Swedish—Continued.Utah—

Utah Posten, Mormon, Salt Lake City.

Washington—

Svenska Pacific Tribunen, Ind., Seattle.

Svenska Nordvastern, Ind., Spokane.

Puget Sound Posten, Rep., Tacoma.

Sions-Bladet (mo.), Luth, Tacoma.

Wisconsin—

Svenska Amerikanska Tribunen, Ind. Rep.: Superior.

Ukrainian (Ruthenian):New Jersey—

Svoboda (3 tl. a wk.), Dem., Jersey City.

Haydamaka, Labor, Trenton.

New York—

Iskra (semi-monthly), Humor, New York.

Ohio—

Robitnyk (daily), Soc'lst, Cleveland.

Pennsylvania—

Prosvita, Ind. & Greek Cath., McKeesport.

New Life (s-mo.), Non-pol., Olyphant.

America (daily), Ukrai Interests, Philadelphia.

Sojuz, Presb., Pittsburgh.

Narodna Wola (3 tl. a wk.), Ind., Scranton.

Welsh:New York—

Cyfaill (Welsh & Eng.) (mo.), Calvinistic Meth., Utica.

Drych, Ind. Rep., Utica.

Yiddish (see also Hebrew):Illinois—

Jewish Call (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Jewish Courier (daily), Ind., Chicago.

Jewish Press (daily), Ind. Rep., Chicago.

Jewish Progress, Ind., Chicago.

Jewish Record, Ind., Chicago.

Jewish Times, Ind., Chicago.

World (daily), Labor, Chicago.

Massachusetts—

Jewish American, Ind., Boston.

New Jersey—

Jersey Voice, Bayonne.

New York—

Brooklyn-Brownsville Post, Ind., Brooklyn.

Jewish Progress, Ind., Brooklyn.

National News-dealer and Stationer (mo.) (Eng. & Yiddish), News-dealers & Stat's., Long Island City.

Amerikaner, Jewish Lit., New York.

Big Stick, Humor, New York.

Butchers' Journal and Poultry Magazine, Butchers, New York.

The Day (daily), Ind., New York.

Fortsschritt, Labor, New York.

Freie Arbeiter Stimme, Non-pol., New York.

Grocer's Guide and Modern Businessman (Yiddish & Eng.), Grocer's, New York.

Jewish Business Record, Com'l., New York.

Jewish Daily Forward (daily), Labor, New York.

Jewish Daily News (daily), Ind., New York.

Jewish Farmer (mo.), Agric., New York.

Jewish Gazette, Ind., New York.

Jewish Morning Journal (daily), Ind., New York.

Jewish Nation—see Yiddish Folk, New York.

Ladies' Garment Worker (Eng. & Yiddish) (monthly), Labor, New York.

New Post, Labor, New York.

Volksadvocat, Ind., New York.

Vorwärts—see Jewish Daily Forward warheit (every day), Ind., New York.

Yiddish (see also Hebrew)—Continued.

New York—Continued.

Waste Material Press and Metal Trade Journal, Junk & Metals, New York.

Yiddshe Folk (s-wkly), Zionist, New York.

Zukunft (mo.), Lit. & Soc'lst, New York.

Ohio—

Jewish World (daily), Ind., Cleveland.

Pennsylvania—

Jewish Morning Journal (daily), Rep., Philadelphia.

Jewish World (every day), Rep., Philadelphia.

Volksfreund (Yiddish & Hebrew), Jewish, Pittsburgh.

Wisconsin—

Wochenblat, Jewish Interests, Milwaukee.

Tabulation of foreign-language newspapers of the United States.

[Compiled by Clyde P. Steen, president National Association City Editors.]

	State.	Num-ber.		State.	Num-ber.
Albanian, 6.....	Massachusetts.....	3	German, 330.....	Maryland.....	1
	New York.....	3		Michigan.....	6
Arabic, 10.....	Massachusetts.....	2		Minnesota.....	14
	New York.....	8		Missouri.....	22
Armenian, 8.....	California.....	3		Montana.....	1
	Illinois.....	1		Nebraska.....	7
	Massachusetts.....	3		New Jersey.....	9
	New York.....	1		New York.....	33
Belgian Flemish, 3.....	Illinois.....	1		North Dakota.....	6
	Michigan.....	2		Ohio.....	44
Bohemian, 60.....	Illinois.....	20		Oklahoma.....	3
	Iowa.....	2		Oregon.....	2
	Maryland.....	1		Pennsylvania.....	21
	Missouri.....	3		South Dakota.....	4
	Nebraska.....	11		Texas.....	16
	New York.....	8		Utah.....	1
	Ohio.....	3		Virginia.....	1
	Pennsylvania.....	1		Washington.....	3
	Texas.....	8		Wisconsin.....	51
	Wisconsin.....	3	Greek, 19.....	California.....	4
Bulgarian, 1.....	Illinois.....	1		Illinois.....	3
Chinese, 7.....	California.....	4		Massachusetts.....	2
	New York.....	2		New York.....	8
Croatian, 10.....	California.....	2		Utah.....	2
	Illinois.....	2	Hebrew, 4.....	New York.....	3
	Michigan.....	1		Pennsylvania.....	1
	Minnesota.....	1	Hollandish, 16.....	Illinois.....	1
	New York.....	3		Iowa.....	4
	Pennsylvania.....	1		Michigan.....	8
Esperanto, etc., 2.....	Massachusetts.....	1		New Jersey.....	2
	Ohio.....	1		Wisconsin.....	1
Finnish, 21.....	Illinois.....	1	Hungarian, 27.....	Connecticut.....	1
	Massachusetts.....	3		Illinois.....	2
	Michigan.....	5		Indiana.....	1
	Minnesota.....	4		Michigan.....	4
	New York.....	2		Missouri.....	1
	Oregon.....	3		New Jersey.....	4
	Wisconsin.....	3		New York.....	8
French, 42.....	California.....	4		Ohio.....	3
	District of Colum- bia.....	1	Irish, 104.....	Pennsylvania.....	3
	Illinois.....	1		California.....	9
	Louisiana.....	6		Colorado.....	7
	Maine.....	3		Connecticut.....	6
	Massachusetts.....	11		Illinois.....	5
	Michigan.....	1		Indiana.....	2
	Minnesota.....	2		Kansas.....	1
	New Hampshire.....	4		Louisiana.....	2
	New York.....	7		Massachusetts.....	4
	Rhode Island.....	3		Michigan.....	3
German, 330.....	Arkansas.....	1		Missouri.....	2
	California.....	6		Nebraska.....	2
	Colorado.....	1		New Jersey.....	6
	Connecticut.....	2		New York.....	29
	Illinois.....	40		Ohio.....	4
	Iowa.....	19		Pennsylvania.....	15
	Kansas.....	6		Rhode Island.....	3
	Kentucky.....	4		Texas.....	3
	Louisiana.....	1		Utah.....	1
				Washington.....	1

Tabulation of foreign-language newspapers of the United States—Continued

	State.	Num-ber.		State.
Japanese, 17.....	California.....	6	Serbian, 7.....	Illinois.....
	Colorado.....	1		New York.....
	Nebraska.....	1		Pennsylvania.....
	New York.....	3	Slovak, 28.....	Illinois.....
	Oregon.....	1		Indiana.....
	Utah.....	2		New York.....
	Washington.....	3		Ohio.....
Lettish, 1.....	Massachusetts.....	1		Pennsylvania.....
Lithuanian, 17.....	Illinois.....	4	Slovenia, 14.....	Illinois.....
	Massachusetts.....	6		Michigan.....
	New York.....	4		New York.....
	Ohio.....	1		Ohio.....
Norwegian & Danish, 56..	Pennsylvania.....	2	Spanish, 102.....	Wisconsin.....
	California.....	1		Arizona.....
	Illinois.....	10		California.....
	Iowa.....	7		Colorado.....
	Minnesota.....	18		District of Columbia.....
	Montana.....	1		Florida.....
	Nebraska.....	2		Louisiana.....
	New York.....	2		Massachusetts.....
	North Dakota.....	2		Missouri.....
	Oregon.....	1		New Mexico.....
	South Dakota.....	1		New York.....
	Utah.....	1		Pennsylvania.....
	Washington.....	6		Texas.....
	Wisconsin.....	4	Swedish, 67.....	California.....
Persian, 1.....	New York.....	1		Colorado.....
Polish, 81.....	Connecticut.....	1		Connecticut.....
	Delaware.....	2		Illinois.....
	Illinois.....	13		Iowa.....
	Indiana.....	1		Kansas.....
	Maryland.....	1		Massachusetts.....
	Massachusetts.....	2		Michigan.....
	Michigan.....	8		Minnesota.....
	Minnesota.....	2		Nebraska.....
	Missouri.....	2		New York.....
	Nebraska.....	1		Oregon.....
	New Jersey.....	5		Pennsylvania.....
	New York.....	13		Texas.....
	Ohio.....	9		Utah.....
Portugese, 18.....	Pennsylvania.....	16	Ukrainian (Ruthenian), 9.	Washington.....
	Texas.....	1		Wisconsin.....
	Wisconsin.....	4		New Jersey.....
	California.....	6		New York.....
	District of Columbia.....	1		Ohio.....
Roumanian, 5.....	Massachusetts.....	7	Welsh, 2.....	Pennsylvania.....
	New York.....	3		New York.....
	Pennsylvania.....	1	Yiddish, 44.....	Illinois.....
	Illinois.....	1		Massachusetts.....
Russian, 14.....	New York.....	1		New Jersey.....
	Ohio.....	3		New York.....
	Illinois.....	1		Ohio.....
Serbian, 7.....	New York.....	8		Pennsylvania.....
	Pennsylvania.....	5		Wisconsin.....
	California.....	1

(Following is the order read by Senator Sterling on page 245:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.
Washington, January 30, 1918

Memorandum No. 21:

1. The Chief of Staff directs that all officers, employees, or persons in the Military Intelligence Division be informed that the information in their possession is confidential and can not be released to Senators, Congressmen, Congressional Committees, or to others in official or private life in Washington or elsewhere without the approval of the Secretary of War.
2. All requests received for such information in Washington, where it is compatible with the public interest that the request be complied with, will immediately be brought to the attention of the office of the Director, Military Intelligence Division, properly prepared in the usual staff memorandum for transmission to the Office of the Chief of Staff.

3. With requests for information made at places other than in Washington the proper action to be taken will consist of forwarding the request to the office of the Director, Military Intelligence Division, Washington, in the usual letter form.

By order of Colonel Dunn.

A. G. CAMPBELL,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
Executive Assistant.

(At this point the committee proceeded to other business, at the conclusion of which it adjourned, the hearings on the subjects of German propaganda and of the brewers' and the liquor dealers' activities being thereupon closed. The same subcommittee later proceeded, under Senate resolution 439, to investigate lawless propaganda in the United States, especially Bolshevik propaganda, these latter hearings being published in a separate volume entitled "Bolshevik Propaganda.")

LIST OF WITNESSES.

	Page.
Moore, James	38-52
Wiegenspan, Christian W.....	54-81
Box, Hugh F.....	82-126, 133-326
Gunstein, A. J.....	127-131
Hardiner, John	327-347
McDermott, John A.....	401-424
Hammerling, Louis N.....	465-618
Popovich, Dushan.....	621-625
Labryel, Arthur	625-636
Gruden, Harry James.....	636-639
Gotti, Frank.....	639-648
Monta, Alexander.....	648-732
Grisbane, Arthur	732-759
Wielaski, A. Bruce.....	1387-1546, 1548-1594, 1597-1605, 2193-2256
Cart, Albert Bushnell.....	1620-1638
Stowell, Ellery C.....	1638-1641, 2175-2191, 2478-2484
Wambaugh, Col. Eugene.....	1641-1643
Longes, Col. Ralph W. E.....	1643-1644
McGee, Charles A.....	1644
Smith, Hoke, Senator from Georgia.....	1648-1651
Parthe, Louis	1657-1664
Wester, Capt. George B.....	1664-1813, 1916-1926, 2154-2166, 2433-2436
Kirkland, Weymouth	1814-1816
Levy, Aaron J.....	1822-1834
Intermyer, Samuel.....	1835-1910
Becker, Alfred L.....	1941-1990,
	1992-2105, 2328-2385, 2388-2406, 2411-2418, 2436-2462
Means, Gaston B.....	2111-2153
Humes, Maj. Edwin Lowry.....	2166-2174
Leehn, Maj. Roy D.....	2257-2262
Wach, Edmund von.....	2262-2328
Moore, Joseph A.....	2418-2433
Forse, Perley.....	2462-2470
Smith, Austin J.....	2485-2494
Arnold, J. A.....	2494-2497, 2524-2598, 2608-2614
Thomas, Charles S., Senator from Colorado.....	2499-2501
Wquires, Grant	2512-2521
Dickinson, J. J.....	2615-2661
Kennedy, Jacob M.....	2661-2668
Wunney, Thomas J.....	2670-2690
Stevenson, Archibald E.....	2690-2720, 2729-2744, 2751-2785
Bowen, William A.....	2744-2749
Damon, Lindsay T.....	2787-2795
Kinnicutt, Francis H.....	2807-2823
Steiner, Lajos	2823-2839
Steen, Clyde B.....	2847-2856
Benet, Christie.....	2863-2866

INDEX.

A.

	Page.
Abbott, Leonard D., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2753
Achells, Fritz, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2775
Adamson eight-hour law, testimony of Mr. Arnold	2549-2550, 2592, 2593, 2598, 2613
Addams, Jane, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2782
Adoue, B., president, Texas Brewers' Association:
letter to Mr. Adoue	1312 letters from Mr. Adoue to—
Clark & Courts	1312
Fox, Hugh F	1308
Hamilton, H	1310
letters to Mr. Adoue from—
Ruh, Oscar J	1310-1311
Wahrmund, Otto	1303-1304
Adriance Machine Works, letter from H. Bruhn	1333
Advertiser, Montgomery, see Montgomery Advertiser.
Advertiser Company, testimony of James Moore	39, 41
Advertising, see Liquor advertising—Steamship advertising.
Agricultural and Commercial Press Service, testimony of Mr. Arnold	2530-2611
Agricultural Labor Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies, testimony of Capt. Lester	1698-1699
Agricultural Mechanical Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1601
Aked, Charles, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1542
Albert, Dr. Heinrich:
letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Dr. Albert	1914 letters from Dr. Albert to—
Konta, Alexander	681-682
Papen, Capt. Franz von	1928-1930
Pirnitzer, Julius	2876, 2876-2878
letters to Dr. Albert from—
Konta, Alexander	666, 671-672, 677, 680, 694
Pirnitzer, Julius	2876
Viereck, George Sylvester	1926
testimony of Mr. Becker	1986-1988, 2005-2006, 2027
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1389, 1390, 1394, 1398, 1401, 1402, 1406, 1409, 1421, 1424, 1434-1436, 1443, 1445- 1446, 1462, 1471-1472, 1475, 1478, 1495, 1502-1503, 1531, 1541, 1575-1576, 1577, 1595-1596, 2196-2239
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	547-548, 550-551, 553
testimony of Prof. Hart	1628, 1636-1637
testimony of Maj. Humes	2166-2168, 2174
testimony of Mr. Konta	656-657, 672, 676-680, 696-698, 700-701
testimony of Capt. Lester	1665, 1677, 1680, 1686, 1700
testimony of Mr. von Mach	2277-2278, 2280-2283, 2316
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2695
testimony of Mr. Stowell	2176, 2187
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1842, 1843, 1848-1854, 1855-1859, 1860-1861, 1864-1867, 1869-1877, 1879, 1882, 1883-1884, 1889-1890, 1901-1904
Alexander, Herman, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2699

Allen Women's Relief Bureau, testimony of Capt. Lester	72
Allen, Charles H.:
letter to Mr. Allen from L. C. Nice letters from Mr. Allen to—
Nice, L. C.
Schmidt, Edward A.	4
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 1, 7, 8, 13	38, 47
Allen, Elizabeth Weston, affidavit
Allen & Baker, testimony of Prof. Hart
Allen Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	17
Allenbeck, J., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits
Alvensleben, Alvo von, testimony of Mr. Means Ambrose, C. B.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	219
testimony of Mr. Means	219
Amend, William J., testimony of Mr. Stevenson
American Art Works, testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits
American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers:
testimony of Mr. Fox
testimony of Mr. Gabryel	625-626, 631-633
testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits	472, 484, 493-494, 498, 501-502, 532-533
testimony of Mr. McDermott testimony of Mr. Popovich
testimony of Mr. Zotti	639-641
see also Hammerling, Louis N., president— also American Leader.
American Book Co., testimony of Prof. Hart
American Bottle Co., see Jack, M. W., president.
American Brewing Association:
letters to American Brewing Association from—
Bush, E. T.	1333
Fox, Hugh F.	1377
Lieber, Albert	1391
see also Prince, H.
American Continental League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
American Correspondent Film Corporation:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	143
testimony of Capt. Lester
American Embargo Conference:
statement of Senator Hitchcock from Congressional Record
statement of Senator Hoke Smith	1048
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1395, 1403, 1484-1502, 1508-1513
American Friends Service Committee, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
American Hotel Protective Association, testimony of Mr. Fox
American-Hungarian Loyalty League, testimony of Mr. Konta, and exhibits	650, 652-654, 704, 711-713, 720-723
American Leader:
testimony of Mr. Fox
testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits	477-478, 481-482, 485-488, 496-497, 502-531
American League for National Unity, see Mitchell, Roscoe C., secretary.
American League to Limit Armaments, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2706
American Liberty Defense League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
American Neutral Conference Committee, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
American Press Association:
report on, from files of United States Brewers' Association	790
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1302
testimony of Mr. Bowen
testimony of Mr. Brisbane	748
testimony of Capt. Lester
American Protective League, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	221
American Rolling Mill Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	184
American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	270
American Tobacco Co., testimony of Mr. Hammerling

	Page.
American Truth Society, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1411, 1424, 1541-1543
American Union Against Militarism, testimony of Mr. Stevenson..	2706-2707, 2714
American Weekly, see Fatherland.
Americanization campaigns, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2778-2780
Amerika Institut, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1982
Ansinnck, G., & Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1944-1945, 1951, 1961, 1963, 1988, 1993, 2101
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2156
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2464
Anarchism:
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2752-2754
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2680-2681, 2684, 2687, 2689-2690
Anderson, George W., telegram to Senator Overman.....	1655
Andreae, Percy, president, National Association of Commerce and Labor:
address, New Orleans, Nov. 17, 1915.....	1199-1202 letters, etc., from Mr. Andreae to —
Autrey, R. L.....	958
Bruhn, H.....	1328-1329
Cetti, Zane.....	1332
Colquitt, R. M.....	957-958, 991
Fox, Hugh F.....	766, 767-768, 769-770, 771, 776, 927, 931, 950-951, 953, 1044, 1103, 1120
Gardiner, John.....	920, 921, 996, 1034, 1035, 1037, 1040, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048
Hessberg, M. J.....	1036
Hexamer, C. J.....	896-897, 899, 900, 901, 902, 904, 905, 907
Kander, F. V.....	1041
Keller, Joseph.....	839, 840, 841, 843, 844, 845, 847, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 855, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 869, 871, 874, 876, 876-877, 877, 878, 883, 891, 894
Mann, Conrad.....	1040
Moersch, Julius.....	910, 911
Ruppert, Jacob, jr.....	929, 1127
Schmidt, Edward A.....	771-772, 930-931, 943, 944, 945-946, 947, 1037-1038, 1038, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1048, 1049, 1129-1130
Thuenen, Henry.....	860, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 920, 921, 922, 923, 925, 997, 1001
Wirmel, Charles H.....	965
Zollman, F. W.....	1278-1279
letters, etc., to Mr. Andreae from—
American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.....	618
Clauss, E. S.....	1256
Dempsey, George C.....	1128-1129
Fox, Hugh F.....	761, 762-763, 763, 764, 765-766, 766, 767, 768, 770, 771, 773, 774, 777, 815, 926, 927, 948, 948-949, 952, 1031- 1032, 1033, 1043-1044, 1044, 1056, 1099, 1104, 1120, 1132, 1142, 1277
Fuller, E. R.....	1048-1049
Gardiner, John.....	919, 921, 995-996, 1034, 1035, 1036-1037, 1040-1041, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048
Hammerling, Louis N.....	475-476, 617-618
Hessberg, M. J.....	1036
Hexamer, C. J.....	897, 900, 901, 902, 903, 905, 906, 907, 908
Kander, F. V.....	1038-1039
Keller, Joseph.....	839, 840, 840-841, 841, 842, 842-843, 843, 843-844, 844, 844-845, 846, 847, 847-848, 848, 848-849, 849, 849-850, 850, 851, 852, 852- 853, 854, 855, 856, 856-857, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 864- 865, 865, 866, 866-867, 867, 869, 869-870, 870, 871, 872, 874-875, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 879-880, 880, 880-881, 881, 882, 883, 883-884, 884, 885, 892, 894, 894-895, 895
Moersch, Julius.....	909, 910, 911
Ruppert, Jacob, jr.....	928-929
Schmidt, Edward A.....	772-773, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 1042, 1043, 1049, 1130

Andreae, Percy—Continued.

- letters, etc., to Mr. Andreae from—
 Thuenen, Henry----- 911-912
 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 920-921, 922-923
 925, 994, 1000, 1001, 1002-1003, 1004-1005, 1006 memoranda, etc., from Mr. Andreae's files----- 777-778, 874-875
 868, 870, 875, 878, 879, 881, 885-890, 893, 896, 897-898, 899-900
 903-904, 906-907, 941-942, 986, 997-999, 1003-1004, 1006-1007 report on National Association of Commerce and Labor----- report to United States Brewers' Association, 1915----- 107 1182-1188
 speech before National Association of Commerce and Labor----- 372-376
 speech before United States Brewers' Association-----
 testimony of Mr. Feigenspan-----
 testimony of Mr. Fox----- 89-90
 testimony of Mr. Gardiner----- 329, 330, 332-333
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits----- 472-473
 484-488, 492-494, 496, 498-500
 testimony of Mr. McDermott----- 48-49
Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, testimony of Mr. Arnold... 2550-2551 see also Busch, Adolphus, president—Busch, August A., president—Clauss, E. S., 3d vice president.
Anti-Saloon League, report of convention, July 6-9, 1915----- 87-88
Appam, steamship, testimony of Mr. Stowell----- 2190-2191
Apperson Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits----- 18-19
Archibald, James, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 140
Arichiello, Giuseppe, testimony of Mr. Becker----- 2346, 2352
Armaments, American League to Limit, see American League to Limit Armaments.
Arms, proposed embargo on shipment, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 148-149
Arnold, John A.:
 testimony----- 2494-2497, 2524-2528, 2538-2539
 testimony of Mr. Bowen----- 2744-2745, 2748-2749
Asher Cooperage Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits----- 16-17
Atlantic, steamship, testimony of Mr. Untermeyer----- 1873-1877
Atrocities in Belgium, testimony of Mr. Squires----- 2517
Auburn Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits----- 22-23
Austin, William H., secretary, Wisconsin Brewers' Association, letter to Hugh F. Fox-----
Austria-Hungary, financial condition, article by Julius West----- Austrians in United States, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits... 146-147
 1548-1563, 2246-2248
Austro-Hungarian loans:
 advertisements----- letter of Erich Zwiedinek to Julius Pirnitzer----- 287-288 letters of Julius Pirnitzer to—
 Dumba, Constantin Theodor----- 287-288
 Kinnicutt, F. H.----- 287-288
 testimony of Mr. Becker----- 2317
 testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt-----
Autrey, R. L., Houston Ice & Brewing Co.: letters, etc., from Mr. Autrey to—
 Clauss, E. S.----- 96-97
 Gardiner, John----- 96-97
 Gibson, Lewis H.----- 96-97
 Morgan, S. T.-----
 Wirmel, Charles H.----- 961, 974, 976-977, 980, 989-990, 994-995 letters, etc., to Mr. Autrey from—
 Andreae, Percy----- 1310-1311
 Fox, Hugh F.-----
 Gibson, Lewis H.----- 953-954, 954-955, 961, 962-963
 Wirmel, Charles H.-----
 testimony of Mr. Arnold----- 2558, 2562, 2568-2569

B.

	Page.
babies' Milk Committee, see Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments.
Bacon, George Vaux, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1599
Bade, William F., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2782
Baff murder case, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2346,
	2354-2366, 2441-2442, 2444-2445
Bagley, James J., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2782
Baker, Newton D., Secretary of War, letter to Senator Overman....	2856-2857
Baker Electric Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	243
Balch, Emily Greene, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2707, 2713, 2714, 2782
Baldwin, Roger N.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2254, 2255
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2706-2707, 2709, 2732, 2782
Bales, W. P., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2753
Ballantine, P., & Sons, testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2.....	39
see also Brudley, Charles, vice president.
Ballin, Albert, testimony of Mr. Untermyer.....	1899, 1900-1901
Banco Aleman Transatlantico, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2015
Bankers' Trust Co., testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2156
Barrientos, Maria, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1948, 2044-2046
Barthelemy, Georg, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1408, 1505-1507
Barth, Peter J.:
letters from Mr. Barth to Joseph Keller.....	1289-1299
testimony of Mr. McDermott.....	408
Bartholdt, Richard:
letters to Mr. Bartholdt from—
Brooks, H. M.....	764
Calloway, C. H.....	1120
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
Bates, John L., telegram to Senator Overman.....	1618
Beard, Charles A., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2782
Beatson, J. W., telegram to Senator Overman.....	1618
Becker, Alfred L.:
letter from Senator Overman.....	2329-2330
testimony.....	1941-1990,
	1992-2105, 2328-2385, 2388-2406, 2411-2418, 2436-2462
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	602
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2151-2152
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2466-2469, 2470
Becker, Earnest, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2675
Belgium, atrocities in, testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2517-2521
Belisle, C. Edward, publisher, L'Opinion Publique, letter to United States
Brewers' Association.....	1099
Belmont, August, & Co., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
Benet, Christie, statement.....	2863-2866
Bennett, Ira, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	577
Berger, Victor L.:
testimony of Mr. Brisbane.....	743-745
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2739
Bergner & Engel, testimony of Mr. Konta.....	659
Berkel, G. H., testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....	629
Berkemeier, G. C., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2696, 2697
Berkman, Alexander:
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2718, 2753
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2678-2679, 2681-2682
Berko, —:
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	711-712
testimony of Mr. Steen.....	2854
Berkowitz, Morris, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1954, 2065-2066, 2337, 2367
Bernheim, Alfred, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2699
Bernheim & Schwartz, letter from Mr. Hammerling.....	785-786
Bernstorff, Count Johann von: list of persons who returned to Germany with Count von Bernstorff.....	1685-1686
statement of Mr. Garthe.....	1659-1660

Bernstorff, Count Johann von—Continued.

- | | |
|---|-----------------------|
| testimony of Mr. Becker | 1947 |
| 1953-1959, 1965-1971, 1988, 1991-1992, 2005, 2092-2093 | 230 |
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits | 1391, 1393-1394 |
| 1421, 1432-1433, 1472-1473, 1476, 1479, 1481-1482, 1494, 1495 | 1495 |
| 1548-1549, 1563, 1565-1569, 1576-1577, 1586-1587, 1589-1590 | 1590 |
| testimony of Mr. Gabryel | 627 |
| testimony of Mr. Hammerling | |
| testimony of Maj. Humes | 2166-2167 |
| testimony of Capt. Lester | 1665, 1677 |
| testimony of Mr. von Mach | |
| testimony of Austin J. Smith | 2486, 2488 |
| testimony of Mr. Untermeyer | 1842-1843, 1860, 1867 |
- Bertelli, Charles F.:
- | | |
|--|----------------------------|
| letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Mr. Bertelli | 1914 |
| testimony of Mr. Becker | 1946-1947, 1951-1952, 2066 |
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski | 1578 |
| testimony of Capt. Lester | 1822 |
- Bertling, Karl O.:
- | | |
|---|--|
| testimony of Mr. Becker | |
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits | |
- Bethmann-Hollweg, Dr. Theobald von, letter from Count von Bernstorff
- | | |
|--|------|
| | 1575 |
|--|------|
- Beveridge, Ray, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits
- | | |
|--|------------------|
| | 1406, 1475, 1547 |
|--|------------------|
- Bielaski, A. Bruce:
- | | |
|------------------------|---------------------------------------|
| testimony | 1387-1546, 1548-1594, 1597-1605, 2166 |
| testimony of Mr. Means | 2142 |
- Bird-Sykes Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits
- | | |
|--|----|
| | 22 |
|--|----|
- Birmingham Trust & Savings Co., see Smith, Tom O., vice president.
- Biro, John, letter to Julius Pirnitzer
- | | |
|--|--|
| | |
|--|--|
- Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits
- | | |
|--|---|
| | 2 |
|--|---|
- Block, Harry, testimony of Mr. Becker
- | | |
|--|---|
| | 2070, 2330, 2337, 2367, 2385, 2396-2397, 2398 |
|--|---|
- Block, Paul, testimony of Mr. Feigenspan
- | | |
|--|----|
| | 77 |
|--|----|
- Blumenthal, Benjamin, testimony of Mr. Becker
- | | |
|--|-----|
| | 202 |
|--|-----|
- Blumenthal, Charles, testimony of Mr. Becker
- | | |
|--|-----|
| | 246 |
|--|-----|
- Boaz, H. A., testimony of Mr. Bielaski
- | | |
|--|------------|
| | 1406, 1538 |
|--|------------|
- Bode, Capt. Eno, testimony of Mr. Bielaski
- | | |
|--|--|
| | |
|--|--|
- Bohm, Ernest:
- | | |
|-------------------------|-----|
| testimony of Mr. Becker | |
| testimony of Mr. Fox | 194 |
- Boldt Adolph, testimony of Mr. Arnold
- | | |
|--|--|
| | |
|--|--|
- Bolo Pasha:
- | | |
|---|-----------------------|
| letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Bolo Pasha | 1914 |
| testimony of Mr. Becker | 1947 |
| 2044-2046, 2048-2053, 2058, 2059, 2077, 2081-2082, 2089 | 2089 |
| 2103, 2329-2330, 2331-2337, 2377-2380, 2383-2385 | 2385 |
| 2394, 2436-2439, 2450-2451, 2452-2454, 2456 | 2456 |
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski | 1577, 1578-1580, 1581 |
| testimony of Capt. Lester | 1922 |
| testimony of Mr. Morse | 2462 |
- Bolshevism, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
- | | |
|--|----------------------------|
| | 2737-2738, 2754-2772, 2776 |
|--|----------------------------|
- Bolz-McBride Cooperage Company, letters from H. Bruhn
- | | |
|--|------|
| | 1331 |
|--|------|
- Bondy, Alfred, testimony of Mr. Bielaski
- | | |
|--|--|
| | |
|--|--|
- Boniface, Bonford, testimony of Mr. Tunney
- | | |
|--|-----|
| | 267 |
|--|-----|
- Bonner, Neil, testimony of Mr. Gardiner, and exhibits
- | | |
|--|----|
| | 33 |
|--|----|
- Books, etc.:
- | | |
|----------------------------|------|
| German propaganda through— | |
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski | 1446 |
| testimony of Prof. Hart | 1637 |
| see also School textbooks. | |
- Bopp, Franz, testimony of Mr. Bielaski
- | | |
|--|--|
| | |
|--|--|
- Borgemeister, F. A.:
- | | |
|--|------|
| testimony of Mr. Bielaski | 1422 |
| 2202, 2208, 2209, 2216, 2217, 2220, 2225, 2231 | 2231 |
| testimony of Capt. Lester | |

	Page.
Bosch Magneto Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1543-1544, 1564
Boston, Mass., First National Bank, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1988
Boston Journal, testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2323-2324
Bowen, William A., testimony.....	2744-2749
Bowser, S. F., & Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	278
Boy-Ed. Capt.:
letters to Capt. von Papen.....	1931, 2796
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1396,
1451, 1483, 1544, 1598, 1599, 1600, 1602, 1605
testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....	634
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1686
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2113-2114,
2124, 2126-2135, 2139, 2140, 2150
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1892-1895
Boyd's City Dispatch:
letter from United States Brewers' Association.....	1276
letter to George A. Franznick.....	1275-1276
Bradley, Charles, vice president, P. Ballantine & Sons, letter to Edward A. Schmidt.....	47
Brase, Augustino d', testimony of Mr. Zotti.....	647
Brase, Mario d', testimony of Mr. Zotti.....	647
Braun, Marcus:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1474-1481
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	702, 703-704
Breckinridge, Mrs. Desha, letter to Senator Overman.....	2859-2861
Breckinridge, Sophonisba P., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2782
Breitung, Max, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2671-2672
Brewer, Sam E., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	120
Brewers' Association of Massachusetts, see Noble. Howard, secretary.
Brewery Workers' Union, see Proebstle, Joseph, international secretary.
Bridgeport Projectile Co.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1539
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	707-708
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2158
Briesen, Arthur von:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2700
Brisbane, Arthur:
letter to Mr. Brisbane from Senator Overman.....	24 letters from Mr. Brisbane to—
Feigenspan, Christian W.....	8, 16
Overman, Lee S.....	22-23, 23-24
testimony.....	732-759
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2455
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1588, 1610, 1614-1616
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	75
testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibit.....	1767-1768, 1771
British Board of Liquor Control Commission, testimony of Mr. Fox.....	88
British secret service, testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2267-2268, 2310-2314
British Society for the Study of Inebriety, testimony of Mr. Fox.....	88
Britt, Philip J., testimony of Mr. Konta.....	676
Brogan, Anthony, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1452-1453
Brooks, H. M., letter to Richard Bartholdt.....	764
Brosevich, Stephen, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	579
Brown & Dawson, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1435, 1439
Brucker, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2699
Bruhn, H., secretary, Lone Star Brewing Co.:
letter to Mr. Bruhn from Percy Andreae.....	1328-1329 letters, etc., from Mr. Bruhn to—
Adriance Machine Works.....	1333
Bolz-McBride Cooperage Company.....	1331, 1333
Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills.....	1332
Bryan, A. T. C., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2131
Bryan, Joseph P., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1480, 1481

Bryan, William Jennings:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1401
testimony of Mr. Dickinson	2620-2621
Bryan, Mrs. William Jennings, letter to Lincoln Daily Star
Bryce, James, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 3
Buchanan, Frank, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1498, 1500, 1572-1574
Buckmann, H. H., letters to John A. McDermott	1055-1056, 1121
Buenz, Dr.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1867
Bund Eisernes Kreuzes, see Iron Cross Society.
Bureau of Legal Advice, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Burgess, John W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1387
Burkhardt, G. F., president, M. Burkhardt Brewing Co.: letters from Mr. Burkhardt to—
Fox, Hugh L.	1106
United States Brewers' Association
Burkhardt, M., Brewing Co., letters from Hugh F. Fox	1101, 1103
see also Burkhardt, G. F., president.
Burns, W. J., testimony of Mr. Means	2115-2125
Burroughs Adding Machine Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	24
Bursum, H. O., chairman, Republican Central Committee of New Mexico. letter to Ph. Zang Brewing Co.
Busbee, Frederick A.:
letter from Dr. Busbee to Senator Thomas	2841 letter vouching for loyalty of Dr. Busbee
testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Busch, Adolphus, president, Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association:
letters from Mr. Busch to Zane Cetti	1300, 1301
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	47
Busch, August A., president, Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association: letter to Mr. Busch from Otto Wahrmond
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5
Bush, E. T., National Association of Commerce and Labor, letter to American Brewing Association	1333-1334
Butler, George A., testimony of Mr. Becker	1955
Byoir, Carl:
testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits	60
testimony of Mr. Zotti	64

C.

Cadbury, Henry J., testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Cadillac Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	134-135, 247
Caldwell, Armour, testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits	597
Calloway, C. H., letter to Richard Bartholdt
Campbell, Lieut. W. L., letter to Alexander Konta
Cannon, James G., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt
Capper, Arthur, telegram to Senator Overman
Cardinale, Antonio, testimony of Mr. Becker	2356, 2359-2360, 2362
Carnegie Steel Co., testimony of Mr. Fox
Carpenter, Oliver C., testimony of Mr. Hammerling
Carvalho, S. S.:
telegrams from William R. Hearst	1608, 1609, 1610, 1611-1612, 1613
telegrams to William R. Hearst	1610
Central Union Trust Co.: accounts of United States Brewers' Association
testimony of Mr. Becker
Cercle Lacordaire, report of activities
Cetti, Zane, president, Texas Brewing Co.: letters, etc., to Mr. Cetti from—
Andreae, Percy
Busch, Adolphus	1300, 1301
Chakerverty, Dr. Chandra, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2677

	Page.
handler & Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker-----	1987-1988
testimony of Maj. Humes-----	2167
testimony of Capt. Lester-----	2166
handra, Ram, see Ram Chandra.
hase National Bank:
testimony of Mr. Becker-----	1988
testimony of Capt. Lester-----	2155
hicago Tribune:
statement of Mr. Kirkland-----	1814-1816
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit-----	1588, 1589
testimony of Capt. Lester-----	1664
hieftain, Pueblo, see Pueblo Chieftain.
hristian Socialist Fellowship, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2711
humley, L. T., testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2732
hurch Peace Union, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2711
hurch Socialist League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2711
hurchill, Gen. M.:
letter from J. J. Dickinson-----	2653-2655
memorandum relating to J. J. Dickinson-----	2652-2653
hurchill, William, letter from Alexander Konta-----	718
igar Makers' International Union, testimony of Mr. McDermott-----	407
illis, H., president, Seminary Endowment Association (Inc.), letter to Edward A. Schmidt-----	1097-1098 itizens' Committee for Food Shipments:
testimony of Mr. Becker-----	2024-2026, 2328-2329
testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1530, 1531, 1537-1538
testimony of Mr. von Mach, and papers-----	2287-2297, 2315
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer-----	1847-1848, 1907-1909
lapp, Edwin John, testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1406-1407 ark, Evans:
telegram from Mr. Clark to Senator Overman-----	2859
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2783
ark & Courts, letter from B. Adoue-----	1312 lauss, E. S., 3d vice president, Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association:
letter to Mr. Clauss from R. L. Autrey-----	958-959 letters from Mr. Clauss to—
Andreae, Percy-----	1256
San Antonio Brewing Company-----	1301, 1301-1302
laussen, M. B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits-----	1389-1390, 1393, 1394, 1395, 1433-1435, 1457, 1503, 1507
testimony of Capt. Lester-----	1665, 1686, 1688, 1704
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2694
leveland, Ohio, First National Bank, testimony of Mr. Becker-----	1988
lifton, John:
statement of Mr. Garthe-----	1659, 1663-1664
testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1470
obb, Frank, testimony of Mr. Untermeyer-----	1866
ode books of National Farmers' Union, testimony of Mr. Arnold-----	2544-2548
ohen, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Becker--	2346, 2354-2358, 2360-2366, 2444, 2445
ollegiate Anti-Militarism League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2709
olquitt, Rawlins M.:
letters, etc., from Mr. Colquitt to Lewis H. Gibson---	955, 955-956, 957, 991 letters, etc., to Mr. Colquitt from—
Andreae, Percy-----	957-958, 991
Gibson, Lewis H.-----	955, 956, 957, 971-972, 991-992
olumbia University, testimony of Mr. Stowell-----	2183-2187
ommercial Secretaries Association, testimony of Mr. Bowen-----	2746 ommercial Trust Company of New Jersey:
accounts of United States Brewers' Association-----	400
testimony of Mr. Fox-----	326
ommittee of Fifty, testimony of Mr. Fox-----	90 ommittee of Public Information, see Public Information Committee.
ommonwealth Bank of New York, accounts of United States Brewers' Association-----	400
Conscientious objectors, testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	2256-2257

Continental & Commercial National Bank, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	187
Continental Brewing Co., see Gardiner, John.
Continental Times:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	187
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
Conventus, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....
Conway, John S., letter from Edwin W. Parsons.....
Cook, Vincent, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
Cook, F. W., Brewing Co., testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5.....
Cornfield, Samuel, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1954, 2069-2070, 2107
Corporations, unfriendly to liquor interests, list.....
Cortelyou, George B., testimony of Mr. Zotti.....
Cosmopolitan, testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....	211
Coudert, F. R., testimony of Mr. Stowell.....
Country Brewers Association of Michigan, letter to members from J. J. Hoch, secretary.....
Cox, E. Norgrove, letter from Bradford Merrill.....
Crain, Robert, general counsel, United States Brewers' Association: letter from Christian W. Feigenspan..... letter to Sam T. Morgan.....
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....
Crass, M. F., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	174
Creel, George:
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
testimony of Mr. Steiner.....	201
Cronmeyer, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1390, 1391, 1392
Crowley, Aleister, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	211
Crown Cork & Seal Co., see Hartly, E. R., manager, sales department.
Cukor, Morris:
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Cullinan, J. S., testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2701
Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	187
Current literature, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	184

D.

Dabney, Charles W., statement and letters relating to Dr. Dabney.....	2107
Daily Star, Lincoln, letter from Mrs. William J. Bryan.....
Dallas Brewery:
letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	138
letter to United States Brewers' Association.....
Damon, Lindsay T.:
testimony.....	2757
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Dana, Henry Wadsworth L., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2717
Danenberg, Karl, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Danube Trust Co., see Transatlantic Trust Co.
Darden, Mrs. Ida M.:
testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2540, 2595, 2600
testimony of Mr. Bowen.....
Dasche, Paul, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
Dattner, Sigismund, affidavit.....
Daussman, G. Michael, see , as president, Cook, F. W., Brewing Co.
Davis, Cyrus W., testimony of Mr. Fox.....
Dawson, Albert K., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1439, 1440, 1441
D'Brase, Augustino, see Brase, Augustino d'.
D'Brase, Mario, see Brase, Mario d'.
Dean, Charles E., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers.....	2198, 2201, 2715, 2717
Debs, Eugene V., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
De Ford, William A., letter to Senator Overman.....
Degenfeld, Count, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	287
Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....

	Page.
elbrück law:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2243-2244
testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2274-2275, 2276-2277
eluse, Otto P., Indianapolis Brewing Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	1108
empsey, George C., letter to Percy Andreae.....	1128-1129
ernburg, Dr. Bernhard:
letter from Alexander Konta.....	11-12, 13-15
letter to Capt. von Papen.....	1933-1934
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1985-1987
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1389-1393, 1414, 1421, 1457, 1482
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	660-663, 702, 703
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1686, 1705
testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2276, 2277, 2324-2325
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2695
testimony of Mr. Stowell.....	2176-2177, 2187
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1852, 1890-1892
e Silver, Albert, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2709, 2734
euell (or Duel), Walter R., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2359-
	2360, 2362-2363, 2365, 2373-2374
eutsch-Südamerikanischer Institut, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1983 eutschamerikanischer Nationalbund, see National German-American Alliance.
eutsche Bank:
letter of Julius Pirnitzer to Hungarian General Credit Bank.....	2875
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1984-1985, 2009-2013, 2016, 2034-2036
eutsche Überseelsche Bank, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1984-
	1985, 2009-2013, 2016
see also Banco Aleman Transatlantico.
eutsches Journal:
testimony of Mr. Brisbane.....	752
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1669, 1771-1772
eutschland Library Co.:
testimony of Capt. Lester, and letters.....	1772-1774, 2433-2436
testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....	2419, 2429-2431, 2432
testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2512-2517
ewas, F. J., president, Standard Brewery, letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	927
ickinson, J. J.:
testimony.....	2615-2661
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1699-1704, 1707, 1806
ietrich, William, testimony of Mr. McDermott.....	407, 408
ircks, E., testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	555
oelger, Peter, testimony of Mr. Fox.....	322
onges, Col. Ralph W. E., testimony.....	1643-1644
ooling, John T., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2143, 2146
orl, Francis J. L., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2690
orman, D. C., testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2667
ovey, John, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2696, 2699
uel, Walter R., see Deuell (or Duel), Walter R.
Dumba, Constantin Theodor:
letter from Dr. Dumba to Julius Pirnitzer.....	2878-2879
letter to Dr. Dumba from Julius Pirnitzer.....	2881-2883, 2884
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits....	1466-1468, 1513-1514, 1550, 1562
Duncan, Lewis J., testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2664-2665
Dunn, William F., testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2666
Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits....	231-232
Du Quesne, Capt. Fritz, see Quesne, Capt. Fritz du.
Durand, Ed L., letters to Joseph Keller.....	867, 1287-1289
Duval, H. Rieman, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
Dyall, Har, see Har Dyall.

E.

Eastman, Crystal, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2709
Eastman, Max:
testimony of Mr. Felgenspan.....	61
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2707, 2715, 2716
Ebling, Herman, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2676

Edel, George, testimony of Mr. Gardiner	34
Edwards, Louis D.:
testimony of Mr. Becker	2
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1
testimony of Capt. Lester	17
Ehlermann, Charles, Hop & Malt Co., see Giesecke, Otto, president Ehret, George:
testimony of Mr. Konta
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2
testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Electric Storage Battery Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits
Elliott, Charles W., telegram to Senator Overman
Elliott, John Lovejoy, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Emergency Peace Federation, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	27
Emerson, Edwin, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1461-14
Engelken, F. J. H. von:
letter from Secretary Baker to Senator Overman	28
memorandum relating to Mr. von Engelken	28
statement of Mr. Benet	28
Engle, Otto, testimony of Capt. Lester Equitable Trust Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker
testimony of Capt. Lester
Erbslöh, R., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113
Ersline, Robert, telegram to Senator Overman	1
Escanaba Manufacturing Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits
Ettla, Charles F., testimony of Mr. Gardiner
see also , as secretary, Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association
Evans, E. M., testimony of Mr. Means
Evans, Edmund C., testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Evans, Harold, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Evening Journal, New York, see New York Evening Journal
Evening Mail, New York, see New York Evening Mail
Everard, James, Breweries, testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibit Everybody's Magazine: letter of Garet Garrett
testimony of Mr. von Mach	2

F.

Fair play (magazine), testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	147
Fairbanks, C., president, Terre Haute Brewing Co.: letter from Gustav W. Lembeck letter to Gustav W. Lembeck
Fairchild, C. W., letter to Mr. Swain Farm Life Commission:
testimony of Mr. Arnold
testimony of Mr. Bowen	27
Farm life in Hungary, testimony of Mr. Steiner	28
Farmers' and Manufacturers' Alliance, see Lyon, Cooper, secretary and treasurer.
Farmers' Deposit National Bank, testimony of Mr. Sunstein
Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, testimony of Mr. Arnold	28
Fatherland:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1419-14
testimony of Mr. Fox
testimony of Mr. Hammerling
see also Viereck, George Sylvester.
Faust, A. B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski
Fay, Robert:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	19
testimony of Mr. Tunney	27
Federal Trust Co.: accounts of Growing Circulation Corporation
accounts of United States Brewers' Association	2

	Page.
ederation of Workers in Hotel, Restaurant, Club, and Catering Industry,
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2735-2736
Feigenspan, Christian W., president, Christian Feigenspan (a Corpora- tion): letters from Mr. Feigenspan to—
Crain, Robert-----	8-9, 21
Fox, Hugh F-----	1270, 1273
letters to Mr. Feigenspan from—
Brisbane, Arthur-----	8, 16
Wasson, E. A-----	1269-1270, 1270-1271
statement relating to purchase of Washington Times-----	9-10, 21-22
testimony -----	54-81
testimony of Mr. Brisbane-----	740-742
testimony of Mr. Konta-----	658
testimony of James Moore, exhibit-----	39
see also, as trustee, Growing Circulation Corporation.
Feigenspan, Christian (a Corporation), see Feigenspan, Christian W., president—Koenig, A. S.
Fellowship of Reconciliation, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2710, 2714
Gerguson, James E., testimony of Mr. Bowen-----	2747
Granger Modern School, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2753-2754
Greene, Edward A., telegram to Senator Overman-----	1655
Greene-bomb case:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1601-1602, 1603
testimony of Mr. Tunney-----	2674-2676
Guaranty Fund Insurance Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers-----	2195,
2203, 2211-2214, 2218-2219, 2221-2222, 2223-2224, 2239
Harvard Bulletin, testimony of Mr. Arnold-----	2536-2537
Hartstone Rubber & Tire Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits-----	238-240
Hart Rubber Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits-----	272-273
Hatch, John A., testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2734
Hatch, Mott & Grant, see Grant, Fred.
Hazgerald, M. Elinore, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2753
Hinn, Elizabeth Gurley, testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2716, 2754, 2783
Food Shipments, Citizens' Committee for, see Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments.
Ford, Henry, statement of Mr. Kirkland-----	1814-1815
Ford, Robert I.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1400
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2699
Foreign River Shipbuilding Co., testimony of Mr. Means-----	2116, 2117
Foreign language newspapers:
letter of Julius Pirnitzer relating to Croatian press in U. S-----	2888-2891
list compiled by Clyde Steen-----	2899-2921
tabulation compiled by Clyde Steen-----	2921-2922
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit-----	1585-1586
testimony of Mr. Gabryel-----	630-631
testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits-----	471,
473, 474, 478-480, 483-484, 488, 492, 495, 498, 499, 533-534, 557-558, 568-576, 592, 595-596, 603-607
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt-----	2816-2817
testimony of Mr. Steen-----	2848-2850
testimony of Mr. Steiner-----	2826-2827, 2828, 2836
testimony of Mr. Zotti-----	644-645
Foreign Language Newspapers, American Association of, see American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers.
Foss, Eugene N., memoranda from files of United States Brewers' Asso- ciation-----	1109-1111
Fowler, H. Robert, testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	1583-1584
Fox, Edward Lyell:
letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Mr. Fox-----	1912-1913 statement of Mr. Fox with reference to Hiram M. Greene-----	1654
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits--	1437-1438, 1439, 1440, 1457-1461
testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibits-----	1664-1680, 1777-1778, 1917-1919

Fox, Hugh F., secretary, United States Brewers' Association:

letters, etc., from Mr. Fox----- 937, 938, 939-940, 940, 1022, 1023, 1026, 1123, 1317-1318, 1320, 1320-1321, 1323, 1323-1324 letters, etc., from Mr. Fox to—

American Brewing Association----- 17

Andreane, Percy-----

762-763, 763, 764, 765-766, 766, 767, 768, 770, 771

777, 815, 926, 927, 948, 948-949, 952, 1031-1032, 110

1044, 1044, 1056, 1089, 1104, 1120, 1132, 114

Autrey, R. L.----- 1

Burkhardt, M., Brewing Co.----- 1101

Dallas Brewery----- 110

Grant, Fred----- 12

Hall, Edwin C.-----

Heeb, A. F.----- 12

Houston Ice & Brewing Co.-----

Hupfel, J. C. G., Brewing Co.----- 100

Interstate Executive Association----- 8

Knapp, Martin H.----- 122, 124

Koehler, George E.-----

Koehler, Hugo A.-----

Legner, William-----

Lone Star Brewing Co.----- 10

Miller, Fred, Brewing Co.-----

Minuth, Fred R.-----

National Association of Commerce and Labor----- 2

Noble, Howard----- 1

Pabst Brewing Co.-----

Proebstle, Joseph----- 178

Ruppert, Jacob, jr----- 108

Schaefer, Rudolph J.----- 10

Solvay Process Co.-----

United States Brewers' Association, members of----- 11

782-783, 805-807, 809, 949, 1023-1025, 1033, 1305-1306

1309-1310, 1325, 1326-1327, 1328, 1331, 1333, 1334-1335

1336, 1336, 1336-1337, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1341, 1342, 134

United States Brewers' Association, members of board of trustees-----

Val Blatz Brewing Co.-----

Wayne Brewing Co.-----

letters, etc., to Mr. Fox----- 760, 773, 925-926, 933, 941, 945, 952, 113 letters, etc., to Mr. Fox from—

Adoue, B.-----

Andreane, Percy-----

767, 768, 769-770, 771, 776, 927, 931, 950-951, 953, 1044, 110

Austin, William H.-----

Brewer, Sam E.-----

Burkhardt, G. F.----- 110

Deluse, Otto P.-----

Dewes, F. J.-----

Felgenspan, C. W.----- 10

Gardiner, John-----

Griffith, A. L. G.----- 138

Haffenreffer, R. F., jr.----- 9

Hall, Edwin C.-----

Hammerling, Louis N.-----

Heeb, A. F.-----

Hirsh, William F.-----

Jack, M. W.-----

Johnston, J. R.-----

Kaub, George H.-----

Keeley, Thomas-----

Knapp, Martin F.-----

Koehler, Hugo A.-----

Koenig, A. S.-----

Fox, Hugh F.—Continued.

	Page.
letters, etc., to Mr. Fox from—
Liebmann, Charles J	1091
Lindemann, Aug	1053
McDermott, John A	1120-1121
Martin, I. T	820-821, 826-827
Noble, Howard	774, 1109, 1118
Oswald, Edward	125
Over, Spencer H	949
Schaefer, Rudolph J	1106
Schmidt, Oscar	1102
Texas Brewers' Association	1308
Val Blatz Brewing Co	1104-1105, 1105
Wasson, E. A	1274, 1276
Young, Charles C	1033-1034
Zang, Ph., Brewing Co	1103
testimony	82-126, 133-326
Fox Typewriter Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	178-179
Francis, Philip, telegrams from Mr. Hearst	1606, 1608
Frank, Kuno:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1399
testimony of Prof. Hart	1626-1627
testimony of Mr. von Mach	2277, 2281
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2782
Franko, Vittorio, testimony of Mr. Becker	1954, 2071-2072, 2074, 2367, 2399
Franknick, George A., United States Brewers' Association, letter from Boyd's City Dispatch	1275-1276
Frederick, Leo, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt	2811
Frederiksen, C. J., testimony of Mr. Becker	1954, 2330, 2337, 2367, 2368-2372, 2385, 2394-2396, 2399, 2400
Free Press, Milwaukee, see Milwaukee Free Press.
Freedom (newspaper), testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1466-1468
Freeman, B. S., testimony of Mr. Steiner	2836
Freeman, Elizabeth, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2783
French, George R., testimony of Mr. McDermott	409-410
Friends of Irish Freedom, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1397
Friends of Peace, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2696-2699
Fuchs, George, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2672, 2673, 2674
Fuehr, Dr. Karl A.:
"important list of names" from Dr. Fuehr's papers	1399-1400
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1390, 1391, 1394, 1395, 1396, 1397, 1398-1400, 1404, 1411, 1432, 1434-1436, 1440, 1442-1443, 1504, 1588, 1589, 1590, 1595-1596
testimony of Mr. Dickinson	2616, 2625-2627, 2638, 2640-2641, 2658
testimony of Mr. Konta	659, 700, 701-702, 714-715
testimony of Capt. Lester	1680, 1690, 1700, 1704
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2694, 2695
testimony of Mr. Untermyer	1855, 1860
Fuller, E. R., Home Brewing Co., letter to Percy Andreae	1048-1049
Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills, letter from H. Bruhn	1332
Fulton Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Becker	1988

G.

Gabryel, Arthur:

affidavit of Elizabeth W. Allen	2476
affidavit of Sigismund Dattner	2475
affidavit of Louis N. Hammerling	2472-2473
affidavit of Bertha W. Leffler	2473
affidavit of Margaret C. Leffler	2476
affidavit of Leon Wazeter	2474
testimony	625-636
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	553-554
Galveston Brewing Co., letter from John A. McDermott	1304 see also Griffith, A. L. G., cashier—Stein, I. A., secretary and general manager.

German propaganda in United States—Continued.		Page.
statement of Mr. Garthe.....	1657-1664
statement of Senator Hoke Smith.....	1648-1651
statement of Mr. Stowell.....	1638-1641, 2175-2191,	2478-2484
statement of Senator Thomas.....	2499-2501
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1941-1990,
	1992-2105, 2328-2385, 2388-2406, 2411-2418, 2436-2462
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1387-1546, 1548-1594, 1597-1605,	2193-2256
testimony of Mr. Dickinson.....	2615-2661
testimony of Col. Donges.....	1643-1644
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	549-551, 564-581, 591-607
testimony of Prof. Hart.....	1620-1638
testimony of Maj. Humes.....	2166-2174
testimony of Maj. Keehn.....	2257-2262
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2807-2823
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	648-673
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1664-1813, 1916-1926, 2154-2166,	2433-2436
testimony of Judge Levy.....	1822-1834
testimony of Mr. McGee.....	1644
testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2262-2328
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2111-2153
testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....	2418-2433
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2462-2470
testimony of Austin J. Smith.....	2485-2494
testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2512-2521
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2691-2720, 2729-2744,	2751-2785
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2670-2690
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1835-1910
testimony of Col. Wambaugh.....	1641-1643
German Publication Society, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits...	1537-1540
German Red Cross, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2006-2008
German University League:
statement of Mr. Stowell.....	1639-1641, 2179, 2182
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2025
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1372-1380, 1494, 1514-1530
testimony of Prof. Hart.....	1628-1629
testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2290, 2315-2318, 2326-2328
Germania National Bank:
accounts of United States Brewers' Association.....	400
testimony of Mr. Fox.....	326
Germans in United States:
statistics concerning registration, May 26, 1917.....	2105-2107
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1548-1563, 2242-2251, 2253
Gerster, Arpad G., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808, 2811
Gibson, Lewis H.:
letters, etc., from Mr. Gibson to—
Autrey, R. L.....	953-954, 954-955, 961, 990, 992
Colquitt, Rawlins M.....	955, 956, 957, 971-972, 991-992
Keller, Joseph.....	857
Thuenen, Henry.....	995, 1012
Wirmel, Charles H.....	982-983, 985-986, 988-989
letters, etc., to Mr. Gibson from—
Autrey, R. L.....	959, 966
Colquitt, Rawlins M.....	955, 955-956, 957, 991
Keller, Joseph.....	857
Sparks, Nelson.....	1003
Thuenen, Henry.....	997, 1001, 1002, 1003, 1006
Wirmel, Charles H.....	956, 959-960, 962-963,
	963, 963-964, 964-965, 967-968, 969, 970-971, 972-973, 973-974, 974-975, 976, 977-980, 981, 981-982, 983-984, 984-985, 986-987
report on National Association of Commerce and Labor.....	455-463
Giesecke, Otto, president, Charles Ehlermann Hop & Malt Co., letters to Pechstein & Nagel Co.....	1005, 1005-1006
Gingrich, W. W., manager, Wayne Brewing Co., letter from Edward A.
Schmidt.....	1130-1131
Golden Book of German War Orphans, testimony of Capt. Lester, and
exhibit.....	1774-1776

Goldman, Emma :

testimony of Mr. Stevenson----- 278

testimony of Mr. Tunney----- 2678-2679

Goltz, Holst von der, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 1561, 1562

Gompers, Samuel, testimony of Mr. Bielaski----- 1574, 1575

Good Housekeeping (magazine), testimony of Joseph A. Moore----- 242

Goodrich, B. F., Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits----- 27

Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits----- 97

Goxiola, Luis, testimony of Maj. Humes----- 215

Grace, E. G., testimony of Mr. Becker----- 1948-1951, 1953-1954, 2000

Graef, C. F. W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113----- 218

Gragnola, P., testimony of Mr. Becker----- 1954-1955, 1956

Grand Junction News, testimony of Austin J. Smith----- 218

Grant, Fred, of Fitch, Mott & Grant, letter from Hugh F. Fox----- 112

Graselli Chemical Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits----- 17

Graves, Karl Armand, testimony of Capt. Lester----- 237

Great Britain, secret service of, testimony of Mr. von Mach----- 237

Green, Henry, testimony of Mr. Zotti----- 1

Greene, Hiram Moe :

statement of Edward Lyell Fox----- 11

telegram to Senator Overman----- 145

testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 145

Gregory, Thomas W., Attorney General :

letters from Mr. Gregory to—

Overman, Lee S.----- 21

Waldron, John A.----- 21

letters to Mr. Gregory from—

Overman, Lee S.----- 13

Smith, Alfred E., and Newton, Charles D.----- 240

testimony of Mr. Becker----- 240

Griel, N. J. and M. L., testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2----- 1

Griffith, A. L. G., cashier, Galveston Brewing Co., letters to Hugh F. Fox----- 1338

Grilla, E. M., testimony of Mr. Hammerling----- 47

Grosscup, Peter S. :

letter to Senator Nelson----- 1645

testimony of Mr. Bielaski----- 1

Growing Circulation Corporation :

accounts with Federal Trust Co., Newark, N. J.----- 17

note to C. W. Feigenspan----- 742

testimony of Mr. Brisbane----- 68

Grumbach, —, testimony of Mr. Konta----- 68

Guaranty Trust Co. :

testimony of Mr. Becker----- 1988, 2002

testimony of Maj. Humes----- 2169-2170

testimony of Capt. Lester----- 1

Gunter, Julius C., letter to Mr. Swain----- 1

Gupta, Hiramba, see Hiramba Gupta.

H.

Haffenreffer, R. F., jr., treasurer, Old Colony Breweries Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox----- 93

Haggard, Rider, testimony of Mr. von Mach----- 1

Hale, William Bayard :

letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Mr. Hale----- 1910

testimony of Mr. Becker----- 2016-2021, 2023-2024, 2330

testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 1393-1396, 1401-1406, 1407, 1421-1423, 1444, 1484, 1500, 1541

testimony of Mr. Brisbane----- 742

testimony of Prof. Hart----- 1704

testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibits----- 1778-1783, 1786-1787, 1792-1904, 1917

testimony of Mr. Stowell----- 2176

	Page.
Hall, Edwin C.:
letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	121
letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	123
Hall, Thomas C.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1424, 1571
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2783
Hallgarten & Co., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
Hamburg-American Line:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2002-2004
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1406-1407, 1450, 1600
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1684, 1686, 1688
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2117-2123
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2688
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1861, 1892-1895
Hamilton, H., letter from B. Adoue.....	1310
Hamilton, Norman R., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1398
Hamm, William, testimony of Mr. Konta.....	658
Hammerling, Louis N., president, American Association of Foreign Lan- guage Newspapers:
affidavit.....	2472-2473
affidavit of Sigismund Dattner.....	2475
affidavit of Bertha W. Leffler.....	2473
affidavit of Margaret C. Leffler.....	2476
affidavit of Don S. Momand.....	2474 letter in relation to canceling naturalization of Mr. Hammerling.....	2306 letter to Mr. Hammerling from L. W. Knowles.....	614-615 letters from Mr. Hammerling to—
Andreane, Percy.....	475-476, 617-618
Bernheim & Schwartz.....	785-786
Fox, Hugh F.....	763
United States Brewers' Association.....	765
naturalization petition and records of Mr. Hammerling.....	618-620
testimony.....	465-618
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1418-1419, 1431-1432
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	62-63
testimony of Mr. Fox.....	88-89
testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....	625-633
testimony of Mr. Popovich.....	621-625
testimony of Mr. Pruden.....	636-639
testimony of Mr. Zotti.....	639-641, 645-647
Hancher, Rev. George B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 75.....	1485
Handy, Frederick C., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2147-2148
Hanford, S., letter to Senator Overman.....	31
Hanley, James, Brewing Co., see Over, Spencer H., general manager.
Hans Liebau Labor Bureau, see Liebau, Hans, Labor Bureau.
Hapgood, Hutchins, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2754
Har Dyall, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2678
Harper's Bazaar, testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....	2425-2427
Harris, Frank, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1393, 1395, 1400, 1410
Harris Air Pump Co., see Hollowell, Amos K., president.
Hart, Albert Bushnell:
telegrams vouching for loyalty of Prof. Hart.....	1617-1619, 1655
testimony.....	1620-1638
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
testimony of Col. Donges.....	1643-1644
testimony of Mr. McGee.....	1644
testimony of Col. Wambaugh.....	1641-1643
Hartley, Gale M.:
letters from Mr. Hartley to Henry Thuenen.....	994, 999-1000 letters to Mr. Hartley from—
Thuenen, Henry.....	995, 1000
Winner, M. I.....	857
report on National Association of Commerce and Labor.....	455-463
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	500
Hartly, E. R., manager, sales department, Crown Cork & Seal Co., letter to Houston Ice & Brewing Co.....	1311

	Page.
Leynen (or Heinen), Carl—Continued.
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2154
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2136-2137
testimony of Mr. Untermyer.....	1873, 1874-1875
Lilken, Paul G. L.:
testimony of Capt. Lester, and letters.....	2433-2436
testimony of Joseph A. Moore, and letters.....	2429-2430
Lillquit, Morris, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2704, 2706, 2715, 2783
Lindu cases:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1600, 1601
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2674, 2677-2678
Liramba Gupta, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2678
Lirsh, William H., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	1032
Litchcock, Gilbert M., Senator from Nebraska:
statement from Congressional Record, Dec. 10, 1918.....	1652-1654
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1487, 1490, 1500
Loch, J. J., secretary, Country Brewers Association of Michigan, letter to members of association.....	797-798
Lofmeister, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1600
Loliowell, Amos K., president, Harris Air Pump Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	292-293
Loines, John Haynes, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2704, 2706, 2707, 2709, 2714, 2716, 2783
Lolt, John, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2670-2671
Lolz, Julius, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113.....	1543
Lome Brewing Co., see Fuller, E. R.
Lorn, Werner, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1598
Lorowitz, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	581
Lorton, James, see Horton's Ice Cream Co.
Lorton's Ice Cream Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	176, 277-278
Lossenfelder, Erich, letter from Julius Pirnitzer.....	2876
Loughton, A. J., testimony of Mr. Konta.....	658
Louston, Herbert, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	581-582
Louston Ice & Brewing Co.:
letters to Houston Ice & Brewing Co. from—
Fox, Hugh F.....	1339
Hartly, E. R.....	1311
see also Autrey, R. L.
Lowe, Frederick C., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2781, 2783
Ludson Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	267-268
Luebsch, Benjamin W., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2713, 2714
Luerta, Victoriano:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1581-1582
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2124
Lughan, Jessie W., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2783
Lull, William I., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2783
Lumbert, Charles:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1946, 1947, 1948-1950, 1951, 1953-1954, 1955, 1961, 2040, 2044, 2058, 2059, 2094, 2102, 2329-2330, 2333-2336, 2377-2380, 2456-2457
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2463-2464, 2465, 2466
Lumes, Maj. Edwin Lowry:
order detailing Maj. Lumes to aid committee.....	37-38
testimony.....	2166-2174
Lungarian Agrarian Revenue Bank, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2811
Lungarian-American Federation, testimony of Mr. Konta.....	650-651
Lungarian-American State Bank, testimony of Mr. Steiner.....	2833
Lungarian Commercial Bank of Budapest:
contract with Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank.....	2896-2899
letters from Julius Pirnitzer to bank.....	2888-2891, 2899
preliminary contract relating to Transatlantic Trust Co.....	2892-2893
subscription agreement organizing Transatlantic Trust Co.....	2894-2896
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
Lungarian Discount and Exchange Bank:
contract with Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank.....	2896-2899
letters from Julius Pirnitzer to bank.....	2888-2891, 2899

- Hungarian Discount and Exchange Bank—Continued.
- preliminary contract relating to Transatlantic Trust Co. 282-283
 - subscription agreement organizing Transatlantic Trust Co. 284
 - testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt. 285
- Hungarian General Credit Bank:
- contract with Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank. 286-287
 - letters from Julius Pirnitzer to bank. 287, 288-289
 - preliminary contract relating to Transatlantic Trust Co. 290
 - subscription agreement organizing Transatlantic Trust Co. 294
 - testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt. 295
- Hungarian General Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt. 295
- Hungarian Reformed Church, testimony of Mr. Konta. 296
- Hungarian Royal Postal Savings Bank:
- circular issued by bank. 297
 - contract with Hungarian General Credit Bank, etc. 298
 - letter to bank from Julius Pirnitzer. 299
 - report to bank by Julius Pirnitzer. 300-301
 - testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt. 2810, 2812-2813
- Hungarians in United States:
- testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits. 1465-1468, 1514, 1548
 - testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt. 2819, 2820
 - testimony of Mr. Konta. 649-650, 712
 - testimony of Mr. Steiner. 2831, 2832
- Hungary, farm life, testimony of Mr. Steiner. 2832
- see also* Austria-Hungary—Austro-Hungarian loans.
- Huntley, C. S., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits. 1548
- Hupfel, A. G., jr., letter from I. T. Martin. 1549
- Hupfel, J. C. G., testimony of Mr. Konta. 1550
- Hupfel, J. C. G., Brewing Company, letter to Hugh F. Fox. 1028
- Hurst, J. Ernst, testimony of Mr. Bielaski. 1549

I.

- Igel, Wolff von:
- testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits. 1538, 1539, 1540
 - testimony of Mr. Konta. 1541
 - testimony of Capt. Lester. 1542
- Illinois Publishing & Printing Co., testimony of Maj. Keehn. 270
- Illinois State Brewers' Association, see Legner, William, secretary. 271
- Illson, Martin, testimony of Mr. Tunney. 272
- Immigrants:
- letter of Julius Pirnitzer relating to propaganda to increase export of immigrants' savings. 2822
 - letter of Julius Pirnitzer relating to re-migration to Hungary. 2823-2826, 2829, 2830, 2831-2832, 2834
 - testimony of Mr. Steiner. 2823-2826, 2829, 2830, 2831-2832, 2834
 - transmission of money through Transatlantic Trust Co. 2835
- Independent Breweries Co., see Koehler, Hugo A., president.
- Indiana State Alliance of German Societies, see State Alliance of German Societies, Indiana.
- Indiana State Brewers' Association, testimony of Mr. Fox. 1029
- Indianapolis Brewing Co., see Deluse, Otto P.
- Industrial Union of North and South America, testimony of Mr. Stevenson. 1030
- Industrial Workers of the World:
- testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits. 2730-2731
 - testimony of Mr. Kennedy. 2732
 - testimony of Mr. Stevenson. 2733-2734
 - testimony of Mr. Tunney. 2735
- Insull, Samuel, statement relative to Hearst newspapers. 2736
- Intelligence services of United States, testimony of Mr. Bielaski. 2737
- Intercollegiate Socialist Society, see Laidler, Harry W., secretary.
- Internal Revenue Commissioner, see Osborn, W. H.
- International (magazine):
- testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits. 1421
 - testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibit. 102, 106
 - see also* Viereck, George Sylvester.
- International Bible Students' Association, testimony of Mr. Stevenson. 1031
- International Brewery Workers' Union, testimony of Mr. Fox. 1032

	Page.
International Film Service Corporation, testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1675
International Magazine Co., testimony of Joseph A. Moore_ 2418, 2421, 2432-2433
International News Service:
letter of Bradford Merrill.....	1911-1912
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1953
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1591
testimony of Mr. Brisbane.....	747
testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibits.....	1665, 1708-1770, 1778, 1817, 1922, 1925
International Press Exchange, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit_	1504-1505
International Working Men's Association, testimony of Mr. Stevenson...	2754
Interstate Executive Association:
letters from Hugh F. Fox, secretary, to members.....	813, 814
report recommending organization.....	807-808
Iowa, political activities of brewing and liquor interests, exhibits....	992-1021
Iowa Brewers' Association, report of board of trustees.....	1017-1020
Irish-American (newspaper), testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits_	1452-1453
Irish in United States, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1392, 1396-1398, 1577
Irish Press and News Service, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1396-1397
Iron Cross Society:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1990
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	706
Italian-American Advertising Agency, testimony of Mr. Hammerling....	465, 470-471

J.

Jack. M. W., president, American Bottle Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	120
Jacobsen, G. H.:
statement of Senator Hoke Smith.....	1648-1649
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1485. 1486-1487, 1489, 1490, 1500, 1576, 1601
Jaeger, Max, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1603
Janssen, H., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113.....	1543
Jarnagin, W. C., letter from George Marcellus.....	2747-2748
Jastrow, Morris, jr.:
letter from Prof. Jastrow to Senator Overman.....	1819-1820, 2505-2506
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
Jaudon, E. H.:
testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....	634, 635-636
testimony of Mr. Zotti.....	645
Jerome, Charles J., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1954, 2069
Jewell, Cuthbert W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1433
Jewish League of American Patriots:
testimony of Judge Levy.....	1829
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1843
Jews in United States, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits_	1448-1450, 1577
Johnson, Severance, testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2466-2467
Johnson, William, see Musica, Philip M.
Johnston, J. R., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	781-782
Jones, Paul, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2783
Jones, Rufus H., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2783
Jones, Wesley L., Senator from Washington, letter to Senator Overman_	27-29
Jordan, David Starr:
letter from Dr. Jordan to Senator Overman.....	2387-2388
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2715, 2717, 2783
Journal, Boston, see Boston Journal.
Journal, Paris, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1946, 1947, 1950, 1953, 1961-1962, 2040, 2374-2384
Jusserand, J. J., testimony of Mr. Becker, and letters.....	2332-2334

K.

Kahn, Otto H., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1995, 1996-1997, 2001, 2004-2005
Kaltschmidt, Albert, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1601

Kander, F. V.:
letter from Percy Andreae	106
letter to Percy Andreae	106
Kansas City Breweries Co., see Mann, Conrad.
Karolyi, Count Michael, testimony of Mr. Konta	64
Kaub, George H., secretary, Ph. Zang Brewing Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox
Kaufman, Marcus, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	145
Keasbey, Lindley M., testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Keasbey, Robert A., Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits
Keehn, Maj. Roy D., testimony	27
Keeley, Eugene M., testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5
Keeley, Thomas F., treasurer, finance committee, National Association of Commerce and Labor:
letter to Mr. Keeley from Sam T. Morgan letters from Mr. Keeley to—
Fox, Hugh F.
Morgan, Sam T.	153
Keller, Joseph, chairman, organization and publication committee, National German-American Alliance:
letters, etc., from Mr. Keller to—
Andreae, Percy	839, 840, 841, 842, 842-843, 843, 843-844, 844, 844-845, 847-848, 848, 848-849, 849, 849-850, 850, 851, 853, 854, 855, 856, 856-857, 860, 861, 862, 865, 865, 866, 866-867, 867, 869, 869-870, 870, 874-875, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 879-880, 880, 881, 882, 883, 883-884, 884, 885, 892, 894, 894
Gibson, L. H.
National Association of Commerce and Labor
letters, etc., to Mr. Keller	848 letters, etc., to Mr. Keller from—
Andreae, Percy	839, 840, 843, 844, 845, 847, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 855, 860, 861, 864, 865, 866, 869, 871, 874, 876, 876-877, 877, 878, 883
Barth, P. J.	1289-1290, 1290, 1290-1291, 1291, 1291-1292, 1292, 1292-1293, 1294, 1294-1295, 1295-1296, 1296-1297, 1297-1298, 1298, 1298-1299, 1299, 1299-1300, 1300, 1300-1301, 1301, 1301-1302, 1302, 1302-1303, 1303, 1303-1304, 1304, 1304-1305, 1305, 1305-1306, 1306, 1306-1307, 1307, 1307-1308, 1308, 1308-1309, 1309, 1309-1310, 1310, 1310-1311, 1311, 1311-1312, 1312, 1312-1313, 1313, 1313-1314, 1314, 1314-1315, 1315, 1315-1316, 1316, 1316-1317, 1317, 1317-1318, 1318, 1318-1319, 1319, 1319-1320, 1320, 1320-1321, 1321, 1321-1322, 1322, 1322-1323, 1323, 1323-1324, 1324, 1324-1325, 1325, 1325-1326, 1326, 1326-1327, 1327, 1327-1328, 1328, 1328-1329, 1329, 1329-1330, 1330, 1330-1331, 1331, 1331-1332, 1332, 1332-1333, 1333, 1333-1334, 1334, 1334-1335, 1335, 1335-1336, 1336, 1336-1337, 1337, 1337-1338, 1338, 1338-1339, 1339, 1339-1340, 1340, 1340-1341, 1341, 1341-1342, 1342, 1342-1343, 1343, 1343-1344, 1344, 1344-1345, 1345, 1345-1346, 1346, 1346-1347, 1347, 1347-1348, 1348, 1348-1349, 1349, 1349-1350, 1350, 1350-1351, 1351, 1351-1352, 1352, 1352-1353, 1353, 1353-1354, 1354, 1354-1355, 1355, 1355-1356, 1356, 1356-1357, 1357, 1357-1358, 1358, 1358-1359, 1359, 1359-1360, 1360, 1360-1361, 1361, 1361-1362, 1362, 1362-1363, 1363, 1363-1364, 1364, 1364-1365, 1365, 1365-1366, 1366, 1366-1367, 1367, 1367-1368, 1368, 1368-1369, 1369, 1369-1370, 1370, 1370-1371, 1371, 1371-1372, 1372, 1372-1373, 1373, 1373-1374, 1374, 1374-1375, 1375, 1375-1376, 1376, 1376-1377, 1377, 1377-1378, 1378, 1378-1379, 1379, 1379-1380, 1380, 1380-1381, 1381, 1381-1382, 1382, 1382-1383, 1383, 1383-1384, 1384, 1384-1385, 1385, 1385-1386, 1386, 1386-1387, 1387, 1387-1388, 1388, 1388-1389, 1389, 1389-1390, 1390, 1390-1391, 1391, 1391-1392, 1392, 1392-1393, 1393, 1393-1394, 1394, 1394-1395, 1395, 1395-1396, 1396, 1396-1397, 1397, 1397-1398, 1398, 1398-1399, 1399, 1399-1400, 1400, 1400-1401, 1401, 1401-1402, 1402, 1402-1403, 1403, 1403-1404, 1404, 1404-1405, 1405, 1405-1406, 1406, 1406-1407, 1407, 1407-1408, 1408, 1408-1409, 1409, 1409-1410, 1410, 1410-1411, 1411, 1411-1412, 1412, 1412-1413, 1413, 1413-1414, 1414, 1414-1415, 1415, 1415-1416, 1416, 1416-1417, 1417, 1417-1418, 1418, 1418-1419, 1419, 1419-1420, 1420, 1420-1421, 1421, 1421-1422, 1422, 1422-1423, 1423, 1423-1424, 1424, 1424-1425, 1425, 1425-1426, 1426, 1426-1427, 1427, 1427-1428, 1428, 1428-1429, 1429, 1429-1430, 1430, 1430-1431, 1431, 1431-1432, 1432, 1432-1433, 1433, 1433-1434, 1434, 1434-1435, 1435, 1435-1436, 1436, 1436-1437, 1437, 1437-1438, 1438, 1438-1439, 1439, 1439-1440, 1440, 1440-1441, 1441, 1441-1442, 1442, 1442-1443, 1443, 1443-1444, 1444, 1444-1445, 1445, 1445-1446, 1446, 1446-1447, 1447, 1447-1448, 1448, 1448-1449, 1449, 1449-1450, 1450, 1450-1451, 1451, 1451-1452, 1452, 1452-1453, 1453, 1453-1454, 1454, 1454-1455, 1455, 1455-1456, 1456, 1456-1457, 1457, 1457-1458, 1458, 1458-1459, 1459, 1459-1460, 1460, 1460-1461, 1461, 1461-1462, 1462, 1462-1463, 1463, 1463-1464, 1464, 1464-1465, 1465, 1465-1466, 1466, 1466-1467, 1467, 1467-1468, 1468, 1468-1469, 1469, 1469-1470, 1470, 1470-1471, 1471, 1471-1472, 1472, 1472-1473, 1473, 1473-1474, 1474, 1474-1475, 1475, 1475-1476, 1476, 1476-1477, 1477, 1477-1478, 1478, 1478-1479, 1479, 1479-1480, 1480, 1480-1481, 1481, 1481-1482, 1482, 1482-1483, 1483, 1483-1484, 1484, 1484-1485, 1485, 1485-1486, 1486, 1486-1487, 1487, 1487-1488, 1488, 1488-1489, 1489, 1489-1490, 1490, 1490-1491, 1491, 1491-1492, 1492, 1492-1493, 1493, 1493-1494, 1494, 1494-1495, 1495, 1495-1496, 1496, 1496-1497, 1497, 1497-1498, 1498, 1498-1499, 1499, 1499-1500, 1500, 1500-1501, 1501, 1501-1502, 1502, 1502-1503, 1503, 1503-1504, 1504, 1504-1505, 1505, 1505-1506, 1506, 1506-1507, 1507, 1507-1508, 1508, 1508-1509, 1509, 1509-1510, 1510, 1510-1511, 1511, 1511-1512, 1512, 1512-1513, 1513, 1513-1514, 1514, 1514-1515, 1515, 1515-1516, 1516, 1516-1517, 1517, 1517-1518, 1518, 1518-1519, 1519, 1519-1520, 1520, 1520-1521, 1521, 1521-1522, 1522, 1522-1523, 1523, 1523-1524, 1524, 1524-1525, 1525, 1525-1526, 1526, 1526-1527, 1527, 1527-1528, 1528, 1528-1529, 1529, 1529-1530, 1530, 1530-1531, 1531, 1531-1532, 1532, 1532-1533, 1533, 1533-1534, 1534, 1534-1535, 1535, 1535-1536, 1536, 1536-1537, 1537, 1537-1538, 1538, 1538-1539, 1539, 1539-1540, 1540, 1540-1541, 1541, 1541-1542, 1542, 1542-1543, 1543, 1543-1544, 1544, 1544-1545, 1545, 1545-1546, 1546, 1546-1547, 1547, 1547-1548, 1548, 1548-1549, 1549, 1549-1550, 1550, 1550-1551, 1551, 1551-1552, 1552, 1552-1553, 1553, 1553-1554, 1554, 1554-1555, 1555, 1555-1556, 1556, 1556-1557, 1557, 1557-1558, 1558, 1558-1559, 1559, 1559-1560, 1560, 1560-1561, 1561, 1561-1562, 1562, 1562-1563, 1563, 1563-1564, 1564, 1564-1565, 1565, 1565-1566, 1566, 1566-1567, 1567, 1567-1568, 1568, 1568-1569, 1569, 1569-1570, 1570, 1570-1571, 1571, 1571-1572, 1572, 1572-1573, 1573, 1573-1574, 1574, 1574-1575, 1575, 1575-1576, 1576, 1576-1577, 1577, 1577-1578, 1578, 1578-1579, 1579, 1579-1580, 1580, 1580-1581, 1581, 1581-1582, 1582, 1582-1583, 1583, 1583-1584, 1584, 1584-1585, 1585, 1585-1586, 1586, 1586-1587, 1587, 1587-1588, 1588, 1588-1589, 1589, 1589-1590, 1590, 1590-1591, 1591, 1591-1592, 1592, 1592-1593, 1593, 1593-1594, 1594, 1594-1595, 1595, 1595-1596, 1596, 1596-1597, 1597, 1597-1598, 1598, 1598-1599, 1599, 1599-1600, 1600, 1600-1601, 1601, 1601-1602, 1602, 1602-1603, 1603, 1603-1604, 1604, 1604-1605, 1605, 1605-1606, 1606, 1606-1607, 1607, 1607-1608, 1608, 1608-1609, 1609, 1609-1610, 1610, 1610-1611, 1611, 1611-1612, 1612, 1612-1613, 1613, 1613-1614, 1614, 1614-1615, 1615, 1615-1616, 1616, 1616-1617, 1617, 1617-1618, 1618, 1618-1619, 1619, 1619-1620, 1620, 1620-1621, 1621, 1621-1622, 1622, 1622-1623, 1623, 1623-1624, 1624, 1624-1625, 1625, 1625-1626, 1626, 1626-1627, 1627, 1627-1628, 1628, 1628-1629, 1629, 1629-1630, 1630, 1630-1631, 1631, 1631-1632, 1632, 1632-1633, 1633, 1633-1634, 1634, 1634-1635, 1635, 1635-1636, 1636, 1636-1637, 1637, 1637-1638, 1638, 1638-1639, 1639, 1639-1640, 1640, 1640-1641, 1641, 1641-1642, 1642, 1642-1643, 1643, 1643-1644, 1644, 1644-1645, 1645, 1645-1646, 1646, 1646-1647, 1647, 1647-1648, 1648, 1648-1649, 1649, 1649-1650, 1650, 1650-1651, 1651, 1651-1652, 1652, 1652-1653, 1653, 1653-1654, 1654, 1654-1655, 1655, 1655-1656, 1656, 1656-1657, 1657, 1657-1658, 1658, 1658-1659, 1659, 1659-1660, 1660, 1660-1661, 1661, 1661-1662, 1662, 1662-1663, 1663, 1663-1664, 1664, 1664-1665, 1665, 1665-1666, 1666, 1666-1667, 1667, 1667-1668, 1668, 1668-1669, 1669, 1669-1670, 1670, 1670-1671, 1671, 1671-1672, 1672, 1672-1673, 1673, 1673-1674, 1674, 1674-1675, 1675, 1675-1676, 1676, 1676-1677, 1677, 1677-1678, 1678, 1678-1679, 1679, 1679-1680, 1680, 1680-1681, 1681, 1681-1682, 1682, 1682-1683, 1683, 1683-1684, 1684, 1684-1685, 1685, 1685-1686, 1686, 1686-1687, 1687, 1687-1688, 1688, 1688-1689, 1689, 1689-1690, 1690, 1690-1691, 1691, 1691-1692, 1692, 1692-1693, 1693, 1693-1694, 1694, 1694-1695, 1695, 1695-1696, 1696, 1696-1697, 1697, 1697-1698, 1698, 1698-1699, 1699, 1699-1700, 1700, 1700-1701, 1701, 1701-1702, 1702, 1702-1703, 1703, 1703-1704, 1704, 1704-1705, 1705, 1705-1706, 1706, 1706-1707, 1707, 1707-1708, 1708, 1708-1709, 1709, 1709-1710, 1710, 1710-1711, 1711, 1711-1712, 1712, 1712-1713, 1713, 1713-1714, 1714, 1714-1715, 1715, 1715-1716, 1716, 1716-1717, 1717, 1717-1718, 1718, 1718-1719, 1719, 1719-1720, 1720, 1720-1721, 1721, 1721-1722, 1722, 1722-1723, 1723, 1723-1724, 1724, 1724-1725, 1725, 1725-1726, 1726, 1726-1727, 1727, 1727-1728, 1728, 1728-1729, 1729, 1729-1730, 1730, 1730-1731, 1731, 1731-1732, 1732, 1732-1733, 1733, 1733-1734, 1734, 1734-1735, 1735, 1735-1736, 1736, 1736-1737, 1737, 1737-1738, 1738, 1738-1739, 1739, 1739-1740, 1740, 1740-1741, 1741, 1741-1742, 1742, 1742-1743, 1743, 1743-1744, 1744, 1744-1745, 1745, 1745-1746, 1746, 1746-1747, 1747, 1747-1748, 1748, 1748-1749, 1749, 1749-1750, 1750, 1750-1751, 1751, 1751-1752, 1752, 1752-1753, 1753, 1753-1754, 1754, 1754-1755, 1755, 1755-1756, 1756, 1756-1757, 1757, 1757-1758, 1758, 1758-1759, 1759, 1759-1760, 1760, 1760-1761, 1761, 1761-1762, 1762, 1762-1763, 1763, 1763-1764, 1764, 1764-1765, 1765, 1765-1766, 1766, 1766-1767, 1767, 1767-1768, 1768, 1768-1769, 1769, 1769-1770, 1770, 1770-1771, 1771, 1771-1772, 1772, 1772-1773, 1773, 1773-1774, 1774, 1774-1775, 1775, 1775-1776, 1776, 1776-1777, 1777, 1777-1778, 1778, 1778-1779, 1779, 1779-1780, 1780, 1780-1781, 1781, 1781-1782, 1782, 1782-1783, 1783, 1783-1784, 1784, 1784-1785, 1785, 1785-1786, 1786, 1786-1787, 1787, 1787-1788, 1788, 1788-1789, 1789, 1789-1790, 1790, 1790-1791, 1791, 1791-1792, 1792, 1792-1793, 1793, 1793-1794, 1794, 1794-1795, 1795, 1795-1796, 1796, 1796-1797, 1797, 1797-1798, 1798, 1798-1799, 1799, 1799-1800, 1800, 1800-1801, 1801, 1801-1802, 1802, 1802-1803, 1803, 1803-1804, 1804, 1804-1805, 1805, 1805-1806, 1806, 1806-1807, 1807, 1807-1808, 1808, 1808-1809, 1809, 1809-1810, 1810, 1810-1811, 1811, 1811-1812, 1812, 1812-1813, 1813, 1813-1814, 1814, 1814-1815, 1815, 1815-1816, 1816, 1816-1817, 1817, 1817-1818, 1818, 1818-1819, 1819, 1819-1820, 1820, 1820-1821, 1821, 1821-1822, 1822, 1822-1823, 1823, 1823-1824, 1824, 1824-1825, 1825, 1825-1826, 1826, 1826-1827, 1827, 1827-1828, 1828, 1828-1829, 1829, 1829-1830, 1830, 1830-1831, 1831, 1831-1832, 1832, 1832-1833, 1833, 1833-1834, 1834, 1834-1835, 1835, 1835-1836, 1836, 1836-1837, 1837, 1837-1838, 1838, 1838-1839, 1839, 1839-1840, 1840, 1840-1841, 1841, 1841-1842, 1842, 1842-1843, 1843, 1843-1844, 1844, 1844-1845, 1845, 1845-1846, 1846, 1846-1847, 1847, 1847-1848, 1848, 1848-1849, 1849, 1849-1850, 1850, 1850-1851, 1851, 1851-1852, 1852, 1852-1853, 1853, 1853-1854, 1854, 1854-1855, 1855, 1855-1856, 1856, 1856-1857, 1857, 1857-1858, 1858, 1858-1859, 1859, 1859-1860, 1860, 1860-1861, 1861, 1861-1862, 1862, 1862-1863, 1863, 1863-1864, 1864, 1864-1865, 1865, 1865-1866, 1866, 1866-1867, 1867, 1867-1868, 1868, 1868-1869, 1869, 1869-1870, 1870, 1870-1871, 1871, 1871-1872, 1872, 1872-1873, 1873, 1873-1874, 1874, 1874-1875, 1875, 1875-1876, 1876, 1876-1877, 1877, 1877-1878, 1878, 1878-1879, 1879, 1879-1880, 1880, 1880-1881, 1881, 1881-1882, 1882, 1882-1883, 1883, 1883-1884, 1884, 1884-1885, 1885, 1885-1886, 1886, 1886-1887, 1887, 1887-1888, 1888, 1888-1889, 1889, 1889-1890, 1890, 1890-1891, 1891, 1891-1892, 1892, 1892-1893, 1893, 1893-1894, 1894, 1894-1895, 1895, 1895-1896, 1896, 1896-1897, 1897, 1897-1898, 1898, 1898-1899, 1899, 1899-1900, 1900, 1900-1901, 1901, 1901-1902, 1902, 1902-1903, 1903, 1903-1904, 1904, 1904-1905, 1905, 1905-1906, 1906, 1906-1907, 1907, 1907-1908, 1908, 1908-1909, 1909, 1909-1910, 1910, 1910-1911, 1911, 1911-1912, 1912, 1912-1913, 1913, 1913-1914, 1914, 1914-1915, 1915, 1915-1916, 1916, 1916-1917, 1917, 1917-1918, 1918, 1918-1919, 1919, 1919-1920, 1920, 1920-1921, 1921, 1921-1922, 1922, 1922-1923, 1923, 1923-1924, 1924, 1924-1925, 1925, 1925-1926, 1926, 1926-1927, 1927, 1927-1928, 1928, 1928-1929, 1929, 1929-1930, 1930, 1930-1931, 1931, 1931-1932, 1932, 1932-1933, 1933, 1933-1934, 1934, 1934-1935, 1935, 1935-1936, 1936, 1936-1937, 1937, 1937-1938, 1938, 1938-1939, 1939, 1939-1940, 1940, 1940-1941, 1941, 1941-1942, 1942, 1942-1943, 1943, 1943-1944, 1944, 1944-1945, 1945, 1945-1946, 19

	Page.
Kleist, Charles von :
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1601
testimony of Mr. Tunney	2675
Knapp, Martin H., secretary, Solvay Process Co. :
letters from Hugh F. Fox	122, 124, 125-126
letters to Hugh F. Fox	121, 122-123, 124, 126
Knauth, W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113	1543
Knowles, L. W., letter to Louis N. Hammerling	614-615
Koehler, George E., of H. Koehler & Co., letter from Hugh F. Fox	1028
Koehler, Hugo A., president, Independent Breweries Co. :
letter to Mr. Koehler from Hugh F. Fox	762 letters from Mr. Koehler to—
Fox, Hugh F	761
Gardiner, John	996
Koehler, Otto, president, San Antonio Brewing Association, letter from A. G. Ricks	1299
Koenig, A. S., of Christian Feigenspan (a Corporation), letter to Hugh F. Fox	1026-1027
Koenig, Paul :
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1602
testimony of Mr. Means	2119-2120
testimony of Mr. Tunney	2672-2673, 2688
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1899
Koenig, Capt. Paul :
letter of Bradford Merrill referring to Capt. Koenig	1912
testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibits	1772-1774, 1817-1818, 1922
testimony of Joseph A. Moore	2419, 2420-2421, 2428-2432
testimony of Mr. Squires	2512-2517
Koeter, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1600
Konig, Sam, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt	2811
Konta, Alexander :
affidavit	33
letters from Mr. Konta to—
Albert, Dr. Heinrich	666, 677, 680, 694
Churchill, William	718
Dernburg, Dr. Bernhard	11-12, 13-15
New York Times	671
Tauscher, Hans	10-11, 16
letters to Mr. Konta from—
Albert, Dr. Heinrich	681-682
Campbell, Lieut. W. L.	655
testimony	648-732
testimony of Mr. Steiner	2829
Konta, Arnold, testimony of Alexander Konta	657, 676
Koren, John :
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	58
testimony of Mr. Fox	86-87, 110, 111
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	579
Krehbiel, Edward, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2783
Kresge, S. S., Company, testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	279
Kriegsausschuss der Deutschen Industrie, testimony of Mr. Becker	1983
Kriegsbund, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	2242-2243
Kropp Seminary :
letter of Paul Ludwig	1820-1821
statement of T. E. Schmauk	1805
testimony of Capt. Lester	1790
Kuhn, Loeb & Co. :
testimony of Mr. Becker	1985-1986, 1988, 1994-2005
testimony of Capt. Lester	2154-2155
Kuthy, Dr. Zoltan, circular letter from Dr. Kuthy	2816

L.

Labor Bureau, Hans Liebau, see Liebau, Hans, Labor Bureau.
Labor Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies, see Agricultural Labor Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies.

- Labor troubles:
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits..... 1466-1468, 1514, 1548-1551
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits.....
 testimony of Mr. Konta.....
 Labor unions, testimony of Mr. Bielaski..... 1584
 Labor's Emergency Liberty League, testimony of Mr. Fox.....
 Labor's National Peace Council:
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski..... 1404, 1571-1574, 1583-1587
 testimony of Mr. Fox.....
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Laidler, Harry W., secretary, Intercollegiate Socialist Society, telegram to Senator Overman..... 2857
 Lamar, David:
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski..... 1571-1574, 1584
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 testimony of Mr. Konta.....
 Lanahan, John T., testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Landsberg, Edward:
 testimony of Mr. Arnold..... 2559, 2565, 2588, 2589
 testimony of Mr. Konta.....
 testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5.....
 Lang, Louis J., testimony of Mr. Becker..... 2587
 Larsen, Lauritz, see, as secretary, National Lutheran Council.
 Laut, Agnes, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits..... 1428-1437
 Lawyers' Title & Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Becker.....
 Leach, Agnes Brown, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
 Leader (newspaper), testimony of Judge Levy..... 1822-1823, 1827
 League of American Women for Strict Neutrality, see Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality.
 League of Conscientious Objectors, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
 League of Democratic Control, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
 League to Limit Armaments, see American League to Limit Armaments.
 Lee, Algernon, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
 Lee, R. Lanford:
 telegram from M. H. Luff..... telegram to M. H. Luff.....
 Leffler, Bertha W.:
 affidavit.....
 testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Leffler, Margaret C.: affidavit.....
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Legner, William, secretary, Illinois State Brewers' Association, letter from Hugh F. Fox.....
 Lembeck, Gustav W., treasurer, United States Brewers' Association: letter from C. Fairbanks..... letter to C. Fairbanks.....
 Lemke, Theodore R., testimony of Mr. Untermeyer..... 1870, 1906
 Lester, Capt. George B.: order detalling Capt. Lester to aid committee..... testimony..... 1664-1813, 1916-1926, 2154-2166, 2437-
 2438
 Leve, Gustav, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt..... 2908
 Levison, J. B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers..... 2195, 2206
 Levy, Aaron J.:
 letter from Judge Levy to Senator Overman..... 1652 letter of Louis E. Miller referring to Judge Levy..... 1647
 testimony..... 1822
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
 testimony of Mr. Untermeyer..... 1846
 Lewis, Carmalita, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Lewis, Liston, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 Lewis, Merton E.:
 testimony of Mr. Becker..... 2037-2039, 2040, 2043
 2046-2049, 2053-2056, 2074-2075, 2077-2092, 2437-2441, 2457-2458 testimony of Mr. Morse..... 2468

	Page.
Liberty Defense League, see American Liberty Defense League.
Liberty Defense Union, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2716-2717
Liberty Immigration Society, testimony of Mr. Hammerling	563-564
Liebau, Hans, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1549
Liebau, Hans, Labor Bureau:
documents and letters	2795-2796, 2797-2805
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1549-1563
Liebfels, steamship, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1604
Lieber, Albert, vice-chairman, National Educational Bureau, letter to American Brewing Association	1302-1303
Liebman, James, testimony of Mr. Fox	313
Liebmann, Charles J., S. Liebmann & Sons Brewing Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox	1091
Liebmann, Julius, president, United States Brewers' Association:
letter from Mr. Liebmann to John A. McDermott	1123
letters to Mr. Liebmann from John A. McDermott	1054-1055, 1122-1123 report to Mr. Liebmann of organization committee	830-831
testimony of Mr. Konta	658
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2	39
Lincoln, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1591
Lincoln Daily Star, see Daily Star, Lincoln.
Ludemann, Aug., letter to Hugh F. Fox	1053
Liquor advertising:
testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	309-313, 320-321
testimony of Mr. Hammerling, and exhibits	473-484
Lloyd, John, letter to Mr. Lloyd	992-993
Lochner, Louis P., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2713, 2715, 2783
Long Star Brewing Co., letters from Hugh F. Fox	1309, 1323
see also Bruhn, H., secretary.
Lord, Edmund B., testimony of Mr. Gardiner	331
Lorillard, P., & Co., testimony of Mr. Gabryel	630-631
Louisville Drying Machinery Co., letter from I. A. Stein	1332
Lowe, Theodore E.:
statement of Mr. Garthe	1659-1664
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1432, 1469-1473, 1481
Lubin, Jacob, testimony of Mr. Becker	2411-2412, 2416-2417, 2441-2442, 2443-2445
Ludwig, Paul, letter to Senator Nelson	1820-1821
Luff, M. H.:
telegram from R. Lanford Lee	1607
telegram to R. Lanford Lee	1607
Lusitania, steamship:
letter of Julius Pirnitzer to Baron Zwiedinek referring to sinking	2880
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1390, 1394, 1603
testimony of Mr. von Mach	2268
testimony of Mr. Means	2129-2130
Lusztig, Ignatz:
letter from John Skotthy	2888
letter to John Skotthy	2888
Lutheran Church:
letter to Senator Overman from National Lutheran Council	1804-1806
testimony of Capt. Lester	1787-1791
Lynch, Frederick, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2707, 2784
Lyons, Cooper, secretary and treasurer, Farmers' and Manufacturers' Al- liance, letter to San Antonio Brewing Association	1311-1312
Lyons, Walter, testimony of Mr. Becker	2006

M.

McClellan, George B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1899
McClement, John H., testimony of Mr. Becker	2010-2011
McClure, S. S.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibits	1393, 1423
testimony of Mr. Stowell	2177

- McDermott, John A., manager, organization bureau, United States Brewers' Association: letters, etc., from Mr. McDermott to—
 Fox, Hugh F.----- 11.
 Galveston Brewing Company-----
 Liebmann, Julius----- 1054-1055, 112 letters, etc., to Mr. McDermott from—Buckmann, H. H.----- 1055-1056, 112
 Liebmann, Julius-----
 Moersch, Julius-----
 Thompson, George J.-----
 report of organization bureau, United States Brewers' Association reports to United States Brewers' Association on Denver convention 1908----- 117
 testimony-----
 testimony of Mr. Arnold-----
 testimony of Mr. Feigenspan-----
 testimony of Mr. Gardiner----- testimony of James Moore-----
 McDonald, James G.:
 letter from Mr. McDonald to Senator Overman-----
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----
 MacDonald, Will R., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibits----- 138
 McElroy, R. M., telegram to Senator Overman-----
 Macey Company, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits-----
 McGee, Charles A. C.: telegram to Senator Overman-----
 testimony-----
 McGuire, James K., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 1392, 1393 Mach, Edmund von:
 testimony-----
 testimony of Mr. Becker----- 2024, 2025
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 1399, 1427, 1428
 testimony of Prof. Hart----- 1627, 1628
 testimony of Mr. Stowell----- 1639-1641, 2179, 2181, 2182
 McIntyre, Gen. Frank:
 letters to J. J. Dickinson----- 2615-2616, 2617 testimony of J. J. Dickinson-----
 Mack, Norman E., see, as editor, National Monthly.
 McLaughlin, A. C., telegram to Senator Overman-----
 McLean, Edward, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 14
 McLean, John R., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 140
 McNeill, Walter M. S., testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----
 Madden, Richard, testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----
 Madison Cooper Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits-----
 Magnes, Judah L., testimony of Mr. Stevenson----- 2700, 2701
 Mahan, John E., Advertising Agency, testimony of Mr. Hammerling----- Mail, New York, see New York Evening Mail.
 Malitz, Felix, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits----- 141
 Malkiel, Theresa T., testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----
 Malone, Thomas H.:
 letter to Senator Overman-----
 letter to Samuel Untermyer-----
 Mamer (or Maurer), James H., testimony of Mr. Stevenson----- 2702
 Mann, Conrad, Kansas City Breweries Co., letter from Percy Anderson-----
 Mannheim Insurance Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers-----
 Marcellus, George, letter to Mr. Jarnagin-----
 Martin, Henry B., testimony of Mr. Bielaski----- 1572-1573, 1582-1584
 Martin, I. T.:
 letters from Miss Martin to—
 Fox, Hugh F.----- 820-821
 Hupfel, A. G., jr-----
 testimony of Mr. Fox-----
 Martin, Robert Bruce, testimony of Mr. Kennedy-----
 Marx, Ernst, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 3----- Maryland Casualty Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits-----

	Page
lasterson, Hugh H., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1408, 1414 laurer, James H., see Mamer (or Maurer), James H.
lay, Max, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2009-2010
layer, Levi, testimony of Mr. Brisbane.....	750-751
leans, Gaston B.:
letter of Maj. Keehn referring to Mr. Means.....	2256-2257
testimony.....	2111-2153
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1450-1451, 2193-2195
lechanics' and Metals National Bank:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1988
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2155-2156
lecklenburg, Dr., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2695
leek Company, see American Art Works.
elamed, S. M., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1448-1450
eloy, Andrew D., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1604
erchant, Walter, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2753 erchants' Loan & Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1988
erkel, Otto:
statement of Mr. Stowell.....	1639-1641, 2179, 2181-2182
testimony of Prof. Hart.....	1628-1629
errill, Bradford:
letter to E. Norgrove Cox.....	1665
letter to Senator Overman.....	1910-1916
testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2512-2517
leunta, Eric, alias , see Holt, John.
lexican Telegraph Co., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2694, 2695
lexico:
Bolshevism in—
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2755
German propaganda in—
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1545-1546, 1581-1582, 2239-2240
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1687
leyer, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1390, 1391, 1394
leyer, Gustave, testimony of Mr. Fox.....	111
leyer-Gerhard, Dr., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits....	1389, 1391, 1394
lezger, Oscar, testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1689 ilitarism, American Union against, see American Union against Milltarism.
ilitary Intelligence Division, restriction on furnishing of information by officers.....	2844-2847, 2922-2923
iller, Fred, Brewing Co.:
letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	1032
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	658
iller, Hermann, letter to Joseph Keller.....	868
iller, Louis E.:
letter from Judge Levy referring to Mr. Miller.....	1656-1657 letters from Mr. Miller to—
Overman, Lee S.....	1645-1646
Untermeyer, Samuel.....	1645-1646
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1980
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1447
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	556
testimony of Judge Levy.....	1822-1834
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1844, 1845-1847
iller's Weekly, testimony of Judge Levy.....	1828, 1832
ilwaukee Free Press, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit.....	1588 inotto, James, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1994-1995, 2000-2001, 2010
linuth, Fred R.:
letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	767
letter to United States Brewers' Association.....	766-767
ississippi Valley Trust Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1988
testimony of Maj. Humes.....	2166, 2167-2173
itchell, John, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	533
itchell, R. C., telegram from J. W. Willcombe.....	1609

Mitchell, Roscoe C., secretary, American League for National Unity, letter from Alfred K. Nippert.....	120
Moerlein, John, testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5.....
Moersch, Julius:
letters, etc., from Mr. Moersch to—
Andreae, Percy.....	90
McDermott, John A.....	100
letters, etc., to Mr. Moersch from Percy Andreae.....
testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....
testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	20
testimony of Mr. McDermott.....
Momand, Don S., affidavit.....
Monahan, Michael, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibit.....	102-103, 104
Montana Commercial and Labor League, testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....
Montgomery Advertiser:
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	62
testimony of James Moore, exhibits 6-8, 14.....	42, 43
Moon Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....
Moore, James, testimony.....
Moore, Joseph A.:
testimony.....	238
testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2513 251
Morgan, J. Edward, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Morgan, J. P. & Co., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1944-1945, 1961, 20
Morgan, Sam T., president, Dallas Brewery: letter from Mr. Morgan to Thomas F. Keeley..... letters to Mr. Morgan from—
Autrey, R. L.....
Crain, Robert.....
Keeley, Thomas F.....	130
Morning Ledger, Newark, see Newark Morning Ledger.
Morse, Perley:
testimony.....	240
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2049, 2051, 2053, 2405, 2415, 24
Most, Johann, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	27
Motor (magazine), testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....
Motor boating (magazine), testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....
Moving pictures:
use in German propaganda—
testimony of Mr. Becker, and exhibits.....	202
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	143
Münsterberg, Hugo:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
testimony of Prof. Hart.....
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	203
Muller, Julius, testimony of Mr. Becker.....
Mulvihill, James P., testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....
Munitions, proposed embargo on shipment, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	148
Muse, R. V., testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	234
Musica, Philip M.:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2373-2374, 2412-2413, 2417-2418, 244
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2405-2406
Mygatt, Tracy, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....

N.

Nachrichtendienst für die Länder Spanischer und Portugiesischer Zunge	1907
testimony of Mr. Becker	-----
Nagel, Charles:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1399, 1411
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	577, 578
Namier, L. B., testimony of Mr. Hammerling	-----
National Association of City Editors, testimony of Mr. Steen	227, 228

	Page.
National Association of Commerce and Labor :
county surveys-----	1256-1269, 1343-1372
exhibits -----	839-896, 925-992
letters from—
Fox, Hugh F-----	950, 951
Keller, Joseph-----	846
Stein, I. A-----	1329
letters to—
Keller, Joseph-----	846
Prince, H -----	1329-1330
minutes of meetings of—
executive committee, Jan. 24, 1916-----	936-937
joint committees of National Association of Commerce and Labor and United States Brewers' Association, Jan. 22, 1915---	934-935 organization meeting, Oct. 3, 1913-----	371-399
report of auditor, June 30, 1915-----	426-454
reports on activities, Nov. 14, 1914-----	455-463
statement of receipts and expenditures, Jan. 21, 1915-----	1277
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan-----	63, 66-69
testimony of Mr. Fox-----	88-89, 93-96, 305-306, 313, 316
testimony of Mr. Hammerling-----	474, 477, 483, 485
testimony of Mr. McDermott-----	408
see also Andreae, Percy, president—Bush, E. T.—Keeley, Thomas F., treasurer, finance committee.
National Association of Manufacturers, see Van Cleave, J. W., president.
National Biscuit Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits-----	227-229
National Civil Liberties Bureau :
testimony of Mr. Bielaski-----	2254
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2707-2709, 2711, 2714, 2732-2733, 2734-2735
National Courier :
statement of Mr. Garthe-----	1657-1664
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits-----	1432-1433, 1469-1473
National Educational Bureau, see Lieber, Albert, vice-chairman.
National Farmers' Union :
testimony of Mr. Arnold-----	2525, 2526-2527, 2529-2532, 2536-2537, 2540
testimony of Mr. Bowen-----	2747
National Federation of Retail Liquor Dealers, testimony of Mr. Gardiner--	339
National German-American Alliance :
exhibits -----	839-911, 1202-1256, 1279-1299
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan-----	63
testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits-----	296-306
testimony of Mr. Gardiner-----	329-330
testimony of Mr. Hammerling-----	488-489
testimony of Mr. Kennedy-----	2663, 2668
testimony of Mr. McDermott-----	409, 411
testimony of Mr. Stevenson-----	2692
see also German-American Alliance, Cincinnati— also Hexamer, C. J., president—Keller, Joseph, chairman, organization and publica- tion committee.
National Investors' Protective League, testimony of Mr. Fox-----	314
National Liquor League of United States, see Harvey, Hugh A., chairman, Congressional committee.
National Lutheran Council, letter to Senator Overman-----	1804-1806
National Monthly, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibit-----	107-110
National Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits-----	275
National Religious Training School and Chautauqua for the Colored Race (Inc.), see Shepard, James E.
National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association :
exhibits-----	839-896, 1049-1071
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan-----	64-66, 79
testimony of Mr. Fox-----	292, 307-308
testimony of Mr. Gardiner-----	331-332, 338
testimony of Mr. Kennedy-----	2661-2662
testimony of Mr. McDermott-----	402, 410-411, 414, 416, 422
testimony of Mr. Sunstein-----	128-131
Naturalization frauds, testimony of Mr. Hammerling-----	607-609

Nearing, Scott:	P. 2
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	---
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2707, 2715, 2716
Negroes:
German propaganda among—
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	---
testimony of Capt. Lester	174
Nelles, Walter, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	---
Nelson, Knute, Senator from Minnesota:
letters, etc., to Senator Nelson from—
Grosscup, Peter S.	1647
Ludwig, Paul	185
Strauss, Simon	---
Nemeth, John:
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	---
testimony of Mr. Konta	---
Neutral Conference Committee, see American Neutral Conference Committee.
New Jersey Agricultural Chemical Co., testimony of Mr. Tunney	---
New Jersey Development Co., testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	---
New Jersey State Brewers' Association, testimony of Mr. Feigenspan, and exhibit	---
New Jersey State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	---
New Republic, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	---
New York American, testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibits	1687- 1778-1784, 1846
see also Hearst, William Randolph.
New York Evening Journal, testimony of Mr. Brisbane	737
New York Evening Mail:
testimony of Mr. Becker	1978-1980
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1454-1455, 1577
testimony of Mr. Brisbane	---
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1877
New York State Brewers' Association, see Schaefer, Rudolph J.
New York State Republican primary campaign, 1918, testimony of Mr. Becker	2037-2039, 2041-2042, 2043, 2454
New York Sun, see Sun, New York.
New York Times:
letter to the Times from Alexander Konta	---
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	---
New Yorker Staats-Zeitung:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1577
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2773-2774, 2777
Newark Morning Ledger, testimony of Mr. Feigenspan, and exhibits	---
Newlander, Carl, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	---
Newman, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	---
News, Grand Junction, see Grand Junction News.
Newspapers, list of socialist newspapers	2741
see also Foreign language newspapers— also names of newspapers
Newton, Charles D.:
letter to Thomas W. Gregory	2417
testimony of Mr. Becker	2400, 2401
Nice, L. C.:
letter from Mr. Nice to Charles H. Allen	--- letters to Mr. Nice from—
Allen, Charles H.	---
Smith, Tom O.	---
Nichols Copper Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	194
Nicholson, James R., testimony of Mr. Fox	---
Nippert, Alfred K., letter to Roscoe C. Mitchell	1226
No Conscription League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2718
Noble, Howard, secretary, Brewers' Association of Massachusetts:
letters from Hugh F. Fox	774, 1109
letters to Hugh F. Fox	1109
Nock, A. J., testimony of Mr. Fox	---

	Page.
Nonpartisan League:
testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2665-2667
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2718-2719
Lord-Deutsche Insurance Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers..	2195-2239
North Baltimore Bottle Glass Co., see Pfau, A. L., president.
North German Lloyd Line:
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1684
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2688
Northcliffe, Alfred Harmsworth, baron, testimony of Mr. Brisbane..	734, 745-746
Northern Trust Co.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2193-2194
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2143-2146
Northwestern National Bank:
accounts of United States Brewers' Association.....	400
testimony of Mr. Fox.....	326
testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....	341
testimony of James Moore.....	38-52
Huber von Pereked, Alexander:
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2811
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	670, 705

O.

Oakman, Walter G., testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
O'Brian, —, testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1677-1678
O'Brian, John Lord, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2401
O'dell, George, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1978-1980
Official Confidential Bulletin, United States Brewers' Association.....	124
O'Hare, Kate Richards, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2716-2717, 2739, 2784
Ohio City Editors' Association, testimony of Mr. Steen.....	2852-2853, 2855
Old Colony Breweries Co., see Haffenreffer, R. F., jr., treasurer.
O'Leary, Jeremiah:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1411, 1418, 1541-1543
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2696
O'Leary, John J., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113.....	1543
Olsen, J. T.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2194
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2143-2145
Opinion Publique, see Belisle, C. Edward, publisher.
Orange County Brewery, see Young, Charles C.
Oration Investment Co., testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	71
Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1394-1395, 1403
testimony of Capt. Lester, exhibit.....	1792-1793
Orr, O. G., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers.....	2198-2201, 2202, 2203, 2218, 2229, 2235
Osborn, Frank H., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers..	2198, 2200, 2229, 2235
Osborn, W. H., Commissioner of Internal Revenue, letter from Pennsyl- vania State Brewers' Association.....	1077
Osborn Manufacturing Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	157-158
Osborne, F. I., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2147-2148
O'Sheel, Shaemus, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits..	1408-1410, 1414, 1426
Oswald, Edward, letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	125
O'Toole, Laurence S., telegram to William R. Hearst.....	1609
Otto, Rudolph H., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2127, 2135, 2136, 2140
Otto, Theodore, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1561-1563, 1569
Oucken, Hermann, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 3.....	1392
Over, Spencer H., general manager, James Hanley Brewing Co., letter to Hugh F. Fox.....	949
Overman, Lee S., Senator from North Carolina:
letters, etc., from Senator Overman to—
Becker, Alfred A.....	2329-2330
Brisbane, Arthur.....	23
Gregory, Thomas W.....	13, 1387
Palmer, A. Mitchell.....	13
Whitman, Charles S.....	2406

Overman, Lee S.—Continued.

letters, etc., to Senator Overman from—
Anderson, George W	287
Baker, Newton D	287
Bates, John L	287
Beatson, J. W	287
Breckinridge, Desha	287
Brisbane, Arthur	287
Capper, Arthur	287
Clark, Evans	287
De Ford, William A	287
Elliott, Charles W	287
Erskine, Robert	167
Filene, Edward A	287
Garrett, Garet	287
Greene, Hiram Moe	287
Gregory, Thomas W	287
Hanford, S	287
Henning, E. J	287
Jastrow, Morris, jr	1819-1820, 287
Jones, Wesley L	287
Jordan, David Starr	287
Kelly, Marshall	287
Laidler, Harry W	287
Levy, Aaron J	167
McDonald, James G	287
McElroy, R. M	287
McGee, Charles A. C	287
McLaughlin, A. C	287
Malone, Thomas H	287
Merrill, Bradford	197
Miller, Louis E	197
National Lutheran Council	197
Porter, Claude R	287
Reed, James A	287
Richard, O. L	287
Richardson, E. C	167
Roberts, A. H	247
Root, Elihu	287
Sedgwick, William T	287
Stevenson, Archibald E	287
Untermeyer, Samuel	1547, 1937
Walsh, David I	287
West, Henry L	287
Whitman, Charles S	287
Overstreet, Harry A., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	287

P.

Pabst, Gustave:
testimony of Mr. Arnold	2564-2565
testimony of Mr. Konta	2564-2565
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5	2564-2565
Pabst Brewing Co., letter from Hugh F. Fox	147
Packard Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	147
Pagenstecher, Rudolph:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 113	2564-2565
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2564-2565
Paige-Detroit Motor Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	2564-2565
Paley, Herman:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1927
testimony of Judge Levy	1501-
Palm Beach telegrams, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1606
Palmer, A. Mitchell, Alien Property Custodian:
letter from Mr. Palmer to William H. King	2564-2565

Palmer, A. Mitchell—Continued.

	Page.
letters to Mr. Palmer from—
King, William H.....	5-6
Overman, Lee S.....	13
Untermeyer, Samuel.....	1862-1864
speech at Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 14, 1918, extracts.....	6-7, 10
Palmer, Henry W., testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	608-609
Panken, Jacob, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2715, 2784
Pap. Baron Geza, letter from Julius Pirnitzer.....	2885
Papen, Capt. Franz von:
letters to Capt. von Papen.....	1926-1934, 2796
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1396, 1424
1445, 1457-1461, 1549, 1552, 1563, 1569- 1570, 1597, 1598, 1599, 1601, 1602, 1605
testimony of Mr. Gabryel.....	634
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	707
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1674-1675, 1686
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2125, 2140
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2672, 2674, 2678
Paris Journal, see Journal, Paris.
Parsons, Edwin W., letter to John S. Conway.....	125
Parsons, Elsie Clews, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2784
Pass & Seymour Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	274
Passport cases, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1597-1600
Patria (photoplay), testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1675-1677
Patriotic Service League, testimony of Mr. Stowell.....	2188-2189
Pavenstedt, Adolph:
letter to Capt. von Papen.....	1926-1927
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1944,
1947-1948, 1952, 1953, 1955-1956, 1958, 1964, 1965, 1972-1973, 1993, 2099
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit.....	1543, 1578-1579
testimony of Mr. Morse.....	2464-2465
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2773, 2775
Peace note "leak," testimony of Mr. Dickinson.....	2628-2631
Pechstein & Nagel Co., letters from Otto Giesecke.....	1005, 1005-1006
Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association:
letter to W. H. Osborn, commissioner of internal revenue.....	1077
summary of accounts and exhibits.....	424, 425-426
testimony of Mr. Fox.....	292
testimony of Mr. Gardiner, and exhibits.....	327, 336-339, 343
Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	135-138, 142-143
Pennsylvania State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....	338, 339
People's Council of America for Democracy and Peace:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2254-2255
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2715-2716
Perkins, James L.:
testimony of Joseph A. Moore.....	2430-2431
testimony of Mr. Squires.....	2513, 2514, 2517
Pester Hungarian Commercial Bank, see Hungarian Commercial Bank of Budapest.
Pfau, A. L., president, North Baltimore Bottle Glass Co., letter from J. W. Van Cleave.....	1316-1317
Pfeil, John S., article on Cercle Lacordaire.....	775-776
Phelps, E. B., testimony of Mr. Fox.....	110
Philadelphia Lager Beer Association, testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....	337
Phoenix (magazine), testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibit.....	106-107
Pinchot, Amos R. E., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2707, 2717, 2784
Pirnitzer, Julius:
letters from Mr. Pirnitzer to—
Albert, Dr. Heinrich.....	2876
Dumba, Constantin Theodor.....	2881-2883, 2884
Hossenfelder, Erich.....	2876
Hungarian General Credit Bank, etc.....	2875, 2888-2891, 2899
Hungarian Royal Postal Savings Bank.....	2872

Pirnitzer, Julius—Continued

letters from Mr. Pirnitzer to—	P.
Kinnicutt, Francis H.	277
Pap, Baron Geza	287
Zwiedinek, Baron Erich	2878, 2880-2881, 2884
letters to Mr. Pirnitzer from—
Albert, Dr. Heinrich	2876, 2877
Biro, John	2878
Dumba, Constantin Theodor	2878
Gates, Elmer	2878
Zwiedinek, Baron Erich	2880, 2881, 2883-2884, 2887
report to Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank	2880
testimony of Mr. Becker	2880
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt	2813-2815, 2816-2817, 2819, 2820
testimony of Mr. Steiner	2820
Poles in United States, propaganda among	2820
Political activities:
of brewing and liquor interests—
exhibits	896-908, 953-1021, 1077-1078, 1274
testimony of Mr. Arnold	2820
testimony of Mr. Fox	306-307, 322
testimony of Mr. Gardiner	324
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	42
testimony of Mr. McDermott	402-411, 41
of German agents, pro-German organizations, etc.—
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1484-1502, 1578
Pollack, Dr. Ed., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2821
Pope, —, testimony of Mr. Arnold	2821
Popovich, Dushan:
testimony	621
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	621
Poppinghaus, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	621
Porter, Claude R., letter to Senator Overman	621
Postal savings banks, testimony of Mr. Steiner	621
Poth, F. A., & Sons, testimony of Mr. Konta	621
President of United States, letter from M. Tchitcherin, Russian minister of foreign affairs	2761
Prince, H., American Brewing Association:
letters to Mr. Prince from—
National Association of Commerce and Labor	1320
Watson, Q. U.	1320
Printers' and Publishers' Association (Inc.):
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1574
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1574
Proctor & Gamble Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	1574
Proebstle, Joseph, international secretary, Brewery Workers' Union:
letter from Hugh F. Fox	1108
testimony of Mr. Fox	1108
Prohibition:
activities of brewing and liquor interests—
testimony of Mr. Arnold	2524-2598, 2608
testimony of Mr. Bowen	2744
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	82-126, 137
testimony of Mr. Fox	37
testimony of Mr. Gardiner	465
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	2661
testimony of Mr. Kennedy	401
testimony of Mr. McDermott	401
testimony of James Moore	621
testimony of Mr. Popovich	127
testimony of Mr. Sunstein	127
Proskower, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Morse	636
Prouty, Isaac, & Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	636
Pruden, Harry James, testimony	636
Public Information Committee, testimony of Mr. Zotti	636

	Page.
Pueblo Chieftain:
affidavit of Alva A. Swain.....	2510-2511
letter of C. W. Fairchild.....	2508
letter of Julius C. Gunter.....	2510
letter of Horace N. Hawkins.....	2506-2508
statement of I. N. Stevens.....	2722-2726
statement of Senator Thomas, and papers.....	2499-2501, 2504 testimony of Austin J. Smith, and papers.....	2485-2494, 2502-2503
 Q.
quesne, Capt. Fritz du, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2682-2683
quinlan, Patrick, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2757
 R.
Radford, Peter:
testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2525,
2528-2529, 2531-2532, 2544, 2548-2549, 2558, 2571, 2578
testimony of Mr. Bowen.....	2745, 2746
railroads, contributions to Agricultural and Commercial Press Service,
testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2579-2581, 2587
Ram Chandra:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1600
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2674, 2678
Ram Singh, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2674, 2678
Rand School of Social Science, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2756, 2777
Rathom, John R., testimony of Mr. Means.....	2131, 2132-2133, 2134, 2140, 2142
Red Cross, German, see German Red Cross.
Red Raven Water Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	276
Reed, James A., Senator from Missouri, telegram to Senator Overman..	2406
Reed, John, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2755, 2757-2761, 2776
Reisinger, Curt H., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1422
Reister, Eugene, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2676
Reiswitz, Baron von:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1495, 1496, 1500
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1785
Relief Bureau, Alien Women's, see Alien Women's Relief Bureau.
Relief Bureau, Hans Liebau, see Liebau, Hans, Labor Bureau.
Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies, see Agricultural Labor Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies.
Reo Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	151-155
Republic Rubber Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	276-277
Republican Central Committee of New Mexico, see Bursum, H. O., chairman.
Retail Liquor Dealers' Association:
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	79
testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....	338, 339
Reuter & Co., testimony of Mr. Konta.....	658
Review of Reviews Co., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2021-2034
Rice, J. G., testimony of Mr. Fox.....	107, 108
Richard, O. L., letter to Senator Overman.....	2858
Richards, C. W., testimony of Austin J. Smith.....	2491
Richardson, E. C.:
letter to Senator Overman.....	1655-1656
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399
Ricks, A. G., member of board of trustees, United States Brewers' Association:
letter from Gallus Thomann.....	1299
letter to Otto Koehler.....	1299
Ridder, Bernard H.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits....	1399, 1424, 1428, 1543, 1569-1571
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2697
Ridder, Herman:
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	498
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2773
Ridder, Victor F., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2699

- Ridge, Lola, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Rintelen, Franz von :
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski..... 1404, 1571-1574, 1582, 1001
 testimony of Mr. Means.....
 testimony of Mr. Tunney.....
- Ritter, —, letters relating to Mr. Ritter.....
- Ritter & Co., testimony of Capt. Lester..... 1773-1774, 1721
- Roberts, A. H., letter to Senator Overman.....
- Robinson, Wade, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
 2197, 2198, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2208, 2210, 2217, 2221
- Rodemann, Dr. George, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Roe, Gilbert E., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Rogers, Peet & Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....
- Roosevelt, Theodore, testimony of Mr. von Mach.....
- Root, Elihu, telegram to Senator Overman.....
- Roper, Daniel C., letter to Mr. Undermyer.....
- Rosenberg, Elizabeth M., see Ross, Elizabeth M.
- Rosenburg, —, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
- Ross, Elizabeth M. :
 testimony of Mr. Becker..... 97
 testimony of Mr. Undermyer.....
- Rotzel, Harold L., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Royal Bank of Canada, New York Agency, testimony of Mr. Becker.....
 1945, 1951 70
- Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank, see Hungarian Royal Postal Savings Bank.
- Ruh, Oscar J., secretary, Albert Schwill & Co., letter to B. Adoue..... 137
- Rumely, Dr. Edward A. :
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski... 1390, 1399, 1407, 1423, 1424, 1450-1455 17
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling..... 547-550, 551, 580
 testimony of Mr. Means.....
 testimony of Mr. Stowell.....
 testimony of Mr. Undermyer..... 1861-1862
- Ruppert, George E., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Ruppert, Jacob, jr., president, United States Brewers' Association : letter from Col. Ruppert..... 107 letter from Col. Ruppert to Percy Andreae..... letter to Col. Ruppert..... letters to Col. Ruppert from—
 Andreae, Percy..... 92
 Fox, Hugh F..... 107
 testimony of Mr. Konta.....
 testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2.....
- Ruroede, Carl, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
- Russell, Charles Edward, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Russia, letter from Tchitcherin, minister of foreign affairs, to President Wilson.....
- Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, constitution.....
- Rutherford, Reginald, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibit... 1540-1541

S.

- St. Louis Union Bank :
 testimony of Mr. Becker.....
 testimony of Maj. Humes..... 2107
- Salih Gurdji, testimony of Mr. Becker.....
- San Antonio Brewing Association :
 letters to San Antonio Brewing Association from—
 Clauss, E. S..... 1301, 1301-
 Lyon, Cooper..... 1311
 Van Cleave, J. W..... see also Koehler, Otto, pr
- Sanborn, Herbert C., testimon.....
- Sander, Alfred A. (or Saunde
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
 testimony of Capt. Lester.....

saunders, Albert, see Sander, Alfred A. (or Saunders, Albert).	Page.
Savoy Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Zotti	645-646
Sayre, John N., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2784
Schad, W. F., report to United States Brewers' Association on conditions in Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming	1115-1118
Schaefer, Rudolph J., New York State Brewers' Association:
letters from Mr. Schaefer to—
Fox, Hugh F.	1106
Shepard, James E.	1106
letters to Mr. Schaefer from—
Fox, Hugh F.	1106, 1107
Shepard, James E.	1106
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2	39
Schaefer, Dietrich, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 3	1392
Schatoff, William, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2680
Scheele, Walter T.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1572-1573, 1601-1602
testimony of Mr. Tunney	2675, 2683
Scheidt, Adam, testimony of Mr. Gardiner	344
Schevill, Ferdinand, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1399
Schiff, Jacob H., testimony of Mr. Becker	1995, 2001-2002
Schiff, Mortimer L., testimony of Mr. Becker	1995, 2001
Schiller, Ernest, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2677
Schimmel, Karl, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2675-2676
Schirmer, Ernst A., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1441-1442
Schirmer, Godfrey, testimony of Austin J. Smith	2486, 2491
Schlaraffia, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	2245-2246
Schlendel, Frederick, testimony of Mr. Tunney	2673
Schlossberg, Joseph, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2784
Schmidt, Edward A., president, United States Brewers' Association:
letters, etc., from Mr. Schmidt to—
Andreae, Percy	772-773, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 1042, 1043, 1049, 1130
Gingrich, W. W.	1130-1131
letters, etc., to Mr. Schmidt	769, 930, 1130 letters, etc., to Mr. Schmidt from—
Allen, Charles H.	49-50, 52
Andreae, Percy	771-772, 930-931, 943, 944, 945-946, 947, 1037-1038, 1038, 1041, 1042, 1043, 1048, 1049, 1129-1130
Bradley, Charles	47
Cillis, H.	1097-1098
Uihlein, Joseph	944
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	74
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	493
testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2	39
see also , as treasurer, Pennsylvania State Brewers' Association.
Schmidt, C., & Sons, testimony of Mr. Konta	659
Schmidt, Hugo:
letter of Julius Pirnitzer to Hungarian General Credit Bank	2875
testimony of Mr. Becker	1951, 1960, 1984-1985, 2001-2003, 2009-2015, 2034-2036
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1454, 1578
Schmidt, Karl E., testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1500-1501, 1502
Schmidt, Nathaniel, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2784
Schmidt, Oscar, letter to Hugh F. Fox	1102
Schmukler, Peter, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1447
Schoenstadt, Arthur:
testimony of Capt. Lester	1771-1772
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2699
Scholz, Walter, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1601
Schomaker, Bernard, testimony of Mr. Becker	1954, 2066-2069, 2337
School textbooks, German propaganda through, testimony of Prof. Hart	1634
Schott, Colon, letter to Dr. Dabney	2110
Schrader, Frederick F.:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1399
testimony of Mr. Dickinson	2619-2620, 2622-2623, 2624, 2633, 2639, 2640, 2643, 2649
testimony of Capt. Lester	1699, 1701

	Page
Schram, Louis B., testimony of James Moore, exhibit 2	235
Schreiner, Carl, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, papers	235
Schulenburg, Franz, testimony of Mr. Tunney	267
Schultheis, Herman, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	157
Schurz, Carl L.:
speech relating to Citizens' Committee for Food Shipments	235
testimony of Mr. Becker	264
testimony of Mr. von Mach	1
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1
Schwartz, Jacob, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Schweitzer, Hugo:
testimony of Mr. Becker	215
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1423, 1436, 1575
testimony of Capt. Lester
testimony of Mr. Stevenson
Schweppendick, Gustav, testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibit	1669-1670
Schwill, Albert, & Co., see Ruh, Oscar J., secretary.
Schwimmer, Rosika, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Scotti, John, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt	218
Scudder, Vida D., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Seamen Advertising Agency, testimony of Mr. Fox	1
Secor, Lella Faye, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2714
Sedgwick, William T., telegram to Senator Overman	1
Seibel, George, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	1
Seminary Endowment Association (Inc.), see Cillis, H., president.
Sheehan, William T., testimony of James Moore, exhibits 4, 7, 8, 13	40, 42
Shelley, Rebecca, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2713, 2714
Shenango Pottery Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	17
Shepard, James E., National Religious Training School and Chautauqua for the Colored Race (Inc.): letter from Rudolph J. Schaefer	1
letter to Rudolph J. Schaefer	1
Shepherd, William R., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits	135
Sherwin-Williams Paint Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits	1
Shiber, W. N.:
telegram from J. W. Willicombe	10
telegram to J. W. Willicombe	1
Shields, James, see O'Sheel, Shaemus.
Shiplacoff, Abram, testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Sickel, William G.:
testimony of Mr. Becker	1
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1
Simon, John:
testimony of Capt. Lester	215
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer	1873-1875
Simpson, William G., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Singh, Ram, see Ram Singh.
Sinn Fein, testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1
Skal (or Skoll), George von:
testimony of Mr. Becker	1973-197
testimony of Mr. Bielaski	154
testimony of Mr. Konta	705-7
testimony of Mr. Stevenson	2699, 277
Skarzynski, Louis, article on prohibition in United States	160
Skinner, Clarence R., testimony of Mr. Stevenson	1
Skoll, George von, see Skal (or Skoll), George von.
Skotthy, John:
letter from Ignatz Lusztig	1
letter to Ignatz Lusztig	1
Slayden, James L., Representative from Texas:
letter from Otto Wahrmond	134
letter to Otto Wahrmond	1
Sloane, William M., testimony of Mr. Bielaski	1
Smith, Alfred E., Governor of New York, letter to Thomas W. Gregory	240

	Page.
mith, Austin J.:
affidavit of Alva A. Swain.....	2510-2511
letter of Alva A. Swain.....	2508-2509
letter of C. W. Fairchild.....	2508
letter of Julius C. Gunter.....	2510
letter of Horace N. Hawkins.....	2506-2508
statement of I. N. Stevens.....	2722-2728
testimony.....	2485-2494
mith, Courtland:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1502-1504
testimony of Mr. Bowen.....	2743
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1688
mith, Eugen, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1399 mith, Hoke, Senator from Georgia:
statement.....	1648-1651
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 75.....	1487
mith, Tom O., vice president, Birmingham Trust and Savings Co., letter to L. C. Nice.....	47
murthwaite, C. A., Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	224-225 ocialist Labor Party, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2718, 2736-2738 ocialist Party:
testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2666
testimony of Mr. Stevenson, and exhibits.....	2738-2744
ociety of Modern Art, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1540
ociety of New Freedom, testimony of Mr. Konta.....	719 ociety of the Iron Cross, see Iron Cross Society.
ergel, Robert L., letters to Joseph Keller.....	873-874,
	1279, 1279-1280, 1280, 1281, 1283, 1283-1284, 1284, 1285, 1285-1286, 1286-1287
olf, Dr., testimony of Capt. Lester, exhibit.....	1782-1783
olvay Process Co.:
letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	125
testimony of Hugh F. Fox, and exhibit.....	115, 122, 126
see also Knapp, Martin H., secretary.
omlyo, Arnold, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
ommer Motor Car Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	171-173
ommerfeld, F. A., testimony of Maj. Humes.....	2168-2174
ons of Hermann, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2249
see also Haxthausen, August, president.
outh America, German propaganda in, testimony of Mr. Stevenson...	2694-2695
oargo, John, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2739
arks, Nelson, letter to Lewis H. Gibson.....	1003
engler, Otto von, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2699
eyer & Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1988
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2808
pring-Rice, Sir Cecil, testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2309
quires, Grant, testimony.....	2512-2521
taats-Zeitung, see New Yorker Staats-Zeitung.
tahl, Gustave:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1603
testimony of Mr. Means.....	2130
allforth, Frederico:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	2249
testimony of Maj. Humes.....	2174
allforth, F., & Co., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers.....	2197, 2220, 2221
anchfield & Levy, testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1895-1896 andard Brewery, see Dewes, F. J., president.
andard Mercantile Agency, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2010, 2011
andard Oil Co.:
testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	225-226
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	472
ate Alliance of German Societies, Indiana, letter to officers and delegates from Indianapolis member.....	1289

- States: political activities of brewing and liquor interests in—
 exhibits..... 92
 testimony of Mr. Fox..... 30
 testimony of Mr. Gardiner..... 1
 testimony of Mr. McDermott..... 402-404
- Steamship advertising:
 testimony of Mr. Hammerling..... 7
 testimony of Mr. Pruden..... 1
- Steamship companies:
 letter of O. L. Richard to Senator Overman.....
 testimony of Mr. Steiner.....
- Steen, Clyde B.:
 list of foreign language newspapers..... 27 tabulation of foreign language newspapers..... 27
 testimony..... 267
- Steffen, Prof., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 6.....
- Stegler, Richard, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
- Stein, I. A., secretary and general manager, Galveston Brewing Co.:
 letters from Mr. Stein to—
 Louisville Drying Machinery Co.....
 National Association of Commerce and Labor.....
 United States Brewers' Association.....
- Stein, Ludwig, testimony of Capt. Lester, and exhibit..... 166-167
- Stein, Myer J., letter to B. H. Kingsbury..... 166
- Steinberg, Capt., see Sternberg (or Steinberg), Capt.
- Steiner, Lajos:
 letter of O. L. Richard relating to testimony of Mr. Steiner.....
 testimony..... 28
- Sternberg (or Steinberg), Capt.:
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
 testimony of Mr. Tunney.....
- Sternburg, Julius, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Stevens, Col. I. N.:
 affidavit of Alva A. Swain..... 27
 letter of Julius C. Gunter.....
 letter of Horace N. Hawkins..... 27
 statement..... 27
 statement of Senator Thomas.....
 testimony of Austin J. Smith..... 28
- Stevenson, Archibald E.:
 letter to Senator Overman.....
 list of names submitted by..... 269
 testimony..... 2690-2720, 2729-2741
- Stoddard, Henry L., testimony of Mr. Untermeyer..... 18
- Stoehr, Max W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
- Stokes, Helen Phelps, testimony of Mr. Stevenson..... 27
- Stoll, Dr. K. L., letter to Dr. Dabney..... 27
- Stone, Herbert S., manager, publicity department, United States Brewers' Association:
 letters from Mr. Stone to—
 United States Brewers' Association members.....
 Wasson, E. A..... 1273, 1274
 letters to Mr. Stone from E. A. Wasson..... 1269, 1271-1272, 1272-1273
 testimony of Mr. Fox.....
- Stone, John T., see, as president, Maryland Casualty Co.
- Stoneware plot, testimony of Mr. Becker.....
- Stowell, Ellery C., statement..... 1638-1641, 2175-2191
- Straight, Willard D., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Strauss, Isaac:
 testimony of Mr. Becker.....
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits..... 1389, 1390, 1395, 1448
 testimony of Judge Levy.....
- Strauss, Simon, telegram to Senator Nelson.....
- String, Sidney, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Süddeutsche Disconto Gesellschaft, testimony of Capt. Lester.....

	Page.
Sukor, Morris, testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....	2811
Sulzbürger & Co., testimony of Capt. Lester.....	2166
Sun, New York:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1446-1447
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1848-1854, 1855-1859
Sunstein, A. J.:
testimony.....	127-131
testimony of Mr. Gardiner.....	330-331, 332
testimony of Mr. McDermott.....	416
Sutherland, Forbes, testimony of Mr. von Mach.....	2310-2311
Sutro, Theodore, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2699
Swain, Alva A.:
affidavit.....	2510-2511
letter from Mr. Swain to Senator Thomas.....	2508-2509 letters to Mr. Swain from—
Fairchild, C. W.....	2508
Gunter, Julius C.....	2510
Hawkins, Horace N.....	2506-2508
statement of I. N. Stevens.....	2722-2726
statement of Senator Thomas.....	2499-2501
testimony of Austin J. Smith.....	2485-2494
Swartz, —, testimony of Mr. Means.....	2112, 2113-2114, 2115
Swenson, Eric P., testimony of Mr. Arnold....	2541-2544, 2550, 2552, 2575-2578
Syndicalism, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2729-2730

T.

Tannenbaum, Frank, testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2678
Tauscher, Capt. Hans:
letter from Alexander Konta.....	10-11, 16
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1599, 1600
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	657, 664-666, 683, 709-710, 715-717
Taylor, Hannis, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1582-1585
Titcherlin, M., letter to President Wilson.....	2761-2766
Terre Haute Brewing Co., see Fairbanks, C., president.
Texas, political activities of brewing and liquor interests, exhibits....	953-992
Texas Brewers Association:
letters to—
Fox, Hugh F.....	1308
United Malsters' Association.....	1311
see also Adoue, B., president.
Texas Brewing Co., see Cetti, Zane, president.
Texas Business Men's Association, testimony of Mr. Arnold....	2524-2525, 2560
Texas Economic League, testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2532-2533
Texas Farmers' Union, testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2525, 2531, 2536
Textile Alliance, testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2014-2015
Thaurer, Peter S., testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5.....	40
Thierichens, Capt., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1603
Thierney, Rev. Father, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1400
Thomann, Gallus, letter to A. G. Ricks.....	1299
Thomas, Charles S., Senator from Colorado:
letters to Senator Thomas from—
Busbee, Frederick A.....	2841-2842
Swain, Alva A.....	2508-2509
Willard, James G.....	2841
statement.....	2499-2501
Thomas, Guenther, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1505-1507
Thomas, Norman M., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2707, 2708, 2785
Thompson, George J.:
letter from Mr. Thompson to John A. McDermott.....	1102
testimony of John A. McDermott.....	407-408, 411
Thuenen, Henry:
letters, etc., from Mr. Thuenen.....	997-999, 1014-1015
letters, etc., from Mr. Thuenen to—
Andreae, Percy....	911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 920-921, 922, 923, 924-925, 994, 1000, 1001, 1002-1003, 1004-1005, 1013, 1014

Thuenen, Henry—Continued.

letters, etc., from Mr. Thuenen to—
Gibson, Lewis H.....	997, 1001, 1002
Hartley, Gale M.....
United States Brewers' Association, interstate conference committee..... letters, etc., to Mr. Thuenen.....	903-904 letters, etc., to Mr. Thuenen from—
Andreae, Percy.....	890, 912
Gibson, Lewis H.....	915, 916, 917, 918, 920, 921, 922, 923, 925
Hartley, Gale M.....	904
Tisza, Count Stephen:
letter from Adolph Ullman.....	257
letter to Adolph Ullman.....	257
Tobias, J. J., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, exhibit 75.....
Trachtenberg, Alexander, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Trans-Ocean News Service:
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	15
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	15
testimony of Mr. Dickinson.....	2616, 2626-2627
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Transatlantic Trust Co.:
advertisement of German and Austro-Hungarian loans.....
circular showing officers directors, etc.....	2867
letters and papers relating to company.....	2872 2873-2878 2884 order to Austro-Hungarian consulates relating to transmission of immigrants' money..... report to Royal Hungarian Postal Savings Bank.....
testimony of Mr. Becker.....
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt.....
testimony of Mr. Konta.....
testimony of Mr. Steiner.....	2830, 2831, 2832, 2833
Trent, William P., testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
Tribune, Chicago, see Chicago Tribune.
Trotsky, Leon:
testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
testimony of Mr. Tunney.....	2670-2681
Tucker, Irving St. John, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
Tunney, Thomas J., testimony.....
Two thousand questions and answers, testimony of Mr. Becker.....

U.Uihlein, Joseph E.:

letter to Edward A. Schmidt.....
testimony of Mr. Konta.....
Ullman, Adolph:
letter from Count Tisza.....
letter to Count Tisza.....
Union Trust Co., testimony of Mr. Sunstein.....
United Malsters' Association, letter from Texas Brewers' Association.....
United Mine Workers' Journal, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
United States Brewers' Association:
bank accounts.....
exhibits relating to.....	830-911, 925-937, 992-1021
letter from United Dispatch..... letter to Interstate Association from..... letter to members Association from.....
letters to members.....
Fox, Hugh F.....
1306, 1307,
1335-1336,
Stone, Herbert.....

United States Brewers' Association—Continued.

	Page.
letters to United States Brewers' Association from—
Belisle, C. Edward	1099
Burkhardt, G. F.	1101
Dallas Brewery	1324
Hammerling, L. N.	765
Minuth, Fred R.	766-767
Stein, I. A.	1342
memoranda, etc., from files of United States Brewers' Association	778-780, 780-781, 790-791, 804-805, 809-813, 821-825, 825-
826, 827-830, 932, 933-934, 937-938, 938, 939-940, 1021,
1029, 1029-1031, 1056-1058, 1065, 1091-1097, 1109-1114, 1123-1126, 1127-1128, 1131-1132, 1133-1141, 1277-1278
minutes of meetings of—
conference between brewers and distillers, Dec. 29, 1914	1058-1064
executive officers of State brewers' associations, etc.	791-793, 795-797
executive sessions	353-369, 1073-1077, 1182-1199
harmony committee of fifteen	1049-1054, 1065-1071
interstate conference committee	798-804
interstate conference committee and board of trustees	1142-1182 joint committees, National Association of Commerce and Labor and United States Brewers' Association	934-935
receipts and expenditures	425 reports to association of—advertising department	1088-1090
Andreae, Percy	1073-1077, 1182-1188
committee on Interstate Executive Association	807-808
McDermott, J. A.	1115, 1119
membership committee	1071-1072
organization bureau	831-839
publications committee	1078-1088
Schad, W. F.	1115-1118
secretary	786-790, 794-795 reports to association on—
Anti-Saloon League convention, July 6-9, 1915	815-820 literature, Mar. 1-31, 1915	776
membership, Nov. 1914	804
State delegates and trustees, joint meeting, Apr. 10-11, 1913	938-939
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan	57-81
testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	82-126, 133-326
testimony of Mr. Gardiner	327-346
testimony of Mr. Hammerling	473
testimony of Mr. Kennedy	2661-2662
testimony of Mr. Konta	659
testimony of Mr. McDermott	401-424
see also Crain, Robert, general counsel—Fox, Hugh F., secretary—Franznick, George A.—Lembeck, Gustav W., treasurer—Liebmann, Julius, president—McDermott, John A., manager, organization bureau—Ricks, A. G., member of board of trustees—Ruppert, Jacob, jr., president—Schmidt, Edward A., president—Stone, Herbert S., manager, publicity department.
United States Mortgage & Trust Co.:
testimony of Mr. Becker	1988
testimony of Mr. Kinnicutt	2808
United States Steel Corporation, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits	280-284
Universal League of Peace, telegram to William Randolph Hearst	1606
Untermeyer, Samuel:
letter from Aaron J. Levy referring to Mr. Untermeyer	1656-1657 letter from Louis E. Miller referring to Mr. Untermeyer	1645-1646 letters, etc., from Mr. Untermeyer to—
Overman, Lee S.	1547, 1935-1937
Palmer, A. Mitchell	1862-1864
letters, etc., to Mr. Untermeyer from—
Malone, Thomas H.	1836
Roper, Daniel C.	1844
Viereck, George Sylvester	1881
newspaper clipping referring to Mr. Untermeyer's testimony	1940-1941
testimony	1835-1910

Untermeyer, Samuel—Continued.

- testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits..... 1444-1448 137
- testimony of Judge Levy..... 1822-1824, 1828-1829, 1830, 1831

V.

- Vahlkamp, Henry, testimony of James Moore, exhibit 5.....
- Val Blatz Brewing Co.:
 - letter from Hugh F. Fox.....
 - letters to Hugh F. Fox..... 1104-1106
- Van Cleave, J. W., president, National Association of Manufacturers:
 - letters from Mr. Van Cleave to—
 - Pfau, A. L..... 125
 - San Antonio Brewing Association..... 1306, 1306-1307, 1308
- Vanderlip, Frank A., testimony of Mr. Untermeyer..... 10
- Van Hamm, Caleb M., telegrams to William Randolph Hearst..... 10
- Van Westrum, —, testimony of Mr. Konta, and exhibits..... 688-693, 695, 696
- Vcrhovay Aid Association, testimony of Mr. Konta.....
- Viereck, George Sylvester:
 - letter from Mr. Viereck to Heinrich Albert.....
 - testimony of Mr. Becker..... 262
 - testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....
 - 1394, 1400, 1408, 1409-1410, 1411, 1412, 1413, 1414, 1415, 1416, 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, 1421, 1422, 1423, 1424, 1425, 1426, 1427, 1428, 1429, 1430, 1431, 1432, 1444, 1496, 1536, 1538
 - testimony of Mr. Dickinson.....
 - 2627, 2630-2632, 2635, 2636-2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 2680, 2681, 2682, 2683, 2684, 2685, 2686, 2687, 2688, 2689, 2690, 2691, 2692, 2693, 2694, 2695, 2696, 2697, 2698, 2699, 2700, 2701, 2702, 2703, 2704, 2705, 2706, 2707, 2708, 2709, 2710, 2711, 2712, 2713, 2714, 2715, 2716, 2717, 2718, 2719, 2720, 2721, 2722, 2723, 2724, 2725, 2726, 2727, 2728, 2729, 2730, 2731, 2732, 2733, 2734, 2735, 2736, 2737, 2738, 2739, 2740, 2741, 2742, 2743, 2744, 2745, 2746, 2747, 2748, 2749, 2750, 2751, 2752, 2753, 2754, 2755, 2756, 2757, 2758, 2759, 2760, 2761, 2762, 2763, 2764, 2765, 2766, 2767, 2768, 2769, 2770, 2771, 2772, 2773, 2774, 2775, 2776, 2777, 2778, 2779, 2780, 2781, 2782, 2783, 2784, 2785, 2786, 2787, 2788, 2789, 2790, 2791, 2792, 2793, 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2798, 2799, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2803, 2804, 2805, 2806, 2807, 2808, 2809, 2810, 2811, 2812, 2813, 2814, 2815, 2816, 2817, 2818, 2819, 2820, 2821, 2822, 2823, 2824, 2825, 2826, 2827, 2828, 2829, 2830, 2831, 2832, 2833, 2834, 2835, 2836, 2837, 2838, 2839, 2840, 2841, 2842, 2843, 2844, 2845, 2846, 2847, 2848, 2849, 2850, 2851, 2852, 2853, 2854, 2855, 2856, 2857, 2858, 2859, 2860, 2861, 2862, 2863, 2864, 2865, 2866, 2867, 2868, 2869, 2870, 2871, 2872, 2873, 2874, 2875, 2876, 2877, 2878, 2879, 2880, 2881, 2882, 2883, 2884, 2885, 2886, 2887, 2888, 2889, 2890, 2891, 2892, 2893, 2894, 2895, 2896, 2897, 2898, 2899, 2900, 2901, 2902, 2903, 2904, 2905, 2906, 2907, 2908, 2909, 2910, 2911, 2912, 2913, 2914, 2915, 2916, 2917, 2918, 2919, 2920, 2921, 2922, 2923, 2924, 2925, 2926, 2927, 2928, 2929, 2930, 2931, 2932, 2933, 2934, 2935, 2936, 2937, 2938, 2939, 2940, 2941, 2942, 2943, 2944, 2945, 2946, 2947, 2948, 2949, 2950, 2951, 2952, 2953, 2954, 2955, 2956, 2957, 2958, 2959, 2960, 2961, 2962, 2963, 2964, 2965, 2966, 2967, 2968, 2969, 2970, 2971, 2972, 2973, 2974, 2975, 2976, 2977, 2978, 2979, 2980, 2981, 2982, 2983, 2984, 2985, 2986, 2987, 2988, 2989, 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, 2997, 2998, 2999, 3000
 - testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....
 - testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibit..... 101-102
 - testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
 - testimony of Mr. Konta.....
 - testimony of Capt. Lester..... 1686, 1697-1700
 - testimony of Mr. von Mach..... 2283-2284, 2285
 - testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
 - testimony of Mr. Untermeyer..... 1855, 1856
- Viereck's Library, testimony of Capt. Lester..... 1857
- Viereck's Weekly, see Fatherland.
- Villa, Hipolito, testimony of Maj. Humes..... 217
- Villard, Mrs. Henry, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Villard, Oswald Garrison:
 - testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....
 - testimony of Mr. Stevenson..... 2704, 2706, 2707
- Vollmer, Henry, testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....
- Von Bernstorff, Count Johann, see Bernstorff, Count Johann von.
- Von Briesen, Arthur, see Briesen, Arthur von.
- Von der Goltz, Hoist, see Goltz, Hoist von der.
- Von Engelken, F. J. H., see Engelken, F. J. H. von.
- Von Igel, Wolff, see Igel, Wolff von.
- Von Kleist, Charles, see Kleist, Charles von.
- Von Mach, Edmund, see Mach, Edmund von.
- Von Papen, Capt. Franz, see Papen, Capt. Franz von.
- Von Patten Agency, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....
- Von Reisswitz, Baron, see Reisswitz, Baron von.
- Von Rintelen, Franz, see Rintelen, Franz von.
- Von Skal (or Skoll), George, see Skal (or Skoll), George von.
- Von Spengler, Otto, see Spengler, Otto von.
- Von Wedell, Hans, see Wedell, Hans von.
- Vossische Zeitung, telegram to Mr. Hearst..... 10

W.

- Wackerow, Richard, testimony of Capt. Lester.....
- Wahrmund, Otto:
 - letter to Col. Wahrmund from James L. Slayden.....
 - letters from Col. Wahrmund to—
 - Adoue, B..... 13
 - Busch, August A.....
 - Slayden, James L..... 13

	Page.
Wald, Lillian D., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2785
Waldron, John A., letter from Thomas W. Gregory.....	2407
Wall, Joseph S., testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and papers.....	2198, 2200, 2229, 2235
Walsh, David I., telegram to Senator Overman.....	1619
Wambaugh, Col. Eugene, testimony.....	1641-1643
Wanamaker, John, testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	176-178
Wappler, Otto, letter from Mr. Wappler.....	890-891
War loans, see Austro-Hungarian loans—German loans.
Warbasse, James P., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2784
Warburg, Paul M., testimony of Mr. Becker.....	1997
Ward, Harry F., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2784
Warheit (newspaper) :
letter from Judge Levy.....	1656-1657
letter from Louis E. Miller.....	1645-1646
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1447-1448
testimony of Judge Levy.....	1822-1825, 1830-1834, 1844
testimony of Mr. Untermeyer.....	1845-1847
Warm, William, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits...	1465-1468, 1483-1484
Washington Post, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1432-1433, 1588
Washington Times:
letters relating to.....	22-24
statement of Mr. Feigenspan.....	9-10, 21-22
testimony of Mr. Brisbane.....	735, 739, 740-743, 749-750
testimony of Mr. Feigenspan.....	74-75
testimony of Mr. Konta.....	658
Wasson, E. A.:
letters from Dr. Wasson to—
Feigenspan, C. W.....	1269-1270, 1270-1271
Fox, Hugh F.....	1274, 1276
Stone, Herbert S.....	1269, 1271-1272, 1272-1273, 1275
letters to Dr. Wasson from United States Brewers' Association....	1273, 1274, 1274-1275
Watson, Q. U., letter to H. Prince.....	1330
Wayne Brewing Co., letter from Hugh F. Fox.....	1073
see also Gingrich, W. W., manager.
Wayne Oil Tank & Pump Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	232-233
Wazeter, Leon, affidavit.....	2474
Wedell, Hans von, testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1597-1598
Weismann, Henry:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1575
testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2696, 2700
Weiss, Dr. Karl, testimony of Mr. Kennedy.....	2663, 2665
Welland Canal, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits...	1560-1561, 1599, 1602
West, DuVal, letter to J. J. Dickinson.....	2637
West, George P., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2734
West, Henry L., telegram to Senator Overman.....	1617
West, Julius, article on finances of Austria-Hungary.....	2838
Western Cartridge Co., testimony of Maj. Humes.....	2171-2174
Western Newspaper Union:
testimony of Mr. Arnold.....	2533-2535
testimony of Mr. Bowen.....	2745, 2749
Western Union Telegraph Co., testimony of Mr. Fox, and exhibits.....	158-159
Westheimer, Morris F., letter to John Gardiner.....	1046-1047
Weyl, Walter E., testimony of Mr. Stevenson.....	2733
Wheeler Syndicate (Inc.), testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits.....	1464-1465
White, Norman, testimony of Mr. Hammerling.....	546, 547
White Company, testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits.....	230-231
Whitman, Charles S.:
telegram from Senator Overman to Gov. Whitman.....	2406 telegram to Senator Overman from Gov. Whitman.....	2406
testimony of Mr. Becker.....	2038-2040, 2047, 2087, 2455-2456
Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, see National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association.
Wildman Magazine and News Service:
testimony of Mr. Bielaski.....	1456-1457
testimony of Capt. Lester.....	1665, 1918

- Wilhelm, A., Company, testimony of Mr. Fox, exhibits
 Wilhelmina, steamer, testimony of Mr. Bielaski
 Wilke, William, testimony of Mr. Becker
 Willard, James G., letter to Senator Thomas
 Williams, Albert Rhys, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
 Williams, Dr. E. H., testimony of Mr. Fox 100-101
 Willicombe, J. W.:
 telegram from W. N. Shiber telegrams to—
 Mitchell, R. C.
 Shiber, W. N. 100
 Wilson, Woodrow, see President of United States.
 Wingate, Josiah, see Dickinson, J. J.
 Winner, M. I., letter to Gale M. Hartley
 Winston, Donald, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
 Wirmel, Charles H.:
 letters, etc., from Mr. Wirmel to—
 Autrey, R. L. 92
 Gibson, Lewis H. 95, 96
 962-963, 963, 963-964, 964-965, 967-968, 969, 970-971, 972-97
 974, 974-975, 976, 977-980, 981, 981-982, 983-984, 984-985, 98 letters, etc., to Mr. Wirmel from—
 Andreae, Percy
 Autrey, R. L. 961, 974, 976-977, 980, 981-982, 98
 Gibson, Lewis H. 982-983, 985-986, 988
 Wisconsin Brewers' Association, report, 1914 78
 see also Austin, William H., secretary.
 Wisconsin National Bank, testimony of Mr. Becker
 Wolf, Paul, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, papers 2202, 2210, 2211
 Wolf, Simon, letters to C. J. Hexamer 901, 903, 904
 Wolfram, C. B., testimony of Mr. Stevenson
 Wolpert, Capt.:
 testimony of Mr. Bielaski
 testimony of Mr. Tunney 2675, 2676
 Women's International League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson
 Wood, L. Hollingsworth, testimony of Mr. Stevenson 2704, 2706, 2707, 2708
 Wool plot, testimony of Mr. Becker 2014
 Works, John D., Senator from California, testimony of Mr. Bielaski and exhibits 1486, 1487, 1488
 The World To-morrow (newspaper), testimony of Mr. Stevenson
 Wright, Huntington, testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits 1481
 Wunnenberg, Charles, testimony of Mr. Bielaski 1405, 1434

Y.

- Young, Charles C., Orange County Brewery, letter to Hugh F. Fox 1033
 Young Democracy, testimony of Mr. Stevenson 2717
 Young People's Socialist League, testimony of Mr. Stevenson

Z.

- Zacharias, W., testimony of Mr. Bielaski
 Zang, Ph., Brewing Co.:
 letter from H. O. Bursum
 letter to Hugh F. Fox
 see also Kaub, George H., secretary.
 Zelinski, Max, testimony of Mr. Bielaski
 Zentral Einkaufs-Gesellschaft:
 testimony of Capt. Lester 2157, 2158
 testimony of Mr. Untermeyer
 Ziegler, Kurt, testimony of Austin J. Smith 248
 Zimmerman, Alfred:
 letters to Count Bernstorff 1433, 1588
 Mexican note 1610
 testimony of Capt. Lester, exhibit 1781
 Zimmerman & Forshay, testimony of Mr. Becker
 Zollman, F. W., letter from Percy Andreae 127

	Page.
Zotti, Frank:
testimony -----	639-648
testimony of Mr. Hammerling -----	562
Zwiedinek von Südenhorst, Baron Erich:
letters from Baron Zwiedinek to Julius Pirnitzer -----	2871-2872, 2880, 2881, 2883-2884, 2885-2886
letters to Baron Zwiedinek from Julius Pirnitzer -----	2878, 2880-2881, 2886-2887
testimony of Mr. Bielaski, and exhibits -----	1551-1552, 1559-1560
testimony of Austin J. Smith -----	2488, 2489-2490

Stanford University Libraries

3 6105 119 504 178

3 6105 119 504 178

